nor from the ſouth] Heb. from the wilderneſſe; and ſo contains both north and ſouth: for there was a wilderneſſe on both ſides of Canaan. So Junius, and ſome others, of this place: thereby endeavoring to prevent their curioſity, who if either ſouth, as it is here in the Text, and in divers other Tranſlations: or north, as in others, (Vatablus,&c.) were particularly expreſſed, and one of the two, as by conſequent it muſt, left out: to prevent their curioſity, I ſay, who would be ready to ask why in this ſpecification of the parts or quarters of the world three being named, the fourth onely ſhould be omitted: and if of purpoſe omitted, why promotion ſhould not be thought by the Pſalmiſt as well to come from the north, or ſouth, (one of them being left out, according to moſt Tranſlations) as from either eaſt, or weſt, &c. Now the matter is anſwered, or rather the queſtion prevented, if the deſert, or wilderneſſe here doth comprehend both. But this by ſome of the chief, for learning and judgement, is propoſed but very tenderly; rather as the opinion of others,than their own: becauſe indeed without example,and of it ſelf not ſo probable. For though we read of a wilderneſs, 1 Kin.19.15.which ſtood on the north; yet is not that called the wilderneſs,abſobutely, as that which ſtood on the ſouth, is often: but expreſſed by its proper name, the wilderneſs of Damaſcus. And upon ſuch an occaſion as this; in a matter of ſuch moment, and ſo ſolemnly delivered, as this is ; it is not very probable, that David would contract himſelf by ſuch an ambiguous expreſſion, when he might almoſt as ſhortly, but much more emphatically have ſaid : Nor from the North, or South. But beſides ; promotion, implying wealth and honour ; and a wilderneſſe, a place of penury and miſery ; (They wandred in the wilderneſſe, &c. Hungry, and thirſty. &c. pſal. 107. 4, 5.) being in themſelves ſo repugnant, though it be ſaid, that by a metonomy, or what other figure, by wilderneſſe, not a wilderneſſe properly ; but either North, or South, or both are intended ; yet ſtill there is ſome kind of incongruity, or impropriety in the buſineſſe, that ſuch a word ſhould be uſed upon ſuch an occaſion, rather than either North, or South, or both. For the vulgar indeed (Quia neque ab Oriente, neque ab Occidente, neque a deſertis montibus, quoniam Deus, &c.) where no promotion is mentioned, but help, or aſſiſtance, or deliverance to be ſupplied: why deſert mountains ſhould be mentioned, ſome kind of reaſon is given by them that are ſet to maintain that Tranſlation, be it never ſo falſe, or rediculous ; becauſe, ſay they, people that come from barren deſert places, are commonly (as uſing to live upon the rapine, becauſe their own country will not maintain them) more fierce, and warlike, than thoſe that live in better countries. This hath ſome ſhew of reaſon: but will not help us, who follow (and upon better grounds, I hope, though the Chaldee too go much that way :) a different, both ſenſe, and tranſlation. For my part, though for the ſenſe in general, I differ not from the reſt : yet for the ground of the expreſſion, (not leſſe conſiderable than the ſenſe it ſelfe in this place :) I am of a far different opinion ; which though I find nowhere elſe , yet I conceive grounded upon ſo much probability, as that I ſhall not be afraid to propoſe it. I ſay then firſt of all, that there be many ſecret alluſions in the Scripture, in later books eſpecially, to the books of Moſes, the moſt ancient, and moſt known of all the Scripture; which if not obſerved (as I believe they are not alwayes) muſt needs breed great obſcurity. We obſerved one upon the former pſalm verſe 16. Thou haſte prepared : but that as probably onely, as is there ſhewed. But pſal 19. 12. 13. Who can underſtand, &c. and, Keep back thy ſervant. — So ſhall I be innocent, &c. There is no queſtion but that the Pſalmiſt in all that paſſage doth allude to Numb. 15. 27. 30. which is ſo apparent, that moſt Expoſitors upon the place do refer thither in general : though when they come to the handling of particular words, as to tell us, why preſumptuous ſins, called the great tranſgreſſion, &c. they ſeem to have forgotten their quotation : and ſeek for reaſons and interpretations elſewhere, which that place onely, if it be granted that David doth allude unto it, doth afford. Now as concerning this place we are now upon, my opinion is, that the Pſalmiſt doth allude by theſe words (if he do not uſe ſome common and proverbial ſpeech among the Jews, grounded at firſt upon that Story : which I think as probable :) to the Story of Balak and Balaam, as recorded, Numb. ch 23. and ch. 24. Here firſt we have three places expreſſed from whence promotion ſhould come. So there Balaam, expecting great promotion from Balak, in caſe he could pleaſe him by his propheſies, Numb. 22. 17, 37. and 24. 11. did three ſeveral times ; 24. 10. and in three ſeveral places: (Ch. 23. 3, 14. and Ch. 24. 1.) apply himſelf, turning himſelf to ſeveral quarters of the World, to curſe Iſrael. Whether he turned himſelf Eaſt, and Weſt, the two firſt times, is not expreſſed in the Scripture : but onely that he ſtood upon a high place, the firſt time, Ch. 23. 3. Upon the top of Mount Piſga the ſecond time, verſe 14. the ſituation of which places though we know, (as may be eaſily known of Mount Piſga :) yet that will not help us, except it were expreſſed withall, how his face was turned. But that he ſtood Eaſt and Weſt, may moſt probably be inferred by common tradition among the Jews, becauſe it is directly ſaid of the laſt or third place , that he did ſet his face towards the wilderneſſe, (the very ſame word in the Original, המדבר which is here uſed by the Pſalmiſt, though the Hebrews want not variety of words to expreſſe a wilderneſſe :) Ch. 24. firſt verſe. And that very phraſe of ſetting his face towards, hath an intimation of ſome requeſt, or expectation of accompliſhment, to come from that place, towards which the face is turned, and words of prayers, or wiſhes directed. See upon pſal 5. 7. towards thy holy Temple. And whereas it is ſaid of Hezekiah 2 King. 20. 2. that he turned his face to, or towards (for it is the ſame word אל in the Original :) the wall : the Chaldee Paraphraſt, as I remember (for I have not the book at this time :) doth refer it to that cuſtom. That Balaams chief aim in removing from place to place, if by any means he could be inſpired to his mind, was his own profit and promotion, beſides what is thence to be learned, in the Hiſtory: we have further confirmation from 2 Pet. 2. 15. the wages of unrighteouſneſſe ; and Jud. the 11. verſe, for reward ; beſides Nehem 13. 2. hired Balaam, &c. Now when Balaam had tried ſo many places, and ſo many (as often as he changed place) ſeveral quarters and proſpects of the skies, to ſatisfie his ambition, highly inflamed by King Balak his goodly promiſes : what was the iſſue ? The Story tells us : And Balaks anger was kindled againſt Balaam, &c. and ſaid, Therefore now fly thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour: but I ſee the LORD hath kept thee back from honour, Numb. 24. 10, 11. And was there not ground enough, think we, from all theſe particulars of this Story, to infer, and to make a proverb, or common ſpeech (from ſo remarkable, ſo memorable a Hiſtory) of it ; That promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the wilderneſs : But God is the judge : he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. If this be not plaine, I know not what is : neither do I know of any one objection that can be made againſt it. Yet I have taken the more pains to make it plain, becauſe the ſilence of ſo many learned men that have written upon the Pſalms, might make a man ſuſpect, what otherwiſe would be undoubtable. I confeſſe I have them not all that have written upon the Pſalms : not ſo many by far, as I had when theſe Annotations were firſt printed. Yet I have the chiefeſt and generally beſt accounted of, now in ſight : and in them I am ſure I find no ſuch thing ſo much as mentioned. But if to be found any where elſe, I ſhall be ſo much the gladder, that the truth (the onely thing we ſhould all aim at) may have ſo much more confirmation. Now if this be a right interpretation, which we have all this while laboured about ; then it doth clearly follow, that either North, as ſome, or South, as our Engliſh here, in the Text; with divers others : inſtead of deſert, as in the margin, or wilderneſſe ; (which I like better of, becauſe it is the word uſed Numb. 24. firſt verſe :) is a bad, that I ſay not falſe, tranſlation, and doth much obſcure the reference to the Story, without which no good and ſatisfactory reaſon (as before ſaid and ſhewed) can be given, why the Pſalmiſt ſhould uſe ſuch a kind of ſpeech. As for the matter of theſe words, it is more fully (more emphatically it cannot be) expreſſed 1 Chr. 29. 11, 12. by the ſame David, (if David were the Author, as is moſt probable, though Aſaphs name be to it :) Thine O Lord, is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, &c. Both riches and honour come of thee, — to make great, and to give ſtrength unto all. Which nevertheleſſe is not ſo generally, and abſolutely to be taken, but that it is liable to divers exceptions, and reſtrictions. The Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, would not have ſo many ſervants, if he had not wherewith to reward them : nor ſo many wicked men, come to higheſt places of power and preferment, did they not act by ſome other power, than the power and Spirit of God. And though we do not believe, nay we know to be moſt falſe, what the Devil did once arrogate to himſelf, that all the Kingdoms of the world are at his diſpoſing, Luk. 4. 5, 6. Yet it is not probable that by Chriſt himſelfe he would have been ſtiled the Prince of this world, Joh. 12. 31. &c. or by his Apoſtle, The god : 2 Cor. 4. 4. had not he great power given him in the things of this preſent world. It is enough for us to be certain, that he can do nothing, no, not in the meaneſt things, or againſt the meaneſt men of the world, without Gods permiſſion, who doth reſtrain, and confine his power as Himſelfe pleaſeth, and makes his own purpoſes to ſtand, and his promiſes to take effect againſt all oppoſition of either men or devils, with as much (yea greater incomparably) facility, as the greateſt and moſt abſolute Monarch of the world can cruſh the meaneſt of his ſubjects. St. Chryſoſtome doth often affirm, that wicked men have not their wealth from God : which rightly underſtood, is true enough : nor repugnant to this place. But I muſt end this Note.

V. 7. God is the Judge] Pſal. 50. 6.

he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another] 1 Sam. 2. 7. Pſal. 113. 7.

V. 8. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, &c.] A cup alone, is an ordinary ſimilitude, for ordinary troubles and afflictions, Math. 20. 22, 23. Ye ſhall drink of my cup, &c. to which purpoſe the ancient Latins were wont to ſay, Ex eodem poculo bibere ; as is found in ſome of them. But a cup of red wine, as we have it here : or, of wrath and fury ; as by others it is expreſſed : (as Jer. 25. 15. Revel. 14. 10.) imports, uſually, extraordinary judgements of God upon ſome great provocation. How here intended, beſt Interpreters are divided. Some apprehend an antitheſis in the words, (in this our Engliſh obſerved) but the dregs thereof, &c. whereupon they make this ſenſe : That God, the ſupreme moderator, hath appointed troubles, more or leſſe and afflictions to all men, both good and bad ; in this world : but that he dealeth them in a certain meaſure and proportion : that is, to his people, out of his fatherly care over them, afflictions ſo moderated and limited, that they ſhall not be overcome by them, but overcome them to their own further good, and to his glory : (this to be intended by the firſt part of the ſimilitude ; it is full of mixture . and he poureth out of the ſame) but, to the wicked and godleſſe , ſorrowes and vexations without ſtint or meaſure ; terrible judgements ; ending in deſpair and utter deſtruction : this to be intended, by the dregs of his cup . or wine : wrung out and drunk ; by all the wicked of the earth. The ſenſe is plauſible. But if we compare with other like places, where this ſimilitude is uſed, there will appear no ſuch difference ; but that all promiſcuouſly, whether they be Gods people, (in outward profeſſion at leaſt) or others, are ſaid to drink of the ſame cup, and mixture : not as is here conceived, the one to drink the wine ; and the other, the dregs. So Iſai. 51. 17. Awake, awake, ſtand up, O Jeruſalem, which haſt drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury ; thou haſt drunk the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out. So Ezek. 23. 32. Thou ſhalt drink of thy ſiſters cup, deep and large, &c. (it is ſpoken to Judah) the cup of aſtoniſhment and deſolation, &c. Thou ſhalt even drink it, and ſuck it out : the word is מצית : the ſame as is here tranſlated, to wring out. (ימצו ישתו ſhall wring them out, and drink them) See alſo Jerem. 25. 15, 16, 17. &c. and Revel. 14. 10. So that this mention of dregs here, if interpreted by theſe places, is rather, by way of aggravation, to ſet out the greatneſſe of either Gods anger, or judgement, than by way of antitheſis, as is conceived. And ſo indeed is this place expounded by very good Interpreters; as Calvin for one. Neither is there any neceſſity of turning this אך by a veruntamen, or but: it may as well be tranſlated, utique, (certainly, truly,) as here it is by divers; and of neceſſity muſt be ſo ſometimes, where a but would ſpoile the ſenſe. As for example, Pſ. 39. 6. Surely every man walketh, &c. there be two אך there; both tranſlated, utique, or ſurely. See more of the like upon Pſal. 73. 1. Truly God, &c. Neverthelesſe, becauſe the former interpretation is approved by the greater number, and is of it ſelf, as to the Original words very warrantable, I am not againſt it, if any ſhall like it better. The πιθοπλασία of the ancient Heathens, of Gods dealing good and evil out of one, as Heſiod; or two ſeveral veſſels unto men, as Homer, had ſome reſemblance to this: and perchance might have its firſt beginning from ſome ſuch expreſſion.

it is full of mixture] Some make a myſtery of this mixture, as though it were intended by this word, That though the godly be not exempted from troubles and croſſes, yet they have them tempered by God, with proportionable comforts; and ſo moderated, that they do not exceed the meaſure of their ability to bear them. A good doctrine, but very weakly grounded upon this word. For ceartainly they are in the right, who by mixture, underſtand liquor mixed; that is, fitted and prepared; and now ready for drinking. Who knows not that the Greek κεράννυσθαι, and the Latin miſcere, are very commonly ſo taken; the reaſon being, (as many have well obſerved) becauſe the ancients were not wont to drink wine, nor think it fit to be drunk, (Hot wines, and in hot countries eſpecially) before it were mixed and tempered with water? And ſo we find the word κεράννυσθαι uſed Revel. 14. 10. The ſame ſhall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture: τοῦ κεκερασμένου ἀκράτου. The words, if tranſlated word for word, would imply a contradiction; mixed without mixture: but, the meaning is, as it is well expreſſed by the Engliſh, poured out: and that without mixture, there, is but an interpretation of what is here termed, red wine: and ſo indeed it is here too in the tranſlation of the Septuagint. (ποτήριον ἐν χειρὶ κυρίου οἴνου ἀκράτου) So that here too, would be the ſame contradiction, if this mixture were taken in the proper ſignification. They therefore that have cenſured this interpretation, a dilute interpretation, may recal their jeſt, and acknowledge their errour.

V. 10. All the horns of the wicked alſo will I cut off] I will in my reign pull down bad men, and ſet up good.

cut off] Jer. 48. 25.

PSAL. LXXVI.

Title.

Neginoth] See the Notes on the Title of Pſal. 4.

A Song or Pſalm] See the Notes on the Title of Pſal. 30.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſ. 1. IN Judah is God known] By this word, and by the deſtruction of their adverſaries This Pſalm is of the ſame ſubject, as Pſal. 46. God is our refuge and ſtrength, &c. and perchance written upon the ſame occaſion. Some notable victory, doubtleſſe; whether over the Ammonites, as ſome think, or any other. Both Pſalms compared together, will illuſtrate one another.

V. 2. In Salem alſo is his Tabernacle] Which afterward was called Jeruſalem.

V. 4. then the mountains of prey] Kingdoms full of extortion and rapine, compared to mountains full of ravening beaſts; or to mountains where robbers uſe to ſhelter themſelves, and lie in wait for prey, Amos 4. 1. Or, more glorious than the mountains of prey, is a proverbial expreſion and amplification of greateſt glory and exultation. For ſo the words are uſed to that purpoſe, in ſome other places of Scripture: They joy before thee, according to the joy in harveſt, and as men rejoyce, when they divide the ſpoile, Iſai. 9. 3. & 53. 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhall divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong. See alſo upon 62. 10. Truſt not in oppreſſion, &c.

V. 5. they have ſlept their ſleep] Their laſt ſleep, or ſleep of death; as in the next verſe. And ſome, not improbably, conceive, that this might have reference to that great and miraculous defeat of the Aſſyrians by night, related 2 King. 19. 35. which hapned in King Ezekiah his time. If ſo, then we know both the time and particular occaſion of the Pſalm: neither is there any thing in the whole Pſalm, but may very well ſtand with that conjecture. This of their ſleep, repeated again in the next verſe, makes it very probable.

and none of the men of might have found their hands] Some think is meant, that God took away their courage, and that their wonted ſtrength failed them in the battel. But if it were meant of the Aſſyrians, as we have mentioned upon the former words, there was no fight at all. And beſides, having told us of their laſt ſleep in the words immediately before theſe, it is not ſo likely that he ſhould in the ſame verſe, touch upon their faint and heartleſſe carriage in fight. More likely therefore, that theſe words have relation to the ſaid ſleep. A man that is in a ſound ſleep, may upon the working of his phantaſie, ſtrive and endeavour much, as either to riſe, or to run, or perhaps to defend himſelf; but he finds neither legs nor hands, till he be awaked. Virgil the Poet, upon a like occaſion, ſpeaking of one, (a mighty and invincible man otherwiſe) whom he faineth in his encounter with Eneas, ſuddenly to have been bereaſt of his wonted power and ſtrength by the gods, in favour to the ſaid him Eneas, hath the very ſame ſimilitude, of a man ſtriving in his ſleep to no purpoſe: Ac velut in ſomnis oculos ubi languida preſſit Nocte quies, nequicquam avidos extendere curſus Velle videmur, & in mediis conatibus agri Succidimus: non lingua valet, non corpore nota Sufficiunt vires: nec vox, nec verba ſequuntur: Sic Turno (quacunque viam virtute petivit) Succeſſum Dea dira negat, &c. No man can wiſh for a better comment upon theſe words of the Pſalmiſt. But I will not do the Poet ſo much wrong, as to go about to Engliſh him, neither in proſe, or verſe.

V. who may ſtand in thy ſight] God, with a look, is able to deſtroy all the power and activity of the enemies, were they never ſo many or mighty.

V. 8. from heaven] Thou haſt delivered us by thy power, manifeſted as from heaven, Pſal. 57. 3.

V. 9. to judgement] To revenge the wrongs done to thy Church, and to deliver it.

V. 10. Surely the wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee] The rage of thy foes, and ours, will turn to thy praiſe, who being overcome, thy people ſhall praiſe thee for their deliverance. And the more cruel they, the greater our deliverance, and our thanks accordingly: Or, as ſome others, the enemies themſelves confounded and convicted, ſhall acknowledge that it is thy doing, and ſhall be humbled before thee.

the remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain] Either they that remain and ſurvive of the people, 2 King. 19. 30. And the remnant that is eſcaped of the houſe of Judah, &c, Or, thou ſhalt prevent the further attempts of our enraged enemies. Thou wilt ſuffer them to do no more in their fury, than may turn to thy glory.

reſtrain] Heb. gird. That is, keep it within compaſſe, as with a girdle, V. 11. Vow, and pay unto the Lord your God] Pſal. 56. 6. Eccl. 5. 6, 7.

let all that be round about him bring preſents] To wit, the Levites, that dwell about the Tabernacle: or, the people among whom God doth dwell. See upon Pſal. 89. 7. of all that are about him, unto] Heb. to fear.

V. 12. He ſhall cut off the ſpirit of Princes] Heb. יבצר by ſome tranſlated vindemiabit, that is, he will gather as grapes. As men gather grapes, ſo ſhall he eaſily and ſuddenly take away their lives, and diſappoint their enterpriſes. The metaphor ſheweth, That the deſtruction of the mightieſt, with God, is but as the nipping of a bunch of grapes with men.

PSAL LXXVII.

Title.

to Jeduthum] Pſal. 39 tit.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſ. 1. I Cryed unto God with my voice] The Prophet teacheth us by his example to flee unto God for help in our neceſsities.

V. 2. my ſore] Heb. my hand. If taken properly, he means, My hand was ſtretched out in prayer; or, bedewed with my tears.

ran] Or, was ſtretched out.

refuſed to be comforted] Jer. 31. 15.

V. 3. and was troubled] This may be referred to the immediate words (his remembring of God: by which moſt underſtand praying: (either as an adjunct, or a conſequent. If as an adjunct; then, importing the commotion and agitation of his ſoul in his meditation, or prayer: which often happens in fervent prayers, upon earneſt occaſions. Such a prayer was that of Hanna, 1 Sam. 1. 10. &c. and that of Chriſt, Hebr. 5. 7. with ſtrong crying and tears, &c. and ſome naturally expreſſe more paſsion in their prayers, than others, who nevertheleſſe may pray as earneſtly, and effectually; as on the other ſide, we ſhould not raſhly condemn others for their earneſtneſs, except it be very manifeſt by their lives, or ſome other convincing circumſtance, that they are hypocrites. If we take the word as a conſequent of the former action, then the meaning is, that his very prayer or meditation, to which in his anguiſh and extremity; he did betake himſelf for comfort, added to his grief, rather than eaſed it. A thing very remarkable, and incidental, as to David, then; ſo to the beſt of men, at all times, So it pleaſeth God ſometimes, to deal with them that are moſt dear unto him. He doth withdraw himſelf, as to preſent ſenſe (though moſt preſent ſometimes, when he ſeemeth fartheſt of:) and will not be found in a good while; and all for our good, in due time, if we have patience to the end; and ſubmit to his wayes and wiſdom, though to us incomprehenſible. We muſt not give over praying for all that, except it be for a while, in caſe our preſent trouble be ready to overcome us: eſpecially, if there be any diſtemper of body concurring at the ſame time. He might alſo ſay that he was troubled, when he remembred God; meaning, that when he thought upon former times, how good and gracious then; how different now (in appearance) it troubled him very much: as having juſt occaſion to fear, that God had quite caſt him, or them off; then which nothing could be more diſmal and terrible. The Greek here εὐφράνθην: and after them the Latins, delectatus ſum: a quite contrary ſenſe, for which though there might be ſome ground from the uſe of the word in ſome other place, yet it ſeemeth here contrary to the coherence.

V. 4. Thou holdeſt mine eyes waking] God laid ſo many ſorrows on him, that he could not ſleep.

I am ſo troubled that I cannot ſpeak] As one that is aſtonied with ſome ſore blow received.

V. 5. I have conſidered the dayes of old] Pſal. 143. 5.

V. 6. my ſong in the night] Of thankſgiving, which I was accuſtomed to ſing in my proſperity.

I commune with mine own heart] Pſal. 4. 4.

my ſpirit made diligent ſearch] For the cauſes of this great change, and the means to recover my former happy eſtate.

V. 7. Will the Lord caſt off for ever?] Pſal. 13. 1.

V. 8. for evermore] Heb. to generation and generation.

V. 10. I ſaid this is my infirmity] See upon the next words, I will remember.

I will remember the years of the right hand of the moſt High.] The ambiguity of the word שנות which may be tranſlated either years, as it is here; or mutationes; that is, changes, as by divers; hath occaſioned much variety both of Tranſlations, and Expoſitions. If, years, the moſt probable ſenſe will be (which he further proſecutes in the following verſes) that to his preſent infirmity, and doubts, he hath oppoſed the conſideration of former times, when God did uſe his right hand; that is, did ſhew his wonderful power either in particular deliverances afforded to himſelf in his neceſſity; or publick, to his people in general in their extremities, when oppreſſed by their enemies, and the like. So Pſal. 74. after a long complaint of their preſent condition, ver. 12. 13. &c. he remembers, and relates what God had formerly done for them; For God is my King, &c. Thou didſt divide the ſea, &c. and ſo in many places beſides. But if, changes, then this: This is my infirmity; it is a change of the right hand of the moſt High; as if he ſaid; Why ſhould this change of the right hand of God towards me, this alteration of my former eſtate and condition, from good to bad, ſo much trouble me, or ſeem ſo ſtrange? As I have received good, why not evil alſo from the ſame hand? Shall we receive good at the hand of God, &c. Job 2. 10. and ſince we are born to adverſity, as well as proſperity (Eccl. 7. 14.) and, If thou faint in the day of adverſity, thy ſtrength is ſmall, Prov, 24. 10. well mayſt thou then acknowledge thine infirmity. There be ſundry other interpretations, to be found in Expoſitours, beſides theſe, according to both Tranſlations, either years, or changes: but theſe, the moſt approved, and in my judgement, the onely probable. Some; for, this is my infirmity, tranſlate, infirmari me iſtud? or, ſhould I be ſick for this? but it comes all to one. Some again, Et cogitavi, mors mea eſt. Or, Et dixi, Occidere meum: as if he intended to ſay, that in his ſudden thoughts; in the extremity of his ſufferings, he gave himſelf over for a dead man: he deſpaired even of life: (2 Cor. 1. 8.) tunc recordatus ſum, &c. Then did he call to minde. It is Vatablus his tranſlation and interpretation; which for his ſake I take notice of. So it would be the ſame as Pſal. 31. 22. I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off, &c. See there, and Pſal. 116. 11. I ſaid in my haſte, &c.

V. 11. I will remember thy wonders of old] Pſal. 44. verſe 1.

V. 13. Thy way, O God, is in the ſanctuary] Thy manner of proceeding is to be learned in thy word; which is taught in the ſanctuary, pſal. 73. 17.

V. 14. among the people] The Engliſh is ambiguous, more through defect of the Engliſh tongue, than any fault of the Tranſlators. In the Original Hebrew, and ſo in other tongues. it is a plural, diſtinct and different from the ſingular, ἐν τοῖς λαοῖς, in populis, among ſeveral people, or nations, from whom, through whom, and to whom thou didſt bring thy people.

V. 15. thine arm redeemed thy people] Exod. 6. 6.

V. 16. The waters ſaw thee, O God] When God brought his people thorow the red Sea, the waters fled away like a man frighted, pſal. 114. 3, 5.

V. 17. The clouds poured out water] Heb. The clouds were poured forth with water. It rained, thundred, and lightned, when God delivered his people, Exod. 14. 24. pſal. 68. 7, 8, 9. 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2.

thine arrowes alſo went abroad] pſal. 68. 33.

V. 18. The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven] pſal. 18. 13, 14.

V. 19. Thy path in the great waters] That is, in deep waters.

thy foot-ſteps are not known] Or, as by ſome expreſſed, were not known. For when thou hadſt brought over thy people, the water returned to her courſe: and the enemies that thought to have followed them, could not paſſe thorow, Exod. 14. 28, 29. Hence it appears that this parting of the ſea, was not from any natural cauſe, or accident, but wrought by God of purpoſe, that his people might paſſe thorow the ſea. Again, thy foot-ſteps are not known; in a more general ſenſe, (as the words are underſtood and applied by many ancients) of the wayes of God in general, both towards his Church, and in his general adminiſtration of the world, and of every mans ſalvation; thy wayes are incomprehenſible: many times contrary to mans judgement and expectation. How unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counſellour? Rom. 11. 33, 34. Of Gods works in general, Job 26. 14 Lo, theſe are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can underſtand? And ſo, Thy way is in the ſea, &c. ſhould be by way of ſimilitude; according to Prov. 30. 18, 19. There be three things which are too wonderful for me, &c. The way of an eagle in the air, ——— the way of a ſhip in the midſt of the ſea, &c. Again, Thy way is in the ſea, &c. may be underſtood of Gods wonders in the ſea, according to Pſal. 107. 23, 24. &c. They that go down into the ſea in ſhips, that do buſineſſe in great waters; Theſe ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep, &c.

PSAL. LXXVIII.

Title.

Maſchil of Aſaph] Or, A Pſalm, for Aſaph to give inſtruction.

Verſe 1. O My people] The Prophet, under the name of a Teacher, calleth the people his, and the doctrine his, as Paul calleth the Goſpel his, whereof he was but the preacher, Rom. 2. 16. & 16. 25.

to my law] That is, my doctrine.

V. 2. I will open my mouth in a parable] Pſal. 49. 4. See more there. Theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, with ſome alteration, are cited by the Evangeliſt, upon occaſion of Chriſt his ſpeaking to the people in parables: not with reference to the meaning of the pſalmiſt in theſe words; (for ſo the application might ſeem violent, and impertinent) but to the words themſelves, and to that ſenſe which of themſelves they are very capable of; yea and more proper to them, according to their more ordinary uſe and notion. See upon pſal. 49. 4. The words indeed might ſeem to import more, That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophet, ſaying, I will open my mouth in parables, &c. Mat. 13. 35. but it is an ordinary formula, uſed by the Evangeliſts as well in alluſive and indirect, as in more direct and proper applications; as Expoſitors will tell you there. Hence it is, that whereas the Pſalmiſt ſaith here, I will utter dark ſayings of old: the Evangeliſts, the better to fit the words to his purpoſe, makes it, I will utter things which have been kept ſecret from the foundation of the world. This alluſion to have proceeded immediately from the Evangeliſt himſelf, appears by the Septuagint here, whoſe Tranſlation is, φθέγξομαι προβλήματα ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς: not παραβολαῖς, as in the Evangeliſt.

I will utter] Plentifully, as a ſpring ſends out water.

dark ſayings] Sharp ones, (according to the propriety of the Original word) that require wit to underſtand and expound them.

of old] Of things that have been done long ſince.

V. 3. heard and known] Pſal, 44. 1.

V. 5. a teſtimony in Jacob] Pſal. 147. 19, 20. By the teſtimony and law, he meaneth either the whole written word or law, which they were commanded to teach their children, Deut. 6 1, 2, 3 &c. Or, more particularly, the things afterwards rehearſed in this pſalm; for the perpetual remembrance whereof unto all poſterity, they had a particular charge, Deut. 4. 9, 10. Onely take heed to thy ſelf, &c. which ſeemeth moſt probable.

our fathers have told us] Which were the people of God, pſal. 44 1.

that they ſhould make them known to their children] Deut. 4. 9. & 6. 7.

V. 6. That the generation to come might know them] There is not any thing more binding either in point of religion or of civil laws, and cuſtoms, than traditions received from fathers, and fore-fathers. Therefore ſuch care is taken here and elſewhere, for due information of poſterity.

V. 7. That they might ſet their hope in God] Thoſe many miracles that God had wrought in former times, he did them not for thoſe times onely, but for after-ages, alſo that the memory of them being faithfully tranſmitted to poſterity, the power of God might be known by them: who though he think it not fit to do ſuch wonders at all times. nor all times fit for miracles; yet is he ſtill the ſame God, as able and powerful as before; which is ground enough for our faith.

V. 8. And might not be as their fathers] Though children are commonly very apt of themſelves to follow their fathers examples; yet when ſuch examples come to them with the commemoration of ſuch and ſuch events and judgements as have enſued upon ſuch and ſuch examples: and thoſe judgements recorded by the ſame hand, from which they have the examples: then ſuch examples, ſo recorded and tranſmitted, are no inducements for imitation to any one, that is not extremely deſperate; but ſtand for warnings, and are commonly very profitable and availeable to that purpoſe.

that ſet not their heart] Heb. that prepared not their heart.

their heart aright] Verſe 37.

V. 9. The children of Ephraim] Firſt, they fled before Jephta, Judg. 12. 4, 6. Secondly, before the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. 4. 10. which ſeems the rather, becauſe after mentioned in this pſalm, v. 57, 61, 67. or; before Abijah, 2 Chr. 13. 17. See alſo, 1 Chr. 7. 21, 22. And Zabud his ſon, &c. to which ſome of the beſt Interpreters think theſe words to refer eſpecially: and ſo the Rabbins too, Kimki, and ſome others. Others, by the children of Ephraim, underſtand the Iſraelites in general ſo called by reaſon of the preeminency of that Tribe; and particularly of Jeroboam, an Ephraimite, the head of that diviſion and defection of the ten tribes, which they conceive is here intended. If ſo; the pſalm cannot be Davids. But it doth not ſeem to me probable, that this ſhould be here mentioned, before ſo many things of ancienter times, that follow after: and that which followes in the next verſe, They kept not the covenant of God, &c. cannot be reſtrained to either Ephraimites, or Iſraelites (as divided from Judah) alone, but belongs unto the Jewes in general. Some therefore very judicious, think that the tribe of Ephraim, partly for the ſuper eminent valour of it above other Tribes at that time, and partly becauſe the Ark of God, was then among the Ephraimites; that is, in Shilo, a Town of Ephraim; and carried with it, as it were the intereſt of the whole Tribes, (as appeared afterwards, when removed to Judah, that Tribe became the head Tribe :) for theſe reaſons, I ſay, that one Tribe might be intended for the whole commonalty of the Jewes in general.

carrying bowes] Heb, throwing forth, or, ſhooting with bowes; as Jer. 4. 29.

V. 12. in the field of Zoan] A place of note in Egypt, Iſa. 19. 13. Ezek. 30. 14.

V. 13. He divided the ſea] Exod. 14. 21.

V. 14. In the day-time alſo he let them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire] Exod. 13. 21. & 14. 24.

V. 15. He clave the rocks in the wilderneſſe, and gave them drink as out of the great depths] Exod. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11. Pſal. 105. 41. 1 Cor. 10. 4.

V. 16. to run down like rivers] So that they drank of the water all the while they were in the wilderneſſe, for it followed them in the Deſert, Deut. 9. 21. Pſal. 105. 41. 1 Cor. 10 4.

V. 17. And they ſinned yet more againſt him] Their wickedneſſe could not be overcome by Gods benefits, which were great and many, Iſa. 5. 4.

provoking the moſt High in the wilderneſſe] Pſal. 95. 8.

V. 18. by asking meat for their luſt] To require more than is convenient, to ſatisfie wanton luſt, and to doubt of Gods power, if we have it not, is to tempt God.

V. 19. Yea, they ſpake againſt God] Num. 11 4.

Can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſſe?] Thus when we give place to ſin, we are moved to doubt of Gods power, unleſſe he will always be ready to ſerve our luſts.

furniſh] Heb, order.

V. 20. Behold, he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed] Exod. 17. 6. Num. 20 11.

V. 22. and truſted not in his ſalvation] That is, in his fatherly providence, whereby he careth for his, and provideth ſufficiently for them.

V. 23. Though he had commanded the clouds] So that they had that which was convenient, but their luſt made them to covet more.

V. 24. And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven] Exod. 16. 14. Joh 6. 31.

V. 25. Man did eat angels food] Or, every one did eat the bread of the mighty. Such as angels might eat, if they uſed food. Excellent food. So the tongue of angels is put for an excellent tongue, 1 Cor. 13. 1. Or, food that came from the habitations of Angels (Heaven) as the Chaldee Paraphraſe expreſſeth it; and before, called, the corn of heaven, v. 25. Or, prepared and ſent to them by the miniſtery of Angels; whom God doth uſe in moſt things that belong unto men, either good, or bad; though they be not always mentioned.

V. 26. He cauſed an eaſt wind to blow] God uſed the winds to teach them, that all creatures were at his command, and that no diſtance of place could let his working.

to blow] Heb. to go.

V. 27. feathered fowls] Heb. fowl of wing.

V. 28. in the midſt] Of the places where they uſed to encamp, or, in a place near the camp: for it follows, round about their habitations; not in the midſt of them.

of their camp] Heb. his camp: That is, the camp of Jacob, mentioned, verſe 21.

V. 30. from their luſt] From the meat they deſired; or from deſiring more.

while their meat was yet in their mouthes] Num. 11. 33.

V. 31. ſlew the fatteſt of them] Though others were not ſpared yet chiefly they ſuffered, who were moſt puffed up, and were chiefeſt among them.

ſmote down] Heb. made to bow.

choſen men] Or, young men.

V. 32. they ſinned ſtill] Thus ſin by continuance maketh men inſenſible, ſo that no plagues will mend them, 2 Chron 28. 22.

V. 33. in vanity] In fruitleſſe journeys in the wilderneſſe, ſo that they could not come to Cannan; Num. 14. 29.

V. 34. When he ſlew them] Such was their hypocriſie, that they ſought unto God for fear of puniſhment, though in their heart they loved him not, Hoſ. 5. 15.

V. 37. For their heart was not right with him] Whatſoever cometh not from the pure fountain of the heart, is hypocriſie.

V. 38. forgave their iniquity] Becauſe he would ever have ſome remnant of a Church to praiſe his Name on earth, he ſuffered not their ſins to overcome his mercy.

V. 39. For he remembred that they were but fleſh] Behold, he putteth no truſt in his Saints; yea the heavens are not clean in his ſight. How much more abominable, &c. Job 15. 14, 15, 16. This conſideration of mans frail nature prevailed with God, Gen. 8. 21. I will not again curſe the ground any more, for mans ſake: for the imagination of mans heart is evil from his youth. Or, fleſh, an object of compaſſion; by its natural conſtitution ſubject to much miſery, and of little continuance.

a wind that paſſeth away, and cometh not again] O ſpare me that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more, Pſal. 39. 13. See alſo Job 7. 7. O remember that my life is wind, &c. Of the ſoul, and the immortality of it, not mentioned at all in ſuch expreſſions, ſee upon pſal. 5. 5. For in death, &c. and upon pſal. 37. 1, 2.

V. 40. provoke him] Or, rebel againſt him.

V. 41. turned back and tempted God] Or, tempted God again.

limited the holy One of Iſrael] By appointing what he ſhould do, or including his power within their capacity.

V. 42. They remembred not his hand] The forgetfulneſſe of Gods benefits, is the root of rebellion, and of all vice.

from the enemy] Or, from affliction.

V. 43. wrought] Heb. ſet.

V. 44. And had turned their rivers into blood] Exod 7. 20.

V. 45. He ſent divers ſorts of flies among them, which devoured them] Exod. 8. 24.

He ſent divers ſorts of flies] This word ſignifieth, a confuſed mixture of flies, and venemous worms. Some take it for all ſorts of ſerpents: ſome, for all wilde beaſts.

frogs, which deſtroyed them] Exod. 8. 6.

V. 46. He gave alſo their increaſe unto the caterpillar] Exod. 10. 13. He repeateth not here all the miracles that God did in Egypt, but ſome which might be ſufficient to convince the people of ingratitude.

V. 47. He deſtroyed their vines with hail, and their ſycomore-trees with froſt] Exod. 9. 23.

deſtroyed] Heb. killed.

froſt] Or, great hail-ſtones.

V. 48. He gave up] Heb. He ſhut up.

hot thunder-bolts] Or, lightnings.

V. 49. He caſt upon them the fierceneſſe of his anger, wrath and indignation] Some, becauſe of the ten plagues of Egypt, they finde but ſeven here mentioned, think the reſt, three in number, to wit, that of the lice, which in that order Moſes relates them was the third, Exod. 8. 16. &c. that of boiles and blaines the ſixth, Exod. 9. 8. &c. and laſtly, that of the darkneſſe in all the land, the ninth, Exod. 10. 21. &c, might be comprehended by theſe many general words here heaped together. But then we ſhall be as much troubled to give a reaſon why the reſt, (the greater number, ſeven of ten) being particularly mentioned and expreſſed, theſe three ſhould be thus put together, and that in ſuch general terms, as may comprehend any of the reſt, or all of them, as well as theſe. And then ſecondly, if three plagues were intended, juſt ſo many; why the words exceed that number; being four at leaſt: fierceneſſe of anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble: which hath moved the author of this conceit, contrary to what himſelf had before ſet down, of three onely omitted, or not expreſſed particularly, here to find four; to wit, the fift alſo, the murrain of cattel: of which there, indeed, ſome make a doubt, whether particular mention be made of it, or no: as may appear by the different tranſlation of thoſe words, (for there it muſt be, or nowhere) of the fiftieth verſe; but gave their life over to the peſtilence; in the text; but gave their beaſts to the murrain, in the margin. Then again, ſuppoſing we could ſatisfie concerning the number; another queſtion by ſome other may haply be raiſed about the order, why the Pſalmiſt doth not obſerve the ſame order that Moſes doth: that being the ſecond here, which in Moſes is the fourth; and that third here, which in him is ſecond; and that fourth here, which in Moſes makes the eight; that fift, which in Moſes, the ſeventh: and laſtly, that fift here, which there the ſixt. Our beſt anſwer therefore will be, if any ſtick at the omiſſion of either three, or four, of the ten, to deſire an anſwer from them, whether it was not free for the Pſalmiſt to mention as many, or as few, as he thought fit himſelf, without any further regard than to his own phanſie, and his pen, or verſe? Or if he had not mentioned any at all, whether he could have been juſtly charged of any omiſſion? If that cannot be ſhewed, as I believe it cannot; then is it againſt reaſon, to require a reaſon why all not expreſſed, as well as ſome. And ſo we ſhall conclude, that theſe words (the words of this verſe) be general words, which relate to all the plagues in general, and not to any particularly. See alſo upon pſal. 105. 28. He ſent darkneſſe, &c.

by ſending evil Angels among them] Some plainly underſtand Devils, whom God doth uſe ſometimes as inſtruments, in ſuch caſes, as by the hiſtory of Job, and many examples in the New Teſtament doth appear. Others, good Angels, called evil Angels, whileſt under God, miniſters of evil, or executioners of Gods juſt Judgements. There be examples of both good and evil, uſed by God in theſe caſes. But that thoſe were evil angels that were uſed by God in that buſineſſe, here mentioned, ſome think is intimated by Moſes, in the word משחית the deſtroyer, Exod. 12. 23. But that can be no argument, ſince the Angel whom God uſed about the three dayes peſtilence, deſcribed, 2 Sam. 24. in the ſame Chapter and verſe is ſtiled משחית the deſtroyer; and yet the Angel of the Lord: which is not likely to be meant of Satan: who indeed had been by his tempting of David, (as we read, 1 Chron. 21. 1.) the occaſion of that plague; but not the inſtrument, under that name at leaſt of the puniſhment. Rabbi M. Ben. Maimon, the moſt ſober and learned of all that profeſſion, in his excellent Treatiſe, called, More Nenochim, l. 2. c. 6. diſputes at large, that whatſover is operative under God, as the elements, and all natural faculties, and the like, are called Angels in the Scriptures: neither doth he ſeem to acknowledge (his proper errour, oppoſed therein by other Rabbins) any other evil angles, but figuratively. So, fire, hail, famine and death Eccl. 39. 28, 29. are termed ſpirits, created by God for vengeance; and in the New Teſtament too, the word is ſometimes, if I be not miſtaken, uſed in that notion. So that nothing hinders, but that evil angels here alſo, may be interpreted, dreadful plagues and judgements inflicted by Gods immediate power.

V. 50. He made away] Heb. He weighed a path.

their life over to the peſtilence] Or, their beaſts to the murrain, Exod. 9. 3. See upon ver. 49.

V. 51. And ſmote all the firſt-born in Egypt, Exod. 12. 29.

the chief of their ſtrength] The firſt-born are ſo called, Gen. 49. 3.

of Ham] That is, Egypt: for it is called Mizraim, of Mizraim that was the ſon of Ham.

like ſheep] Pſal. 77. 20.

V. 53. ſo that they feared not] They had no occaſion to fear, for God deſtroyed their enemies; yet they did fear ſometimes out of unbelief.

overwhelmed their enemies] Exod. 14. 27. & 15. 10.

overwhelmed] Heb. covered.

V. 54. He brought them to the border of his Sanctuary] Or, holineſſe; that is, to the holy land: ſo called in divers reſpects, but eſpecially, becauſe of his Sanctuary, the place of his reſidence: to which he makes all the land to be but as bounds and limits, becauſe of the eminency of that place, the holineſſe whereof did as it were ſpread to all other parts of the land, as if the whole had been a Sanctuary, and conſecrated ground. It is therefore to the honour of the whole land, as well as of the Sanctuary, that he calleth it, the holy border, or, border of his Sanctuary.

which his right hand had purchaſed] Not got by them by their own power and ſtrength; as Pſal. 44. 3. For they gat not the land in poſſeſſion by their own ſword ——— but thy right hand, &c.

V. 55. divided them an inheritance by line] Joſh. 13. 7.

V. 57. dealt unfaithfully] Nothing more diſpleaſeth God in children, than when they continue in that wickedneſſe, which their fathers had begun.

deceitful] Or, ſlack, or warping. The ſimilitude, it ſeems, was commonly uſed by way of proverb. So Hoſ. 7. 16. They return, but not to the moſt High: they are like a deceitful bow. As on the other ſide, to truſt to his bow, Pſal. 44. 6. and elſewhere. And, a bow that will not turn back, uſed alſo proverbially, 2 Sam. 1. 22. The reaſon of which expreſſions archers are beſt able to give an account of.

V. 58. For they provoked him to anger] Deut. 32. 21. By ſerving God otherwiſe than he had appointed.

V. 60. So that he forſook the tabernacle of Shiloh] 1 Sam. 4. 11. For their ingratitude he ſuffered the Philiſtines to take the Ark which was the ſign of his preſence from among them, and never brought it back to Shiloh again, Jer. 7. 12, 14.

V. 61. delivered his ſtrength] See upon Pſal. 63. 2. to ſee thy power and thy glory.

V. 62. Was wroth with his inheritance] His people, that were as dear to him, as our inheritance is to us.

V. 63. The fire conſumed their young men] They were ſuddenly deſtroyed, 1 Sam 4. 10.

their maidens were not given to marriage] They had no marriage ſongs; that is, they were not married, Jer. 25. 10. Revelations 18. 23.

given] Heb. praiſed.

V. 64. their widowes made no lamentation] They were ſo overwhelmed with grief, that they died themſelves, and could not lament for their husbandss, 1 Sam 4. 19. &c.

V. 65. Like a mighty man that ſhouteth by reaſon of wine] Or, after wine: as others. Now by ſuch ſimilitudes the Scripture hath a reſpect unto the nature of man, there being nothing uſually, that affects the phanſie more, among the vulgar, than the repreſentation of ſuch mighty men, and Gyants; as appears by the many fables, with much applauſe, received among ſuch, in all nations, concerning both the perſons and actions, and habitations of Gyants, and gyant-like men. For the ſame reaſon the Sun alſo, Pſal. 19. 5. is repreſented to a ſtrong man (or gyant) that runs a race. See more upon Pſal. 110. 6. He ſhall fill the places, &c.

V. 66. He ſmote his enemies] With diſeaſes, 1 Sam. 5. 6. was a reproach to them, 1 Sam. 6. 4.

V. 67. He refuſed the tabernacle of Joſeph] That is, Shiloh, a town in the tribe of Ephraim, the ſon of Joſeph: where the Ark had abided a long time, till it was taken by the Philiſtines: but after that, God would not have it to return thither any more, but after many migrations, 1 Sam. 6. 12. &c. it was brought by David to Jeruſalem, and placed in the tabernacle which he had prepared for it.

V. 69. He built his ſanctuary like high places] In ſome Bibles that I have ſeen, and uſed, it is printed very abſurdly, like high places, inſtead of, like high palaces; Or, as ſome others, like high caſtles. Whereupon ſome conceive that the ſtability and perpetuity of the Church is here intimated. The Hebrew word רמים doth comprehend both. And indeed Solomons Temple was like a Palace, for largeneſſe and magnificence: and Herods Temple, as it ſtood in Chriſt his time of his converſation among men, it was not only like a palace, but like a caſtle too, compaſſed about with towers and all manner of fortifications, as appears by the ſtory of Veſpaſians ſiege.

Which he hath eſtabliſhed] See before upon Pſal. 68. 16. yea the Lord will dwell in it for ever.

eſtabliſhed] Heb. founded.

V. 70. He choſe David alſo his ſervant] 1 Sam. 16. 11. 2 Sam. 7. 8.

V. 71. From following] Heb. From after.

to feed Jacob his people, and Iſrael his inheritance] 2 Sam. 5. 2. 1 Chron. 11. 2.

V. 72. and guided them by the skilfulneſſe of his hands] The Original word תבונות properly ſignifieth Prudence: or if we will, with divers good Interpreters, preciſely keep to the Hebrew, becauſe it is a plural, Prudentias; that is, prudentia; which plural is by ſome roſolved into a kind of ſuperlative, ſumma prudentia: that is, exquiſit, or, ſingular prudence. But prudentia, ſingular, or plural, is the word in moſt other tranſlations that I have ſeen. The Greek σύνεσις, expreſſed by the Latin intelligentia, may alſo import φρόνησις, prudence. But becauſe Prudence doth not properly belong to the hands, our Interpreters, it ſeems thought Skilfulneſſe (which the Hebrew doth alſo ſignifie) more proper to this place. But I am of another mind, I muſt confeſſe, and like prudence here much better. For if I be not miſtaken, the intention of the Pſalmiſt here, was to charactariſe a good King, by two excellent properties, which indeed comprehend almoſt all that can be ſaid to the commendation of an abſolute Prince. The firſt is, goodneſſe; not counterfeit, or aſcititious; but natural and ſincere: ἀφέλεια, in Greek, which comprehends juſtice, clemency, and many other vertues. But goodneſſe though alwayes commendable of it ſelf, whatever it be; yet goodneſſe without valour in a King, is but a lame commendation, and may probably make (there be examples enough to be found) an unfortunate both King and people. I conceive that valour is included in the word hand; the uſual emblime of action and power. But again, becauſe valour, without prudence and diſcretion, doth more hurt oftentimes, than good; as valour is added to goodneſſe, ſo prudence to valour: but not as a diſtinct vertue from it, becauſe in very deed (as Philoſophers alſo teach) valour, without diſcretion, doth not deſerve the name of valour, and may more properly be called raſhneſſe, madneſſe, deſperatneſſe, or any thing, than valour. And we know that David is ſet out in the Scriptures, not as a good and pious Prince onely, but alſo valiant: a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, 1 Sam. 16. 18. By thoſe two properties alſo doth Homer, the Poet of Poets, charactariſe a good King βασιλῆϊ τ' ἀγαθῷ κρατερῷ τ' αἰχμητῇ; which hath been accounted in after ages a compleat Elogium of moſt exemplary Princes. However if this ſeem to reliſh of too much ſubtilty, which I profeſſe I deſire to avoid in ſuch a work as this; I ſhall content my ſelf with moſt Interpreters, by prudence of hands, to underſtand, prudent, diſcreet adminiſtration, and diſcreet carriage of all manner of buſineſſes. For indeed, where ſuch prudence is; valour, or at leaſt, the effects of valour; either perſonal, or by Miniſters and Officers well choſen, (that is, with judgement and diſcretion;) cannot be wanting.

PSAL. LXXIX.

Title.

Of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſe 1. THe heathen are come into thine inheritance] The people cry unto God againſt the barbarous tyranny of the Babylonians; who ſpoyled Gods inheritance, polluted his Temple, deſtroyed his religion, and murdered his people.

thy holy temple have they defiled] Pſal. 74. 7.

V. 2. The dead bodies of thy ſervant] The Prophet ſheweth, to what extremities God ſuffereth ſometime his Church to fall, to exerciſe their faith, before he ſet to his hand to deliver them.

fowles of the heaven] Pſal. 74. 14.

V. 3. there was none to bury them] Their friends and kinsfolk durſt not bury them, for fear of the enemies: or, there were ſo many ſlain, that the living ſufficed not to bury the dead.

V. 4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours] Pſalm 44. 14.

a reproach to our neighbours] Whereof ſome came of Abraham, but were degenerate: and others were open enemies to thy religion; but they both laughed at our miſeries.

V. 5. How long Lord?] Pſal. 89. 46.

ſhall thy jealouſie burn like fire?] Wilt thou utterly conſume us for our ſins, before thou takeſt us to mercy?

V. 6. Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee] Of imprecations in general, ſee before upon Pſalm 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c. However, there be, of the moſt judicious, who think this imprecation (in form) may be reſolved into a modeſt expoſtulation, as if he had ſaid, or intended to ſay; Lord, how can it ſtand with thy goodneſſe and juſtice, to lay ſo much upon us, who are thy peculiar people, who both know and worſhip thee; and to be ſo indulgent to thoſe, that are meer ſtrangers?

thoſe that know thee not, nor call upon thee? But whether we take them as an imprecation, or expoſtulation, certain it is that the aggravation is not properly (as it might ſeem at firſt) in that they knew not God; (which in ſome caſes would be an extenuation rather, according that of our Saviours, Jeſus ſaid unto them, if ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſin, &c. Joh. 9. 41. And, That ſervant which knew his Lords will, &c. But he that knew not &c. Luke 47. 48.) but in that which followes, (the fruit and effects of that ignorance, perchance, though the ſame be done ſometimes by them alſo, that profeſſe they know God.) in the next verſe, For they have devoured Jacob, and laid waſte his dwelling place. Theſe two verſes (6. & 7.) are uſed by the Prophet Jeremy alſo, but with ſome little alteration and addition, as will appear, if compared, Jer. 10. 25.

V. 7. For they have devoured Jacob] Heb. אכל, voravit, in the ſingular: He hath devoured; that is, unuſquiſque eorum.; every one of them; as ſome of the Rabbines there. Or elſe it may be that a Vau is wanting, which is ſupplyed by Jeremy, Jer. 10. 25. (See upon the former verſe,) where the word is twice repeated, and both times in the plurall.

V. 8. O remember not againſt us former iniquities] Eſay 64. 9. Which we and our fathers have committed.

former iniquities] Or, the iniquities of them that were before us.

let thy tender mercies ſpeedily prevent us] And ſtay not till we be overwhelmed with our troubles.

V. 9. O God of our ſalvation] Seeing we have none other Saviour, neither can we help our ſelves, and alſo by our deliverance, thy name ſhall be praiſed, Therefore, O Lord, help us.

names ſake] Joſh. 7. 9.

V. 10 Where is their God?] Pſal. 42. 10. & 115. 2.

revenging] Heb. vengeance.

revenging the blood of thy ſervants which is ſhed] Pſal. 58. 10.

V. 11. Let the ſighing of the priſoner come before thee] Who though in reſpect of God they were juſtly puniſhed for their ſins, yet in conſideration of their cauſe were unjuſtly vexed.

thy power] Heb. thine arm.

preſerve thou thoſe that are appointed to dye] Heb. reſerve the children of death,

thoſe that are appointed to dye] Which were captives among their enemies and could look for nothing but death, Pſal. 44. 22. He preſſeth this upon God, as a thing moſt beſeeming his infinite both power and mercy, to help then, when there is leaſt hope: Becauſe, mans extremity, is Gods opportunity. It is mentioned as the proper work of God, Pſal. 102. 20. To hear the groaning of the priſoner; to looſe thoſe that are appointed to death. And it is the propriety of all that are good, and generous among me, to intimate God therein, ſo far as their power doth extend, If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and thoſe that are ready to be ſlain, If thou ſayeſt, &c. Prov. 24. 11, 12.

V. 12. And render unto our neighbours ſeven fold] To wit, to our unmercifull neighbours, who in our calamity, when we expected pitty and compaſſion, did cruelly inſult over us, and upbraided us, as other heathens did, of our vain confidence in our God: and made our temporall ſufferings, an argument of our falſe worſhip. Of this, and of deſire of revenge in generall, ſee, as before, upon Pſalme 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c. Into their boſome, as Eſay 65. 6, 7.

V. 13. ſheep of thy paſture] Pſal. 95. 7. & 100. 3.

we will ſhew forth thy praiſe to all generations] Heb. we will number. That is, record the particular benefits, for which thou art to be praiſed. We ought to deſire no benefit of God, but on this condition, To praiſe his Name, Eſay 43. 21.

to all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

PSAL. LXXX.

Title.

Shoſhannim] See Notes on Pſal. 60. tit.

Eduth] A conteſtation: wherein the Pſalmiſt earneſtly intreateth God for freedom out of thoſe miſeries, which by his deſertion had befallen him.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſe 1. T*Hou that leadeſt Joſeph like a flock*] By Joſeph, moſt underſtand the Tribe of Ephraim, the ſon of Joſeph; which was the head of the ten Tribes, ſeparated from Judah: ſo that the calamities of the ten Tribes apart by the Chaldeans, are conceived to be the ſubject of this Pſalm. So Amos 6. 1. &c. Judah is reproved, becauſe not ſenſible of the afflictions of Joſeph, ver. 6. that is, of the ten Tribes, carried into captivity about 150. years before the taking of Ieruſalem, by the ſame Chaldeans. Others, becauſe mention is made of the Ark, (between the Cherubims) where God was ſaid to dwell (of which ſee Exod. 25. 22. And there I will meet thee, &c) aud that the ten Tribes were departed from the worſhip of the true God, that was ſaid to dwell there, and worſhipped Idols, and by conſequence had no intereſt either in the Ark, or in the God of the Ark; they therefore conceive that the ten Tribes cannot here be meant particularly; but by Ioſeph, they underſtand all the Tribes in generall, as Pſalm next, verſe 5. This be ordained in Joſeph for a teſtimony, &c. But the objection is in very deed of little conſequence. For if the Pſalmiſt may be allowed to addreſſe himſelf to the true God, for them that had forſaken him; why not as well to the God dwelling in the Ark, or among the Cherubins of the Ark; being an ordinary periphraſis, or expreſſion of the true God in the Scripture? beſides, as is well anſwered by ſome, though the generality of the ten Tribes had forſaken God; yet many there were of that diviſion, who not only had forſaken them locally, 2 Chr. 11. 16, 17. but alſo remaining among them, worſhipped the true God in their hearts; nor did conform to the outward Idolatrous worſhip of the reſt, 1 King. 19. 18. Yet I have left me ſeven thouſand in Iſrael, &c. A greater objection may be, as I conceive, though no notice be taken of it, from the next words, as we ſhall ſee there.

V. 2. Before Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manaſſeh, ſtirre up thy ſtrength] Why theſe Tribes ſhould be joyned, and why theſe only mentioned is a queſtion; and whether all the Tribes in generall; (of which ſee what hath been already ſaid upon the firſt verſe) and Pſal. 68. 27. the Princes of Judah) or the ten only, be intended. They that would have all the Tribes included, ſay, that it is uſuall in the Scripture, by naming of ſome, to underſtand all, that the Tribe of Ephraim and Manaſſe, before the Kingdomes were ſetled in the Tribe of Judah, were the chiefeſt Tribes, being Joſephs poſterity: that theſe three Tribes, when all the Iſraelites, divided into four equall parts, encamped about the Ark, made one part, Numb. 2. 17, 18, &c. and with reference to that ancient relation, though long after, might probably be named together. And beſides that Benjamin had a particular relation to the Tribe of Ephraim and Manaſſe, becauſe Benjamin and Joſeph were not only brethren, as all the reſt of the Patriarchs; all ſons of Jacob: but alſo ὁμομήτριοι, as St. Baſil here calls them, ſons of one mother. This, upon a ſuppoſition that the twelve Tribes in general are the ſubject of theſe complaints But that by ſome others, men of great judgement and learning, will not be granted: that all ſhould be intended, and yet neither Judah, the very chief (in thoſe dayes) of all the Tribes; nor the Temple, or City, far more conſiderable to the Jews in all their joyes or ſorrows, than life, or any thing elſe, ſhould be mentioned. But they that object ſo ſtrongly, and in my judgement plauſibly enough, againſt the former, take no notice at all, (which I much wonder at) of one ſtrong objection that may be made againſt their opinion. For if the ten Tribes onely, or the Iſraelites, as then called, were here concerned; how comes Benjamin to be named; which was a diſtinct Tribe from the Iſraelites. and adhered unto Juda, when that unhappy diviſion, by the revolt of ten Tribes, happened? In anſwer to this, all that I can think of (ſince I find nothing by others either objected. or anſwered about it,) that hath probability, is this; That haply the words both of this and the former verſe, were ſome ancient form of prayer uſed of old, when they were all one body, either upon the marching of the Ark, or ſome occaſion of imminent danger; but an ancient publick formula, whatever the occaſion were; and as an ancient form, (which in prayer is ordinary, wherein many have been very ſcrupulous to alter any thing, either words, or matter, though ſometimes for the beſt;) here uſed and retained, though alteration of times have now much altered the caſe. So Pſal. 68. 1. Ariſe, O God, &c. was an ancient form, as is noted there: and ſo again, Pſal. 132. 8, 9, 10. Ariſe, O Lord, &c. Let thy Prieſts, &c. For thy ſervant, &c as appears by 2 Chr. 6. 41, 42. As for the conjunction of theſe three Tribes, in general, this alſo beſides their encamping together, is obſerved, that they, or the remnants of them, dwelled together in Jeruſalem with Judah, after the captivity; as is recorded 1 Chron. 9. 3.

V. 3. Turn us] Or, Return us. To wit, out of captivity.

V. 4 How long wilt thou be angry againſt the power of thy people?] The fathfull fear Gods anger, when they perceive that their prayers are not forthwith heard.

wilt thou be angry] Heb. wilt thou ſmoake.

V. 5. Thou feedeſt them with the bread of tears] 1 King. 22. 27. Pſal. 102. 9 Eſay 30. 20. See upon Pſal. 42. 3. My tears.

V. 6. Thou makeſt us a ſtrife unto our neighbours] Our neighbours have a continuall ſtrife and war againſt us.

V. 7. Turn us again] See verſe 3.

V. 8. Thou haſt brought a vine out of Egypt] See Eſay 5. 1. &c. Now will I ſing to my well-beloved, &c. For the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts is the houſe of Iſrael, &c. And Jer. 2. 21. Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, &c. Seeing that of thy mercy thou haſt made us a moſt dear poſſeſſion to thee, and we thorow our ſins are laid open for wild beaſts to devour us, declare again thy love, and finiſh thy work that thou haſt begun. Pſal. 44. 2.

caſt out the heathen] Pſol 44. 3.

V. 10. The goodly cedars] Heb. the cedars of God.

V. 11. and her branches unto the river] To wit, Euphrates, as Pſal. 72. 8. He ſhall have dominion, &c.

V. 12. broken down her hedges] Pſal. 89. 40. Eſay. 5. 5.

V. 13. The boar] Or, That the boar.

The boar out of the wood doth waſte it] That is, as well they that hate our religion, as they that hate our perſons. Or more probably, if any ſuch interpretation be allowed, that is, that in this allegory of wild beaſts, the boar out of the wood, and the wild beaſts of the field, muſt be interpreted of different parts; which is not neceſſary:

ceſſary: but if any ſuch; more probale, that by the wild boare, as ſome interpreters here, the tyrants themſelves or Great ones, that were chief actors in this ſad tragedy, and ſet others on the work: and by the wild beaſt of the field; or, (as ſome Rabbines conceive, that the word חיה doth properly import,) the reptilia, that is, crawling beaſts, or vermines, the common ſouldiers, and other inferiour people, ſhould be underſtood. But, as was intimated before, it may very well be, and it is the more received opinion, that by both thoſe particulars in the allegory, one and the ſame thing is literally intended; to wit, very barbarous and cruell enemies.

V. 14. look down from heaven] They gave not place to tentation, knowing, That albeit there were no hope on earth, yet God was able to ſuccour them from heaven, Eſay 63. 15.

V. 15. And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted] There be two words in this verſe, כנה, (here tranſlated vineyard.) and בן (here, branch,) about which there is great controverſie. As for the firſt, it is no where extant but in this place; the Rabbines can tell us nothing of it, of certainty, and all that either by them, or any other, is ſaid of it, is either grounded upon the etymology; as it is conceived to be a derivative of כון, which ſignifieth aptare, firmare, diſponere, &c. or upon the context here, being thus joyned with the verb נטע, which ſignifies to plant. Upon the the firſt ground, ſome tranſlate it, a baſe, or prop, or ſtey: ſuch as are uſed about vines, to bear the branches, and ſometimes the body: and upon the ſecond, others, a vine; as here: or, a plant. But there be, who think that כ is here inſtead of ג: and thereupon render hortam, that is, a garden. Some think it to be an Egyptian word: but I ſee little ground for it, except all words, but once to be found in the Scripture, and muſt be concluded to be ſtrange words. However, if Egyptian, yet ſo it would, as they interpret it, ſignifie a plant. So that all this variety comes to one effect, and makes no conſiderable difference of ſenſe. As for the other word בן, I know not why there ſhould be any difference about it. It is true, the ordinary ſignification of it is, a ſon: but it is as undoubtedly true, that it ſignifies ſometimes a bough, or branch, as Gen. 49. 22. twice in one verſe; Joſeph is a fruitfull bough. &c. beſides בנות the feminine of it, properly daughters, there alſo tranſlated branches: which ſignification being very proper and natural here, why any ſhould rather chooſe the former; becauſe more ordinary, and thereupon tell us, that Chriſt is meant; or, as ſome others, that Solomon; I ſee no cauſe.

that thou madeſt ſtrong for thy ſelfe] So that, without thy leave, no power can prevaile againſt it; and which as a young bud, thou raiſeſt up again, as out of the burnt aſhes.

V. 16. they periſh at the rebuke of thy countenance] When thou in thine anger delivereſt it over to the ſword of the enemies, Pſal. 39. 11.

V. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand] By the man of thy right hand, moſt underſtand, the man of thy love, as Benjamin (properly, a ſon of the right hand) was to Jacob. And by hand, underſtanding power and protection, is as uſuall. See upon Pſal. 74. 16. thou haſt prepared:) they make this to to be the meaning; Protect and defend the man of thy right hand; that is, ſay ſome, that vine that branch, which hath been ſo dear unto thee; upon which thou haſt beſtowed ſo much coſt; taking the word man. not, as properly, perſonal; but as they call it reall, referring to the particular thing, ſpoken of before, whether man, or whatever elſe it be. To this purpoſe they bring, the man of hunger, for a hungry: and a man of chiding, for the object of chiding; a man of war, for a warrier, and the like. Wherein nevertheleſſe there is a manifeſt difference: becauſe man in theſe phraſes, though not principally intended to ſignifie a perſon; yet it refers to a particular man, not any thing elſe; and therefore may be called perſonall: whereas here it is (as they expound) otherwiſe; referring immediately to a vine, and in that vine, metaphorically, to a whole Nation. Others therefore by the man, underſtand the King of the Iſraelites, whoever he was that had right to that kingdom, in thoſe calamitous times. But they are put to it, to give a reaſon, why the Pſalmiſt ſhould pray, not onely for an Idolatrous wicked King, but for an uſurper, whoſe predeceſſours had impiouſly revolted from their lawfull King, the King of Judah. So that after they have ſaid as much as they can to that purpoſe, they come about again, and would rather have the whole Church underſtood. And by the ſon of man, the more ordinary ſort of people, that none might be excluded from the benefit of theſe prayers. Others finding but little probability in this expoſition, would have the Meſſias intended, either in both places; or at leaſt, Chriſt in the firſt, the man of Gods right hand; and the Church in the laſt, by the ſon of man. The Chaldee Paraphraſt referreth it either to David perſonally, which is not ſo likely; or to ſome, whether Meſſias or other, that had intereſt in the promiſes, made by God unto David. For he tranſlates, as Genebrard expreſſes him, Sit manus tua ſuper virum, cui juraſti in manu dextra tua: that is, Let thy hand be upon the man to whom thou haſt ſworn by thy right hand. Wherein I make no queſtion, but he had a reſpect to Pſal. 89. 35. Once have I ſworne by my holineſſe, that I will not lye unto David, and Pſal. 132. 11. That hath ſworne in truth unto David, &c. I am ſo far of his mind, though in this expoſition of the man of thy right hand, I will bind no man to follow him, ſince the firſt may ſtand as probably; yet ſo far of his mind, as peremptorily to conclude, that if the Pſalmiſt his intention was that way, as to recommend any unto God by theſe words the ſureſt way of expoſition muſt be grounded upon theſe words concerning David in the ſame Pſalm, I have laid help upon one that is mighty, &c. I have found David my ſervant, &c. With whom my hand ſhall be eſtabliſhed; mine arm alſo ſhall ſtregthen him: verſe 19, 20, 21. So that both the man of thy right hand, and the ſon of man, be underſtood of ſome one, not divers, but the ſame, whether man or people, that were conceived to have intereſt in theſe expreſſions and promiſes, uttered of and to David at firſt, perſonally And ſince David was ſo much concerned (as all men are in theirs) in his poſterity, and that Gods promiſes to him were moſt concerning his iſſue, and the ſtability, and perpetuity of his people and kingdom after him, the Pſalmiſt might very well, in deſiring God, in that ſenſe, to ſtrengthen David; (as ſurviving in his poſterity, though deceaſed himſelf perſonally, many ages before) intend any, whether king or people, that had relation unto David, either of people or progeny: and ſo David the immediate object of the words, and yet in him, either the ten Tribes, or all the twelve in generall. Had it not been for theſe words, which gave me ſo much light, to which I was happily guided by the Chaſdee Paraphraſe, I muſt confeſſe I have found ſo little ſatisfaction otherwiſe from any Expoſitors; that I ſhould have been bold to have ventured upon another expoſition, quite different from any of theſe; but not leſſe literall, or proper to the words, as I conceive Wicked men, we know, whom God doth imploy to execute his juſt jdugements, are called the ſword, and the hand of God; as Pſal. 17. 13, 14. From wicked men, which are thy ſword: From men which are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, &c. And how God doth uſe to ſtrengthen ſuch, Iſaiah declares at large, Therefore their habitations were of ſmall power: they were diſmayed and confounded, &c. 37. 27. And the Prophet Habakkuk ſaith, that God hath ordained and eſtabliſhed (or ſtrengthned as the word may import) ſuch, for correction 1. 12. And as for Gods right hand, though commonly mentioned againſt the wicked in the defence of Gods people; yet is that alſo ſometimes turned (and ſo mentioned) againſt Gods own people too; as Lam. 2. 3, 4 He hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemies, &c He hath bent his bow, he ſtood with his right hand as an adverſary, &c. So that inſtead of a prayer, I ſhould have made an imprecation of theſe words But I rather adhere to the former interpretation, as more agreeable to the ſenſe of other Expoſitors: but eſpecially to the 15. verſe, where ſome of theſe words are uſed, and would not probably (though ſometimes by a figure called antanaclaſis, it be ſo:) be repeated here ſo ſoon after, but to the ſame purpoſe. Some further confirmation we have alſo from Eſay his words: Fear thou not, for I am with thee: (the words are directed to the Church in general, not to any particular man) be not diſmayed, for I am thy God. I will ſtrengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteouſneſſe, 14. 20. I muſt not omit, that ſome have thought Zerobabel might be the particular man (if any particular) intended by theſe words: which if we could grant the twelve Tribes in general, to be the ſubject of theſe complaints, (which we cannot well, as we ſaid before) we ſhould not altogether diſlike. There he ſome things in the Prophets, as Haggai, and Zechariah, ſpoken of him, that would fit very well to this purpoſe But I have ſaid onough.

V. 19 Turn us again, O Lord God of Hoſts cauſe thy face to ſhine upon us, &c.] See verſe 3. We had this verſe before, but with ſome alteration verſe 3. & 7. ſo that although it be the ſame in ſubſtance, and ſo repeated in this Pſalm three times in all; yet there is ſome diverſity to be obſerved in every verſe; as thus: ver. 3. O God only: ver. 7. O God of Hoſts. And here, (laſt verſe) O Lord God of Hoſts. Of which obſervation I would not make any great myſtery, but that this addition of words makes the ſpeeech ſomewhat more rhetoricall and patheticall. O God: O God of Hoſtes: O Lord God of Hoſtes. But beſides this, there is other uſe to be made of ſuch obſervations; of which ſee upon Pſal. 34. laſt verſe, that truſt in his ſtrength And for thoſe words, cauſe thy face to ſhine: ſee upon Pſal. 67. 1. Cauſe his face to ſhine.

PSAL. LXXXI.

Title.

Gittith] See the Notes on the title of Pſal. 8.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſe 1. Sing aloud unto God] It ſeemeth that this Pſalme was appointed for ſolemne feaſts and aſſemblies of the people, to whom theſe ceremonies at ſuch times were uſuall.

V. 3. in the new moon] This they did alſo in other feaſts, Numb. 10 10.

V. 4. For this was a ſtatute for Iſrael] Levit. 23. 24.

V. 5. This he ordained in Joſeph for a teſtimony] Joſeph is put for all Iſrael, becauſe he had the double portion, which was one part of the birth-right. 1 Chron 5 1, 2. So is Judah ſometimes, becauſe he had the government, which was the other part, Gen. 49. 10.

when] Or, becauſe.

when he went out thorow the land of Egypt] Or, when he went out of the land of Egypt or from the land of Egypt; as the Septuagint renders it: taking על for מעל, which is not without example. The Law was given we know concerning the Paſſover, at their going out of Egypt properly; and the laws concerning other feaſts in the wilderneſſe, in their way from Egypt to the Land of Canaan. Some retain the propriety of the word על and refer the words to God, As he went out (as elſewhere he is ſaid, to go out before his people) againſt the land of Egypt. So Junius, and ſome others. But I conceive the former more probable.

thorow] Or, againſt.

where I heard a language that I underſtood not] A people of a ſtrange ſpeech, and a hard language, whoſe words thou canſt not underſtand, according to Ezekiels expreſſion. 2. 6 none of the leaſt grievances of travellers in forreign countries: mentioned alſo by the Prophet Jeremy, as a judgement: Lo I will bring a nation upon you from far,——a nation whoſe language thou knoweſt not, neither underſtandeſt what they ſay, Jer. 5. 15. Were it not for thoſe places, I ſhould think the better of their interpretation, who make this to be the meaning: I heard a ſtrang language; a language (or a lip, according to the propriety of the Hebrew word:) that had not been heard before among men: to wit, the language, or the voyce of God. The mention of this ſo great and ſo unuſuall favour, and honour done to the Iſraelites, would have been very proper in this place, where divers others, very great, but not ſo extraordinary and miraculous, are mentioned. Moſes where he rehearſeth divers particulars of that nature, wherein God had magnified himſelf, and manifeſted his love towards the Iſraelites, ſpeaketh of it, as of the higheſt, and gives it the firſt place, with anſwerable ſublimity of words. For aske now of the days that are paſt &c. Did ever people hear the voyce of God, ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire, as thou haſt heard, and live? Deut 4. 32, 33. and again in the 36. verſe, Out of heaven he made them to hear his voyce, &c.

V. 6 ſhoulder from the burthen] Iſai 9. 4. & 10. 27.

were delivered] Heb. paſſed away.

from the pots] Pſal. 68. 13. Though ye have lyen among the pots, &c. If they were never able to give ſufficient thanks to God for this deliverance from their corporall bondage, how much more are we indebted to him for our ſpirituall deliverance from the tyranny of Satan and ſin!

V. 7. calledſt in trouble, and I delivered thee] Pſal. 50. 15.

in the ſecret place of thunder] By a ſtrange and wonderfull manner, out of the clouds whence thunder came, Exod. 14. 19, 20. & 19. 16. Or, as ſome others, in the ſecret place of thunder, that is, out of the black cloud, from whence God ſpeaking, a ratling noyſe was heard, as it were of a thunder: So Joh. 12. 28, 29. when a voyce came from heaven to Chriſt, the people that ſtood by and heard it, ſaid it thundered. Other interpretations there be of theſe words, but not any that can ſatisfie, beſides theſe.

proved thee at the waters of Meribah] Exod. 17. 5. He oppoſeth their extream ingratitude and infidelity, to Gods great goodneſſe towards them, which ſets it out the more: accordiug to that of the Apoſtle, But God commendeth his love towards us, &c. Rom. 5. 8. Some tranſlate uſque ad aquas: that is, unto, (or, untill) the waters of Meribah: as if he ſaid; after I had proved thee, and born with many provocations, even to the waters of Meribah, and by that time knew thee ſufficiently, yet from thoſe waters, (Exod. 17. &c.) thou didſt advance to mount Horeb, where, paſſing by all former provocations, for which thou didſt deſerve to have been rejected, I gave thee the Law; immediately mentioned in the following verſes.

Meribah] Or, ſtrife.

V. 8. Hear, O my people] He coudemneth all people that are not attentive to heare Gods voyce, and to give obedience to the ſame.

V, 9. There ſhall no ſtrange God] Or, let no ſtrange god.

neither ſhalt thou worſhip] Or, neither worſhip.

V. 10 open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it] Enlarge thy deſire never ſo much, and it ſhall be ſatisfied, Pſal. 37. 4. Eph. 3. 20.

V. 12. So I gave them up to their own hearts luſt] Acts 14. 16.

unto their own hearts luſt] Or, to the hardneſſe of their hearts, or, imagination.

V. 13. O that my people had hearkened unto me] God ſheweth, that the obedience of his people is as pleaſing to him, as things wiſhed for to men, Deut. 5. 29. Iſai. 48. 18. See before upon the title of Pſalm 72. of Gods conditionall promiſes, out of Exek. 33 13, &c.

V. 14. and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries] If they had obeyed me. ver. 12.

V. 15. haters of the Lord ſhould have ſubmitted themſeves unto him] Pſal. 37. 20. Rom. 1 30.

ſubmitted themſelves] Or, yielded feigned obedience, Heb. lyed. Pſal. 14 44. See more there.

but their time ſhould have endured for ever] If the Iſraelites had not broken covenant with God, he would have given them perpetuall felicity. So Mat. 23. 37. O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, thou that killeſt, &c. how often would I have gathered, &c. and ye would not?

V. 6. with the fineſt of the wheat] Heb. with the fat of wheat. That is, with moſt fine wheat, and abundance of honey.

PSAL. LXXXII.

Title.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſe 1. God ſtandeth in the congregation of the mighty] The Prophet ſheweth, that God, who is preſent among Judges, obſerveth whether they do their duty or no, that he may reward or puniſh them.

mighty] Or, God; that is, his own Congregation: The noun is repeated inſtead of the pronoun; as Numb. 10. 29 Luke 3. 19. and elſewhere. Or, the Congregation of God; that is, of lawfull Magiſtrates, which God ownes as his ordinance, &c. Rom. 13. 1, 2.

he judgeth] Or, he ſhould judge.

he judgeth among the gods] That is, Iudges; or Magiſtrates: as Exod. 22. 8, 9, &c. The reaſon of it, ſee Joh, 10. 34, 35. Is it not written in your Law, &c. They ought to judge according to his law, that the ſentence might be Gods, and not theirs: but they did not ſo, ver. 2. &c. 2 Chron 19. 6.

gods] Exod. 22 9.

V. 2. How long will ye judge unjuſtly] For theeves and murtherers find favour in judgement, when the cauſe of the poor and godly cannot be heard.

accept the perſons of the wicked] Deut 1. 17.

V. 3. Defend] Heb. Iudge, Pſal. 43. 1.

do juſtice to the] Heb. juſtifie the.

and needy] Not only when he crieth for help, but whenſoever ye know that his cauſe requireth ayd and ſupport.

V. 4. Deliver the poor and needy] Prov. 24. 11.

V. 5. all the foundations of the earth are out of courſe] Some, by foundations, &c. underſtand the corrupt Judges or Princes before ſpoken of; which is not ſo likely, becauſe having ſaid ſo much of them before, his expreſſion, by thoſe words, if meant of them, would rather fall, than riſe. Others would have the Laws, and adminiſtration of Juſtice, upon which Common-Weals are chiefly founded. to be intended. But that theſe are elſewhere ſo called, we do not find: and beſides, he would ſo but ſay the ſame thing as before. For if the Judges be corrupt and wicked, it will of neceſſity follow, that judgements be perverted. I therefore take the words as proverbially uſed, to imply an univerſall confuſion of the State, ariſing eſpecially from their impiety, and perfidious dealing, that ſhould have been the chief pillars of it. The Grecians alſo uſed to ſay, τὰ ἄνω κάτω, to the ſame purpoſe: whence was his ieſt, ſhall I ſay, or propheſie, (for I find it recorded as a propheſie; and it fell out indeed, as he expected,) who when he dyed, would be buried upon his belly, becauſe he expected that all things ſhould ſhortly be turned up-ſide down, and then he ſhould lye right.

earth] Or, land.

out of courſe] Heb. moved.

V. 6. I have ſaid, Ye are gods] Joh. 10. 34.

V. 7. But ye ſhall dye like men, and fall like one of the Princes] This tranſlation is old enough, it is confeſſed; and that is all that can be ſaid for it, or that could move any man to imbrace it. For otherwiſe, the very context, and reaſon of ſenſe would move a man to ſuſpect that it is not right, and that ſomewhat elſe was intended. For what a thing were this, to tell Judges or Magiſtrates, that although they are ſtyled Gods, yet they ſhall dye like Princes, or like one of the Princes; who alſo (all Princes) are Magiſtrates, and ſomewhat more than ordinary Magiſtrates. According to the Hebrew, word for word, it is: and as one Princes ye ſhall fall: Which ſome to make a little plainer, tranſlate, Et ſicut quilibet; or, velut unus, (ex vulgo, ſcil.) ô principes, cadetis; that is, and ye Princes, ſhall dye as one; or, any one: that is, as any ordinary men, even the meaneſt, who among the reſt of men make but a number, as it were; neither are otherwiſe taken notice of. It is an elegant and emphatical expreſſion. Neither did we appeal to common ſenſe without cauſe, ſince even in the writings of ancient heathens, we find divers expreſſions to that purpoſe. Ut enim cæterorum hominum, (there is our אחד here; or, one,) ita principum, illorum etiam qui ſibi Dii videntur, ævum omne & breve, & fragile eſt; So one of them ſpeaking before, and to a great Emperour, I know not, whether all Chriſtian Princes would be well pleaſed to be told ſo much; or they who by their place ſhould tell them of it, uſe to diſcharge their duties ſo faithfully: Theſe Heathens may ſhame them one day, if they do not. But who would expect ſuch a leſſon from an ordinary Comick? yet his words (his words I ſay: I go no further;) ſavour of ſo much piety, if well applyed; and are ſo conſonant to the Scripture, and ſo much to our purpoſe, that I cannot omit them, though from ſuch a one: Unus tibi hic dum propitius ſit Iupiter, Tu iſtos minutos Deos flocci-feceris; ſaith one there, calling himſelf Iupiter, becauſe he was maſter of the houſe, in oppoſiton to the reſt of the ſame houſe, under his governvent. The other anſwers, Nugæ ſunt iſta magnæ: quaſi tu neſcias Repente ut emoriantur humani Ioves.

V. 8. for thou ſhalt inherit all Nations] All the earth is thine, by as true a right as inheritance, therefore let not evill Judges oppreſſe thy people.

ſhalt] Or, doeſt.

PSAL. LXXXIII.

Title.

A ſong or Pſalm] Pſal.48. tit. This Pſalm ſeemeth to be compoſed as a form of prayer, when the Church was in great danger by reaſon of her enemies perhaps in Jehoſaphats time, 2 Chron.20.1.

of Aſaph] Or, for Aſaph.

Verſe 1. K*Eep not thou ſilence , O God*] Pſalm 28, 1. & 35. 22.

V. 2. thine enemies make a tumult] He calleth them Gods enemies, which are enemies to his Church.

hate thee] Pſal.81.15.

V. 3. againſt thy hidden ones] Gods Saints are his ſecret ones; for he hideth them in the ſecret of his Tabernacle, and preſerveth them from all dangers, Pſal 31.20.

V. 4. let us cut them off from being a Nation] They were not content to take the Church as priſoner, but ſought utterly to deſtroy it, Jer. 11. 19

V. 5. conſent] Heb. heart.

againſt thee] Acts 9. 4. They thought to have ſubverted thy counſell, wherein the perpetuity of the Church was eſtabliſhed, Pſal.2. 1.

V. 6. The Tabernacles of Edom] Alluding to the manner of them that dwelt in tents, 2 Sam.20.1.

V. 7. Gebal] The Inhabitants of Gebala, (or Gebana, as Pliny, and ſome other ancients call it, a city of Phœnicia, near to Sidon: mentioned Ezek.27 9. where the pride and greatneſſe of Tyre is ſet out; The ancients of Gebal, and the wiſe men thereof were in thee thy calkers: and the Inhabitants of it, from thence denominate Giblins, or Giblites mentioned 1 King 5.18. And Solomons builders, and Hirams builders did hew them, and the Giblites; as in the margin there, according to beſt tranſlations: not as it is in the Text, and the ſtone-ſquarers which is expreſſed out of the Chalde Paraphraſe. But that it is a proper name, appears beſides by Joſh.13 5. And the land of the Giblites, &c. All other Names here occurring, verſe 6, 7, 8. are known names; often mentioned in the Scriptures.

V. 8. they have holpen the children of Lot] That is, the Moabites and Ammonites; who it ſeems were chiefeſt in his confederacy. Whence ſome of the chiefeſt Expoſitors infer very probably, that this Pſalm was compoſed in Jehoſaphat, King of Judah, his time: in whoſe reign, as we read, 2 Chron.20. the children of Moab and Ammon, with divers others, in great number, invaded the land. The ſtory is there at large It ſtands with much probability; though ſome, (upon what good grounds I know not) be of a different opinion.

they have holpen the children of Lot] Heb. They have been an arm to the children of Lot.

V. 9 as unto the Midianites] By theſe examples they were confirmed that God would not ſuffer his people to be utterly deſtroyed

Midianites] Judg.7.22.

Siſera] Jud.4 15 24.

V. 10. as dung for the earth] Troden under feet as mire, 2 King 9.37. Zeph. 1. 17.

V. 11, their nobles] Or, them, and or even their nobles.

Oreb] Judg 7.25.

Zebah] Judg.8.21.

V. 12. Let us take to our ſelves the houſes of God in poſſeſſion] It appears their ſpleen was againſt God: they aym at his houſes, both his ſynagogues, and the houſes of his people among whom he dwelt.

V. 13. O my God, make them like a wheel] The Hebrew word גלגל doth ſometimes ſignifie a wheel, in the proper ſignification; as alſo, a globe, or ſphere. Moſt interpreters are for that ſignification here, and think it muſt be underſtood of a wheel, globe, or rowling thing, in a ſteep place. But that need not. For the bare turning of a wheel, as it uſed in a cart, or chariot, may very aptly expreſſe the miſerable condition of a reſtleſſe ſpirit: and the Grecians to that very purpoſe uſe their ῥόμβος, proverbially, which ſignifies properly a top, ſuch as boyes by ſcourging make turn round: But comparing with Iſa. 17.13. where the ſenſe of this verſe is more fully, with addition of ſome words, none omitted that are here expreſſed; it will eaſily appear that the word here is not intended by the Pſalmiſt for a proper, but metaphorical wheel; ſuch a one as the whirlwind doth raiſe into the ayr out of the duſt of the ground. His words are; They ſhall flee afar off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaffe of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing (ſo is the Hebrew כגלגל there tranſlated: but by ſome others, better, velut pulvis rotatus; that is, as duſt whirled about.) before the whirlwind. The ſame word is uſed by the ſame Prophet in another place, Eſay 5. 28. uſed there in the proper notion of a wheel; but with relation to the metaphorical: their horſes hoofes, ſaith he, ſhall be counted like flint, and their wheeles like a whirlwind.

as the ſtubble before the wind] Utterly diſperſe them, as chaffe is blown away with the wind.

V. 14. as the flame ſetteth the mountaines on fire] Perhaps he meanes the trees on the mountains, which ſometimes are fired with lightning. See Notes on Pſal. 29. 6.

V. 16. that they may] Or, that men may, as ver. 18.

that they may ſeek thy Name] That others, ſeeing thy judgements on them, may be converted: for he wiſheth the deſtruction of theſe enemies, ver.10,17. See more upon Pſal. 59. 13. Conſume them in wrath, &c.

V. 18. that thou whoſe name alone is JEHOVAH] See of it upon Pſalm 68.4. by his Name JAH.

PSAL. LXXXIV.

Title.

Gittith] See the title of Pſal 8,

A Pſalm for the ſons of Korah] See the title of Pſal.48.

for] Or, of.

Verſe 1. H*Ow amiable are thy tabernacles?*] The Pſalmiſt complaineth, that he cannot have acceſſe to the Church of God, to make profeſſion of his faith, and to profit in Religion.

V. 2. longeth] Pſal. 42, 1,2. Of David his wonderful zeal and ardent longing for the Houſe of God, and religious duties there performed, ſee upon Pſal.27.8. Seek ye my face &c.

for the Courts of the Lord] Wherein the Tabernacle was placed.

V. 3 Yea the ſparrow hath found an houſe, &c.] According as we reſolve concerning the ſubject and occaſion of the whole Pſalm; ſo muſt we, differently, concerning the ſcope and meaning of theſe particular words. All Expoſitors ſeem to agree upon it unanimouſly, that David wrote it in ſome one of his flights and perſecutions, whether by Saul, or Abſalom, when he had not free acceſſe to either Ark or Tabernacle; and was deprived of the benefit of holy aſſemblies and ſolemnities: after which, how earneſtly he was wont to long, we have elſewhere ſhewed, as upon the 2. verſe hath already been noted. See the reference there. Upon this ſuppoſition, concerning the whole, this will be the meaning here: David in his wonted zeal doth bemoan himſelf, and in a poetical ſtrain (as fond and paſſionate lovers are wont to catch at any ſuch occaſion) doth expoſtulate and complain, that his condition ſhould be worſe than that of Birds, who had leſſe to do with the houſe of God than he, and yet had free acceſſe unto it, who was denied him. This is the common Expoſition, and may ſtill be, for me; I find no ſuch inconveniency in it, that ſhould make me to oppoſe this general conſent. Yet mine opinion is ſomewhat different; to wit, that not Davids abſence, but their diſtance, who lived in the remote parts of the land, and were wont, according to the Law, *Exod.*23. 17. thrice every year (beſides what they might do of their own accord) through ſome deſerts and wilderneſſes, and many other difficulties, in many companies together, to repair to the ſet-feaſts and ſolemnities in Jeruſalem; that theſe, I ſay, are the proper ſubject of this Pſalm, or Song: written (as I conceive) in their behalf, to be uſed or ſung by them upon the way, for their comfort and encouragement. That moſt part of the Pſalm tends to that purpoſe, or at leaſt, fits very well, may appear by the moſt approved Expoſitions of greateſt part of it: why all ſhould not, I ſee no reaſon at all to the contrary. Now upon this ſuppoſition, I ſhould ſay, that theſe Birds are mentioned, as examples of ſtudious and ſedulous creatures, which to compaſſe their ends, that is, to provide themſelves of a convenient place, both of reſt and ſafety to themſelves and their young ones, ſpare no labour, but ſeek far and near, till they have ſped, whether in private or publick houſes; as particularly, the Temple it ſelf; that the conſideration of theſe might ſerve for a poetical (for that muſt ſtill be taken into conſideration) encouragement, unto theſe weary Travellers, to put them in mind, that ſince all their welfare, both ſpiritual and temporal, and all their ſecurity, depended on their relation to that honſe, and their intereſt in and to thoſe ſolemnities, they ſhould not think much of their paines. If any objection can be againſt this Expoſition, it muſt be from the words, ver,9,10. where David ſeems to pray for himſelf: of which more ſhall be ſaid rhere. But a greater objection againſt the common opinion we ſhall find in the 7. verſe. However, I do not peremptorily determine: I do but propoſe, as a thing that may be further conſidered of. There be other doubts concerning this verſe, which we are now to take into conſideration.

where ſhe may lay her young, even thine altars, O Lord] No man can well imagine how birds ſhould neſt in the very altars, if either the ſtructure, or the daily uſe of them, and frequency of people about them be conſidered. But thine altars ſome interpret; near thine altars; and ſuppoſe there might be trees near. It is not a very likely ſuppoſition; nor much to the purpoſe, if it were ſo. Except thoſe trees were ſo near, (which we know was not) that they ſhould be accounted as part of the altars themſelves; which would be preciſely underſtood here, according to the expreſſion, to preſerve the emphaſis of the words. Others therefore by altars here, underſtand the Temple it ſelf: which would do very well, if it could be couſirmed by any pertinent examples, where the word altar is ſo uſed. For thongh iu point of worſhip, altar and Temple, might be uſed promiſcuouſly, yet in a thing that is proper to the Temple, that altar ſhould be put for temple, is much more unlikely. Beſides, if the Rabbins teſtimony, as in this caſe it ſhould, be conſiderable, they preciſely deny that any Birds were ſufferd to come into the Temple: neither could, if ſuffered (which perchance would have bin difficult to hinder) neſt cauſe of the evenneſſe of the roof. They tell us of high places, and altars there, every where, which they would have the altars here mentioned. But theſe to be the object of Davids longing, or of his expreſsion, in reference to thoſe that came from afar off to worſhip at Jeruſalem, were too abſurd to imagine. The way that hath been found by ſome, and is followed by moſt, to clear all this, is by a different connexion, or ſyntaxis of the words, leaving out the ſupplement even, and taking that which followes', thine altars, O Lord of hoſts, &c. as an abrupt and pathetical exclamation; as if he had ſaid: O for thine altars, O my God: where, and when ſhall I be ſo happy? thine altars, thine altars, &c. Or, making that of the Birds to come in by way of parentheſis, to joyn the latter part of the verſe with the ſecond, My ſoul longeth, &c. which is the way that ſome of the Rabbines alſo do follow. The difference is in the coherence of the words: the ſenſe is the ſame, either of theſe two laſt wayes. And ſince we have ſo much authority for this clear way, as the conſent of ſo many Interpreters, not above one, that I can find, and he but faintly, diſſenting; I know no reaſon, why we ſhould rather embrace that which is more dark, and inextricable.

Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy Houſe] See upon Pſalm 15. 1. Who ſhall abide in thy Tabernacle, and Pſal. 23. 6. I will dwell, &c.

V. 5. Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſtrength is in thee] That is, who will not be diſmayed from a good purpoſe, and neceſſary duties, by apparent difficulties, but puts his truſt in thee; whoſe confidence is in thine, not his own ſtrength. Or, according to Junius, Happy thoſe, who are inabled by thee, to undergo theſe wayes (or this journey) according to their own hearts deſire.

in whoſe heart are the wayes of them] I know not what this (of them) doth make here: it doth very much obſcure the truth, and hardly affords any ſenſe at all. The old tranſlation, in whoſe heart are thy wayes, was much better. In the Hebrew it is, word for word, in whoſe heart are the wayes; or, properly, the high wayes [מסלות) which lead into thy houſe, that is; ſpoken of, and to travellers; as all, or the far greater part at leaſt, of Interpreters, do grant. His meaning is, They that heartily deſire to come to thy houſe to worſhip thee at the ſet time, though they dwell far off. The words will afford this ſenſe alſo, Viæ ſunt ſtratæ in medio eorum; as ſome very learned would have them tranſlated; that is, ſay they, There be convenient high-wayes to lead them from their ſeveral habitations to Jeruſalem. But I do not conceive it ſo proper to the place.

V. 6. of Baca] That is, of mulbery trees, which was a dry place, ſo that they which paſſed thorow muſt dig pits for water: ſignifying, That no lets can hinder them that are fully bent to come to Gods houſe, neither doth God uſe to faile them. It may be the place mentioned, 2 Sam. 5. 23, 24. It is ſaid that the nature of the mulbery tree is, to delight in hot and dry places. See more upon the next words.

the rain alſo filleth the pools] Unto theſe godly pilgrims in their need and want of water, (one of the greateſt miſeries that can befall poor travellers, in hot countries eſpecially) he propoſeth a double ſuccour; the one from their own induſtry, by digging wells: of which in the former member, Who paſſing through the valley, &c. the other, (in caſe the firſt fail, becauſe ſprings are not every where to be found) from God immediately, filling their pools or ciſterns, prepared for that purpoſe, with a plentiful rain. This is the moſt literal ſenſe, as I conceive; and moſt received. Yet is not their interpretation, becauſe it ſavours of more acuteneſſe, as long as the words will bear that too, (but firſt it muſt be known, that the word ברכות by moſt in this place, tranſlated pools; doth oftner ſignifie, bleſſings) altogether to be rejected, who thus tranſlate: Qui tranſeuntes per vallem mori, fontem conſtituunt eum, quos etiam benedictionum operit pluvia: which is by them (for out of the tranſlation it ſelf hardly would any man gather any ſuch thing) further explained to this effect: Who though they paſſe throught dry ſandy places, yet comfort themſelves with the remembrance of that divine Fountain, to which they are going; yea though a rain of bleſſings, (that is, plentiful rain;) and ſtormy ſhowers overtake, and cover them; yet through thick and thin, through fair and foul, they go on cheerfully to their God. This, though very different from the former interpretation, as to this particular verſe; yet to the general ſcope, both come to one effect, But they that have tranſlated מורה (here rain a doctor, or teacher, (which is ſometimes the ſignification of it) they go ſo far from the general drift and ſcope, as that I think it needleſſe to trouble the reader with their miſtakes.

filleth] Heb. covereth.

V. 7 from ſtrength to ſtrength] Or. from company to company. They are never weary, but increaſe in ſtrength and courage, till they come to Gods houſe.

every one of them in Zion appeareth before God] Some, becauſe of the ambiguity of the word אל which is either a prepoſition, importing apud, ad: or a noun ſubſtantive, ſignifying God: accordiug to this latter ſignification, tranſlate; videbitur Deus Deorum in Sion: but agree in their expoſition with the former, in the generall meaning; to wit, That theſe godly travellers ſhall at laſt reap the benefit of their long trouble, in that they ſhall all ſee God; or appear before God. An excellent type of our perpetual, and, moſt, troubleſome pilgrimage in this world to be rewarded after with the beatifical viſion of God, in a better world. But here is a great queſtion; and they are much put to it, that would have David to have written this Pſalm, when perſecuted by either Saul, or his own Son Abſolom, to give a ſatisfactory anſwer, how Zion comes here to be named. For all Sauls time, the Ark was not there; Zion was then no more, then every ordinary hill. The perſecution by his Son, was ſo ſoon ended, that it ſtands with little probability that David ſhould ſo complain for that time of abſence; making no mention at all (which is well obſerved by ſome) in all this Pſalm, (which in other Pſalms, when he complains of his abſence forced by the violence of perſecution, he doth: as Pſal. 42. & 63.) of any ſuffering in any other kind at that time. when (upon that ſuppoſition) in ſo much danger of loſing both crown and life at one time. This hath made ſome very judicious Expoſitors to forſake the common opinion, of Davids writing of this in exile, and time of perſecution: and to think his abſence, (that alſo forced, in ſome ſenſe; and much againſt his will) in the proſecution of his wars, when himſelf was preſent in perſon, to be the more probable both time and occaſion of it. This I ſhould far ſooner believe, than what is commonly believed by others about it, But what I think moſt probable, I have already delivered upon the third verſe, yea the ſparrow, &c.

V. 9, and look upon the face of thine anointed] That a King, either David, or ſome other, is intended by that expreſsion, is the opinion of moſt; and to me too, ſeems moſt likely, Though there be different interpretations too, if I would make uſe of them againſt my own judgement. The Chaldee Paraphraſt underſtands it of the Meſsias, that was expected; and ſo moſt Rabbins after him. Now that theſe holy travellers ſhould be appointed in their way, and ſolemn form of praying, to remember their King, I think no man will think ſtrange. But then it follows in the next verſe, For a day, in thy courts, &c. I had rather be a door-keeper, &c. which being added as a reaſon of the former prayer, will not make good coherence, except we conceive the prayer, and look upon the face, &c, to be uttered by David for himſelf in his own perſon. For therefore he prayes that God would be gracious unto him, and ſpeedily deliver him from this baniſhment, and the ſad conſequence of it, his abſence from Gods houſe; becauſe ſuch an opinion he hath of it, that, &c. If therefore David ſpake this of himſelf, and in his own perſon, this may ſeem inconſiſtent with our apprehenſions concerning the ſubject of the Pſalm, declared before upon the third verſe. I did foreſee this before, as I mention it here; and yet did not think it a ſufficient ground to make me change my opinion. Firſt, becauſe I do not think it altogether impoſsible, that David, though he intended it eſpecially for the uſe of others, yet in penning of the Pſalm, might inſert ſomewhat in his own perſon. And as for the conſequence, it may be very good, without any relation to any ſuch forced abſence, if David pray that God will look upon his face, or bleſſe him, becauſe of his extraordinary love and affection (beſt known unto God himſelf) to his houſe and ſervice, It may be all Kings that have loved the houſe of God, as David did, have not ſped ſo well as David, in point of temporal rewards. All times are not alike. There is ſomewhat elſe that God hath in ſtore for them that love him, beſides temporal rewards, or elſe David himſelf, I believe, did miſſe of that, which he chiefly expected. However, that conſequence will be made good by David himſelfe, the beſt Interpreter of himſelf, Pſal. 132. 1, 2 &c, Lord remember David, and all his afflictions: How he ſware unto the Lord, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob, Surely I willl not come, &c. untill I find out a place for the Lord; an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Laſtly, it is not abſolutely neceſſary, that his For, &c of the tenth verſe, ſhould refer to the prayer for David: it may cohere with ſome of the former verſes, and that of David (as elſewhere divers like) inſerted by a parentheſis, Neither need I be very ſolicitous to anſwer all objections, ſince I leave it free to the reader, to follow what himſelf ſhall like beſt.

V. 10. better than a thouſand] He wiſheth to be but one day in Gods Church, rather than a thouſand among worldlings; and to be a perpetual ſervant in Gods houſe, as Exod. 21. 6. though in the meaneſt place, than to dwell at liberty among the wicked.

thouſand] Or, thouſands elſewhere.

I had rad rather be a doore-keepor] Heb. I would chuſe rather to ſit at the threſhold.

V. 11, a ſon and ſhield] The giver of all good to his, and protector of them againſt all evill.

ſhield] Gen. 15. 1. Pſal. 119. 114.

the Lord will give grace and glory] Favour with him and honour before others.

no good thing will he withhold] But will from time to time increaſe his bleſsings towards his more and more.

no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly] Pſal. 34. 9, 10.

V. 12. bleſſed is the man that truſteth in thee] Pſal. 2. 12.

PSAL. LXXXV.

Title.

for] Or, of.

Verſe 1. T*Hou haſt been favourable unto thy land* They confeſſe, that Gods free mercy was the cauſe of all their deliverances, becauſe he loved the land. He ſpeaketh this of deliverances in former times, as appears by the 5. v. To what purpoſe, ſee ver. 5.

verſe 5. and upon Pſal. 22. 21. For thou haſt heard me from the horns of the unicorn.

favourable] Heb. well pleaſed.

V. 2. Thou haſt forgiven the iniquity of thy people] Pſal. 32. 1.

thou haſt covered all their ſin] Thou haſt buried them, that they may not come into judgement.

V. 3. thou haſt turned thy ſelf from the fierceneſſe of thine anger] Or, thou haſt turned thy anger from waxing hot.

from the fierceneſſe of thine anger] Not onely in withdrawing thy rod, but alſo in forgiving our ſins.

V. 5. Wilt thou be angry with us forever?] As in times paſt they had felt Gods mercy in their deliverance, ſo now, being oppreſſed with the long continuance of evills, they pray unto God, That according to his nature, he would be mercifull unto them.

V. 7. grant us thy ſalvation] He confeſſeth that our deliverance cometh onely from Gods mercy, Pſal. 6. 4.

V. 8. He will ſpeak peace unto his people] He will ſend all proſperity to his Church, when he hath ſufficiently corrected them: alſo by his puniſhments the faitfull ſhall learn to beware that they return not to like offences.

but let them not] Or, that they may not.

V. 10. Mercy and truth are met together] Since it is certain, as appears by the fift, and following verſes, that the people and Church were then afflicted, when this Pſalm was written, the Future (Mercy and truth ſhall meet; righteouſneſſe and peace ſhall kiſſe) would have been more proper, as it is expreſſed in moſt other Tranſlations, than the Preterit. Now this here, and all that followes, are expreſſions of happy times, and ſetled happineſſe, as founded upon righteouſneſſe and mercy, by which Kingdomes are eſtabliſhed; and without which no peace and proſperity can be of long continuance. Some underſtand the mercy, and truth of God; which may be too: for they have near relation one to another. They muſt come down from heaven, before they be found among men; and the entertaining of thoſe on earth, ſecures the paſſage, and keeps heaven open.

Mercy and truth] I have already ſet down what I think moſt probable. But becauſe it is an obſcure place, as may appear by the variety of expoſitions to give the better context to the Reader; I ſhall mention ſome other interpretations. Of truth, joyned with mercy, and ſpoken of God, how to be underſtood; ſee upon Pſalm 57. ver. 10. For thy mercy is great, &c. Truth, ſo taken here, of God, &c as it may imply the performance and accompliſhment of any promiſe made by God to his people, in general; ſo more particularly, the performance of that which for the conſequence and excellency, we may call the accompliſhment of all promiſes; (and ſo expected by the faithfull Jews, and then eſpecially moſt thought upon by them, when in great trouble and calamitie;) to wit, the comming of the promiſed Meſsiah, or Deliverer. This ſenſe is followed by ſome of good credit and authority, There be, who referre the words to Chriſt and his Goſpel; but in another ſenſe making mercy, aud truth; righteouſneſſe, and peace: to anſwer one another, antithecally, as they call it. They would have truth, to relate to mercy; if the truth, that is faith, (for ſo the word ſignifieth too:) of man, or in man, as ſome: as either, truth; that is, integrity of life, &c, to anſwer to mercy in God: as the cauſe, and the effect, (but in ſeverall reſpects as we take truth for, either faith, or integrity:) inſeparable. And ſo peace in man, to anſwer to the juſtice in God: not to be underſtood of his ordinary juſtice, but of that juſtice of God, by which we are juſtified. This interpretation, I believe, came from Junius, in his Notes upon the Bible; but is largely proſecuted by Genebrard, the Papiſt; who quotes Rabbines for it: though Chriſt I believe he might have quoted ſome body elſe, more pertinently and truly. Calvin quotes St. Auguſtine much to the ſame purpoſe: and is well pleaſed with the matter it ſelf, as very ſound and uſefull, but not to ſerve here, as the proper meaning: which is my opinion too. However, I have named them; that the Reader, if he think fit, may have recourſe unto them.

V. 11. Truth ſhall ſpring out of the earth, and righteouſneſſe ſhall look down from heaven] Here is ground enough for any man to exerciſe his wit, to deviſe differences between truth, and righteouſneſſe, as here oppoſed; and why the one ſhould be ſaid to ſpring out of the earth, and the other aſsigned to heaven; truth for faith, in men, upon earth: juſtice, as before explained, by which we are juſtified, (called by St. Paul, the juſtice of God,) in heaven, or from heaven, &c. Many ſuch ſpeculations may ariſe from theſe word, if a man ſhall preciſely ſtick to the letters and ſyllables. But take them, as with ſome of the beſt Interpreters I think they ſhould be taken, proverbially; then the meaning is, that heaven and earth ſhall be full of both, both of truth and righteouſneſſe; an emphatical expreſsion of great abundance.

V. 12. land ſhall yield her increaſe] Pſal. 67. 7.

V. 13. Righteouſneſſe ſhall go before him] When peace ſhall be reſtored to the land, and with it piety and godlineſſe ſhall flouriſh, then ſhall righteouſneſſe go before God; that is, men ſhall walk before God in righteouſneſſe; according to that of old Zacharias in the Goſpel; That we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, in holineſſe and rigteouſneſſe before him (which is here, Righteouſneſſe ſhall go before him) all the dayes of our life, Luke 1. 74 75. All which, in this and the former, from the tenth verſe, though immediately intended, and ſo hyperbolically expreſſed, of temporall deliverances, and happy dayes to enſue upon it; had a more literal fulfilling in Chriſt, according to the predictions of many Prophets to the ſame purpoſe. See Pſal. 45. & 72.

PSAL. LXXXVI.

Title.

A prayer of David] Or, a prayer, being a Pſalm of David.

Verſe 1. BOw down thine ear] David in perſecution thus prayed, leaving the ſame to the Church, as a monument, how to ſeek redreſſe againſt their miſeries.

V. 2 for I am holy] Heb. חסיד a word of great pregnancy, and of different notions. When it is attributed to it, God imports a tenderneſs of affection in God, towards all his creatures in generall; but eſpecially toward them that have more particular relation unto him, by mutual covenants and engagements, whether general, or particular, of faithful obedience, and religious worſhip, on the one ſide; of love, favour and protection, on the other. Such a general covenant was the Law, which extended to all the Jewes: and the covenant with Abraham, in which all the Jewes, or Iſraelites had equall intereſt. Of a more particular covenant, though we might find divers other examples yet ſhall not need to ſeek further then David himſelf, that of all others in that kind, being the moſt expreſſe, and moſt conſiderable. So, God חסיד (alwayes actively) that is, mercifull and gracious; and man חסיד, ſometimes actively, that is, meek loving, charitable towards men, as affecting conformity with God, to the utmoſt of humane ability; and pious, religious, holy towards God, in all religious duties and actions: and ſometimes paſsively, in the bare conſideration of his nearer relation, and more particular intereſt in Gods favour; as if you ſhould ſay, Gods favoured or beloved Saint, or ſervant. Which title and priviledge, although many others, as many as either were within the general, or had nearer relation to God, by ſome more particular covenant or promiſe, might challenge; yet that it did in a more excellent way belong unto David, may appear by thoſe expreſsions, חסי דוד, the ſure mercies of David, 2 Chr. 6. 42. חסדי דוד הנאמנים, the ſure mercies of David, Iſai. 55. 3. The Greek Septuagint expreſſe it by ὅσιος, very fitly, as the word (though ſometimes oppoſed to Ἱερὸς) is often uſed; and in regard (which they have often reſpect unto) to its origine, coming from the Hebrew, the termination onely, (as is uſual, being changed. The Syriack alſo leaves out the ד or Daleth, ſaying חסי for חסיד. Now to make application of what hath been ſaid to this place, though the word ſignifie manſuetus, and miſericors; that is meek and mercifull, as ſome have tranſlated it: yet I do not think that the proper ſignification, neither here, nor Pſalm 16. 10. neither ſuffer thy Holy One to ſee corruption. We have the ſame expreſsion, Deut. 33. 8. And of Levi he ſaid Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one, &c. where no man wil ſay, that the tribe of Levi is called Gods holy one, becauſe of their meekneſſe, or mercy, of which we read nothing elſewheſe; but of their zeal in Gods cauſe, Exod. 32. 25, 26, &c. for which they became afterwards Gods peculiar, by a particular covenant; and God was ſaid of them more particularly, to be their portion, or inheritance, as Deut. 10. 10. 9. and elſewhere often. Here then alſo, pius, as ſome; or pius ſervus; that is, thy religious; but, more properly, thy devoted, or, dovoted ſervant is certainly more proper and true. Nam is ſum, quem benignitate proſequeris; that is, For I am one, whom thou doſt particularly favour: Junius his tranſlation, expreſſeth well the meaning too, but more like a paraphraſe than a tranſlation. To this agreeth our Engliſh margin, holy; or, on whom thou favoureſt. He doth explain himſelf in part, in the next words, when he calls God, his God; and himſelf his ſervant, that puts his truſt in him. And ſo again in the fourth verſe, he calls himſelf his ſervant,

V. 3. for I cry unto thee daily] Which ſhewes how earneſtly he longed for deliverance.

daily] Heb. all the day.

V. 4. unto thee, O Lord. do I lift up my ſoul] Pſal. 25. 1.

V. 5. For thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive] Joel 2. 13.

V. 6. attend to the voyce of my ſupplications] By crying and calling continually, he ſheweth that we ought not to be weary, though God grant not forthwith our requeſt, but that we muſt earneſtly and often call upon him, verſe 7.

V. 8. Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord,] Among them that are worſhipped for gods in ſeveral nations, that knew not the true God. But though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be many) yet to us, and in truth, there is but one God; as the Apoſtle teacheth, 1 Cor. 8. 5 6. and ſo ſaith the Pſalmiſt here too, thou art God alone, verſe 10. What is here negatively, and, in effect, poſitively ſet down by our Pſalmiſt, the ſame, by Moſes, is expreſſed by way of interrogation; Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? Exod. 15. 11. it is in the Hebrew, מי במכה כאלם יהוה; from the firſt letters of which four words, (מ.כ.ב.י. M. C. B. J.) being their Motto in their Enſignes, or Colours, came the Name and Title of thoſe famous Worthies, who fought the Lords battels, (as appears by the Hiſtory that bears that name) with ſo much valour, and equall ſucceſſe.

neither are there any works like unto thy works] Deut.3. 24.

like unto thy works] He condemneth all Idols,foraſmuch as they can do no great works to declare that they are gods, Iſai.41.23.

V. 10. thou art God alone] Deut.6.4. & 32.39. Iſai. 37. 16. & 44 6. Mark.12 29. 1 Cor.8.4. Epheſ. 4. 6.

V. 11. Teach me thy way] He confeſſeth himſelf ignorant, till God hath taught him, and his heart variable and ſeparated from God, till God joyn it to him, and confirm it in his obedience.

Teach me thy way, O Lord, I will walk in thy truth] Pſal. 25. 3. & 119. 33.

V. 13. from the loweſt hill] That is, from moſt great danger of death, out of which none but onely the mighty hand of God could deliver him.

hell] Or, grave.

V. 14. violent] Heb. terrible.

have ſought after my ſoul] He ſheweth, that there can be no moderation nor equity where proud tyrants reign; and that the lack of Gods fear is a priviledge to all vice and cruelty.

have not ſet thee before them] Pſal.54.3.

V 15. But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compaſſion] Deut. 34. 6. Numb.14.18. Pſal.103 8 & 139 4. & 145. 8.

V. 16. ſervant, and ſave the ſon of thine hand-maid] Pſalm 116. 16.

ſave the ſon of thine hand-maid] He boaſteth not of his own virtues, but confeſſeth that God of his free goodneſſe hath ever been mercifull unto him, and given him power againſt his enemies, as to one of his own houſhold.

V. 17. Shew me a token] Deliver me, in that manner, that it may evidently appear that I am ſingularly beloved of thee.

for good] That my enemies may not dare to meddle with me any more, but I may be ſafe ever after, Pſal. 41. 10,11.

PSAL. LXXXVII.

Title.

A Pſalm or Song] See Notes on the title of Pſal. 30.

for] Or, of.

Verſe 1. H*Is foundation is in the holy mountain*] The Chaldee paraphraſe and other Rabbins make theſe words to part of the Title, not of the Pſalme; to this effect; A Pſalm, &c. whoſe foundation (or, argument) is concerning the holy mountains. To this they are induced, firſt, becauſe there is no other antecedent, (in ſight, or expreſſed) to which this relative His ſhould be referred But this מזמור, or Pſalm. And in caſe a man would ſay, Jeruſalem is to be underſtood, they anſwer, that the affix pronoun in יסודתו is maſculine, not Feminine. But as for a relative to be without an antecedent; or a Maſculine affix, to relate to a collective Feminine ſuch as Church or City is; there be many examples of both in the Scripture. Beſides His, may refer to God as well: His foundation, &c. that is, his dwelling place, (Ark and Temple, ſo ordinarily ſtyled) is now firm and conſtant, founded upon two holy hills, Zion and mount Moriah: whereas his dwelling place, in former days, was in a moveable Tabernacle. However, though ſome explode it, as an idle conceit, I do not ſee what inconvenience comes of it, if we ſhould grant thoſe words to be part of the Title, The Argument of the Pſalm (a glorious argument; briefly, but very emphatically ſet out in this ſhort Pſalm,) is, the future amplitude of the Church, and the converſion of all Nations, (whereof many are named) to the Chriſtian faith,

V. 3. Glorious things are ſpoken of thee] Though thy glorious eſtate do not yet appear, yet thou ſhalt be famous in after-times.

V. 4. I will make mention of Rabab] That is, Egypt as Pſal.89. 10. Thou haſt broken Rabab in pieces: ſo called in the Scripture, (for it was no common name) enigmatically, from her ſtrength, and thereupon pride, and haughtineſſe: which is the proper ſignification of the word. This is the common opinion: but ſome very learned in the languages, have found out, that one part of Egypt was anciently called rib, which they would have to be the ſame as rahab here; one part, (as is ordinary enough) ſtanding for the whole. But beſides, that this is but a plauſible conjecture, of which there is no great certainty, as grounded upon a ſingle teſtimony; if a man ſhall well conſider of Job 26.12 He divideth the ſea with his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmiteth rahab, (which is by moſt tranſlated, the ſwelling of waters; and by ſome, pelagus, that is, the main Sea,) and compare with this of Job, that paſſage, Pſal.89. 9.10. Thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea, &c. Thou haſt broken Rahab in pieces as one that is ſlain, &c. in which by Rahab, moſt Interpreters underſtand Egypt: he will, I ſay, if I be not miſtaken, think it more probable, that this appellation of Egypt by that name, was grounded upon that place of Job: (for Job is generally ſuppoſed to have been written by, or before Moſes,) or if not upon that very place, yet upon that uſe and notion of the word, (then vulgar and ordinary among the Hebrews) which it hath in that place: For how fitly might that mighty hoaſt of the Egyptians, which was overthrown by God in the red Sea, be reſembled to thoſe mounting billows of the raging Sea, there called רהב, rahab, which God is ſaid there to break; yea to ſmite: (that is, to quell,) a word, of it ſelf, more proper to an hoaſt, than to the Sea? Or, if it be certain, that a part of Egypt was called Rib, I ſhall eaſily grant, that the Hebrews by terming the whole land Rahab, alluded to that proper Name of that part: but ſo, as their chiefeſt aym was to the proper ſignification of rahab, for pride, &c. in their own language.

to them that know me] Yea, inter ſcientes me: or, inter cognitores meos; that is, among them that know me; as moſt others expreſſe. That is, The time ſhall come, when Egyptians and Babylonians, &c. now, people that know not God, (Pſal.79. 7,) ſhall be reckoned among them that know me; and when it ſhall be ſaid of the people of thoſe Countries, now ſtrangers and aliens to the God and Common Wealth of Iſrael, that they were born (by ſpirituall regeneration) in Zion.

Ethiopia] Heb. Cuſh.

V. 6. The Lord ſhall count, when he writeth up the people] When he takes a ſurvey of his people: and makes his Cenſe book, wherein all that belong to him, and owned by him, are regiſtred; called, the writing of the houſe of Iſrael, Ezek.13.9.

that this man was born there] He ſhall enter into his book, all thoſe Nations, as true Iſraelites, born in Zion. The expreſſion hath ſome affinity with that of Eſay, One ſhall ſay, I am the Lords, and another ſhall call himſelf by the name of Jacob: and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand unto the Lord, and ſirname himſelf by the name of Iſrael, Eſay.44.5.

V. 7. As well the ſingers, as the players on inſtruments:] The words are ſomewhat differently tranſlated by ſome; but of the drift and ſcope of the words, that by them, the greatneſſe and univerſality of ſpirituall rejoycing that ſhall be in thoſe dayes, is ſet out, there is little, or no difference. Some tranſlate, ſicut precantor ita chorus.

all my ſtrings are in thee] That this is ſpoken by the Pſalmiſt in his own perſon, as profeſſing that he will contribute all his abilities to the celebration of this publick joy, and the praiſes of this new Jeruſalem, is the opinion of many Expoſitors. Others make them to be Gods own words to his Church, under the type of waters abundantly flowing, promiſing plenty of all ſpirituall gifts and graces. We have the ſame metaphor, Joh. 7. 38. out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water: by Eſay called, the Wells of ſalvation, Eſay 12.3.

PSAL. LXXXVIII.

Title.

A ſong or Pſalm] See Notes on the title of Pſal. 30.

for] Or, of.

Mahalath Leamath] On a winde-inſtrument, to ſing by courſes, as Exod 15 21. Ezra 3.11. See Notes on the title of Pſal 5. Or, of the diſeaſe afflicting.

Maſchil of Haman the Ezrahite] Or, a Pſalm of Heman the Ezrahite, giving inſtruction.

Heman the Ezrahite] See 1 King.4 31.

Verſe 1. I Have cryed day and night] It is a queſtion, whether with a loud voyce, or in his heart, onely. For to cry, in Scripture, often is as much as to pray: as, The righteous crieth, &c. Pſal.34. 17. and He ſhall cry unto me, 89 26, But indeed the word there in the original Text, is different from that here: there קרא here צעק: however, Exod 14.15. where no prayer, no words at all are mentioned, yet, why cryeſt thou, &c. which by the ancients is generally underſtood of mentall ſpeech, or invocation. However, as the condition of the Pſalmiſt was at this time, it is more likely, that he expreſſed himſelf loudly: which is more natural to exceſſive grief, (ſuch as is here ſet out) and indeed more helpfull. For by free ſpeech in ſuch a caſe, the heart ready to break, is oftentimes eaſed. But either way, we may certainly inferre, that crying doth import earneſtneſſe, and intention, if not of the voyce, yet of the heart which is the very life of prayer, and without which no prayer can be very acceptable, or ſucceſſefull. The Prophet tells God here of this his crying, or earneſt praying, upon good ground, as knowing that God is very apt to hear, according to his own profeſſion and promiſe (though it be underſtood with ſome limitations:) Pſal 50.15. And call upon me in the day of trouble, &c.

V. 2. Let my prayer come before thee] It is Calvins opinion, that this Pſalm was intended by the ſacred Compoſer, for a form of Prayer, for them eſpecially, who through the extremity of their miſery, and want of all comforts, did apprehend themſelves utterly forſaken, to keep them from deſperation. It is indeed an excellent pattern for that purpoſe, when we ſhall conſider both the diſmalneſſe of the complaints in every particular, as here ſet out; beyond which it is not eaſie to conceive it can be ſaid: and the worthineſſe of the Authour, a Prophet, and a man of ſuch excellent wiſdom in his life time, that his name ſtands upon record in Holy Writ for it: 1 King.4.31. Indeed I am of opinion as ſuch a form, with due conſideration of circumſtances in ſuch a caſe, may do much more good, than the crude and extemporary conceptions of ſome, whoſe chiefeſt work is, to magnifie their own gifts, and to inveigh againſt all ſet formes.

before thee] In the former verſe, I have cryed day and night before thee; where may be underſtood two wayes: either as an expreſſion of his faith and confidence; whereof ſee upon Pſalm 38. 9. Lord all my deſire, &c. or, that he did not complain unto men ſo much, (as many in ſuch caſes are apt, more unto men,than unto God) but that he addreſſed himſelf immediately to God,in whom onely he truſted for deliverance. And now he prayes that his prayer may come before God: not that he doubted but God did hear him,as well praying, as crying : (whether we take them both for one,or no :) but ſee before him,now, as to be effectual and availeable according to the purpoſe of it,and that it might appear by his timely aid and ſuccour,unto others, as well as unto himſelf,that he had heard him. The obſervation of ſuch ſeeming contradictions is very profitable throughout the whole ſcripture.

V. 3. full of troubles] Pſal. 123. 3.

V. 5. Free among the dead] No more regarded then a man dead and buried, Pſal. 31. 12. As if he ſaid, a free Citizen of death and the grave ; having nothing more to do with the living.

whom thou remembereſt no more] As to this preſent world, when they are once gone out of it ; and their life, and with it, thy providence over them in matters belonging to life, is at an end. Many things are ſpoken by holy men, by way of aggravation of their preſent eaſe and miſery, according to common ſenſe, and vulgar expreſſions, which may not be taken,as ſpoken poſitively, or dogmatically. See upon Pſal. 6. 5. For in death, &c. and Pſal. 22. 1. My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me.

from thy hand] Rather, by thy hand, becauſe he ſpeaks of men ſlaine.

V. 7. with all thy waves] The ſtorms of thy wrath have overwhelmed me, Pſal. 42. 7.

waves] Pſal, 42. 7.

V. 8. Mine acquaintaince] He attributeth the loſſe and diſpleaſure of his friends to Gods providence, whereby he partly puniſheth, and partly tryeth his.

far from me] Job 19. 13. Pſal. 31. 11. & 142. 4.

an abomination unto them] Heb. abominations : that is, moſt abominable.

I am ſhut up] I ſee none end of my ſorrowes. I am compaſſed with evils on all ſids, both within, and without, that I know not which way to turn : like unto one that is a cloſe priſoner.

V. 9. Mine eye mourneth] Mine eyes and face declare my ſorrowes.

V. 10. Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead ?] The Pſalmiſt takes it for granted, that as it is proper unto God to do wonders (among which of all kind ſtrange deliverances in greateſt extremities,none of the leſt :) ſo it is very fit, that God ſhould be praiſed and glorified for thoſe wonders that he doth. So that in effect all that he aims at by theſe three verſes, is but this,to ſay, that God, if he make not haſte to his ſuccour, before it be too late,he will bereave himſelf of no ſmall ſtore of thanks and praiſes in ſuffering him to periſh who was ſo fully purpoſed to magnifie him to the utmoſt of his ability for his deliverance. But this muſt be ſuppoſed to be ſpoken of God, and to God,by that ordinary ἀνθρωποπάθια,without which men, as long as men, can ſcarce ſpeak, or be ſpoken unto ; and therefore ordinarily uſed by God himſelf, when he ſpeaketh unto men And again, ſpoken not doctrinaly, but pathetically ; with reference to this preſent world,and that little knowledge,that was among men, in thoſe dayes, of the things of the world to come. See upon Pſal. 6.5. For in death,&c. I cannot be therefore of their opinion,though men otherwiſe of great account and authority, whoſe cenſure upon this place is, that it is vox parum conſiderata ; and that excuſari non poteſt exceſſus : and the like : I ſee no reaſon for ſuch rigour, except My God, my God,&c. Pſal. 22. 2. be vox inconſiderata too: which I hope they will not ſay. Even now, that the myſteries of the Kingdom of heaven are ſo fully revealed and life and immortality come to light, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 2 Tim. 1. 10. Yet are we allowed by God, without offence to godly men, to pray for life earneſtly (though ſtill with ſubmiſſion) at all times ; but eſpecially if in preſent danger and ſight of death : which in ſtrict judgement might be conſtrued as an argument of our infidelity : as though we believed not that it is far better for us to be with Chriſt in Heaven , than to converſe among ſinners, and ſubject our ſelves unto ſinne, upon earth ; or loved the company of men, friends, parents and the like ; better than that of God, Angels, Saints, &c. To conclude, men at the beſt, muſt be conſidered as men : but men, in paſſions, with a double regard : firſt, as men, that have the natural affections of men : and ſecondly, as men diſturbed in their ſenſes, that have not the perfect and natural uſe of their reaſon,whileſt in extremity ; which at other times might be expected.

V. 12. in the land of forgetfulneſſe ?] In the grave, where men forget all that was done here, Job 14. 21. and they that are alive forget them that are dead, Job 24. 20.

V. 13. in the morning ſhall my prayer prevent thee] Pſalm 5. 3.

V. 15. from my youth up] I am ever in great dangers and ſorrowes, as though my life ſhould be cut off every moment.

V. 17. daily] Or, all the day.

V. 18. Lover and friend haſt thou put far from me] Pſalme 38. 11.

mine acquaintance into darkneſſe] None will appear to my reliefe : they hide themſelves from me. Or, their appearance, which ſhould be to my comfort, ſome enlightning to me, if they did the part of friends ; proves rather an encreaſe of my darkneſſe ; or an aggravation of my miſery. Or, as ſome others, through my darkneſſe, or, by reaſon of my darkneſſe, (that is, preſent miſeries and adverſities) they abſent themſelves, &c. according to that of the Poet, Tempora ſi fuerint nubila, ſolus eris.

PSAL. LXXXIX.

Title.

Maſchil of Ethan the Ezrathite] Or, a Pſalm for Ethan the Ezrahite, to give inſtruction.

Ethan] It ſeems to be that Ethan mentioned, 1 King. 4. 31. who living to ſee the Kingdom divided in Rehoboams time, compoſed this Pſalm. Others think it was one of that name that lived in the captivity of Babylon.

the Ezrahite] Of Zera, 1 Chron. 2. 6.

Verſe 1. I Will ſing of the mercies of the Lord] Though the horrible confuſion of things might cauſe them to deſpair of Gods favour, yet the manifold examples of his mercies cauſed them to truſt in God, though, to mans judgement, they ſaw none occaſion.

to all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

V. 2. For I have ſaid] As he that aſſuredly believed it in heart.

Mercy ſhall be built up for ever] Abide firm, like a ſtrong building ; not be moveable, like tents.

thy faithfulneſſe ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the very heavens] Thy promiſe will be performed, as ſure as the heavens abide : or, thou haſt ſhewed the unchangeabelneſs of thy truth, in ſettling the heavens.

heavens] Pſal. 119. 89.

V. 3. I have made a Covenant with my choſen] The Prophet ſheweth what was the promiſe of God whereon he grounded his faith.

ſworn unto David my ſervant] 2 Sam. 7. 11. &c.

V. 4. Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever] Verſe 29, 36. This is performed in Chriſt the Son of David.

to all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

V. 5. the heavens ſhall praiſe thy wonders] The Pſalmiſt having already verſes 3, 4. I have made a covenant with my choſen,&c. made an entrance into the matter and ſubject of this Pſalm, (Gods promiſes unto David, and his poſterity: and a particular and pathetical deſcription of the lamentable condition of the Kingdom, at that time, contrary, as was apprehended by them that ſuffered, to thoſe promiſes :) he preſently breaks off from that argument, and falls upon a general conſideration and acknowledgement of Gods power, or omnipotency rather from this here, to verſe 19. Then thou ſpakeſt, &c. He might be thought to digreſſe unſeaſonably : but in very deed, it is not done by him, but for a particular reaſon, and with a reſpect to his intended matter. For purpoſing in the proſecution of that argument ſomewhat freely to expoſtulate with God, he is here at the firſt entrance,as it were,poſſeſſed with a ſacred fear and horror; and before he dares to proceed any further, he doth interpoſe this proteſtation of his faith and belief,of God: as of his power,and irreſiſtible might: ſo of his infinite both Juſtice and Mercy : that in caſe his paſſion,or compaſſion ſhould extort from him any expreſſion that might offend either God or godly men ; he might appeaſe to this his forgoing proteſtation,and his words,if any dubiouſly,or dangerouſly uttered,might be tried and rectified by it. This was the method of Gods Saints, and holy Prophets in former times : as hath already been obſerved upon Pſal. 73. v. 1. Truly God is good to Iſrael, &c.

the heavens ſhall praiſe] Moſt expoſitors by heavens here, underſtand the Angels: which I wonder at. For though there is no queſtion but it is the Angels and Archangels work in Heaven, to praiſe God whom they look upon with continual admiration,wherein alſo their happineſs doth chiefly conſiſt : yea and to praiſe God for his love and care of men ; his wonderful providences and myſtical diſpenſations towards his Church in general,and towards particular men,for their ſalvation,and the like: Yet ſince that by the heavens, we may underſtand (as is acknowledged) the very Fabrick of the heavens literally,as Pſal. 19. 1 The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament, &c. and that beſides the authority of that preſident, this interpretation will better agree with the coherence, as will appear upon examination : I cannot but prefer it before the other Certainly though all Gods creatures in general do their parts in their kind,to ſet forth the power and wiſdom of their Creator: none ſo mean and contemptible, but if rationally and philoſophically conſider'd,will afford a good argument to aſſert it againſt atheiſts and epicures : yet the heavens above all others,have ever been held and acknowledged by heathens themſelves,moſt effectual to that purpoſe. See alſo upon Pſ. 8. 2. Out of the mouth of babes, &c.

in the Congregation of the Saints] Thoſe who by heavens in this verſe underſtand Angels,are ſomewhat put to it here,(though ſome take no notice of it) what to make of this,Congregation of Saints. For if by Congregation of Saints we underſtand Angels, then the Pſalmiſt doth ſay,that Angels,in the congregation of angels,&c. which is not ſo likely. If the Church,as elſewhere, how do the Angels (properly taken) praiſe God in the Church,or congregation of men? Some therefore would have it tranſlated, In the Congregation (or. Church:) the Saints, (that is, godly people) thy faithfulneſs: to wit, do praiſe : to be ſupplied from the former words. Or, thy faithfulneſs alſo in the Congregation of the Saints : to wit, ſhall be praiſed : which comes to the ſame purpoſe. But for further confirmation of that interpretation we better like,as is there ſhewed ; we have Pſalm 29. 2. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his Name: worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs. Where,by beauty of holineſs,the Church, or Sanctuary is underſtood,as is elſewhere ſhewed. And again verſe 9. of the ſame Pſalm, The voice of the Lord, — and in his Temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory. But eſpecially Pſal 97. 6. The heavens declare his righteouſneſs,and all people ſee his glory. See the Note there.

V. 6. who, among the ſons of the mighty, can be likened unto the Lord ?] That is, the angels: or, the great princes of the world, Pſal. 29. 1 See upon Pſal. 86. 8. Among the Gods &c.

V. 7. God is greatly to be feared in the aſſembly of the Saints] What is here to be underſtood by the aſſembly (or, congregation) of Saints, ſee upon ver. 5. in the congregation, what is here,greatly to be feared, others expreſſe,(neerer to the Original word) very terrible : which doth not ſo well agree with the doctrine and practice of ſome, that pretend to much holineſs, who think they cannot be too familiar with God,and like themſelves the better for it,that they dare ſpeak to him without any premeditation(nay cenſure and condemn them that dare not :) even whatſoever offers it ſelf to them ; as a man, when he is idle, would to his mate, that had as little to do as he. And thus the Devil makes them believe is to worſhip God in ſpirit and truth ; becauſe it is without ceremonies. But it is to be feared that God,however now patient at ſuch affronts,will one dayappear terrible to them that have made ſo bold with him. And that they may not flatter themſelves, as though this belonged to them that live under the Law onely ; let them read Hebr. 12. 28, 29. Wherefore we receiving a Kingdom, &c.

of all them that are about him] So before, of men there plainly, not angels, (as moſt Expoſitors would have it here :) Let all that be round about him, bring preſents to him that ought to be feared. See alſo upon Pſal. 26. 6. So will I compaſſe thine altar.

V. 8. who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee ? or to thy faithfulneſſe round about thee?] I ſee no colour for this tranſlation,or to thy faithfulneſs round about thee ; neither do I finde it any where elſe but here I ſhould ſuſpect the printing,but that I find it ſo in all Bibles. The ſenſe, both of it ſelf more obvious and with all tranſlations I have ſeen, agree upon is this : O Lord God of hoſts, who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee ? and thy faithfulneſſe is round about thee. Junius elegantly, circumveſtit te : as Pſal. 104. 1. thou art clothed with honour and majeſty, like unto thee] Pſal. 35. 10.

V. 9. Thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea] We doubt not of thy power, for thou haſt ſhewed it in ruling the ſea in the greateſt tempeſt,and pulling down the proud enemies of the Church, Pſal 93. 3, 4.

raging of the ſea] Pſal. 65. 7.

V. 10. Rahab] Or, Egypt. See before upon Pſal. 87. 4. I will make mention of Rahab.

with thy ſtrong arm] Heb. with the arm of thy ſtrength.

V. 11. The heavens are thine, the earth alſo is thine] Gen. 1. 1. Pſal. 24. 1. & 50. 12.

V. 12. Tabor and Hermon ſhall rejoyce in thy Name] Tabor ſtands weſtward from Jeruſalem, and Hermon eaſtward : ſo that all places, eaſt, weſt, north and ſouth, have cauſe to rejoyce in Gods power, which makes them fruitful.

V. 13. a mighty arm] Heb. an arm with might.

V. 14. Juſtice and judgement are the habitation of thy throne] Pſal. 97. 2. For hereby he judgeth the world, and ſheweth himſelf a merciful Father and faithful protectour unto his.

habitation] Or, eſtabliſhment.

V. 15. the joyful ſound] Of the trumpet,calling them to the ſolemn aſſemblies, Num. 10. 6. Some refer it to Num. 23. 21. The Lord his God is with him,and the ſhout of a King is among them ; where ſee Expoſitors. Others more generally, jubilatio : and expound it of ſpiritual joy in God, and holy raptures.

in the light of thy countenance] The tokens of thy favour ſeen in the Sanctuary.

V. 16. In thy Name ſhall they rejoyce] As thou art made known to them in thy publick ordinances.

V. 17. of their ſtrength] They have all their ſtrength from thee.

our horn ſhall be exalted] Pſal. 75. 10.

V. 18. For the Lord is our defence ; and the holy One of Iſrael is our King] Or, For our ſtrength was of the Lord,and our King of the holy One of Iſrael. That is, thou gaveſt us david a ſtrong King in thoſe dayes, ver. 19. &c.

V. 19. Then thou ſpakeſt to thy holy One] Here the Pſalmiſt doth return to his intended ſubject, after a pretty long digreſſion, from verſe 5. And the Heavens, &c. of which digreſſion, and the occaſion of it, ſee upon that verſe.

Then thou ſpakeſt] Then : in Heber. אז which ſometimes is uſed of a time long before : yea ſometimes, of eternity, as Pſal. 93. 2. Thy throne is eſtabliſhed of old. Heb. from them : and elſewhere. Some therefore here alſo tranſlate, Olim ; that is, long ago : or,time was when : or to that effect. Or, then if we keep it, may denote a certain time ; to wit, In thoſe dayes when Samuel lived, &c.

thy holy One] Moſt underſtand Samuel, 1 Sam 16. Others Nathan, 2 Sam. 7. 4, 5. Some Rabbins with addition onely of the laſt letter of the Alphabet, make a plural of it: which is the reading of the Greek tranſlation alſo ; and in very deed, thoſe things that follow, ſeem to refer to both places,whereof the one contains Samuels maſſage from God,or viſion concerning David : and the other, Nathans. As for example : I have laid hope upon one that is mighty, &c. in this very verſe : I know moſt Expoſitors would have this to be ſpoken by anticipation : that is mighty ; for, one that I will make mighty. We confeſſe that what might ſoever was in David, was of Gods eſpecial favour, who had deſtinated him to ſuch a place. But neverthleſſe I think it very probable that the Pſalmiſt here doth allude to 1 Sam. 16. 18. I have ſeen a ſon of Jeſſe --- a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, &c. As for 2 Sam. 7. it is apparent that many verſes together,with little alteration,be taken out of it. Moſt probable therefore that the Pſalmiſt had reſpect to both thoſe Chapters and Prophets.

out of the people] One of mean parentage : or the choyceſt man, for parts, among all the people, 1 Sam. 10. 24.

V. 20. I have found David my ſervant] 1 Sam. 16. 12.

V. 22. The enemy ſhall not exact] He ſhall not be tributary (the great reproach and plague of Kingdomes) to his enemies abroad : nor infeſted with the inſolencies and inſurrections of rebellious wicked people, at home. This ſenſe I think here probable : though I know the ſon of wickedneſſe elſewhere uſed of external enemies alſo. If any like better of it here too, then both members (which by way of rhetorical amplification, or further confirmation, is very uſual in Scripture) will come to one ſenſe. But neither is it unuſual, (as elſewhere hath been ſhewed) that the ſame phraſe, ſome times in one and the ſame Chapter ; yea ſometimes, verſe ; ſhould be uſed in different ſenſes.

V. 23. I will beat down his foes before his face] Though there ſhall be evermore enemies againſt Gods Kingdom, yet he promiſeth to overcome them.

V. 24 my mercy ſhall be with him] I will mercifully performe my promiſes to him, notwithſtanding his defects and defaults.

in my Name ſhall his horn be exalted] His power,glory,and eſtate.

horne be exalted] Verſe 17.

V. 25. I will ſet his hand alſo in the Sea] He ſhall enjoy the lands round about him by conqueſt. See before upon Pſal. 72. 8. He ſhall have dominion alſo from ſea to ſea, &c.

V. 26. Thou art my Father] His excellent dignity ſhall appear herein, That he ſhall be named the ſon of God, and the firſt-born, wherein he is a figure of Chriſt.

V. 29. His ſeed alſo will I make to endure for ever] Verſe 4, 36. Though for the ſins of the people the whole ſtate of this Kingdom decayed, yet God reſerved ſtill a root, till he had accompliſhed this promiſe in Chriſt. See 2 Sam. 7. 14. I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon, &c. The ſame is here repeated, but with ſome Poetical amplifications. See alſo upon Pſal. 72. title, &c. of the application of theſe words to Chriſt, and how they belong to Solomon.

V. 30. and walk not in my judgements] Gods law is divided into judgements, ſtatutes, and commadements ; that is, judicial, ceremonial, and moral laws, Mal. 4. 4.

V. 31. break my ſtatutes] Heb. profane my ſtatutes.

V. 32. viſite their tranſgreſſion with the rod] 2 Sam. 7. 14.

V. 33. Neverthleſſe my loving kindneſſe will I not utterly take from him] Though the faithful anſwer not in all points to their profeſſion, yet God will not break his Covenant with them.

will I not utterly take from him] Heb. I will not make void from him.

to fail] Heb. to lye.

V. 34. My Covenant will I not break] If they profane my ſtatutes, ver. 31. yet I will not profane my Covenant.

nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips] For God in promiſing, hath reſpect to his mercy, and not to mans power in performing, Mal. 3. 6. Jam. 1. 17.

V. 35. that I will not lye] Heb. if I lye.

V. 36. His ſeed ſhall endure for ever, and his throne as the ſun before me] Verſe 4, 29. 2 Sam. 7. 16. Luke 1. 33. John 12 34.

as the ſun before me] Perpetual and glorious.

V. 37. as a faithful witneſſe in heaven] That is, as the Moon, which though it be ſometimes in the waine, and in the eclipſe, yet remains a true witneſſe of Gods Covenant, Jer. 33. 20. Some by faithful witneſſe, would have the rain-bow to be meant ; of which ſee Gen. 9. 13. &c. But ſince Sun and Moon are often mentioned in this Covenant of God with David, and no expreſſe mention of the rain-bow any where upon this occaſion, it is not ſo likely it ſhould be here intended.

V. 39. Thou haſt made void the covenant of thy ſervant] Becauſe of the horrible confuſion of things, the Prophet complaineth to God, as though he ſaw not the performance of his promiſe.

thou haſt profaned his crown] By this, he meaneth the horrible diſſipation and renting of the Kingdom by Jeroboam : unleſſe it were another Ethan. See Notes on the Title.

V. 40. Thou haſt broken down all his hedges] Pſal. 80. 12. Eſay 5. 5. Thou haſt made his Kingdom like a field without hedges,expoſed to ſpoil.

V. 42. thou haſt made all his enemies to rejoyce] By giving them victory over him.

V. 44. glory] Heb. brightneſſe.

V. 45. The dayes of his youth haſt thou ſhortned] It is very ordinary among Hiſtorians and other Writers, to compare the different eſtates of a Kingdom, to a mans age, divided and diſtinguiſhed by ſo many ſtages, or periods, as childhood, youth, manhood, and the like. Florus among the reſt, but imitating others before him. Si quis ergo populum Romanum, quaſi hominem conſideret, totamque ejus etatem percenſet, &c. The meaning therefore is, that Davids Kingdom, before it had attained to its maturity: or rather whileſt it was in its vigor, was cropt, and began to decay.

V. 46. How long, Lord] How long, Lord, wilt thou hide thy ſelf? for ever?

How long, Lord wilt thou hide thy ſelf for ever? ſhall thy wrath burn like fire?] Pſal. 79. 5.

V. 47. Remember how ſhort my time is] The ſame Author, againſt whoſe cenſure we excepted upon Pſal. 88. 10. Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead: (a place very like unto this:) meets us here again with the ſame cenſure in ſubſtance of matter, though in different words. And he goes, here too, upon the ſame ground, becauſe ſuch complaints ſeem not to proceed from one that believed the immortality of the ſoul, and another world after this. What I have ſaid there in defence, may ſerve here. Neither is that objection much more conſiderable, as I conceive, that the Pſalmiſt ſeemeth to preſcribe God a time, becauſe he preſſeth ſo earneſtly for a ſpeedy deliverance. Of ſuch earneſtneſſe, ſee upon Pſalm 70. 1. Make haſte to helpe me: and verſe 5. Make haſte unto me, O God. But there is more in theſe words, to be excepted againſt (though it is not, that I finde,) and in my judgement, not ſo eaſily to be anſwered. For doth not the Pſalmiſt ſeem plainly to charge God, that he hath made all men (or created, as it is in the Original,) vaine? that is, in effect miſerable. Indeed the vanity of man in this kind, even of the greateſt and wealthieſt of men, is ſo conſpicuous, that wiſeſt heathens have not onely acknowledged it, and by reaſons, and ſeveral inſtances at large demonſtrated it: but alſo profeſſed themſelves not a little poſed at it, how it ſhould come to paſſe, that he for whom all other things ſeem to have been made, and through the advantage of reaſon, of neereſt affinity to God; ſhould of all creatures, if all things well conſidered, be the moſt wretched and miſerable. No wonder, that they ſhould wonder, who knew nothing (or if any thing, but very obſcurely) either of Adams ſinne, or Gods curſe upon it. But how ſhall we excuſe any man, that hath known the Story of the creation, for ſo ſpeaking; not of God onely; but even to God himſelfe? The Story indeed of mans creation doth not tell us plainly, that Adam was created immortal: neither is any man bound preciſely ſo to believe. By his natural conſtitution, being fleſh and blood, he was capable of death: his body compounded of ſeveral elements, was liable to diſſolution, or reſolution of theſe elements, into their firſt condition: but by eating of the tree of life, planted in Paradiſe for that purpoſe, and by a particular providence of God, he ſhould have lived in a conſtant temper of all humours, not liable to any decay, or defects of nature: and after a period of time appointed by God, from a terreſtial and temporary Paradiſe, tranſlated without death, into an eternal and heavenly. This had been his; and this the happineſſe of all that had come from him, had he continued in his innocency. But of Adams eſtate in Paradiſe, and what was intended by God about him, and his poſterity, if they had not lapſed, there be many queſtions among the Learned: we bind no man to believe any thing, in the buſineſſe, more than is cleerly revealed by the word of God. This is clear and undoubtable, that death entred into the world by ſin, Rom. 5. 12. and 6. 23. and with death, all other miſery, ſorrow, ſickneſſe, penury, ſtrife, and the like. They were no leſſe than anathematized by the ancient Church, whoever maintained that Adam ſhould have died, although he had not ſinned. Quicunque dicit Adam primum hominum, mortalem factum, &c. Gennardius De Eccleſ. Dogmat. cap. 33. out of ſeveral Councils. Neither did man onely become ſubject to vanity through ſin, but all creatures alſo (ſublunary) for the ſin of man, Rom. 8. 20, 21. What then ſhall we ſay, for the Pſalmiſt here? That this is ſpoken by him through paſſionum vehementiâ: and doloris intemperie: and vitioſo exceſſu: as ſome here, though upon another occaſion? Or if that be too ruff, and raſh, concerning ſuch holy men, and ſuch as we conceive to have been inſpired: may we ſay then, that God, in ſome ſenſe, though remote, and improper; may be ſaid to have created man to vanity, becauſe he created him mutable, and left him to the liberty of his own will; liable to the temptation of the Devil, who indeed was the immediate inſtrumental cauſe of all the evil that hath hapned unto man. This God, it is true, might have prevented, had he been pleaſed, and had it been beſt ſo; many wayes: which becauſe he did not, according to the rules and maximes of men (to which nevertheleſſe we know God is not tied: neither is it the ſame reaſon:) he may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe, to have been the cauſe: by them eſpecially, who groaning under the burden of ſome great calamity, ſpeak it rather to exaggerate their own preſent miſery, as thinking they have juſt cauſe to wiſh they had never been borne, or created; in general: than to conteſt with God, poſitively and dogmatically, that they were created ſo and ſo; or to charge Him with any kind of unjuſtice, or want of goodneſſe for it.

wherefore haſt thou made all men vain?] Or, to what vanity thou haſt made all men.

V. 48. ſee death] Heb. 11. 5. Or, ſuffer death. Die.

V. 49. ſwareſt unto David in thy truth?] 2 Sam. 7. 15.

V. 50. how I do bear in my boſome the reproach of all the mighty people] Which I take exceedingly to heart, Pſal 69. 9.

V. 51. Wherewith thine enemies have reproached] So he calleth them that perſecute the Church.

the footſteps of thine anointed] They not onely ruine his Kingdom, but alſo revile his actions. Others with the Chaldee paraphraſe, and divers of the Rabbines, by footſteps, underſtand the coming, or manifeſtation of the expected Meſſias; as if he meant, that whereas they had long talked among themſelves of a promiſed Deliverer, (as Luke 1. 71. & 74. in Zecharias his hymne,) their enemies now upbraided them, that in this their great neceſsity, no ſuch appeared.

V. 52. Bleſſed be the Lord for evermore] The voyce of faith and joy, in expectation of deliverance. We muſt bleſſe God as well in our adverſities, as proſperities; as Job did, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the name of the Lord, 1. 21.

PSAL. XC.

Title.

A prayer of Moſes] Or, a prayer, being a Pſalm of Moſes.

the man of God] Deut. 33. 1. Thus the Scripture uſeth to call the Prophets.

Verſe 1. T*Hou haſt been our dwelling place*] Thou haſt been as an houſe and defence unto us in all our troubles and travells now theſe four hundred years.

in all generations] Heb. in generation and generation.

V. 2. from everlaſting to everlaſting] Or, from eternity to eternity

V. 3. thou turneſt man to deſtruction] Moſes, by lamenting the frailty and ſhortneſſe of mans life, moveth God to pity.

Return, ye children of men] To your Original, Gen. 3. 19. Eccl. 12. 7. or, by way of irony, Live again if you can.

V. 4 For a thouſand years in thy ſight] That is, in regard of eternity: or, compared to eternity: For that is it that the Pſalmiſt aimes at, to ſet out the ſhortneſſe and inconſiderablneſſe of mans life, even the longeſt life of man, by comparing it with the infiniteneſſe of eternity. Which is the way that many ancient Philoſophers, of both languages, have gone; being in very deed the moſt ſolid and effectual to that end, that can be uſed or imagined. This well underſtood, makes the coherence of the Pſalmiſt his words plain; which otherwiſe doth not appeare. For further illuſtration thereof, I ſhall put ſome of their words here. If thou ſhalt look back, (ſaith one of them) behold what an infinite Chaos of time doth preſent it ſelf unto thee; and as infinite a Chaos, if thou ſhalt look forward. In that which is ſo infinite, what difference can there be, between him which liveth but three dayes, and him which liveth three ages? (or, three times three ages: Τί διαφέρει ὁ τριήμερος τοῦ τριγερηνίου) Minorem portionem ætas noſtra quàm partem puncti habet, ſi tempori comparetur omni: (that is, to eternity) Quid ergo intereſt id extendere, cujus quantumcunque fuerit incrementum, non multùm aberit à nihilo? So another.

For a thouſand years in the ſight are but as yeſterday] 2. Pet. 3. 8. Though man think his life long, which is indeed moſt ſhort, yea, though it were a thouſand years, yet in Gods ſight it is as nothing, Pſal. 39 5. and as the watch, that laſteth but three hours, Mark 13. 35.

when it is paſt] Or, when he hath paſſed them, He addeth this, becauſe men think of the ſhortneſſe of their time when it is paſt, rather than when it is paſsing.

V. 5. as with a flood] Beſides the general neceſsity of dying, thou ſendeſt floods of particular judgements that ſuddenly take men away. So it was with the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe, verſe 7. &c. Iſai 8. 7, 8. Or, as a flood that goes ſwiftly away, and returns not again.

graſſe which groweth up] Pſal. 103. 15. Iſai. 40. 6. See upon Pſal. 92. 7. When the wicked.

groweth up] Or, is changed.

V. 7. For we are conſumed by thine anger] Thou calleſt us by thy rods, to conſider the ſhortneſſe of our lives, and for our ſinnes thou abridgeſt our dayes.

V. 8. Thou haſt ſet our iniquities before thee] As a Judge that goes according to evidence, Pſal. 50. 21.

our ſecret ſins in the light of thy countenance] Not known to our ſelves: or, ſins of our youth.

V. 9. paſſed away] Heb. turned away.

we ſpent our years as a tale that is told] Our dayes are not onely miſerable, but alſo ſhort; for our ſinnes provoke thee to cut us off.

as a tale that is told] Or, as a meditation.

V. 10. The dayes of our years are threeſcore years and ten] Heb. As for the dayes of our years, in them are ſeventy years. Meaning, according to the common ſtate of life.

and if by reaſon of ſtrength they be fourſcore years, yet is their ſtrength labour] Or, or by reaſon of ſtrength fourſcore; but the pride (or the prime) of them is but labour.

if by reaſon of ſtrength they be fourſcore years] Heb. ſtrengths: that is, extraordinary ſtrength.

yet is their ſtrength labour and ſorrow] Heb. pride: that is, their ſtrength, pleaſure, beauty, or whatſoever men are proud of in the beſt of their dayes. Or, the prime of their dayes.

we flee away] Flee away ſpeedily, like a bird.

V. 11 even according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath] There be many expoſitions of theſe words: ſo many, as a man may gueſſe thereby, that as yet none hath been found very ſatisfactory. By ſome that are moſt exact, I finde theſe three, among many, accounted chiefe. Some therefore tranſlate firſt, Who knoweth, &c. & ſecundum timorem tui, iram tuam? that is, ſay they, Who is ſo ſenſible of thy wrath, as to fear thee as thou oughteſt to be feared? Secondly, according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath: that is, ſay ſome, They feel the effects of thy wrath moſt, that moſt fear and ſerve thee. For judgement beginneth at the houſe of God, 1 Pet. 4. 17. and, whom God loveth, he chaſtiſeth, Heb. 12. 6. Thirdly, others, They onely are ſenſible of thy wrath, (to obſerve it, that is, and to make a right uſe of it) who religiouſly fear thee. Others, either they take no notice of it; aſcribing all their croſſes to chance, or deſtiny: the Stars and Conſtellations, &c. Or, haply, if they do, it is to fret and murmur; or to curſe and blaſpheme: but not to humble themſelves and ſubmit. Theſe I find reckoned as the chiefeſt. And if any can content himſelf with any of theſe, I am not againſt it. I could object ſomewhat againſt every one: but inſtead of that, I will briefly ſet down what I my ſelf think is the true meaning. Wicked men in all ages, (and that ſuch have been of old among the Hebrews, we know by their ſects) that have laboured to promote Athieſm, perſwading men that either there is no God at all; or if a God, yet ſuch a one, as doth not intermeddle with the affairs of men; among other ſpecious arguments that they have uſed to that purpoſe, this (as may appear by the writings of ancient Philoſophers, Epicureans and others) hath been one of the chiefeſt, that God being a ſimple Spirit, is not liable to any paſſions, or affections; and therefore cannot be angry. Upon this they inferred, that the fear of God was a groundleſſe thing: a meer bug-bear, to keep fools or children in awe. I could ſhew what uſe ſome reputed Chriſtians have made, and make to this day of this argument, to overthrow ſome fundamentals of our Chriſtian faith. But I will not digreſſe ſo far. Onely, becauſe we would not have ſuch an argument go without any anſwer at all, I will make uſe of the words of an ancient Heathen (whether his meaning were as right as his words, I will not enquire; it doth not ſo much concern us) upon this very occaſion: in anſwer to an objection that was made concerning perjury, that ſince it was certainly known (that is the objection) that the gods could not be angry, men need not, eſpecially upon ſuch an extraordinary occaſion, as to ſave a life or ſo, ſtand ſo much upon breach of an oath; Quod affirmatè, ſaith he, quaſi Deo præſente promiſeris, id tenendum eſt. Jam enim non ad iram Deorum, qua nulla eſt; ſed ad juſtitiam, & ad fidem pertinet. So ſay we, God properly cannot be angry; we grant; but he is juſt and true. Either we muſt not ſpeak of God at all, or we muſt ſpeak of him in termes taken from the ſimilitude of man. The wrath of man, what, and how it uſeth to work, we know: The wrath, (or fear; he uſeth both words) of a King, (ſaith Solomon,) is as the roaring of a Lion. Whoſo provoketh him to anger, ſinneth againſt his own ſoul, Prov. 19. 12. & 20. 2. When therefore we aſcribe wrath, or fury unto God, we intend by theſe words, the certainty of Divine Judgements, which in his juſtice he doth inflict upon ſinners. Severe execution among men, uſeth to proceed from great wrath, and eager revenge; the judgements of God, infinitely more dreadful, that they may be underſtood to be what they are, (though that will not ſerve neither, to make us underſtand them, as indeed they are) we uſe the ſame termes. Though the ſpeech be not proper of it ſelf, yet it is moſt true, as it is intended. As if we call a crafty man, a Fox; and an innocent harmleſſe man, a Lamb: (which are ſimilitudes taken from the nature of beaſts) if both the one and the other, be ſo and ſo indeed; we ſpeak truly, though not properly. The Pſalmiſt therefore when he ſaith, that according to his fear, ſo is the wrath of God: his meaning is, as I apprehend him, in oppoſition to them who maintained, that God need not be feared, quia nec poteſt iraſci, nec nocere; (as the forementioned heathen author ſpeaks) that is, in the Prophet Zephaniah his expreſſion. That the Lord will do no good, neither will he do any evil, Zeph. 1. 12. his meaning, I ſay is, That the fear of God is no vain thing: that he hath dreadful judgements in ſtore, againſt them that fear him not, nor dread his judgements. Thus I underſtand him; and I am ſure this Interpretation is as literal, as any other: but let others judge. See alſo upon Pſal. 66. 5. he is terrible.

V. 12. So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts to wiſdom, &c.] To wiſdom, that is, to piety and godlineſs. A man may number his days, that is, often conſider of the ſhortneſs and incertainty of his life, and yet make a quite contrary uſe of it. There is not a more ordinary motive (in the writings of ancient heathens, I am ſure,) to worldly mirth and jovialty, than this, becauſe our life is ſhort, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall die, 1 Cor. 15. 32. But that this is not the wiſdom here intended, may appear by comparing with Eccleſiaſtes, 7. 2, 3, 4. It is better to go to the houſe of mourning, than to go to the houſe of feaſting, &c. Sorrow is better than laughter, &c. The heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning; but the heart of fooles is in the houſe of mirth.

apply our hearts] Heb. cauſe to come.

V. 13. Return, O Lord, how long?] How long wilt thou be angry with thy people?

let it repent thee concerning thy ſervants] Ceaſe to afflict us, as a man repenting alters his courſe, Deut. 32. 36.

V. 15. wherein thou haſt afflicted us] In Egypt, and in the wilderneſſe.

ſeen] Or, felt, Pſal. 89. 48.

V. 16. Let thy work appear unto thy ſervants] Thy mercy, which is thy chiefeſt work.

and thy glory unto their children] Seeing Gods promiſes appertained as well to their poſterity as to them, Moſes prayeth for their children.

V. 17. let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us] Meaning, that it was obſcured, when he ceaſed to do good to his Church.

PSAL. XCI.

Verſe 1. IN the ſecret place of the moſt High] He that maketh God his defence and truſt, ſhall perceive his protection to be a moſt ſure ſafeguard, Pſal. 5. 12.

ſecret place] Pſal. 32. 7.

abide] Heb. lodge.

V. 2. I will ſay of the Lord] He prayeth to the Lord, out of confidence of the aforeſaid protection.

V. 3. Surely he ſhall deliver thee] Or, For he will deliver thee.

he ſhall deliver thee] Having practiced in the ſecond verſe what he taught in the firſt, now he teacheth others to do the like, Pſal. 32. 8. & 34. 11.

from the ſnare of the fowler] Pſal. 124. 7. God will deliver thee from ſecret and open dangers.

V. 4. with his feathers] As fowles hover over their young with their wings, Deut. 32. 11. & 17. 8.

his truth ſhall be thy ſhield and buckler] That is, his faithful keeping of his promiſe to help thee in thy neceſſity.

V. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terrour by night, &c.] By theſe ſeveral expreſſions, verſe 5, 6, 7. &c. is onely intended, emphatically to ſet out the power of God, and the ſecurity of the godly man, reſting upon this, that though his dangers be never ſo great, or his caſe, in appearance, never ſo deſperate, yet God is able, if he ſee it convenient, for his glory, and the good of the ſufferer, to deliver him: ſo that all things ſhall work together for good, to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28. So that in all theſe things we are more than conquerours, ver. 37. Not that we are always actually delivered, out of every particular danger, or grievance there mentioned, (tribulation, diſtreſſe, perſecution, famine, nakedneſſe, ſword,) verſe 35. as appears by verſ. 36. For thy ſake are we killed all the day long, &c. but becauſe all will turn (ſuch is our confidence in God) to our greater good; and the more we ſuffer, the greater ſhall our reward and our glory be. Much like to this of the Pſalmiſt, and to the ſame purpoſe is the expreſſion of Eſay. When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee: When thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt; neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee, Eſay 43. 2. So alſo Habakkuk, 3. 17, 18. Although the figtree ſhall not bloſſome, &c. and Job 5. 19, 20. &c. And therefore here is no ground, if the words be rightly underſtood, for any man abſolutely to preſume, or conclude, that he ſhall actually be delivered out of any particular danger: much leſſe upon ſuch a preſumption, wilfully to run into dangers. If ſuch figures, the ornament of all language; ſuch rhetorical, emphatical amplifications be allowed to humane Writers, and well enough underſtood in ordinary language; why not to holy Writers as well, who had to do with men, as well as others; whoſe end alſo was, to uſe ſuch expreſſions, as might affect and move? That humane Writers have ſaid as much of the ſecurity of good and godly men, I ſhall need to go no further than Horace his Ode, Integer vitæ ſceleriſque purus, &c. Moſt dangerous then, and erroneous is the inference of ſome men, yea of ſome Expoſitors, here upon theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, that no godly man can ſuffer by the plague, or peſtilence: nor is old Lactantius his aſſertion much ſounder, Non poteſt ergo fieri, quin hominem juſtum inter diſcrimina tempeſtatum, &c. that no juſt man can periſh by war, or by tempeſt; Inſtit. l. 5. c. 18. Moſt Interpreters conclude here, that the godly are preſerved in times of publick calamities; which, in a right ſenſe may be true: but withal they ſhould have added, that all godly men are not exempted, at ſuch times; to prevent raſh judgements. See more upon Pſal. 107. 6. And he delivered them, &c.

V. 8. Onely with thine eyes ſhalt thou behold] Thou ſhalt be but a looker on, not a feeler of thoſe miſeries.

V. 11. he ſhall give his Angels charge over thee] See upon Pſal. 34.7. The Angel of the Lord. Theſe words were applied to Chriſt by the Devil, when he tempted him, Matth.4.6. And well he might do it. For if they belong to all the faithful in general; (as Interpreters agree) much more eminently to the Head and Patron of the faithful; the author and finiſher of our faith, Heb. 12.2. But it is obſerved by ſome Interpreters, that the Devil left out of purpoſe part of the verſe, which was not to his purpoſe; to keep thee in thy wayes; that is, ſay they, in the works of thy calling. So that if a man imploy himſelf out of his calling, though religious otherwiſe, then is he not within the compaſs of theſe promiſes.

V. 13. adder] Or, aſp.

the young lion and the dragon ſhalt thou trample under feet] Thou ſhalt not onely be preſerved from all evil, but alſo overcome it, and triumph over it, Rom.16.20.

V. 14. Becauſe he hath ſet his love upon me] To aſſure the faithful of Gods protection, he bringeth in God to confirm the ſame.

I will ſet him on high] Above all dangers, or fear of them, Pſal.61.2.

V. 15. Call upon me] Pſal.50.15.

V. 16. With long life will I ſatisfie him] And not cut him off among others, ver.7. But all this muſt be underſtood conditionally, if God ſee it fitting; for a good man may die by plague or war, 2 Chron.35 23.

long life] Heb. length of days.

PSAL. XCII.

Title.

A Pſalm or Song] See Notes on the title of Pſal.30.

for the ſabbath day] To be ſung on the ſabbath; and it teacheth us, That the right uſe of the ſabbath ſtandeth in praiſing God, and meditation on his works, and not in ceaſing from work onely, ver.4.

Verſ. 1. G*Ood thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing praiſes*] Pſal. 147.1.

V. 2. in the morning] For Gods mercy, and fidelity in his promiſes, toward his, binde them to praiſe him continually both day and night, Pſal.55 17 and 119.62,164.

every night] Heb. in the nights.

V. 3. upon the harp with a ſolemn ſound] Or, upon the ſolemn ſound with the harp.

a ſolemn ſound] Heb. Higgaion.

V. 4. haſt made me glad through thy work] He ſheweth, that on the ſabbath we ſhould meditate on Gods works.

V. 5. O Lord, how great are thy works] See upon Pſal.28.5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c. and upon Pſal. 41.1. Bleſſed is he that wiſely conſidereth concerning the poor, &c.

thoughts are very deep] Pſal.40.5. Rom.11.33.

V. 6. A brutiſh man knoweth not] See upon Pſal. 73. 22. I was as a beaſt before thee; and Pſal.41.1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth, &c.

V. 7. When the wicked ſpring as the graſſe] Pſal. 37. 2. The temporal proſperity of any man in general, be he good or bad, is often in the Scripture compared to flouriſhing graſſe: as particularly, Pſal.90.5,6. in the morning, they are like graſſe, &c. and elſewhere. Neverthleſſe it is here, and elſewhere more particularly objected to the ungodly, becauſe all their happineſſe ends with their life: it is this preſent world only that they truſt to: in very truth therefore, moſt wretched they, whoſe happineſſe (not to ſpeak of what they muſt ſuffer after death) is ſo fickle and tranſitory. As for them who look for a better after this, how long they enjoy this mortal life, or what ſhare they have of temporal goods whileſt they live, and for how long; is not, in very truth, (but that men naturally deſire to live: and ſo account it a bleſſing, as natural men, to live and proſper, for a while, if it may be:) nor can be much material unto them.

it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed] Since it is a righteous thing with God to recompence tribulation, &c. 2 Theſſ.1. 6,7,8,9. and, Remember that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, &c. Luke 16. 25. See alſo Wiſd.5. 4,5,6.&c. then fools accounted his life madneſſe, &c.

V. 8. But thou, O Lord, art moſt high] See upon Pſal.7.7. for their ſakes therefore return thou on high.

V. 10. But my horn ſhalt thou exalt] Thou wilt ſtrengthen me with all power, and bleſſe me with all felicity.

horn ſhalt thou exalt] Pſal 75.10.

V. 11. Mine eye alſo ſhall ſee my deſire on mine enemies] Pſal.54. 7. and 112.8.

V. 12. The righteous ſhall flouriſh like the palm tree] Hoſ 14.5. Though the faithful ſeem to wither, and be cut down by the wicked; yet they ſhall grow again, and flouriſh in the Church of God, as the Cedars do in Mount Lebanon.

V. 13. Thoſe that be planted in the houſe of the Lord, ſhall flouriſh in the court of our God] Rather, as moſt other Interpreters, Being planted in the houſe of the Lord, they ſhall flouriſh in the courts of our God; which is much plainer. For the houſe of the Lord, and, the courts of God, are but the ſame thing. The Temple of Jeruſalem, and the Ark of it, were a type of Chriſt: who ſaith of himſelf, I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing, Joh.15.5.

V. 14. They ſhall ſtill bring forth fruit in old age] See upon next words.

flouriſhing] Heb. green.

V. 15. To ſhew that the Lord is upright] Although this duty, to ſet forth the praiſes of God, his juſtice, his mercy, and the like: and to ſtand in defence of him, to the utmoſt of what ability we have, againſt all atheiſtical gainſayers and ſcoffers, be a duty that lieth upon the young, as well as old: yet the performance of it doth become old men beſt, becauſe of their authority, and long experience in worldly affairs: in which reſpect they may be accounted more able and vigorous (fat and flouriſhing, in the Pſalmiſts metaphorical expreſſion) than young men.

unrighteouſneſſe in him] Rom.9.14.

PSAL. XCIII.

Verſe 1. T*He Lord reigneth*] Pſal.96.10. and 97 1. and 99. 1. As God by his power and wiſdom hath made, and governeth the world: ſo muſt they be our defence againſt all enemies and dangers.

clothed with majeſty] Pſal.104.1.

wherewith he hath girded himſelf] Ready with his Almighty Power to do his work, Eſay 8.9. Luke 12.35. That is, to defend his Church.

V. 2. Thy throne is eſtabliſhed] Whereon thou ſitteſt, and governeſt the world.

of old] Heb. from then, Eſay 48.5. That is, from the time that the world was founded.

V. 3. The floods have lifted up, O Lord] Pſal.65.7.

V. 4. The Lord on high is mightier than the noiſe of many waters] He meaneth, that Gods power appeareth in ruling the furious waters: or, that Gods power is greater than the power of the Sea. Some think that by theſe expreſsions, troubles and commotions of eſtates, in general: or more particularly, perſecutions of the Church, are figuratively intended. It is likely the Pſalmiſt might have a reſpect unto both, the great power and providencs of Almighty God, manifeſtly appearing in both.

V. 5. Thy teſtimonies are very ſure] Beſides Gods power and wiſdom, in creating, and governing; his great mercy alſo appeareth, in that he hath given his people his word and covenant.

holineſſe becometh thine houſe, O Lord, for ever] Either holineſſe, paſsively; that is, inviolableneſſe, ſtability, perpetuity, grounded upon the ſureneſſe, and faithfulneſſe of Gods teſtimonies, by which ſome underſtand promiſes; or, holineſſe, actively; that is, all manner of reverence in outward performances and duties; but eſpecially, a holy life and converſation becometh them that profeſſe themſelves to be ſervants to ſo great and glorious a Majeſty.

for ever] Heb. to length of dayes.

PSAL. XCIV.

Verſe 1. G*Od to whom vengeance*] Heb. God of revenges.

to whom vengeance belongeth] Deut.32.35. Nah.1. 2. Whoſe office it is to take vengeance on the wicked.

ſhew thy] Heb. ſhine forth, Pſal.50.2. & 80.1.

ſhew thy ſelf) Shew by effect, that thou art judge of the world, to puniſh the wicked.

V. 2. Lift up thy ſelf; thou Judge of the earth] Pſal.7.6,7. See more there.

V. 3 how long ſhall the wicked triumph?] That is, brag of their cruelty and oppreſsion; or, eſteem themſelves above others.

V. 4. ſpeak hard things] Pſal.31.18.

V. 5. They break in pieces thy people] Seeing the Church was then ſo ſore oppreſſed, it ought not to ſeem ſtrange unto us, if we ſee it ſo now; and therefore we muſt call to God, to take our cauſe in hand.

V. 7. Yet they ſay, The Lord ſhall not ſee; neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it] Pſal.10.11,13.

Yet they ſay] He ſheweth, that they are deſperate in malice, foraſmuch as they feared not God, but gave themſelves wholly to do wickedly.

V. 8. ye brutiſh among the people] That is, moſt brutiſh of all the people, Pſal.92.6.

V, 9 He that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear?] Exod.4.11 Prov.20.12. He ſheweth, that it is impoſsible but God ſhould hear, ſee, and underſtand their wickedneſſe.

V. 10. He that chaſtiſeth the heathen, ſhall not he correct?] If God puniſh the very heathen for their ſins, it is meer folly for any of Gods people, to think that God will ſpare them. For judgement beginneth at the houſe of God, 1 Pet.4.17. Many ſatisfie themſelves with this expoſition; which nevertheleſſe, if well conſidered, is quite beſides the drift and purpoſe: this, whatever it be, being oppoſed (as appeareth by the context) to the confidence and ſecurity of the wicked, Epicures, and Atheiſts, who becauſe they did not believe any God, or that God did intermeddle with the affairs of this world, made no conſcience at all, how they oppreſſed the godly and religious. The words therefore, which will be as proper to the Original, as this here, being tranſlated, He that teacheth (or inſtructeth) the heathen, (Heb. גוים the nations; that is, all the world, or all mankinde) ſhall not he reaſon, or argue? That is, He that inſpired underſtanding to all men in general, according to that in Job; But there is a ſpirit in man; and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding, 32.8. Nay, He that teacheth us (Heb. מלפנו as children are taught in Schools, from their firſt rudiments, by little and little; as the word importeth properly) more than the beaſts of the earth, and makes us wiſer than the fowls of heaven, 35.11. That is, in effect, He that hath made us rational creatures; that hath endowed us, and all the men of the world, with an intellectual faculty; ſhall he not conſider, and underſtand? Or, ſhall he be leſs rational, than we? The argument, to prove, againſt Atheiſts and Epicures, that there muſt needs be an original rational ſubſtance, which is as a principle of reaſon to others, or from which that reaſon, which is in other creatures, is derived; that is, in effect a God infinitely wiſe, &c. though vulgarly propoſed, is very ſolid, and philoſophical, as may appear by the more large diſputations of ancient Philoſophers to that purpoſe. But it will be better underſtood, if we produce ſome of their words; "As that which in me is earth-"ly (ſaith one of them) I have from ſome common earth; and "that which is moiſt from ſome other element is imparted: as my "breath and life hath its proper fountain; and that likewiſe which "is dry and fiery in me: (for there is nothing which doth not pro-"ceed from ſomething: as alſo there is nothing, that can be re-"duced into meer nothing) So alſo οὕτω καὶ τὸ νοερὸν ἥκει ποθὲν) "muſt there be ſome firſt beginning, (or, fountain) from whence "proceeded my underſtanding; (or, that which is rational in me.

V. 11. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man] 1 Cor 3.20 an anſwer to the queſtion in the former verſe; yea, the Lord knoweth mens vain thoughts.

V. 12. whom thou chaſteneſt] God hath care over his, and chaſtiſeth them for their welfare, that they ſhould not periſh for ever with the wicked, 1 Cor.11.32. Heb.12.5,10.

V. 15. But judgement ſhall return unto righteouſneſſe] God will reſtore a right government, that the good may be rewarded, and bad men puniſhed, and then the godly ſhall follow him cheerfully.

ſhall follow it] Heb. ſhall be after it.

V. 16. Who will riſe up for me againſt the evil doers?] None will.

V. 17. Unleſſe the Lord had been my help] He complaineth of them which would not help him to reſiſt the enemies; yet was aſſured that Gods help would not fail, almoſt] Or. quickly.

my ſoul had almoſt dwelt in ſilence] That is, in the grave, and ſo it might have been tranſlated, which would have been plainer; as alſo, Pſal.115.17. The dead praiſe not the Lord, neither any that go down into ſilence. So the Latines commonly call the dead ſilentes; as, Qui jura ſilentibus illic Reddit: where to tranſlate the ſilent, in ſtead of the dead, would be very improper.

V. 18. My foot ſlippeth] Pſal.38.16. When I thought there was no way but death.

V. 19. In the multitude of my thoughts] In my trouble and diſtreſs, I ever found preſent comfort and help from thee.

V. 20. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowſhip with thee] Wilt thou favour, and bear out theſe tyrants that abuſe their power to open oppreſſion? It may alſo (as by ſome it is) be underſtood of wicked Judges, the word כסא ſignifying a Tribunal, as well as a Throne.

by a law] Pſal.58.2. Eſay 10.1.

V. 21. gather themſelves together againſt the ſoul of the righteous] Pſal.1 2.

V. 23. and ſhall cut them off in their own wickedneſſe] Pſal.55.23. It is a great token of Gods judgement, when the purpoſe of the wicked is broken; but a greater, when they periſh by their own malicious plots.

PSAL. XCV.

Verſe 1. O Come let us ſing unto the Lord] It appears to be Davids Pſalm, Heb.4.7.

V. 2, come before his preſence] Heb. prevent his face.

with thankſgiving] He ſheweth, that Gods ſervice ſtandeth not in dead ceremonies, but chiefly in the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving, 34.12.

V. 3. above all gods] Pſal.86.8. & 96.4. Even the angels, (who in reſpect of men, are thought as gods, Pſal.8.5.) are nothing in his ſight: much leſs the Idols, which mans brain inventeth, Pſal.96.5.

V. 4. In his] Heb. In whoſe.

the ſtrength of the hills is his alſo] Or, the heights of the hills are his. All things, even the moſt ſecret, and powerful, are governed by his providence.

V. 5. The ſea is his] Heb. whoſe the ſea is.

and] Or, for.

V. 6. let us worſhip and bow down and kneel] Some learned Rabbines are of opinion, that David here by thoſe three words, to worſhip, bow down, and kneel, doth expreſs three ſeveral geſtures and poſtures of body, uſed then in adoration, and prayer. The firſt (here tranſlated, let us worſhip: but more properly by others, to this ſenſe, proſternamur) a caſting of the whole body upon the ground, with ſtretched legs, and feet level to the face: the ſecond, a low bowing of the whole body: the third, kneeling. It is certain, that all theſe poſtures were uſed among the Jews, in their worſhip: whereof examples are frequent in all parts of it. The firſt of theſe, which may ſeem ſtrangeſt, now that men are grown much colder in their devotions, and gladly take hold (quo jure, qua injuria; as elſewhere is ſhewed) of Chriſts words, concerning ſpiritual worſhip, to favour their bodies: as it was very common among devout Jews, uſed by Chriſt himſelf, (Mat.26.36. and fell on his face: and Mar.4.35. and fell on the ground:) ſo was it in great uſe among ancient Chriſtians, as to any that are verſed in their writings, muſt needs appear. But though this be true concerning theſe words and rites, in general; yet whether here true, to the intention of the Pſalmiſt, may be doubted. For had he aimed at thoſe three ſeveral poſtures, a man would think, according to the rules of Rhetorick, that he ſhould rather have begun with kneeling or incurvation, as the beſt of the three; and ſo have proceeded to proſtration, the loweſt, and moſt abject kinde of adoration. Except we ſhall make an inverted kinde (and ſuch there be to be found ſometimes) of climax of it: not unlike Pſal.1. walketh not: ſtandeth not: ſitteth not: not ſitting, or ſtanding, being a leſs commendation, (in the intention of the Pſalmiſt, according to moſt Expoſitors) than not walking. But I will bind no man to this interpretation. For as certain it is, that the firſt word is often uſed for worſhip or adoration, in general; which as it was variouſly performed with either kneeling, bowing, or falling; ſo is that word, and the Greek προσκυνεῖν, (which doth anſwer it) joyned with any one of thoſe three. However, though the Pſalmiſt do not mention all poſtures, yet by thoſe two that he mentions, he may comprehend any other kinde, and ſo be underſtood by us (with moſt expoſitors) as intending all kinde of adoration, mental, corporal: all kinde, and by all ſorts of expreſſions uſed among men: as who is the object, (to wit, God: the Lord our maker) the onely object of all true adoration; due unto him from all men, all creatures of the world. So Mark, with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, &c. words are multiplied upon the ſame occaſion, to let us know, that we ow much more, than all that we can perform (do we what in us lieth) can come unto.

V. 7. the people of his paſture] Pſal.100.3.

and the ſheep of his hand] That is, the flock whom he governeth with his own hand, Pſal.77.20. & 100.3. and therefore ought to hearken to his voice.

to day if ye will hear his voice] Heb.3.7. & 4.7.

V. 8. Harden not your heart] By the contemning of Gods Word.

as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderneſſe] Exod.17.2,7. Num.14.22, &c.

provocation] Heb. contention.

V. 9. tempted me, proved me, and ſaw my work] 1 Cor.10.9. Pſ.78.40.

V. 10. It is a people that do erre, &c.] Num.14.23.

that do erre in their heart] They were without judgment & reaſon.

V. 11. that they ſhould not enter into my reſt] Heb. if they enter into my reſt. That is, into the land of Canaan, where he promiſed they ſhould finde reſt, which the Apoſtle ſhews to be a type of our eternal reſt to come, Heb.4.8,9.

PSAL. XCVI.

Verſe 1. O Sing unto the Lord a new ſong] This whole Pſalm, and part of the 105. from ver.1. to ver.15. incluſively; (Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm) with ſome ſmall alterations, and ſome, either contractions, (for it may be either, according as we ſhall ſuppoſe this or that to have been the firſt and original Copy) or additions, are alſo to be found (this from v.23. to v.33. incluſively; and that part of the 105. Pſalm, from v. 9 to v.22. incluſively) 1 Chr.16. Of ſuch differences in general, ſee upon Pſa.18. I will love thee, &c. and Pſa.53. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c. But in collating of theſe two Pſalms with that Chapter, there be two things more to be obſerved. The firſt is, that what in Chronicles is exhibited as one ſingle Pſalm; in this Book it makes two, (if we may call two, one whole, and part of another) and theſe two, at that diſtance one of another, that no ſuſpition can be of any ſuch coherence, either of words or matter, as we finde in ſome other Pſalms, that follow one another: as for example, between the 105. & 106. Beſides, that which is firſt here, is laſt there; and that which is laſt here, is there firſt. It is not impoſſible, that David himſelf might afterwards divide, and contrive into a new form, what himſelf had firſt joyned, or joyn afterwards, what he had firſt divided. Neither would it be a difficult matter to finde out a coherence of ſenſe, if we make but one Pſalm of it. However, as it doth not appear by the Chronicles, that what is there put together, in order of context, was intended for different Pſalms : So neither is it certain,that it was intended but for one. We reade there,indeed, in our Engliſh Tranſlation, That on that day David delivered firſt this Pſalm to thank the Lord, &c. this Pſalm; as of one : but that being but the ſupplement of the Tranſlator,it may as well be ſupplyed. theſe Pſalms, as this Pſalm : as indeed it is by ſome, who finde three ſeveral Pſalms in that Chapter : the firſt, from v.8. to 23. the ſecond from 23. to 34. the third from 34. to 37. ending in thoſe words, Amen, and praiſe the Lord. So that the matter being uncertain, we may ſpare our labour of further reaſoning about it. However, this ſeems to be clear by the text (a ſecond thing to be obſerved) that this Pſalm, or Pſalms, (whether two or three, or but one there, which here makes one,and part of another) were of the firſt, if not the very firſt,that ever David publiſhed. And then what reaſon can we give, why ſo many ſhould go before, which certainly were of a later date? But whether the Pſalms were digeſted by any other certain obſervations, is not certain : Certain it is,that the order of time(which is conſiderable in theargument of divers pſalms) was not obſerved. See alſo upon Pſal 1. and Pſal.72. laſt words. I ſaid, it ſeemed clear by the Text : I muſt adde, as it is ordinarily tranſlated. But I finde a different tranſlation of thoſe words. Not to mention the vulgar Latine, which turns it quite another way : learned Grotius tranſlates the whole verſe thus: Hoc autem inprimis eo tempore David conſtituit,ut per Aſaph & collegas ejus laudaretur Deus; that is, And David at that time took eſpecial care, that God might be praiſed by Aſaph, and his collegue. Whoſe opinion alſo is, that David having made theſe Pſalms before, as they are here repreſented in the book of Pſalms, did ſo joyn and put them together afterwards, upon that occaſion of the Ark. This Pſalm then, which few Interpreters take notice of, hath a double relation. For as it ſtands here alone,by it ſelf, it is a meer propheſie of the converſion of the Gentiles to the faith, who therefore are here called upon to praiſe God for it; but as it is repreſented in the Chronicles as part of a longer Pſalm, or joyned with others, whether one, or more, it had a further and more immediate uſe, being then ſung at and upon the bringing in of the Ark by David into Jeruſalem.

V. 4 For the Lord is great] Seeing he will reveal his greatneſs to all Nations, contrary to their own expectation, they ought all to worſhip him, contrary to their own imaginations, and onely as he hath appointed.

to be praiſed] Pſal.18 3.

above all gods] Pſal.95.3.

V. 5. For all the gods of the nations are idols, Jer.10.11.

but the Lord made the heavens] Then the Idols, or whatſoever made not the heavens, are not God.

V. 6. Honour and majeſty are before him] God cannot be known but by the tokens of his honour and majeſty, which are ſeen principally in his Sanctuary.

V. 7. Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength] Pſal.29.1,2.

give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength] As by experience ye ſee that it is onely due to him.

V. 8. due unto his name] Heb. of his name.

bring an offering] By preſenting your ſelves before God, declare, that ye worſhip him onely, pſal.68 29. Iſa.16.1, V. 9. in the beauty of holineſſe] Or, in the glorious Sanctuary. See upon Pſal.110.3. The beauty of holineſſe.

V. 10. Say among the heathen] He propheſieth, that the Gentiles ſhall be partakers, with the Jews, of Gods promiſe, Rom. 15. 9, &c.

the Lord reigneth] Pſal.93.1.1. & 97.1.

righteouſly] Heb. in righteouſneſſes.

Say among the heathen, that the Lord reigneth] 1 Chr.16. there is a tranſpoſition of theſe words; which follow there, in this order, Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoyce; and let men ſay among the nations, The Lord reigneth. Let the ſea roar, &c. It is very likely that it was made by David himſelf. See before.

that the Lord reigneth] Much ado there hath been about this place; and ſome men, to this day, make great boaſt of it; thinking thereby to prove and evince againſt all gainſayers, the corruption of the Original Hebrew. Certain it is, that divers Ancients of great antiquity; as Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, and ſome others, found it in their Tranſlations, Κύριος ἐβασίλευσεν ἀπὸ ξύλου: Dominus regnavit à ligno; that is, The Lord hath reigned by his croſſe: who therefore ſuſpected, that the enemies of Chriſts croſs, the Jews, had purpoſely, by omiſſion of theſe words, which made againſt them, played the plagiaries. But the greater number of Ancients that have been ſince, neither found in their Copies, neither object in their Comments any ſuch thing unto them: neither is it in either Greek or Latine Copies of theſe dayes. How therefore this hapned,learned men have divers conjectures; which I do not think pertinent to this place. It ſhall ſuffice, for further clearing of the Hebrew Text,to obſerve, that 1 Chr.16. where this whole Pſalm,as hath been ſaid before, ſtands upon record, v.30,31. no ſuch thing is to be found I ſhall only add,what ſeems to me very probable concerning that gloſs,or inſertion,into the Text; and hath not yet been ſaid by any that I know of; that thoſe words, v.12,13. then ſhall all the tree עצים which is the word of the gloſs, and ſignifieth a croſs alſo) of the wood rejoyce: Before the Lord; might be the occaſion of it.

V. 11. Let the heavens rejoyce, and let the earth be glad] Pſ.·8.7.

V. 12. then ſhall all the trees of the earth rejoyce] If the inſenſible creatures ſhall have cauſe to rejoyce, when God appeareth,then much more we.

PSAL. XCVII.

Verſ. 1. THe Lord reigneth] He ſheweth, that where God reigneth, there is all felicity and ſpiritual joy. See alſo upon ver.7. worſhip him, &c.

let the multitude of Iſles be glad thereof] For the Goſpel ſhall not onely be preached in Judea, but thorow all countreys, yea, all Iſlands alſo.

multitude of Iſles] Heb. many, or great iſles, or countreys.

V. 2. Clouds and darkneſs are round about him] He is thus deſcribed, to keep his enemies in fear, who contemn God.

righteouſneſſe and judgement are the habitation of his throne] Pſal. 89. 14.

habitation] Or, eſtabliſhment.

V. 3. A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about] Pſal.52.3.

V. 4. the earth ſaw and trembled] Pſ.18.7. & 77.18. & 104.32.

V. 6. The heavens declare his righteouſneſſe, and all the people ſee his glory] Some by heavens, here, underſtand the Angels: as if he intended,that the Angels in heaven, and men, (or people) in earth, ſhall all concur to glorifie God. Or, The heavens, &c. that is, Gods juſt judgements, which by an extraordinary power he doth execute upon the wicked from heaven, as it were: they declare, and make his righteouſneſs to be acknowledged upon earth, and all men to glorifie him. Or, both heaven and earth ſhall be witneſſes of his juſtice, and righteous judgements. So pſal.50 4. He ſhall call to the heavens from above, &c. And the heavens ſhall declare his righteouſneſs; for God himſelf is Judge. See the notes there. There may be another interpretation alſo, which I think in reference to that which immediately follows, Confounded be all they that ſerve graven images, &c. would be very proper to this place. It is this; That the Heavens,Sun and Moon,and all that goodly Fabrck,plead the cauſe of God, againſt Atheiſts and Idolaters; that his glory (eſpecially conſiſting in the acknowledgement of his infiniteneſſe and omnipotency; and in being the onely object of our adoration and devotions) may be ſeen, or is there expoſed, and ſet out to the ſight of all that are not wilfully blinde; or through ſome juſt judgement of God altogether bereaved of their right wits. See more upon pſal.19.1. The heavens declare the glory of God, &c. and v.3. There is no ſpeech nor language, &c. See alſo pſal 89.5. And the heavens ſhall praiſe, &c.

V. 7. Confounded be all they that ſerve graven images] Exod.20.4. Lev.26.1. Deut.5 8. He ſignifieth, that Gods judgements are in a readineſs to deſtroy idolaters.

worſhip him all ye gods] Heb. אלהים which pſal.8.15. is tranſlated Angels: Thou haſt made him little lower than the Angels; which, if grounded upon the Apoſtles authority, who allows of it, Heb.2. 7. I know no reaſon why the ſame authority ſhould not be followed here alſo, ſince the ſame Apoſtle, Heb.1.6. hath it, And let all the Angels of God worſhip him: wherein he is generally ſuppoſed to have intended theſe words of the Pſalmiſt. There is in the words an alluſive oppoſition (well obſerved by ſome) between אלילים idols; and אלהים angels. That this whole pſalm is principally intended of Chriſt his ſpiritual Kingdom and Dominion, appears by the Apoſtles words, And again when he bringeth in the firſt begotten into the world, he ſaith, And let all the Angels of God,&c when he bringeth; that is, as before upon pſal 40.6. mine ears haſt thou opened: hath already been intimated: when the Pſalmiſt deſcribes the ſon of God his coming into the world; where he ſpakes and propheſies of it. There is nothing indeed in the whole Pſalm, but is very applyable that way: no part almoſt of the Pſalms, but is. However, I do not conceive that this can neceſſarily be inferred (as ſome argue) from theſe firſt words The Lord reigneth; as though it could not be meant of God, the Father, whoſe Kingdom, they ſay, was from everlaſting, and did not then begin. For according to the Scripture phraſe, God is there ſaid to reign, when the Juſtice of his adminiſtration (often clouded by the proſperity of the wicked in this world; whereof ſee upon pſal.37. and pſal.73, &c. at which times atheiſm doth uſe to abound) by juſt judgements executed upon the wicked, and profane, and ſacrilegious,is made conſpicuous unto men. And beſides,what would they make of pſal.99.ver.1? The Lord reigneth——he ſitteth between the Cherubins, &c. Beſides the propriety of that expreſſion, that ſitteth between the Cherubins, it clearly appears by the whole context, that God the Father, the onely then known to the Iſraelites, was intended.

V 8. The daughters of Judah rejoyced] The villages of Judah, which are as it were the daughters of Jeruſalem, the mother City, ſhall rejoyce at the converſion of the Gentiles.

becauſe of thy judgements, O Lord] Whereby thou deſtroyeſt thine enemies, and enlargeſt thy Church.

V. 9. above all gods] pſal.95.3.

V. 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil] He requireth two things of his children: the one, that they deteſt vice: the other, that they put their truſt in God for their deliverance.

hate evil] Pſal 34 14 Amos 5.15 Rom 12.9.

V. 11. Light is ſown for the righteous] Pſal.111.4, The joy of the righteous is laid up for them, and will come forth with increaſe, though it appear not at the firſt.

and gladneſſe for the upright in heart] Pſal.64 10.

V. 10. Rejoyce in the Lord, ye righteous] Pſal.33.1.

at the remembrance] Or, to the memorial.

PSAL. XCVIII.

Verſ.1. O Sing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done marvellous things] Pſal.96.1. Iſa.42.10.

a new ſong] That is, ſome ſong newly made, in token of thankfulneſs for their wonderful deliverance, Pſal.96.1.

his holy arm hath gotten him the victory] He preſerveth his Church miraculouſly, Iſa.59.16. & 63 5.

V. 2. The Lord hath made known his ſalvation] Iſa 52.10. For the deliverance of his Church.

his righteouſneſſe hath he openly ſhewed] Moſt Expoſitors underſtand this righteouſneſs of Evangelical righteouſneſs, through faith in Chriſts merits, &c. upon this ground, becauſe the ſubject of the whole Pſalm (as generally conceived) is to ſet out the happineſs and glory of Chriſts Kingdom, and the converſion of the Nations unto him. Neither is it to be queſtioned, but that it was intended to that uſe by the holy Ghoſt, by way of myſtical application and interpretation. Which though to us Chriſtians moſt conſiderable now, yet ought we not to neglect the immediate, literal, hiſtorical ſenſe: of which, (beſides that it is the ground of the myſtical, and even ſo to be ſought into, that we may know what we ground upon, and how far we may go, to keep our ſelves within bounds;) good uſe is to be made upon ſeveral occaſions, by good and warrantable conſequences, and applications. We ſay therefore, that ſome notable victory, or deliverance, having been the immediate occaſion; by the word righteouſneſs, we muſt here underſtand, literally, goodneſs and mercy: of which ſignification, ſee upon Pſal 71.2. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſs. And though it be granted, that Prophets ſometimes ſpeak of things future, by the Præterit, thereby the better to expreſs their own confidence, (and to breed it in others) of a certain accompliſhment: Yet here the immediate cauſe of theſe Præterits, The Lord hath made known, hath ſhewed, &c. is becauſe they related immediately to ſomewhat, which in very deed, was already paſſed and done. Now if any man ſhall ask, what that ſhould be, (literally taken) that God ſhould be ſaid, openly to have ſhewed in the ſight of the heathen. as in this verſe: or, to have been ſeen by all the ends of the earth, as in the next? firſt we anſwer, that we muſt allow ſacred Poets and Orators Rhetorical amplifications, as well as others; if we allow them to be Poets and Orators: and ſo if it were ſome notable victory, or deliverance, ſuch as we reade of many in ſacred records, the fame whereof could not at leaſt, but ſpread to all neighbour Nations and Kingdoms on all ſides; ſo much as is here, might well be ſaid of it, Iſa. 39.1, &c. and 2 Kings 20 12, &c. we reade of Embaſſadors ſent of purpoſe by the King of Babylon, to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land: as is particularly expreſſed 2 Chron. 32.31. and that many ſuch things hapned, upon ſeveral occaſions, no man can doubt, though no mention be made of it in writings of their time, now remaining. See alſo upon Pſal.138.4. All the Kings of the earth. But beſides, there might be a particular providence of God in it, that the Pſalmiſt ſhould light upon ſuch expreſſions, as might ſerve his purpoſe, figuratively, by way of rhetorical amplification: and be applyable to Chriſt and his Kingdom, literally: taking literal here, not for the immediate ſenſe, in the intention of the Pſalmiſt: but for that which is moſt proper, and Grammatical to the words, oppoſed to Rhetorical.

openly ſhewed] Or, revealed.

V. 3. He hath remembred his mercy] God was moved by no other means to gather his Church of the Jews and Gentiles, but becauſe he would perform his merciful promiſe.

V. 6. With trumpets and ſound of cornet] By this repetition, and earneſt exhortation to give praiſes with inſtruments, and by ſtirring up the dumb creatures, he ſignifieth, that the world is never able to praiſe God ſufficiently for their ſpiritual and corporal deliverances.

V. 7. ſea roar, and the fulneſſe thereof] Pſal.96 11.

V. 9. for he cometh to judge the earth] Pſal.96.13.

PSAL. XCIX.

Verſ.1. L*Et the people tremble*] When God delivereth his Church, all the enemies ſhall have cauſe to tremble.

between the cherubims, let the earth be moved] Exod.25.22. Pſal. 80. 1.

be moved] Heb. ſtagger.

V. 2. The Lord is great in Zion] Which is the ſeat of his univerſal monarchy, Eſay 2.2, &c.

V. 3. Let them praiſe thy great and terrible Name] Though the wicked rage againſt God, yet the godly muſt praiſe his Name, and mighty power.

for it is holy] Or, which is holy.

V. 4. The kings ſtrength alſo loveth judgement] Or, And, the kings ſtrength, who loveth judgement. This King, meaning God, the King of his Church; (ſo called alſo Pſalm 98.6. make a joyful noyſe before the Lord, the King) doth mix his power with juſtice, contrary to the cuſtom of tyrants, Job 36.5

thou doſt eſtabliſh equity] Heb. equities. That is, the moſt equal courſes.

V. 5. worſhip at his footſtool] That is, before his Ark, 1 Chron. 28.2. where he promiſed to hear, when they worſhipped him; as now he promiſeth his ſpiritual preſence, whereſoever his Church is aſſembled.

he is holy] Or, it is holy.

V. 6. Moſes and Aaron among his prieſts] Moſes is reckoned among the Prieſts; for he did the Prieſtly office, in conſecrating Aaron and his ſons. As alſo in his continual interceding for the people; which ſome conceive to be the principal aym here: which alſo ſeems by the following words to be confirmed. However, the word כהן, doth alſo ſigniſie a principal officer or miniſter; as ſome would have it here alſo tranſlated.

V. 8. though thou tookeſt vengeance of their inventions] He heard their prayers, notwithſtanding their infirmities; and corrected them for their ſins, though they prayed unto him, Num.20.12. Or, thou didſt forgive the people upon Moſes prayer, though thou didſt deſtroy ſome of them for their ſins, Exod.28.34,35. & 32.32. Num. 14.20.22 He might alſo allude to Gods own expreſſions concerning himſelf, Exod.20. 5,6. viſiting the iniquity, &c. and ſhewing mercy, &c. as alſo Exod.34.6,7.

PSAL. C.

Title.

praiſe] Or, thankſgiving] Pſal.145 1.

Verſe 1. M*Ake a joyful noiſe unto the Lord*] He propheſieth that Gods benefit in calling the Gentiles, ſhall be ſo great, that they ſhall have wonderful occaſion to praiſe his mercy, and rejoyce, Pſal.95.1.

all ye lands] Heb. all the earth.

V. 3. it is he that hath made us] I know no reaſon, though ſome principal Expoſitors would not have it, but that the words may be underſtood de communi creatione; that is, of temporal life and being, as well as of ſpiritual. This indeed is of more conſequence: but that as neceſſary to be known, and the more neceſſary perchance to be inſiſted upon; becauſe ſecondary cauſes are more viſible, and many through ignorance, apt enough to adſcribe to bare nature, what they ſee daily by natural means to be done, and effected; and without ſuch, never done. The Pſalmiſt elſewhere doth very exactly inſiſt upon it, Pſal.139.13,14,15, &c. and hath choyce ſpeculations about it. See alſo Pſal.119.73. Thy hands, &c. But again, the words might be intended of the Jews, Gods peculiar people; which God did chooſe and ſelect from all other Nations, to be his peculiar, not to any peculiar worth of things, nor by any ſuch co-operation of theirs, as that they could adſcribe any part of it to themſelves; to which purpoſe, ſome tranſlate: ipſe effecit nos, (non autem nos ipſos) populum ſuum, &c. making a Parentheſis of thoſe words, and not we our ſelves.

and not we our ſelves] Or, and his we are. This difference of ſenſe, or expreſſion (though both to the main matter may come to one) the one affirmative, and the other negative; proceedeth from a different reading of but one letter, in a word that conſiſts but of two: which according to different reading, may be either a Pronoun, illi: or a Negative, non. It is not worth the while to contend about ſuch petty differences: and they do the Scripture great wrong, that would have the integrity and incorruption of it to conſiſt in ſuch niceties.

his people, and the ſheep of his paſture] Pſal.95 7.

V. 4. Enter into his gates with thankſgiving] Though David doth here expreſs himſelf in words proper to the ſervice then in uſe, yet ſo much from the words we may gather abſolutely, (as Expoſitors of beſt account well obſerve) that our thankſgiving to God upon extraordinary occaſions, ſhould alwayes be accompanied with ſome outward ſolemnity. See alſo upon Pſal.66.13. I will go into thy houſe.

V. 5. his mercy is everlaſting] He declareth, that we ought never to be weary in praiſing God, ſeeing his mercies toward us laſt for ever, Pſal.136.1, &c.

to all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

PSAL. CI.

Verſ. 1. I Will ſing of mercy] Of thy mercy to me, and juſtice, when thou deſtroyeſt mine adverſaries, and ſetteſt me on the throne.

V. 2. O when wilt thou come unto me?] When wilt thou give me the Kingdom promiſed?

I will walk within my houſe with a perfect heart] Till then I will guide mine own houſe well, and afterwards the Kingdom.

V. 3. I will ſet no wicked thing before mine eyes] Either to deſire, it, or endeavour to accompliſh it.

wicked thing] Heb. thing of Belial.

I hate the work] He ſheweth, that Magiſtrates do not their duty except they be enemies to all vice, Pſal. 97. 10.

of them that turn aſide] From the law of God, pſalm 125.5.

V. 4. I will not know a wicked perſon] I will not take notice of them: I will ſhew them no grace nor favour pſalm 1. 6. Matthew 7. 23.

V. 5. Whoſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off] In promiſing to puniſh thoſe vices, which are moſt pernicious in them that are about Kings, he declareth by conſequence, that he will puniſh all vice.

an high look, and a proud heart, will not I ſuffer] Prov 6. 17, 18

V. 6. Mine eyes ſhall be upon the faithful of the land] He ſheweth what is the true uſe of the ſword, To puniſh the wicked, and to maintain the good Rom. 13. 4.

in a perfect way] Or, perfect in the way.

V. 7. ſhall not tarry in my ſight] Heb. ſhall not be eſtabliſhed.

V. 8. I will early deſtroy all the wicked of the Land] Heb. at mornings. For then was judgement executed, Jer. 21.12. Meaning, every morning; or elſe, moſt early: That is, immediately after the act, leſt it grow to further inconvenience.

PSAL. CII.

Title.

of] Or, for.

of the afflicted] Whereby is ſignified, that albeit we be in never ſo great miſeries, yet there is ever place left for prayer, Pſalm 130. 1. Jon.2,1.

Verſe 1. LEt my cry come unto thee] He declareth, that in our prayer we muſt ever feel the want of that which we deſire.

V. 2. Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble, encline thine ear unto me] Pſal. 27. 9.

V. 3. For my daies are conſumed like ſmoak] Theſe exceſſive kinds of ſpeech ſhew how much the affliction of the Church ought to wound the hearts of the godly.

like ſmoke] Or, as ſome read, into ſmoke.

and my bones are burnt as an hearth] Job 30. 30. Pſal.32. 3.

V. 4. ſo] Or, becauſe, or, while.

ſo that I forget to eat my bread] My ſorrows were ſo great that I paſſed not for mine ordinary food.

V. 5. my bones cleave to my skin] Job 19. 20. Lam 4.8.

skin] Or, fleſh.

V. 6. I am like a Pellican of the wilderneſs] Ever mourning and ſolitary, caſting out fearful cries, Eſay 34. 11. & Zeph. 2. 14. in both which places, though it be the ſame word, and certainly intended for the ſame thing, it is tranſlated bittern: but Lev. 11. 18. pellican, as it is here. It is generally conceived, (which is grounded upon the etymology of the word, קאה Vomere, that is, to vomit up) that it is the name of a bird in Latine called platea, or platalea, (Engliſhed by ſome a ſhovelard,) which as Tully, and out of him Pliny, teſtifie, uſeth to ſwallow down ſhell fiſh as oyſters, and the like; and keeping them in his ſtomach, till they oppen, caſts them up again, and ſo eats them.

an owl of the deſert] Job 30. 29.

V. 7. I watch] My ſorrows will not ſuffer me to ſleep, Pſalm 77. 4.

as a ſparrow alone] That hath loſt his Mate: ſo are good men ſolitary, being out of the Church.

V. 8. they are mad againſt me, are ſworn againſt me] They have conſpired againſt me by a joint oath. Or, as others, per me jurant, that is, ſwear by me. That is my name is a curſe unto them: threatned and denounced as the utmoſt of temporall judgements, Lev. 11. So alſo Eſay 64. 15. And ye ſhall leave your name for a curſe. Heb. לשבועה for an oath, properly. Or, they ſwear by me; that is, I am the object of all their oaths and imprecations; ſuch is their rage and malice againſt me. But that former both tranſlation and expoſition, grounded upon thoſe places of Leviticus, and Eſay, is the moſt approved, and, as I conceive, moſt warrantable.

V. 9. I have eaten aſhes like bread] Sitting in the aſhes, he could not but eat ſome with his meat, See upon pſal. 42. 3. My tears.

mingled my drink with weeping] Pſal.80. 5. Heb. drinks. Noting a continual act.

V. 10. Becauſe of thine indignation] He ſheweth, that his afflictions did not ſo much move him, as Gods diſpleaſure.

thou haſt lifted me up and caſt me down] As in wreſtling, one takes the other up to give him the greater fall: ſo affliction after proſperity is the more dreadful, Pſalm 73. 18.

V. 11. My daies are like a ſhadow that declineth] Eſay 40. 6. Jam. 1. 10.

like a ſhadow that declineth] Rather, is ſtretched out, as Exod. 6. 6. for ſhadows at evening are longeſt, and then ſuddenly vaniſh Jer. 6. 4.

V. 12. thou, O Lord, ſhalt endure for ever] Lam. 5. 19. Howſoever we be frail, yet thy promiſe is ſure, and the remembrance thereof ſhall confirm thy people in all adverſities.

thy remembrance unto all generations] Pſalm 135. 13.

V. 13. ſhalt] Or, wilt.

yea, the ſet-time is come] That is, the ſeventy years appointed, Jer. 29. 10, 12. or, ſome ſuch time appointed for their deliverance Rev. 2 10. & 3. 10.

V. 14. in her ſtones] The more that the Church is in miſery and deſolation, the more do the faithful love and pitty it.

V. 17. the prayer of the deſtitute] The Hebrew word ערער, here rendred deſtitute, is thought to ſignifie properly myricam, tamarisk; by ſome miſtaken, as Herbaliſts obſerve, for ἐρείκη, heath. So indeed the Hebrew word is tranſlated in Engliſh, Jer. 17 6. For he ſhall be like the heath in the deſert. And it is likely they intended myrica. Yet I cannot abſolutely ſay, it is a miſtake: the word tamarisk, would not do ſo well there; except we underſtand it of ſome wild tamarisk, much like unto heath (for ſome tamarisk growes to a great bigneſs) to which the deſcription of humilis and tenuis, that is, low and ſlender, (as in Virgil, Non omnes arbuſta juvant, humileſque myrica:) may be proper. But however low and ſlender, yet they certainly are miſtaken, that make it here, herbam humilem & abjectam; as ſome do: Plantam, they might have ſaid. They alſo, that confound it with juniper: as ſome others. All this is avoided by tranſlating nudatiſſimus, as ſome, or as others, humilis, (deſtitute here) which certainly is the intention (if not propriety, or proper ſignification) of the word here, and agrees very well with the etymology of it: from ערה, nudare, that is, to uncover. Some fetching it from a different root, (to wit, עור) have tranſlated it, vociferantis; others, excitantis ſe; that is, of him that cryeth: and, of him that ſtirreth up himſelf: but becauſe not followed, we ſhall not need further to inſiſt upon either.

V. 18. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, and the people which ſhall be created] Tat is, the fame of this (ſo notable and wounderful) deliverance ſhall be tranſmitted to poſterity by writing; and thoſe that are not yet born, ſhall talk of it, and praiſe thee for it in after ages. Or, if he meant, that the Gentiles, who ſhall ſee it, or read of it, ſhall be converted; then, by the people which ſhall be created, is meant, new born and regenerated; as pſa. 31. laſt verſe, They ſhall come and ſhall declare his righteouſneſſe, unto a people that ſhall be born, that he hath done this. Or, by the people which ſhall be created, may be meant the ſame people, who being as it were dead and buried in the miſeries of a long captivity ſhall, when reſtored again, appear as newly created, or raiſed by a miracle out of the grave.

V. 19 For] Or, When.

looked down] See upon Pſalm 33. 13. The Lord looketh.

V. 20. thoſe that are appointed to death] Heb the children of death Pſalm 79. 11. Who now in their baniſhment could look for nothing but death.

V. 21. To declare] Or, that they may delare.

V. 22. When the people are gathered together] He ſheweth, that Gods Name is more praiſed, then, when religion flouriſheth, and the Church increaſeth, which is chiefly accompliſhed in the New Teſtament.

V. 23 weakned] Heb. afflicted.

V. 25 Of old thou haſt laid the foundations, &c.] Whereas heaven and earth are often mentioned (and in that reſpect, in oppoſition to mans life, and all that belongs unto it, ſaid to continue for ever,) to ſet out the ſtability and immutability of things; they are here, in compariſon of God, the better to ſet out his abſolute eternity and immutability, mentioned as things mutable, and tranſitory. And the ſetting out of Gods eternity and immutability, tends to this, that ſince God in his own nature is thus and thus, it cannot be that they whom he loveth, and who love him, and put their truſt in him, ſhould be ſo periſhable and tranſitory as to be no more after this mortal life is ended. And ſo St. John in his firſt Epiſtle, 2. 17. The world paſſeth away and the luſt thereof; but he that doth the will of God, abideth for ever.

as a veſture ſhalt thou change them] The Septuagint have it here, ἑλίξεις, thou ſhalt fold them: and ſo that paſſage is quoted Heb. 1. 12. whereby the manner of the change is more particularly expreſſed; to wit, by way of folding. And to this agrees the Prophets expreſſion, Eſay 34. 4. And all the hoſte of heaven ſhall be diſſolved, and the heavens ſhall be rolled together as a ſcrol: Or perchance it is but a ſimilitude, or bare alluſion; becauſe when a book, (as antiently books were wont, thence called volumes) or a ſcroll of parchment is foulded up, nothing of it (no letters, or words, the eſſential parts) is ſeen. It is as it were paſſed away. St. Peter ſpeaking of the ſame, ſaith no more; but that the heavens ſhall be diſſolved, 2 Pet. 3. 12.

V. 26. periſh, but thou ſhalt endure] Eſay 51. 6.

endure] Heb. ſtand.

V. 27. ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end] Mal. 3. 6. Heb. 13. 8.

V. 28. The children of thy ſervants ſhall continue] This is the literal (as I may call it) immortality, propoſed in the Law to them that fear God, their ſurving in their poſterity, of which ſee upon Pſalm 21. 4. length of daies for ever and ever. By it, and under the type of the Land of promiſe, (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 37. 2. For they ſhall ſoon be cut down, &c.) was figured that immortal life, and eternity of the godly, in Heaven, more fully revealed and brought to light by the Goſpel of Chriſt: Of which ſee before upon pſalm 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c.

ſhall continue, and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee] Pſal. 69. 36 Joel 3.20.

continue] Heb. dwell.

PSAL. CIII.

Verſe 1. BLeſſe the Lord, O my Soul] He awaketh his ſoul to praiſe God, ſhewing that both underſtanding and affections, minde and heart, are too little to ſet forth his praiſe.

V. 2. all] Or, any of.

V. 3. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities] Remiſſion of ſins is the chief of all benefits, Pſalm 32. 1, 2.

who healeth all thy diſeaſes] Cureth thy bodily diſeaſes.

V. 4. Who redeemeth thy life] Freeth thee out of deadly dangers.

deſtruction] Or, the pit, as Pſal. 30. 3. & 107. 20.

crowneth] Or, encompaſſeth, as Pſal. 5. 10. & 32. 10.

V. 5. ſatisfyeth thy mouth with good things] Pſalm 36. 8. and 146. 7.

ſo that thy youth is renewed like the Eagles] As the Eagle is renewed in ſtrength by ſucking blood when ſhe cannot feed, as ſome ſay, or, by caſting the feathers, as others ſay: ſo God miraculouſly giveth ſtrength to his people, above all mans expectation: or, he makes thee vigorous, as in thy youth, and active like an Eagle, Eſay 40. 31.

V. 6. The Lord executeth righteouſneſſe] Heb. righteouſneſſes, and judgements: That is, all ſorts of them, or the greateſt.

judgement for all that are oppreſſed] Pſalm 146. 7.

V. 7. he made known his waies] That we ſhould walk in: or that he walketh in, that is, his proceedings.

unto Moſes] As to his chief Niniſter, and next to his people, Pſalm 147. 19.

V. 8. The Lord is merciful and gracious, ſlow to anger, and plenteous in mercy] Exod. 34. 6, 7. Num, 14. 18. Deut. 5. 10. Neh. 9. 17. Pſal 86 15. Jer. 32. 18.

plenteous in mercy] Heb. great in mercy.

V. 9. He will not alwaies chide] God ſheweth firſt his ſevere judgement, but ſo ſoon as the ſinner is humbled, he receiveth him to mercy.

V. 10. He hath not dealt with us after our ſins] We have proved by continual experience, that his mercy hath ever prevailed againſt our offences.

nor rewarded us according to our iniquities] Ezra 9 13.

V. 11. as the heaven is high] Heb. according to the height of the heaven.

V. 13. as a father with his children] Mal. 3. 17.

V. 14 duſt] Gen. 3. 19.

V. 15. As for man, his dayes are as graſs] He declareth that man hath nothing in himſelf to move God to mercy, but only the confeſſion of his infirmity and miſery.

graſs] Pſal. 90. 5. and 102. 11. Eſay 40. 6. See upon Pſal. 92. 7. when the wicked.

V. 16. it is gone] Heb. it is not.

the place thereof ſhall know it no more So the Scripture uſeth to expreſſe a total abolition of a thing out of its place, Job 7. 10. & 20. 9.

V. 17. But the mercy of the Lord,&c.] See upon Pſalm 49. 15. But God will redeem my ſoul, &c. and 1 John 2. 16, 17. For all that is in the world, &c. but he that doth, &c.

and his righteouſneſſe unto childrens children] See upon pſal. 102. 28. The children of thy ſervants, &c.

V. 18. To ſuch as keep his Covenant, and to thoſe that remember his commandments to do them] Deut. 7. 9.

To] Or, of.

To ſuch as keep his Covenant] That fear him, and obey his word.

V. 20. Yea his angels] Pſal. 148. 2. In that that we, who naturally are ſlow to praiſe God, exhort the angels, which willingly do it, we ſtir up our ſelves to conſider our duty, and to awake out of our ſluggiſhneſſe.

that excell in ſtrength] Heb. mighty in ſtrength.

V. 21. miniſters of his that do his pleaſure] Heb. 1. 14.

V. 22. Bleſſe the Lord, all his works] This Pſalm begins, and ends with the praiſes of God.

PSAL. CIV.

Verſe 1. THou art clothed with honour] Pſalm 93. verſe 1. The Prophet ſheweth that we need not enter into the heavens to ſeek God, foraſmuch as all the order of nature, with the propriety and placing of the elements, are moſt lively mirrours to ſee his Majeſty in: For God when he made the world, came forth of his palace, as clothed in royall robes, as verſe 2.

V. 2, as with a garment] As a king in the day of his coronation, puts on gorgeous apparel: ſo did God ſhew himſelf glorious in the light, newly made in the creation of the world.

ſtretcheſt out the heavens like a curtain] Iſa. 45. 12.

V. 3. Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters] Some by theſe waters underſtand the clouds, according to ver. 13. He watereth the hills from his chambers. Others, the heavens, of a watry nature: or heavenly places, where waters, according to the expreſſion of Scripture, Pſal. 148. 4 and Gen. 1. (according to the expoſition of ſome) 6. are ſaid to be. Others make this to be the ſcope of the words, to oppoſe the power and omnipotency of God, to the skill and art of men. For men, or mortal architects in building, it is their main care to provide ſufficient maſſie ſupporters for their beams to reſt upon; on which eſpecially depends the firmneſs and ſtability of the whole Fabrick: but this omnipotent Architect can make the very waters to be as pillars to his edifice. To this may tend that expreſſion alſo, Pſa. 24. 2 concerning the earth; For he hath founded it upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods. See there.

who walketh upon the wings of the wind] Moveth as ſwiftly, as if he did fly, Pſal. 18. 10. Iſa. 19. 1.

V. 4. Who maketh his angels ſpirits] This is interpreted of the angels, Heb. 1. 7.

his angels ſpirits] Or, the winds his meſſengers, and the flaming fire his miniſters.

V. 5. Who laid the foundations of the earth] Heb. he hath founded the earth upon her baſes.

that it ſhould not be removed for ever] That is that it ſhould continue according to its firſt laws and orders, which were ſet unto it by God, when firſt created.

V. 6. Thou coveredſt it with the deep as with a garment] The waters covered the earth at firſt, till God made them retire, that the dry land might appear, Gen. 1. 2. See upon Pſal. 24. 2. upon the Seas, ſo they did alſo cover the earth in the flood, Geneſis 7. 19.

V. 7. at the voice of thy thunder] That is, at thy voice, as terrible to the creatures (in point of performance and obedience to thy commands) as the noiſe of thunder uſeth to be among men: or the voice of God, ſpeaking with thunders and lightnings, as once he did to the Iſraelites, would be unto men.

V. 8. They] Or, But they.

They go up by the mountains; they go down by the vallies] Or, The mountains aſcend, the valleys deſcend: Or, They were gone up the mountains.

V. 9. ſet a bound that they may not paſs over] Jer. 5 22.

V. 10. He ſendeth] Heb. Who ſendeth.

run] Heb walk.

among] Or, between.

V. 11. They give drink to every beaſt of the field] If God provide for the very beaſts, much more will he extend his provident care, to man, Mat. 6. 26, 30. & 10. 29, 31.

quench] Heb. break.

V. 12. By them ſhall the fouls of heaven have their habitation] By them, to wit, ſprings and rivers, where birds are very frequent, if any trees be neer. This is excellently well expreſſed by the beſt of Latin Poets, ſpeaking of the river Tyberis: Variæ circumque, ſupraque Aſſuetæ ripis volucres, & fluminis alveo, Æthera mulcebant cantu, lucoque volabant.

ſhall the] Or, have the, &c.

ſing] Heb give a voice.

V. 13. He watereth the hills from his chambers] from the clouds verſe 3.

V. 14. graſs to grow for the cattel] Pſal. 147. 8.

for the ſervice of man] He ſheweth Gods ſpecial care of man, who doth not only provide neceſſary things for him, as hearbs, and other meats, but alſo things to rejoice, and comfort him, as wine and oyl, or ointments.

food] Heb. bread, Job 28 5.

V. 15. wine that maketh glad the heart of man] Jud. 9. 13. Pro. 31. 6, 7.

oyl to make his face to ſhine] Heb. to make his face to ſhine with oyl, or, more than oyl. The uſe of oyl was very frequent (and is yet in ſome countries) in antient times, both internal and external: inſomuch, that next to bread and wine, nothing was thought more beneficial, or neceſſary to the preſervation of health. This ſhining, here ſpoken of, may either be underſtood literally, of the ſhining of the face by anointing, which how uſuall it was, may appear by our Saviours advice, Matth. 6. 17. where he bids them that faſt, leſt they ſhould be known unto others by the ſadneſs of their countenance, to anoint their heads, and waſh their face: Or, which I rather believe, of the effects of oyl in general, by the both internal and external uſe of it; whereby the health and vigor of the body, (here underſtood by ſhining) among them that uſe it, is ordinarily much improved. Plin. lib. 14. cap. 22. ſpeaking of both wine and oyl, ſaith, Duo ſunt liquores corporibus humanis gratiſſimi, intus vini, foris olei, arborum è genere ambo præcipui, ſed olei neceſſarius. Of the two, he makes oyl the more neceſſary.

V. 16. The trees of the Lord are full of ſap] Such as men did not plant, but the Lord: as follows, ſee Num. 24. 6. or, goodly great trees, Pſalm 36. 6 are full of ſap] Or, ſaturati, as in the vulgar Latin, that is, filled, or ſatisfyed, to wit, with the rain, before mentioned.

V. 17. as for the ſtork, the fir-trees are her houſe] The ſtork hath her name in Hebrew from kindneſſe, becauſe ſhe feeds her parents when they are old, A good example for children to imitate.

V. 18. and the rocks for the conies] The Hebrew word ; שפנים both here, and Prov. 30. 26. rendred in Engliſh, conies, is more probably thought by others, to ſignifie Erinaceum, a Hedge-hog ; or ſome ſuch kind, deſcribed by St. Jerom, (Epiſt. 135 ad Sun. & Fret.) to have the ſhape, partly of a Mouſe, and partly of a Bear : and therefore called in thoſe parts, ἀρκτόμυς : who alſo teſtifies, that Judea doth abound with ſuch, and that their habitation is in rocks. That it ſhould not be the cony, may hence alſo very probably be inferred, becauſe the hare and the conie are reputed but one genus, though a different ſpecies ; ſo that both are thought to be comprehended under the general word of ארנבת, Lev. 11. 6. where verſe 5. the שפן is alſo mentioned by its ſelf, as a different kind.

V. 19. He appointed the moon for ſeaſons] Or, appointed times : By which words ſome think ſolemn feaſts, and ſet daies for publick meetings, whether Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, all which were guided and directed (for the time) by the courſe of the Moon, to be intended. But the meaning may be more general, the ſame word here tranſlated ſeaſons, being alſo uſed Gen. 1. 14. and the reaſon why the moon is rather mentioned here for that uſe than the ſun, may be, becauſe moſt nations, in thoſe daies, uſed to reckon the year by the Moon (which were therefore called, anni lunares) rather than by the Sun.

the Sun knoweth his going down] מבואו which may comprehend his whole courſe from his riſing to his ſetting : as alſo his ſeveral circuits, diurnal with other ſpheres ; or annual, by his own proper motion. In all theſe he is ſo exact and regular, that men who cannot tell of themſelves, where they themſelves ſhall be the next day, (can make Ephemerides of the Suns courſe for thouſand of years (if the world laſt ſo long) and tell preciſely at what point of heaven, or degree of height he ſhall be every day : and what Ecclipes ſhall happen every year. To this purpoſe alſo is Jobs (the Book, I mean, ſo called) expreſſion ; Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy daies ; and cauſed the day ſpring to know his place ? Job 38. 12.

V. 20. Thou makeſt darkneſſe] By cauſing the Sun to ſet, ver. 19. Iſa. 45. 7.

All the beaſts of the Foreſt do creep forth] Heb. all the beaſts therof do trample on the foreſt.

V. 21. roar] Or, which roar, As verſe 26. 28.

and ſeek] Or, even to ſeek.

and ſeek their meat from God] God who hath given them a natural voice to cry for food, anſwers it, and provides for them, Job 38. 39, 41. Joel 1. 20.

V. 22. The] Or, when the.

V. 23. Man goeth forth to his work] To wit, when the day ſpringeth : for the light is as it were a ſhield to defend man, againſt the tyranny and fierceneſſe of wild beaſts.

V. 24. how manifold are thy works] He confeſſeth that no tongue is able to expreſſe Gods works, no mind to comprehend them, Pſal. 8. 1.

V. 26. that Leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein] Whether any particular kinde, as the whale (of which there be many differences) be intended by that word ; or whether it be a common name for all great fiſhes, of which ſome ſeas afford great variety, is not eaſie to determine. In Job 41. we have a large deſcription of Leviathan ; by which one particular kinde ſeems to be intended, intitled verſe 31. King over all the children of Pride : (or as the Hebrew, בני שחץ doth import, over all beaſts . but according to the uſe of the word in the Arabick tongue, here obſerved by ſome, over all water beaſts) but what that one kind is, to which that deſcription doth agree, is not ſo eaſily found. Some think the fiſh of the Indian ſeas, called Muſar ; others, ſome kind of ſea-Crocodile, which they ſay are ſo called in ſome parts of the world to be deſcribed. Certain it is, that the greateſt of Sea-fiſhes, both here, and in Job, however called or to be called in Engliſh, are intended : among which there be of that immenſe bigneſs, as to relate particulars, though from men of credit, who profeſſe, ſome of them, to have been eye-witneſſes, would ſound more like a fable among ordinary men, than a truth. Metaphorically, great tyrants, ſuch as Pharaoh king of Egypt, Pſal. 74. 14. and others, Iſa. 27. 1. are ſo called.

made] Heb. formed.

V. 27. Theſe wait all upon thee] Pſa. 145. 15. God is a moſt nouriſhing father, who provideth for all creatures their daily food : and they muſt tarry till he will give it, verſe 28.

V. 28. thou] Or, when thou. So verſe 29. 30.

V. 29. Thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled] As by thy preſence all things have life : ſo if thou withdraw thy bleſſings they all periſh.

return to their duſt] Pſalm 146. 4. Gen. 3. 19. Eccleſ. 12. 7. Job 34. 14, 15.

V. 30. Thou ſendeth forth] As the death of creatures ſheweth, that they are nothing of themſelves : ſo their generation declareth that we receive all things of our Creator.

thy ſpirit] Thy quickning power, or the breath which thou giveſt them.

thou reneweſt the face of the earth] By producing new creatures continually, Pſal. 33. 6. Eccleſ. 1. 4. or, underſtand it of the creatures renewed in the ſpring of the year.

V. 31. ſhall endure] Heb. ſhall be.

V. 32. He looketh on the earth. and it trembleth] Who if he look, &c. it trembleth.

and they ſmoke] Exod. 19. 18. Pſalm 144. 5. Gods ſevere countenance maketh the earth to tremble, and burneth the mountains.

V. 33. as long as I live] Pſa. 63. 4. & 146. 2.

V. 35. Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the earth] Who infect the world, and hinder Gods joy in his creatures, as much as in them lies, by abuſing them.

PSAL. CV.

Verſe 1. O Give thanks, &c.] Theſe firſt 15. verſes we have alſo, 1 Chr. 16. of which ſee more upon Pſal 96 O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, &c.

make known his deeds among the people] Foraſmuch as the Iſraelites were taken out of the world to be Gods people, the Prophet willeth them to ſhew others what God had done for them.

V. 2. Sing unto him] He would have them to praiſe God, with voice, inſtruments, and heart.

V. 4. and his ſtrength] By Gods ſtrength and face, he meaneth the ark, where God declareth his power, and preſence, Pſal. 63. 2. & 78. 61. See before upon Pſal 27, 8, When thou ſaidſt, ſeek ye my face, &c.

V. 5. Remember his marvellous works] Which he hath wrought in the deliverance of his people.

the judgements of his mouth] That is, his ordinances, and laws, Mal. 4. 4. or, his judgements which he threatned to bring on the Egyptians, Gen. 15. 14. Exod. 3. 20.

V. 6. his choſen] Heb. his choſen ones.

V. 7. his judgements are in all the earth] Iſaiah 26. 9 His judgements on the Egyptians are ſpoken of all the world over ; Exodus 9. 16.

V. 8. He hath remembred his covenant for ever] 1 Chron. 16. 15. Be ye mindful alwaies of his covenant : God may remember, and often doth, when man hath forgotten : but never forgets when man remembers.

which he commanded] His promiſe, which he will have as firm as his command Pſalm 133. 3. & 42. 8. & 44. 4.

V. 9. Which covenant he made with Abraham] Gen. 17. 2. & 22. 16, &c. & 26. 3. & 28. 13. & 35. 11. Luke 1. 73. Heb. 6. 13. The promiſe which God made to Abraham, to be his God, and the God of his ſeed after him. he renewed it, and repeated it again to Iſaac and Jacob.

V. 11. unto thee will I give the land of Canaan] Geneſis 13. 15. & 15. 18. He ſheweth, that they ſhould not enjoy the land of Canaan by any other means, but by reaſon of Gods covenant made with their fathers.

the lot] Heb. the cord, Deut. 32. 9.

the lot of your inheritance] Heb. line, or, cord : For ſo were inheritances divided by line, Pſalm 16. 6.

V. 12. a few men in number] Geneſis 34. 30. Deuteronomy 7. 7.

ſtrangers in it] Hebrews 11, 9.

V. 14. He ſuffered no man to do them wrong] He kept them from wronging the Patriarchs, that had power to do it, Geneſis 35. 5.

he reproved kings for their ſakes] That is, the kings of Egypt, and Gerar, Geneſis 12. 17. & 20. 3.

V. 15. Touch not] Touch them not, ſo as to hurt them.

mine anointed] Thoſe whom I have ſanctified to be my people.

do my prophets no harm] Meaning the old fathers, to whom God ſhewed himſelf plainly, and who were ſetters forth of his word, Geneſis 20. 7.

V. 16. he called for a famine] That is, effectually brought it, 2 Kings 8. 1.

he brake the whole ſtaff of bread] Lev. 26. 26. Ezek 4. 16. Iſa. 3. 1. By ſending ſcarcity, as in the beginning of the verſe.

V. 17. he ſent a man before them] Gen. 45. 5.

even Joſeph who was ſold for a ſervant] Gen. 37. 28.

V. 18. Whoſe feet they hurt with fetters] Gen. 39. 20.

he was laid in iron] Heb. his ſoul came into iron.

V. 19. Until the time that his word came] The word of God to Pharoah in a dream, which is ſaid to try Joſeph, becauſe none elſe could interpret it : and then was Joſeph delivered : or Gods decree and promiſe made to Joſeph in a dream, Gen. 37. 6.

tried him] Or, which tried him.

V. 20. The King ſent and looſed him] Gen. 41. 14.

even the Ruler of the people] Heb. of the peoples. A mighty king that had a multitude of ſubjects

V. 21. He made him lord of his houſe, and ruler of all his ſubſtance] Gen 41. 40.

ſubſtance] Heb poſſeſſion.

V. 22. To bind his princes at his pleaſure] To govern them, and keep them in aw, Pſal 149. 8. Gen. 14. 4.

V. 23. Iſrael alſo came into Egypt] Gen. 46. 6.

V. 25. He turned their heart to hate his people] I ſhall, for this once ſeek no further, but content my ſelf with Diodati, the Geneva Miniſter (a man both for his piety and learning of great fame and reputation) his words and annotation upon this place, as I find it in the laſt Engliſh tranſlation, of the year 1648. His words are theſe; He ſuffered envy, falſe fears, and other evil affections to induce the Egyptians to hate the people as much, as before they had loved and favoured them. Now the evil work is attributed to God, not becauſe he is author of it, which were as abominable to think, as it is impoſſible to be; but becauſe he not reſtraining the malice of man, and ſuffering the Devil to tempt him with ſtrong objects, occaſions, and provocations, it muſt needs produce its proper effects, the event whereof God voluntarily ſuffered for ſome good end, though he reprove and condemn the wickedneſſe and perverſneſſe of it.

V. 26. He ſent Moſes his ſervant, and Aaron whom he had choſen] Exod. 3. 10.

V. 27. They ſhewed his ſigns among them and wonders in the land of Ham] Exod. 7. 9. Pſal. 78. 44. &c.

his ſigns] Heb. words of his ſigns.

V. 28. He ſent darkneſs, and made it dark] Exod. 10. 22. Here he begins to commemorate the plagues of Egypt: but neither doth he commemorate all (for of ten, two are omitted) nor in that order that Moſes ſet them down; to wit, as every one hapned, conſequtively. For here he begins at the ninth. Of this, or the very like, ſee before upon Pſalm 78. 49. He caſt upon them the fierceneſs of his anger, &c.

and they rebelled not againſt his word] That is, his word was fulfilled, as Pſa. 49. 14 They put them in the grave: that is, they were put in the grave: or, his ſigns rebelled not: or, Moſes and Aaron rebelled not; that is, they did Gods meſſage, though with the peril of their lives.

V. 29. He turned their waters into blood, and ſlew their fiſh] Exod. 7. 20.

V. 30. Their Land brought forth Frogs in abundance] Exod. 8. 6.

in the chambers of their Kings] Of the king and his princes, Iſa. 19. 2. Exod. 8. 3.

V. 31. He ſpake, and there came divers ſorts of flies, and lice in all their coaſts] Exod. 8. 17, 24.

He ſpake, and there came divers ſorts of flies] So that this vermine came not by chance, but as God had appointed, and his Prophet Moſes foretold.

V. 32. He gave them hail for rain] Exod. 9. 23. It was ſtrange to ſee rain in Egypt, much more, it wat fearful to ſee hail, and moſt of all hail mingled with fire.

He gave them hail for rain] Heb. He gave their rain hail.

flaming fire] Heb. fire of flames: that is, full of flames.

V. 34. He ſpake, and the Locuſts came] Exodus 10. 4. He ſheweth that all creatures are armed againſt man, when God is his enemy; as at his commandment the Graſhoppers deſtroyed the Land.

V. 36. He ſmote alſo all the firſt-born in their Land] Exodus 12. 29.

chief of all their ſtrength] Gen. 49. 3. Pſalm 78. 51.

V. 37. He brought them forth alſo with ſilver and Gold] Exod 12. verſe 15.

there was not one feeble perſon among their tribes] none of them were ſick or weak.

V. 38. Egypt was glad when they departed] Ex 12. 33. for Gods plagues cauſed them rather to part with the Iſraelites, than with their lives.

V. 39. He ſpread a cloud for a covering] Exod 13. 21. It ſeems it was a large cloud, that could cover all the hoſt from the heat of Sun.

V. 40. The people asked, and he brought Quails] Exodus 16. 12. &c. Not for neceſſity, but for ſatisfying of their luſt, Pſalm 78. 18.

V. 41. He opened the Rock, and the waters guſhed out] Exo. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11. 1 Cor. 10. 4.

like a River] See notes on Pſalm 78. 16.

V. 43. with joy] When the Egyptians lamented, and were deſtroyed, Pſalm 106. 12.

gladneſs] Heb. ſinging.

V. 44 And gave them the lands of the heathen] Deut. 6. 10, 11. Joſh. 3. 17.

they inherited the labour of the people] the houſes which they built and vineyards which the heathen planted.

V. 45. That they might obſerve his ſtatutes] Gods benefits are given us, that we may ſerve him the more faithfully.

PSAL. CVI.

Ver. 2. PRiſe ye the Lord] Heb. Hallelujah. The Prophet exhorteth the people to praiſe God for his benefits paſt, that thereby their minds may be ſtrengthned againſt all preſent troubles and deſpair.

give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] Pſa, 107. 1. & 118. 1. & 136. 1.

V. 3. Bleſſed are they that keep judgement] He ſheweth that it is not enough to praiſe God with mouth, except heart and life be anſwerable to Gods word.

V. 4. Remember me, O Lord, with the favour that thou beareſt unto thy people] Gen. 8. 1. Pſal. 119. 132.

with the favour that thou beareſt unto thy people] Let the good-will thou haſte born to thy people heretofore, extend it ſelf unto me.

V. 6. We have ſinned with our Fathers] Daniel 9. verſe 5. By earneſt confeſſion as well of their own as of their Fathers ſins, they ſhew, that though were utterly unworthy of Gods mercies, yet they had hope, that God, according to his promiſe, would pitty them.

V. 7. But provoked him at the Sea, even at the Red-ſea] Exod. 14. 11, 12.

even at the Red-ſea] Or, and in the Red-ſea; that is, not onely before, but when they were entred into the Sea: For the Egyptians followed them ſtill.

V. 8. Nevertheleſſe, he ſaved them for his names ſake] Though they were wicked, yet GOD changed the order of nature to ſave them, for to perform his promiſe, and ſhew forth his glory.

V. 9. led them thorow the depths, as thorow the wilderneſſe,] Between the two heaps of water that were deep, Exod. 15. 5.

V. 10. Of him that hated them] Of Pharaoh.

V. 11. And the waters covered their enemies] Exodus 14. 27. & 15. 5.

V. 12. then believed they his words] Exod. 14. 31. & 15. 1. Pſal. 105. 43. The wonderful works of God cauſed them to believe him for a time, and to praiſe him.

V. 13. They ſoon forgat] Heb. they made haſte, they forgat.

they ſoon forgat his works] Exod. 15. 24. & 17. 2.

they waited not for his counſel] They would prevent his wiſdome and providence.

V. 14. But luſted exceedingly in the wilderneſſe] Numb. 11. 4. 1 Cor. 10. 6.

luſted exceedingly] Heb. luſted a luſt.

V. 15. And he gave them their requeſt] Num. 11. 31.

but ſent leanneſſe into their ſoul] The abundance that God gave them profited them not, but made them pine away, becauſe God curſed it, Hag, 1. 6. So ſome Expoſitors. But others with more probability, underſtand it of the plague, that immediately followed; as is more fully expreſſed. Pſal. 78. 30, 31. but while the meat was yet in their mouth, &c. It is very likely that the Pſalmiſt intended the ſame thing in both places, though the expreſſions be ſomewhat different. Leanneſſe often times is a conſequent (in nature) of gluttony. Now becauſe this plague was a conſequent, but in another reſpect, of their gluttony, it is therefore wittily and figuratively termed, leanneſſe. Another reaſon is given by ſome learned Interpreters, why the Prophet rather uſeth the word רזון leanneſſe; then מכה plague, (Moſes his word, Num. 11. 33.) becauſe, as they conceive, he would thereby allude to רצון, good will, or pleaſure, as if he intimated that by the רצון (or raſon,) that is, pleaſure, or ſatisfaction of their mind, they purchaſed to themſelves רזון (raſon) even a deadly leanneſſe, that conſumed many of them: a fit recompence for their extravagant luſt. Many ſuch tacite alluſions there be in the Scriptures, the obſervation whereof doth much conduce to the underſtanding of the matter it ſelf.

V. 16. They envyed Moſes alſo in the camp] Num. 16. 1, &c.

Aaron the ſaint of the Lord] Whom God ſet apart, as holy, for the Prieſthood.

V 17. The earth opened. and ſwallowed up Dathan, &c.] Numb. 16. 31. Deut. 11. 6.

and ſwallowed up Dathan] By the greatneſs of the puniſhment the hainouſneſs of the offence may be concluded: for they that riſe againſt Gods miniſters, rebel againſt him.

and covered the company of Abiram] He means Korah, and his aſſociates that were joined with them in rebellion.

V. 18. And a fire was kindled in their company] Numbers 16. 35, 49.

V. 19. They made a calf in Horeb] Exod. 32. 4.

V. 20. Thus they changed their glory into the ſimilitude of an ox that eateth graſſe] Jerem. 2. ver. 11. Rom. 1. ver. 23. He ſheweth that all Idolaters renounce God to be their glory, when inſtead of him, they worſhip any creature, much more wood, ſtone, metal, or calves, Rom. 1. 23, 25. or other baſe things, Ezek. 8. ver. 10.

V. 23. Therefore he ſaid that he would deſtroy them] Exodus 32. 10.

had not Moſes his choſen ſtood] If Moſes, by his interceſſion had not prevailed with God to pardon their rebellions.

in the breach] Verſe 29. A ſimilitude from a breach in the wall of a City, wherein one ſtands, to keep out the enemies by force. It ſhewes the great force of prayer to divert Gods judgements, Ezek. 13. 5. and 22. 30. whence the plague is ſaid to break in, verſe 29.

V. 24. the pleaſant land] Heb. a land of deſire. That is, Canaan, which was, as it were, an earneſt-penny of the heavenly inheritance.

the

they believed not his word] Heb. 3. 19. That he would bring them into Canaan.

V.25. But murmured in their tents] Num. 14. 2.

V.26. he lifted up his hand againſt them] Gen. 14. 22. That is, he ſware, Ezek.20.15,23.Pſal.95.11. Sometimes alſo it ſignifieth to puniſh.

to overthrow them in the wilderneſſe] Num. 14. 28.

V.27. To overthrow] Heb. to make them fall.

V.28. They joined themſelves alſo unto Baal-Peor] Num. 25. 3. Which was the Idol of the Moabites.

and ate the ſacrifices of the dead] Sacrifices offered to the dead Idols, Pſal 115. 5. which neither have, nor ever had any reality of being. This Interpretation paſſeth for currant among Expoſitors ſcarce any, that I know of excepted. Yet is it not ſatisfactory to all men. For ſome (no profeſſed Expoſitors, but occaſionally treating of theſe words in learning not inferiour to any, make this to be the ſenſe; They did eat, or partake of thoſe funeral banquets, which among divers Idolatrous Nations (as the Grecians and Romans) were uſed by way of Solemn Parentation (whether in honour, or for any other reſpect) to the dead. And theſe they make to have been the proper ſacrifices belonging to the worſhip of that particular Idol. Baal-phegor perchance might be the man himſelf, or the name of a man, once Prince or King among the Moabites, whoſe memory might among other idolatrous rites, be worſhipped in and by theſe Solemn Feaſts. This Interpretation may the better be thought of, if it be conſidered, firſt that Idols are not any where elſe in the Scripture ſo called, as by the common Interpretation of the word dead, this ſhould be here; and ſecondly, that this belonging to all idols in general, to be dead in this ſenſe, it is not ſo likey,, comparing the words with the hiſtory in Moſes, and the words there, this ſhould be the meaning here, but rather ſomewhat that was more particular unto that particular idol. But the aggravation in the words of the Pſalmiſt, which makes his expreſſion much more emphatical, is alſo very conſiderable. For there was not, according to the Law, in Lev.11. and Num 19. any pollution or abomination (ritual and external) greater than that wdich was contracted (whether by any contaction, or cohabitation) from the dead. So that without reſpect to the Idolatry of it, to eat of the ſacrifices of the dead, muſt needs ſound among the Jews, as a matter of great horrour and deteſtation. This aggravation will not hold according to that common interpretation, if the dead be taken here figuratively, for them that have no real being. It is alſo very poſſible, that the Pſalmiſt might allude to the very name of Baal Peor. or peger in Hebrew doth ſignifie a dead corpſe. I know Peor, is written with a ע not a ג in the Original. But the affinity may appear, in that many words written in the Hebrew with a Ain, are expreſſed in Greek with a Gamma, as Gomorra, Gaza, &c. and in alluſions we muſt not look for identity, but affinity. Many ſuch there be in the Scripture (as all men grant) in proper names eſpecially, both in pronunciation and writing more remote than this. I ſhall not now make inquiſition into the right meaning of thoſe words, either Tobie 4.17. Pour out thy bread on the burial of the juſt, but give nothing to the wicked: Or Eccleſ. 30: 18. Delicates poured upon a mouth ſhut up, as meſſes of meat ſet upon a grave; becauſe they are but Apocrypha: Yet I mention them, becauſe the conſideration of their words may prove ſome confirmation to that Interpretation we here embrace, inventions] Heb. practiſes.

V.29. Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions] Signifying, that whatſoever man inventeth of himſelf to ſerve God by, is deteſtable, and provoketh his angor.

and] Or, ſo that. So v. 32. 33.

break in upon them] verſe 23.

V. 30. Then ſtood up Phinehas,&c.] Num. 25.7 When all others neglected Gods glory, he in his zeal killed the adulterers, and ſo prevented Gods wrath.

V.31. for righteouſneſs] God counted it a righteous act, though men might think it a fruit of raſh zeal.

V. 32. They angred him alſo at the waters of ſtrife] Num. 20. 13.

ſo that it went ill with Moſes for their ſakes] Numb. 20. 12. Deut. 3. 26. If ſo notable a Prophet of God eſcaped not puniſhment, though others provoked him to ſin; how much more ſhall they be ſubject to Gods judgement, which cauſe Gods children to ſin?

V 33. So that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips] Hebrew ויבטא here tranſlated, he ſpake unadviſedly; is by others barely expreſt, & protulit; or, & locutus eſt, that is, and he ſpake, or uttered, &c. So indeed the word may ſometimes be uſed, to import bare ſpeaking: but properly it ſignifies to ſpeak, or utter any thing raſhly or idlely. Hence is the word βαττολογέω, and βαττολογία: in Engliſh, battologie, or, vain repetitions, as the word is tranſlated Mat 6.7. forbidden there by our Savior, in praying, as heatheniſh: though ſtill affected by ſome Chiſtians, as a great gift. A profitable gift indeed it is to ſome that make a trade of it, Matth. 23.14. Wo unto you Scribes, &c. But to the Pſalmiſt: The words here laid to Moſes his charge, are conceived to be thoſe, Num.20. 10. Hear now ye rebels, muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? That Moſes indeed did, or ſaid ſomewhat there, that diſpleaſed God, appears clearly by verſe 12. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes; &c. But that thoſe were the words that offended, is but a conjecture, of which, though grounded upon ſome probability, there is no certainty. Some therefore to avoid this doubt, refer the words here to God himſelf, tranſlating, So that he ſpake it, or pronounced it, (to wit, their puniſhment, for their infidelity, Num.20.12.) with his lips. As for the word before המרו, they provoked: we know it is an ordinary word, when God is intended, or plainly ſpoken of; as for example verſe 43. following, Many times—but they provoked him (ימרו) with their counſels, &c. and it makes the matter more probable, becauſe upon this very occaſion the word (whether מרה or מרר: for they are commonly confounded, and ſome make but one of them:) Num 20. 24. is ſpoken of God, as the ſubject. or object: על אשר מריתם, becauſe ye rebelled; as our Engliſh there: but the Septuagint, διότι παραξύνατέ με; that is, becauſe ye provoked me. I do not find fault with the Engliſh there: but I ſay, it is the ſame word; which ſignifies to rebel, and to provoke: which, having there plainly God for its object, it is the more likely, that the ſame may here alſo be intended. So by Spirit, the Spirit of God may be underſtood, as Epheſ. 4. 30. And grieve not the holy Spirit of God, &c. But for all this, I leave it free to the Reader, to pleaſe himſelf. There is more authority for the one; but, as I conceive, not leſs probability for the other.

V.34. concerning whom the Lord commanded them] Deut. 7.2.

V.35. But were mingled among the heathen] Jud.1.21. By mariage, and ſo they were drawn to Idolatry.

V.36. and they ſerved their idols] They have their name in Hebrew from ſorrow, becauſe they bring much grief to their worſhippers, pſalm 16. 4.

which were a ſnare unto them] Exod. 23. 33. To bring them to deſtruction, as ſnares do birds.

V.37. they ſacrificed their ſons and their daughters unto devils] He ſheweth the great force of Idolatry, which can win us to things abhorring to nature, when Gods Word cannot obtain the ſmalleſt things of us.

devils] 1 Cor. 10. 20.

V.38. idols of Canaan] 2 Kings 16 3.

V.39. and went a whoring with their own inventions] Then true chaſtity is, to cleave wholly and onely unto God, Num.15.29.Lev. 17. 7.

inventions] Or, practiſes.

V.41. And] Or, ſo that, as verſe 29.

V.43. Many times did he deliver them] Judg 2. 16. The prophet ſheweth, that neither by menaces nor promiſes we can come to God, except we be altogether newly reformed, and that his mercy hide our wickedneſſe.

brought low] Or, impoveriſhed, or weakned.

V.45. he remembred for them his covenant] Deuter. 30. 3. Two things made God relieve them, his covenant, ond his mercy.

and repented according to the multitude of his mercies] Not that God is changeable in himſelf, but that then he ſeemeth to us to repent, when he taketh away his puniſhment, and forgiveth us.

V.46. He made them alſo to be pityed of all thoſe that carried them captives] Heb. and he gave them for pities: that is, he made them finde abundance of pitty, Jer. 15. 11.

V.47. gather us from among the heathen] Bring us from among the heathen to Jeruſalem, to praiſe thee.

PSAL. CVII.

The drift and purpoſe of this Pſalm is, to aſſert the providence of God towards men, againſt all, either abſolute atheiſts, who deny the being of God; or Epicures, who deny, that God takes any care at all of men, to do them either hurt or good. Now the Divine providence being two waies, eſpecially, conſiderable; either in that order (both for the conſtancy, and beautifulneſſe of it, equally admirable) which he hath ſet to nature, in things meerly natural, which we may call his Creating providence, or in thoſe things, which in the nature of chances and accidents, becauſe both various and uncertain (whether to many together, or to every particular man) happen in the world; which we may call his executive, or adminiſtrative providence: as the firſt kinde was ſet out before, in a pſalm by it ſelf, to wit, the 104 pſalm; which for the loftineſs, and other ornaments of it, hath ever been accounted an exquiſite piece: ſo is the ſecond, with much elegancy and ſublimity, in this preſent Pſalm. Yet all particulars of Gods providence in that kinde, are not here handled, but ſome only, wherein it is moſt eminent, as in ſaving men in adverſity, and ſuccouring them in their manifold neceſſities and extremities, to which this mortal life is expoſed: there being no title among men more glorious, or which commends Religion unto men more, than of a Saviour and Deliver. That all people and nations of the word in general, not any one particular Nation, are intended by the Pſalmiſt, as the object of that goodneſſe of God which he doth here celebrate and ſet out, if the tenour of the words and context it ſelf doth not ſufficiently (which I think it ſhould) evince; I muſt appeal to the authority of beſt Expoſitors: I do not know any, not of any note at leaſt, that makes any queſtion of it. If any would reſtrain theſe things to the JewiſhNation, they muſt do violence to many particular expreſſions; but much more wrong to the general ſcope of the Pſalm. And it may very well be, that the Pſalmiſt might have another aim too, beſides what hath been ſhewed hitherto, againſt Atheiſts and Epicures. It is the opinion of the Jews at this day, as by ſome of their gloſſes upon Deut. 4. 19. may appear that the providence of God, is their peculiar; and that God hath left all other Nations beſides themſelves, to the government of the Stars, and inferiour powers, or Angels. It is not improbable, that ſome ſuch opinion might be in thoſe antient times too, among ſome of them. Snch an infatuation there is among many Chriſtians too, who upon a fond perſwaſion, that themſelves are the only children of God, look upon other men, as things that God had nothing to do with: not as creatures, at leaſt, within compaſs of his either love or care: which they wholly, (and, upon that ground, would all worldly goods alſo, their chiefeſt aim:) ingroſſe to themſelves. This Pſalm is an ample confutation of both; whereby Gods goodneſſe and mercy to all, in all places of the world, whether Jews or Gentiles, when they call upon him with heart and affection in their perils and neceſſities, is vindicated and aſſerted. See alſo upon Pſalm 71. 5. thou art my truſt, and Pſalm 117. 1. O praiſe the Lord all ye nations. Some objections againſt the doctrine of this Pſalm we ſhall meet with, upon ſome of the following verſes.

Verſ 1. O Give thanks unto the Lord] Pſal. 106. 1 & 118. 1. & 136, 1. This notable ſentence was in the beginning among the Jews, as ſome are of opinion, uſed as the verſus intercatalaris (the foot, or tenor of the ſong) of many ſacred hymns being the part of the oppoſite Quire, at certain pauſes and intervals, whileſt they were ſinging.

V. 2. Let the redeemed of the Lord ſay ſo] That is, whom Gods providence hath delivered from the preſent death, not any chance or fortune.

redeemed] Or reſcued.

V. 3. from the ſouth] Heb. from the Sea. That is from the red Sea, which ſtood ſouthward from the land of Canaan: elſewhere from the Sea, is from the weſt, becauſe the Mediterranean Sea ſtood Weſtward.

V. 4. They] Or, Who.

they] Or, and.

V. 5. Hungry and thirſty] He ſheweth that there is no affliction ſo grievous, out of the which God cannot deliver: and alſo exhorteth them that are delivered, to be mindful of ſo great a benefit.

thirſty] Judg. 15. 18.

V. 6 Then they cryed unto the Lord] Even they, who, when at eaſe, and out of danger, little think of God, and make a mock of religion, yet even theſe oftentimes, when in miſery, by a certain inſtinct of nature, they become religious, and earneſtly call upon God: whereby it appears that there is ſome natural ſenſe of Religion in the greateſt Infidels, and enemies of Religion. So learned and judicious Calvin here, who hath much more to that purpoſe. But there may be an objection. For if, as we have ſaid, this extend to all people and nations promiſcuouſly; that is, to mankind in general, How ſhall they call on him, may ſome body ſay, in whom they have not believed? or how ſhall they believe in him, of whom they have not heard? &c. (in the Apoſtles words, Rom. 10. 14) I anſwer, that this is not to be underſtood of formal praying, according to the preſcript of Gods-Word in all circumſtances; but of ſuch, as nature in ſuch extremities doth ſuggeſt; and ſuch as God out of his tender mercy and compaſſion towards his poor creatures, is ſometimes pleaſed to accept of in ſuch caſes. And what wonder is it, if the Ravens in their need, are ſaid to have their cries, which God is ſaid to hear, (Pſal. 147. 9. Job 38. 41.) that men, though not otherwiſe inſtructed, or prepared, ſhould finde cries at ſuch times, which ſhould move God, their maker, to compaſſion? Well, but it is not the true God that they cry unto, (ſuch as know him not, I mean) but ſome falſe god, or Idol, as either Jupiter, or Mercury, or Neptune, or Caſtor and Pollux; (the once proper gods of Mariners, among the ancient Heathens,) or the like: and how ſhould the true God hear them? I anſwer; theſe be acts of extraordinary mercy. If we allow Princes a power to diſpence with the ſtrictneſſe of Laws to ſave a life; with much more reaſon may we allow it unto God. They cryed unto the Lord, (or, they cry unto the Lord; for in theſe preterits, a continual act is included; as Interpreters note;) ſaith the Pſalmiſt: though they miſcall him, yet unto the Lord; becauſe under the notion of a true God. Their piety is ſincere, though it be erroneus. So once St. Paul told the Idolatrous Athenians, it was the true God, whom he preached, that they worſhipped, though UNKNOWN, and ignorantly. He was willing to make the beſt, at that time, ſpeaking to themſelves about their devotions, the eaſier to win them: he could have told them as truly, but upon another conſideration, that what they worſhipped, were Devils, and not God; as he doth elſewhere, 1 Cor. 10. 20. but of purpoſe there, aggravating the matter, to deter others. There was ſome ground for both, as well for the former, as for their latter judgement. According to the firſt, it is, that the Pſalmiſt ſaith here, of all men in general, that they cry unto the Lord (אל יהוה) in their diſtreſs.

and he delivered (or, delivereth) them out of their diſtreſſes:] That is as many as are delivered, it is by God, that they are delivered. He is the author of all ſalvation; both temporall and eternal, unto all men. Why all are not delivered, that call upon him at ſuch a time, is not for us to give a reaſon. Sure we are, if all were, at all times, it would much alter the whole frame and conſtitution of the world; and by degrees we may come to ask, why God hath not made all men immortal. For none would dye, if alwaies heard when they cry. It is the ſame reaſon of the ſick, as of others, verſe 17, 18. &c. I think it ſafer to ſay ſo, than to reſolve the queſtion, as ſome do, That they are the wicked only, that ſo periſh; whom God will have examples of his judgements, and juſt ſeverity; as the others, whom he ſaveth, though wicked too, of his mery: I dare not think that all that miſcarry either by land, or by water, are impious. I rather believe, that many both juſt and pious, undergo ſometimes, in the ſame ſhip, or otherwiſe, the ſame fortune with them that are not, There be ſecrets of providence; which though we underſtand not, yet we muſt not deny. Chriſt would not have us to judge them, uppn whom the Tower of Siloe fell; or them whoſe blood Pilate mingled with ſacrifices, greater ſinners than other men, Luke 13. 1, 2, &c. God forbid we ſhould condemn any for any temporal calamity. One reaſon why ſometimes ſome good and godly miſcarry as well as others, may be, that they that are ſo, ſhould not be too bold and ſecure; which might prove very prejudicial to them in other reſpects; and that when they are delivered, they may be the more heartily thankful, which is for their good, ann Gods glory. See alſo upon Pſal 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid. &c.

V. 7. of habitation] Or, inhabited.

V. 8. Oh that men would praiſe] Or, Let them praiſe, as verſe 22.

V. 9. For] Or, Becauſe.

V. 10. affliction and iron] Job 36. 8.

V. 11. Becauſe they rebelled againſt the words of God] No affliction happens unto any, but for their ſins, and very juſtly, at the hands of God: though comparatively, in regard of other greater ſinners, many may be ſaid to ſuffer innocently.

V. 12. Therefore he brought down their heart] Or, whoſe heart he had brought down.

they fell down, and there was none] Or, who fell ſo down, that there was none.

V. 13. Then] Or, When.

Then they cryed unto the Lord] He ſheweth, that one cauſe why God doth puniſh us extremely is, becauſe we will be brought unto him by no other means, ver. 6. Hoſ 5. 15.

and] Or, then]

V. 15. Oh that men would praiſe] Or, let them praiſe.

V. 16 For] Or, becauſe.

he hath broken the gates of braſs] when there ſeems to mans judgment no recovery, but all things are brought to deſpair, then God chiefly ſhews his mighty power; as in opening priſon-doors, and ſhaking off fetters, Acts 12 6, 7.

V. 17. Fools, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion] They that have no fear of God, by ſharp rods are brought to call upon him, and to find mercy, Prov. 26. 3. Lam. 1. 8.

becauſe] Or, who becauſe.

and becauſe of their iniquities] Heb. becauſe of the way of their tranſgreſſion: that is from their ſinful courſe of life.

are afflicted] Heb. do afflict themſelves: that is, do bring afflictions upon themſelves by their ſins.

V. 18. Their ſoul] Or, Whoſe ſoul.

their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat] Job 33. 20.

and they] Or, ſo that they, as Pſal. 106. 32.

V. 19. Then] Or, As when.

ſaveth] Or, ſaved.

V. 20. He ſent his word and healed them] Moſt of theſe expreſſions are taken out of Job 33. 20, 21, 22. &c. and elſewhere. His word, here may have reference to thoſe there, verſe 23. If there be a meſſenger with him, &c. and chap. 36. 9. 10, 11. Then he ſheweth them their work, &c. Or, he ſent his word, that is, his command. God need but ſpeak the word, whether for health, or ſickneſſe, and the thing is done. So the Centurion in the Goſpel to Chriſt, Speak but the word onely, and my ſervant ſhall be healed Matth. 8. 8.

from their deſtructions] Meaning, their diſeaſes, which had wellnigh deſtroyed them.

deſtructions] Or, pits; that is, graves, Ezek. 19. 4, 8. Pſalm 103. 4.

V. 21. Oh that men would praiſe] Or, Let them praiſe.

V. 22. The ſacrifices of thankſgiving] Praiſe and confeſſion of Gods benefits, are the true Sacrifices of the Godly, Pſalm 50. 14. 23. and 116. Hebrews 13. 15.

tejoycing] Heb. ſinging.

V. 23. They goe dowe to the Sea in ſhips] He ſheweth, by Gods dealings with Sea men, what care God hath over men: for in that, that he delivereth them from the great dangers of the Sea, he delivereth them, as it were, from a thouſand deaths.

that go down] Either from the mid-land, higher hilly countrey, (as that of Judea was) to the Sea ſide, where the land is lower: or, from the ſhore (raiſed by many works, in many places) down to the Sea; there lower; though generally, higher than the land.

V. 24. ſee] Or, who ſee,

V. For] Or, How.

raiſeth] Heb. maketh to ſtand.

which lifteth] Or, ſo that it lifteth.

V. 26. They] Or, And they.

they goe down again to the depths] That is, very deep.

their ſoul is melted becauſe of trouble] Their fear and danger is ſo great. Some take it for vomitting, Pſalm 22. 14. & 119. 28. Nah. 2. 10.

V. 27. are at their wits end] Heb. all their wiſdome is ſwallowed up. When their art and means faile them, they are compelled to confeſſe, that only Gods providence doth preſerve them.

V. 28. Then] Or, When.

and] Or, then,

V. 29. He] Or, And.

maketh] Heb. ſetleth.

V. 30. Then] Or, And.

becauſe they be quiet] Though before every drop ſeemed to fight one againſt another, yet at his commandment they are as ſtill, as though they were frozen, Matth. 8. 26.

ſo he bringeth them] Or, and he hath brought them.

V. 31. Oh that men would praiſe] Or, Let them praiſe.

V. 32. Let them exalt him alſo in the Congregation of the people] God ought to be praiſed and magniſied in his Church, not onely for ſpeciall mercies proper to ſome people and Nations; but alſo for his general goodneſſe and mercy towards all mankind, wherein no ſmall portion of his glory, among men, doth conſiſt.

V. 33. He turneth rivers into a wilderneſſe] Jer. 9. 12, 13. Who is the wiſe man, that may underſtand this, &c. and 12. 4. How long ſhall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedneſſe of them that dwell therein?

water-ſprings] Heb. goings out of the waters.

V. 34. barrenneſſe] Heb. ſaltneſſe.

V. 35. He turneth the wilderneſſe into a ſtanding water] Eſay 41. 18. Pſalm. 114. 8,

V. 36. that they may prepare] Or, ſo that they prepare.

V. 37. which may yeild] Or, which yeeld.

which may yeild fruits of increaſe] Continual increaſe, and yearly.

V. 38. multiplyed greatly] Exod. 1. 7.

and ſuffereth not their cattel to decreaſe] But maketh them to increaſe greatly.

V. 39. Again they are miniſhed] As God by his providence doth exalt men, ſo doth he alſo humble them by afflictions, to make them know themſelves.

V. 40, He poureth contempt upon Princes] Job 12. 21. For their wickedneſſe and tyranny, he cauſeth their people and ſubjects to contemn them.

wilderneſſe] Or, void place.

V. 41. Yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction] 1 Sam. 2. 8. Pſalm. 113. 7, 8.

from] Or, after.

and maketh him families like a flock] By giving him many children, which devide themſelves into ſeverall families.

V. 24. The righteous ſhall ſee it, and rejoyce] Job 22. 19. Good men ſhall rejoyce to ſee Gods judgements on the wicked, pſal. 58. 10, See upon Prov. 24. 17. Rejoyce not, &c.

all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth] Job 5. 16. That is, all wicked men.

V. 43. Whoſo is wiſe, and will obſerve theſe things] Jer. 9. 12. 13. Who is the wiſe man, that may underſtand this, and who is he, to whom the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken, that he may declare it, for what the land periſheth, &c. See before upon Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecret of the Lord, &c, and Pſal. 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not, &c. And Hoſ. 14. 9. Whoſo is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand, &c.

and will obſerve] Or, to obſerve.

PSAL. CVIII.

Title.

A ſong or pſalm] See notes on the Title of pſal. 48.

Verſe 1. O God] The five firſt verſes of this pſalm are the ſame with the end of the fifty and ſeventh pſalm: and the eight laſt are the ſame with the end of the 60. pſalm, See the Notes there.

my heart is fixed] This earneſt affection declareth, that he is both ſincere and ſerious in Gods ſervice.

V. 4. clouds, Or, skies,.

V. 6. That thy beloved may be delivered] Pſal. 60. 5.

PSAL. CIX.

Verſe 1. H*Old not thy peace*] Pſal. 83. 1.

O God of my praiſe] Who art the ſubject of my praiſe, and giveſt me cauſe daily to praiſe thee for the benefits and deliverances.

V. 2. mouth of the deceitfull] Heb. mouth of deceit.

are opened] Heb. have opened themſelves.

V. 3 fought againſt me without a cauſe] Pſal. 35. 7.

V. 4. but I give my ſelf unto prayer] To declare that I had none other refuge but thee.

V. 5 rewarded me evill for good] Pſal. 35. 12.

V. 6. Set thou a wicked man over him] He meaneth either Doeg, or Saul, or ſome other familiar friend that did betray him. As concerning thoſe imprecations that follow, ſee upon Pſalm 35. 4 Let them be confounded and put to ſhame.

ſatan] Or, an adverſary.

V 7. be condemned] Heb. go out guilty, or, wicked, let his prayer become ſin] Let no ſuit of his prevail for him, but rather hurt him.

V. 8. let another take his office] Acts 1. 20.

office] Or, charge.

V. 9. fatherleſſe] Exod. 22. 24.

V. 10. let them ſeek their bread alſo out of their deſolate places] Out of their houſes deſtroyed.

V. 11. Let the extortioner catch all that he hath] Let the extortioner, with cunning tricks, wipe him of all that he hath gotten with much labour.

catch all that he hath] Job 18. 9.

V. 13 Let his poſterity be cut off] Job 18. 19.

V. 14. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembred with the Lord] Thus puniſhed the Lord, to the third and fourth generation, the wickedneſſe of the parent, to their wicked children, Exod. 20. 5.

V. 16. Becauſe that he remembred not to ſhew mercy] He ſheweth, that God accuſtometh to plague them after a ſtrange ſort, that ſhew themſelves cruel towards others.

V. 17. As he loved curſing, ſo let it come unto him] Thus God puniſheth ſin in kind: thoſe that curſe others, ſhall be curſed of God.

V. 18. into his bowels] Heb. within him.

V. 20. From the Lord] For being deſtitute of mans help, he fully truſted in the Lord, hoping that he would deliver him.

V. 21. for thy Names ſake] Pſal. 106. 8. As thou art named mercifully, gratious, and long ſuffering, ſo ſhew thy ſelf in effect.

V. 23. When it declineth] See Notes on pſal, 102. 11.

as the locuſt] Meaning, that he hath no ſtay nor aſſurance in this world.

V. 24. My fleſh faileth of fatneſſe] There is an elegant alluſion between the two members of this verſe, the number of words being equal in both members, and each word in the one, beginning with the ſame letter, as the oppoſite word doth in the other member: which makes the whole verſe to run with much concinnity. And beſides, there is ſome elegancy in the different uſe of the Propoſition מן, which in the firſt member is poſitively and properly: in the ſecond, privitavely, or negatively (if we may ſo ſpeak) cauſal: in the firſt, through: in the ſecond, for want of. Now this leanneſſe that David complains of here, came not for want of neceſſary food; though he might be in want ſometimes in his flights, for a while, but not to make him lean: nor from wilfull faſting; though that alſo he did uſe ſometimes, as elſewhere he profeſſeth; but through perpetuall cares, and vexations; according to that of Solomon his ſon; A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken ſpirit dryeth the bones, Prov. 18. 22.

V. 25. ſhaked their heads] Pſal, 22, 7.

V. 26. O ſave me according to thy mercy] The more he was contemned of men, the more earneſt he was in prayer to God.

V. 27. that this is thy hand] That it is thy work to deliver me, and to confound them.

V. 28. Let them curſe, but bleſſe thou] Let them gain nothing by curſing me.

V. 30. with my mouth] Not onely in confeſſing his goodneſſe ſecretly in my ſelf, but alſo in declaring it before all the Congregation.

V. 31. from thoſe that condemn his ſoul] Heb. from the Iudges of his ſoul. Hereby he ſheweth, that he had not to do with them that were of little power, but with Judges and Princes of the world.

PSAL. CX.

Title.

of David] Heb. לדוד, which may be tranſlated either for, as in thoſe Pſalms that have Aſaph his name prefixed; or of, as in many Pſalms before, whereof there is no queſtion, but that they are Davids. Neither is it here only in theſe Titles; but very freqnent upon other occaſions in the Scripture, to prefix this particle, or article, of it ſelf more proper to the Dative, before the Genetive: as for example, Jer. 47. 6. O thou ſword of the Lord; Heb. חרב ליהוה, and ſo elſewhere, frequently. Here it is the more conſidrrable, becauſe of the conſequence of the Pſalm to us Chriſtians; and the oppoſition of the Jews, who would not have it to be Davids, but ſome bodies elſe, what it affords againſt them, and for us, the better to elude. Our Saviour, Matth. 22. 43. quotes it as Davids Pſalm, which is authority enough for us to believe it is ſo: but againſt the Jews, it may further be obſerved, that it was the common opinion in thoſe dayes among the Jews, that it was Davids, as may be gathered by Chriſts words, (who ſpeaks it as a thing known and granted) and by the ſilent apppobation of his adverſaries there, the Scribes and Phariſes, and other Jews.

Verſe 1. THe Lord ſaid unto my Lord] That David himſelf, propheſying concerning the future Meſſias, as he was inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, ſpeaks this, we have Chriſts authority, Matth. 22 44. and the conſent of ancienter Jews and Rabbins. But later Rabbins have bethought themſelves how to evade it. Some therefore would have this ſpoken to Abraham, after his conqueſt of the kings, Gen. 14. by his ſervant Eliezer. Others, to Ezekiah king Judah, I know not upon what ground. But the greater part, make theſe words to be the peoples words unto David congratulating him his ſettling of the Ark upon mount Zion and his own (after his many victories) eſtabliſhment in the throne. But if this were granted unto them, yet have they got but little, except they can tel us, how David, or any other king of the Jewes, could be ſtyled a Prieſt, yea an eternal Prieſt, after the order of Melchiſedec as follows here in the 4 v. To ſay that the word, כוהן may be tráſlated Prince, as well as Prieſt, though we deny not that it is ſo ſometimes, yet it would be here apparently impertinent, and ridiculous, ſince we read nothing of Melchiſedek, extraordinary, as a king, who was but a very petty king in compariſon of David: (king of Salem, a town of no great account, in thoſe dayes) but of his Prieſthood, we do; as being a Prieſt of the moſt high God; and that as Prieſt, he bleſſed Abraham, in whom others were to be bleſſed; and that Abraham gave him tythes of all, Gen. 14. and Heb. 7.

V. 2 The rod of thy ſtrength] Or, Sceptrum potentiæ tuæ: that is, The ſcepter of thy power, or, Thy powerfull ſcepter. A ſpirituall ſcepter, yet powerfull, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the great ones of the world, by fire and ſword, and other violent means; and of the wiſe ones of the world, Philoſophers, and others; all theſe notwithſtanding, powerfull to the converſion of the world unto the Chriſtian faith. Of this power of Chriſts ſcepter, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh magnificently, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. For the weapens of our warfare are not carnall, but mighty through God, &c. And Epheſ. 6. 12. For we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, againſt powers, &c.

out of Zion] For out of Zion ſhall go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord from Ieruſalem, Iſaiah 2, 3. And thence it ſhall ſtretch thorow all the world: and this power chiefly ſtandeth in the preaching of the word. Zion alſo was mentioned, Pſal. 2. 6. Yet have I ſet my king upon my holy hill of Zion, which Pſalm, by the Jewiſh Expoſitors, is generally acknowledged to be written concerning the Meſſias. And if that; there is as much reaſon for this, though they grant it not.

Rule thou in the midſt of their enemies] See upon Pſal. 2. (both Pſalms being of one ſubject) npon verſe 2. The kings of the earth: and verſe 3. Let us break: and verſe 7. Thou art my ſon: and other paſſages of that Pſalm 72.

V. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing] By thy word thy people ſhall be aſſembled unto thy Church, whoſe encreaſe ſhall be ſo abundent and wonderful, as the drops of the dew falling from the womb of the morning.

in the beauty of holineſſe] An ordinary periphraſis of the Church, or Sanctuary. See before, Pſal. 29. 2. Worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſſe: and Pſal. 96 6. in the beauty of holineſſe, or, in the glorious Sanctuary;; as it is there in the margin. So 2 Chron. 20. 21. of Jehoſhaphat, He appointed ſingers unto the Lord, that ſhould praiſe the beauty of holineſſe. It might as well be tranſlated (this of Chron. I mean) ſupplying the in, from other like places; in the beauty of holineſſe. The comparing of theſe, and other like places, confutes them (though men of great judgement and learning) that would have the words tranſlated, pulcherrimè præparatus: that is, moſt gallantly furniſhed: or, compleatly armed. See upon the next words, from the womb of the morning: thou haſt the dew of thy youth] Theſe words are very variouſly both tranſlated and expounded. The chief ground of the difference is, partly from the accent in the word משחר; (morning) which uſually diſtinguiſhes between the members of one ſentence, or verſe; but ſometimes is obſerved to ſtand for ſome other uſe, and not for diſtinction: and partly from the miſtake of divers ancients, taking the מ in משחר for a prepoſition; ond laſtly from the ambiguity of the word ילדות by ſome tranſlated juventus; or, juventa: by others: nativitas, or, generatio. Here in our Engliſh, as alſo by Junius, the accent is obſerved, as a diſtiction: But by moſt others, and thoſe very learned and accurate, the words; from the womb of the morning, are joyned with thoſe that follow; to this effect; ex utero auroræ (or, as ſome others, but not ſo well, ab utero, ab aurora) tibi ros generationis, or, juventutis tuæ: that is, from the womb of the morning is the dew of thy youth, or, nativity. Now for the ſenſe of the words, moſt ancients have thought that the eternall generation of Chriſt, the Son of God; and ſome, both ancient and later Expoſitors, that his humane, or miraculous Incarnation in the womb of the bleſſed Virgin, was intended: and there be words indeed, ſome, that will fit wel enough to either. Neverthleſſe the moſt and moſt approved of later Expoſitors, upon a more accurate ſearch into the words, have judged, that not Chriſt himſelf was here ſpoken of; but the multitude of people that ſhould be converted unto Chriſt, upon the firſt preaching of the Goſpel: very fitly compared to the morning dew; or more poetically, to the dew of the womb of the morning: both to expreſſe the multitude, who ſhould, as it were, over-ſpread the earth; as the dew doth uſe to cover it; and the manner of their heavenly generation, by the immediate operation of Gods Holy Spirit. Some think that Micha did allude to theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, where he ſaith; And the remnant of Iacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people: as dew, as the ſhowers upon the graſſe that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men, Mic. 5. 7. As for the word, ילדות if according to ſome, it be tranſlated adoleſcentia, juventus, or, pueritia: then the reaſon of it according to ſome learned Expoſitors, will be, becauſe all that come to Chriſt, muſt (in harmleſſe ſimplicity) become like little children. Or if that ſeem too ſubtile, as I doubt it may; then, juventus, or, pueritia, may according to others, meerly be for ſoboles, that is, a new brood; which in effect comes to the ſame as generatio, or, nativitas; as the word is expounded by them that follow that interpretation. Other interpretations there be, which I think not needfull here to relate. Learned Grotius tranſlates the whole verſe thus, Populus tuus promptiſſimus erit in die prælii pulcherrimè preparatus: Ros (id eſt, unde proles tibi naſcetur) erit ut ros ab utero auroræ. It agrees, as to this latter part, with that that hath already been ſet down, and commended as the moſt accurate.

from the womb of the morning: thou haſt] Or, more than the womb of the morning: thou ſhalt have, &c, Or, more than the morning.

V. 4. Thou art a prieſt for ever. after the order of Melchiſedec] Heb. 5. 6. and 7. 17. See before upon the title. What is here tranſlated, according to the order, is in the Originall Hebrew, על־דברתי by ſome (which is moſt literal) tranſlated, according to my word. And becauſe the Apoſtle, Heb. 5. 6, 10. and elſewhere expreſſes it, in Greeks κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ; Some think he had it in his Copie, (or the Septuagint at leaſt, whom he followeth) על־דברת without a Jod: But there is no need of that; ſince it is certain that ſuch a Jod, doth ſometimes abound at the end: They call it Jod paragogicum. Now of Melchiſedec, who he was, and of all things belonging to him, much hath been written by divers learned men, both Expoſitors of the Scriptures, and others. But as yet ſub judice lis eſt: neither is it a thing, I think, to be decided by the wit of man. Not here I am ſure to be handled; and therefore I forbear.

V. 6. he ſhall fill the places with the dead bodies; he ſhall wound the heads over many countries] This is objected to us by the Jews, as an argument, that our Chriſt cannot be the ſcope and ſubject of this Pſalm, becauſe, ſay they, he was no Warrior. We anſwer, that theſe be figurative and poetical expreſſions, whereby no more is intended, than that he ſhal have a glorious conqueſt, and that no power of the earth ſhall be able to withſtand him. There is not any thing among men, ordinarily, that is entertained with ſo great an opinion of honour and glory, and ſtireth up the phanſie more powerfully, then the fame of warlike archivements, great fights, conqueſts and victories, and ſpoils, and the like. Such hath been the eſtimation of thoſe things, that all terms of honour, almoſt, came from thence: and the very name of virtue, (ἀρετὴ) among the Grecians, derives its pedegree from Mars: and κακία, now uſed for naughtineſſe, or vice in general, properly ſignifies cowardlineſſe. The Scripture therefore ſpeaking to men, and condeſcending to vulgar apprehenſions, when it would ſet out the glory of any thing, it borrows terms and expreſſions from that which is moſt glorious among men: Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, O moſt Mighty, &c. and, Thou art more glorious than the mountains of prey, &c. and, Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhall divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong. &c. The Scripture is full of ſuch expreſſions. God himſelf is often ſet out as a Warriour. The objection is very impertinent. See alſo upon Pſal.78.65. Like a mighty man, &c.

many] Or, great.

V. 7. He ſhall drink of the brook in the way] He ſhall, in the eager purſuit of his enemies, drink haſtily of the water next at hand; and being thereby refreſhed, purſue his enemies to full victory. Some underſtand it of Chriſts bitter cup in his paſſion, and glorious reſurrection.

therefore ſhall he lift up the head] He ſhall trinmph after his victories: or, he ſhall lift up the head of Chriſt.

PSAL. CXI.

This is one of the Alphabetical Pſalms, of which ſee upon Pſalm 25 Unto thee, O Lord, &c. at the end of the Pſalm.

Verſe 1. PRaiſe ye the Lord] Heb. Hallelujah.

I will praiſe the Lord] See Pſal. 25.1. The Prophet declareth that he will praiſe God both privately and openly, and that from the heart, as he that conſecrateth himſelf wholy and onely unto God.

V, 2 great] He ſheweth that Gods works are a ſufficient cauſe wherefore we ſhould praiſe him, but chiefly, his benefits towards his Church.

ſought out of all them that have pleaſure therein] The more ſweetneſſe Gods children find in his works, the further they dive into them.

V. 3. honourable and glorious] Heb. honour and glory.

V. 4. He hath made his wonderfull works to be remembred] Heb. He hath made a remembrance of his wonderful works.

gracious and full of compaſſion] Pſal. 86. 5.& 103. 8.

V. 5. He hath given meat unto them that fear him] God hath given to his people all that was neceſſary for them, and will do ſo ſtill. Thus the word is taken, Prov.30.8.31.15.Mal. 3. 10. Some underſtand it of feeding the people without labour, in the wilderneſſe, as God gives prey to the beaſts, Matth.6.27. Pſal.104.21. & 147. 9.

meat] Heb. prey.

he will ever be mindfull of his covenant] He looks not at their ſins, but at his own promiſe.

V. 7 The works of his hands are verity;] As God promiſed to take care of his Church; ſo, in effect. doth he declare himſelf juſt and true in the goverment of the ſame.

all his commandments are ſure] It is like he means his promiſes, which are commands to his creatures to provide for his people. See verſe 9. Pſal. 105. 8.

V. 8. ſtand faſt] Heb. are ſtabliſhed.

V. 10. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdome] Job 28. 28. Prov. 1. 7. and 9. 10. The Hebrew word is ראשית, (not תחלת,) which ſome tranſlate (as it may well) caput ſumma: not the beginning, but ſumme, or perfection, Ἀρχὴ σοφίας, as ἀρχὴ γλυκυσμάτων, and other like expreſſions in Eccleſiaſticus. Both ſenſes may ſtand. For there be degrees as of wiſdome, ſo of the fear of God. There is no degree of that fear ſo low, but is a ſtep to wiſdome; nor any true perfection of wiſdom, (attainable by man,) but is reducible to the fear of God. Both degrees are included, Deut. 4. 6. Keep therefore and do them, (ſtatutes and judgments; in the verſe before,) for this is your wiſdome, and your underſtanding, &c.

a good underſtanding] Or, good ſucceſſe.

that do his commandments] Heb. that do them.

his praiſe endureth for ever] The praiſe of God, or, of him that keeps Gods commandments.

PSAL. CXII.

Verſe 1. PRaiſe ye the Lord] Heb Hallelujah.

Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord] See pſal. 25. 1. He meaneth, with that reverend fear which is in the children of God, which cauſeth them to delight wonderfully in the Word of God. See more upon Pſal. 32. 1. Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion, &c.

feareth the Lord] Pſal. 128. 1.

V. 2. His ſeed ſhall be mighty upon earth, &c] Of this and other temporall bleſſings here annexed to godlineſſe, ſee upon pſal. 37.1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c.

V. 3. Wealth and riches ſhall be in his houſe] The godly ſhal have abundance and contentment, becauſe their heart is ſatisfyed in God onely.

his righteouſneſſe endureth for ever] That is, the fruit of his righteouſneſſe in heaven: or, continue to poſterity.

V. 4. Unto the upright there ariſeth light in the darkneſſe] Pſal. 97. 11. Righteous men ſhall have comfort in adverſity, for they comfort others, verſe 5. Pſal. 97. 11.

V. 5. ſheweth favour, and lendeth] Pſal. 37.6. Or, is ſhewing favour, and lending; to wit, frequently.

and lendeth] He ſheweth what is the fruit of mercy, To lend freely, and not for gain, and ſo to meaſure his doings, that he may be able to help where need requireth, and not to beſtow all on himſelf, pſal. 37. 26. Luke 6. 34. 35.

diſcretion] Heb. judgement.

V. 6. in everlaſting remembrance] He ſhall be praiſed for his good deeds long after his death, Prov. 10.7.

V. 7. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tydings] Prov. 1 33.

V. 9. He hath diſperſed] 2 Cor. 9.9. The godly pinch not niggardly, but diſtribute liberally, as the neceſſity of the poor requireth. and as his power is able: yet he gets by it; for the reward of his bounty abides for ever.

righteouſneſſe endureth for ever] verſe 3.

his horn ſhall be exalted for eveer] His power and proſperous eſtate, Pſal. 75. 10.

V. 10. The wicked ſhall ſee it, and be grieved, he ſhall gnaſh with his teeth] So it falls out ſometimes, even in this world: but of that other, and far more conſiderable world, to which, in a more general and abſolute ſenſe, all theſe promiſes and threatnings (as upon Pſal. 31. is ſhewed) muſt be referred; our Saviour directly; There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and you your ſelves thruſt out, Luke 13.28.

gnaſh with his teeth] pſal. 37.12.

and melt away] pſal. 58. 8. The bleſſings of God upon his children, ſhall cauſe the wicked to dye for envy.

the deſire of the wicked ſhall periſh] Prov. 10. 28.

PSAL. CXIII.

Verſe 1. PRaiſe ye the Lord] Heb Hallelujah.

praiſe the name of the Lord] By this often repetition he ſtirreth up our cold dulneſſe to praiſe God, ſeeing his works are ſo wonderfull.

V. 2. Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord] Dan. 2. 20.

V. 3. From the riſing of the ſun unto the going down of the ſame] Mal. 1. 11. Eſay 59. 19.

V. 4 The Lord is high above all nations] If Gods glory ſhine thorow all the world, and therefore he ought to be praiſed of all men, what great condemnation were it to his people, among whom chiefly it ſhineth, If they ſhould not earneſtly extoll his Name?

his glory above the heavens] Pſal. 8 1.

V. 5. Who is like unto the Lord our God] Pſal. 89. 6.

dwelleth] Heb. exalteth himſelf to dwell.

V. 6. Who humbleth himſelf to behold the things that are in heaven] God, out of his high ſeat of glory, vouchſafeth to provide for all creatures heavenly and earthly, Pſal. 138.6.

V. 7. He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt] 1 Sam. 2. 8. Pſalm 107. 41.

and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill] He preferreth the poor to higher honour, and giving the barren children, ſheweth that God worketh in his Church not only by ordinary means, but alſo by extraordinary.

V. 9. to keep houſe] Heb. to dwell in an houſe.

PSAL. CXIV.

Veſe 1. WHen Iſrael went out of Egypt] Exod 13. 4.

people of ſtrange language] Pſal. 81. 5.

V. 2. Judah was his ſanctuary] A people ſanctified to himſelf, Exod. 19. 5, 6.

dominion] Heb. dominions.

V. 3 The Sea ſaw it, and fled] Exod. 14.21.

Jordan was driven back] Joſh. 3.13.

V. 4. The mountains ſkipped like rams] Seeing that theſe dead creatures felt Gods power, and after a ſort ſaw it, much more his people ought to conſider it, and gloriſie him for the ſame.

lambs) Heb. ſons of the ſheep

V. 7. Tremble thou earth at the preſence of the Lord] Some queſtion is made about the original word חולי whether an Infinitive (and if ſo, whether the Jod be vacant or no:) or whether an Imperative, as here rendred. Bnt ſince the word it ſelf as we find it here, hath all the properties of a regular Imperative feminin, (as it ſhould; joyned with earth:) we may ſurely enough, eſpecially with the conſent of moſt Interpreters, take it for an Imperative. But though it be of an Imperative ſenſe in the original, yet whether to be tranſlated by an Imperative, is another queſtion. Some very exact in all punctilios and idiotiſmes of the original Text, obſerve well, that the Imperative, in the Hebrew, is ſometimes put for the preteret: as particularly Pſalm 22. 9. He truſted (or rolled himſelf upon:) on the Lord: it is in the Hebrew, directly, role thou: or, truſt thou: (as by Pſalm 37. 5. where the ſame word, and forme is, apparent:) in the Imperative, which being impertinent, Expoſitors (for want of this obſervation, whereof there be more examples in Scripture) have been troubled what to make of it. We may therefore as well, if we will, tranſlate here, The earth trembled, or, Tremble thou earth: and it may fit the coherence ſomewhat better, perchance; the whole Pſalm relating to things paſſed. When Iſrael went out of Egypt, &c. verſe 1. &c.

V. 8. which

V. 8. Which turned the rock into a ſtanding water] Exod. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11. Pſal. 107. 35.

PSAL. CXV.

Verſe 1. NOt untous, O Lord] Becauſe God promiſed to deliver them, not for their ſakes, but for his Name. Iſaiah 48. 11. Ezek. 36. 32. therefore they ground their praier upon this promiſe.

but unto thy name give glory] Honour thy ſelfe, by delivering us from our enemies.

V. 2. Where is now their God?] Pſal. 42. 10. and 79. 10. When the wicked ſee that God accompliſheth not his promiſe as they imagine, they ſcoff at his people, ſaying, Theſe men were wont to boaſt of Gods help, but now he hath failed them, Deut, 32. 37, 38.

V. 3. But our God is in the heavens[Pſal. 135. 6. They are deceived, for our God is in heaven.

whatſoever he pleaſed] No impudiments can let the work, but he uſeth even the impediments to ſerve his will.

V. 4 Their idols are ſilver, &c.] Pſal. 135. 15. Seeing that neither the matter nor the form can commend the beſt of their idols, it followeth, that there is nothing why they ſhould be eſteemed.

V. 7. They have hands, but they handle not] He ſheweth what great vanity it is to ask help of them, which not onely have no help in them, but alſo lack ſence and reaſon.

V. 8. are like unto them] As much without ſenſe as blocks and ſtones.

V. 9. He is their help and their ſhield] The help of thoſe that truſt in him; as Pſal, 48. 11, 12. For the Lord God is a Sun and ſhield—— bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him. Or, by a permutation of perſons, ordinary in the Hebrew tongue, our help, and our ſhield, as Pſal. 33. 20.

V. 10. O houſe of Aaron] For they were appointed by God as inſtructors and teachers of faith and religion for others to follow, Mal. 2. 7..

V. 11. Te that fear the Lord, truſt in the Lord] Interpreters give a reaſon, why after the houſe of Iſrael, (whereby the generality of the people is intended,) and the houſe of Aaron, (all Preiſts and Levites, divided from the reſt, not onely by reaſon of their office; but alſo, becauſe they only had no inheritance of land among the Iſraelites, and ſubſiſted by a peculiar right) mentioned, he ſhould adde, ye that fear the Lord, as a peculiar and diſtinct order: becauſe, ſay they, among both Prieſts and people there were many hypocrites; who though outwardly ſo; yet really, or, inwardly, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) were not either prieſts or Iſraelites. But this interpretation, though by many approved of, ſeems not ſeaſonable in this palce; the Pſalmiſt directing his ſpeech by way of exhortation to all that went under that name, among whom, thoſe that were hypocrites; that is, that lived not according to their profeſſion, might be as fit an object of his exhortation, as any others. Nay, it might more probably be objected, that the exhortation was not very needfull, if one were intended, but thoſe who did already, truly and cordially fear God; which may very well be thought to include ſome truſt in God. I think therefore that the interpretation of the ancients (many times laid aſide, when thoſe that are not comparable to them are taken in their room) is much to be preferred, who take theſe words, Te that fear the Lord; not in a common uſe and notion; but as a title, or denomination, by uſe, among the Jews, appropriated to a peculiar ſort of people, who lived among the Jews, being that no Jews born, nor yet circumciſed; or abſolute proſelytes: but yet part of the Jews, in generall; becauſe they lived among them, and worſhipped the ſame God, with them, and were obliged to many performnnces, though not to all that the natural Jews, or abſolute proſelytes were. We have it here again, verſe 13. He will bleſſe them, &c. and Pſal. 118. 2, 3. 4. Such alſo, under the ſame title of φοβέμενοι τὸν θεὸν, are mentioned, Acts 10. 2 and 13. 16. and under the title of εὐλαβεῖς, Acts 2.

V. 12. he will bleſſe us] That is, he will continue his graces toward his people, be they of what degree or condition ſoever, Pſalm 128 1.

V. 13. and] Heb, with.

V. 15. which made heaven and earth] And therefore doth ſtill govern and continue all things therein, Jer. 10. 11.

V. 16. the heavens are the Lords] To be the ſeat of his glory, Eſay 66. 1.

the Lords] Or, for the Lord.

to the children of men] To uſe; but he hath kept the right over it to himſelf.

V. 17. dead praiſe not the Lord] Pſal. 6. 5. and 30. 9. and 88. 11. Eſay 38. 18. See the Note upon Pſal. 6. 5.

neither any that go down into ſilence] Though the dead ſet forth Gods glory in heaven, yet they praiſe him not here in the Congregation, Pſal. 6. 5.

V. 18. But we will bleſſe the Lord] Dan. 2. 20. When we are delivered and preſerved alive.

PSAL. CXVI.

Verſe 1. I Love the Lord] He granteth that no pleaſure is ſo great, as to feel Gods help in our neceſſity, and that nothing ſtirreth up our love to him more.

I love the Lord becauſe he] Heb. I love becauſe the Lord.

I love the Lord becauſe he hath heard] Or, I am ſatiſſied; ſince that the Lord hath heard.

V. 2. as long as I live] Heb. in my dayes. So oft as I ſhall be in diſtreſſe.

V. 3. The ſorrows of death compaſſed me] pſal. 18 5. 6.

gat hold upon me] Heb. found me.

V. 5. and righteous] So juſt, that he will deliver them that are unjuſtly oppreſſed.

V. 6. I was brought low, and he helped me] I was deſtitute of humane help and counſel.

V. 7. Return unto thy reſt, O my ſoul] pſal. 42. 11. & 43. 5. Return to the compoſed eſtate, and be no more diſquieted, now God hath freed thee.

V. 9. I will walk before the Lord] Or, I ſhall walk; that is, the Lord will deliver me; I ſhall not dye in this danger.

land] Heb. lands.

V. 10. I beleeved, therefore have I ſpoken] 2 Cor. 4. 13. Though my affliction was great, yet my faith made me pray to God for deliverance.

V. 11. my haſte] Pſal. 31. 22.

All men are lyars] Rom. 3. 4. Samuel and all, who promiſed me the Kingdom, that am like to dye before I can attain to it, 1 Sam. 27. 1. Some make this to be the ſenſe; I ſaid in my (Hebr. חפזי) trembling, (or, conſternation) All men are lyars; that is, There is no truſt to man, or to humane help: but to God there is, which muſt be ſupplyed, as in ſpeech oftentimes, the oppoſitive member is,) who can help, when all other help doth fail. I will not therefore deſpair.

V. 13. I will take the cup of ſalvation] Such a cup as the Iſraelites uſed to take when they came to offer ſacrifice, and to give thanks for their deliverance.; to which cuſtome ſome refer that which we read of our Saviour, Luke 22. 17. And he took the cup, &c. as alſo the ſacramental cup, which afterwards was inſtituted by our Saviour, in liew of that former rite, Luke 22. 20. and is by the Apoſtle called the cup of bleſſing. 1 Cor. 10. 16. and the whole Sacrament was afterwards called Εὐχαριστία, that is, A thanksgiving; or, An action of thanks.

ſalvation] Heb. ſalvations.

V. 15. Precious in the ſight of the Lord] See Notes on pſalm 72. 14. and npon pſal 41. 11. By this I know.

V. 16. the ſon of thy hand-maid] pſal. 86. 16.

V. 18. I will pay my vows unto the Lord] Beſides the ſecrifice of thankſgiving enjoyned, Levit. 7. 12. I will ſacrifice thoſe things which I vowed, in my adverſity, to offer, when I ſhould be delivered.

PSAL. CXVII.

Verſe 1. O Praiſe the Lord, all ye nations, praiſe him, all ye people] Rom. 15. 11. We ſhould not make any queſtion of the myſtical ſenſe, or application to Chriſt, and the Gentiles, though we had not St. Pauls authoritie for it, (Rom. 15. 11.) it being ſo naturall, and obvious; at leaſt, to any that are read in the Prophets, where ſo often foretell this converſion of the Gentiles unto Chriſt, by the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſpeak of it ſo gloriouſly, as an argument of joy unto all Nations. However, though Expoſiters content themſelves with this, yet it hath already been ſaid upon divers other Pſalms, I know no reaſon why we ſhould paſſe by; or if not obvious, neglect the inquiſition of a more literall and immediate ſenſe. But indeed, obvious enough here, as I conceive. For though God did in great mercy adopt to himſelf the Jews (for a ſeaſon) as a peculiar people; and ſtile himſelf their God in a more peculiar manner: yet did he never ſo forſake other nations, or withdraw his kindneſſe from them, as that they ſhould not have occaſions both ordinary, and extraordinary, to glorifie him for his goodneſſe and mercie. Beſides ſundry paſſages in other Pſalms: we have one entire Pſalm (one of the moſt ſubline for the ſtyle of it, in the whole book:) written to that purpoſe: the ſubject wereof is often repeated, O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men. Pſal. 107. verſes, 8. 15. 21. 31. See there upon the argument of the Pſalm, and upon verſe 6. Then they cried, &c. and, and he delivered, &c. If therefore then, even when true religion was the priviledge of one nation, and God in ſome manner appropriated unto it: yet even then holy Prophets, inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, did well upon all men, and all nations to praiſe God: (not rhetorically neither, or hyperbolically, as when dumb creatutes are called upon to praiſe God: as is well obſerved by Calvin, though upon another occaſion, but ſimply and literally:) to praiſe God, I ſay, to acknowledge his goodneſs and his wonderful works; as Pſalm 107. or as it is here, his merciful kindneſs, and his truth: (ver. 2) how great and miſerable is their blindneſs, and ſottiſh infatuation; who in theſe daies, (ever ſince Chriſt) of publick grace and mercies (we ſpeak not here of ſaving grace and mercy, not outwardly and publickly diſcernable :) wherein all nations have equal intereſt; would ingroſs God wholly to themſelves, and as they conceive his mercy and goodneſs to be their peculiar ; ſo neither would they have God to accept of the prayers or praiſes of any others, but ſuch as come from themſelves ? All the hereſies of the world put together, cannot amount to more impiety : and yet is the ſottiſhneſs and ridiculouſneſs of the opinion, greater, than the impiety.

V. 2. and the truth of the Lord] Interpreters in their myſtical Expoſitions, as they diſtinguiſh between people, (by which they underſtand the Jews particularly) and nations ; that is, the Gentiles ; in the former verſe : ſo here, merciful kindneſs, they would have to belong to the nations ; becauſe, ſay they, God was not obliged to them by any promiſe : and truth, to the Jews But even they that do not diſtinguiſh between people and nations, in the former ; (for all do not, I confeſſe :) yet here between mercy, (or merciful kindneſs :) and truth they do. We have ſpoken of the difference elſewhere, upon Pſalm 57.10. For thy mercy is great : and there alſo ſhewed how they might be taken for one and the ſame thing. Which ſenſe, I think ; would do well here too : although we may ſay, if need be, that God had bound himſelf to the Gentiles by his Prophets, as well as to the Jews, for a future Redeemer : and ſo his truth, even ſo diſtinctly taken, might belong unto them too, according to the myſtical ſenſe : neither do we want promiſes of another nature, made by God to mankinde in general ; for performance whereof, they might be called upon to praiſe him, to make good that other ſenſe, which we have ſpoken of : although, as I ſaid before, there is no need of that diſtinction here.

people] Heb. peoples.

PSAL. CXVIII.

Verſ. 1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] 1 Chron 16.8 Pſal. 106.1. & 107.1. & 136.1. Becauſe God, by creating David King, ſhewed his mercy towards his afflicted Church, the Prophet doth not onely himſelf thank God, but exhorteth all the people to do the ſame.

V. 3. Let the houſe of Aaron now ſay] See Notes on Pſalm. 115. verſe 10.

V. 5. in diſtreſs] Heb. out of diſtreſs. The more troubles oppreſs us, the more inſtant ought we to be in prayer.

in diſtreſs the Lord anſwered me] Pſal.120.1.

in a large place] Pſal.18,20.

V. 6. The Lord is on my ſide, I will not fear] Pſa.56.4.11 Heb.13.6.

on my ſide] Heb. for me.

what can man do unto me ?] He doubted not but God would maintain him againſt all enemies, becauſe he had placed him in the kingdom, pſal.27.1,2.

V. 7. with them that help me] Pſal.54.4.

V. 8 than to put confidence in man] He ſheweth, that he had truſted in vain, if he had put his confidence in man, to have been preferred to the kingdom : but, putting his truſt in God, he obtained it.

V. 9. It is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put confidence in princes] pſal.146.2.

V. 10. All nations compaſſed me about] That is, all round about : as Philiſtines, Amalekites, Ammonites, Moabites, &c. whom David at ſeveral times had to do with.

will I] Or, I did, as pſal.119.23.

deſtroy them] Heb. cut them off. Or, I did deſtroy them.

V. 11. will] Or, did.

V, 12. bees] Deut.1 44.

they are quenched as the fire of thorns] See upon Pſal.58 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns. The Hebrew word דעכו, here (as by moſt others) tranſlated, they are quenched ; is by ſome thought to have a contrary ſignification alſo : and both by the Greek Interpreters, and by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, is expreſſed, they did burn. But either of the two may ſerve here : the ſenſe of the words will be the ſame.

deſtroy] Heb. cut down.

V. 13 Thou haſt thruſt ſore at me] He noteth Saul, his chief enemy.

V. 14. The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong] Exodus. 15. 2. Eſay 12. verſe 2.

and ſong] In that he was delivered, it came not of himſelf, nor of the power of man, but onely of Gods favour, therefore he will praiſe him chearfully, Pſal.69 30.

V. 15. The voice of rejoycing] He meaneth, that other good men ſhould have cauſe of joy and thankfulneſs, as well as he, becauſe, by raiſing him God had reſtored the Church to quietneſs.

V. 16. The right hand of the Lord is exalted] So that they that are far and near may ſee his mighty power.

V. 17. I ſhall not die] My enemies plots could not kill me.

V. 18. The Lord hath chaſtened me ſore] God correcteth with moderation, to amendment, not to deſtruction, Jer.10.24. & chap.30 verſe 11.

V. 19. Open to me the gates of righteouſneſs] Pſal.24.7,9.

the gates of righteouſneſs] He willeth that the doors of the tabernacle ſhould be opened by the Prieſts or Levites, whoſe office it was, 1 Sam.3.15. that he might enter to praiſe God.

V. 20. into which the righteous ſhall enter] So Eſay 26.2. The unclean might not enter, 2 Chron.23.19. A type of forbidding wicked men acceſs to Gods houſe.

V. 0. The ſtone which the builders refuſed] Though Sauls counſellours, and Iſhboſheths great men refuſed to accept of me for their King, yet God hath given me the Kingdom. So the Prieſts, Scribes and Phariſees, appointed to be builders, refuſed Chriſt, but God advanced him.

The ſtone which the builders refuſed, is become the head ſtone of the corner] Mat.21.42. Mark 12.13. Luke 20 17. Acts 4 11. 1 Pet. 2. 4.

V. 23. This is the Lords doing] Heb. This is from the Lord.

V. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made] Wherein God hath chiefly ſhewed his mercy, by making me king, and delivering his Church. So the day of publiſhing Chriſts Kingdom was a choice day. The words may alſo have a more particular application to the day of Chriſts reſurrection, by which, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh and teacheth, eſpecially, he was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs, Rom.1.4. See more upon Pſal.2.7. Thou art my Son : and, this day.

we will rejoyce] Or, let us rejoyce.

V. 25. Save now ; I beſeech thee] The joyful acclamations which the people uſed, when David came to the tabernacle to give thanks to God for the Kingdom received. They prayed God to ſave their King and them : ſo they do for Chriſt, Mat.21.9,15. Mar.11.9. Luke 19. ver. 38.

we have bleſſed you out of the houſe of the Lord] We the Prieſts appointed to bleſs the people publikly, Num.6.23. Deut.10.8. 1 Chron.33.23.

V. 27. God is the Lord, which] Or, The Lord is that God, which.

which hath ſhewed us light] That is, proſperity under the Kingdom of David, and Chriſt, Pſal,97.10. So on the other ſide, darkneſs is taken for affliction, oft in Scripture.

the ſacrifice] Heb. The feſtival ; That is, the beaſt, killed in the feſtical.

even unto the horns of the altar] Till ye come to the horns of the altar, Lev.4.7. That is, bring it thither to be killed. Others more literally interpret it of the binding of the beaſt, that was to be offered, to the horns of the altar. It is very likely, that thoſe horns of the altar, particularly mentioned, Exod 27.2. were intended for that uſe ; though it be not there expreſſed.

PSAL. CXIX.

This is one of the Alphabetical Pſalms, of which, ſee upon Pſal. 25. at the end The chief end of this Pſalm, as by the matter, length, and ſtyle doth appear, ſeems to have been to diſingage the thoughts and affections of men that have a ſenſe of piety, from all worldly objects, and to ſettle them upon the ſtudy, love, and eſtimation of piety and godlineſs : to which end, the frequent reading of it, where there is a diſpoſition to goodneſs, doth marvellouſly conduce, as alſo to keep the ſoul in a conſtant plight of humble, meek, and harmleſs ſimplicity : the certain effect, and neceſſary conſequent of true mortification, and ſanctification. It is penned with great plainneſs and ſimplicity of ſtyle, ſuitable to the matter, and fitted for all capacities. The ſame things are often inculcated ; and the ſame words repeated. Yea there be ſome words, ten in number, all which almoſt ſignifie the ſame thing, ſo often repeated, that in the whole Pſalm, (as hath been obſerved by ſome) conſiſting of 176 verſes in all, there is but one verſe, where ſome of them, one, or more, are not found. The words are theſe ; תורה חוקים מצוה פקודים עדות משפטים אמרה דבר צדק דרך that is, Law, ſtatutes, precepts, commandments, teſtimonies, judgements, word, righteouſneſs, way. The number will not hold in the Engliſh, becauſe two of the Hebrew words, דבר and אמרה, are rendred by one in Engliſh, to wit, word However, we may make up the number, adding ordinances, as the word משפטים (commonly, judgements) is ſometimes tranſlated ; as verſ. 91. This of theſe ten Hebrew words, and of their freqnent repetition throughout the whole Pſalm, but one verſe, (the 122) excepted, I finde in two, Bucerus and Vatablus : and they had it from ſome of the Rabbines. For both Kimki, and Ben Ezra, have ſome ſuch thing : though they ſpeak but of eight words ; and make a further myſtery of it, becauſe the whole Pſalm is compoſed, or digeſted by Octonaries. But it is never good to take things upon truſt, where a man may uſe his own eyes. For I doubt there may be more verſes found beſides the 122, where none of thoſe either eight or ten words are uſed. As for example, verſ. 90. לדור ודור אמונתך כוננת ארץ ותעמד I would not have any unadviſedly to aſcribe this, (as poſſible ſome might) to any variation of the Originall Copies, which is but meer overſight of their eyes. Now if any be offended with theſe frequent repetitions, I would have them to conſider, that they were but according to the firſt intention of the author, the better to expreſs his zeal to the Word of God, and therefore fall not within compaſs of tautologies: and that there is as much art in repeating the ſame words, ſo often, with ſo much variation of ſenſe; as in finding diverſity both of matter and words.

Verſ. 1 Bleſſed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord] See Pſal.128.1.

the undefiled] Here they are not called bleſſed, which think themſelves wiſe in their own judgement, nor which imagine to themſelves a certain kinde of holineſs, but they whoſe converſation is without hypocriſie, Ezek.28.15.

undefiled] Or, perfect, or, ſincere.

in the way] A good life is a good way, that leads to heaven.

V. 2. that keep his teſtimonies] Gods law teſtifies of his will, which elſe were unknown to us.

V. 3. They alſo do no iniquity] They live not in a ſinful courſe of life: Sin is not their trade, as it is wicked mens, 1 Joh.3.9.

do no] Or, that do, or commit.

walk] Or, that walk.

V. 5. O that my wayes were directed] David acknowledgeth his imperfection, deſiring God to reform it, that his life may be conformable to Gods word.

V. 6. Then ſhall I not be aſhamed. when I have reſpect to all thy commandments] Shame, the fruit and effect of ſin: Temporal, or in this world: what fruit had ye then in theſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed, Rom.6.21. Eternal; And many of them that ſlept in the duſt of the earth, ſhall awake; ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame, and everlaſting contempt, Dan.12.2.

V. 7. thy righteous judgements] Heb. judgements of thy righteouſneſs. That is, thy precepts; which contain perfect righteouſneſs.

V. 8. O forſake me not utterly] He refuſeth not to be tried by tentations; but he feareth, leſt he faint, if God ſuccour not his infirmity in time, but leave him wholly to himſelf.

V. 9. Wherewith ſhall a young man cleanſe his way] Becauſe youth is moſt given to licentiouſneſs, he chiefly warneth them to frame their lives betimes to Gods word, Eccleſ.11.9. & 12.1.

V. 11. Thy word have I hid in mine heart] If Gods word be hid in our hearts, we ſhall be more able to reſiſt the aſſaults of Satan; which, therefore he deſired carefully to treaſure up, Pſal.37.31. Luke 2.90.51. See alſo upon Pſal.40.10. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart.

V. 14. I have rejoyced in the way of thy teſtimonies] The prophet doth not boaſt of his vertues, but ſetteth forth an example for others to follow Gods word, and leave worldly vanities.

in] Or, for.

V. 17. that I may live] He ſheweth, that we ought not to deſire to live, but to ſerve God: and that we cannot ſerve him aright, except he take away our natural ignorance by the light of his ſpirit, that we may underſtand the ſpiritual meaning of his word.

and keep] Or, to keep.

V. 18. Open] Heb. Reveal.

V. 19. I am a ſtranger in the earth, hide not thy commandments from me] Gen.47.9. 1 Chron.29.15. Pſal.39.12. Heb.11.13.

I am a ſtranger in the earth] Seeing mans life in this world, is but a paſſage to heaven, what ſhould become of him, who knows not the way by nature, if Gods word did not guide him thither?

V. 20. My ſoul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgements at all times] Pſal.42.1. & 63.1. & 84.1.

V. 21. Thou haſt rebuked the proud that are curſed] In all ages thou haſt plagued all ſuch, which maliciouſly and contemptuouſly depart from thy truth. There is ſome difference among Interpreters about the ordering of the words. Thoſe that obſerve the accent, agree with our Engliſh here. Thoſe that do not, (in number as many, if not more) order them thus; Thou haſt rebuked (or, deſtroyed) the proud: curſed are they, which do erre from thy commandments. This I take to be the more plauſible conſtruction: and the accent, we know, is often not regarded. However, the difference is of no great moment.

V. 22. Remove from me] Or, Roll from upon me.

V. 23. Princes alſo did ſit and ſpeak againſt me] ver. 46. When the powers of the world gave falſe ſentence againſt me, thy word was a guide and a counſellour, to teach me what to do, and to comfort me.

V. 24. Thy teſtimonies alſo are my delight] Heb. delights. That is, they did greatly delight me.

my counſellours] Heb. men of my counſel.

V. 25. My ſoul cleaveth unto thy duſt] That is, I am like one overcome in battel, mortally wounded, and tumbling in the duſt, or one in danger to dye, and turn to duſt, Pſal.44.25. & 22.15. and without thy word I cannot live.

V. 26. I have declared my wayes] I have laid open my buſineſs, and dangers to thee in great difficulties, as to my chief friend, and thou haſt adviſed me ever for my good.

teach me thy ſtatutes] Pſal.25.4. & 27.11. & 86.11.

V. 28. My ſoul melteth for heavineſs] Pſal.107.26.

melteth] Heb. droppeth.

according unto thy word] That is, thy promiſe. If God did not maintain us by his word, our life would drop away like water, Pſal.22.14.

V. 29. Remove from me the way of lying] Keep me out of thoſe falſe wayes, that corrupt nature teacheth, and let thy law guide me in the true way to happineſs. To this way of lying, that is, falſe doctrine, and erroneous opinions concerning God and his worſhip, is preſently oppoſed (ver.30) the way of truth: of which ſee there.

V. 30. I have choſen the way of truth] The way of truth, as 2 Pet.2.2. And many ſhall follow their pernicious wayes, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of: That is, true religion. To this דרך אמונה (or, way of truth) is contrary דרך שקר in the foregoing verſe; which might have been (as ארח שקר is afterwards verſ.104.) more properly tranſlated the falſe way, (that is, erroneous, heretical opinions) then the way of lying: as if he intended falſhood in matter of ſpeech, or actions; which certainly is not the meaning. Neither is there any contrariety (as ſome may phancy) in Davids words, when he prayes to God to remove from him, or to preſerve him from falſe opinions; and preſently profeſſeth, that he hath choſen the way of truth. For firſt, in caſe that he were already in the right way; (as is likely; nay, certain) yet, ſo was once his ſon Solomon, who nevertheleſs became afterwards a great Idolater. And the Apoſtle ſaith, Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall, 1 Cor. 10.12. But ſecondly, when he ſaith, he hath choſen the way of truth, he ſaith no more, but that it is his earneſt deſire, and firm reſolution to adhere to the truth, ſo ſoon as God ſhall reveal it unto him. But then there is an outward, and an inward revelation; both neceſſary, David had both in a great meaſure; yet ſtill prayeth for both; neither is any ſo perfect in this kinde, but may ſay with him in the Goſpel, Lord I believe; help thou mine unbelief.

V. 32. when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart] By this he ſheweth, that we can neither chuſe good, cleave to Gods word, nor run forward in his way, except he make our hearts large to receive his grace, and willing to obey, by freeing from ſtraits, filling us with joy and comfort, Eſay 60.5. Pſal.4.1.

V. 33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy ſtatutes] He ſheweth, that he cannot follow on to the end, except God teach him ofttimes, and lead him forward.

V. 34. with my whole heart] Not onely in outward converſation, but alſo with inward affection.

V. 36. And not to covetouſneſs] He prayeth ſpecially againſt this evil affection, as being the root of all evil, 1 Tim.6.10. and withdrawing men from the love of God and goodneſs, Matth.6.24. 1 Joh.2.15.

V. 37. Turn away] Heb. Make to paſs.

Turn away mine eyes] Becauſe they are the chiefeſt inlets of ſinful objects, Job 31.1. Eſay 33.15. 2 Sam.11.2.

from beholding vanity] Worldly things, that have no ſubſtance in them, nor are but ſhadows, Prov.23.5.

V. 39. for thy judgements are good] Let me not ſuffer reproach for obeying thy word, which is good. Or, Let not thy Word and thy Truth (which I fear more than any thing elſe, that can happen to me) ſuffer reproach in my ſufferings, as though I had boaſted falſly; or thou couldſt not perform. So alſo verſe 22. & ver.41,42,43.

V. 40. quicken me in thy righteouſneſs] Reſtore life and ſtrength to me, according to thy faithful promiſe, verſe 37.

V. 41. Let thy mercies come alſo unto me] He ſheweth, that Gods mercy and love, is the firſt cauſe of our deliverances.

V. 42. So ſhall I have wherewith to anſwer him that reproacheth me] Or, So ſhall I anſwer him that reproacheth me in a thing, or in ought. When thy promiſe is effected, I can ſtop the mouth of my ſcoffing adverſaries, Pſal.107.42.

V. 43. take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth] Make me not aſhamed to ſpeak of thy promiſes any more, by not performing thoſe thou haſt made to me already.

V. 45. And I will walk at liberty] I ſhall be free from all diſtreſs of ſoul and body, ver.32.

at liberty] Heb. at large.

V. 46. before kings] He ſheweth, that the children of God ought not to be daunted from giving teſtimony to Gods truth, by any power or fear of Princes, Dan.3.13,16. Matth.10.18,19. verſe 23.

V. 48. My hands alſo will I lift up unto thy commandments] I will addreſs my ſelf unto the doing of thy will, as a workman doth to his work.

V. 49. Remember the word unto thy ſervant] Though he feel Gods hand ſtill to lye upon him, yet he reſteth on his promiſe, and comforteth himſelf therein.

V. 51. The proud have had me greatly in deriſion] Meaning, the wicked, which contemn Gods word, and tread his religion under foot.

V. 52. I remembred thy judgements of old] That is, the examples, whereby thou declareſt thy ſelf to be Judge of the world.

V. 53. Horrour hath taken hold upon me] A vehement zeal for thy glory, and indignation againſt the wicked: or, dread of perſecution from them.

becauſe of the] Heb. from the.

V. 54. in the houſe of my pilgrimage] In all the places where I have been baniſhed: or, in the courſe of my life, which is but a ſorrowful pilgrimage, Gen. 47. 9.

pilgrimage] Heb. pilgrimages.

V. 55. in the night] Even when others ſleep, Pſal. 63. 6.

V. 56. This I had] This comfort in affliƈtions from thee, day and night, ver. 54. 55.

V. 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord] Pſal. 16. 5. & 142. 5. It may be read, O Lord, I have ſaid, my portion is to keep thy word: that is, I am perſwaded that to keep thy law is an heritage, and great gain for me, Joh. 4. 34.

my portion, O Lord] Or, O Lord, my portion, verſe 126.

V. 58. favour] Heb. face.

V. 59. I thought on my wayes] He called himſelfe to account for his former courſes, and amended what he found amiſſe in them, Lam. 3. 40.

V. 61. bands] Or, companie, 1 Sam. 10. 10. No calamity, no perſecution, hath hitherto ſo far wrought upon me, as to make me to forſake thy truth, or to go againſt my conſcience, in any thing. So alſo verſe 87.

V. 62. becauſe of thy righteous judgements] Gods word is a great benefit, and he is worthy of great praiſe for giving it to us: or, he promiſes to praiſe God night and day for his judgements executed upon his enemies, according to his word.

thy righteous judgements] Heb. thy judgements of righteouſneſſe.

V. 63. I am a companion of all them that fear thee] Not onely by mutual conſent, but alſo by aid and ſuccour, Pſal. 16. 3. to any godly, be they never ſo mean.

V. 64. The earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy] As thou giveſt to every creature good things according to the nature of it, ſo give my ſoul ſpititual knowledge.

V. 65. Thou haſt dealt well with thy ſervant] Having proved by experience, that God was true in his promiſe he deſireth that he would encreaſe in him knowledge and judgement.

V. 67. Before I was afflicted, I went aſtray] Jer. 31. 18, 19. The uſe of Gods rods, is to bring us home to God, verſe 71. Heb. 12. 10, 11.

V. 70. Their heart is as fat as greaſe] Their heart is indurate and hardned, puffed up with proſperity, and vain eſtimation of themſelves, Pſal. 17. 10. Iſai. 6. 10.

V. 71. It is good for me that I have been afflicted] He confeſſeth, that before he was chaſtned, he was rebellious, as man by nature is, verſe 67. See before upon Pſalm 34. 9. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, &c.

V. 72. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thouſands of gold and ſilver,] Pſal. 19. 10. Prov. 8. 11.

V. 73. Thy hands have made, and faſhioned me] Job. 10. 8.

Thy hands have made me] Becauſe I am thy creature, teach me to ſerve thee, who art my Maker, Pſal. 95. 6. and 100. 2, 3. & 138. 8.

V. 74. They that fear thee, will be glad when they ſee me] When God ſheweth his grace toward any, he teſtifieth to others, That he faileth not them that truſt in him, and ſo makes them glad alſo.

V. 75. right] Heb. righteouſneſſe.

that thou in faithfulneſſe haſt afflicted me] That thou haſt ſhewed thy faithfulneſſe, even in correƈting me, thy correƈtion making for my good, Heb. 12. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 19.

thou in faithfulneſſe] Or, it is faithfulneſſe that thou.

V. 76. for my comfort] Heb. to comfort me.

V. 77. that I may live] That I may be freed from theſe affliƈtions, for men in adverſity are like dead men.

thy law is my delight] See Notes on verſe 24.

delight] Heb. delights, as verſe 92.

V. 79. turn unto me] Be comforted by my example, and joyn with me, verſe 74.

thoſe that have known thy teſtimonies] He ſheweth that the true fear of God is not without the knowledge of his word.

V. 80. that I be not aſhamed] Which I ſhould be, if I did not keep thy ſtatutes, verſe 6. 31.

V. 81. My ſoul fainteth for thy ſalvation] Though my ſtrength fail me, yet my ſoul groaneth and ſigheth, reſting ſtill in thy word.

V. 82. Mine eyes fail for thy word] Pſal. 69. 3.

V. 83. like a bottle in the ſmoak] Like as a skin bottle or bladder that is ſhrivelled in the ſmoake.

V. 84. How many are the dayes of thy ſervant?] How long wilt thou affliƈt thy ſervant? Pſal. 89. 47.

V. 85. The proud have digged pits for me, which are not after thy law] This is ſpoken by a figure (whereof there be many examples in beſt Writers.) called λιτότης; or, λεπτότης: which is, when we ſpeak of a thing, which of it ſelf is horrid, and which we would have thought ſo, in terms of extenuation. as if we ſay of a man, or any particular faƈt, that it is not very commendable, when we intend, that it is moſt abominable. So is the word illaudatus uſed in Virgil. He might alſo perchance (as there be many ſecret alluſions in the Scripture) allude to the Law concerning digging of pits, Exod. 21. 33, 34. as aggravating their wickedneſſe from thence, that the Law of God having provided for the ſecurity of beaſts, by taking order for the covering of neceſſay pits and wells, their wickedneſſe muſt needs be moſt excrable, that digged ſecret pits of purpoſe for men to fall into them. Or he might allude to שיחה meditatio: which differs in nothing from שיחה that ſignifies a pit, but in a little prick over one of the letters: as if he would ſay; Whiles thy Law was my שיחה ſicha, or meditation: (verſe 97. and 99) they buſied themſelves in digging ſhichoth, or pits for me. Examples of ſuch ſecret alluſions we have had divers already. See upon Pſal. 106. verſe 15. and 28. The Greek and Latine tranſlate the word fabulationes, which may be thought ſomewhat to this purpoſe: and queſtionleſs ſicha, or, ſichoth is the word that they had in their Copies; or at leaſt in their thoughts, when they tranſlated fabulatio, or ἀδολεσχία: but as to the ſenſe of the whole member, they had another aim, as appeareth by the whole context of their tranſlation: which is; Narraverunt mihi iniqui fabulationes: ſed non ut Lex tua. Διηγήσαντό μοι παράνομοι ἀδολεσχίας, &c.

The proud have digged pits for me] They have not onely oppreſſed me violently, but alſo craftily conſpired againſt me, Pſalm 35. 7.

V. 86. faithful] Heb. faithfulneſſe.

help thou me] He deſireth the true God to help him againſt falſe-dealing perſecutours.

V. 87. upon earth] The uttermoſt that they could do, could not make me forſake thy law.

V. 88. Quicken me after thy loving kindneſſe] Suffer me to live: or, raiſe me out of theſe troubles. See Notes on verſe 40. 77.

V. 89. For ever, O Lord, thy word is ſettled in heaven] Becauſe none ſhould eſteem Gods word, according to the changes of things in this world, he ſheweth, that it abideth in heaven, and ſo abideth immutable: or, the permanency of it, is ſeen in the continuance of the heavens: ſo of the earth, verſe 90. and ſo verſe 91. They continue, that is, heaven and earth, for they are thy ſervants.

V. 90. unto all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

abideth] Heb. ſtandeth.

V. 91. They continue this day] Seeing the earth and all creatures remain in that eſtate, wherein thou haſt created them, much more thy truth remaineth conſtant and unchangeable.

V. 92. my delights] See Notes on ver. 24.

V. 93. with them thou haſt quickned me] See Notes on ver. 77. 88.

V. 94. I am thine, ſave me] He proveth by the effeƈt, that he is Gods childe, becauſe he ſeeketh to underſtand his will, that he may do it.

V. 96. I have ſeen an end of all perfection] There is nothing ſo perfeƈt on earth, but it hath an end: onely Gods word laſteth for ever, Iſai. 40. 8. So Matth. 24. 35. Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away; but my words ſhall not paſſe away.

V. 97. it is my meditation all the day] Our daily meditating of Gods law, is a ſure token that we love it, Pſal. 1. 2.

V. 98. Thou through thy commandements haſt made me] Or, Each of thy commandements hath made me.

they are ever with me] Heb. it is ever with me.

V. 99. I have more underſtanding than all my teachers] Whoſoever doth ſubmit himſelf onely to Gods word, ſhall not onely be ſafe againſt the praƈtices of his enemies, but alſo learn more wiſdom, than they that profeſſe it, and are men of experience, 2 Tim. 3. See alſo upon Pſal. 107. 43. Whoſo is wiſe, &c. and 111. 10. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, &c.

V. 100. I underſtand more than the ancients] Job 32. 8.

V. 102. for thou haſt taught me] God doth acquaint us with his will, that we may do it, Pſal. 86. 11.

V. 103. How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte] Pſal. 19. 10.

taſte] Heb. palate.

V. 104. therefore I hate every falſe way] ver. 128.

V. 105. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet] Of our ſelves we are but darkeneſſe, and cannot ſee, except we be enlightened with Gods word.

lamp] Or, candle, Prov. 6. 23.

V. 106. I have ſworn] Neh. 10. 29. By ſolemn oath and promiſe, he ſtirred up himſelf to embrace Gods word.

and I will perform] It doth appear by many former verſes, how little David (or whoever was the author) did aſcribe to his own ſtrength; ſo that this, I will perform muſt be underſtood of his preſent ſettled reſolution, and confidence of Gods aſſiſtance for the future. But neither then muſt this performance be underſtood of perfeƈt legal obedience, not liable to any lapſes, or infirmities: but of ſuch as God in mercy doth accept, where there is a real will and endeavour. See Rom. Chap. 7. and upon Pſal. 18. 20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſſe.

V. 107. quicken me] See Notes on ver. 77, 88.

V. 108. the free-will-offerings of my mouth] Give me cauſe by delivering me, to praiſe thee, and offer what I have freely vowed, Pſal. 116. 17, 18. & 54. 6.

V. 109. in my hand] I am continually in danger of my life. A thing in the hand, is eaſily taken away. See the like phraſe, Judg. 12. 3. 1 Sam. 19. 5. & 28. 21. Job 13. 14.

V. 110. have laid a ſnare for me] Pſal. 140. 5. & 141. 9.

V. 111. as an heritage for ever] Deut. 33. 4. I eſteemed no worldly thing ſo, but made thy word mine inheritance.

V. 112. to perform] Heb. to do.

V. 113. I hate vain thoughts] Whoſoever will embrace Gods Words aright, muſt abhor all phantaſies and imaginations of himſelf and others, in Gods ſervice, and the way to heaven.

V. 114. my hiding place] Pſal. 32. 7.

and my ſhield] Pſal. 18. 2.

V. 115. Depart from me, ye evil doers] Matth. 7. 23. pſal. 6. 8. And hinder me not in keeping Gods law.

V. 116. let me not be aſhamed of my hope] Which I ſhall be, if I have not the thing hoped for, Rom. 5. 5.

V. 117. Hold thou me up] He deſireth Gods continual aſſiſtance, leſt he ſhould faint in this race, which he had begun.

V. 118. their deceit it is falſhood] The crafty practices of them who contemn thy law, ſhall be brought to nought. They ſhall be caught in their own craft: Atque ſeſe cùm fruſtantur, fruſtari alios ſtolidi exiſtimant: as one of the ancient Comicks expreſſes it.

V. 119. putteſt away] Heb. cauſeſt to ceaſe.

like droſſe] Ezek. 22. 18, 22. which infect thy people, as droſs doth the metal.

droſſe] Heb. droſſes, That is, the vileſt droſſe.

V. 120. My fleſh trembleth for fear of thee] Thy judgements do not onely teach me obedience, but alſo cauſe me to fear, conſidering mine own weakneſſe, Hab. 3. 16.

V. 122. Be ſurety for thy ſervant for good] Put thy ſelf between mine enemies and me, as if thou wert my pledge.

V. 123. Mine eyes fail for thy ſalvation] ver. 82.

the word of thy righteouſneſſe] Or, thy righteous word, as ver. 62.

V. 124. Deal with thy ſervant according unto thy mercy] He boaſteth not of his ſervice to God, but deſireth that as he made him by his grace, ſo he would coutinue his favour toward him.

V. 126. It is time for thee] The Prophet ſheweth, that when the wicked have brought all things to confuſion, and Gods word to utter contempt, then it is Gods time to help and ſend remedy.

to work] To perform thy promiſe to me leſt I be deſtroyed by my foes, who will be kept in by no laws any longer, no not by the law of God.

V. 127. Therefore I love thy commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold] Pſal. 19. 10. Prov. 8. 11.

Therefore I love thy commandments] Seeing they diſcourage men, ſo that few dare ſerve thee, I do it the more diligently leſt thy ſervice ſhould fall to the ground.

V. 128. I hate every falſe way] ver. 181, 104. That is, whatſoever diſſenteth from the purity of thy word.

V. 129. Thy teſtimonies are wonderful] Containing high and ſecret myſteries, ſo that I am moved with admiration, and reverence of them.

V. 130. The entrance of thy words giveth light] The ſimple idiots, that ſubmit themſelves to God, have their eyes opened, and their minds illuminated, ſo ſoon as they begin to read Gods word, Pſal. 19. 7, 8.

V. 131. and panted] My zeal toward thy word was ſo great. A metaphor from thoſe that run after a thing they earneſtly deſire, till they be out of breath: or, from thirſty creatures, pſal. 42. 1.

V. 132. Look thou upon me, &c.] Pſal. 106. 4.

as thou uſeſt to do unto thoſe that love thy name] Heb. according to the cuſtom towards thoſe, &c.

V. 133. let not any iniquity have dominion over me] Pſal. 19. 13.

V. 135 to ſhine upon thy ſervant] Pſalm 4. 6

V. 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes] He ſheweth what ought to be the zeal of Gods children, when they ſee his word contemned.

V. 137. upright are thy Judgements] It becomes thoſe that confeſſe God to be righteous to acknowledge his laws to be ſo alſo, and to live according to them.

V. 138. righteous] Heb. righteouſneſſe.

faithful] Heb. faithfulneſſe.

V. 139. My zeal hath conſumed me] Pſalm 69. 9. John 2. 17.

conſumed me] Heb. cut me off.

V. 140. Thy word is very pure] Gold had need to be fined, but thy word is perfection it ſelf, pſal. 12. 6.

pure] Heb. tryed, or, refined.

V. 141. I am ſmall and deſpiſed] This David, though no ordinary man, might ſay of himſelf, in his humility: eſpecially when in perſecution, and diſtreſſe; as pſal. 22. 6. But I am a worm, and no man: a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. But the author of the pſalm, according to moſt Interpreters, being uncertain, we cannot certainly tell in what reſpect, eſpecially, he might uſe theſe words.

yet do I not forget thy precepts] This is the true trial, to ſtick to Gods law in adverſity.

V. 143. taken hold on me] Heb. found me.

V. 144. and I ſhall live] So that the life of man, without the knowledge of God, is death.

V. 145. I cryed with my whole heart] He ſheweth that all his affections and whole heart were bent to Godward, for to have help in his dangers.

V. 146. and I ſhall keep] Or, that I may keep.

V. 148. Mine eyes prevent the night watches] He was more earneſt in the ſtudy of Gods word, than they that keep the watch were in their charge, pſal. 130. 6.

V. 149. judgement] Or, cuſtom, ver. 132.

V. 150. that follow after miſchief] That earneſtly ſeek to undo me.

V. 152. Concerning thy Teſtimonies I have known of old, that thou haſt founded them for ever] Among men, ſaith Ariſtotle, τὰ δίκαια κινούμενα, that is juſt at one time, which at another is unjuſt; and on the contrary: which makes many men think, that nothing in nature is juſt or right, but by opinion onely. But among the gods, ſaith he, perchance it is not ſo. It is a great comfort to godly men, in times of general confuſion, when wickedneſſe is eſtabliſhed by Law, and all things turned up-ſide down to know, that there is a juſt God in heaven, who will in due time judge and reward, not according unto the opinions af the times, but according to the reality of things, revealed unto men in his holy word.

Concerning] Or, Out of.

V. 154. Plead my cauſe, and deliver me] Pſam. 35. 1. and 43. 1.

according to thy word] For without Gods promiſe, there is no hope of deliverance.

V. 156. Great] Or, Many.

judgements] Or, cuſtomes.

V. 158. and was grieved] See Notes on ver. 136.

V. 159. Conſider how I love thy precepts] Our love of Gods law, is a good argument to move God to deliver us.

V. 160. Thy word is true from the beginning] Heb. The beginning of thy word is true. Since thou firſt promiſedſt, even to the end, all thy ſayings are true.

V. 161. Princes have perſecuted me without a cauſe] The threatnings and perſecutions of Princes could not cauſe me to ſhrink from confeſſing thee, whom I more fear than men, ver. 23, 42. or, they ſought to kill me, but I durſt not hurt them when I could, becauſe I feared thy law, as 1 Sam. 24. 6.

V. 164. Seven times a day do I praiſe thee] That is, often and ſundry times, Prov. 24. 16. & 26. 25.

V. 165. Great peace have they that love thy law] God takes care for their good, that take care to do him ſervice according to his law.

nothing ſhall offend them] Heb. they ſhall have no ſtumbling block. This muſt be underſtood of ſuch offending, or ſtumbling, as ends in a total and final defection, or apoſtaſie. For he ſaith before, Trouble and anguiſh, &c. ver. 143. and I beheld the tranſgreſſors, and was grieved, &c. ver. 158. And St. Paul of himſelf, Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not? 2 Cor. 11. 29.

V. 166. Lord, I have hoped for thy ſalvation] Gen. 49. 18.

and do thy commandments] They that make no conſcience of obeying God, cannot hope for deliverance from him.

V. 168. for all my wayes are before thee] Job 34. 21. I had no reſpect of men, ſo as to offend thee, but ſet thee alwayes before mine eyes, as the judge of my doings, and therefore ſtudied to pleaſe thee.

V. 169. Let my cry come near before thee] My earneſt prayer.

according to thy word] As thou haſt promiſed to be a teacher unto all them that depend upon thee.

V. 170. Let my ſupplication come before thee] My prayer for favour.

V. 171. My lips ſhall utter praiſe] ver. 7. This word ſignifieth, to pour forth continually, like a fountain, Pſal. 78. 2.

when thou haſt taught me thy ſtatutes] All his prayer and deſire is to profit in the word of God.

V. 173. for I have choſen thy precepts] Joſh. 24. 22. Prov. 1. 29. To follow it of mine own accord: or, among all other things, for my chief good and treaſure, wherewith I am ſatisfied.

V. 174. I have longed for thy ſalvation, O Lord] ver. 166.

delights] Heb. delights.

V. 175. let thy judgements help me] That is, thy provident care over me, and wherewith thou wilt judge mine enemies.

V. 176. I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep] Eſay 53. 6. All we like ſheep, &c. Thou therefore that art the good ſhepherd, Luk. 15. 4. ſeek me, and bring me home into the Church, which is thy fold. Of the manifold errors and deviations of men in point of life; and purſuite of happineſs, much hath been written by ancient Philoſophers, whereby it appears that they were not unſenſible, or ignorant of the miſerable condition of man, naturally, without a guide; though they knew not the cauſe of it, (Adams fall:) and much leſſe, the remedy, by Chriſt. Errare, atque viam palantes quærere vitæ; is the buſineſſe of all, or moſt men in the world, (even of many that think very well of their preſent condition:) according to one of their Poets. See alſo upon Pſal. 23. 3. in paths of righteouſneſſe.

PSAL. CXX.

Title.

A ſong of degrees] Of lifting up: for they did lift up their voices ſometimes in ſinging, 2 Chron. 20. 19. or, of excellencies, 1 Chron. 17, 17. or, to be ſung on the ſteps of the temple; (which ſome of the Rabbines ſay were fifteen in number; between the atrium Iſraelis, or the mens Court, and the womens:

according to the number of Pſalms here following, that bear that inſcription,) on high dayes: or, at their ſeveral ſtations, as they returned from Babylon.

Verſe 1. I*N my diſtreſſe I cryed unto the Lord*] Pſal. 118. 5. Albeit, the children of God ought to rejoyce, when they are in extremity; yet it is a great grief to the fleſh, to hear evil for well doing.

V. 3. What ſhall be given unto thee ? or, what ſhall be done unto thee, thou falſe tongue ?] Or, What ſhall the deceitful tongue give unto thee ? or, what ſhall it profit thee ? He aſſured himſelf, that God would turn their craft to their own deſtruction.

done] Heb. added.

V. 4. Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper] Or, It is as the ſharp arrows of the mighty man with coals of juniper, pſal 64.3.

Sharp arrows of the mighty] God will ſend on them piercing ſorrows, pſal. 45. 6. Deut. 32. 23. Ezek. 5. 16. pſal. 140. 10.

coals of juniper] Heb. of junipers. That is, of many junipers, which will laſt.

V. 5. in Meſech] Theſe were people of Arabia, which came from Japhet, Gen. 10. 2.

of Kedar] Of Iſhmaels poſterity, Gen. 25. 13. which uſed to live in tents, and remove from place to place, for the paſture of the cattel, Cant. 1. 5.

That I ſojourn in Meſech, that I dwell] Not thoſe very people, among whom he never was, but people like them for cruelty. This is the tranſlation of all, or moſt later Interpreters: and of the Chaldee Paraphraſt alſo. But ancient Greek Interpreters, not the Septuagint onely, but others alſo, with the vulgar Latin, take this Meſech here, not for a proper name, but for a noune ſubſtantive, properly ſignifying length, or protraction: and here, as they conceive, importing length of time, or long continuance: Οἴ μοι ὅτι ἡ παροικία μου ἐμακρύνθη: (that is, Wo is me, that my ſojourning in a ſtrange land is prolonged:) So the L X X. and other two Greek tranſlations, to the ſame effect. A late learned man, who hath taken great paines about Scripture Geography, doth endeavour to aſſert this verſion of the L X X. in this place, as true and genuine, againſt the Chaldees, and other later ones: and in my judgement, he hath done it, if not undoubtedly, yet very plauſibly. I will not find others againſt ſo many tranſlators, of fame and credit: I my ſelf ſhall take the liberty, to embrace what I think moſt probable. One of his reaſons is; Meſech, when taken for a proper name in Scripture, as in Moſes, and Ezekiel, often; it is always, (this one controverted place excepted) joyned with Tubal. It is in Ezekiel, at leaſt five times: and always ſo joyned. In Eſdras alſo it is found ſo joyned. Now here being joyned with Kedar (a ſecond argument) it is more improbable it ſhould be a proper name, becauſe Kedar all grant to be a country of Arabia: whereas Meſech is by moſt (and among others by Diodati, upon the place,) taken for Moſcovia: a Region very far diſtant from Arabia. More to this purpoſe the Reader may find in the ſaid Author, if he pleaſe.

for peace] Or, a man of peace.

PSAL CXXI.

Verſe 1. I Will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help] I am ſorry to find ſome Expoſitors, men otherwiſe of no ſmall account, ſo ready to find fault, where there is ſo little reaſon. We have met with them already once or twice upon that ſtraine: vox inconſiderata, and the like. Here again they except againſt theſe words, as uttered in a fit of impatience, or infidelity: which though they confeſſe it did not laſt long, but was preſently checkt by the Pſalmiſt himſelf in the next verſe: yet I conceive they do him a great deal of wrong, in impoſing their own fancies, upon his words, and expreſsions: which I conceive not onely blameleſſe, but very emphatical, in a quite contrary ſenſe. They ſpend many words upon this argument, to make their imaginary charge good: but I will not ſpend many, to relate them. It ſhall ſuffice me, to have given the Reader warning, and the Prophet need no other vindication, than to have his words made ſo cleer, (which we hope we ſhall) that there ſhall be no ground left for any ſuſpicion. Judea is (was I am ſure, and is ſtill, I think) a very mountanous Country. The whole land is called a hill, for that reaſon, Exod. 15. 17. according to beſt Interpreters. Now becauſe men, multitudes of men, upon high mountains, may be ſeen far off; they that did expect the help of men, or armies, coming to their releaſe, when their condition did require ſpeed, it is likely they did often lift up their eyes towards the mountains, round about. Certain it is, that upon this ſituation of the Country, and common uſe of men, in expectation: many ſpeeches are grounded in the Scriptures; in the Prophets eſpecially. As for example: How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tydings, that publiſheth peace, —— that ſaith unto Sion, thy God reigneth, Eſ. 52. 7 ? The Pſalmiſt therefore here, alluding to this common ſpeech and uſe, moſt ſweetly and elegantly declareth that he alſo will lift up his eyes: but to mountains, from which he certainly knows, that ſalvation will come to him. Had he ſaid no more then ſo; yet I do not conceive that his meaning would have been very doubtful, or obſcure: not more doubtful, or obſcure, than where he ſaith: Lead me to the rock, that is higher than I, Pſal. 61. 2. alluding there too, very ſweetly and wittily, to the ſituation of the Country, and cuſtom of men, in times of publick diſtreſſe, as is there noted. But then when in the very next verſe he doth ſo plainly expreſſe himſelf: My help cometh from the Lord, &c. I do admire how he ſhould be ſo miſtaken by any man. I will ſpare their words; but I could ſay no leſſe, without doing the holy Pſalmiſt, (not to go higher,) wrong. In effect, therefore, the Pſalmiſt doth diſclaim all expectation of help from any other hill, than heaven: (which ſometimes alſo is called a hill; as is here obſerved by ſome:) the moſt proper object as well of our eyes, as of our hearts: for which alſo man, by Gods providence (Os homini ſublime dedit, cælumque tueri juſſit, &c.) is fitted in his bodily ſtructure.

unto the hills] Some are of opinion that Mount Sion and Moriah, upon which the Sanctuary ſtood (upon one of them, at leaſt; but ſuppoſed to ſtand upon both, becauſe of the neerneſs:) might be intended by the Pſalmiſt. And true it is, that help, and ſalvation, (or to that effect) is ſaid ſometimes to come from the Sanctuary, where God was pleaſed in thoſe dayes to manifeſt himſelf, and to afford the effects of his preſence, to humble ſupplicants, after a more peculiar manner: and not to come from the Sanctuary onely, but from thoſe hills alſo. See before upon Pſal. 14. 7. Out of Zion: and Pſal. 5. 7. towards thy holy Temple. We will not therefore reject this, if any like it: but prefer, in our own judgement, the former interpretation: as more proper to the place, and more emphatical. Either of theſe interpretations will ſerve to ſave us from that different but violent, interpretation in the margin: Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills ? whence ſhould my help come ? There will be no need of this ſhift: though of the two, I ſhould think that more tolerable, than to aſperſe the Pſalmiſt, and to lay the blame of our miſtakes upon him wrongfully.

V. 2. My help cometh from the Lord] Pſal. 124. 8.

which made heaven and earth] He ſecretly accuſeth mans ingratitude, who doth not depend upon Gods power.

V. 3. he that keepeth thee will not ſlumber] He ſheweth, that Gods providence watcheth not onely over his Church in general, but alſo over every member thereof in particular.

V. 4. ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep] He will neglect no occaſion of thy preſervation, Pſal. 127. 1. Eſay 27. 3.

V. 5. thy ſhade upon thy right hand] Eſay 25. 4.

V. 6. The ſun ſhall not ſmite thee by day] Neither heat nor cold, nor, any diſcommodity ſhall be able to annoy thee, Pſalm 91. 5. See more there.

V. 7. The Lord ſhall preſerve thee from all evil] The Lord ſhall keep thee from danger both abroad, and at home, Deut. 28. 6.

PSAL. CXXII.

Verſe 1. I Was glad] He rejoyceth, that God had brought the Ark to a place, where it ſhould remain. Or it may be, this pſalm may be of the ſame argument as pſalm 84. How amiable, &c. See more there upon verſe 3. Yea the ſparrow, &c.

V. 2. Our feet ſhall ſtand] Whereas they were wont to wander to and fro, as the Ark removed.

V. 3. that is compact together] By the artificial joyning and beauty of the houſes, is ſignified the concord and love that is between the Citizens.

V. 4. the tribes go up] All the tribes do reſort thither, and pray there.

unto the teſtimony of Iſrael] To the Ark, the ſign of Gods preſence, and in which were the two Tables, containing Gods teſtimony, how he would be ſerved, and from whence God declared his preſence by Oracle, Exod. 25. 21, 22.

V. 5. are ſet] Heb. do ſit.

the thrones of the houſe of David] In whoſe houſe God placed the throne of juſtice, and made it a figure of Chriſts Kingdom.

V. 7. Peace be within thy walls] The favour of God give thee peace, and keep thee from all wars, Pſal. 147. 14.

V. 8. For my brethren and companions ſakes] Not onely for mine own ſake, but for all the faithful, whom I account as my brethren, Pſal. 119. 63.

PSAL. CXXIII.

Verſe 1. L*Iſt I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the heavens*] Pſal. 121. 1. Pſal. 15. 3.

V. 2. untill that he have mercy upon us] Until he deliver us out of this miſery. This argues conſtancy in prayer, Luke 18. 1, 7.

V. 3. we are exceedingly filled with contempt] Pſal. 88. 3. When the faithful are ſo full, that they can no more endure the oppreſſions and ſcornings of the wicked, then with hungry deſires they cry for help, not ceaſing till they obtaine it; 2 Chron. 20. 12.

PSAL. CXXIV.

Verſe 1. I*F it had not been the Lord*] He ſheweth, That God was ready to help at need, and that there was none other way to be delivered, but onely by his power.

V. 3. Then they had ſwallowed us up quick] So unable were we to reſiſt. A metaphor taken from ravenous beaſts, who ſo ſpeedily, and greedily devour their prey, that it ſeems to go quick down their throats, as Jonah did with the Whale, Jonah, 1. 17.

V. 4. Then the waters had overwhelmed us] Pſal. 69. 2. he uſeth moſt proper ſimilitudes of ſwallowing and drowning, to expreſſe the great danger that the Church had been in, and out of which God miraculouſly had delivered them.

V. 7. Our ſoul is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowlers] Pſal. 91. 3.

as a bird out of the ſnare] For the wicked did not onley furiouſly rage againſt the faithfull, but craftily imagined to deſtroy them.

PSAL. CXXV.

Verſe 1. W*Hich cannot be removed*] Though the world be ſubject to mutations, yet the people of God ſhall ſtand ſure, and be defended by Gods providence.

V. 3. the rod of the wicked ſhall not reſt upon the lot of the righteous] Though God ſuffer his to be under the croſſe, (the rod, or ſcepter of the wicked, or tyrannical men,) for a while; yet this croſſe ſhall not ſo reſt upon them, that it ſhould drive them from hope, and cauſe them to betake themſelves to evil courſes, Prov. 30. 9.

the wicked] Heb. wickedneſſe.

V. 5. As for ſuch] He foretelleth the great proſperity of the Church, when God ſhall have purged it from evil doers.

as turn aſide unto their crooked wayes] Thoſe that fall away from God, ſhall have their portion with thoſe that never were with him, Pſal. 73. 27.

peace ſhall be upon Iſrael] Pſal. 128. 6. Gal. 6. 16.

PSAL. CXXVI.

Verſe 1. T*Urned again the captivity of Zion*] Heb. returne the returning of Zion.

like them that dream] Their deliverance was as a thing incredible, and therefore ſeemed rather a dream, than a thing in truth performed, Act. 12 9.

V. 2. Then was our mouth filled with laughter] He ſheweth, how the godly ought to rejoyce, when God gathereth his Church, or delivereth it.

then ſaid they among the heathen] The very heathen could not but take notice of Gods handy work in our kingdom: and if the Infidels confeſſe Gods wonderful work, the faithful can never ſhew themſelves ſufficiently thankful.

hath done great things for them] Heb. hath magnified to do with them.

V. 4. Turn again our captivity, O God] He doth not, as a man might think, contradict himſelfe. For their return from that Captivity, as appears Ezra and Nehemiah, was a long work, and much oppoſed. Well he might therefore at the ſame time give thanks for that which was ſo happily begun, and pray for the accompliſhment.

as the ſtreams in the South] It is as poſſible for thee to bring back the reſt of the captives from Babylon, as to cauſe ſtreames to break out in dry places, where the Sun ſcorches in the South, Judg. 1, 15. or, it ſhall be as comfortable to us, as rivers of water in dry places.

V. 5. They that ſow in tears, ſhall reap in joy] The matter of this excellent ſentence in a more general ſenſe, to wit, that in the courſe of nature, one contrary begets another, mel generat fel, &c. pleaſure, ſorrow; and ſorrow pleaſure; hath been the object of many ancient Philoſophers ſpeculation, and hath alſo ſententiouſly been expreſſed by ſome of them: but by none ſo pithily and emphatically, as by our Pſalmiſt here. I ſhall onely mention two here; neither of them Philoſophers, but Latine Writers both: Pliny, the elder, or Uncle; and Pliny; the nephew, or younger. The firſt, thus; Quæ magna gaudia, niſi ex malis? quæ mala immenſa, niſi ex ingentibus gaudiis? I give him the precedence, becauſe of his age: but the latter comes more fully to our purpoſe; and his words are very notable indeed: had he intended a paraphraſe upon the Pſalmiſt, he could not have ſpoken better; Habet has vices conditio mortalium, ut adverſa ex ſecundis; ex adverſis, ſecunda naſcantur. Occultat utrorumque ſemina Deus, & plerumque bonorum malorúmque cauſæ ſub diverſâ ſpecie latent. He makes it a great myſtery, not of nature, as ſome others before him, upon this ſubject; (though they might mean the ſame thing too, by that word,) but of Gods providence, plainly. See alſo upon Pſal. 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c.

ſhall reap] Or, let them reap.

joy] Or, ſinging.

V. 6. bearing precious ſeed] That is, ſeed which was ſcarce and dear: Or, precious, becauſe of the effects of it, being the ſeed of immortality, as the words may more generally, or in the myſtical ſenſe import. But whether precious be the meaning of the Hebrew word, is not agreed, among Interpreters. So the word indeed is expounded Job 28. 18. for the price of wiſdom is above Rubies. It is Kimki's expoſition there. But others tranſlate, acquiſitio ſapientiæ, that is, the purchaſing of wiſdom; which is as probable a tranſlation. Others therefore from Amos 9. 13. משך הזרע, he that ſoweth (or, draweth forth; as in the margine (ſeed: makes this משך to be a proper word to expreſſe the manner of caſting, or ſcattering ſeed corn, by a kind of drawing, or orderly ſtretching of the arm, which is not done without ſome art. So that according to them, the words ſhould be tranſlated, portans tractum ſeminis; that is, Bearing draw-ſeed; or, ſeed to be ſowen. Others again there be, who would have the word to ſignifie (as it is here in the margin) a ſeed basket. Somewhat may be ſaid for every one of theſe different interpretations; but tractus ſeminis, as in Amos, is in my judgement, the moſt warrantable. The beſt is, none of them are much amiſſe to the main ſenſe and purpoſe. They that tranſlate in Job acquiſitio ſapientiæ, tranſlate here, acquiſitum ſemen; which alſo may be allowed: though it doth not follow of neceſſity, that if משך ſignifie acquiſitio there, it muſt here, acquiſitum. The word, as moſt others, may in different conſtructions, or upon different occaſions, have different ſignifications which cannot be ſaid of that place of Amos; becauſe there it is ſpoken of ſeed, as here; and therefore likely to have but one ſignification in both places.

ſhall doubtleſs come] Or, let him come.

doubtleſs come] Heb. coming come.

PSAL. CXXVII.

Title.

for Solomon] Or, of Solomon, Pſal. 72.

Verſe 1. E*Xcept the Lord build the houſe*] It may be taken, for building the houſe, or encreaſing the family, Exod. 1. 21.

that build it] Heb. that are builders of it in it: or, they labour in vain about it, that build it.

except the Lord keep the city] The publick eſtate of the common-wealth.

V. 2. It is vain for you to riſe up early] Which watch and ward: or, which labour hard for your living.

to eat the bread of ſorrows] Gotten by hard labour and care, Gen. 3. 19.

ſo he giveth] Or, he doth rightly give.

he giveth] Your care cannot bring you true reſt, but Gods bleſſing will, Prov. 10. 22.

his beloved ſleep] It may be an alluſion to Solomons name, Jedidiah, 2 Sam. 12. 25.

V. 3. Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord] Gen. 33. 5. and 48. 4. Joſh. 24. 3, 4. Begotten while their parents are young, and which may live to comfort them in their old age. See the contrary, Gen. 44. 20.

V. 5. hath his quiver full of them] Heb. hath filled his quiver with them.

they ſhall not be aſhamed] Their children will be ready to plead for them, and to right them, when they are wronged by others: or, their enemies cannot ſhame them, with objecting to them the want of children, which in thoſe dayes was a reproach, both to man and woman, becauſe ſome curſe was thought to lie upon thoſe that had none. So Luke 1. 25. Elizabeth ſpeaks of her ſelf, having been ſteril to that time, and now with childe; Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the dayes wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

ſhall ſpeak with] Or, ſhall ſubdue, as Pſal. 18. 47. or, deſtroy.

in the gate] The wonted places of publick appearance in thoſe dayes, it being the place for Courts of juſtice, and trials at law, which brought great reſort of people.

PSAL. CXXVIII.

Verſe 1. W*Alketh in his wayes*] Pſal. 119. 1.

in his wayes] God approveth not our life, except it be reformed according to his word, Pſal. 119. 9.

V. 2. For thou ſhalt eat the labour of thine hands] Iſai. 3. 10. The world eſteemeth them happy, which live in wealth and idleneſſe; but the Holy Ghoſt approveth them beſt, that live of the profit of their labours.

V. 3. thy children like olive-plants] Becauſe Gods favour appeareth in none outward thing, more than in increaſe of children, he promiſeth to enrich the faithful with this gift.

V. 5. out of Zion] With ſuch bleſſings, as he granted from Sion, the place of his ſpecial reſidence.

thou ſhalt ſee the good] See it with delight, and have a part in it, Pſal. 27. 4.

of Jeruſalem] The bleſſing on their own families, is not comfortable to good men, except the Church be bleſſed alſo, 2 Sam. 11. 11.

and peace upon Iſrael] Gal. 6. 16.

PSAL CXXIX.

Verſe 1. M*Any*] Or, Much.

may Iſrael now ſay] The Church now afflicted, ought to remember, how her condition hath ever been ſuch from the beginning, to be moleſted moſt grievouſly by the wicked: yet in time it hath ever been delivered, Pſalm 34. 19.

V. 2. from my youth] From the very firſt time, that I began to be a people diſtinguiſhed from others; Jer.2.2.

V. 3. The plowers plowed upon my back.] The extreme cruelty of the enemies was ſuch, That their bodies might ſeem to be furrowed throughout with ſtripes, their oppreſſions were ſo grievous.

V. 4 The Lord is righteous] Becauſe God is righteous, he cannot but plaugue his adverſaries, and deliver his, by diſſipating the plots of the wicked, 2 Theſ.16. 7. 2 Pet. 2. 9.

V. 5. Let them all be confounded] When they ſee their crafty plots diſappointed.

turned back] By God.

that hate Zion] That is, the people of God.

V. 6. as the graſſe upon the houſe tops] He wiſheth, That the enemies of God, and of his people, who lift themſelves moſt high, may be ſuddenly conſumed with the heat of Gods wrath, Pſal.37. 2. & 73. 19.

V. 8. Neither do they which go by, ſay] That is, the wicked ſhall periſh as that graſſe; that, to which no man wiſheth a bleſſing.

The bleſſing of the Lord be opon you] Ruth 2.4.

PSAL. CXXX.

Verſe 1. OUt of the depths] Being in great diſtreſſe and ſorrow, he ſpeaketh as one in the depth of ſome mighty waters overwhelming him, Pſal. 42. 7. and 69. 1, 2. 14. Jon 2.5.

V. 3. If thou, Lord, ſhouldeſt mark iniquities] So as to deal with man in extremity of juſtice for his ſin: Pſal.123.2.

who ſhall ſtand] He declareth that no man can be juſt before God, without forgiveneſſe of ſins, Pſalm 32.1. Rom. 3.23,24.

V. 4. But there is forgiveneſſe with thee, that thou mayeſt be feared] The ordinary conſequent, or effect of forgiveneſſe is, the removing of thoſe, whether judgements or chaſtiſements that we have incurred through ſin. And this was Davids caſe here, as appears by his words, verſe 1. Out of the depths; to wit, of miſery, croſſes and calamities; as beſt Interpreters there: as alſo by thoſe, verſe 7. and with him is plenteous redemption: which are intended of deliverances from temporal calamity: His aym therefore, in ſaying that there is forgiveneſſe with God, is mainly to the conſequent of his forgiveneſſe, or remiſſion of ſins; to wit, deliverance, or help in adverſity. He addes therefore, that thou mayeſt be feared: that is, in effect, ut colaris; that thou mayeſt be worſhipped: for feare here, as in many other places of Scripture, is taken for the whole worſhip of God: which is well obſerved by ſome Expoſitors here. And as the Pſalmiſt ſaith here, that God forgives (that is, helps, and delivers) and therefore is feared; ſo elſewhere, that becauſe he is feared, (or worſhipped) therefore he delivers. To which purpoſe are thoſe words; Like as a father pitieth his children; ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him, Pſalm 103. 13. It is a main ground of Gods worſhip, to believe that God is merciful and gracious; that is both able, and willing to help men, (but thoſe that fear him eſpecially) in miſery and affliction. When therefore Epicurus maintained that God was to be feared, or worſhipped, propter excellentiam naturæ, though he did not at all intereſſe himſelf in humane affaires, neither to do good or hurt unto any; yet to be feared, for the excellency of his Nature: wiſe Heathens well inferred upon it, that this was but a meer pretence of his, becauſe he would not be thought to aboliſh all religion among men; but that in effect, he did abſolutely deny a God; or at leaſt, that God was to be feared, or worſhipped by men. Epicurus verò ex animis hominum extraxit radicitùs religionem, cùm Diis immortalibus & opem & gratiam ſuſtulit: ſaith one of them, (Cic. De Nat.D.) who handles at large; and concludes, Si maximè talis eſt Deus, ut nullâ gratiâ, nullâ hominum charitate teneatur; valeat. Quid enim dicam propitius ſit, ſi propitius eſſe poteſt nemini. For what have I to do, ſaith he, with a God that cannot be propitious? It is the very word, here uſed by beſt Latine Interpreters, Quia apud te eſt propitiatio, ut timearis. And this, ut timearis, being expounded more generally, ut colaris, as I ſaid before it is; it is the very thing that that authour doth there poſitively maintain. Thus is the coherence, as I conceive, made very plain, which hath not a little troubled Expoſitors, and yet ſtill left; that way that they go commonly, in my judgement at leaſt, very obſcure. See more upon Pſal. 26. 3. For thy loving kindneſſe.

V. 5. I wait for the Lord, my ſoul doth wait; and in his word do I hope] Iſai.8.17. & 30.18.

in his word do I hope] Which doth aſſure me of Gods mercy, and of the pardon of my ſins.

V. 6. more than they that watch for the morning] More than thoſe, that watching abroad in dangerous times, and tedious weather, look frequently after the peep of day, Iſai 21. 12. Pſal. 119. 147, 148.

I ſay, more than they that watch for the morning] Or, which watch unto the morning.

V. 7. for with the Lord there is mercy] Pſal. 86. 5. When I ſhall be aſſured of Gods mercy, the reſt of Gods people may expect it, as I do.

V. 28. from all his iniquities] He ſhall forgive him his ſins, and ſo deliver him from the puniſhment, temporall adverſity. So Pſal.103. 3,4. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities---who redeemeth thy life from deſtruction, &c.

PSAL. CXXXI.

Verſe 1. MY heart is not haughty] He ſetteth forth his humility, as an example to rulers and governours.

exerciſe] Heb. walk.

or in things too high for me] Which paſſed the meaſure of his apprehenſion, or limits of his vocation.

high] Heb. wonderfull.

V. 2. Surely I have behaved] The form of an oath. See Pſal. 95. 11.

my ſelf] Heb. my ſoul.

as a child that is weaned of his mother] He was void of ambition and malicious deſires; which children, ſo young, are not ſubject unto, Matth. 18. 1,3 1 Cor. 14. 20.

V. 3. from henceforth] Heb. from now.

PSAL. CXXXII.

Verſe 1. LOrd remember David] Who was the authour of this Pſalm, whether David, or Solomon, is not certainly known. But either David, or Solomon, is generally agreed upon. But being the Book beareth the name of David, and that no other Name is here prefixed to this particular Pſalm; I think it is more warrantable, if no material objection can be made againſt it, to adſcribe it unto David himſelf. It is true he ſpeaketh in the third perſon, all the way: but a reaſon is given of that, becauſe he intended it, for a ſet form of prayer and ſupplication upon a ſpeciall occaſion; to be uſed either by his ſon and ſucceſſour Solomon; as ſome believe: or by the whole aſſembly, as others: the like whereof we had before, Pſal.20. & 21. where David for the ſame reaſon (as there obſerved) ſpeaketh in the third perſon: Remember thy burnt offerings, &c. As for this form of commending ones ſelfe to God, by the word Remember: we have the like Nehem. 13. 14. 22.29 31 Neither is it improbable, that Nehemiah therein did imitate David: wherein we have a further confirmation alſo, that David was the authour. See more concerning this word and form, upon the Title of Pſal.38. to remember.

Remember David and all his afflictions] Of all things that David now did in his life time, among all his good acts, which made him ſo gracious both with God and men; and got him the reputation of an incomparable Prince upon Holy Records: there was not any thing wherein he either pleaſed himſelf more, or had more confidence in towards God; than in thoſe things that he did for God immediately; that is, for his Ark: his Temple, and the ſervice of his Temple, to ſee that ſetled and eſtabliſhed in his dayes: or at leaſt to provide for the ſetling and eſtabliſhing of it in his ſonnes reign. Yet ſtrange it is to ſee, that notwithſtanding his zeal, his piety, and the ſincerity of his heart; how much he was put to it, and partly put of, and diſappointed in thoſe his godly deſignes. For the Ark, when he firſt attempted it, he was deferred by unexpected events, and durſt not proceed any further: and in the mean time, God knoweth what inward confuſion, and perplexity of ſpirit his ſoule did ſuſteine: Three moneths he then continued in that caſe, which is very long, for ſuch a condition. Afterwards, when he purpoſed to build a Temple to God, (for which who would have thought any man fitter than David? a Prince of ſuch eſteem with God, and ſo zealous for God, as we may boldly ſay, no Prince ever was more) yet even then was his perſonal performance in that great and glorious work, (though his purpoſe and deſire was) not accepted of. We would not inferre from hence, that David was leſſe dear unto God, much leſſe, leſſe religious, than commonly apprehended to have been: God forbid, that we ſhould inferre from this, that if good and godly Princes (as Hiſtories will tell us of many) be diſappointed of their purpoſes, and ſome of them ſeem to miſcarry, even to the loſſe of their lives and Kingdomes, when they laboured and took great pains to ſettle religion, and to advance Gods worſhip in a Kingdome; we ſhould not wonder at it, and either murmure againſt God and his juſtice, becauſe we cannot penetrate into the depth of his Counſels: or have a leſſe opinion of the worth and piety of thoſe Princes, becauſe they had no better ſucceſſe in their pious enterpriſes. David it ſeems, what from reaſon, what from divine revelation, was ſufficiently ſecured, that God did accept of his pious endeavours, though he was not pleaſed to give them accompliſhment, in his life time and though to thoſe that took effect; he added much trouble and affliction, For not only here, but Pſalm 38. & 70. when he was in great extremity, he made bold with God, to entitle thoſe two Pſalmes, (whereof ſee upon Pſal.38.) להזכיר for remembrance: as if all motives that he could poſſibly think of, to draw Gods help and aſſiſtance, had been included in that one word, whereby he did put him in mind of his zeal for his Church, and ſervice.

V. 2. How he] Or, Who.

mighty God of Jacob] Gen 49. 24.

V. 3. Surely, &c.] Heb. If I ſhall come. The form of an oath: Let me periſh if I do it, Pſal.95.15. & 131. 2.

I will not come] This ſeems very ſtrange and unlikely (to be taken in ordinary conſtruction) that David ſhould ſo peremptorily vow, nay ſwear, that he would not come into his houſe, nor go to bed, &c. untill he had done that; which could neither be done in one day, in caſe he had had good warrant for the doing of it; neither had any certainty, that it ſhould be done and accompliſhed (as who can be, of any thing future ?) whileſt he lived. Junius therefore very plauſibly, expounds David not of his ordinary houſe, or bed: but of a ſtately new houſe, the building whereof he conceives intimated, 2 Sam. 5. 9. and 1 Chron. 15. 1. the uſe whereof David might well forbear for a ſeaſon; or if it had ſo fallen out, altogether abſtain from it, rather than to break his oath. I ſaid it was plauſible: but ſome objections may be made againſt it; neither do I find him followed in it by other Interpreters. Some conceive that the words may be ſomewhat hyberbolical, and that by ſwearing here, is only intended an earneſt deſire, and fixed reſolution: and again, If I come into my houſe, &c. that is, to reſt and enjoy my ſelf with a contented mind: if I make it not my care, and my buſineſſe; and think of it night and day, &c. In very deed, a man may go very farre in his expreſsions, in that kind, and deliver ſome things abſolutely, which neverthelеſſe are preſuppoſed to be underſtood upon ſome general conditions, or ſuppoſitions, upon the failing of which, the obligation of performance may be thought voyd. But in bargains or covenants between man and man, we are more preciſely tyed to words, there is a reaſon for it. But this may ſerve here, as to Davids words.

into the tabernacle] Kings houſes are but tabernacles, no abiding-places, Heb. 13. 14.

of my houſe] He meanes, of his new houſe, 2 Sam. 5. 9. 1 Chr. 15. 1. he would neither dwell nor ſleep in it, till the ark were in his reſting place; that is, he would never do ſo quietly, till that were done.

V. 5. Untill I find out a place for the Lord] That is, the ark, which was a ſign of Gods preſence, Num. 10 35, 36.

an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob] Heb. habitations; that is, a ſtately habitation of divers rooms, ver. 7.

V. 6. we heard of it at Ephratah] The Ark was firſt placed in Shiloh, in the Tribe of Ephraim: which Tribe, ſome Rabbins conceive to be here intended by this word Ephratah. But it is but a conjecture, which hath little ground. For Ephratah may be the name of a City, otherwiſe called Bethlehem: the reaſon of both names being from the fertility of the place. The meaning, according to beſt Interpreters, is rather this; We inhabitants of Bethlehem, or Ephratah, we have heard of it; the fame of this ſolemn bringing of the Ark (whereof ſee before upon Pſal 47. & 68,) is come to us alſo: it was found in Kiriath-jearim, &c. See upon the next words, in the fields of the wood] Or rather, in Kiriath-jearim; the name of the place where the Ark was, when it was brought to Jeruſalem by David, 1 Sam. 6. 21. & 7. 1, 2. Kiriath-jearim, properly ſignifies a Town or City, ſituated near woods: and ſuch a one was this, that was ſo called. The ſenſe had been much plainer ſo: but ſome would have Jeruſalem underſtood by this expreſsion; which is not ſo likely.

V. 7. we will worſhip at his footſtool] Meaning, before his ark.

worſhip at his footſtool] Pſal. 99. 5.

V. 8. Ariſe, O Lord, into thy reſt] Numb. 10. 35. 1 Chr. 6. 41. Pſal. 68. 1. See there.

into thy reſt] Jeruſalem; becauſe that afterward his ark ſhould remove to no other place.

the ark of thy ſtrength] Whence thou ſheweſt thy ſtrength, in hearing the prayer of thy ſervants, and relieving them. See upon Pſal. 63. 2. To ſee thy power and thy ſtrength.

V. 9. Let thy Prieſts be clothed with righteouſneſſe] Let the effect of thy grace ſo appear, both in the Prieſts, and in the people, that it, as evidently, be ſeen on them, and grace them, as a comely garment doth him that weareth it, Job 29. 14. Eſay 61. 10.

V. 10. For thy ſervant Davids ſake] verſe 1. 1 King. 8. 25. Pſal. 89. 20, &c. Eſay 37. 35. Thy covenant made to him, made good alſo thoſe in the temporal eſtate to other of his ſeed, ſo far forth as they kept the covenant.

V. 11. Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet upon thy throne] 2 Sam. 7. 12: 1 King. 8. 25. 2 Chron 6. 16. Luke 1. 69. Acts 2. 30.

thy body] Heb. thy belly, or womb, as Prov. 31. 2.

V. 12. for evermore] Becauſe this cannot be accompliſhed, but in Chriſt, Acts 2. 30. it followeth, that the promiſe was ſpiritual. But ſee more upon Pſal. 72. Give the King thy judgements, &c. upon the title there; about the end.

V. 13. deſired it for his habitation] Pſal. 68. 16.

V. 14. This is my reſt for ever] See upon Pſal. 68. 16. Yea the Lord will dwell in it for ever.

for I have deſired it] Meaning, for his own ſake, and not for any outward excellency in the place it ſelf.

V. 15. abundantly] Or, ſurely,

I will ſatisfie her poor with bread] God will provide for the meaneſt in his Church.

V. 16. I will alſo cloath her Prieſts with ſalvation] That is, with my protection, whereby they ſhall be ſafe.

V. 17. There will I make the horn of David to bud] Luke 1. 69. Though his force and glory for a time, ſeemed to be broken; yet God promiſeth to reſtore them to him, and ſettle them.

lamp] Or, candle. By this word, in Scripture ſtyle, is underſtood often, a ſucceſſor, or child; as in Davids caſe particularly, 1 King 11. 36. that David my ſervant may have a light (or, candle) alway before him in Jeruſalem, and 15. 4. Neverthelеſſe, for Davids ſake did the Lord his God give him a lamp (or candle) in Jeruſalem, to ſet up his ſon after him, &c.

V. 18. His enemies will I cloath with ſhame] I will cloath the one with ſhame, as the other with honour, verſe 6. that is, put them to open and publick ſhame, Pſal 109. 29.

PSAL. CXXXII:

Verſe 1. HOw good] How profitable and pleaſant.

for brethren to dwell together in unity] Of the ſame faith or family, Heb. 13. 1. Gen 13. 8.

together] even together.

V. 2. like the precious] He ſheweth, by theſe ſimilitudes, the commodity of brotherly love.

oyntment upon the head] He alludes to the fragrant oyntment, Exod. 30. 23. & 40. 13.

that went down to the ſkirts of his garments] Or rather, upon the collar, Exod. 28 32. & 39. 23. for it is not likely, that ſo much precious oyle ſhould be poured on him, as ſhould ſhould run down to the bottom of his robe.

V. 3. As the dew of Hermon] The dew that fell upon thoſe mountaines, made them or the lands adjoyning fruitfull: ſo doth concord bring plenty.

for there the Lord commanded the bleſſing] Where there is ſuch an agreement.

commanded the bleſſing] Pſal. 42. 8. & 44. 4. & 71. 3. See upon Pſalm 68 28. Thy God hath commanded thy ſtrength, &c.

and life for evermore] That is, conſtant happineſſe, perpetuated in, and by a bleſſed poſterity.

PSAL. LXXXIV.

Verſe 1. ALl ye ſervants of the Lord] Who are they, to whom the Pſalmiſt doth here addreſſe himſelf, with this title of ſervants of the Lord, I find three ſeverall opinions. Some think the Levites only, becauſe of them particularly, which we do not of others, we read that they had charge of the Temple by night, as well as by day: 1 Chron. 9. 33. Others, take no notice of this; but becauſe they conceive the laſt verſe, The Lord that made, &c. to contain a ſet form of bleſsing, and that it belonged only to the Prieſts to bleſſe the people, Numb 6. 23. therefore they would have the Prieſts only intended: though afterwards they take in the Levites too; as if they alſo, but upon what ground they tell us not, had had a commiſsion to bleſſe. For certainly, Numb. 6. 23. by Aaron and his ſonnes, the Prieſts only can be intended: as is further confirmed, Deut. 21. 5. And the Prieſts,——For them the Lord thy God hath choſen——To bleſſe, &c. For as for Deut. 10. 8. where to miniſter, and to bleſſe, is promiſcuouſly adſcribed to the tribe of Levi in general as in ſuch expreſsions is ordinary: it muſt according to beſt Expoſitors be underſtood diſtinctly: to miniſter and to bleſſe; that is, the Levites to miniſter: and the Prieſts, to bleſſe: both Prieſts and Levites, (ſo properly called) being of one and the ſame tribe, the tribe of Levi, which neverthеleſſe is not without ſome difficulty, or ambiguity, at leaſt; becauſe to miniſter was common to the Prieſts and Levites; as by many places of the Law doth appear. But we will not inſiſt ſo long upon this particular, as to anſwer all objections. The more common, and probable opinion is, that it belonged unto the Prieſts only to bleſſe the people. But that this laſt verſe ſhould be ſo taken, for a form of bleſsing, there is no neceſsity of that. The words may be taken, as ſome Expoſitors would have them, as from the Pſalmiſt to the ſervants of the Lord, (whoever intended) bleſsing them in great good will for their diligence and aſsiduity in praiſing God; whether of themſelves, as is moſt likely; though he ſeem to exhort them to it; (which may be rather an approbation: according to that of the Poet, Qui monet ut facias, quod jam facis ipſe, &c.) or whether upon his exhortation; for their ſpeedy performance and execution. But laſtly, there be alſo, who think that by ſervants of the Lord, are meant here, not only Prieſts and Levites, but other devout people, who in great zeal and devotion to Gods ſervice, commended in Anna, a Propheteſſe widow, Luke 2. 36, 37. were wont to be converſant in the Temple both nights and dayes, in faſting and praying, and other religious duties. All that I find objected againſt this, is that laſt verſe, if it be a ſet formula of bleſsing: but that being very doubtfull, and as likely not to be, (as hath been ſaid) the objection cannot be very ſtrong. There is none of thoſe opinions, but hath its probability; ſo that the Reader, for ought I know, may be left free to his choyce; which hath made me to ſet them down all three.

which by night] Heb. in the night: The day is not here mentioned: not but that it is intended, as well as the night; (as elſewhere upon this occaſion, expreſſed often:) but becauſe it is ſuppoſed that the night being the more unuſual time, if in the night, much more in the day: when all men, that do not make a practiſe of atheiſme and Epicuriſme, are wont to praiſe God, ſome part of it; morning and evening, at leaſt.

ſtand in the houſe of the Lord] It is well obſerved by ſome here, that to ſtand in the Scripture, is ſometimes for to wait, miniſter, or ſerve, Nahum. 12.44. For the Prieſts and the Levites that ſtood: ſee in the Hebrew as the margin tells you: for which in the Text it ſelf; that waited. This is ſome reaſon, why Prieſts and Levites ſhould be underſtood in the former words, rather than others: but no concluding reaſon, becauſe to ſtand, in that ſenſe, is a general word, uſed of Poets, as well as of Prieſts and Levites, but indeed moſt proper unto them, where the Houſe of the Lord is particularly ſpoken of. Yet it may be too, that the word might be uſed of purpoſe here, of them that were not ſuch, to ſhew, that which they did, was in imitation of thoſe, whom God did own mine particularly, above other men; for that extraordinary ſervice which they were bound unto, above other men: in imitation of them, that God might own them alſo, after a more particular manner, (as out of all queſtion he doth ſuch) for their zeal to Him, and his Service.

V. 2. Lift up your hands in the Sanctuary) There is neither in, nor to, in the Original, but ſeeing that one of the two muſt of neceſſity be ſupplyed, there is more probability for the to, as I conceive, (and ſo find it in moſt interpretations) than for this in. See before upon Pſal. 5. 7 towards thy holy Temple. But then by the Holy, (as in the originall: or, holineſſe:) we muſt underſtand Holy κατ᾽ ἐξοχήν: that is, The Holy of Holies: or the Holy Ark: where God was ſuppoſed to reſide, and from whence he was ſaid to hear prayers: as hath been obſerved before more than once.

V. 3. The Lord] The Levites anſwer to the former exhortation, and their prayer for the people in their night-watches: ſuitable to the Prieſts bleſſing, Numb. 6. 24. See upon the former verſes that made heaven and earth] And therefore hath all power, Bleſſe thee with his Fatherly love, declared in Zion, Pſal. 128. 5.

PSAL. CXXXV.

Verſe 2. Ye that ſtand in the houſe of the Lord] Ye Prieſts that ſerve God in the Temple, and ye Levites that do it without in the Courts. Other, think the people to be meant by them, that ſtand in the Courts, Pſal. 134. 1, 2. Luke 1 10. See upon Pſal. 134. 1. All ye ſervants: and, ſtand in the houſe.

V. 4. For the Lord hath choſen Jacob] That is, hath freely loved the poſterity of Abraham, 1 Cor. 8. 5.

choſen Jacob unto himſelfe] Deuteron. 4. 37. & 7. 6, 7 & 10. 15. & 26 18.

V. 5. our Lord is above all gods] Above all that are called gods by reſemblance of dignity. or falſe opinion of men.

above all gods] Pſal. 95. 3. & 97 9.

V. 6. Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did he in heaven and in earth] Pſal. 155. 3 that did he in heaven and in earth] He joyneth Gods power with his Will; that we ſhould not ſeparate them: and hereby he willeth Gods people to depend on his power, which he confirmeth by effects of it.

V. 7. He cauſeth the vapours to aſcend from the ends of the earth, Jer. 10 13.

he maketh lightings for the rain] To make way for the rain, or, to ſhew that rain is coming.

V. 8. Who ſmote the firſt born of Egypt] Exod. 12. 29.

both of man and beaſt] Heb. from man unto beaſt

V. 10. Who ſmote great nations, and ſlew mighty Kings] Numb 21. 24. 25, 26. 34, 35.

V, 12 And gave their land for an heritage] Joſh 12 7. 7. he ſheweth what good the godly receive by Gods power, whereby he deſtroyeth their enemies, and provideth for them.

V. 13 thy memorial, O Lord, throughout all generations] Pſal. 102 12. Exod. 3 15.

throughout all generations] Heb. to generation and generation.

V. 14. For the Lord will judge his people] Deut. 32. 36 Pſal. 26. 1. He ſhall avenge them of their enemies, Pſal. 43. 1.

he will repent himſelf concerning his ſervants] He will take away the plagues he layes on them.

V, 15. The idols of the heathen are ſilver and gold] Pſal. 115. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. He warneth his people to take heed they leave not him, to ſerve Idols, that can neither hear nor help them.

PSAL. CXXXVI.

Verſe 1. O Give thanks unto the Lord for he is good, &c.] 106. 1. & 107. 1. & 118. 1.

for his mercy endureth for ever] Though we are to praiſe God in, and for all his attributes, as power, his juſtice, wiſdom, and the like: yet this repetition throughout the whole Pſalm ſheweth, that God is chiefly praiſed for his mercy and goodneſſe, (whereof ſee upon Pſalm 130. 4. For there is forgiveneſſe with thee, &c.) whether general, to all mankind; (of which ſee upon Pſal. 71. 6. from the womb, and upon Pſal. 107. in the argument of the Pſalm, and upon Pſal. 117. 1. O praiſe the Lord.] or particular, to his Church; wherein the riches of his mercy doth moſt eminently appear.

for his mercy endureth]. This to have been a common conſtant form, as well for ordinary daily praiſes in divine ſervice, as for extraordinary occaſions, may appear by 1 Chron. 16. 71. 2 Chron. 7. 6. Jerem 23. 11. and 2 Chron chap. 5. 3. chap. 7. 3. Ezra 3. 11. and other places of Scripture.

V. 2. God of gods] Deut 10. 17.

V, 9. To him that by wiſdom made the heavens] Gen. 1. 1. Prov 3. 19.

V 5. To him that ſtretched out the earth above the waters] Gen. 1. 9. Jer. 10. 12. See upon Pſal. 24. 2. upon the ſeas.

V. 7. To him that made great lights] Gen. 1. 14.

V. 8. to rule by day] Heb. for the rulings by day.

V 10 To him that ſmote Egypt in their firſt-born] Exod. 12. 29.

V. 11. And brought out Iſrael from among them] Exod. 13 17. Gods mercifnl providence for the good of man, appeareth in all his creatures; but chiefly, in delivering his Church out of the hand of their enemies.

V. 12. With a ſtrong hand] Exod. 6 6.

with a ſtretched out arm] A ſimilitude taken from ſouldiers, who ſtretch out their arm to uſe their full might and beſt ſtrength in exerciſe of arms.

V. 13. To him which divided the red Sea into parts Exod. 14. 21, 22.

V 15. But overthrew Pharaoh and his hoſt in the red ſea] Exod. 14 28 overthrew] Heb. ſhaked off.

V. 16. To him that led his people through the wilderneſſe] Exod. 15. 22.

thorow the wilderneſſe] Where, for the ſpace of forty years, he ſhewed infinite and moſt ſtrange wonders.

V 18. And ſlew famous Kings] Deut. 29 7. Pſal. 135. 10, 11. Declaring thereby, That no power nor authority was ſo dear unto him, as the love of his Church.

V. 19. Sihon king of the Amorites] Numb. 21. 23.

V 20. And Og the King of Baſhan] Num. 21 33.

V 21. And gave their land for an heritage] Joſh 12. 7.

V. 25. Who remembred us in our low eſtate] In our greateſt affliction and ſlavery, when we looked for nothing leſſe, than to have had any ſuccour, Pſal. 113. 7.

V 5, Who giveth food to all fleſh] Pſal. 104. 27. & 144. 15 & 147. 9. Seeing that God provideth even for beaſts, much more hath he care over his Matth 6. 26.

V 6. O give thanks unto the God of heaven] Becauſe all ages have had moſt plain teſtimonies of Gods benefits.

PSAL. CXXXVII.

Verſe 1. T*Here we ſate down*] That is, we abode a long time and albeit that the country was pleaſant, yet could we not ſtay our tears, nor turn us from the true ſervice of God: or, ſate down as men oppreſſed with grief, Ezra 9. 3. Lam. 3. 28.

remembred Zion] Pſal. 42. 4, 6 & 102. 14. Lam. 1. 7.

V. 2. in the midſt thereof] To wit, of that country.

V. 3. required of us a ſong] The Babilonians ſpake thus in mocking us, as though, by our ſilence, we ſhould ſignifiy, that we hoped no more in God

a ſong] Heb. the words of a ſong]

waſted us] Heb. laid us on heaps; as Pſal. 79 1. they laid Jeruſalem in heaps. The Hebrew is תוללים, about which word there hath been among the Rabbines much controverſie. Some would have it to be a noun ſubſtantive, as from תלה, (that is, from תלל, put for תלה) which ſignifies to hang up: which word is uſed before, verſe 2. We hanged our harps, &c. So by, ſuſpenſionibus noſtris, ſhould be intended the inſtruments of Muſick, that hanged up: that they required them to ſing, and to play on their inſtruments. But moſt Chriſtian Interpreters are agreed upon it, that it is a participle rather, or nomen participale, from תלל, to lay in heaps; as we have it here in the Engliſh: which is much more agreeable to the Original Context There be alſo, who think that תלל may be here a Chaldaick word for the Hebrew שלל, it being very ordinary to that Dialect, to change the Hebrew ש into a ת. And becauſe the Chaldeans were they, that had been the authors of this miſchief, therefore they think a Chaldee word (ſee ſomewhat to this purpoſe, upon Pſal. 74 6. upon thoſe words, and hammers,) was uſed of purpoſe. But if this be granted, we have ſtill the ſame ſenſe; putting but ſpoylers, inſtead of waſters.

V. 4. ſtrange land] Heb. land of a ſtranger.

V. 5. If I forget thee. O Jeruſalem] Albeit the faithfull are touched with their particular griefs, yet the common ſorrow of the Church is moſt grievous unto them, and is ſuch, as they cannot but remember and lament.

V. 6 above my chief joy] The decay of Gods Religion in their countrey was ſo grievous, that no joy could make them glad, except it were reſtored; and then they would rejoyce as much as now they grieved.

my chief joy] Heb. the head of my joy.

V. 7. the children of Edom] Obad. 10. &c. According as, Ezek. 25. 13. Jer. 49. 7. is propheſied: and Obad. ver. 10. ſheweth, that the Edomites conſpired with the Babylonians againſt the Jewes.

in the day of Jeruſalem] When thou didſt viſit Jeruſalem, Ezek. 7. 12. Eſay. 13. 13.

Raſe it] Heb. make bare.

V. 8. deſtroyed

V. 8. deſtroyed] Heb, waſted.

that rewardeth thee, as thou haſt ſerved us] Heb. that recompenſeth unto thee thy deed which thou didſt to us.

V. 9. Happy ſhall he be that taketh] He alludeth to the propheſie, Eſay 13.16. promiſing good ſucceſſe to Cyrus and Darius, whom, though ambition moved to fight againſt Babylon, yet God uſed, as his rods, to puniſh his enemies, for their cruelty to his people.

daſheth thy little ones againſt the ſtones Eſay 13. 16.

the ſtones] Heb. the rock.

PSAL. LXXXVIII.

Verſe 1. BEfore the gods] Either Angels, which the Jews of old and ancient Chriſtians did believe to be preſent at religious aſſemblies; which alſo ſeemeth, according to learned Expoſitors, to have been St. Pauls opinion: 1 Cor.11. 10. For this cauſe ought the woman, &c. or King, (called Gods, Pſal.82. 6. and 96. 4.) according to Pſal 119. 46. I will ſpeak of thy teſtimony,&c. See alſo on ver.4. All the Kings of the earth, &c.

V. 2. towards thy holy temple] Pſal.28. 2. 1 King.8. 29,30. Joh 2. 4. Both the temple, and ceremonial ſervice, by Chriſts coming were aboliſhed: and now none need to look toward the temple; but worſhip God in ſpirit and truth, in every place, Joh. 4. 21. 1 Tim.2. 8. However,it doth not hence follow, but that certain places are to be appropriated to God for divine ſervice, (which we commonly call Churches:)and that all reverence is due to ſuch places, by all truly devout and religious: according to St. Pauls doctrine. 1 Cor.11.22. Have ye not houſes ——or deſpiſe ye the Church of God: as beſt Interpreters,not ancient only, all, or moſt of them; but modern alſo(ſome of the moſt learned, and of beſt account,generally:) do underſtand the word, Church, in that place. See alſo upon Pſal 69. 9. For the zeale of thy houſe, &c.

for thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy Name.] The conſtruction of the words in the Original is ſomewhat ambiguous עַל־כָּל־שִׁמְךָ, may be tranſlated, either,thy name above all things, as by divers; or, above all thy Name, as here, and by ſome others: (That is ſay they;Thou haſt made thyſelf more known by thy Word, than by any other way.) Then, according to the firſt, the laſt word אִמְרָתֶךָ, is either an ablative, verbo tuo;that is,by thy word; (thou haſt magnified thy Name above all things by thy Word:] or joyned to Name, by appoſition, thy Name, thy Word; that is, thy Name, and thy Word. David Kimki, makes a kind of hyſteron proteteron of it, making this to be the right order, as to the ſenſe; thou haſt magnified thy Name(ſuper omne verbum tuum) above; or, in every word of thine. Junius, cum toto nomine tuo verbum tuum. Which of all theſe is righteſt, is not eaſily decided: but thy Name above all things, by the word; that is ,by this gracious performance of what thou haſt promiſed;ſeems the moſt literall Interpretation: and having ſaid but now, that the Name of God ſhould be the object of his praiſes; it is not ſo likely, that he would preſently upon it magnifie any thing elſe, above his Name.

V. 3. and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul] Thou didſt ſtrengthen me againſt all mine enemies, inward and outward.

V. 4. All the Kings of the earth ſhall praiſe thee] The kings themſelves ſhall praiſe thee,when they ſhall know thee fully,as thou haſt revealed thy ſelf in thy word to us. Or as others more probably, divers kings of ſundry nations, that have been acquainted through neighbourhood, or otherwiſe, with the affaires of this common weale,where thou ſhalt hear that by thy ſpecial appointment, long before declared; and by the concurrence of many miraculous events, of a ſhepherd (2.Sam.7,8. and Pſal.78. 70, 71.) I am become a King, they ſhall glorifie thee. So much may be implied, 1 Chron.14. 17. And the fame of David went out into all lands, &c. See alſo upon Pſal 98. 2. His righteouſneſſe, &c. To this alſo may verſe 1. before the Gods,&c. be referred.

V. 5. they ſhall ſing in the wayes of the Lord] They ſhall ſing when they ſhall be converted. Or rather,They ſhall ſing of the ways: as ſome tranſlate: but even thoſe that do not agree upon the ſame interpretation: to wit, they ſhall talk of theſe things, that have happened unto me, with acknowledgement and admiration of Gods power and providence in it. See opon the former verſe.

V. 6. Though the Lord be high, yet he hath reſpect unto the lowly] Iſai. 37. 15.

afar off] God though, he dwell on high, yet is near to the lowly; but keeps aloof off from the proud, Prov. 3. 34. Jam. 4. 6. 1 Pet.5.5.

V. 8. The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me] Pſalm 57.2. Phil.1.6. Though mine enemies rage never ſo much, yet the Lord which hath begun his work in me, will continue his favour to the end.

forſake not the works of thine own hands] Job 10.8.

PSAL. CXXXIX.

Verſe 1. SEarched me] Pſal.17.12. 3.Je,r.12.3.

V. 2. Thou knoweſt my down-ſitting] He confeſſeth, that neither our actions, thoughts, nor any part of our life can be hid from God.

thou underſtandeſt my thought afar off] Long before I conceive it.

V. 3. Thou compaſſeſt my path] So that they are evidently known to thee.

compaſſeſt] Or, winnoweſt.

V. 4. there is not a word in my tongue] Thou knoweſt my meaning before I ſpeak: or, my ſecreteſt wiſperings.

V. 5. and laid thine hand upon me] Job 41. 8. Thou keepeſt me within the compaſſe of thy knowlege, like a man that will not let his ſervant go out of his ſight. Or, if this beſetting, &c. be a ſimilitude from the manner of huntſmen, when they are in purſuit of ſome wild beaſt; as ſome not improbably think; then this, and laid thine hand upon me, muſt be underſtood in reference to the ſame ſimilitude, as Job 41. 8. Lay thine hand upon him, &c.

V. 7. Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit?] From thy power and knowledge?

V. 8. If I aſcend up into heaven, thou art there, &c.] Amos. 9 2, 3, 4.

V. 9. If I take the wings of the morning] He meaneth the Sunbeams, which ſuddenly flye to the earth: or, wings that could flye as ſwift as they ſhoot out, and take flight never ſo early.

V. 10. Even there ſhall thy hand] They power doth ſo faſt hold me, that I can eſcape by no means from thee.

lead me] He ſheweth,that Gods providence over us is not a bare knowledge, but an effectuall conducting and diſpoſing of us.

V. 11. even the night ſhall be light about me] Though darkneſſe be an hinderance to mans ſight, yet it ſerveth thine eyes as well as the light.

V. 12. the darkneſſe hideth not from thee] Job 26. 6. Heb. 4. 13.

hideth not] Heb darkeneth not.

the darkneſſe and the light are both alike]; Heb. as is the darkneſſe, ſo is the light.

V. 13. For thou haſt poſſeſſed] Thou haſt made me in all parts, and therefore muſt needs know me.

my reins] My affections, and moſt inward motions.

thou haſt covered me in my mothers womb] With fleſh and skin, Job 10. 11.

V. 14. for I am fearfully and wonderfully made] Conſidering thy wonderfull work in forming me, I cannot but praiſe thee, and fear thy mighty power. See before upon Pſal 8.2. Out of the mouth of babes, &c. and Pſal.22.9. that took me out of the womb.

right] Heb. greatly.

V. 13. ſubſtance] Or ſtrength, or body.

and curiouſly wrought] Like a piece of needle-work: for ſo the word ſignifies.

in the loweſt parts of the earth] That is in my mothers womb, here below on earth. Eph 4.9. or, as ſecretly, as things formed in the bowels of the earth, Job 28 1,2,&c. Which doth not only commend the wonderful art of the workman, who can do his work without help of light; which ſome conceive to be the principal aym: but alſo ſets out the incomprehenſibleneſſe of it to humane underſtanding. For ſo the Grecians, of things very abſtruſe, and out of the reach of mans wit and capacity, uſe to ſay proverbially, τὰ νέρθεν γῆς, that is, things under the earth; or, the deep things of the earth; as it is uſed by Anton. in the ſecond book of his Meditations. See alſo upon Pſal.63.9. the lower parts of the earth.

V. 16. and in thy book all my members were written] An alluſion to curious workmen, that work after a model ſet before them.

all my members] Heb. all of them.

which in continuance were faſhioned] Or, what dayes they ſhould be faſhioned.

when as yet there were none of them] Seeing that thou didſt know me before I was compoſed of either fleſh or bone, much more now muſt thou know me, when thou haſt faſhioned me.

V. 17. How precious alſo are thy thoughts unto me] Pſal. 40. 5. How ought I to eſteem in my thoughts the excellent declaration of thy wiſdom in the creation of man? or, how incomprehenſible are thy counſels? Rom.11. 33. Job 25. 26. 14.

thy thoughts] Or, thoughts of thee.

V. 18. I am ſtill with thee] Every morning when I awake, I ſee new occaſions to meditate of thy wiſdom and to praiſe thee. Or, when I have ſpent the whole day (day after day) in the conſideration of theſe things, the next morning I am where I was; I am but at the beginning ſtil: the more I think of it, the more wonderful it appears to me. As that ancient Phyloſopher, who being asked what God was; firſt asked one day to think of it: then two, then four, &c. becauſe the more he thought of God, the more he underſtood him (as himſelf anſwered) incomprehenſible.

V. 19. Surely] Heb. if, Pſal.131.2.

Surely thou wilt ſlay the wicked. O God] It ſeems, that which had put David at this time to this ſolemn profeſſion, and ample declaration of his full perſwaſion of God being the ſearcher of the hearts of men, as he that is the maker of men, &c. was ſome horrid imputation, which he took much to heart, from ſome one or other of his bitter adverſaries, as though he had been in very deed, notwithſtanding all his fair profeſſions and pretences of zeal and piety, a wicked, bloody man. We know. Shimei did once object it unto him, Come out, come out thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial:

The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul,&c. 2 Sam. 16. 7,8. and it is more than likely that he met with many ſuch,as by his many complaints and earneſt provocations to God in divers of his Pſalmes,may be collected. Having therefore hitherto declared his faith at large, concerning Gods Omniſcience, &c. he now appeals to his juſtice, and before God, makes profeſſion of his innocency.

V. 20. and thine enemies take thy Name in vain] The words may alſo (as they are by ſome) be tranſlted,and thine enemies lift up (themſelves,or, their heads:) *in vain.*Or,as by others,they vainly extoll thine enemies The reader may take his choyce: the words will afford it, and other paralel places will be found, what ſenſe ſoever of theſe he pitches upon, to make it probable.

therefore] Or, then.

V. 21. Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee?] His zeal of Gods glory wrought in him a fiery indignation, and utter deteſtation of all ſuch as oppoſed it, regarding not ſo much his own particular, as Gods intereſt, Pſal. 69.9. & 119. 158, 2 Chron. 19. 2. Prov. 29. 27.

V. 23. Search me O God, and know my heart] Verſe 1. Pſal. 26. 2.

V. 24. ſee if there be any wicked way in me] Pſal 7.4.

any wicked way in me] Any courſe of ſin that is grievous to God or man.

wicked way] Heb. way of pain, or grief.

lead me in the way everlaſting] Heb. בדרך עולם by moſt tranſlated, in via ſeculi; or, per viam ſeculi, that is, ſay they, to the end of my life. Others,in via antiqua: that is, in the old way: as Jer. 6. 16. נתבות עולם is tranſlated, the old way. The old way, that is, the good and religious way; to which ſome would have דרך עוצב in the beginning of the verſe; which may be alſo turned, the way of grief,or pain, (as in the margin) by which they underſtand idolatry,oppoſed. But though the words may be drawn to this,[for עצבים is taken for idols ſometimes) yet it doth not ſeem ſo proper to this place. Bucer agrees with our Engliſh and Junius,*vitâ perpetuâ.*See upon Pſ. 24. 7 ye everlaſting doors.

PSAL. CXL.

Verſe 1, FRom the violent man] Which perſecuteth me of meer malice, and without cauſe.

violent man] Heb. man of violences: that is, moſt violent.

V. 2. Which imagine miſchiefs in their heart] They ſtudy how to bring the greateſt miſchief on me; that is, to kill me.

war] Heb. wars: that is, frequent ones

V. 3. adders poyſon is under their lips] Pſal. 58. 4. Rom. 3. 13. He ſheweth how craftily wicked men proceed by calumnies, when they want power to do hurt.

V. 4 Keep me, O Lord, from the hands of the wicked] God is the refuge of the godly, when they are oppoſed by worldlings, from the violent man] See Notes on ver. 1.

V. 5. ſnare for me] Pſal. 35,7. & 57.6. & 141. 1.9.

V. 7. thou haſt covered my head in the day of battel] He calleth to God with lively faith, being aſſured of his mercies, becauſe he had before-time proved, that God helped him ever in his dangers, covering his head as with an helmet, or ſhield, Pſal. 71. 4.

V. 8. further not his wicked device] For wicked men cannot accompliſh their plots, unleſſe God give them ſtrength.

leſt they exalt themſelves] Or, let them not be exalted.

V. 9. As for the head of thoſe that compaſſe me about] Pſ. 17. 16. Pro. 12. 13. & 18. 7 He deſireth that God would make their own words their bane, Pſal. 64. 8. or, let them periſh by thoſe courſes that themſelves plot and combine in: or,let their own imprecations fall on them, Pſal. 109. 17. The words may be tranſlated alſo, which is followed by ſome of the beſt Interpreters: The head of him (by which ſome underſtand Doeg: others, Saul:) that compaſſeth me about, let the miſchief (or, perverſity) of his own lips cover him. See upon the next words.

let the miſchief of their own lips] Life and death are often adſcribed in the Scripture to the tongue: or, which is equivalent to the mouth or lips. And not without cauſe. Fer either a man ſpeaketh what his heart doth prompt unto him; as all men naturally ſhould: Matth. 12. 34. out of the abundance of the heart, &c. Or if he be a diſſembler, that is, one whoſe heart and tongue go not together; a crafty cunning man; it is a great chance but ſome time or other he vvill be caught in his double dealing, and reaſon the fruits of his falſe heart,or tongue. Much more might be ſaid of the tongue,of which ſo much is in the Scripture: but more cannot, than is by t. James, chap. 3. 11. 1,2,&c. to ver. 13. See alſo Pſal. 17. 3. Prov. 22. 13. & 18. 20, 21.

V. 10. Let burning coales fall upon them] If a man read theſe two verſes (9 & 10.) together, and conſider diligently; he may(though contrrary to the current of Expoſitors,as may appear by vvhat hath been noted upon verſe tenth:) he may, I ſay, have juſt occaſion to ſuſpect, eſpecially if he take Prov. 25. 21,22. For thou ſhalt heap coales of fire apon his head, &c. into his conſideration; that the meaning of the words ſhould rather be this: As for thoſe that compaſſe me about, &c. Let burning coales fall upon their heads, &c. And though as I ſaid before, the current of Expoſitors go another way: yet ſome very judicious; or more plainly, Calvin upon the place, propoſeth an interpretation that cometh very near to this, but that he miſſeth of the place in the Proverbs, which if he had thought of, it is likely, he would have been much more confident. But then if we ground upon that place (as I think we muſt, if we think to carry it againſt ſo many: , for this interpretation here; it muſt be granted, that as the words here, are an imprecation; ſo there alſo: which here,though the coherence of matter,beſides the tenor of the words themſelves; doth evince them to be ſo: yet there, ſeemeth very contrary to the purpoſe of the wiſe authour, whom we would not willingly believe to be the authour of any ſuch inſtruction, that reliſheth of any malice: much more contrary to the purpoſe and profeſſion of Evangelical Paul, who, though he borrow the words from Solomon, yet delivers the matter of them as his own, Rom. 12. 20. See what is there noted at large in vindication of both, upon Prov. 25. 21,22. neither do we know any thing now, that ſhould move us to change our opinion there delivered concerning the right meaning of thoſe words, except it ſhould be this one paſſage of the Pſalmiſt: which yet being ſo doubtfull of it ſelf; and ſo indifferently expounded by all, or moſt Expoſitors; I know not of what validity it may be apprehended by others, againſt the pregnancy (as I conceive) of ſo much reaſon that may ſway us for a different ſenſe in Solomon, and St. Paul. And yet were it certain aud ſure, that both the Pſalmiſt, and his ſon aimed at one and the ſame proverbial expreſſion; yet is it not without example, that one and the ſame expreſſion of words; yea one and the ſame proverb, without any variation of words, may be uſed in a different ſenſe, and to a different end. Of words and phraſes, being the ſame, uſe in a different, yea contrary ſenſe, in Scripture, and elſewhere, I could give many examples: and ſome have been given in theſe Notes, upon occaſion: Of Proverbs, or proverbiall ſpeeches, if my memory ſerve me not at this time, I doubt not but with a little help either of books, or better memory, there may be found good ſtore. And this I ſhould rather pitch upon, than to believe that either Solomon, or St. Paul could intend the words in a precept of charity; ſo (to ordinary conſtruction, and their authority laid aſide) uncharitably. But now I have dealt ſo freely with the Reader (for indeed I would not conceale any truth, whether it make for, or againſt any opinion of mine:) I ſhall now deale as freely and truly with him, in profeſſing that this interpretation of the words of the Pſalmiſt, though at firſt, upon comparing with Solomons words, very plauſible; yet upon further conſideration, appeareſt otherwiſe unto me. I did mention Calvin before, that he had an Expoſition that came very near. It is this: Recidat moleſtia, quam ſceleratis ſermonibus mihi intentant, in capita ipſorum: Here Calvin doth not tell us, what ſhall become of the word operiat, which is ſet out by him; and inſtead of it Recidat put in his place. But I ſuppoſe he intended it (though for brevity ſake, he did not ſo fully explain himſelf) thus: Let the miſchief, which they intended unto me by their wicked tongues, cover their own heads. which is in effect; Recidat moleſtia: &c. The evill which they intended unto me, let it fall upon their own heads. It is plauſible enough of it ſelf, as he propoſeth it: but much more probabble, in my judgement, if he had obſerved, (which I wonder he doth not) that there is in the words, ſo ordered and conſtrued, an alluſion to verſe 7. thou haſt covered my head in the day of battell. Many ſuch ſecret alluſions of words there be in the Scripture (of another kind, ſee before upon Pſal. 75. 6. nor from the South:) of which we have treated elſewhere largely. If this therefore be right, as it ſeemeth unto me, very plauſible; Let burning coales fall upon them, in the next verſe, muſt be conſtrued by it ſelf; and ſo the expreſſion here apparently different from Solomons. Moſt Expoſitors are of opinion, that the Pſalmiſt doth here allude to that fire that came from heaven, to the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah: as the moſt dreadfull imprecation he could think of: which is very likely. Of imprecations in generall, in this Book of Pſalmes. See before upon Pſal. 35. ver. 4. Let them be confounded. Of Solomons words and meaning, ſee there: Prov. 25. 21,22.

let them be caſt into the fire] Heb. let him caſt: to vvit, God: and let all manner of miſchief befall them, and ſo overwhelm them, that they may never recover again.

V. 11. an evill ſpeaker] Heb. a man of tongue.

an evill ſpeaker be eſtabliſhed in the earth: evill ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him] Or, an evill ſpeaker, a wicked man of violence be eſtabliſhed in the earth: let him be hunted to his overthrow. See upon Pſal. 55. 23 bloody and deceitfull men.

evill ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him] Gods plagues ſhall ſo from place to place purſue him; as he ſhall have no vvay to eſcape, Jer. 16. 16.

overthrow] Heb. to deſtructions: that is, to certain deſtruction.

V. 13. the upright ſhall dwell in thy preſence] That is, ſhall be defended and preſerved by thy fatherly providence and care, as one of thy family.

PSAL. CXLI.

Verſe 1. I Cry unto thee] He ſheweth, that there is no other refuge in our neceſſities, but only to flye unto God for comfort of ſoul or body.

2. ſet forth] Heb. directed.

the lifting up of my hands as the evening ſacrifice] Pſal. 134. 2. He deſireth to have his prayers as acceptable to God, as the incenſe and ſacrifices were in the Sanctuary, Pſal. 69. 31. Mal. 1. 11. Rev. 8. 4.

V. 3. keep the door of my lips] He deſireth God to keep his mouth from ſpeaking unadviſedly; for of himſelf he could not do it, Pſal. 39. 1.

V. 4. let me not eat of their dainties] Let not their proſperity allure me to be wicked, as they are, Pſal. 37. 1. & 73. 15.

V. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſſe, and let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oil, which ſhall not break my head] Or, Let the righteous ſmite me kindly, and reprove me; let not their precious oil break my head, &c.

and let him reprove me] He could well endure all reproofs, that came from a loving heart, Prov. 9. 8. & 19. 25. & 25. 12.

an excellent oil] Heb oil of head, Eccleſ. 9. 8. He compareth a faithful and friendly reproof, to ſuch an ointment as they uſed to anoint their heads withal.

it ſhall not break my head] Oyl cannot properly be ſaid, as oyl, to break the head. But oyl being here metaphorically taken for words of reproof, which may be ſaid, (though figuratively too) to break the head, or ſoul, as Job 19. 2. How long will ye vex my ſoul, and break me in pieces with words? what belongs to words properly, is here transferred to oyl. Some tranſlate, (which the Original will bear too) Let it never ceaſe from my head: that is, let me never want it.

for yet my prayer ſhall be in their calamities] So far ſhall their reproofs be from offending, that I will requite them with my beſt prayers, when they moſt need them; that is, in their calamities, when the malicious, uncharitable, if they bear any ſmall grudg, are moſt apt to inſult. Some more emphatically, but to the ſame purpoſe; Quò magis faciet, &c. that is, The more they do it, the more I ſhall think my ſelf bound to pray for them.

V. 6 they ſhall hear my words] When the great men that now perſecute me ſhall be overthrown, as ſtumbling in ſtony wayes, then they, or the people which followed them in perſecuting me, ſhall repent, and hearken willingly to Gods word, Iſai, 28. 19.

V. 7. Our bones are ſcattered at the graves mouth] Either he meanes the bones of ſuch as died for his cauſe, or elſe that they were ready to be ſcattered at the graves mouth, ſo that it were a miracle for them to eſcape death, 2 Cor. 1. 9.

V. 8. mine eyes are unto thee, O God] 2 Chron. 20. 12.

leave not my ſoul deſtitute] Heb. make not my ſoul bare.

V. 10. Let the wicked fall into their own nets] Heb. into his nets: that is, to Gods nets, whereby he catcheth the wicked in their own malice: or, every one into his own net, as Pſal. 7. 15. & 9. 15. & 35. 8.

whileſt that I withal eſcape] Let their fall be my deliverance.

withal] Or, alone. See Job 29. Ezra 4. 3.

eſcape] Heb. paſſe over.

PSAL. CXLII.

Title.

Maſchil of David] Or, A Pſalm of David giving inſtruction.

when he was in the cave] 1 Sam. 24. 3.

Verſe 1. I] This Pſalm appears to be made after the deliverance here mentioned. See the like, Jon. 2. 1.

cryed] Davids patience and inſtant prayer unto God condemneth their wicked rage; who, in their troubles, either deſpair, and murmure againſt God, or elſe ſeek to others rather than to God, to have redreſſe in their miſeries.

did I make my ſupplication] The word, prayer, in the Original, ſignifies a demanding of juſtice againſt his foes: crying, ſignifies earneſtneſſe: making ſupplication, ſhews, that he ſought for favour from God: complaint, or meditation, argues a preconſideration of what he prayed for: ſhewing, intends a laying open of his troubles orderly in fit words.

V. 3. then thou kneweſt my path] Thou kneweſt which way I ſhould eſcape, when I knew no means of delivery: or, thou didſt approve the way that I was in, and tookeſt care of me, Pſal. 1. 6.

V. 4. I looked on my right hand, and beheld] Or, look on the right hand, and ſee.

refuge failed me] I had no place in the world to flee to.

failed me] Heb. periſhed from me.

no man cared for my ſoul] Heb. no man ſought after my ſoul.

V. 5. Thou] The words following, to the end, were ſpoken in the cave.

my refuge] Though all means failed him, yet he knew that God would never forſake him, Pſal. 32. 7. & 46. 1.

my portion in the land of the living] Pſal. 16. 5. & 73. 26. and 119. 57. Lam. 3. 24.

V. 7. Bring my ſoul out of priſon] For he was on all ſides beſet with his enemies, as though he had been in a moſt ſtrait priſon.

the righteous ſhall compaſſe me about] Either to hear me ſpeak of my wonderful deliverance, that they may rejoyce and praiſe God with me, or elſe to ſet the crown on my head.

for] Or, when.

PSAL. CXLIII.

Verſe 1. H*Ear my prayer, O Lord, give eare to my ſupplication*] Of a ſuppoſed difference between prayer and ſupplication, ſee upon Pſalm 55. 1. Hide not thy ſelf from my ſupplication: where theſe very words are cited. Of the word righteouſneſſe, how to be underſtood in this and other like places, ſee upon Pſal. 71. 2. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſe. Of faithfulneſſe, or truth, (for it is but one word in the Original Hebrew, but ſometimes written full, and ſometimes abbreviated by leaving out one of the radical letters:) See upon Pſal. 57. 10. For thy mercy is great. But becauſe the word is ſo frequent in this book, ſomewhat more ſhall be ſaid here alſo. Faithfulneſſe, they ſay, is adſcribed unto God, for keeping of promiſes. It is ſo, often. But then we muſt know, that the promiſes of God, for which he is ſo termed (faithful) are either particular promiſes, made unto particular men, as Abraham, David, and the like: or general promiſes, to a whole nation; or, rather, to all men in general: as for example; That he will be the protector of them that feare him; and put their truſt in hin: that upon true repentance and amendment of life, he will pardon iniquities: that he will be the avenger of the poor, and fatherleſſe, that are oppreſſed by might: for theſe, and the like, faithfulneſſe is adſcribed unto God by the Pſalmiſt, as often as for keeping his word, to him (ſo often inculcated by Expoſitors.) particularly. Again, faithfulneſſe may be adſcribed unto God; not ſo much in reference to any expreſſe promiſe, as upon a preſumption grounded upon his nature, and former experience. So becauſe the creation of man, endowed with ſuch and ſuch faculties, is an argument of Gods goodneſſe; it may be preſumed of God, as he is a faithful Creator, that he will not have the death or deſtruction of any man; (Ezek. 33. 11.) that he will have a care of them eſpecially, who having ſpent their lives, in his ſervice, commit the keeping of their ſoules (1 Pet. 4. 19.) unto Him at their departure; who both as he is a Creatour, knows, how to value them, and how to keep them, and as he is faithful, will not diſappoint them. that have truſted Him, with what was deareſt unto themſelves. But all I aimed at here, is but to ſhew, that faithfulneſſe is adſcribed to God in divers reſpects, and not to be confined to particular promiſes.

into judgement with thy ſervant] Job 14. 3. He acknowledgeth a juſt hand of God in thoſe things that had befallen him, though by the unjuſt hands of his enemies; and intreateth him not to deal rigorouſly with him, as in juſtice he might.

in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified] Exod. 34. 7. Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 2. 16.

V. 3. For the enemy hath perſecuted my ſoul] There is no queſtion, but that David, immediately and literally intended it of ſome one, or more of his mortal and viſible enemies, that either by open violence, or by ſecret plots and machinations, did endeavour to bereave him of his life: or by detraction perchance, and falſe imputations, of his good name, to good and godly men as dear, as life it ſelf. But in the myſtical, or anogogical ſenſe, this enemy (or enemies) may be underſtood of the Devil, properly called Satan, that is, an adverſary, (as Pſal. 109. 6. and let Satan ſtand at his right hand) as not onely being the grand and Original enemy to mankind; but alſo, as he, who in very truth is the author, abetter, and fomentor of all ungodly ſtrifes and contentions among men; and by outward and inward temptations and provocations, (where God for ſecret cauſes, doth not reſtrain him) the occaſion of all ſlaughter, and unjuſt blood-ſhedding Joh. 8. 40. & 44 So that whoever beareth but malice in his heart, (See alſo 1 Joh. 3. 15. Whoever hateth his brother, &c.) may truly be ſaid, in ſome degree, to be poſſeſt. Whoſoever therefore rightly underſtandeth theſe things, whatever he readeth in this whole Book, (by way of imprecation eſpecially) of enemies and adverſaries, according to the expoſition and application of the ancients, he may very profitably, whether he have any enemies in this world or no, underſtand it of his ſpiritual enemies, which he is ſure he hath: and no leſſe ſure, in caſe he have other enemies too, whether more or fewer, ſo far as they deal by malice and unjuſt violence, that it is the Devil that ſets them on work, and leads them to theſe unjuſt and uncharitable courſes. I know there be many things in theſe imprecations, not appliable, properly to ſpirits, but to mortal men onely, that are fleſh and blood: yet nothing hinders, but that he that readeth them, may think of the Devil, and in ſome convenient ſenſe apply all to him, as the cauſe of all evil, both ſpiritual and temporal.

hath ſmitten my life] I muſt needs be ſlain, if thou relieve me not.

to dwell in darkneſſe] I am forced to live in dark caves, like graves.

that have been long dead] He acknoweledgeth that God is his onely true Phyſitian that can heal him; for he can raiſe up men long ſince dead.

V. 4, ſpirit overwhelmed within me] Pſal. 142. 3.

my heart within me is deſolate] So that he was upheld onely by Gods power, on which he relyed, Pſal. 73. 26.

V. 5. Ire-

V, 5. I remember the dayes of old] To wit, thy great benefits of old, and the manifold examples of thy favour toward thine: or, I comfort my ſelf with the remembrance of thy favours to me in times paſt, and take them for a pawn of comfort in time to come, becauſe thou art the ſame, Pſal, 77 5, 11.

all thy works] Heb. every work of thine, or, all thy practice.

V. 6 my ſoul thirſteth after thee] Pſal 42. 1, 2. & 63. 1. & 84. 2.

as a thirſty land] I earneſtly deſire to be with God in the Sanctuary, as the dry ground deſires rain, Pſal. 42. 1, 2, & 63. 1.

V. 7. Hear me ſpeedily] Heb. Make haſte, anſwer me.

leſt I be like, &c.] Or, for I am become like, &c.

V. 8. in the morning] In the morning, that is, ſpeedily, and in due time, Pſal. 101. 8. See upon Pſal, 30. 5. weeping may endure for a night; &c.

cauſe me to know the way] Direct me which way I may eſcape this danger, leſt I periſh in it, Pſal 28. 1. & 5. 8.

V. 9. I flee unto thee to hide me] Heb. hide me with thee. I hid my ſelf under the ſhadow of thy wings, that I might be defended by thy power, Pſal. 91. 1. & 32. 7.

V. 10. Teach me] He confeſſeth, that both the knowledge of, and obedience to Gods will in us, cometh from the Spirit of God, who teacheth us by his Word, giveth underſtanding by his Spirit, and frameth our hearts by his grace to obey him.

to do thy will] That is, juſtly, and aright: for, ſo ſoon as we decline from Gods will, we fall into errour.

thy Spirit is good, lead] Or, let thy good Spirit lead.

into the land of uprightneſſe] Or, in (or on) an even ground, as Iſai 26. 7. 10.

V. 11 Quicken me] Keep me alive, and free me from this deadly danger.

Quicken me, O Lord, for thy name ſake] Pſal. 119 25, 37, 88, 107.

for thy Names ſake]. That thy Name may be honoured, thy juſtice ſhewed on perſecutors, thy mercy to me thy ſervant.

V. 12. of thy mercy cut off thine enemies] Which ſhall be a ſign of thy fatherly care of me.

I am thy ſervant] Pſal 116. 16.

PSAL. CXLIV.

Verſe 1. M*Y ſtrength*] Heb. My rock.

which teacheth my hands to war, &c.] 2 Sam. 22. 35. Who, of a poor ſhepherd, hath made me a valiant warriour, and mighty conquerour.

to war] Heb. to the war, &c.

V. 2. My goodneſſe] Or, My mercy. From whom alone I look for kindneſſe and protection.

My goodneſſe and my fortreſſe, my high tower and my deliverer, &c.] 2 Sam. 22. 2, 3 40.

my deliverer] Heb. my deliverer for me: for the Prophet cannot ſatisfie himſelf with any words.

who ſubdueth my people under me] He confeſſeth, that neither by his own authority, power nor policy, his kingdom was kept quiet, but by the ſecret favour of God.

V. 3. Lord, what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him? or the ſon of man, &c.] Job 7. 17. Pſal 8. 4 Heb 2. 6.

that thou takeſt knowledge of him?] To give unto God juſt praiſe, is, To confeſſe our ſelves to be unworthy of ſo excellent benefits, and that he beſtoweth them upon us of his free mercy.

V. 4. Man is like to vanity] Job 14. 2. Pſal. 39. 3.

V. 5. Bow thy heavens, O Lord, &c.] Pſal. 18. 9. Iſai. 64. 1. Shew thy ſelf preſent on earth, by deſtroying my greateſt enemies, who are like mountains, in compariſon of other men.

V. 6. Caſt forth lightning and ſcatter them] Pſal. 18. 13, 14. Deliver me by heavenly meanes, for earthly means fail me.

V. 7. Send thy hand] Heb. hands. He was in ſuch danger, that he thought he needed both hands, that is, all Gods power, to help him.

from above] From heaven.

out of great waters] Pſal. 69. 12, 14.

from the hand of ſtrange children] Deliver me from the tumults of ſtrangers, that profeſſe peace to me: or, of my own people, that carry themſelves cruelly toward me, like ſtrangers. See upon Pſal. 54 3. ſtrangers: &c.

V. 8. And their right hand is a right hand of falſhood] Pſal. 26. 10. For though they ſhake hands, yet they keep not promiſe.

V. 9. I will ſing a new ſong unto thee] A rare and excellent ſong, as thy great benefits deſerve; or, a new triumphant ſong after victory, framed eſpecially upon this occaſion; the argument whereof is ſet down, ver. 10.

a new ſong unto thee, O God] Pſal. 40. 3. & 98. 1.

V. 10. It is he that giveth] Or, Who giveſt.

ſalvation] Or. victory.

delivereth] Or, delivereſt.

David his ſervant] Though ſtrange kings be called Gods ſervants, as Cyrus, Eſay 45 1. foraſmuch as he uſeth them to execute his judgements; yet David, and they that rule godly, are properly ſo called, becauſe they ſerve not their own affections, but ſet forth Gods glory.

V. 11. Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of ſtrange children] verſe 7, 8.

V. 12. That our ſons may be as plants] He deſireth God to continue his benefits toward his people, that there may be a hopefull poſterity after them.

that our daughters may be as corner ſtones poliſhed] Ancient artificers were wont to carve their pillars (in palaces and ſumptuous edifices, eſpecially,) which did bear the main building into the form of grave matrons and virgins. Such were thoſe that were called Caryatides, whom Vitruvius and others, ſpeak of, and deſcribe: though the reaſon of that particular name (if the common interpretation be true,) be much later than Davids time. But they had other names too, which might be ancienter. It is very likely that David doth here allude to ſome ſuch cuſtome.

poliſhed] Heb. cut.

V. 13. That our garners may be full] That we may have corn not only to eat plentifully, but alſo to lay up abundantly.

all manner of ſtore] Heb. from kind to kind.

V. 14. That our oxen may be ſtrong to labour] That our cattel may be very ſerviceable to us.

ſtrong to labour] Heb. able to bear burdens; or, loaden with fleſh.

V. 15. Happy is that people that is in ſuch a caſe] Pſal 33. 12. & 65. 4. If they be bleſſed that enjoy outward proſperity, much more happy are they that are in Gods favour.

PSAL. CXLV.

Title.

praiſe] See the Title of Pſalm 25.

This is the laſt of the Alphabetical Pſalms; of which, ſee before upon Pſal. 25 at the end.

Verſe 1. I Will extoll thee] Pſal. 100. 1. He ſheweth what ſacrifices are pleaſant and acceptable unto God, even praiſe and thankſgiving: and ſeeng that God ſtill continueth his benefits towards us, we ought never to be weary of praiſing him for the ſame.

V. 3. Great is the Lord] Hereby he declareth, that all power is ſubject unto God; and that no worldly promotion ought to obſcure Gods glory.

and his greatneſſe is unſearchable] Heb. and of his greatneſſe there is no ſearch.

V. 4. One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another] Eſay 38. 19: Pſal. 78. 4.

to another] Foraſmuch as the end of mans creation, and of his preſervation, in this life, is to praiſe God, therefore he requireth, that not onely we our ſelves do this, but cauſe all others to do the ſame.

V. 5. works.] Heb. things, or, words.

V. 6. of thy terrible acts] Of thy terrible judgements againſt the wicked.

declare thy] Heb. declare it.

V. 7. They ſhall abundantly utter] As water runs out of a Fountain, Jer. 6. 7.

the memory of thy great goodneſſe] Thy great bleſſings, which ought to be remembred.

V. 8. The Lord is gracious, and full of compaſſion) Exod. 34. 6, 7. Num. 14. 18. Pſal. 86 5. 15. & 103. 8.

and full of compaſſion] He deſcribeth after what ſort God ſheweth himſelf to all his creatures, though our ſins have provoked his vengeance againſt all: he ſhewes himſelf mercifull, not onely in pardoning the ſins of his children, but alſo in doing good to wicked men, albeit they feel not the ſweet comfort of Gods benefits.

of great mercy] Heb. great in mercy.

V. 9. over] Or, toward.

V. 11 They ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy kingdom] The praiſe of thy glory appeareth in all thy creatures: and though the wicked would obſcure the ſame by their ſilence, yet the faithful are ever ſpeaking of it.

V. 12. his mighty acts] Gods ſervants ſpeak of his great acts, that others may take notice of them.

V. 13 an everlaſting Kingdom] Heb. a kingdom of all ages 1 Tim. 1 17.

V. 14. The Lord upholdeth] All that are upheld from falling, are upheld by God: but ſome fall, and never riſe.

all that fall] Who, being in miſery and affliction, would faint and periſh, if God did not uphold them, and therefore they ought to reverence him that reigneth in heaven, and ſuffer themſelves to be governed by him.

raiſeth up all thoſe that be bowed down] Pſal. 146. 8.

all thoſe that be bowed down] Ready to fall under the burden of their miſeries. See upon Pſal. 146. 8.

V. 15. The eyes of all wait upon thee] To wit, as well of man as of beaſt.

wait upon thee] Or, look unto thee.

thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon] Pſal. 104. 17.

V. 17. The Lord is righteous in all his wayes] He praiſeth God, not only for his beneficence to all his creatures, but alſo for his juſtice in all his proceedings.

holy] Or, mercifull or, bountifull.

V. 18. The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him] Not in eſſence only, but in affection: he is ready to grant their requeſts, Eſay 55. 6.

in truth] In ſincerity of heart, as all the faithfull do, without hypocriſie.

V. 19. He will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him] For they ask, or wiſh for nothing, but according to his Will, 1 Joh. 5. 14.

V. 21. let all fleſh bleſſe his holy Name for ever and ever] Let all men praiſe him. So Pſal. 65. 2.

PSAL. CXLVI.

Verſe 1. P*Raiſe ye the Lord*] Heb. Hallelujah.

Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoul] Pſal. 103. 1.

O my ſoul] He ſtirreth up himſelf, and all his affections to praiſe God.

V. 2. While I live, will I praiſe the Lord] Pſal. 104. 33.

V. 3. Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help] Pſal. 118 8,9. See alſo upon Pſal. 82. 7. But ye ſhall die like men, &c.

Put not your truſt in Princes] That God may have all praiſe. Here he forbiddeth all vain confidence, ſhewing that by nature we are more inclined to put our truſt in creatures, than in God the Creatour.

help] Or, ſalvation; or, becauſe he cannot help himſelf.

V: 4 he returneth to his earth] Of which he was made, Gen. 2. 7. & 3. 19.

his thoughts periſh] As their excellent devices, and vain opinions, whereby they flattered themſelves, and imagined wicked enterpriſes againſt others.

V. 5. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help] Jer. 17. 7.

whoſe hope is in the Lord his God] Pſal. 144. 15.

in] Heb. on.

V. 6. Which made heaven and earth, the ſea, and all that therin is] Gen. 1. 1.

Which made heaven and earth] He encourageth the godly to truſt only in the Lord, both, for that his power is able to deliver them from all dangers, and becauſe for his promiſe ſake, his will is moſt ready to do it,

V. 7. Which executeth judgement for the oppreſſed, which giveth food to the hungry] Pſal. 103 6.

for the oppreſſed] Whoſe faith and patience for a while he tryeth, but at length he puniſheth the adverſaries, that he may be known to be the Judge of the world.

the Lord looſeth the priſoners] Pſal. 68. 6. & 107. 10.

V. 8. The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind, the Lord raiſeth, &c.] Though it be moſt true, literally taken, that God openeth the eyes of the blind, &c. yet it is more agreeable to the context, that the words be taken metaphorically, of gracious unexpected deliverances from extreme miſery, as long impriſonment, hard bondage, and the like; as priſoners, and captives, elſewhere. See alſo upon Pſal. 57. 6. my ſoule, and 145. 14. and 69. 23. Let their eyes be darkened.

the Lord raiſeth them that are bowed dow] Pſal. 145. 14.

the Lord loveth the righteous] Though he viſit them by affliction, hunger, impriſonment, and ſuch like tryals; yet his fatherly love and pity never faileth them, yea; rather to his, theſe are ſigns of his love, Heb. 12. 6.

V. 9. The Lord preſerveth the ſtrangers] Meaning, all them that are deſtitute of all worldly means, and ſuccour, as being in a ſtrange place, where none knowes, or regards them.

the fatherleſſe and widow] Deut. 10. 18. Pſal, 68. 5.

the way of the wicked he turneth upſide down] Pſal 1. 6.

V. 10. The Lord ſhall reign for ever] Exod. 15. 18. He aſſured the Church, that God reigneth for ever, for the preſervation of the ſame.

PSAL. CXLVII.

Verſe 1. I*T is good to ſing praiſes unto our God*] Pſal. 92. 2.

for it is pleaſant] he ſheweth wherein we ought to exerciſe our ſelves continually, and to take delight, to wit, in praiſing God, for that is pleaſing to him.

and praiſe is comely] Pſal. 33. 1.

V. 2. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem] Becauſe the Lord is the founder of the Church, it cannot be deſtroyed though the members thereof be diſperſed, and ſeem as it were, for a time, to be caſt off.

he gathereth together the out caſts of Iſrael] Deut. 20. 3.

V. 3. He healeth the broken in heart] With affection, or with ſorrow for ſin.

wounds] Heb. griefs.

V. 4. He telleth the number of the ſtars] Though it ſeem to man incredible, that God ſhould aſſemble his Church, being ſo diſperſed, yet nothing can be too hard for him, that can number, and name all the ſtars. The ſtars, according to the Scripture phraſe, are accounted as as the ſand of the Sea, innumerable. Which ſome think to be ſpoken only according to common opinion: as many other things are there. Ancient Aſtronomers indeed are ſaid to have reduced them to a certain number, according to their ſeverall magnitudes: they tell us of a thouſand and ſome odd hundreds; in all. But this muſt be underſtood of thoſe that could clearly be diſcerned. For many others have been obſerved ſince; and of late, by Galileus to a very great number. It may ſtand therefore for undoubted truth, that they are to man, innumerable: and ſo doth Ariſtotle too, poſitively maintain. Calling of them by their names, imports a perfect knowledge of them; or, as ſome others, the diſtingniſhing of every one of them to certain places, and functions, he calleth them by their names] Iſai. 40. 26.

V. 5. his underſtanding is infinite] Heb. of his underſtanding there is no number, Iſa. 40. 28. Rom. 11. 33.

V, 6. he caſteth the wicked down to the ground] For the more high that the wicked climb, the greater is their fall in the end, Pſal. 73. 18, 19.

V. 7. Sing unto the Lord] Heb. Anſwer: That is, ſing by turns, Exod. 15. 21. and 32. 18. Or, anſwer Gods goodneſſe by thankfulneſſe and obedience.

V. 8. Who covereth the heaven with clouds] He ſheweth, by the examples of Gods mighty power, goodneſſe, and wiſdom, that we can never want moſt juſt occaſion to praiſe God.

who prepareth rain for the earth, who maketh graſſe to grow upon the mountains] Pſal. 104. 13, 14.

V. 9. He giveth the beaſt his food, and to the young ravens which cry] Job 38. 41. Pſal. 104. 27, 28.

to the young ravens which cry] For their crying is, as it were a confeſſion of their need, which cannot be relieved without God: then if God ſhew himſelf mindful of the contemptible fowles, can he ſuffer them to die with famine, whom he hath aſſured of life everlaſting? Job 38. 41. Matth. 6. 26.

which cry] Or, when they cry.

V, 10 he taketh no pleaſure in the legs of a man] God is thus bountiful to the creatures, not for any worth in them, but for his love to his people.

V. 11. in them that fear him, in thoſe that hope in his mercy] Pſal. 33. 18.

V. 12. hope in his mercy] Heb. wait for his mercy.

V. 13. he hath ſtrengthned the barres of thy gates] He doth not only furniſh his Church with all things neceſſary, but preſerveth alſo the ſame, and maketh it ſtrong againſt outward force.

V. 14. He maketh peace in thy borders] Heb. who maketh thy border peace.

fineſt of the wheat] Heb. fat of wheat, Deut. 32. 14. Pſal. 81. 16.

V. 15, He ſendeth forth his commandment] His ſecret working in all creatures, is as a commandment to keep them in order, and to give them motion and force.

his word runneth very ſwiftly] For, immediately, and without reſiſting, all things obey him. See upon Pſal. 107. 20. He ſent his word.

V. 16. He giveth ſnow like wooll: he ſcattereth the hoar froſt like aſhes] He compareth ſnow to wooll, and hoar froſt to aſhes; not only becauſe of ſome outward reſemblance in colour, ſhape, &c. but alſo becauſe of the like effects, it being the propriety of ſnow, as Naturaliſts obſerve, to warm the earth; and of hoar froſt, to burn, even to aſhes, ſometimes; as they ſay. This effect of the hoar froſt ſome aſcribe to the coldneſſe of it; it being the propriety of intenſive cold to burn; ȣ̓ διὰ τὸ θερμὸν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ συνάγειν, ἢ ἀντιπεριστῆναι τὸ θερμὸν: not as having properly any burning quality in it ſelf, but by an antiperiſtaſis, &c. But that is denied by others; for then, ſay they, the ſnow ſhould burn plants, and buds too, becauſe it is colder than hoar froſt. Their reſolution therefore of that matter is, that the cauſe is not known; and to be accounted no leſſe than miraculous. There is an apparent alluſion in the original words, between כפור, כאפר, and יפזר.

V. 19. He ſheweth] As before he called Gods ſecret working in all his creatures, his word, ſo here he meaneth the will of God revealed in the Scripures, given to his Church, as a moſt precious treaſure.

his word unto Jacob, his ſtatutes and his judgements unto Iſrael] Mal. 4. 4.

his word unto Jacob] Heb. his words. That is, the ten words, or commandments. He gave them the law moral, ceremonial, judicial, Mal. 4. 4.

V, 20. they have not known them] The cauſe of this difference is, Gods free mercy to his Church, which hath therefore great cauſe to praiſe him, Rom. 3. 1.

PSAL. CXLVIII.

Verſe 1. P*Raiſe ye the Lord*] Heb. Hallelujah.

from the heavens] Rev. 5. 13. Ye heavenly creatures praiſe God in the heavens.

V. 2. all his angels] Pſal. 103. 20, 21. Becauſe they are members of the ſame Church, he ſetteth them before our eyes, which are moſt willing hereunto, and by their prompt obedience, teach us to do our duty.

V. 3. ſun and moon] In that Gods glory ſhineth in theſe inſenſible creatures, this their beauty, and orderly motion, is a continual praiſing of God, Pſal. 19. 1, 2, &c.

ſtars of light] Job 38. 7.

V. 4. ye heavens of heavens] Ye higheſt heavens, 1 King. 8. 27 called the third heaven, 2 Cor. 12. 2. where the Saints and Angels are. The skie where the ſtars are, is the ſecond heaven: the ayr, is the firſt, where the fowles flye.

ye waters] that is, the rain-waters lodged in the clouds, Gen 1. 7. Job 26. 8.

above the heavens] Above the lower region of the air. See alſo upon Pſal. 104. 3 Who laieth the beams of his chambers, &c. And upon Pſal. 24 2. upon the ſeas.

V. 5. for he commanded, and they were created] Gen. 1. 3, 6. Pſal. 33. 9.

V. 6 a decree which ſhall not paſſe] Pſal. 119. 91. Job 38. 33. Jer. 31. 35, 36. & 33. 25.

V. 7. ye dragons] Rather Whales, for they live in the deeps, Gen. 1. 21.

V. 8. ſtormy wind fulfilling his word] Which come not by chance, or fortune, but by Gods appointment, Pſal. 147. 15, 16.

V. Mountains and all hills] Great and little hills, fruitful and unfruitful trees, wilde beaſts and tame, worms and birds.

V. 10. flying fowls] Heb. birds of wing.

V. 11. Kings of the Earth For the greater gifts that any hath received, and the more high one is preferred, the more bound is he to praiſe God for the ſame: but neither high nor low, condition or degree, can be exempted from this duty.

V. 13. for his name alone is excellent] His name onely is excellent of it ſelf: creatures have no more excellency than he communicateth to them.

excellent] Heb. exalted.

his glory is above the earth and heaven] And therefore is worthy to be praiſed by Kings and Angels.

V. 14. He alſo exalteth the horn of his people] The dignity, power, and glory of his Church, Pſal. 75. 10.

the praiſe of all his ſaints] Or, he is the praiſe of all his ſaints, Luke 2. 32. Or, which is.

even of the children of Iſrael] By reaſon of his covenant made with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

PSAL. CXLIX.

Verſe 1. P*Raiſe ye the Lord*] Heb. Hallelujah.

a new ſong] Pſal. 33. 3. For his great and manifold benefits daily renewed on his Church, Lam. 3. 23.

V. 2. him] Heb. them, as Eccleſ. 12. 1. Eſay 54. 5.

that made him] He gives two reaſons why they ſhould praiſe God with a new ſong. Firſt, becauſe he made them. Secondly, becauſe he made them his people. In Hebrew it is, In his makers: to ſhew the Trinity of perſons, Eſay 54. 5. Job 35. 10.

V. 3. in the dance] Or, with the pipe.

V. 4. For the Lord taketh pleaſure in his people] Pſal. 35. 27.

he will beautifie the meek with ſalvation] Not onely free them from their enemies, but alſo make them glorious before the world.

V. 5. let them ſing aloud upon their beds] They ſhould enjoy continual reſt and liberty to praiſe God, and ſhall uſe their liberty both night and day, to that end, Pſal. 63. 6. Job 35. 10. Eccl 12 1.

V. 6. in their mouth] Heb. in their throat; That is, they ſhould ſing aloud of Gods famous acts.

a two-edged ſword in their hand] Either he means God would give them temporal victories, or the ſpiritual ſword, Heb. 4. 12. to rule men withal, Rev. 1. 16.

V. 7. To execute vengeance upon the heathen] This is chiefly accompliſhed in the Kingdom of Chriſt, when Gods people, for juſt cauſes, execute Gods judgements againſt his enemies: and it giveth no liberty to any to revenge their private injuries.

V. 8. To bind their Kings with chains] To what time this is to be referred, whether paſt (under the Law:) or preſent, (under the Goſpel) or future, at the day of judgement, is a great queſtion among Expoſitors. Our Engliſh Tranſlators by their quotations in the margin; the Italian Notes, and divers others, underſtand it of the Canaanitiſh Kings, which were diſcomfited and put to death by Gods people; by Gods eſpecial appointment, Deut. 7. 1. &c. called therefore the judgement written: verſe following. This is the moſt literal interpretation. Yet others not leſſe probable, take the words of the conqueſt of Nations and Kingdoms by preaching, which though of it ſelf contrary to all violence and effuſion of blood, (& therein contrary to Mahometiſm:) is nevertheleſs for the greater glory of it among men, ſet out unto us ſometimes in military terms, as 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5, 6. For the weapons of our warfare, &c. and elſewhere. Of the ſubmiſſion of Kings, ſee Eſ. 49. 23. and Pſal. 2. and mention of chains, Eſay 45. 14. The labour of Egypt, and merchandiſe of Ethiopia, ——— they ſhall come after thee, in chains ſhall they come over, &c. Which mention of chains, both here in the Pſalmiſt, and in the Prophet, in the words quoted, tend onely to this, the better to ſet out the magnificence of the victory, and enſuing triumph of the Church. So captive Kings were led in triumph among the Romans, catenis onerati: bound with divers chains. All which things, by all ſober Chriſtians are underſtood ſpiritually. It is pure Mahometiſme, to dreame of any other ſenſe, according to the letter; the ſpiritual ſenſe, in ſuch allegorical expreſſions, being the immediate and literal. But thirdly, there be, who refer all this to the day of judgement. Neither is it without ſome ground. They bring many places of the Scripture to that purpoſe. That which I take moſt notice of, is Enochs propheſie, quoted by St. Jude; Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thouſand of his Saints, To execute judgement upon all, &c. And this propheſie they would have to be here called by the Pſalmiſt, the judgement written. And here alſo beſides the word judgement, (though they obſerve it not:) we have the Saints mentioned, (This honour have all his Saints, v. 9.) as in Enochs propheſie, with ten thouſand of his Saints. What others may think of it, I know not. I ſee nothing in this expoſition, but is plauſible enough. But the Reader ſhall have my good will, to make his choice.

the judgemet written] Hereby God bindeth the hands and minds of all his, to enterpriſe no further than he appointeth in his written word. See Calvin here, with ſome others. A good item for thoſe, who in imitation of the Turkiſh Derviſii, or I know not whom; when they intend things, for which they have no warrant from any written Law either of God, or man; pretend inſpirations.

this honour have all his Saints] Pſal. 148. 14.

PSAL. CL.

Verſe 1. P*Raiſe ye the Lord*] Heb. Hallelujah.

in his ſanctuary] Or, for his ſanctuary; That is, for revealing himſelf in his ordinances. So verſe 2. In his mighty acts: That is, for them.

in the firmament of his power] For his wonderful power appeareth in the firmament, which in Hebrew is called, a ſtretching out, or, ſpreading abroad. And therein the mighty work of God ſhineth.

V. 2. excellent greatneſſe] Or, greatneſſe of greatneſſe, or abundance of greatneſſe.

V. 3. with the ſound of the trumpet] He exhorteth them, that they might praiſe God the better, to ſtir up their joy with muſical inſtruments. And if muſical inſtruments, as is granted; had that power then; how have they changed their nature ſince?

trumpet] Or, cornet.

V. 4. dance] Or, pipe.

V. 5. loud] Heb. of report, Eſay 53. 1.

high] Heb. ſhouting.

V. 6. Let every thing that hath breath, praiſe the Lord] That is, every man, Deut. 20. 16. Joſh 11. 11. So ſometimes fleſh is put for man. He ſheweth, that all men have cauſe to praiſe God. Let us therefore, never ceaſe praiſing him here, till we be taken from hence, into his heavenly Kingdom, which he hath prepared for his; to ſing of his praiſe for ever. Amen, and Amen.

thing] Heb. breath.

Praiſe ye the Lord] Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16.

A PREFACE

CONCERNING

The Argument of this Book, and the uſe of PROVERBS in general.

A*S the Author of this Book is eaſily known by his Name, ſo famous and frequent upon Holy Records,* SOLOMON; and by other Titles and Attributes, as Son of David, and King of Iſrael, at the beginning: ſo may the Argument of it as eaſily, by the inſcription it bears, of PROVERBS: a word not unknown unto any that underſtands common Engliſh: of both which neverthelesſe, (both of the Author, and Inſcription) ſomewhat more ſhall be ſaid afterwards in due place: In the mean time it will be worth our labour to look into the Origine, and to ſhew the right uſe of Proverbs, in general: which to do, as it ought to be done, will put as upon a conſideration of differences of times, and ages of the world; and of different tempers and judgements of men; as alſo of different kinds, or degrees of Wiſdom, according to variety of times: the knowledge and conſideration of which things will very much conduce, as to a right apprehenſion concerning the uſe; ſo, to a right Judgement concerning the valuation and eſtimation of this particular Book.

We will not go ſo far as Adam, and the originals of mankind; of which times there hath been, and is yet great controverſie among the learned, whether men were then wiſeſt, and afterwards degenerated, as mankind increaſed: or whether that was mans infant-time in point of knowledge and worldly wiſdom, which in after-ages by degrees came to ripeneſſe of underſtanding: It would be beſides our purpoſe here; and elſewhere we have handled it at large. Without any ſuch reflexion to Primitive times we ſay, that the ſame Country and Kingdom, according to diverſity of events and alterations in matter of government; of peace, or wars; of liberty, or ſubjection; may have, in ſeveral ages, ſeveral ebbings and flowings in matter of humane Knowledge, and Wiſdom, and differ from it ſelf, as in outward ſhape and cuſtomes; ſo, in matter of wit, judgement, and capacity, (depending moſt from different education) and ſo in its wayes, and degrees of wiſdome, and underſtanding.

There was a time among the Grecians, (in whom we inſtance rather than other Nations, becauſe better furniſhed of ancient Records concerning them, than concerning other Nations;) a time, I ſay, when all wiſdom (as is obſerved ſomewhere by Ariſtole) conſiſted in parables and ſentences: and to be the author of a wiſe ſaying, was enough to purchaſe a man in the world both admiration and authority. A Sentence, and an Oracle were then thought to have great affinity, and ordinarily entertained with almoſt equal honour and reverence. Either none but thoſe that were of high rank and place, took upon themſelves (of which more upon Chapter 1. verſe 1.) to ſpeak ſentences: or if any others did, they were reputed worthy of greateſt honours. Some ſentences were conſecrated in temples, and attributed to the gods, becauſe they were thought to ſurpaſſe the wiſdom of mortal men. So was that famous Γνῶθι σεαυτὸν Noſce teipſum: or, Know thy ſelfe; of which ſo much hath been written by the ancients. Others were ingraven upon ſtatues, or pillars of ſtone, erected of purpoſe, and ſet in high-wayes, that travellers, as they paſſed by, might at the ſame time, both learn, and admire. Such were thoſe called Ἑρμαῖ, mentioned by Plato in one of his Dialogues, erected by Hipparchus: whereof one had this ſaying, Στεῖχε δίκαια φρονῶν; that is, Think of righteouſneſſe as thou goeſt along; or, Practice righteouſneſſe in thy life and converſation. Another, Μὴ φίλον ἐξαπάτα, that is, Deceive not thy friend. And it is obſerveable, that ſuch an opinion this Hipparchus had of thoſe his ſentences, that to every one of them, as ancient Painters and Statuaries to ſome of their choiceſt pieces were wont, he did adde his Name; Μνῆμα τόδ' Ἱππάρχου, Μὴ φίλον, &c. Which was not done by him onely, but by ſome others in the ſame kind: as by Phocylides, who lived much about that time; not the author of that Ποίημα Νουθετικὸν, now extant under that name: a very choice Piece otherwiſe, we confeſſe; but not of that antiquity: but another Phocylides, of whome there remains but little; to wit, ſome few ſententious Diſticks, here and there, ſcattered in ancient Authors; who alſo bear witneſſe of him, that to every ſuch Diſtick his manner was to prefixe his name, in theſe words, Καὶ τόδε Φωκυλίδου: This alſo is Phocylides his verſe, or, ſentence. By which doth appear the ſimplicity of that age, compared with later times. Syneſius, a very reſponſable Author, citeth Ariſtotle, (but not to be found, I doubt, in what now remaineth of Ariſtotle:) as, ſaying, that Proverbs, were ἐγκαταλείμματα: that is to ſay, the relicks, or remains, of that ancient wiſdom and philoſophy, which through publick broiles and confuſions of nations and kingdomes, (ſuch as we have ſeen; and I pray God, we do not ſee the ſame fruits:) was periſhed. However, if that paſſage of Ariſtotle be not now extant; yet by many that are, it doth appear how much he doth aſcribed to ancient Proverbs. Himſelf had made a collection of old Proverbs and ſentences, as Diog. Laertius in his life, doth report. In the ſecond book of his Rhetoricks, he treateth of them largly: and in the firſt book, where he treateth of teſtimonies and evidences, he gives Proverbs the next place after Oracles. But that which is much more wonderful is, the power and efficacy ſuch ſentences and parables (for they were often joyned) had, to perſwade men; as either to reclaim them from ſome vicious courſe, or purpoſe; or to allay paſſions of either anger or ſorrow, or the like; whereof there be divers examples in ancient Hiſtories: inſomuch as ſome maintained, (of which ſubject Seneca hath written one Epiſtle, or two,) that no other kind of Philoſophy was needful, (as particularly, no Exhortations, which we call now, Sermons;) to perſwade men to goodneſſe, but this kind, which they had known to be ſo ſucceſſeful and available in former times. But now was the caſe much altered, in Seneca's time, and long before; mundo jam ad ſummam ſolertiam perducto; as he ſpeaks ſomewhere: when moral Philoſophy, through continual uſe and exerciſe, was become ſo popular, that every fool, or varlet, (yea every carnifex, as is ſaid in the Comick) could utter in ordinary talk more ſentences, than formerly the wiſeſt Philoſophers, or States-men in their moſt ſerious Diſcourſes. A man would have thought the world, in point of life and morality, through this improvement of knowledge, ſhould much have amended. But it proved quite contrary. For thoſe ſentences, which once, when rare, and of difficult acceſſe, as it were, were entertained as Oracles, and accordingly wrought upon the ſoules and mindes of men; were now become a meer complement of language, and a delight of the ear onely; without any influence at all on the heart; ſo that the very name of ἀρεταλόγος, or ſentence-ſpeaker, became the name of a jugler, or impoſter. Antiqua ſapientia nihil aliud quam facienda & vitanda præcepit. Et tunc longè meliores erant. Poſtquam docti prodierunt, boni deſunt, ſaith, Seneca.

From all that hath been ſaid, hitherto; concerning theſe Proverbs of Solomon (not to ſpeak of them as Canonical Scripture, which is a common conſideration; but according to humane judgement,) I would inferre particularly, Firſt, that to value them to their worth, we muſt not conſider them by what we ſee in theſe dayes, when learning (ſo far as to talk, and make a ſhew) is become more common than ſilver was in Solomons dayes, (1 King. 10. 21, 27.) when every pedler can make a Preacher; and many beardleſſe boyes out of ſhops, and from the plough, with little reading, and a great deal of confidence can find words enough (which ſome call the Spirit) to lead whole multitudes. Certainly, had Solomon himſelf lived in theſe dayes, he would have been thought in the judgement of many men but a very ordinary man, in compariſon of ſome of theſe inſpired tradeſmen, and confident youths. Secondly, that ſome things are delivered with that ſimplicity of words, and ſtile, as did well agree with the conſtitution of thoſe times, to which they have more particular relation, both to pleaſe and to profit: though not ſo well perchance, with that over-ripeneſſe of wit, and ſubtilty, that moſt men are born with in this age. But laſtly, that if men could withdraw themſelves a little from that φιληκοΐα, that immoderate hunting after the pleaſure of the ear, (of all other ſenſes, the moſt inſatiable: the proper temper, ſhall I ſay, or diſtemper of all learned ages;) and betake themſelves to more ſober retired reading, with anſwerable ſerious meditation, (as neceſſary, as the very reading it ſelfe;) they may finde the power and efficacy of theſe Proverbs and Sentences, (ever of thoſe which at firſt hearing, promiſe but little ;) as much as others have done in former ages, to the amendment of their lives, and freeing of their ſouls from the bondage of many unreaſonable luſts and paſſions : than which, in very deed, no greater bondage or ſlavery is in the world.

Some things beſides whoever ſhall read theſe Proverbs, had need to know before hand. Firſt, concerning coherence of matter and words, that they muſt not look for it ; though it is very good ſometimes, and apparent enough for divers verſes together ; yet it is not to be expected, as a thing not endeavoured by the Author. Neither indeed was it the faſhion in thoſe dayes, to write ſuch things otherwiſe than looſely and promiſcuouſly. It may appear, as by ſome others, ſo by Theognis, one of the Ancienteſt Gnomologues, or ſentence-writers now extant, who alſo lived not many ages after Solomon, and in many things doth agree with him, as may appear to them that ſhall diligently compare them together. Yet of the firſt 9. Chapters, for the moſt part, the ſubject is but one ; to wit, the commendation of wiſdom. And becauſe there is not any thing that doth more ſtrongly or dangerouſly either withhold, or withdraw from the ſtudy of wiſdom, than bad company ; but eſpecially, the company of women : having ſaid ſomething in the firſt Chapter of the company of bad men ; he doth often inſiſt upon that of women, as the moſt dangerous of the two, (ſo he found it himſelf ;) and doth very lively and Poetically ſet out their allurements, and the fearful end of thoſe that are deluded by them, and fall into their nets. The laſt Chapter containeth (for the moſt part) the character of a vertuous woman, and a good wife. In all the reſt, there is but little coherence of matter, except (as I ſaid before) here and there of ſome few verſes, that hang together.

Secondly, that ſome things, yea many, are often repeated. And this will bring us to a further conſideration of the Author. That Solomon is the Author of this Book of Proverbs in generall, is generally acknowledged : but the Author, as David of the Pſalmes, not becauſe all made by him ; but becauſe either the maker of a good part ; or collector and approver of the reſt. It is not to be doubted but that many of theſe Proverbs and Sentences, were known and uſed long before Solomom : ſo wiſe and underſtanding a Nation could not be without many pithy common ſayings and ſentences, which are accounted the beſt evidence of every Nations wiſdome ; and though it might have many more than Solomon (guided by the Spirit of God) did think fit to Canonize, by admitting them into his Collection ; yet that he would admit of none, is not a thing likely. Of them that were collected by others, as Solomons, but long ſince his death, from Chapter 25. to 30. and then of thoſe that bear Agurs Name, Chapter 30. and Lemuels ; Chapter 31. ſee upon thoſe ſeverall Chapters. If not all Solomons, then but partly his, and partly collected by him, and partly by others, at ſeverall times : no wonder, if divers things with little or no alteration, be often repeated. However, Solomon might have ſome end in it, in repeating ſome things of purpoſe. VVe ſhall finde repetitions in that kind in the writings of ſome ancients. Sed quia nimis indociles quidam, tardique ſunt, admonendi videntur ſæpius ; ſaith one of them. Dicentibus ; Quouſque eadem ? Reſponde : Ego debeo dicere ; Quouſque eadem peccabitis ? Remedia ante vultis, quam vitia deſinere ? Ego verò magis dicam ; & quia recuſatis, perſeverabo. So another.

A third thing very neceſſary to be obſerved, is, That there be few moral maximes or ſentences, of ſuch catholick and univerſal truth, (which is the priviledge of Mathematical Theoremes) as to hold alwayes : or that the contrary ſhould never be true. The reaſon whereof is well ſhewed by Ariſtotle in his Ethicks. If you will have it in the words of an ancient Grammarian, that hath written upon Virgil : Sententiæ non ſemper generales ſunt, ſed interdum pro negotiorum qualitate formantur. As for example ; Differ, habent parvæ commoda magna moræ. A little delay may prove a great advantage ; ſaith one. Semper nocuit differre paratis : Delayes are alwayes dangerous ; ſaith another. Both may be true, as the matter may be ſtated by different circumſtances of time, place, and the like. So our Saviour in the Goſpel ; He that is not with me, is againſt me ; in one place, Matth. 12. 30. And, He that is not againſt us, is for us, in another, Luke 9. 50. And Solomon himſelf, in the ſame place, Anſwer not a fool according to his folly : And, Anſwer a fool according to his folly, Prov. 26. 4, 5.

As for the word Proverbs, of the ſeveral uſes and notions of it, and how here to be underſtood, ſee upon the firſt verſe of the firſt Chapter.

1 Kings 4. 32. we find amongſt other things recorded of Solomon, as an effect of his extraordinary Divine wiſdom, (verſe 29.) that he ſpake 3000. Proverbs, (not four thouſand, as I find in ſome Engliſh Bibles, printed at London, 1620. ) part of which, ſo many as the Holy Ghoſt thought fit for Canonical Scripture, are contained in this Book of Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes ; and ſome perhaps in the Canticles. It is not unlikely, that many of the reſt are to be found in Eccleſiaſticus : which by ſome ancients is attributed to Solomon, not onely becauſe written in imitation, as one of the Prologues there doth acknowledge ; but alſo becauſe partly taken out of this Book of Proverbs, as may appear by the Paralel collected and exhibited by Cornelius a Lapide in his Prolegomena upon this Book : and partly (as in all likelihood) out of the remainder of thoſe 3000. before ſpoken of. This Eccleſiaſticus, or Author of the Book we commonly call Eccleſiaſticus, which was written in Hebrew ; and afterwards tranſlated into Greek ; lived ſome 500. years after Solomon, and ſome 250. before Chriſt, in the dayes of Ptolemeus Philadelphus ; by whoſe procurement the Hebrew Bible was firſt tranſlated into Greek, by thoſe we commonly call the Septuagint : and it is thought by ſome learned men, that the Author of the Book (one Jeſus Sirach : ) was one of theſe Septuagint Interpreters. The reading of Eccleſiaſticus, and diligent comparing of paralel places, will give light to many obſcure places of the Proverbs ; which hath made me the more willingly to take notice of the Book.

It hath been the opinion of ſome, as appeareth by the Queſtiones Hebraicæ, aſcribed commonly to Saint Jerome, that all thoſe 3000. before mentioned Proverbs, were comprehended in this Book of Proverbs. The words out of the ſaid Book (whoever be the Author of it) to this purpoſe cited by Cornelius a Lapide, are ; In Proverbiis verſus nongenti quindecim continentur : in quibus etiam continentur tria mille parabolæ.

The Ancients indeed were wont to divide all Books into verſes, and by the number of verſes to eſtimate their bulk and bigneſſe ; of which much hath been written by latter Criticks. But how 3000. parables can be contained in 915. verſes, (taking verſes for lines, as they did ;) I cannot imagine ; but rather believe there is an errour in the Copy. But if not in the Copy ; yet, however, an errour in the man, certainly, if ever any did ſo believe, or write.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

T*He Proverbs*] Hebr. משלים or, in conſtruction, as here, משלי. The word is derived from a verb, that hath two ſignifications; both which may have relation to Proverbs, or Sentences. The firſt ſignification is, dominatus eſt; dominum exercuit: that is, he hath been Lord, ruler; or governour. Hence Sentences might be denominated, as among the Grecians, ἀξιώματα: κυρίαι δόξαι, and the like: thereby to ſet out the worth and dignity of moral Sentences and Apophthegms, tending to inſtruction, and direction, in matter of life and manners: as among all other ſubjects deſerving the preeminence; ſo alſo among all men, to paſſe with authority, and without control. This is the common opinion; which I am not againſt. But it may be as probable, that Sentences were at firſt ſo called, from the ranck and place of the authors themſelves. For in ancient times (whereof ſomewhat hath been ſaid in the Preface:) they were for the moſt part Governours, or ſuch at leaſt, as were thought fit to govern, whoſe ſayings were received for Sentences. Whence it is, as I conceive, that Sentences, in general; or more particularly, choice Sentences, are called נגידים Chap. 8. 6. that is, Princes; properly; and 22. 20. שלישים magnates: tribuni; that is, Great men, or Chief Officers: as we ſhall ſay there. See alſo upon Chap. 16. 10. A Divine Sentence is in the lips of the King, &c. And Quintilian, an ancient Maſter of Rhetorick, one of the moſt judicious that ever wrote; where he treats of Sentences, ſaith well: Magis enim decet eos in quibus eſt auctoritas, ut rei pondus etiam perſona confirmet. Quis enim ferat, puerum, aut adoleſcentulum, aut etiam ignobilem, &c. that is, It becomes them beſt (to uſe Sentences:) that are men in or of authority, that the dignity of the perſon alſo may adde ſome further weight to the matter. For who would endure a child, or a youth, or ſome obſcure mean fellow, to pronounce ſentences in his ordinary talk, and to take upon him the authority of an Inſtructer, or Teacher? The Grecians alſo called Sentences, γνώμας, quod ſimiles ſunt conſiliis, (I think he meant ſcitis: for ſo is the word γνώμη uſed:) aut decretis: as the ſame Quintilian. Certain it is, that anciently many were the authors of Sentences, who alſo were of Laws: Hi non in foro, nec in conſultorum atrio, ſed in Pythagoræ tacito illo ſanctoque receſſu, didicerunt jura, quæ florenti tunc Sicilia, & per Italiam Græciæ ponerent; ſaith Seneca, ſpeaking of ſome ancient Law-makers. The ſecond ſignification of the verb משל (but in another conjugation:) is Similis factus eſt: and (in Hiphil, as they call it;) comparavit, aſſimilavit: that is, He was made like; He did liken, or compare. Hence ſome conceive that the proper ſignification of משל or maſhal, is, ſimilitudo, parabola: a ſimilitude, or parable. And becauſe moſt Parables end in Proverbs, or Proverbial Sentences, and admonitions; therefore, ſay they, the word came to be uſed for Proverbs, and Sentences: firſt, for ſuch as were expreſſed figuratively: then, afterwards more generally, for all manner of ſentences, or moral precepts, though (for the language) never ſo plain and direct. But I will not further enquire into the reaſons: certain it is, that both here and elſewhere in Scripture, the word maſhal is ſo taken: not for a Proverb, properly ſo called, which implyes a common ſpeech, ſententious, with ſomewhat extraordinary (according to the propriety of every Language, ſome affecting rimes; ſome, alluſions; and others, ſome other thing) in the expreſſion; but alſo any moral precept, inſtruction, or obſervation; ſuch as are many in this book, which beareth the title of Proverbs. However, it doth not follow, that becauſe of the Inſcription, every thing in the book, ſhould be Proverbs: ſince it is ordinary enough to make inſcriptions a majore parte. The firſt nine Chapters are by many accounted rather as an Introduction to the whole book, than as part of the Proverbs. Indeed they do not contain many Proverbs, but the praiſes and commendation of wiſdom, in general: that is the ſubject; whereof ſee what hath allready been ſaid in the Preface And upon Chap. 10. ver. 1. The Proverbs, &c. From the tenth Chapter to the end, there is little elſe but Proverbs and Sentences. Again, there be, who think theſe firſt nine Chapters to be here exhibited as they came from Solomon, himſelf, without any alteration of either matter or method: but thoſe that follow, to be collections: of which more ſhall be ſaid in due place. Others, with more probability, that the ſix firſt verſes of this Chapter, are not Solomons, but added by way of Preface or Argument by them that made this collection, and ſet it out abroad. This, as of it ſelf it is not improbable, becauſe the like we know hath been done to many Books; yet if there be no further ground, as I know none, for it, it might as well have been ſpared, there being as much and more probability for the contrary. For that Solomon himſelf ſhould perfix his name and titles himſelf, is very ſuitable to the cuſtome of thoſe ancient times. There be few books, of any great antiquity, whether in verſe or proſe, but begin with the Authors name, his country, and pedigree, and other like circumſtances; and this by the Author himſelf, as all men agree. It is commonly interpreted by them that are well verſed in ancient books as a mark of great antiquity; if it be genuine, and not ſuppoſitious, or counterfeit. But now for concluſion of all we have more to ſay upon this Title, before we leave it, the conſideration of titles being a principal thing in all expoſitions: We may reduce the ſeveral uſes and ſignifications of this word משל (as it relateth unto Proverbs:) to the ſeveral properties and conditions belonging to a Proverb. Which though they be not found but in few Proverbs, all: yet all belong unto Proverbs, in general; as appears by them that have written of the nature and conſtitution of a Proverb; which alſo might be ſhewed, (as by them it is, who profeſſedly treat about it;) by divers examples. A Proverb then we ſay, is an ancient ſpeech (the more it hath of antiquity, the more of luſter and authority:) commonly uſed (that too, addeth to the authority: and the Greek παροιμία, for a Proverb, imports properly, a common way, ſpeech, or admonition: from which ſome fetch the Latine word, adagium, too:) which for the moſt part, hath ſomewhat of acutneſſe, obſcurity, or concinnity in it, more than other ſpeeches; whoſe end is, inſtruction, or information, in point of life and converſation Now we ſhall find, that what hath ſome of theſe qualifications and conditions; yea though but one of them, if notably and eminently, is in the Scripture called, משל a Proverb. So, for example: Wickedneſſe proceedeth from the wicked: מרשעים יצא רשע: 1 Sam. 24. 13. a very plain ſpeech, which might ſeeme the interpretation of a Proverb: (as, Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the Leopard his ſpots? Jer. 13. 23. The tree is known by his fruit. Men gather not figs of thornes, nor grapes of a bramble-buſh, Luke 6. 44. or the like:) rather than a proverb it ſelf. But yet a proverb, and ſo called there, becauſe an ancient common ſpeech: As ſaith the Proverb of the ancients, Wickedneſſe proceedeth, &c. Again, Ezek. 24. 3. [Son of man:] Utter a parable unto the rebellious houſe (in the Hebrew, משל a Proverb; and more full and emphatical there, than can well be expreſſed in another tongue: משל אל בית המרי משל as if you ſhould ſay: Parable a parable: or, proverb a proverb: that is, proverbially ſet out, &c.) and ſay unto them; Thus ſaith the Lord God; ſet on a pot: ſet it on: and alſo pour water into it: 4. Gather the pieces, &c. unto the 12. verſe. There is nothing in all this, that is properly proverbial, as the word is more commonly uſed: but as it is a ſimilitude, darkly and obſcurely ſet out; that intitles it to this appellation of a proverb. Whence alſo it is, that משל a proverb: and חידה a riddle, in the like caſe, Ezek. 17. 2. (חוד חידה ומשל משל very emphatically here too, in both words:) are joyned together. Again, Pſalme 78. 1, 2. Give eare, O my people, &c. I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark ſayings of old. In the whole Pſalme there is not any thing properly proverbial, or ſententious: no, nor very obſcure, and allegorical: but a plaine hiſtorical narration, or commemoration of things that had paſſed in old times, between God, and their fore-fathers, in Egypt and elſewhere, ſince their coming out of Egypt, where the power, and conſtant goodneſſe of God towards them; and their as conſtant unthankfulneſſe, and manifold provocations, are manifeſted and declared. Why then a proverb, or a parable? or, why riddles? For ſo the Original word (חידות) which in our Engliſh is rendred dark ſayings, doth properly import. Firſt, becauſe of the argument: ancient things, very old, and very ſtrange: and in that partaking of the nature, as of proverbs, ſo of riddles. But eſpecially, משכיל לאסף that is, A Pſalme of, or for Aſaph, to give inſtruction. Inſtruction and warning, by ſuch examples, ſo emphatically, not in ordinary language; but poetically ſet out, of thoſe things that had hapned in old times, and by an extraordinary power or hand, to their fore-fathers, by reaſon of their ſtubbornneſſe and many rebellions, being the maine (to glorifie God, another; but that the moſt immediate:) end; therefore called a parable, or proverb: and, a riddle. Laſtly, particular men, or a whole people is made a proverb: (a proverb, and a byword; שנינה an acute, or witty ſaying, properly: they are ſo put together, Deuter. 28. 37. and elſewhere:) when their names are become the object of common talke, (and wit too: for ſome men are moſt ready to ſhew their wit, upon ſuch an occaſion of other mens calamities: which nevertheleſſe argues as little true wit, or wiſdome, as it doth charity:) for a warning to poſterity. We have ſhewed the extent of the Hebrew word, as it is uſed in the Scripture. Now what a Proverb is properly in its own nature; and how to be diſtinguiſhed from a parable, or ſentence: or apophthegme: how from an apologue: a riddle, &c. becauſe I think it not ſo neceſſary here, and would put us to much arguing, to determine it: I muſt referre the Reader that deſires to be ſatisfied, to them that have written of that ſubject, of purpoſe: but to Ariſtotle eſpecially, where before quoted; in whom much good matter to this purpoſe will be found.

As more ſhort, ſo more pertinent it may be, to take notice, that as the Hebrew קשל is uſed in the Scripture of divers ſpeeches that are not Proverbs in the common ſenſe and uſe of the word: ſo the Greek word γρίφος: griphus: (properly, a riddle:) is ſometimes taken more generally, for any queſtion, or probleme, though it have nothing in it, either of wit, or obſcurity. See in the tenth Book of Athenæus, by Clearchus &c. as by the learned that have taken paines upon that Author, is well obſerved.

The Proverbs of Solomon] Hebr. משלי שלמה I am not very prone of my ſelfe, to adſcribe much unto derivations, or alluſions, in, or of proper Names. Yet we finde many in the Scriptures, both of New, and Old Teſtament. But ot the Old eſpecially. No proper Name there almoſt, (at leaſt, of any note:) but hath its alluſion, or myſtery. Abraham: Iſaac: Jacob, &c. who knowes it not? Why then may not we obſerve, (though I finde it not obſerved:) that משל maſhal, a Proverb: and שלמה Solomon: by tranſpoſition (wherein conſiſts all anagrammatiſme:) onely of one letter, is but one word? And there be many ſuch tranſpoſitions of letters in the Scripture, not in alluſions, and etymologies onely; but even in the ſame word, bearing the ſame ſignification, to be found. So that if we make a verbal of קשל the verbe; the ſame word may ſtand for Solomon, and for a ſpeaker of Proverbs. But I ſhall not further inſiſt upon this.

V. 2. To know wiſdom and inſtruction, to perceive the words of underſtanding] Solomon by theſe, and many other words, heaped in the 3, 4. 5. and ſixt following verſes, tells his Reader what the end is of this Book, and what benefit he may reap by reading of it. The world is, and hath been of old, (though never more than now) full of Writers, and as full of Readers: but variety, or curioſity being the onely end of moſt, the world were better without them. An ancient Grammarian in Aulus Gellius, when ſome profeſſed Philoſophers came to him, being a man of great account in his profeſſion, to be reſolved about ſome curioſities in matter of language, brake out into a great paſſion; Ego Grammaticus, vitæ atque morum diſciplinas quæro: vos philoſophi, &c. I that am a profeſſed Grammarian, now in mine old age, am wholly ſet upon thoſe Arts and Studies by which my life and manners may be benefited: and you profeſſed Philoſophers, (mera eſtis mortuaria Gloſſaria:) are wholly turned into dead and rotten Gloſſaries (or curioſities about words and phraſes, from which no benefit can accrue, either to you, or to any body elſe, in point of life or action) it made him wiſh, that rather all men had been borne dumb, than that there ſhould be ſo much ado about words. As therefore the conſideration of the end, before hand, in all actions and undertakings, do extremly become a rational wiſe man; ſo, if ſeriouſly thought upon, is there no end much conſiderable, that hath not reference to this end, here ſpoken of, To know wiſdom, &c. that is, to the improvement of man in his better part, in matter of life and action. And this was the way that the ancients did uſe to teach wiſdom; as before in the Preface hath been obſerved, by Proverbs, and Parables, and Sentences; ſuch as this Book doth contain. Which way in thoſe ancient times was found ſo effectual, that ſome in later ages, did not onely prefer it before any other way, but would admit of no other, as expedient. Concerning which, Seneca hath two Epiſtles, wherein the matter is argued on both ſides very largely, and learnedly. But here a queſtion, not impertinently, as I conceive, may be moved; whether the Law and the Commandements, comprehended in the five Books of Moſes, were not ſufficient to that end, without theſe Proverbs of Solomon. For that that was the end of the Law alſo, appears by many paſſages: as by Deut. 4. 5, 6. Behold I have taught you Statutes and Judgements, &c. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wiſdom and your underſtanding in the ſight of the nations, which ſhall heat all theſe ſtatutes, and ſay; Surely this great nation is a wiſe and underſtanding people. For what nation, &c. To this, our anſwer is; Firſt, that the end of the Law, was, to inſtruct men in thoſe things, that did more immediately belong to the ſervice of God; as alſo in matters of right and wrong, which come within the compaſſe of Laws and publick adminiſtration of juſtice. Other precepts of morality and good manners, were rather ſet out in types, partly; and partly, in examples of the Law, than in expreſſe terms, moſt of them. However, the effect of moſt of them might be deducted out of the Law, by them that were very well verſed in it, and applyed themſelves earneſtly to the ſtudy of it: and many queſtionleſſe of theſe very Proverbs, here commended unto us by Solomon, as tending to this end, to wiſdom and inſtruction, &c. were then extant and in uſe among the Hebrews, being tranſmitted from fathers to children, by them that were wiſe themſelves, and careful of their childrens education. Thus was the Law, with thoſe other helps that God had provided for them, very ſufficient to make them wiſe and perfect, that carefully ſought after wiſdom, according to that degree of knowledge and perfection, which God, in his heavenly wiſdom, had allotted to that infant-age of the Church. Afterwards, when God was pleaſed that morall wiſdome ſhould be more popular and common, he raiſed Solomon to that end and purpoſe, who not onely collected into one, what former ages afforded in that kind; but himſelf, being endowed by God with extraordinary wiſdom, added many particular inſtructions of his own, as he was inſpired by God. Theſe words therefore, To know wiſdom, &c. muſt not be taken in oppoſition to the Law, as of a different way here propoſed: but upon a ſuppoſition of thoſe means, the Law, the Pſalms or whatever elſe God had already provided unto that end. See more upon ver. 4. To give ſubtilty, &c, and ver. 8. My ſon, &c.

To know wiſdom and inſtruction, to perceive the words of underſtanding. 3. To receive the inſtruction of wiſdom, &c.] Here be many words put together in theſe, and ſome following verſes, ſome of which in common uſe, are equivalent; (otherwiſe called ſynonima's) and others, that are of very neer ſignification. Neverthelеſſe, it were no hard thing to deviſe ſome difference, might we but take the liberty to look into the diviſions of ſubtile Philoſophers, concerning the manifold habits and faculties of the ſoul; as either into Ariſtotle, concerning the differences of thoſe five habits, as he reckons them, of the ſoul, τέχνη, ἐπιστήμη, φρόνησις, σοφία, νοῦς: or unto others of the differences between νοῦς, λόγος, λογισμὸς, διάνοια: and the like: no hard thing, I ſay; could we but as eaſily perſwade our ſelves, that Solomon writing theſe things for common uſe, and even where he invites common people to him, could think it fit and ſeaſonable, to tye himſelf to ſuch philoſophical niceties in his expreſſions; which though they may have ſome ground in nature, yet are ſo remote from common apprehenſions, that but very few are capable of them. To let therefore all curious diſtinctions paſſe, as rather the conceits of Interpreters, than any part of Solomons, or the Holy Ghoſts meaning; that which we conceive moſt probable, is, that by ſo many words, perfect or true wiſdom is intended, which preſuppoſeth a competency of light in the underſtanding, (as the foundation;) concerning things divine and humane; and a conformity of the will and affections to that light. Variety of words doth the better ſet out the excellency of this wiſdom; and ſerves alſo to make the deeper impreſſion in the mind of the Reader. Yet for all this we deny not, but that according to the propriety of the words, חכמה may referre to ſpeculative knowledge and ſciences, more particularly: בינה to practical abilities, which we call prudence and diſcretion; as מוסר doth import diſcipline properly, that is, ſuch improvements of knowledge and manners, as comes by inſtitution, and good education.

of wiſdom] We may note, that the word חכמה in Scripture, is a very general word, and comprehends all kind of wiſdom: as the word σοφία, in Greek Authors. Sometimes, it doth import mechanick craft and wiſdom: which though of an inferior degree, yet is from God too, as we are taught, Exod. 28. 3. 31. 3. and Eſay 8. 23 24. unto the end. Sometimes, worldly wiſdome, whether practicall, which we call policy, prudeuce: or ſpeculative, as the knowledge of things natural, &c. as 1 Kings 4. 30. And laſtly, heavenly ſanctifying wiſdome: as Deuteron. 4. 6. See Job 28. 28. and Pſalm 111. laſt verſe: of which ſee more on the ſeventh verſe of this Chapter. All theſe kinds as they are all from God, ſo they may all concurre and meet in ſome one man One and the ſame man may excell in mechanick craft; whether by practice, and actual operation: or by ſhewing his ready phancy, quick apprehenſion, and ſound judgement in all ſuch things: and may be very prudent and cautelous in worldly things; both at home, and abroad: and beſides all this, a very godly man too. But though this be not impoſſible, yet it doth not often ſo fall out: except a man (as ſome are) be naturally, wiſe and politick. But they that attain to worldly wiſdom by long uſe and practice, and diligent obſervation; (which is the more ordinary way) they are ſuch commonly as make it their onely end, and buſineſſe, in this world: who propoſe to themſelves worldly ends, and atchivements, as chiefeſt happineſſe. Whereas, they that have a right apprehenſion of the vanity of this world, and all worldly felicity; and can make a difference between things momentaneous, and eternal; and have a faith anſwerable to their judgement, by which things future appear unto them with equal certainty as things preſent: it is not very likely, or very poſsible (excepting, as before:) that ſuch men ſhould be very worldly-wiſe and prudent: not becauſe they are incapable; but becauſe being ſo intent upon the proſecution of heaven, (that precious pearl:) they cannot afford unto ſuch things which they have no better opinion of, ſo much time and tendence, as they require: it being very difficult, if not impoſsible, even in this ſenſe. to ſerve two maſters, God and the world: to apply himſelf effectually to the purſuance of worldly deſignes and advancements; and to the purchaſe of heaven and eternity. Ariſtotle makes it, among others the property of a μεγαλόψυχος, or truely magnanimous man, never to be ſeen very earneſt or eager about any thing: and particularly never to ſpeak, or to walk haſtily: becauſe, ſaith he, this world doth not afford any thing, that he doth ſo much value, as to put himſelf out of his ordinary pace, or to raiſe his voice for it. For what ſhould he think much conſiderable in the world, to whom life it ſelf is not a conſiderable thing? So he. How much more doth a true Chriſtian, whom thoughts of eternity have once throughly poſſeſt, think the ſtudy and earneſt purſuit of theſe things beneath him? Yet true it is neverthelеſſe, (as we ſhall clear afterwards) though a man doth not ſet his heart upon the world, or make it his ſtudy to be worldly wiſe; yet (ſome natural towardlineſſe that way preſuppoſed) he may much advantage himſelf even ſo (in worldly wiſdom, I mean) by the diligent reading of the word of God; and eſpecially, by being well verſed in this book of Proverbs.

V. 4. To give ſubtilty to the ſimple, to the young man knowledge and diſcretion] David ſaith the ſame of the Law of God, before this Book of Proverbs was extant, Pſal. 19. 7. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the ſoul: The teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, making wiſe the ſimple. See alſo Pſal. 119. 98, 99, 100. Thou through thy commandements haſt made me wiſer, &c. whereby that is confirmed which we ſaid before, that theſe commendations we have here of the Proverbs, and thoſe effects that are aſcribed unto them, do preſuppoſe, or include a knowledged of the Law likewiſe.

ſubtilty] The Original word ערמה here tranſlated ſubtilty, is ſometimes taken in a good, and ſometimes in a bad ſenſe. There be divers examples of both ſignifications in the Scripture. Though it be deſired, and much commended, I hear by them that muſt have præmanſum cibum; and would not willingly be put to the labour of turning more Bookes than one (for that they cannot, through ignorance, were too groſſe to ſuſpect.) yet I cannot perſwade my ſelf that it is fit to be done, or indeed, profitabe to any, to tranſcribe, upon every word whole Concordances and Dictionaries. So a man may be long enough, and yet take no very great paines. My obſervation upon the word is: That whereas there is nothing more natural unto man (as Philoſophers obſerve, and we partly know by the ſad Story of Adam's fall:) than the deſire of knowledge: and among the men of the world, (that is, the greater part,) no kind of knowledge more valued, or deſired, than craft and ſubtilty: therefore wiſe Solomon doth here moſt wiſely multiply words, as ſubtilty, knowledge, diſcretion, learning: and before, wiſdome, inſtruction, underſtanding, and the like, the more powerfully to draw and to perſwade, if poſſible, all kind of men, to the love and purſuite of heavenly wiſdome: being very confident himſelfe, (and would have all men to believe, as by this accumulation of words he doth intimate:) that heavenly wiſdome, is the wiſdome of wiſdomes: and heavenly knowledge (that is godlineſſe, or the fear of God) the knowledge of knowledges: to which therefore all titles, attributes, and expreſſions of wiſdome and knowledge, as ſubtilty prudence, diſcretion, and the like, in requeſt among men; do properly belong. Which may be the comfort of every true Chriſtian, that knoweth God in Chriſt, ſincerely, and experimentaly; that though perchance he knoweth little elſe, yet he knoweth as much as will make him eternally happy; in compariſon of which all other knowledge is inconſiderable and of little worth. See alſo upon Chap. 8. 12 prudence. But this, not to undervalue any kind of humane knowledge, or learning, which may be uſefull unto men; than which nothing, (no worldly thing) is, or ſhould be more honorable among men: much leſſe that part of human knowledge, which doth very much conduce to the better underſtanding of the word of God, upon which true faith is grounded; confuting and confounding of errors and hereſies, falſely pretending to the ſaid word: without which help of humane knowledge and learning, there would be great confuſion in the world; atheiſme and ſuperſtition greatly prevaile: nor yet to conclude from theſe words, that all kind of knowledge muſt be had from the Scriptures, all learning thence to be derived; which ſome blind zealots, and enthuſiaſts would have: to none of theſe ends; God forbid: but to give heavenly knowledge her due; and the better to underſtand, why here expreſſed by ſo many words. See alſo upon Chap. 2. verſe 9. and judgement.

to the ſimple] By ſimple, the fooliſh and ignorant, ſuch as want knowledge, and inſtruction, are commonly underſtood, as by the annotation upon the beginning of the verſe may be gathered. But the word will beare another interpretation alſo, which may be as proper to the place, as the former: Simplicity, is ſometimes taken for integrity, and ſincerity of actions oppoſed to fraud and hypocriſie. Without this ſimplicity; or at leaſt, except a man apply himſelfe to it; he can reape little benefit by reading. A corrupt life, and a corrupt judgement, go commonly together. See more upon Pſalm 51. ver. 16. But unto the wicked, God ſaith But more likely (if here to be taken in a good ſenſe:) that by ſimplicity is meant tractableneſſe, and lowlineſſe of mind, oppoſed to pride and haughtineſſe of ſpirit; which maketh men to have a high conceit of their own abilities, and to deſpiſe others. Such kind of ſimplicity is commended by Chriſt, and required in them, that aſpire to have Faith and Chriſtianity: Matth. 18. 2, 3. And Jeſus called a little childe; and by Saint Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 3. As new borne babes. Pride and ſelfe-conceit, are the very bane of Religion. Let a man be never ſo well qualified otherwiſe; yet if proud, and highly conceited of himſelfe, he is as farre (in the eyes of God, whatever he be in his own, or the eyes of other men:) from true Religion and Chriſtianity, as the moſt vicious of men. It is to be hoped, that God in his infinite mercy, may pitty them, in time that know themſelves (being throughly ſenſible of their own defects and miſery:) an object of pitty and compaſſion: To which tends the parable of the proud Phariſee, and humble Publican, Luke 18. 10. &c. But God reſiſteth the proude: Jam. 4. 6. and 1 Pet. 5. 5. (See here upon Chap. 3. ver. 34.) as them, of all men, who moſt particularly and eminently uſurpe upon him, whileſt they aſcribe to themſelves any thing, wherein they can find matter of glorifying. For glory belongs unto God onely: and he will not give his glory unto another, Iſa. 42. 8. Of this ſenſe of the word ſimple, and of interpretation grounded upon it, ſee more upon the next words.

to the young man] The word נער though more commonly it ſignifie a youth, or young man: and becauſe young men are moſt fit for ſervice, a ſervant alſo: yet ſome make it moſt proper to a childe in the womb, ripe and ready to be ſhaken off; that is, to be borne: and ſo they would have it taken, Jud. 13. 7. That it is taken for a new borne babe, Exod. 2. 6. is without all doubt. Now according as we interpret the word ſimple, either for ignorant, or for innocent and meek: (whereof ſo in the precedent annotation:) ſo muſt נער here be tranſlated, either, young man, or, babe: (or, little childe.) Why ignorant, and young, ſhould be put together, and both called upon to learne: needs no further explication. See alſo upon Chap. 10. verſe 1. The Proverbs of Solomon. Neither is much more difficult to conceive, why innocent or meek; and babes, or little children, ſhould go together. See the former quotations, Matth. 18. 2, 3. &c. to which may be added, Pſalm 131. 1. 2. Lord my heart is not haughty, &c. Surely— as a child that is weaned, &c.

V. 5. A wiſe man will hear, and will increaſe learning] Becauſe the young, and the ſimple were particularly mentioned in the foregoing verſe; to whom alſo the word of inſtruction, in the former, might be thought to have more particular relation; leſt any ſhould think the uſe of this Book to belong unto ſuch onely, he preſently addes concerning thoſe that have already attained to the reputation of wiſe men; that ſuch alſo, though in compariſon of others, wiſe already, in ſome degree, may by this Book improve themſelves, and increaſe their learning. In which words we have alſo a pregnant character, or κριτήριον of one that is truly wiſe; which is, that ſuch a one being moſt ſenſible of his own wants, (which is the caſe of them that are moſt perfect in this world) will deſpiſe no means, no oppertunity to improve himſelfe. Whereas a foole, (that is, one that thinks himſelf wiſe) becauſe he thinks he knows all things better than any man can tell him; as he is not ſollicitous to ſeek the means of himſelf, ſo if good counſel be given him by others, he hath not the patience to hear; or if he muſt hear, yet it goes no further than his eares, and doth not enter into his heart, becauſe of his frowardneſſe and ſelfe-conceit. It is the propriety of a wiſe man, abſolutely to deſpiſe no man, though never ſo mean, or ſimple otherwiſe; becauſe there is no man ſo ſimple, but may ſpeak to the purpoſe ſometimes; according to that ancient ſaying, Sepe etiam eſt olitor valde opportuna locutus. And that great Oracle of Nature, Hippocrates, whoſe ſentences, after Solomons, for worth and excellency, may challenge the next place; his advice in a place is, Μὴ ὀκνέειν κὶ παρὰ ἰδιωτέων ἱςορέειν: that is, That we ſhould not ſcruple, or be ſlack to learn, even from them that are counted idiots. See alſo upon Chap. 11. 12. deſpiſeth his neighbour.

ſhall attaine unto wiſe counſels] Or, poſſeſſe wiſe counſels according to the Original word, which ſignifieth both. By wiſe counſel, I underſtand ability to give good advice upon urgent occaſions aud neceſſities, whether private, or publick; but publick eſpecially. A very high commendation, which belongs unto few men, who have been famous in their generations for it, and have been admired alſo by poſterity. Such were the counſels of Achitophel; whereof 2 Sam. 16. 23. we read, that the counſel of Achitophel which he counſelled, in thoſe days, was as if a man had inquired of the Oracle of God: though he found in the end the truth of that which is obſerved by Solomon in this Book, That there is no wiſdome, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord: Chap. 21. 30. which if he had well underſtood before, he would not have been ſo impatient when his good counſel was rejected, as to hang himſelfe for it: 2 Sam. 17. verſe 12. and 23. But he juſtly ſuffered for his pride. Such alſo is the counſel of the poore man, ſpoken of Eccleſ. 9. 13. &c. by which the City was delivered; though he was not regarded for that, becauſe poor: as it falls out ſometimes in the world, that they that have done moſt conſiderable ſervice, are leaſt regarded: and others reap the benefit of their labour, or wiſdome. But though it may ſo fall out ſometimes; yet generally, no men are more honoured, either living, or dead, than they that are able to give good counſel: In Homer, Agamemnon the King being engaged in a troubleſome war, wiſheth that he had but ten ſuch counſellors as Neſtor, and makes no queſtion but he ſhould bring things to an end quickly. Upon which the greek Commentators have ſeveral obſervations of the excellency of good counſel. This I conceive to be the moſt plauſible, and trueſt ſenſe (though I have not found it in others) of the words; grounded, in part, upon the propriety of the Hebr. word תחבולות which comes from חובל a pilot: and doth moſt properly and immediately import (artem nauticam, & ſolertiam illam, quâ gubernator in nave regendâ utitur ſaith Mercer:) that skil and dexterity which belongeth to a good Pilot. And what that is, who knows not? And accordingly, the LXX. here tradſlate it κυβέρνησιν, and the vulgar Latin, gubernanda. The Chaldee Paraphraſe alſo, I ſhould ſay, if the Latin tranſlation of it were altogether to be truſted where we find it gubernaculum. But the truth is, the Chaldee word imports no more than ſolertiam, or prudentiam: or at the moſt, prudentem gubernationem, in general: which I think cannot be well rendred by gubernaculum. But this as a caveat by the way only. I wonder therefore, that Mercer. (who is followed by moſt Interpreters) ſhould make theſe words to cohere with the next verſ. in ſenſe: and a man of underſtanding ſhall attain to wiſe counſels, to underſtand a Proverb, &c. which is very contrary to this expoſition, which we embrace, and have hitherto inſiſted upon. For ſo, wiſe counſels are confined to that intellectual wiſdom and underſtanding; (more properly called, wit and ſubtilty;) which is neceſſary to the underſtanding of Proverbs, and Riddles: which we rather interpret of politick wiſdom and prudence. (See Ch. 11. 14. where no counſel is, &c. It is the ſame word there; which doth much confirm our interpretation of it here.) That which hath moved them to it, as I conceive, becauſe they do not ſee, what this infinitive to underſtand, &c. can otherwiſe depend upon. As for the former infinitives, To know wiſdom, &c. they make them to depend of the firſt verſe: The Proverbs of Solomon, &c. To know wiſdom, &c. that is: The uſe and end whereof is, to teach wiſdom, &c. But here, the coherence ſeems to be interrupted by the fifth verſe, A wiſe man, &c. which therefore they fetch from theſe words. But beſides that generally, and in this book of Proverbs peculiarly in which all things are ſo looſe, to argue from the coherence, is no very good argument: it may be anſwered, that there is no inconvenience at all, if we fetch the coherence, though ſomewhat interrupted by the fifth verſe, from the firſt, according to the tenor and conſtruction of the former verſes: which kind of interruptions are frequent enough in other books; and may be helped, if need be, by a parenthaſis. The Arabick tranſlation turns all thoſe infinitives into imperatives. Indeed, in the Greek, it is very uſual, in this way of precepts, to uſe infinitives for imparatives. But that it is ſo in the Hebrew too, eſpecially when the infinitive is turned into a gerund, is more than I can avouch.

V. 6. To underſtand a Proverb, and the interpretation] Of the coherence, ſee upon the former words. The ſolution of riddles, and dark ſayings, though ſometimes rather an effect of wit, in general, than a neceſſary conſequent of true wiſdom, is here mentioned among other particulars, becauſe it was a thing in ancient times, not among the Jews only, as appears by divers Scripture ſtories; but among the Grecians and all Oriental people, much practiced, and in great requeſt, as is teſtified by divers ancient Authors. This is further explained, and ſet out by the Author of Eccleſiaſticus, (of whom, ſee what is ſaid in the Preface) in theſe words; But he that giveth his mind to the law of the moſt High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will ſeek out the wiſdom of all the ancients, &c. Chap. 39. 1, 2, 3.

V. 7. The fear of the Lord, is the beginning of knowledg] See the places quoted in the margin of the Bible, Job 28 28. & pſal. 111. 10. & Ch. 9. 10. & the Annot. upon Pſ. 111 10. The fear of the Lord. And upon Pſal. 130. 4. that thou mayſt be feared. Except then this foundation of the fear of the Lord, (or piety and religion) be had, all other wiſdom, is but folly; yea more dangerous and pernicious in the conſequent, than meer folly and ſimplicity. Ancient heathen Philoſophers diſpute at large, that non eſt virtus cui non conſtat ratio. Let a man be never ſo liberal, juſt, or temperat, in his actions; if he be ſo rather by an inſtinct of nature, propriety of bodily temperamentum? or by the power of good education, habituated into cuſtom; than upon any ground of reaſon, and judgement, they will not allow him truely to be liberal, juſt or temperate. Nay Plato goes ſo far, that if a man doth perform ſuch things, ſuch actions of juſtice, &c. upon grounds of reaſon, as he doth think, and believe: yet except his judgement be ſo well grounded and ſetled, that he be out of all danger of a relapſe, that is, of contrary impreſſions, (a thing often ſeen, in the changes and revolutions of ſtates and times, according to which the minds and opinions of light ungrounded men are apt to turne, and ſtill to be confident that they are in the right:) upon any occaſion; he will not allow him truly to be juſt, or any thing elſe that pretends to ſolid vertue. It cannot be denyed but Epicurus himſelf was the Author of as many excellent ſayings and ſentences, as moſt Philoſophers before him, or ſince; nay and lived too, in ſome degree accordingly: though not as ſome would make us believe, who whileſt they endeavour to make a Saint of him (a thing not much to be wondered in ſuch an Age of Saints, ſuch as they are:) take the liberty to live like right Epicures themſelves: but lived, I ſay, in ſome degree, according to his own precepts and ſentences. But this, not in reference to God, or to another world, (or immortality of the Soul:) both which, (though not ſo openly, the one, as the other:) he denyed; but in reference to the pleaſure to be reaped, of a quiet calme life; pleaſure being the thing which he propoſed to himſelf, as his onely felicity. If therefore neither fine ſayings and ſentences: nor ſome outward performances, ſuitable to thoſe ſayings, could (even in the judgement of heathens) make Epicurus to be well thought of; but contrariwiſe, his name and his memory was, generally, in horror and deteſtation among them, becauſe of his principles: how much leſſe is the ſhew and outward practice of any vertue, and the poſſeſſion of any knowledge, that is not grounded upon religion, and the feare of the Lord, to be regarded in any that profeſſe Chriſtianity? See alſo upon Chap. 3. 3. mercy and truth. But let us not miſtake in words. Religion, and the fear of the Lord, with moſt men at this day, is taken for opinion, phanſie, confidence, zealous words; yea certain tones, faces, geſtures, and the like. Let a man be never ſo religious in his life and converſation, and ſound in his faith, that hath not theſe markes; he is none of the godly. God keep ſober men from ſuch deluſions.

the beginning] Although רשית here is expounded by divers, as Pſalm 111. 10. The fear of the Lord, &c. to which we have already referred: to wit, for excellency and perfection: yet becauſe Solomon afterwards, Chap. 9. verſe 10. doth ſeeme to expound himſelfe, uſing there the word תחלה which properly ſignifies beginning, and is not found in that other ſenſe, as רשית is; therefore it is more plauſible to keep to it, here alſo. But whereas ſome Expoſitors make a doubt concerning this feare of the Lord; whether to be underſtood of filial, or ſervil fear: I ſhould rather queſtion the warrantableneſſe of that diſtinction, (though ancient enough, I know:) if we might be ſo long, as to diſcuſſe it, and ſearch it to the bottome. We have done it elſewhere; and here; if by the feare of the Lord we underſtand Religion, and the worſhip of God in general; (as Pſalm 130. 4. But there is forgiveneſſe with thee, &c. which I think is moſt proper to this place: See the Annotations there;) there is no great need of it.

but fooles deſpiſe] The Original word אויל doth not onely ſignifie a foole, ſimply; but a ſtubborne, ſtrong-headed, ſelf-conceited, incorrigible foole: as by comparing of places may eaſily appear. Now if with the LXX. we may tranſlate it here, ἀσεβεῖς: that is, ungodly men: then the ſenſe (and coherence) will be: The fear of the Lord, (that is, godlineſſe and religion:) is true wiſdom: and if godlineſſe be true wiſdom indeed it muſt needs follow that they that reject or deſpiſe the one, reject and deſpiſe the other alſo: that is in effect, That all ungodly men, that will not ſubmit to the fear of God, are fooles. So, this latter member, is both a conſequent, and a confirmation of the former: both tending to one end, to ſet out the excellency of the fear of God, or religion. There be many in the world are not afraid, or aſhamed, to be accounted irreligious: there be, that glory in it; and think the better of themſelves for it. They cry themſelves up, and are cryed up by others, for the wits of the times: when farre better wits without this marke, of being atheiſtical, are not in compariſon, regarded. But there be not many in the world, that can ſo well brook, to be thought unwiſe: much leſſe fooles: and thereupon Solomon grounds his exhortation to piety, by avering, that the fear of God, is in very deed, true wit, and wiſdom; and that they that deſpiſe, or reproach piety and godlineſſe, do at the ſame time proclame themſelves egregious fooles. But taking, מוסר, for diſcipline and chaſtiſement, which ſeems to be moſt proper to this place: then the coherence will be this. The fear of the Lord, ſaith Solomon, is wiſdom: a great commendation, and very taking, ſince all men generally are ambitious of wiſdom. But there is ſomewhat that goes along with it, with this fear of the Lord, beſides wiſdom; and without which, wiſdome cannot be got. And what is that? My ſon, ſaith Jeſus the ſonne of Sirach, (and he too, a very wiſe man, and ſuppoſed to be Solomon himſelf by many) if thou come to feare the Lord, prepare thy ſoul for temptation. Set thy heart aright, and conſtantly endure, &c. But this is it, that fooles cannot endure. It makes them hate Religion, when they are told of ſuffering. So that by theſe words Solomon ſeemes to give a reaſon, why more men do not apply themſelves to godlineſſe; even becauſe they cannot endure the inſtruction, or chaſtiſment of wiſdom. For ſo the words may import, by a a figure common enough in the Bible: wiſdom and inſtruction i. e. the inſtruction, or chaſtiſment of wiſdom. μαθήματα: παθήματα. Inſtruction and caſtigation, muſt go together: ſuch is the order of God; and Chriſt himſelf, though the Son of God; his natural Son; yet was he not exempted from this Law ἔμαθεν ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἔπαθεν Hebr. 5. 8. he learned ---- by thoſe things that he ſuffered. And who would not, except he be a very foole or an infidel, ſuffer for a while, in this, ſo ſhort and tranſitory; that he may be happy eternally, in another world?

V. 8. My ſon, hear the inſtruction of thy father, and forſake not the law of thy mother] Theſe words may be underſtood, either of that obedience in general, which all children owe to parents; which after the fear of God, is the next duty; (both duties being comprehended by one word, Pietas, by the Latines) and is the firſt command in the ſecond Table of the Decalogue: or they may have more particular reference to Deut. 4. 9. & 6. 7. and other like places, where parents are ſtrictly enjoyned to teach the Law, of God to their children, with all poſſible care and diligence. According to the firſt interpretation, the obligation of children to parents, is general: they owe reſpect and reverence to their parents, whether good, or bad; and in worldly civil things, whether at home, or abroad, that are not againſt the Law of God, perfect obedience: but according to the ſecond interpretation, that properly relates to Gods worſhip, and religious duties; ſo the obedience of children, or this command concerning their obedience unto parents, muſt be underſtood with a limitation, or reſtriction: it preſuppoſeth their obedience to the Law of God, concerning the education of their children: from which if the parents ſwarve, or apoſtatize, children are not bound to obey them. Moſt Interpreters, interpret father and mother here, allegorically, or metaphorically: ſome underſtanding by it, God; ſome, God and the Church: others, Solomon himſelf. This they were put to, becauſe they could not find any literal ſenſe, which they could like, or maintain. But how likely it is, that Solomon, in theſe popular admonitions and exhortations, directed to the ſimple, as well as others, would expreſſe himſelf ſo obſcurely, or ambiguouſly, let the underſtanding Reader judge. I ſee no reaſon at all why any man ſhould queſtion the literal meaning here, more than in Saint Pauls words; children, obey your parents in all things, Col. 3 20. All precepts in this kind, being to be underſtood with certain limitations, which no man almoſt is ignorant of; but not allegorically to be fruſtrated and avoided He may alſo call the Law of God, the inſtruction; or, (as Chap. 6 20.) the commandement of his father; and the law of his mother; to endeare it unto him the more, and the more ſtrongly to oblige him to the obſervation and profeſſion of it, becauſe in matter of laws and religion, men ordinarily do moſt willingly imbrace whatſoever is πατροπαράδοτον, as the Grecians are wont to expreſſe it; that is, that which they have received from their parents: the laws and religion of their fathers, and fore-fathers How ſuperſtitious and pertinatious men have been in that kind in all Ages, though that which they received from their fathers, were never ſo abſurd and falſe, ancient Sories, both Eccleſiaſtical and others, will teach. A great ingagement therefore it is to them that receive the truth from their fathers and mothers, never to apoſtatize from it, for any temporal loſſe, or advantage.

the inſtruction of thy father] St. Paul obſerveth it, that Honour thy father and thy mother &c. is the firſt commandement with a promiſe, Epheſ. 6. 2. We may here obſerve, that after the commendation of piety, which Solomon doth begin with; that is, our duty to God: the next thing he doth inſiſt upon, is the duty of children towards their parents, as moſt immediately flowing from the former and the very foundation of all other moral duties. In ſo much, that the very word εὐσέβεια, and pietas, is ſometimes appropriated to this one duty. And herein the ſayings of ancient wiſe heathens, and the dictats of Scripture, do agree It is furthermore obſervable, that the ſecond part alſo of this Book of Proverbs doth ſo begin; to wit, at the tenth Chapter, where again the ſame inſcription, as at the beginning, The Proverbs of Solomon, is prefixed; that even there, I ſay, the very firſt precept, or ſentence, is, concerning the duty of children: A wiſe ſon maketh a glad father, &c. So ancient Gnomologues, who as they are of greateſt antiquity, ſo they agree moſt with the Scriptures: Πρῶτα θεὸν τίμα: μετέπειτα δὲ σεῖο γονῆας. So did once Phocilides begin: though ſince, ſome other verſes have been ſet before, Pythagora's, his verſes, alſo Ἀθανάτους μὲν πρῶτα θεοὺς, &c. then preſently: Τοὺς τε γονεῖς τίμα. So Proſe writers too: as may appear by Iſocrates his Paraneſis. Plutarch hath a moſt excellent paſſage to this purpoſe, by which the power of reaſon grounded upon that remnant of natural light in man, ſince Adams fall, and the conſent of it (reaſon I mean, and natural light:) with revelation and religion, may appear. All men, ſaith he, in all places, that are ſober and rational, unanimouſly, do ſpeak and ſing, (alluding to Poets:) that both nature, and the Lawes of men, grounded upon nature, (or, that are not contrary to nature:) after the worſhip of God, give the firſt and chiefeſt place to parents: and that the moſt acceptable ſervice that men can do unto God, is a continued courſe of reſpect, and ſervice, daily renewed and increaſed, performed by children unto parents. See more, upon Chap. 10. 2. maketh a glad father: out of Plutarch. Laſtly, we may obſerve that not in the Decalogue onely, Honour thy father, &c. is the firſt of the ſecond table; but alſo in that ſolemn repetition and confirmation of the moral, or natural law, pronounced on Mount Ebal, with curſes againſt the tranſgreſſors; the ſame precept, (though expreſſed there in other termes:) hath the ſame rank: Curſed is he that ſetteth light by his father, or his mother, Deut. 27. 16.

V. 9. an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck] This is expreſſed popularly; not that the Scripture doth, or would have us to aſcribe much to theſe outward dreſſings and ornaments, which are proper to the body; (whereof ſee 1 Tim. 2. 9, 10. In like manner alſo, that women adorn themſelves, &c. and 1 Pet. 3. 3. Whoſe adorning let it not be that outward adorning, &c. whom neverthleſſe I do not underſtand, as though they did abſolutely forbid all ſuch ornaments, but onely preſcribe and commend what thoſe ornaments are, which thoſe that are religious and wiſe, ſhould chiefely deſire, and endeavour) but the better to ſet out the inward beauty and excellency of piety and vertue, in termes and expreſſions, moſt ſuitable (becauſe ordinary) to vulgar capacities.

V. 10. My ſon, if ſinners entiſe thee, conſent not] Nothing can happen more pernicious to one, who through want of years, or otherwiſe, is not yet ſettled in the wayes of godlineſſe and piety, than bad company. Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15. 33. Saint Paul had it out of an ancient Greek Comick, then extant, called Menander: whereby it appears, what reckoning he made of thoſe ancient Sentences and ſayings of wiſe Heathens. One of them, ancienter than Menander by many years, delivers it with much confidence, that wickedneſſe (among men) doth chiefely ſpring from this root, even from evil examples and company. And therefore in ſome ancient Common-weales, not onely lewd and riotous men were ſeverely puniſhed themſelves; but alſo Lawes made for the puniſhment of them that frequented their company. Charondus his Law περὶ κακομιλίας was famous to that effect. O Chriſtianity! I may ſay: O Reformation! Chriſt ſaith, except our righteouſneſſe exceed the righteouſneſſe of Scribes and Phariſees, we cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven, Math. 5. 20. What then if it come ſhort of the righteouſneſſe of Heathens? But this is not a place to preach: though juſt indignation, in theſe licentious times, may extort ſome words. Of the danger of evill company, ſee on Pſalm 1. 1. walketh not in the counſel, and the references there.

V. 11. If they ſay, Come with us; let us lay wait for blood, &c.] He doth here, and in the following 12, 13, 14. verſes, by a figure called mimiſis or, proſopopeia, repreſent them ſpeaking, and uſing their incitements, or rather inchantments, to pervert a young man from the right way, and to draw him into their nets: not that we ſhould think that they uſe theſe very words, (neither indeed do they uſe one kind of bait alwayes, but can fit it to ſeveral tempers and diſpoſitions, and other circumſtances of place and time, and the like) but that from theſe words in general, we ſhould underſtand with what boldneſſe and impudency, ſuch uſe to inſinuate themſelves, under pretence of love, and plauſible hopes and atchievements: when nothing but hell and deſtruction, both of body and ſoul, is in all their wayes. Neither are the words, here uſed, ſo to be taken, as words of intiſement properly, but rather as words of aggravation: as when he makes them ſay, Let us lay wait for blood; Let us lurk privily for the innocent without a cauſe, &c. his meaning is not that they uſe thoſe, or any like: they are too ſubtile and cunning, to ſet out ſo plainly the horror of their wickedneſſe and villany: this were not to entice, but deter: not that his meaning therefore; but this, that when they uſe other language, which doth extenuate the wickedneſſe of their practice, (as what is ſo abominable, but may cunningly be extenuated, and made, if not plauſible, yet tolerable, or excuſable?) they muſt (by them that are wiſe and rational) be underſtood as though they plainly ſaid, Let us wait for blood: let us lurk privily for the innocent without cauſe, &c. But of all bad examples and illaudible courſes, to which a young man may be drawn, why Solomon ſhould pitch upon, and begin with this of bloody theeves and robbers; which may be thought the utmoſt of wickedneſſe: a thing not ſo incidental, neither to any ingenuous nature nor education, as ſome other vices are: why then with this? if it be asked; I muſt confeſſe I find nothing at all about it in any Commentator: but that which ſeems to me moſt probable, is, either that Solomon had a more particular aim and reſpect to his own times herein, when it may be thought that this practice was more uſual and ordinary, even among the better ſort in the world: or that he intended here, at the very firſt, to ſet before the eyes of young men, the danger and horror of a licentious life, not regulated by the fear of God, and the dictates of a tender conſcience: which though it begin not ordinarily with ſuch extremities, as are here expreſſed; yet very commonly it proceeds in time to ſuch, and ends in them, or the like: ſo that whoever, in his younger years, takes a liberty to lye, to ſwear, to pilfer, or to drink, or to frequent lewd company, whether of men or women: any of theſe, or the like; he may juſtly ſuſpect himſelf, that in time, he may prove an arrant cut-throat rogue, ſuch as is here deſcribed by Solomon.

let us lay wait for blood] Jer. 5. 26. He ſpeaketh not onely of the ſhedding of blood with the hand, but alſo of all crafty practices, which tend to the detriment of our neighbours life, or livelihood, Pſal. 10. 8. & 17. 12. And it is obſervable, that the very word דם which ordinarily ſignifies blood; doth alſo in the Chaldee as ordinarily ſignifie money: even as βίος in the Greek tongue, both life, and livelihood. And Cato, that wiſe Romon, being asked what it was, fœnerari: that is, to give money to uſe; anſwered: what is it to kill, or, to murder? But there be many wayes beſides that, invented to ſuck the blood of the poor: the fallacy is, in the difference of words and termes onely. Fures privatorum furtorum, in nervo atque in compedibus ætatem agunt: fures publici, in auro atque purpurâ: ſaid the ſame Cato.

for the innocent without cauſe] Whoſe words, and how to be underſtood, ſee the Annotation upon the firſt part of the verſe. They that wonld have theſe words intended by Solomon, for the very words uſed by the enticers, are put to many ſhifts, to find ſomewhat that may be plauſible. Some deviſe one thing ſome another: but I find nothing in all their deviſes and inventions, that beareth (with me) the leaſt colour of probability. Can any man be ſo barbarouſly wicked, as to propoſe to himſelf the ſhedding of innocent blood; as it is the blood of an innocent? Or it himſelf by long uſe, hath attained to that degree of immanity; would he be ſuch a tool, as to uſe theſe words, as an allurement to them, that are yet raw in ſuch practiſes? And not to content himſelf neither to ſay innocent, but to inſiſt upon it, as if no other motive more plauſible and popular, could be found; by adding, without cauſe? O but, ſay ſome innocent and without cauſe: that is, we will fall upon ſuch, that never did us any wrong, either in word or deed, and have no occaſion at all to ſuſpect us; and ſo ſhall we have the better opportunity to accompliſh our deſires. Their innocney, ſhall be our ſecnrity. I do not deny, but ſuch thoughts murtherers may have: but that they would expreſſe themſelves, or Solomon their thoughts in ſuch words; who can believe? Others therefore, they would have this without cauſe, to be ſpoken by theſe enticers, in reference to the event: without cauſe, that is ſay they, what we do, we will do it ſo warily, and cunningly, that we need not fear any ill conſequent: though death, ordinarily, (a publick death) be the reward of murther: blood for blood: yet we ſhall provide for our ſecurity well enough. Juſtice ſhall have no hold of us. The effect of juſtice ſhall be fruſtrated in us. Or if that will not do, becauſe it takes away only the offence of the words without cauſe: that is, in effect, of the repetition: and leaves the innocent, the original, as it were, ſtill lyable to the ſame cenſure: then, ſay ſome others, (more plauſibly, I confeſſe, if the words would bear it:) innocent without cauſe: that is: thoſe men, that truſt to their piety and innocency: that think themſelves very ſafe, under the protection of God, whom they pretend to worſhip: but without cauſe: it is but a vain confidence. For God (if any God at all) doth not take notice of ſuch things: it being by daily experience, clearly evident to all men, that the good as ſoon as the bad; the juſt, as the un juſt, are expoſed to all manner of miſhaps. Folly therefore it is, to ſtick at theſe things. This indeed layes well open the very root and foundation of all lewd practiſes. See Pſalm 10. 11; 13. and Mal. 3. 16. Ye have ſaid, it is vain to ſerve God: and what profit is it? &c. and elſewhere; ſo many places alſo, Wiſdom 2. 13. and following verſes. And I think probable enough, that ſuch inticers do uſually begin there, to poſſeſſe their novices, with ſuch principles. For till that be done, they cannot go on in their villanies without ſome reluctancie, and remorſe of couſcience. And for the words; Davids expreſſion may ſeem to come ſomewhat near: Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocencie. Pſal. 73. 13. To waſh his hands in innocencie in vain, is no more than to be innocent in vain, And that the word חנם here tranſlated without cauſe, may alſo ſignifie, in vain, is not denied. However, let us make the beſt of it, that can be made: it is but a forced ſenſe, in this place; the other, as more literal, in it ſelf; ſo more natural to the coherence. For all the words, ver. 11, 12. manifeſtly tend rather to aggravation, ſuch as would become a Judge, or a reprover; than to extenuation, ſuch as is ordinary to men of that profeſſion whereby they endeavour to delude both themſelves and others. We therefore ſtick to our firſt interpretation It is very ordinary to the Scripture, to ſet out wicked men and ſinners by words as by them, immediately and perſonally uttered: but rather, indeed, containing, or importing the effect either of their bare thoughts, or of other words ſpoken by them; in common conſtruction, very different; but in reality of truth, that is; in conſequence of matter, or event; and in Gods interpretation, the very ſame. It is a figure of ſpeech common enough upon other occaſions too. So David, But if they be the children of men curſed be they before the Lord, for they have driven me out this day, ——ſaying, Go, ſerve other Gods. 1 Sam. 26. 19. His meaning was not, that his enemies had ever uſed any ſuch words; but that ſuch was, or might probably be, the effect of their perſecution: ſo that if he ſhould become an idolater in a ſtrange land; the guilt of it ſhould partly lye upon them. We have been the longer, becauſe the vindication of the right ſenſe in this place, may give light to, and ſerve for many other paſſages, of this book.

V. 12, Let us ſwallow them up alive] Without any ſign of blood, as if they had died a natural death: or, ſo as no man ſhall know what is become of them. Thus they provide for their own ſafety. So they, that would have theſe words to be the very words of theſe perſonated inticers. But more probable, that they are Solomons, the author, his words, taken from the effect, or event of their doings, and therefore not without cauſe adſcribed unto them; tending to aggravation of their cruelty; thereby the more effectually to deter from their ſociety, and fellowſhip. Of all kinds of death, there is none (naturally) more dreaded, than to be ſwallowed up quick, or alive, either by terrible monſters, as Jonas was: or, by the earth it ſelf, ſuddenly gaping, and cloſing again, as Corah and his fellowes.

as the grave] The Hebrew being the very ſame, as Numb. 16 30: &c. is uſed in the hiſtory of Corah, &c. if the Engliſh word grave, will not fit there; as indeed indeed it will not: I wiſh we had had ſome other word here too, which might have fitted both places: it being very probable, that in the expreſſion here, there is ſome alluſion to that which is there recorded The Engliſh word there, is pit: and that cannot be here (no more than grave, there,) becauſe by it, the next Hebrew word, בור fovea: is rendred. The trnth is, we have no proper Engliſh word for שאול in this ſenſe, the Greek have, ἅδυς: and the Latins, infernus. Hell indeed we have, for a place of torments: but for a place common to all that are dead, and gone out of this viſible world, without any reference (as ἅδυς, and infernus, often:) to pain, or pleaſure; I know none. I can ſay therefore, that hell is no proper word, in this place: but where to find a more proper, I know not. As for the word שאול ſo much, by ſo many learned, and unlearned, even unto books, and volumes of no ſmall bulk, hath been written of it; as that I rather expect thanks, that I can paſſe it over ſo quietly; eſpecially, when there is no need: than reproof, as though I had been willing to ſpare my paines, to the prejudice of my reader. I take no notice of chap. 30 16. becauſe I do not conceive, that there is any alluſion here, to the unſatiableneſſe of the grave, there mentioned. I note it, becauſe ſome others have thought otherwiſe.

V. 14. let us all have one purſe] He ſheweth whereby the wicked are allured to joyn together. Every one hopes to have part of the ſpoyle of the innocent.

V. 15. My ſonne, walk not thou in the way with them] Chapter 4. 14.

from their path] That is, have nothing at all to do with them, Pſal. 1. 1.

V. 16. For their feet run to evill, and make haſte to ſhed blood] Iſai. 59. Rom. 3. 15.

V. 17. Surely in vain the net is ſpread in the ſight of any bird] About the ſenſe of this, and the following verſes, to verſe 20. and their coherence, there is no ſmall controverſie among Interpreters; among whom (them that have written at large, I mean:) a man ſhall ſooner looſe himſelf in the variety of Expoſitions; than find what to ſtick too, in that variety. If we will content our ſelves with this tranſlation we have here, and the interpretation which is grounded upon it, it hath as good authority as any other; ſome principal Rabbins, and Mercerus (the beſt of all Expoſitors) his approbation. According to them, this is the ſenſe of the words: As the net is ſpread in vain; though not in vain, in regard of him that ſpread it, who when the bird is caught, hath his end in it; but in vain, in regard of the bird, which might have taken warning by this ſpreading of the net, as (indeed ſome do, and avoyd it; according to that of the Poet: Quaque nimis patent retia, vitat avis:) that ſome evill was intended; but doth not, for the moſt part being allured by the bait, which it is greedy of. So theſe, (notwithſtanding the examples of ſo many that have periſhed by theſe unjuſt courſes, and ſo many gibbets, and gallows, which are ſet up every where, as nets before the birds, to warn them:) being compelled through their own covetouſneſſe, & deſire of prey; they ruſh on to deſtruction as if they had laid wait for their own blood, and lurked for their own lives. This is their expoſition; which Gornelius à Lapide alſo after divers others mentioned, though he term it profundiorem & involutiorem, that is, the moſt remote (in ſight) and moſt intricate of all; yet he preferreth before all the reſt, as moſt agreeable to the Greek and Hebrew. For my part, to ſpeak my mind freely, but for the authority of thoſe I have named, it gives me very little content: remote it is, I am ſure, and intricate as Cornel. à Lap. judges of it, and may agree with the Greek better than any other: but that it doth ſo with the Hebrew too, I will not eaſily grant. The Hebrew words, without any violence or ſupplement, may be thus alſo tranſlated: Surely without cauſe the net is ſpread within the ſight of any bird: Yet men lay wait for their blood, and lurk privily for their lives: Or, rather, So they lay wait for their blood, &c. According to this tranſlation, this, with reference to the former verſes, will be the ſenſe: As men ordinarily (for ſometimes it may be otherwiſe, perchance; when the net is ſpread to catch and deſtroy birds that do hurt: but that is not ordinary; whence is that of the Comick, Non rete accipitri tenditur neque milvio, Qui male faciunt nobis. illis qui nil faciunt tenditur: Quia enim in illis fructus eſt; in illis opera luditur:) without any provocation, or injury, ſeek to catch birds, that they may eat them: ſo theſe wicked ones ſpoken of before, lay in wait for the blood of innocent men, that have done them no wrong at all, for meer gain and lucre ſake. This tranſlation being ſo agreeable to the Original; and the Interpretation ſo proper and literal without any ſupplement, whereas in the former (that we have here the word own,) is twice to be ſupplyed, to bring it to that ſenſe they would have: what ſhould make it leſſe plauſible, (though not without all authority: for ſome Rabbines, mentioned by Mercer, be for it:) or probable, I know not; except this were it; becauſe it was thought ſomewhat improper, and perchance ridiculous, that laying in wait for blood, or to ſpeak more expreſſely, that the murthering of innocent men, ſhould be compared to catching and killing of birds; which ſeems rather to extenuate the matter, than to aggravate it; yea in ſome manner, to juſtifie it; which no man can think could be Solomons meaning. But if this were it, indeed; there was a great miſtake, and miſappprehenſion of Solomon his aim. For certainly the words, if rightly underſtood, will afford as great an aggravation, as any that is, or can be uſed, upon that occaſion. For what can be ſaid, or conceived more horrid of the moſt Cyclopæan men, as Poets call them, than that they ſhould kill men as freely, and with that indifferency, as others kill birds, not out of any malice, or revenge; but for food, which no man thinks unlawfull (except it be a Pythagorean) or makes any conſcience of? And ſo may Pſal. 14. 4. As they eat bread; be underſtood: that is, they make no more of it, than they do, or any man uſually doth, to eat a piece of bread. What Solomon doth here expreſſe under the ſimilitude of birds, is by the Prophet Habakkuk expreſſed by fiſhes; in thoſe bitter words of his expoſtulation with God, in point of providence: and holdeſt thy tongue, (ſaith he) when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he. And makeſt men as the fiſhes of the Sea, as the creeping things that have no ruler over them: They take up all of them with the angle; they catch them in their net, &c. Hab. 1. 13, 14, 15. There is another interpretation, which I make leſſe recckoning of, than of the two former; yet for the number of Expoſitors that follow it, not inconſiderable. They refer this, in vain, to the plots and ambuſhes of theſe ruffians; to this effect: As men ſpread the nets before the birds in vain, becauſe the birds what by ſome natural ſagacity, what by former experience, know well enough how to avoyd it, and to fruſtrate the expectation of the fowler: So theſe wicked men, though they hunt after the blood of the innocent never ſo greedily, and lay their ambuſhes never ſo cunningly: yet their labour ſhall be in vain, and their hopes fruſtrated; becauſe God himſelf will deliver the innocent and the righteous out of their ſnare, and make the miſchief which they plotted againſt others, to fall upon their own heads, ſo they. There be places of Scripture enow I confeſſe, to confirm the ſenſe of this latter part, as Pſal 9.16. & 57.6, 9, &c. that God will deliver the righteous, &c. but how probably it may be ſaid or ſuppoſed to be ſaid by Solomon, that the net (in this ſenſe they would have) either before birds, or men; (in a general ſenſe:) is ſpread in vain: and how this will cohere and agree with the 19. verſe, concerning men; and with chap. 7.23. as a bird haſted to the ſnare, &c. let the reader conſider. I ſaid before, they are many, that follow this ſenſe; which is all I have to ſay for it. There is yet another interpretation of theſe words, which for the acuteneſſe of it, not altogether groundleſſe. (for elſe I ſhould not think it worthy of that title) I cannot paſſe by without ſome notice. It is Salazars; who, to give him his due, hath done very well upon the Proverbs, and is the largeſt that I have ſeen; but that he takes too much liberty, and is extravagant ſometimes. Firſt, he obſerves, and ſhewes by divers examples, that unjuſt gain is often expreſſed or ſet out by Solomon, by ſimilitudes taken from birds, and fowling: but the moſt conſiderable place to that purpoſe, is Chap. 23. 4 5. Labour not to be rich, &c. for riches certainly make themſelves wings, and flee away as an Eagle towards heaven. Now the Hebrew here (as the margin hath already told us) is, Surely in vain the net is ſpread, in the eyes of every thing that hath a wing. By every thing that hath a wing, he would have riches, (of which before, verſe 13. We ſhall find all precious ſubſtance; we ſhall fill our houſes with ſpoyle:) to be underſtood. Two arguments, ſaith he, Solomon doth uſe to deter men from this wicked courſe of life; the firſt is, becauſe they ſhall miſſe of that booty, which they propoſe and promiſe themſelves, as their end; they ſhall either miſſe of it altogether, or not long enjoy it, becauſe it hath wings, and will not long abide with them. Then ſecondly, whileſt they ſo greedily ſeek after prey, not ſparing innocent bloud, that they may compaſſe their deſires, they at the ſame time lay wait for their own blood: their miſchief will fall upon their own heads. His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and he ſhall be laden with the cords of his ſin, Prov. 5.22.

in vain] Or, without cauſe, ver. 11. chap. 3.30.

in the ſight of any bird] Heb. in the eyes of every thing that hath a wing.

V. 19. which taketh away the life of the owners thereof Heb. את־נפש בעליו נקח which words may either according to the firſt and laſt interpretation which we have ſpoken of upon the former words, be tranſlated, as here, which taketh away, &c, to which agrees in part, Prov. 15.27, He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own houſe; but he that hateth gifts, ſhall live. Or, according to the ſecond, which we conceive to be the moſt literal; who taketh away, &c. relating to the perſon of the covetous, every one that is greedy of gain, who, &c. Prov. 5.22. See the former Annot. at the end.

V. 20. Wiſdom] Heb. wiſdoms; that is, excellent wiſdom. Or, wiſdomes, that is, all kind of wiſdome: which may have reference alſo (as Mercer is of opinion) to the ſeverall wayes of propoſing wiſdom in ſeverall ages, and places. 'Η πολυποίκιλος σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ, multiformis Dei ſapientia, Eph. 3. 10. that is, the manifold wiſdom of God. See alſo, Heb. 1.1.

wiſdom crieth without, ſhe uttereth her voyce in the ſtreets. 21. ſhe crieth in the chief place of concourſe, &c. See Chap. 8. 1 2, 3, &c. Some think, becauſe anciently Proverbs and Sentences were wont to be ſung in the ſtreets, (they might have added, and to be propoſed in writing too, upon pillars, &c. whereof ſee in the preface) and market places, that theſe words might have reference to that cuſtome. It is very poſſible they might, to that alſo; but chiefly and principally, to the publick Schooles and Synagogues of the Jewes, where the Law of God was daily taught, and expounded, both to young and old; as many as either were ſtudious of it themſelves, or took care of their childrens education. But if we take the words more generally, as extending to all men, and nations, in general; then firſt we ſay with that acute, and of all others, the moſt ſcholaſtical and philoſophical Rabbin. Levi Ben. Gherſom: This divine wiſdom, ſaith he, calls upon all mortal men with a loud voyce, whileſt it infuſeth it ſelf into their ſoules, prompting them by certain natural inſtincts, motions, and propenſions, to goodneſſe and vertue, and to ſhun the contrary. Theſe be thoſe natural ὁρμαὶ, or ἀφορμαὶ; or ἀρχαὶ, as Ariſtotle calleth them, which all ancient Philoſophers have acknowledged, concluding thereupon, that all vicious wicked men are damnable, (I mean it not of eternal damnation, which many of them were ignorant of) becauſe of the neglect of theſe firſt motions and invitations of nature. Ariſtotle treats of it at large in his Ethicks, l. 3. cap 5. and maintains, that though it be not in the power of many wicked men, when gone very far in wickedneſſe, and habitual ſinners, to reclaim and reform themſelves; yet for all that, that they are inexcuſable and worthy of puniſhment. As one (ſaith he, among other things to that purpoſe) that doth caſt a ſtone, after he hath caſt it, the ſtone is no more in his power; but he might have choſen whether he ſhould caſt it, or no: ἡ γαρ ἀρχὴ ἐπ' αὐτῷ, for the beginning, or original power (of caſting, or not caſting) was in him: 'Ουτω δὲ ϗ τῷ ἀδίκῳ καὶ τῳ ἀκολάςῳ, ἐξ ἀρχῆς, μὲν, ἐξῆν τοιέτοις μὴ γενέϑαι· διὸ ἑκόντες εἰσί, γενομένοις δὲ, ἐυκέτι ἔξεςι μὴ ἔιναι; that is, So of unjuſt and intemperate; it was in their power at the beginning, not to be ſuch; and therefore they are wilfully ſuch; but now that they are become ſuch, it is no more in their power to be otherwiſe. Another, in Moral Philoſophy, not inferiour to Ariſtotle; but in point of life, farre above him; but a Heathen too; expreſſes it thus: It is upon occaſion of errour and ignorance that he ſpeaks it; For nature (ſaith he) had furniſhed him at firſt with certain inſtincts, notions, and opportunities, by the help whereof he might have attained to the knowledge of truth: which having neglected, hence it is, that he is now not able to diſcern that which is falſe, from that which is true. Ant. Med. 9. B. n. 1. Again the ſame Rabbi Levi, (as I find him quoted by Cornelius a Lapide; for in the Copy I have, I find it not; but it ſhould be he by the matter, and ſomewhat he hath to that purpoſe upon the 23. verſe, and elſewhere) Hæc omnia, inquit, eo ſpectant, &c. that is, All theſe words of Solomon tend to this, that the divine wiſdome doth moſt evidently and miraculouſly manifeſt it ſelf by the works of Creation, wherein his incredible wiſdom, if they apply themſelves to take notice of it, is incurrent into the eyes of all men. Which is in effect no more than what is affirmed by St. Paul himſelf, when he ſaith; For the inviſible things of Him, from the Creation of the world, are clearly ſeen, (being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; ſo that they are without excuſe, Rom. 1. 20. See alſo upon Pſal. 19. 1, &c. The Heavens declare the glory of God, &c. and Wiſdom of Solomon, (as is commonly called; and like enough it is, that ſome part of it, as before was ſaid of Eccleſiaſticus, in the preface, might be Solomons) Chap. 13. 1, 2, &c. and Expoſitors upon John 1. 9. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. But now if it be asked, (and I wonder it is not, that I can find, at leaſt, by any Expoſitor) how all this can be reconciled with what, with ſo much rhetorick and eloquence (hardly to be matched) is delivered in the 28. Chapter of Job, from the beginning of the Chapter, to the end of it; Surely there is a vein for the ſilver, and a place for gold, &c. But where ſhall wiſdom be found? and where is the place of underſtanding? Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the hand of the living. The depth ſaith, it is not in me, &c. ——Whence then cometh wiſdom, and where is the place of underſtanding? Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living. &c. To this may be anſwered: Firſt, if we take wiſdom there, as in this place of Solomon, of ſuch wiſdom, as is requiſite to lead a man to the knowledge of God, and to embrace vertue, that the Book of Job, (as moſt are of opinion,) was written before the Law was written. That Job was a ſtranger, (an Arabe, or Idumean) no Iſraelite, and might complain the more, for want of thoſe helps and prerogatives which God had afforded to his choſen people. But the moſt certain anſwer is, that that wiſdom Job ſpeaks of, is not the ſame, here intended and deſcribed by Solomon. By wiſdom there, Job intended eſpecially the wiſdom of God in his works, and the ordering of his viſible Creatures: ſo far manifeſt and viſible to all men, that men may by the conſideration of the creatures, underſtand the power and wiſdom of the Creator to be infinite: but otherwiſe, to the wiſeſt of men ſo unſearchable, that there is not the leaſt creature of the world, but is able to poſe (in the exact and Philoſophical conſideration of the nature and proprieties of it,) the ableſt Philoſopher that ever was. That he intended this wiſdom eſpecially, may be gathered, in part, by verſes 23, 24, &c, God underſtandeth the way thereof, &c. but eſpecially by the laſt verſe, and concluſion of the whole Chapter; And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the feare of the Lord, that is wiſdom: and to depart from evill, is underſtanding: by which words, compared with the former from the beginning of the Chapter, it doth appear, that having treated hitherto of the Divine Wiſdom, known unto God onely, to man incomprehenſibble; he doth now paſſe to, and conclude with that wiſdome which mortal man is capable of, by God himſelfe commended unto mankind: And unto man he ſaid, Behold the fear of the Lord, &c. See alſo upon Jer. 9. 23, 24. Thus ſaith the Lord, Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, &c.

in the opening of the gates] See upon Pſal. 127. laſt verſe, They ſhall not be aſhamed, but they ſhall ſpeak with the enemies in the gate.

V. 22. ye ſimple ones] Wiſdom reproveth three kinds of men: ſimple ones, which erre of ignorance; mockers, that ſcoffe at knowledge: fools that hate inſtruction.

V. 24. Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded] Iſa. 65. 12. & 66. 4. Jer. 7. 13. Ezek. 3. 18.

I have ſtretched out my hand] A geſture of ſuch as made proclamation, to get attention, Iſa. 65. 2. Acts 21. 40. of thoſe alſo, that would have one to come unto them, and again of thoſe, that offer themſelves to help one in great danger and diſtreſſe. In all theſe ſenſes it will well agree to the preſent occaſion. None are in greater danger and diſtreſſe; and want preſent ſuccour and relief more, than ſtubborn fools, and infidels.

V. 26. I alſo will laugh at your calamity] This is ſpoken according to our capacity, ſignifying, That the wicked, which mock and jeſt at Gods word, ſhall have the juſt reward of their mocking, being requited in the ſame kind.

V. 27. When your fear cometh] That is, your deſtruction, which you feared, Chap. 10. 24.

V. 28. Then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me.] Job 27. 9. Iſa. 1. 15. Jer. 1, 11. & 14. 12. Mic. 3. 4.

but they ſhall not find me] Becauſe they ſought not with ſincere affection to God, but for eaſe only of their own grief.

V. 30. They would none of my counſell] Pſal. 81. 11, 12.

V. 31. Therefore ſhall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices] Chap. 14 14.

of the fruit of their own way] They ſhall feel what commodity their wicked life ſhall give them.

V. 32. For the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them] Hebrew כי משובת פתים here in the Text, For the turning away of the ſimple; may be tranſlated alſo, (as in the margin,) For the eaſe of the ſimple. According to the firſt, the turning away of the ſimple, that is, their refuſing to hearken to the call of wiſdom, and her counſell, (Turn you at my reproof, &c. verſe 23. Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, &c. verſe 24. But ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, &c. verſe 25.) and the proſperity of fools, (that is, of wicked men; whereof ſee upon Pſal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c.) ſhall be the cauſe of their utter deſtruction, whileſt they looking no further than to the preſent, and finding that they do well in their wickedneſſe, and enjoy themſelves with comfort; either their judgement is perverted concerning themſelves and their action, ſo that they ſee not what all the world beſides doth ſee, and judge of them: or if they know themſelves to be wicked, yet their heart is hardened through ſucceſſe, and either feare nothing, perſwading themſelves that there is no God, or that he doth not ſee and regard; or deſperately conclude with themſelves, that it is better for them; however, to enjoy preſent certain comforts, than to bereave themſelves of them, for uncertain, whether hopes, or fears. Demoſthenes, the ancient Orator, hath an excellent ſaying to this purpoſe; Τὸ γὰρ εὖ πράττειν παρὰ τὴν ἀξίαν, ſaith he, ἀφορμὴ τοῦ κακῶς φρονεῖν τοῖς ἀνοήτοις γίνεται; that is, For a man to proſper in the world above his deſert, is very apt to beget ſtrange opinions, and to pervert the mind of thoſe who otherwiſe are not very wiſe of themſelves. If inſtead of turning away of the ſimple, we like better to tranſlate, the eaſe of the ſimple; the ſenſe, as to the whole ſentence, will come to one; only the two cauſes before aſſigned of the finall and utter deſtruction of men, their averſeneſſe from good counſel, and their proſpering in their wicked courſes, will be now reduced into one, their eaſe and proſperity: the other, though not expreſſed here, may eaſily be ſupplyed and preſuppoſed, from the former verſes, as hath already been ſhewed. Some Rabbines, as we are told here by Mercer, (who alſo calls it egregium ſenſum:) would have this affix pronoun, them, not reciprocally taken of the ſame; but as intended of others; to this effect: That that which makes wickedneſſe to prevail in the world, is, the proſperity of ſome known impious, ungodly men: upon whom whilſt others caſt their eyes, and take notice, that notwithſtanding their impiety, they thrive; nay, thrive and proſper (many of them, in ſight:) by their impiety; they are encouraged to follow their examples, hoping to ſpeed no worſe, than ſuch and ſuch, whom they have before their eyes. This indeed is the more certain and general cauſe of the two. For there be many wicked men, that do not proſper in their wickedneſſe; and yet wicked ſtill: ſo that their own proſperity cannot be ſaid to be the cauſe. But there would be but little, or no wickedneſſe at all in the world were it not for the proſperity of ſome, in all places, and at all times, ſome; but ſometimes, in great number: and then doth wickedneſſe proportionably increaſe in the world:) whoſe wickedneſſe, unworthineſſe, impiety, lewdneſſe, hypocriſie, and the like, is as known and viſible, as their proſperity is. And this is it that Solomon himſelf elewhere doth avouch it to be the cauſe of all evill, in theſe words; Becauſe ſentence againſt an evill work is not executed ſpeedily, (that is, becauſe wicked men, traytors, extortioners, oppreſſors of the poor, murtherers, Epicures, and the like, are not rewarded by God in this preſent world, (or preſently) that all men may take notice of Gods juſtice and juſt judgemements; but contrarily, proſper often, and become great by their wickedneſſe, (therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evill. Eccl. 8. 11. This excellent ſentente of Solomon, is excellently well expreſſed, (yet I will not ſay, that he ever read him) by an ancient Greek Poet, of greateſt antiquity, once ſo famous for his Sentences, that his very name Priuſquam Theognis naſceretur,) became a proverb. In a place where he maintains that riches well gotten, are ſtable; ill gotten, though for a while enjoyed, ſooner or later, will at laſt turn to our ruine; he hath theſe words; Ἀλλὰ τὸ δ' ἀνθρώπων ἀπατᾷ νόον· οὐ γὰρ ἐπ' αὐταῖς Γίγνονται (ſome Editions have it, Γίνονται: others, Τίνονται, but all to one purpoſe,] μάκαρες πρήγματος ἀμπλακίης. that is, But this is it, that commonly deceiveth men, becauſe the Gods do not alwayes appear (or, ſhew themſelves) as ſoon as any wickedneſſe is committed. After this, he goes on; Sometimes, ſaith he, the ſame man (though long after) bears the puniſhement: ſometimes his children; and ſometimes death prevents the execution, that neither he, nor his children, ſuffer for it. Thus is the matter anſwered by a heathen: how it is by Eccleſiaſtes, or Solomon, appears by the 12. and 13. following verſes, which ſhould not have been divided from the former by a Paragraphe, as though new matter there began, as in moſt Engliſh Bibles I have ſeen, it is;) Though a ſinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, &c. of which words, as alſo concerning this argument, of the wickeds worldly proſperity, in general, ſee what hath been noted upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evill doers, &c. See alſo Malachi 3. 13, 14, &c. Your words have been ſtout againſt me, ſaith the Lord, &c. Ye have ſaid, It is in vain to ſerve the Lord, &c. And now we call the proud happy, &c. to the end of that Chapter.

V. 33. ſhall dwell ſafely] Pſal. 25. 12, 13. what man is he that feareth the Lord: &c. and Pſal. 34. 12, 13, 14. what man is he that deſireth life; &c. confirmed by St. Peter: 1 Per. 3. 10, 11. Objections, and anſwers concerning this matter; ſee the Annotations there, and the references.

and ſhall be quiet from fear of evill] See the Notes upon Pſal. 91. He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the moſt High, &c. and Pſal. 107. 6. and he delivered them out of their diſtreſſes, &c.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. MY ſon, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee] Chap 7. 1.

hide my commandments with thee] That is, keep them in thine heart, as treaſure. Keep them in the midſt of thine heart, Chap. 4. 21. See more upon Pſal. 40. 10. I have not hid thy righteouſneſſe within my heart; which might ſeem contrary, but it is not, as is there ſhewed.

V. 2. apply thine heart to underſtanding] If thou give thy ſelf ſeriouſly to ſeek the true knowledge of God without hypocriſie.

V. 3. if thou cryeſt after knowledge] It is not enough to be willing to learn wiſdom, but we muſt pray earneſtly to God for it, and ſpare for no coſt or labour, whereby it may be obtained.

lifteſt up thy voyce] Heb. giveſt thy voyce.

V. 4. If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her, as for hid treaſures] Matth. 13. 44.

V. 5. Then ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord] He had ſaid before, chap. 1. ver. 7. that The fear of Lord is the beginning of wiſdom: now, he makes wiſdom and underſtanding, to bring in religion and the knowledge of God; which is in effect to tell and teach that theſe two are inſeparable, or if you will, that true wiſdom, and true knowledge, are but one thing in reality of nature, though diſtinguiſhed by names. And this is a very high point, and of greateſt conſequence: and therefore not to be wondred, if he inſiſt upon it with variety of expreſſions. For what man is he, if not much degenerated into a brute through continued lewdneſſe and wickedneſſe; that doth not deſire wiſdom, and knowledge, in general? The Jews require a ſign, ſaith St Paul: and the Greeks: what Greeks? the gentiles he meaneth: all the nations of the world, in generall; more, or leſſe: all men, of all nations of the world ſeek after (ſomethat that they call and account) wiſdom. 1 Cor. 1. 22. We have touched upon it before, and it is acknowledged by writers of all ages and profeſſions, that it is natural unto man to deſire knowledge. If therefore men could be perſwaded that all true knowledg is in the fear of the Lord: that all other knowledge, without the fear of the Lord, is meer vanity and folly: it would be a very ſtrong motive to induce men (rational men,) to the purſuit of piety and religion: and to bring them unto a good opinion of it. Whence the Devill, on the other ſide, labours what he can, to poſſeſſe all men with this opinion, that religion turns wiſe men into fools, and idiots. But that ſuch as either Solomon, or David, or others, eminent for their piety, and nearer relations unto God; ſhould ſo ſpeak of Godlineſſe and religion; is not ſo much to be wondred: but what ſhould prompt ancient Philoſophers of greateſt antiquity, as Pythagoras and Plato, and ſome others to deliver and maintain the ſame, almoſt in the ſame words? 'Θ μὲν γὰρ τοῦτο γνῶσις, ſaith Plato, σοφία καὶ ἀρετὴ ἀληθινή· ἄγνοια, ἀμαθία, καὶ κακία: The knowledge of God, is true wiſdom, and vertue: (or rather, prow-eſſe: which is the original ſignification of the word.) The not knowing of him is ignorance; and baſeneſſe. In another place he maintains, that Divinity is the only true liberal ſcience: all other art and profeſsion, vulgar and mechanick: his meaning is, vile and inconſiderable in compariſon. Many ſuch paſſages there be in ancient authours, by which it doth appear, that the true wiſdome, ſpoken of in the former chapter, was not, at no time, confined to one nation: according to the Annotations there, upon verſe 20. Wiſdom cryeth without, &c.

and find the knowledge of God] How then ſaith Chriſt: I thank thee O Father, that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent; and haſt revealed them unto babes. Matth. 11. 11? It will be anſwered, that there is a double wiſdome, as practical, (of which Jer. 4. 22. they are wiſe to do evill, but to do good they have no knowledge) ſo ſpeculative: to wit, a worldly, and a heavenly wiſdome. From the wiſe and prudent therefore; not abſolutely, but according to the world; or, according to the fleſh: as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and diſtinguiſheth, 1 Cor: 1. 26. Brethren, ye ſee their calling, how not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many noble, &c. A good anſwer, I grant: but not ſo full and ſatisfactory, as it may be made; For what ſhall we ſay of ſpeculative humane knowledge, and learning? Is there no uſe of it; no advantage, to the attaining of heavenly wiſdome? yea, very great certainly. There is no queſtion but the conſideration of nature, and moral Philoſophy, eſpecially, have brought many unto Chriſt; have been the more viſible meanes, I mean of their converſion; as by ancient learned Fathers, hath been more fully diſputed and demonſtrated: who alſo make the Platonick Phyloſophy particularly, to have been a kind of preparaton to the Goſpel. But here we muſt again diſtinguiſh. There is no kind of humane literature but may further unto piety and godlineſſe, two things being preſuppoſed. Firſt, that it have ſome relation unto God, as the authour, or the end; or both. wherein men may obſerve great variety among ancient Phyloſophers and wiſe men. Some, ſo frame their tenets, and whole body of doctrine, what unto moral, or natural; that they altogether either by ſilence, or direct aſſertion, excluded God, and his worſhip. Others again, though they had no knowledge of the true God, and his worſhip by revelation, no knowledge of the Scriptures; yet by the advantage of their natural light were guided to referre all unto God, and to divine worſhip: they will acknowledge him the authour of all goodneſſe, happineſſe, and vertue: and conſequently thought themſelves obliged to worſhip and ſerve him. The ſecond thing is, humility: I do not mean that humility, that Chriſtians teach: propoſed unto us by Chriſt as the crowne of vertue, but ſuch humility I mean, as wiſe heathens at all times acknowledged, and commended for a vertue, and a principal help to the acquiſition of truth: otherwiſe by them termed, modeſty: which makes a man ſenſible of his own defects and ignorance; and willing to embrace any meanes offered unto him to benefit himſelf in the purſuit of truth: oppoſed unto that vice, or kind of pride (for it is not pride in generall) which they moſt properly call δοκησισοφία: or, ſelf-conceitedneſſe. This was Socrates (ſo famous and venerable in all ages among heathens: as never was any man before, or after him:) his buſineſſe, and all his Phyloſophie tended unto this, to teach men that they knew nothing, as they ought to know; and they leaſt, that moſt took upon themſelves. As for himſelf, all he could brag of, was; that he knew himſelf to know nothing. Moreover, that all right knowledge, muſt be expected from God. Indeed, humane knowledge of it ſelfe, is very apt to puffe up; as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1 Cor. 8. 7. and when a man is once puffed up, he becomes incapable, as to reality of wiſdom, of any further proficiencie. In ſuch a caſe, an idiot, a plain ruſtick, hath the advantage of him. otherwiſe, as I have ſaid, knowledge, and learning of it ſelf; is a very great advantage.

V. 6. For the Lord giveth wiſdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and underſtanding] 1 King 3. 9. Jam. 1. 5: This was a very controverted point among the wiſe heathens, and divers learned treatiſes and books (whereof ſome yet extant) have been written about it. The Platoniſts affirmed, that vertue and wiſdom, were the gift of God: the ſtoicks denied it, whence is that horrid blaſphemy of Seneca and ſome others of that profeſsion, that a wiſe man excelled God himſelf, becauſe God was good & wiſe by neceſſity of nature; man, by free election. See more upon the former words.

V. 7. He layeth up ſound wiſdome for the righteous] Hebr. תושיה here tranſlated ſound wiſdom, properly ſignifies eſſentiam, ſubſtantiam, (οὐσίας in Greek) that is, ſubſtance, eſſence, or vvhatſoever hath reality of true being. Mercerus tranſlates it here eſſentiam; Junius, quicquid revera eſt; that is, whatſoever hath reality of being. Another equivalent vvord to this (as by ſome Rabbins is vvell obſerved here) vvhich, alſo comes from the ſame radix is יש, vvhich vvord vve have, Chap. 8. 21. to the ſame purpoſe. as תושיה is here. That I may cauſe thoſe that love me. to inherit (יש) ſubſtance: & I will fill their treaſures. The word is there tranſlated by Mercer, eſſe perpetuum; that is, an everlaſting being: by Junius, id quod eſt; that which is: expounded by him in his Notes, quod nunquam eſſe deſinit; that never endeth. Much might here be ſaid out of Plato and other ancient Philoſophers, concerning the nature and proprieties of true being: who bring many arguments to ſhew, that nothing that is material and viſible; nothing that is temporary, hath a reality of being, or exiſtance, properly, but an appearance onely; or, at the moſt, an improper, imperfect equivocal (as Logicians are wont to ſpeak) being, of another kind; and quite different from true being: to which purpoſe, Seneca, Quacunque videmus ac tangimus; and preſently after, Omnia iſta quæ ſenſibus ſerviunt, quæ nos accendunt & irritant, negat Plato ex iis eſſe, quæ verè ſint. Some Greek Fathers alſo (as well as Phyloſophers) are very copious upon this ſubject, ſhewing, that no worldly things have that ὕπαρξιν, that implyes reality of life or being: St. Chryſoſtom, among others, hath beſtowed much of his eloquence upon it. How well all this doth agree with the Scriptures, which call GOD, JEHOVAH, as if you ſhould ſay, HE THAT IS, and of all others, make that his chiefeſt Name and Title; might eaſily be ſhewed, and confirmed by many reaſons and authorities, if need were. But becauſe it is a high point, which all men are not ſo capable of, we ſhall content our ſelves with ſome plain paſſages, which may, in part ſuffice us, to ground that interpretation of thoſe words of Solomon upon, which we ſhall commend unto the Reader. Firſt, St. Paul ſaith We look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; (πρόσκαιρα; temporary; but for a time, properly) but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal. Secondly, the ſame Apoſtle (it is the opinion of many ancients, that he is the authour of that Epiſtle, though it is much oppoſed by ſome others) in his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, chap, 10 34. doth moſt elegantly oppoſe τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, (as commonly but moſt improperly even in the judgement of divers ancient Heathens, called) that is; worldly goods, wealth, or ſubſtance; to that ὕπαρξις, (ſo he calls it; which is the very word of Solomon, יש or, תושיה interpreted in Greek) or, ſubſtance which is permanent and eternal. For ye had compaſſion of me in my bands, ſaith he; and took joyfully the ſpoyling of your goods, (τὴν ἁρπαγὴν τῶν ὑπαρχόντων) knowing in your ſelves, that ye have in heaven (κρείττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς) a better and enduring ſubſtance. Then laſtly, Solomon himſelf, of riches and worldly goods, ſaith directly, that they are not, Chap. 23. 5. Wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches, &c. juſt as the ancient Greek Phyloſophers, and others, ſpeak of them when they ſtyle them, ἀνύπαρκτα; things that are not. All theſe things, put together, I conclude, that by תושיה in this place, and by יש in that other, Solomon doth intend ſomewhat permanent and eternal, that may truly be ſaid, to have reality of exiſtence, in oppoſition to tranſitore worldly goods. And what ſhould that be, but eternal life? Moſt Rabbins, I know, by theſe words, underſtand the law, which is in effect, as much, as ſound wiſdom; becauſe ſound wiſdom, is an effect of the knowledge of the Law: but that ſenſe is not ſo proper here, neither to the place, nor to the word, taken in its propriety, neither is there want of Rabbins, that have embraced this ſenſe; which I prefer before others. The author of Zohar, (a book of great credit among the Jews: and of as great antiquity, if they may be believed; for which I will not paſſe my word) hath theſe words: What is יש? That world which is to come, which ſhall never end And certain it is, that accordingly, the word is uſed by ſome ancient Rabbins, pro futuro ſeculo; that is, for eternal life. But it is not their authority that I truſt to, or would have my Reader to ground upon: If there be not reaſon enough for this interpretation beſides, I ſhall not preſſe him to imbrace it. But ſuch paſſages as ſpeak, though but obſcurely, of eternal life and rewards, I would make, much of, becauſe it is a ſubject in thoſe days, among the Jews, but ſparingly ſpoken of: whereof, ſee upon Pſal. 49. & 37. Some further confirmation of this interpretation, the LXX. alſo do afford, who render the word here by σωτηρίαν: ſalvation. It is thought by ſome that they read it, not תושיה as we have it; but תשועה from ישע ſalvavit, &c which though plauſible, at firſt hearing; yet well conſidered, may prove more plauſible than true. For who knowes not, that the LXX. do often expreſſe the ſenſe, which they apprehended to be chiefly intended; though it be much further ſometimes from the very letter of the original, than σωτηρία, is from תושיה ſo that I think we need not go to תשועה for it; though it be granted that it is more proper to it, than to the former: yea, and granted too, that there be many examples of ſuch whether miſtakes, or varieties, in the Greek tranſlation, that now goes under that name. See alſo concerning the verb צפן here uſed, in the next Note, Neverthleſſe, if any man like better, by תושיה here, to underſtand ſound wiſdom, becauſe that is conceived the moſt ordinary ſignification, that will beſt agree with moſt places; and that moſt Expoſitors are for it here too; I am not againſt it. More concerning the word תושיה, and its different ſignifications, ſee upon Chap. 18. 1. Through deſire, &c.

He layeth up ſound wiſdom for the righteous] יצפן. He layeth up; or hideth. I will not preſſe either, as an argument for what hath been ſaid before of תושיה: I know the expreſſion may be proper enough concerning worldy goods, or things (whether wiſdom or wealth) that are enjoyed in this world: yet it may be ſome confirmation to my interpretation of that word in this place, that it is as proper, if not more, of things inviſible and eternal; and ſo uſed by David, Pſal. 31. 19. O how great is thy goodneſſe, which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee! and by St. Paul, more than once; as where he ſaith, for the hope which is laid up for you, Col 1. 5. and, there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſſe, 2. Tim. 4. 8.

he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly] That under his protection they may overcome, (Rev. 2. 7. &c. or be faithful unto death, and ſo receive a crown of life, Revel. 2. 10. and 3. 11. But becauſe the verbe ſubſtantive (as commonly called) he is, is not in the originall; buckler is by ſome referred by appoſition, as Grammarians ſpeak, to תושיה by which if we underſtand ſound wiſdome, or doctrine, the caſe is cleere. See verſe 11. Diſcretion ſhall preſerve thee, &c. See alſo Chap. 1. verſe 24. to the end. And ſo the Apoſtle. Above all taking the ſhield of faith, wherewith ye ſhal be able to quench all the fierie darts of the wicked. Epheſ. 6. 16. But if eternall life; as we have argued it there; how is eternal life a buckler? I anſwer, this conſtruction is but the conjecture of ſome, which we were not bound to take notice of; much leſſe to embrace it; which ſcarce any man doth. However, if we were bound to it, or any man like it better, than that which is more generally received; it will be no very difficult thing. Firſt, Gen. 15. 1. I am thy ſhield, and thy exceeding great reward, ſaith God to Abraham, I will not queſtion the ſenſe, of ſhield, there I only obſerve that ſhield, and reward are joyned together, as buckler, and eternitie, or eternal ſalvation (an exceeding great reward, indeed, and what is, to ſpeak properly, but eternitie? καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν 2 Cor. 4. 17.) here. But then, Epheſ. 6. 17 the helmet of ſalvation, we have the words of the Apoſtle. And if we may ſay the helmet, why not as properly, the buckler of ſalvation, or eternitie; and in very deed, the hope of ſalvation, or eternal life, is a great buckler, in time of diſtreſs, when all other helps do fail. Therefore we faint not, ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 4. 16, and Chriſt himſelf, (our example, the author and finiſher of our faith: (for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſſe, &c. Heb. 12. 2.

that walk uprightly] A godly life is the beſt means, as to obtain, ſo to preſerve a ſound faith; of which depends eternal life. If any man will doe his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine, &c, John 7. 17. And, He that keepeth the Law of the Lord, getteth underſtanding thereof, Eccleſ. 21. 11. That it preſerves alſo, St. Paul witneſſeth; Holding faith and a good conſcience, which ſome having put away (a good conſcience) κατὰ τὴν πίστιν ἐναυάγησαν, have made ſhipwrack of their faith; or, concerning their faith, 1 Tim 1. 19. Thus in reference to, and purſuance of that interpretation of the word תושיה (of which upon the former words) may theſe words be interpreted. But if any had rather underſtand this, buckler, here, of protection from temporal evils, I am not againſt it; neither will it be ſtrange; that promiſes belonging to this life, and that which is to come, ſhould be put in one verſe, or comprehended (as we deny not both יש and תושיה may bear likewiſe) in the ſame words.

V. 8. He keepeth] Heb. To keep and accordingly as we tranſlate to keep, or he keepeth (both which the Hebrew will bear:) the ſenſe will be different. If, to keep; then it belongs unto his ſaints, and the meaning will be, that God doth ſo protect and preſerve the godly; or thoſe that are his, and ſo effectually guide them by his holy ſpirit, that they are able to keep the paths of judgement: that is, the right way, both in matter of action, and beliefe. An obvious ſenſe, often occuring in all parts of Scripture. But if, he keepeth: (which the coherence with the next words doth ſeem to require:) then it muſt be referred unto God himſelf; and the ſenſe will be, that God by protecting the godly, doth manifeſt his juſtice unto men. For God is known by the judgement which he executeth: Pſal. 9. 16. So there; and Pſal. 7. 7. returne thou on high. But this protection of God, with what limitations to be underſtood, ſee upon Chap. 1. 33. ſhall dwell ſafely; and the referrences there.

and preſerveth the way of his Saints] חסידיו in the Original; of which ſee upon Pſal, 86. 2. For I am holy, &c. The word in this ſenſe, is taken for mercy, not paſſive, but active, as Mercer notes here; who tranſlates it miſericordes; the mercifull. Thoſe therefore that delight in crueltiy ſhould not, of all men, take that title upon themſelves, as thoſe murtherers in St. Auguſtines time, (otherwiſe called circumcelliones) did. Optatus Milevit, in his third book againſt the Donatiſts, deſcribes them alſo, and their actions. However, both ſignifications of the word (active, and paſſive) may doe well enough in this place. See the reference.

V. 9. Then ſhalt thou underſtand righteouſneſſe and judgement, and equity; yea, every good path] Chap. 1. 3. The ſame word צדק in the original is there traſlated juſtice, here righteouſneſſe. I doe not apprehend any great difference between juſtice and righteouſneſſe: to me, it is all one, which of the two is uſed. But men ſometimes, that affect ſubtility, find great myſteries in theſe differences, or varieties, for which there is no ground at all in the original: which might be prevented, if the ſame word were kept, when there is no need of variety.

Then ſhalt thou underſtand righteouſneſſe] As wiſdom will teach us how to carry our ſelves well towards God, verſe 5. So likewiſe towards man, in this verſe: For holy hearts are beſt fitted to underſtand holy things, Pſal. 25. 12. John 7. 17.

and judgement] If we refer this to practical wiſdom, particularly, which we call prudence: and other words here uſed, to different qualifications and abilities, as ſome doe; whereof hath been ſpoken before, upon Chap. 1. 2. 4. &c. where it is ſhewed that there is no neceſſity of diſtinguiſhing them, and for what reaſon, ſo multiplyed: yet I ſay, if we make a difference, it muſt be noted, that wiſdom being a very generall thing, which comprehendeth many ſpecies of different natures; Solomons intention is not, that whoſoever applyeth himſelf to godlineſſe, or the fear of God, (that is, true wiſdom:) ſhal be made partaker of all gifts, and graces belonging to wiſdom in generall: which is ſeldom, if ever, ſeene in one and the ſame man: but rather, to ſet out the excellencie of wiſdom in general: by theſe ſeverall gifts and graces, which thoſe that apply themſelves to it, reape; ſome one (beſides the maine, ſalvation:) ſome another: ſome more, ſome leſſe, even as it ſeemeth beſt unto God, for every mans particular good, with a reſpect to the whole, or to the general: as it is at large proſecuted and diſputed by St. Paul: 1 Cor. 12. Chapter, and to the Epheſ. Chap. 4. There are diverſities of gifts, ſaith he, but the ſame ſpirit. Where, by ſpirit, is intended by him, what is here comprehended by Solomon, under the notion of wiſdom.

V. 10. When wiſdom entreth into thine heart] This is very proper and emphaticaal. For a man may talk of wiſdom; yea and be able to diſcourſe of it, of the nature and proprieties; largely and learnedly and to write of it too, with commendation; as we know there be that preach, very plauſibly, who are or have been known very lewd, (the more the pittie ſuch ſhould be ſufferd) in their lives and converſations: and the reaſon is, becauſe they have it well in their tongues, and in their braines what they have of it; but nothing in their hearts. And ſo long as that is not affected, our wiſdom may doe good unto others perchance, and ſometimes, more hurt, than good: but as to our ſelves, there is nothing done yet: nay our caſe is more lamentable and dangerous, than if we had no knowledge at all. So ancient philoſophers ſpeak too: Sen. Conſol. ad Helu. c. 16. talia ſunt diſciplinarum omnium fundamenta. Nunc ad illas revertere, tutum te præſtabunt illa—— ſi bonâ fide animum tuum intraverint, &c. and ſo others frequently.

knowledge pleaſant] Pſal. 19. 10. and Pſal. 119. 183. There is a ſuperficial light pleaſure, and rejoycing of heart, which many find at the very firſt entrance into knowledge: which as it comes ſuddainly, ſo is apt to vaniſh as ſuddainly. Of which Chirſt ſpeaketh in the parable of the ſower. They on the rock are they, which when they heare, receive the word with joy: and thoſe have noe roote, which for a time beleeve and in time of temptation fall away. Luke 8. 13. But the pleaſure that ariſeth from ſound knowledge, as it is not ſo eaſily found, ſo is it of a more ſolid nature; and though ſubject to many interruptions, yet not utterly failable, whileſt knowledge laſteth: and is a king of firſt fruits, or imperfect talk of thoſe future joyes in heaven, when we ſhall have attained to fulneſſe of knowledge (when imperfect knowledge, ſuch as we are capable of in this world, ſhall vaniſh away. 1 Cor. 13. 8.) in the ſight of God.

V. 11. Diſcretion ſhall preſerve thee] It ſhall teach thee how to govern thy ſelf, and to keep thee from ſinfull wayes, and dangers thereupon enſuing.

V. 13. Who leave the paths of uprightneſſe] The right wayes preſcribed in Gods word, which is the onely light, they leave to follow their own phantaſies.

the wayes of darkneſſe] John 3. 19, 20. Ep. 5. 11.

V. 14. and delight in the frowardneſſe of the wicked] Perverſly wicked, walking croſs to God and good men, Levit. 26. 21. Pſal. 18. 27.

V. 15. Whoſe wayes are crooked, and they froward in their paths] Or, and they crooked in their paths. So Merc. Quorum viæ perverſæ ſunt, & perverſi ſunt in viis ſuis. I confeſſe the Hebrew words for perverſe in the firſt member, and froward, (or, perverſe:) in the ſecond, are different words, but, of one and the ſame ſignification, according to the expoſition of the learned Jews. Now the 13. 14. and 15. verſe (which is this) ſeeme to tend moſt to one thing, to ſet out a perverſe man: or rather, the crookedneſſe and perverſitie of a wicked man, that hath not the fear of God in his heart, nor maketh any conſcience; who hath no rule to walk by, but his own luſts and deſires. Solomon ſets out divers words & expreſſions; the crookedneſſe of their wayes, that are ſuch: a thing much inſiſted upon by ancient philoſophers alſo: vvho alſo expreſſe it vvith much varieties, and divers ſimilitndes: vvherein (as in many other things) the good agreement of the Authors vvho are moſt copious upon it. Seneca: Maximum judicium eſt malæ mentis, fluctuatio, & inter ſimulationem virtutum, amoremque vitiorum, aſſidua jactatio. And in another place: Quid porro, nonne nunc quoque (etiamſi parum ſentiatis) turbo quidam animos veſtros rotat, & involvit fugientes petenteſque eadem; & nunc in ſublimo allevatos; nunc in infima alliſos rapit? beſides many other places of the ſame author, to the ſame purpoſe. But there is ſomewhat in Solomons words, vvhich in a prophane author vvhether Poet, or Orator vvould have been looked upon perchance as a piece of great vvit and much commended. For vvhileſt in this verſe he deſcribeth (he doth endeavour to ſet out, I vvould ſay ſhould I ſpeak of a common author) the perverſneſs and crookedneſſe of wicked men, he hath made his ſpeech or words ſomewhat like unto them, through a notable incongruitie; joyning a feminin (עקשים & ארחותיהם) and a maſculin together. I knovv vvhat is ſaid by ſome, to reconcile the vvords to Grammer: but vvith ſuch libertie, that a man may ſay there is no ſuch thing at all as incongruitie in any vvriter, or ſpeaker. Novv, that Solomon made it ſo of purpoſe, to imitate them whom he ſpeakes of (a thing done by divers authors,) I will not undertake: that it was an overſight, or a miſtake in him, I hope no man (though ſome ſuch, yea greater, if greater can be, have been obſerved, by learned men, in beſt authors) can be ſo abſurd as to imagin. I thought I was bound to obſerve it: let the reader make what uſe of it he thinks beſt, with ſobrietie.

V. 16. To deliver thee] As deſcretion will diliver us from evill men, verſe 12. ſo likewiſe from evil women, in this verſe.

from the ſtrange women] That is not thy wife, nor thou mayeſt not meddle with. So ſtrange fire, Numb. 3. 4. And no ſtranger (to wit, none that is not a Levite,) to meddle with the Tabernacle; Num. 1. 51 And, from the ſtranger, (as followeth here) that is, who is as bad as one of a ſtrange nation, whom God had forbidden them to touch: 1 Kings 11. 12 Or it may be, that ſuch as proſtituted themſelves publickly among the Jews, being for the moſt part ſtrangers indeed; that is, of another countrey, by birth, and other relations (we have the ſtorie of one, named Corbi, a Midianiſh woman, Num. 25.) from thence afterwards, in proceſſe of time, any publick whore, or ſtrumpet in generall, whether a Jew, or a ſtranger, might be ſo called. So תוכרה in Hebrew, ſignifieth both an hoſteſſe, and a whore, though ſome fetch it, according to difference of ſignifications: from different primitives: yet it is but one word: and originally, as I conceive, ſignified, an hoſteſſe. And the Engliſh harlot, every body knows, was once the name of a woman a proper name, originally. See alſo upon Chap. 7. 20. He hath taken a bag of money. Now, what is here, as alſo Chap. 5. and elſewhere, concerning an adulterous woman, as by Rabbi Solomon expounded of idolatry, ſuperſtition, hereſie, falſe opinions, and the like, by which a man is ſeduced from the true knowledge and worſhip of God. Other Rabbins, as Ben Gerſon upon this place, and Rabbi Ben Maimon the moſt famous, (and not without cauſe) of all Rabbins, in his excellent More Nevochim; apply to the materiall part of man, that is, to the body, and ſenſes: or to the phantaſie, or Imaginative faculty, by which (for they all come to one) the Mind, or underſtanding faculty, which by God was appointed to rule and to govern, (therefore called by the Greek Philoſophers, τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, that is, vis, or, facultas imperatrix:) is by ſecret intiſements in moſt men undermined, and enthralled: which in very deed (being ſo weakned by Adams fall) is the originall cauſe of all miſchief, and wickedneſſe in all men. To this ancient Philoſophers alſo agree, who though they knew not of Adams fall, nor whence, originally, proceeded the weakneſſe of reaſon, (his better part) in man, ſo apt to be ſeduced, and to yeild it ſelf to the ſenſes; yet they generally aſcribed the ground of all diſorder to the material part, which they called ὕλην: and ſpake of the baits and allurements of it, much to the ſame purpoſe, as Solomon doth here in the perſon of a woman. This is alſo very excellently well proſecuted by an ancient Holy man and Martyr, called Maximus Monachus, in his Divine Meditations, which he inſcribed, Κεφάλαια. Now to ſay with ſome, that Solomon in all this, had no further aim, than to diſſwade from fornication and adultery, taken literally and properly; truly I think were to do him ſome wrong. It cannot be that ſo wiſe a man, ſo well acquainted with ancient Parables and allegories, in ſo many reiterated expreſſions ſhould have no thought at all of a thing (to a Philoſophical contemplative man,) ſo obvious; & in very deed in an allegorical way, of all allegories I ever met with, moſt proper and natural. Yet that this was his primary aim or intention, conſidering to whom and for whoſe uſe he wrote theſe Proverbs, I would not ſay: nor make it the literall immediate ſenſe, as ſome do. As for that objection in Rabby Sol. that this were no great commendation of the law of God, if it did onely deliver from fornication and adultery; we anſwer; Firſt, that it doth not follow from the words here, or any other, where the ſame matter is ſpoken of. Why is this here more particularly mentioned, and inſiſted upon, hath already been ſhewed in the Preface. Beſides, that fornication and adultery, (eſpecially by a ſtrange woman, we underſtand properly, one that is of another country) might, by conſequent, and ſo literally, inclnde Idolatry, and hereſie, we eaſily grant: as it fell out in Solomon himſelf, who by ſtrange women (his wives and concubines:) was drawn to idolatry in his old age, 1 Kings 11. 4. &c. No wonder therefore if Solomon inſiſt upon it often both for the fowlneſſe of the crime, in it ſelf, altogether incomparable with true divine wiſdom; and for the conſequence of it, in theſe conſiderations: In this Introduction eſpecially, (theſe firſt eight or nine Chapters as we have ſaid before:) which was more particularly intended for them, who by reaſon of their youth were but ſtrangers to the buſineſſe of the world, and were yet to chuſe their way, (that of pleaſure, or that of virtue:) as their own Good Genius, and Gods ſpirit ſhould direct them. See alſo upon Chap. 9, 11, 13, A fooliſh woman &c.

even from the ſtranger which flattereth with her words] Chap. 5. 3. & 7. 5.

V. 17. the guide of her youth] That is, her huſband, who married her in her youth, whoſe office is to guide her, and to whom ſhe ought to be ſubject, 1 Pet. 3. 7. The Hebrew word אלוף doth properly ſignifie a Captain of thouſand men: whereupon ſome have grounded a conceit, that may paſſe perchance for a jeſt, or a peice of wit; but muſt not be ſeriouſly entertained by any ſober man; to wit, that a young womans huſband was called אלוף becauſe it was as hard a buſineſs for a man to rule a young woman, as to rule a thouſand men, or ſouldiers. But that jeſt will be ſpoiled, if the truth be known, which is fit to be known however, to prevent the like conceits to which many are given, and often times deduce great matters from them, affecting to build upon ſand rather, than upon firme ground. Firſt then we ſay, that though אלוף be moſt properly χιλίαρχος (a captain of 1000) and ſo rendred by the Lxx. in many places: yet more generally, it alſo ſignifies a captain abſolutely, any captain, or guide without any referrence to 1000. ἡγεμόνα: as by the Lxx. is expreſſed. I will not waſte time in examples of either, which are very obvious. But ſecondly, we ſay that the ſame word, from the ſame root, but in another ſignifitation, ſignifieth a friend, an intimate friend: from אלף copulare, to joyne together, which ſignification though it have loſt in the Hebrew tongue, (as it hath hapned to many, or moſt Hebrew words, for want of ſtore of books written in the Hebrew tongue when it was purely ſpoken:) yet it ſtill retaineth it in the Arabick (a dialact of the Hebrew:) as by ſome learned men hath been ſhewed, So that even here in this place, the Hebrew word might have been tranſlated friend, as well as guide, and more truly, perchance, as chap. 16. 28. & chap. 17. 9. we find it not in the Chaldee paraphraſe only, and Greek verſion: (obſerved long ago by Mercer:) but in others alſo, exhibited in that ineſtimable and unparallel'd Bible, ſet out by Dr. Walton, in London: yea in our Engliſh bible too cheif friends, in the firſt place: very friends, in the ſecond And were this a fit place, I think I could argue it unto probabilitie, that the very word φίλος in Greek, came from the Hebrew. Now, the friend of her youth, is very emphatical, becauſe, naturally, thoſe friends are deareſt one to another, who have been ſuch in their youths. Veterrimæ quæque amicitiæ; (ut ea vina quæ vetuſtatem ferunt) debent eſſe ſuaviſſimæ, ſaith Cicero.

the covenant of her God] The promiſe made in marriage, whereof God is both the author, and witneſſe, Mal. 2. 14. and Ezek. 16. 60 Jer. 2. 2. by way of alluſion.

V. 18. her houſe encline th unto death] The courſes uſed in her houſe, bring men to untimely ends. Chap. 7. 27.

unto the dead] Heb. רפאים as Pſal. 88. 10. The word ſignifieth properly looſned: as in faintneſſe: or diſſolved. And ſo the Gecians alſo, by Κεκμηκότες, (properly), faint, or weary;) ſometimes, underſtand the dead. See alſo upon 21. 16. 16. ſhall remain.

V. 19. None that go unto her, return again] Thoſe that are ſo entangled ſeldom get free again, Eccleſ. 7 26.

V. 20. That thou mayſt walk in the way of good men] Chap. 13. 20. Diſcretion will keep thee from evil men verſe. 12, and evil women, verſe 16 that thou mayeſt walk in good wayes, in this verſe. Or if this coherence ſeem too remote, (though if we make a parentheſis of the 13. 14. & 15. verſes: and another, of the 17 18. 19. which I think muſt be, it will not appear ſo:) we muſt (with ſome other) ſupply the ſenſe with ſome ſuch thing: [Take good notice of what I have ſaid;] or, [To this end I tell it thee;] that thou mayeſt walk, &c. See alſo upon Chap. 1. 5. 6. ſhal attain unto wiſe counſels. To underſtand, &c. The Arabick tranſlation of this verſe may ſeem very ſtrange; being to this effect; For if they had walked (or, gone,) in ſtraight paths, truly they had found, (or, they would have thought) the wayes of righteouſneſſe ſmooth: (or, plaine.) But we may ceaſe to wonder, if we take notice, that this is not made of the Hebrew Text; but out of the tranſlation of the Septuagint, as we commonly call them: whoſe words are, Εἰ γὰρ ἐπορεύοντο τρίβους ἀγαθὰς, εὕροσαν ἂν τρίβους δικαιοσύνης λείας. So before, verſe 17 where we have it out of the Hebrew, which forſaketh the guide of her youth &c. the Greek there is, Υἱὲ μή σε καταλάβῃ κακὴ βουλή. ἡ ἀπολείπουσα διδασκαλίαν νεότητος, καὶ διαθήκην θείαν ἐπιλελησμένη: that is, My ſon, let not evil counſel take hold of thee, or, ſurpriſe thee:) which forſaketh the doctrine (or teaching) of youth and forgetteth the divine covenant, And juſt ſo the Arabick, but that in ſteed of νεότητος, (which nothing could be made of:) read it, as I conceive νεότος, or, νεαρότητος, for νοήσεως ſuppoſing perchance, that from νοερὸς, a ſubſtantive in jus, (as from πιθανὸς, πιθανότης, &c.) might be formed. However, we may not infer upon this, that therefore the Arabick (in this book of Proverbs) is altogether out of the Greek: except we ſhall ſay the authors of it have taken a great libertie even upon the Septuagint themſelves: as may preſently appear by the 22 verſe of the firſt Chapter, Abominanda res eſt, &c. compared with the Greek, Ὅσον ἂν χρόνον &c. I ſhall forbear ſuch obſervations hencefotth, which I do not conceive ſo neceſſary for theſe Annotations However this warning here I thought would not be amiſſe for their ſakes that are ſo happy as to have the uſe of the ſaid Bible, and know how to uſe it.

V. 21. For the upright ſhal dwel in the land, and the perfect ſhal remain in it &c.] See upon pſ 37. 2 For they ſhal ſoon be cut down &c, and more generally concerning temporal rewards and promiſes, upon the firſt verſe of that Pſalm, Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evil doers, &c.

the upright ſhal dwel in the land] They ſhall proſper in the world, when wicked men, eſpecially adulterers, waſt their eſtate, and come to nothing, Ch. 6, 26. So it did often fall out in thoſe dayes and doth yet: but ſee the referrences upon the former words.

the perfect ſhall remain in it] Heb. ſhall be left in it: To wit, when wicked men come to untimely end.

V. 22. But the wicked ſhalbe cut off from the earth, and the tranſgreſſors ſhall be rooted out of it] Job 18. 17. Pſal. 104. 35. See the references upon verſe 21.

rooted out] Or, pluckt up.

CHAP. III.

Verſe. 1. F*Orget not my law*] Forget not to do it, for God accounts thoſe that do not his law, forgetters of it.

but let thine heart keep my commandments] Deuter. 8. 1. and 30. 16.

V. 2. length of dayes] Long life is the bleſſing of God, which he giveth to his ſo far forth, as it is expedient for them, Pſalm. 91. 116. See the references upon Chap. 2. 21.

long life] Heb. yeers of life.

and peace ſhall they add to thee] Pſal. 119. 165.

V. 3. Let not mercy and truth forſake thee] Deale mercifully and truly with all men. So we finde theſe two joyned together in divers places of Scripture, as Hoſea. 4. 1. becauſe there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land; and in this book of Proverbs, as Chapter 20. 28. Mercy and truth preſerve the King. Some men may be naturally compaſſionate; not out of conſcience, or reſpect to God; but out of ſome natural tenderneſſe: who therefore in their dealings with men, ſtick not at any thing that is for their advantage, be it juſt, or unjuſt. Others again, make great boaſt of juſtice, and ſeeme to be very ſtrict and punctuall in their dealings: but their fault is, that they are all juſtice, without any tenderneſſe or compaſſion, be the caſe or cauſe never ſo favourable, in the eyes of other men. They pleaſe themſelves in their rigour and inexorableneſs, as though that were an argument to them of their juſtice, whereas, in ſuch caſes, the old ſaying proves commonly true: Summum jus, ſumma injuria, that is, juſtice without mercy, (in due time and place) is greateſt injuſtice. It is not therefore without great cauſe that theſe are ſo often joyned together, mercy and truth; which if we ſeparate in our practiſe, we may be mercifull, or juſt and true, in our own conceits, or in the opinion of ſome: but in very truth, and in the eyes of God, we are neither. For ſince that God hath ſo joyned them, there is the ſame obligation for both: ſo that either of them, without the other, is not, nor can be in obedience to God, (it is but meer deluſion to think ſo:) but out of ſome other cauſe. There be who by theſe words would have the whole duty of man comprehended, referring mercy, unto men; that is, to our dealings with men: and truth unto God: that is, to thoſe duties, that have more immediat reference unto God; as faith, and a good conſcience towards God. Indeed, a man may be both mercifull and true, (or juſt,) in outward appearance, to get this praiſe of men; or for ſome other worldly end; hypocritically, not ſincerely; or perchance, out of a good nature (in ſome degree) and by the advantage of good education, more really and ſincerely, yet not truly, and acceptably before God; except it be for Gods ſake, principally, and in obedience to his commandements. See more to this purpoſe upon Chapter. 1. 7. The feare of the Lord, &c. This ſenſe is good, but not ſo proper here, as the former, in my judgement. But there is yet a far different ſenſe made of the words, by ſome chief expoſiters, as Mercerus, and others. They refer both theſe, mercy and truth, unto God, not as the object, but as the author, or fountain of both. And ſo indeed we finde them, ſo joyned, ſpoken of God. So in the Pſalms often; and elſewhere. So in this book too: Do they not erre, that deviſe evill? but mercy and truth ſhall be to them that deviſe good, Chapter. 14. 22. And in what ſenſe adſcribed unto God, ſee upon Pſalm. 85. 7. and elſewhere. Then the words (if we follow this ſenſe) muſt be tranſlated: Mercy and truth ſhall not forſake thee. Bind them, &c. But neither is the ſenſe ſo proper to the coherence; nor ſo naturall to the particula, אל, which rather implieth an Imperative. Wee ſhall therefore forbeare to ſay more bind them about thy neck] Exodus 13. 9. Deuteronomie. 6. 6. 7. 8. Chapter. 2. 9. Keep thoſe vertues as moſt precious jewels.

upon the table of thine heart] Have them ever in remembrance. It was the cuſtome of many nations, to engrave laws, and other publique acts of conſequence upon tables of braſſe, or ſtone, to make them more authentick, and more laſting, and inviolable. Nec verba minantia (that is, laws,) fixo Ære ligabantur, ſaith the Poet. In alluſion to this coſtome muſt be underſtood the words of Jeremiah. The ſin of Juda is written with a pen of Iron, and with the point of a Diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, &c. Jeremiah. 17. 1. See alſo 2 Corinthians 3. 3. and Job, 19. 23. 24. See alſo upon Chapter. 2. 10. When wiſdom entreth into thine heart.

V. 4. So ſhalt thou finde favour, and good underſtanding in the ſight of God and man] In the Hebrew an Imperative: So finde thou favour, &c. Soe Geneſis 42. 18. This doe and live: that is, and ye ſhall live. And Chapter 4. 4. Keep my Commandements, and live. It is ordinarie in the Hebrew; and in other tongues too, uſuall enough.

So ſhalt thou find favour] With God eſpecially; that being the chiefe thing; yea the only neceſſary thing: My grace is ſufficient for thee: 2 Corinthians 10. 9. yet, often, with men alſo: as of Chriſt, Luke 2. 54. And more generally, in this book, Chapter 6. 7. When mans wayes pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with himſelf, And ſome obſerve here the propriety of the vebe, to finde, upon which they inferre, that as a thing is properly found (εὕρημα in the Greeke) that was not ſought, or expected; ſo the grace of God, and his gifts, are altogether free, without any precedent meritorious acts of ours. The doctrine is good; but if it had no better ground, I would not obliege any man to beleeve it. It may ſeeme, to put us in minde, not to ground our faith upon.

good underſtanding] Or, good ſucceſſe. The Hebrew verbe, שכל not in different conjugations only, but even in the ſame, doth ſignifie to be wiſe: to be endowed with good underſtanding; and, to proſper, or to have ſucceſſe. And there is great reaſon for this communication of ſignifications, becauſe of the neer dependency in the things themſelves. That good underſtanding, (that is, prudence, and diſcretion:) doth often beget good ſucceſſe, no man makes any queſtion; and that want of underſtanding, is the overthrow of many publique and private eſtates. But on the other ſide, that good ſucceſſe, which ſometimes by a ſtronger power is caſt upon weake, yea, wicked attempts, doth intitle raſhneſſe and folly, yea mere madneſſe ſometimes, to wiſdom and prudence in the opinion of the world, is the obſervation of many ancient Hiſtorians, and other approved judicious Writers. Among other, Demoſthenes, hath this obſervation: Αἱ γὰρ εὐπραξίαι δειναὶ συγκρύψαι καὶ συσκιάσαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, &c. that is, Proſperity and good ſucceſſe, is of great force to hide and ſhadow the faults of men: but if once they begin to trip, then all ſuch things are diſcovered and come to open light. So that one word may very wel ſignifie both, and they muſt be men of ſolid judgements, that can diſcern between good ſucceſſe, by chance, and real underunderſtanding and prudence: and upright honeſt men too, that they be not carried with the current, and ſuffer their judgements (as moſt men, when wicked men rule:) to be overſwayed, and, in time, blinded by their affections. And in this place particularly; good ſucceſſe may do very well, ſince all men know, that not only Gods favour, really is the cauſe of good ſucceſſe, for the moſt part: but even the opinion of it, though grounded upon error, or deluſion, doth often not a little prevail to that effect.

in the ſight of God and man] Some referre theſe words to favour; becauſe often ſo joyned in Scripture: and then bring in good underſtanding, after. I confeſſe there be examples of ſuch trajections; (as they call them) in Scripture; ſome that may be thought as harſh as this. But then we muſt ſay withall, that neceſſity of admitting ſuch trajections in ſuch places, doth appear more, than it doth here. All men that are wiſe, or endowed with a good underſtanding, are not known to be ſo, or generally accounted ſo. The credit of wiſdome, in the world, is a thing that goes as much by favour, and good luck, as any thing that I know. See what hath been ſaid of good ſucceſſe, upon the former words. Beſides, envie and malice doe often blaſt the credit of men of great abilitie; and there be artificers in the world; to cry up them for able and honeſt, that are moſt unworthy of any ſuch commendation: even thoſe ſometimes, who if they had their due, a halter, and gibbet, would be their reward. Ille crucem ſceleris pretium tulit; hic, diadema Gods favour may alter the caſe, and bring men, (thoſe that fear, and ſerve him, cordially, when it is for their good) into credit: ſometimes, it is an effect of Gods great favour, that they are not (though beſt dreſerving) more regarded by men.

V. 5. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart] This with all thine heart, is of great force here; and very emphaticall. Firſt, becauſe it is a principall dutie of religion, and God is ſaid to take pleaſure in them, that truſt to him, or hope in his mercy, Pſal. 147. 11. to endeare this duty unto us. Secondly, with all thine heart, doth import an earneſt ſtriving, to the utmoſt of our powers, againſt all impediments, and temptations to the contrarie, and ſuggeſtions of of the fleſh, or ſenſe. Such was Jobs truſt; and ſuch his reſolution, when he ſaid, though he ſlay me, yet wil I truſt in him, Job 13. 15. Such Davids, when he ſaid, that he would not fear, though the earth ſhould be removed, &c. Pſal. 46. and ſuch the Prophet Habakuk's, when he ſaid, Though the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, &c, Yet he would rejoyce in the Lord; he would joy in the God of his ſalvation. Hab. laſt verſes. Theſe things may be thought impoſſible, by them that know not experimentally, what it is to truſt, with all their hearts. Even in worldly things, a good heart, and a good reſolution, will goe a great way: even to amazement ſometimes. How much more in God and for God: if a man be well grounded and prepared. See Rom. 8. 31. to the end of the Chapter.

lean not unto thine underſtanding] A ſeaſonable caveat, and admonition, leſt that having before ſet out the praiſe of wiſdom, and underſtanding, as effects of the fear of God; fooliſh men, upon a perſwaſion of godlineſſe and religion, ſhould adſcribe to their own wit and prudence, and grow preſumptuous, as they grow (or perſwade themſelves they do:) religious. Neither is it enough for us to truſt in God (not in our ſelves:) for the meanes; that is, that in caſe things fall out as we wiſhed and endeavoured, to give him the thanks: but alſo, for the event, whether ſo, or ſo: that in caſe it prove contrary to our deſires and endeavours, yet to beleeve that God is wiſer than we, and doth order all events for the beſt, though we cannot penetrate into the depth of his counſels.

V. 6. In all thy wayes acknowledg him, and he ſhall direct thy paths] 1 Chron. 28 9.

In all thy wayes acknowledg him] Uſe Gods counſel in all thy actions, and do nothing contrary to his will.

V. 7. Be not wiſe in thine own eyes] Rom. 12. 16. See before upon Chap 2. 5. and finde the knowledge of God.

fear the Lord, and depart from evil] Chap. 16. 6. Job 1, 1.

V. 8. It ſhall be health to thy navel] Some think, becauſe Infants, whileſt in the womb, receive all their nouriſhment, from which depends the health and groweth of the whole body, through the navel, which afterwards becomes, if not altogether uſeleſſe, yet not ſo conſiderable, as to be reckoned a principal part: that therefore the navel is here uſed allegorically, or metaphorically, of Infants, through ſpirituall regeneration, in the womb of the Church: but this ſeems to me too remote. I rather agree with them, who think that the whole body is comprehended under theſe two, the navel, and the bones, the ſofter parts, under the one, and the harder and more ſolid, under the other. The navel is as it were the Knot, in apparence at leaſt, which hangs or faſtens all the belly, the ſeat of the ſofteſt parts: and ſo is called by ſome, ligamentum inteſtinorum. It is likely, that it was a common ſpeech among the Hebrews; as alſo that of the bones, which we find alſo Job 21. 24. ſpeaking of a man in full ſtrength and vigour of body, His breaſts are full of milk, (ſome tranſlate mulctralia; his milk-bowels, or veſſels: but it is a figurative expreſſion, to expreſſe vigour of body, though not ſo proper to men) and his bones are moiſtened with marrow. It is poſſible alſo, that there might be ſome alluſion, in the expreſſion, to arches in building; where one ſtone, that which is in the middle, called alſo ſometimes, umbilicus, ſeems to bind the whole arch. Unus lapis fecit fornicem: ille qui latera inclinata cuneavit, & interventu ſuo vinxit. Whence it is, that Author of the book De mundo, (intitled to Ariſtotle) how fitly, I know not; but very elegantly, compareth God to theſe umbilical ſtones, as by whom the whole world, all parts of it, are ſuſtained and preſerved. The ſame ancient Latin Author, whoſe words I had but now, ſpeaks of it in another place; Democritus inveniſſe dicitur fornicem, ut lapidum curvatura Paulatim inclinatorum medio ſaxo alligaretur. But he denies it, and maintaineth that long before Democritus ſuch building was in faſhion. Hower, among the Hebrews, (who might learn it of the Egyptians) though not among the Grecians, or Romans, it might be of far greater antiquity. So the navel, or umblicus, being juſt in the midſt of the body, (as is noted by Phyſicians) it may appear as a Knot, or binding of the whole body.

health] Heb. medicine.

marrow] Heb. watering, or, moyſtening, Job 21. 24.

V. 9. Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt fruits of all thine increaſe] Exod. 23. 19. & 34. 26. Deut. 26. 2. &c. Mal. 3. 10, &c. Luke 14. 13.

Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance] That is done many wayes. By deeds of charitie eſpecially. He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his maker, but he that honoureth him, hath mercy on the poor. Prov. 14. 31. To build Churches unto God, was once thought a very good way too: and that Centurion in the Goſpel, was thought worthy of Chriſts favour, becauſe he had built the Jews a ſynagogue. Now, according to the religion of the times, to pul down Churches, is to honour God: and if Souldiers had not been more mercifull in the execution, than ſome miniſters (who notwithſtanding like well, that God ſhould ſtill be honoured with payment of tythes:) have been in crying them down, and profaning them, ſo far as in them lay; (for which alſo ſome have been rewarded) it may be by this we ſhould have had but few ſtanding. God preſerve them that yet have eſcaped.

and with the firſt fruits of all thine increaſe] As was commanded in the law: and by this they acknowledged, that God was the giver of all things, and that they were ready to beſtow all at his commandment.

V. 10. So ſhall thy barns be filled with plenty] Deut. 28. 8.

thy preſſes ſhall burſt out with new wine] To pay or give what God appoints, is not the way to impoveriſh men, but to enrich them. The Hebrews have a very elegant proverb to this purpoſe; חעשר בשביל שתעשר, that is, Pay thy tythes, that thou mayſt be rich. The ſame word in the Hebrew, (the different placing of one title prick over one of the letters, makes all the difference:) ſignifies to pay tythes, and, to grow rich: which gave occaſion of the proverb. Now theſe promiſes of temporall rewards, though they have many times a very literall accompliſhment, and many men have been, and are repaid with great advantage, for their good deeds, even in this life: yet it is not the part of a chriſtian to fixe his heart upon temporal rewards, or promiſes; but to prepare himſelf to beare the croſſe, and to think it higheſt honour and happineſſe, (in this world,) thereby to be made conformable unto Chriſt. See more of temporall promiſes, upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf.

V. 11. My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord: neither be weary of his correction] Job 5. 17. Heb. 12. 5 Revel 3 19.

deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord] Do not ſet light by Gods rods, but make good uſe of them: neither be too much caſt down under them, for they come for thy good. Though this ſeem but harſh doctrine unto fleſh and blood; yet we find that natural reaſon prompted it to divers ancients, who had it not from either Job, or Solomon; or any other of divine authoritie, ſince them. Seneca, after many ancienter: Hos itaque Deus quos probat, quos amat: (theſe two words the very ſame almoſt, that are uſed by the Apoſtle, ἀγαπᾷ, and παραδέχεται:) indurat, recognoſcit, exarcet: eos autem quibus indulgere videtur, quibus parcere; molles venturis malis ſeruat. And elſewhere he uſeth the ſame ſimilitude of a father: Patrium habet Deus adverſus bonos viros animum, &c.

V. 12. even as a father the ſon, in whom he delighteth] Deut. 8. 5. The Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 6. quoting this paſſage out of Proverbs, as appears by the context, inſtead of theſe words, even as a father the ſon in whom he delighteth: he hath it, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth; according to the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, then commonly received among the Jews. The originall Hebrew וכאב as it may be differently pointed, without any alteration of the letters, will afford either: ether; even (or, and) as a father: or, and ſcourgeth. The difference, as to the matter, is of no moment; and therefore the Apoſtle was not ſcrupulous. Neither ſhould we, where there is no greater occaſion; and there would be leſſe diviſions and diſſentions among brethren.

V. 13. and the man that getteth underſtanding] Heb. draweth it out: To wit, out of the Well of Gods Word. The Hebrew word, doth alſo ſignify, ſcaturire; to boyle or ſpring up, as a fountain doth: which ſenſe of it is here followed by ſome Rabbins. I like it the better, becauſe of the words of our Saviour, John 4, 14. But water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life.

the man that getteth underſtanding Heb. the man that draweth out underſtanding.

V. 14. For the marchandiſe of it is better than the merchandiſe of ſilver, and the gain thereof than fine gold] Job 28. 15. &c. Pſal. 19. 10. Chap. 8. 11, 19. & 16. 16. Or, according to Mercer, and [better] than the gain of fine gold. The prepoſition which is ſet before gold, in the order of the words; he thinks doth belong unto gaine, in the conſtruction. There be examples of ſuch, whether anomalies, or elegancies we confeſſe: but the ſenſe is good either way. Nay, the ſence is the ſame, in effect, ſo that there needs no further diſpute about it.

For the merchandiſe of it is better than the merchandiſe of ſilver] The gain that men get by uſing it, as merchants do by traffick.

V. 15. She is more precious than rubies] Learned men are not agreed about the proper ſignification of פנינים Some tranſlate it, margaritas, perles ſome, carbuncles, or rubies, others coral, but the moſt common, and ſureſt (as I conceive untill we know more certainly:) expreſſion is, precious ſtones.

V. 16. Length of dayes is in her right hand] He compareth wiſdome to a Queen, that holds long life in one hand, and wealth and honour in the other, to give plentifully to her ſervants. The ancients had a way of reckoning (whether years, or any thing elſe) by the fingers and hands. They began with the left hand; and when they were come to an hundred, then they paſſed to the right hand: whence is that expreſſion of one of the Poets, ſpeaking of one that was very old; atque ſuos jam dextrâ computat annos; that is, he reconeth his years with his right hand. Some think that Solomon in theſe words might allude to that cuſtome; which is not impoſſible: for it ſeems to have been very generall; and many ancients both Fathers and others, ſpeak of it, or allude unto it. But more probably that he doth allude to what hapned unto himſelf in a viſion, dreaming, 1 Kings 3. 5. &c. where we find the ſame particulars, as are here expreſſed: and which is moſt obſerveable, riches and glory, (honour, there, in our Engliſh, which is the ſame thing: yea and that ſame word in the original כבוד) put together, as it were in one hand, verſe 13. and length of dayes, by it ſelf, as the principall and moſt conſiderable, and as it were in the right hand: verſe 14 and wiſdom, the gorund and foundation of all, verſe 12. So that there is no queſtion to be made of the alluſion. As for the thing it ſelf that is here affirmed, ſee the references upon Chap. 2. 21. &c. and upon verſe 18. a tree of life, of this Chapter.

V. 17 Her wayes are wayes of pleaſantneſſe] The man that walks wiſely, ſhall enjoy true pleaſure, and felicity. And this, not hereafter only, in the world to come, (which muſt be our chiefeſt end, and aym, to which this is but a paſſage,) but in this life, alſo, in a good meaſure. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſſe and peace, and joy of the Holy Ghoſt, Rom. 14. 17. Neither is this contrary to what is elſewhere delivered by the ſame Apoſtle, that all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus (in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom, Col 2. 3.) ſhall ſuffer perſecutions. 2. Tim. 3. 12. or that through much tribulation we muſt enter into the kingdom of God, Acts 14. 22. ſince that ſpirituall joyes, and temporal adverſities are no wayes incomparable: and even where there is no preſent ſenſe of joy at all, yet the aſſurance we have of future joyes in another world, is a kind of anticipation of joy, though not yet ſenſibly enjoyed. Again, the heathens themſelves, though in their praiſes of wiſdom and vertue, they come not much ſhort of Solomon: yet they could ſay, (and their writings are full of ſuch cautions, and admonitions) that Radices amaræ, &c. that the roots, (or beginnings and firſt application) of wiſdome, were bitter; but the fruits ſweet and pleaſant. See alſo Eccleſiaſticus 2. 1. 2, 3. &c. My ſon, if thou come to ſerve the Lord, prepare thy ſelf for temptation, &c.

V. 18. She is a tree of life] Which bringeth forth ſuch fruit, that they that eat thereof have life. He alludeth to the tree of life in Paradiſe, Gen. 2. 9. Rev. 2. 7. Now when we read of life, length of dayes, and the like, in this book; though we exclude not the more literall and obvious ſenſe which nevertheleſſe more peculiarly belonged unto the Jews; as hath often already been obſerved, yet it becomes us that are Chriſtians, to remember what true life is, as we are taught by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and as true Chriſtians, to ſet our minds upon that, which is the hope of our calling Epheſ. 1. 18. and the end of our life, 1 Pet. 1. 9. in which all other promiſes, which were but as types and figures of this are fully comprehended, exhibited, and fulfilled. See the referrences upon verſe 16.

a tree of life] Not elſewhere, mentioned in the Old Teſtament but in Geneſis, and in this book. And it ſeemeth by comparing of places (in four ſeveral places he doth uſe the words) that it was a Proverb in Solomons time applyable to any thing, that is much deſired, and longed for, and brings great joy and comfort when it coms whether it have any relation to life (in the proper ſenſe,) or no. So Chap. 13. 12. Hope deferred, &c. but when the deſire cometh, it is a tree of life. Chap. 4. 15. A wholſome tongue, is a tree of life. So is ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν: life from the dead: uſed proverbially, by the Apoſtle, according to beſt interpreters, Beza, and others: Rom. 11. 15. For if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world: what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? And ſo ἀναβίωσις: and vita altera, in profane authors.

to them that lay hold upon her, happy is every one that retaineth her] The Hebrew words, here tranſlated lay hold, and retaineth; are vere emphatical, as by Mercer is well obſerved: importing the firſt, a earneſt, and watchful catching at at thing: the other, a firme and faſt holding of what is caught. As to the firſt, the words of our Saviour may give ſome light, that the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, (or, is taken by force: as the margin there:) and the violent take it by force. Matth. 11. 12. as alſo the words of the Apoſtle, lay hold on eternal life. 1 Tim. 6. 12. ſo the latter; happy is every one, &c. the words of the ſame Apoſtle; Wherefore, he that thinketh he ſtandeth, let him take heed leſt he fall. 1 Cor. 10. 12. and Apocal. 2. 25. hold faſt till I come: may ſeeme to have more particular referrence. Certainly, ſecuritie and preſumption is the loſs of many, if not moſt that think themſelves good Chriſtians. Little do moſt men think, neither are they willing to beleeve, that it is a matter of great care, diligence, ſollicitude, continuall watchfulneſſe, and circumſpection, to get eternal life.

happy is every one that retaineth her] Chap. 8. 34.

V. 19. The Lord by wiſdom hath founded the earth] Pſ. 24. 2. Solomon having ſpoken ſo much in commendation of wiſdom, and attributed unto it ſuch marvellous effects, as he hath done; and all this, of humane wiſdom; or rather, divine, but ſuch as is imparted unto man, by God; he proceeds now into admiration of divine wiſdom, as it is in God himſelfe, and ſheweth the wonderful effects of it, to the end, partly, that vve might the ſooner be dravvn to the love and eſteem of ſo heavenly a thing; and partly, that vve might the better underſtand the truth of vvhat he had delivered before, that all vvit and vviſdom in man, doth proceed from God, and is his gift; and therefore to be expected from him onely. This I conceive is the beſt and plaineſt coherence. We may alſo underſtand Chriſt, the ſon of God: λογον ἐν ὑποςατον: the ſubſtantial, and conſubſtantia word of God, yea the power and wiſdom of God: 1 Cor. 1. 24. in whom all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge are hid. Col. 2. 3. Him, I ſay, to be aymed at, and myſtically ſet out by theſe words. For by him were all things created, &c Col. 1. 16. and John 1. 1. &c But this, rather as the myſticall, than literall meaning, other reaſons are given of the coherence; but ſuch as I judge either too remote or impertinent.

eſtabliſhed, Or, prepared.

V, 20. By his knowledge the depths are broken up] Thoſe deep places, into which the waters were driven at the beginning, Gen. 1. 9. So ſome others, have other interpretations, But the moſt probable of all, is, to underſtand it of fountains and ſprings, which rivers are made of, without which the earth would not be habitable, and therefore mentioned here as a great effect of Gods wiſdome, and prudence towards mankind. Now concerning fountains and ſprings, there be divers queſtions in philoſophie; the reſolution whereof would very much ſet out the power and wiſdom of God in contriveing things ſo uſefully, and yet ſo hiddenly, that the wiſdom of man is poſed in the conſideration of the cauſes. Beſides philoſophers, Plutarch, as I remember, hath ſome conſiderations upon the cauſe of fountains and ſprings, in the life of Paulus Æmylius.

My ſon, let not them depart] Here Solomon returns to the commendation of humane wiſdom, (ſuch as man in this world is capable of, I mean, as was ſaid before:) and much to the ſame purpoſe, as bebefore. See therefore what hath been ſaid of repetitions in this kind, in the Preface. Now for a Nominative to this verbe, ſome fetch it from the foregoing verſes, 19. 20. wiſdome, underſtanding, knowledge. Others, (by a tranſitiens, or tranſpoſition) from the following words, in this verſe, ſound wiſdome, and diſcretion. This laſt would be more probable, were it not againſt the laws of right Syntaxes that to ſubſtantives, feminin; an adjective maſculin ſhould be joyned. But there be examples of that in other places of Scripture; ſo that the reader may pleaſe himſelf.

ſound wiſdom] תושיה ſee upon Chap 2. 7. ſound wiſdome.

V. 22. So ſhall they be lift unto thy ſoul] Without wiſdom then, the ſoul lacks life, and the body wants ornament.

V. 23. Then ſhalt thou walk in thy way ſafely, and thy foot ſhall not ſtumble] Pſal. 37. 24. & 91. 11, 12. ſee there.

Then ſhalt thou walk in thy way ſafely] Thou ſhalt proſperouſly effect all thy buſineſſe in the day, and after it is done, thou ſhalt ſleep quietly in the night.

V. 24. when thou lieſt down] Pſalm 3. 5. 6.

25. Be not afraid] Or, Thou ſhalt not be afraid, v. 24 Pſal. 121. 3.

neither of the deſolation of the wicked] For when God deſtroyeth the wicked, he wil ſave his, as he did Lot in Sodom. or, the deſolation of the wicked, actively; that is, the miſchief and deſtruction, which the wicked doth plot & project againſt thee. See (as before) on Pſal. 91. 5. &c.

when it cometh] Or, that it ſhould come, To wit, upon thee.

V. 27 them to whom it is due] Heb. the owners thereof. And who are thoſe think we? Even the poor and needie, who by the law of God, have right to part of what we have; if we have to ſpare: that is, if we have more, than is needful for our preſent ſuſtentation, and our childrens. So the Greek tranſlation here, (ἐνδεῶν:) and beſt expoſitors. And hence it is, (ſay ſome) that almes are called by the Rabbins, ארקה that is, properly juſtia.

V. 28. Go, and come again] Pay thy debts upon demand, if thou be able, end defer not payment.

and to morrow I wil give, when thou haſt it by thee] Lev. 19. 13. Deut. 24. 15.

V. 29, Deviſe not evil] Or, practice no evil.

ſeeing] Or, when.

ſeeing he dwelleth ſecurely by thee] Seeing he fears no ill from thee and thefore cannot prevent it.

V. 30. Strive not with a man without a cauſe] Out of pride, or covetouſneſſe.

if he have done thee no harm] The Hebrew words ſeem to import literally (and ſo Pagninus in his interlinearie tranſlation:) ſi non retribuit tibi malum. But it is a great miſtake, not in him only, but in divers Lexicogographers, even Buxtorfius, (a man otherwiſe of extraordinary deſerts, in this kind of learning) for one. For the word גמל doth not only ſignifie retribuere &c. but as often almoſt, doe a man a kindneſſe or unkindneſſe, without any provocation. The vulgar tranſlation therefore is here deſervedly commended, which expreſſeth it: cùm ipſe tibi nihil mali fecerit: which our Engliſh doth follow. But we muſt not here follow the inference and interpretation of ſome Rabbins, who becauſe of this addition, if he have done thee no harm, teach, that therefore if a man have done us harm, we may hate and perſecute him with fools. &c. as once their forefathers did, upon the command, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour; that therefore it was lawfull to hate an enemie; for which they were reproved by Chriſt, Matth. 5. 43. which is anſwer enough, to ſatisfie any Chriſtian, that it ought not to be ſo. But neither would we ſay any thing,to favour Anabaptiſts,or any other, who ſhal hold it unlawfull,to ſue for our right,unjuſtly detained from us;in Courts of juſtice: ſo it be without malice, hatred, or too great animoſitie : but in the ſpirit of meekneſſe, with a readineſſe to ſurceaſe,(though with ſome loſſe) upon any offer of accommodation otherwiſe.

V. 31. Envy thou not the oppreſſour] Pſal. 37. 1. Deſire not to be like unto him in oppreſſion,that thou mayeſt be as rich as he.

the orpreſſour] Heb. a man of violence.

V.32. but his ſecret is with the righteous] Pſal.25.14.That is;his covenant,and fatherly affection, which is hid, and ſecret from the world, Or, the ſecret of the Lord, that is, that תושיה ſpoken of before,Chap.2.7.He layeth up ſound wiſdom, &c. that is, eternal life: of which ſee more there. יצפן, He layeth up, or hideth, there : and סודו, his ſecret, here. But of the different acception of theſe words in generall, and in this place, the ſecret of the Lord, ſee more upon Pſal.25. 14.The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him. &c.

V. 33.The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked]Mal.2. 2.

V. 34. Surely he ſcorneth the ſcorners] Jam 4.6. 1 Pet.5 5.He wil ſhew by his plagues, that their ſcorns ſhall turn to their own deſtruction,as Chap.1.26.See more upon Pſal.18.26. thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſelf froward And upon Chap.1. 4 the ſimple.

Surely] Heb. If.

but] Or, yet.

he giveth grace unto the lowly] He makes them to find favour with men,as Exod 3.21. & 11.3.& 12.36. This ſaying of Solomon : He ſcorneth the ſcorner, but he giveth grace unto the lowly, is by the Septuagint (ſo called) turned into the Greek : Κύριος ὑπερηφάνοις ἀντιτάσσεται ταπεινοῖς δὲ δίδωσι χάριν, and ſo quoted by Saint James, and Saint Peter, according to the reference above. Now every man will ſay, at firſt hearing, that the ſenſe is well enough expreſt, ſince that the ſcorners, and the proud, both,in their nature; and according to ſcripture, (as hath been obſerved by Expoſitors) come all to one But I do not find the unexpreſſible elegancie and pregnancie of this tranſlation taken notice of, which I wonder at. Obſerve then, that the authors of it taking it for granted, that by לצים proud men were intended by Solomon,ſuch as the Greek call ὑπερήφανοι (wherein I think they were right enough) becauſe they could not make a verbe of it,as from לצים in the Hebrew, יליץ in liew of that, they uſed ἀντιτάσσεται, which doth ſignifie ex adverſo aciem inſtruere; as if we ſaid, to counter encamp; or, to ſtand in battel aray in direct oppoſition, which doth imply,that as they do, ſo doth God, as they deal with him, ſo he with them, and that is in effect, (but, intimated onely, not expreſſed) that as proud men behave themſelvs proudly towards God,ſo God (according to that, with the froward, thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward : Pſal.18 26.) towards them. But the Greek is more emphatical, implying withall that the proud,(agreeable to ſome other places of Scripture) do as it were levy war againſt God himſelf ; a great aggravation of their ſin.

unto the lowly] Hebr. עניים (not, ענוים) that is, unto the poor; not unto the lowly. But becauſe it is moſt proper unto the poor and needy, to be humble and lowly: (I ſay, moſt proper it becomes them beſt : though it often fals out otherwiſe : there be proud beggers in the world : and generally, none more proud,than they that have been beggers, if once they came to be ſome-body: we ſee at this day :)therefore we find the words more promiſcuouſly uſed in Scripture, (in ſundry places,) of poor and lowly. But the Rabbins note, that though the word be written with a י here; yet it muſt be read with a ו (or, Vau.) ſo that they make it rather a miſtake of a letter, in the writing; than a communitie of ſignification. The reader may chuſe which he wil.See more upon Ch. 11.2. with the lowly is wiſdom.

V.35.but ſhame]See upon Pſ.119.6.Then ſhal I not be aſhamed, &c.

ſhall be the promotion of fools]Heb. exalteth the fools.And this I take to be the beſt tranſlation, exalteth, that is,proclaimeth,divulgeth, and makes them known, as things that are lifted up, are more in ſight. There is no great difference of ſenſe I confeſſe : but ſo ſhall we make this to agree with Chap. 14.29. where the ſame expreſſion is in the Hebrew , but he that is haſty of ſpirit,exalteth folly : that is, doth commit many things, by which his folly comes, to be known and talked of,both far and neer.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. THe inſtruction of a father] Of me, who take on me the perſon of a father,and love all you young men,as if ye were mine own children.See upon Chap.18..My ſon,&c.

V. 2. good doctrine] The Hebrew word comes from receiving, to ſhew, that we are ignorant of our ſelves; and are bound to receive good inſtruction, when it is offered by others.

forſake you not my law]My precepts,which are not onely doctrinal inſtructions,but alſo rules of life appointed by God,as a divine law.

V 3,For I was my fathers ſon] My father taught me,& I hearkened to him: ſo I teach you,and expect that you ſhould hearken unto me.

tender and onely beloved in the ſight of my mother] 1 Chron. 29.1.

onely beloved in the ſight of my mother] Beloved, is well added, to ſhew her ſingular affection to Solomon, as if ſhe had had no more children; yet had ſhe three more, 1 Chron. 3.5.

In the ſight] Hebr. לפני. But over againſt it in the Margine, there is a different reading; לבני, to the ſons, or, children: or, as ſome would tranſlate among the children. But Mercerus ſhews well here, that they do wrong to the Bible, that imbrace that reading; ſince the Maſorithes themſelves that obſerve it, paſs their cenſures upon it, that it is falſe, or ſpurious.

V.4. He taught me alſo, and ſaid unto me, Let thine heart retain my words : keep my commandments and live] 1 Chron. 28.9. In this Chapter be many repetitions,of which (generally,) and the cauſe of them in this book, ſee in the Preface to the book.

He taught me alſo and ſaid unto me] How far Solomon doth here repreſent his Father David ſpeaking; or, (to the plainer,) how far the words of David,which are here ſet down by Solomon, (for that ſome are, there is no queſtion made,) do extend, is a queſtion not eaſie to be determined by any argument from the Text it ſelf. Some think that Davids words go no further than this very verſe,and that in the next, Get wiſdom, get underſtanding,&c,it is Solomon himſelf that ſpeaks. Others, that David ſpeaks, till verſe 7. Wiſdome is the principall thing, &c. Others again , till 10. Hear, O my ſon, &c. I cannot give any reaſon why any of theſe opinions may not be true, or equally probable : but if any go further,the further they go, the more improbable to me their opinion will be. For if ſome of theſe Chapters, one or more, had been penned by David, it is likely they would have had Davids name prefixed in another manner. But that Solomen did learn many of theſe Sentences throughout the Book,from his father David as I make no queſtion, ſo is it as little to the purpoſe here.

V. 6. love her,and ſhe ſhall keep thee] Seneca wil give great light: Hæc ſi perſuaſeris tibi,et virtutem adamaveris (amare enim parum eſt) quicquid illa contigerit,id tibi,qualecunque aliis videbitur,fauſtum felixque erit: & torqueri,ſi modo jacueris torquente ſecurior,& ægrotare,ſi non maledixeris fortunæ,ſi non ceſſeris morbo; Omnia denique ---- in bonum abibunt; &c. And could they ſo ſpeak, that had no certaintie of the immortality of the ſoul; no aſſurance of any better condition after this life; and Chriſtians complain if they ſuffer in this world; or think that God is not in heaven, or regardeth not, if innocent men are afflicted.

V. 5. Get wiſdom] In the fifth and ſixth verſes,he requirs that we ſhould purchaſe wiſdom,lay it up in the memory,as in a ſtore-houſe, not go aſide from it on either hand,but obey it conſtantly, out of love. See alſo Chap.3.14.

V. 7 Wiſdom is the principall thing] Heb. רשית חכמה,where no regimen is;(I mean no alteration of points or letters, to betoken a regimen : the firſt word not being capable of any ſuch alteration :) and therefore they that would have it tranſlated, Principium ſapientiæ, or the beginning of wiſdom; and not principium, or præcipuum ſapientia, that is, wiſdom is the firſt, or principle thing : as if the one were more according to the Hebrew, than the other, are certainly miſtaken. The Hebrew will bear either : and Mercerus hath both; Initio ſapientiæ; and, principium ſapientia : but prefereth this latter, which we have here alſo in our Engliſh. And the coherence ſo, is both good and plain : that ſince wiſdom is the thing, wherein our ſummum bonum, or chief happineſſe doth conſiſt, that therefore among other ends and purpoſes, which evey man in the courſe of his life doth propoſe unto himſelf,we ſhould make this the chiefeſt, (which to attain,we ſhould think no pains, no coſt Matth. 13.43. and ſelleth all that he hath. &c. too great) to get wiſdom.

V.8. Exalt her,and ſhe ſhal promote thee]Have her in high account, and then ſhalt thou proſper. Wordlings do contrary, they make low account of wiſdom,and ſeek it at laſt,or not at all. The words will bear this ſenſe alſo: Tread her wayes diligently; and ſhe ſhal,&c. and it is followed by ſome.But the other ſenſe agrees better with the following words,according to that 1 Sam. 2. 30. Them that honour me,I will honour,&c.

Exalt her and ſhe ſhall promote thee] For them that honour me I will honour: and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed, 1 Sam.2.30.

V. 9. an ornament of grace] Chap.1.9. Some learned men think, that St. James his words, But he giveth more grace, Jam.4.6. are taken from this place. Indeed לוית may ſignifie augmentum, or additamentum:and ſo the vulgar Latin, Dabit capiti tuo augmentum gratiæ : but not ſo tranſlated here by the Septuagint; but by στέφανος : a crowne,or garland : both here,and Chap 1.9. vvhere it ſeemeth to agree better,than augmentum,and, if there; it is likely,that the ſame vvas intended here too : ſo that I ſee no great likelyhood, that it ſhould be ſo, as Heinſius vvould have it. Yet if it be granted,there vvill be no great inconvenience:and it cannot be denied, that there be examples of more remote alluſions.

a crown of glory ſhall ſhe deliver to thee] Or, ſhe ſhall compaſſe thee with a crowne of glory, Not, a corruptible crown, (though that too, ſometimes) 1 Cor.9 25.vvhich becauſe corruptible, and intermingled vvith many thorns,many vviſe men have thought not vvorthy the taking up : but a crown that fadeth not away, 1 Pet.5.4.ſee more of temporal revvards and promiſes upon Pſ. 37.1.Fret not thy ſelf,&c.

V.11.I have taught thee in the way of wiſedome] Solomon declareth vvhat care his father had to bring him up in the true fear of God:for this was Davids proteſtation,vvhich Solomon now repeats.

I have led thee in right pathes] Heb. made thee to goe, that is, aſſiſted thee by calling upon thee.

V. 12. thy ſteps ſhall not be ſtraitned] Thou ſhalt walk at liberty without offence.

V. 13. Take faſt hold of inſtruction] See before upon Chap.3.15. to them that lay hold upon her. Now, to take faſt hold, we cannot; no bodie can; except we proceed from grace grace: from vertue to vertue. There is no ſtanding ſtill: either to advance, or go back we muſt. Ancient Philoſophers could tell us that; whoſe writings are ful of exhortations, to the purpoſe. ublabemur, niſi ire & niti perſeveraberimus, Si quicquam ex ſtudio et fideli intentione (that is, couragious earneſtneſſe:) laxaverimus, retrò eundum eſt. Nemo profectum ibi invenit, ubi reliquerat ſaith Seneca.

and when thou runneſt thou ſhalt not ſtumble] Pſal 91.11.12. See there the Annotations on verſe 5. &c.

V. 14. Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. 15. Avoid it, paſſe not by it: turne from it, and paſſe away.] Of the danger of evill companie, and the ſeaſonableneſſe of ſuch warnings, ſee before upon Chap.1. 10. My ſon, if ſinners entice thee: and the referrences there. Now, here by ſo many words in the 15. verſe, for one thing: being all of one ſignification; as may ſeem to make a notorious tautologie, or battologie: though indeed it is otherwiſe. For the accumulating of ſo many words of one ſignification, upon ſuch an occaſion, is very emphatical. Solomon by this reiterated language, (which is naturall in ſuch caſes) would have us to underſtand the eminencie, and imminencie both of the danger that young men are in, through ill companie. As if paſſiing by in the ſtreets, we ſhould deſcrie fire breaking out of a houſe, which had not been taken notice of: or, upon the high wayes, we ſhould obſerve ſome ignorant traveller, in a ful carrier, to ſome terrible precipice: no body would wonder to hear us often repeat the ſame words; as fire, fier: a precipice, a precipice: take heed, look to your ſelf: and the like. So is this unuſual repition of words here of purpoſe, to make us the more ſenſible of that, which though it be ſo true, as nothing can be more; yet is ſo little beleeved, that more young men laugh at it, when they are told of it; than are perſwaded, that there is any danger in it. And when, in what age, or what place of the world; did men, whether heathens, or chriſtians (ſo called) generally, men and women, indulge to themſelves more libertie in this kind; than they do, now, in theſe times, which we are taught to call (ſo little we make of mocking God:) bleſſed and happy times? and times of reformation? ſuch earneſtneſſe of language we may obſerve in Theognis, (that ancient Gnomologue, who comes neereſt to Solomon, of any that I know now extant) where he adviſes his friend to avoid bad company, (which I think he repeats in little leſſe than a dozen places:) and to applie himſelf to good. There he hath ſeveral words together: ſtick to them, drink with them, eat with them, ſit with them, and pleaſe them: for their power is great, ſaith he, what? To frame thee (by their example) to goodneſſe; as follows there.

and go not in the way of evil men] Come not into it at all, or if by force of temptation thou be brought into it, go not forward in it, but get out of it quickly.

V. 15. by it] Heb. through it.

V. 16. For they ſleep not except they have done miſchief] Meaning, that to do evil, is more proper and natural to the wicked, than to ſleep, eat, or drink, Pſal. 36.4.

unleſſe they cauſe them to fall] Either to fall, (in their eſtates, or perſons) by their violence or violent hands: or to fall (in their ſouls, and reſolutions,) by their temptations, which is as acceptable a prey unto them, (ſuch is their wickedneſſe, Rom. 1. 32. Who knowing the judgement of God, &c.) as the getting of much ſubſtance. And thus are they alſo very lively repreſented by an ancient Comic upon the very ſame occaſion of diſſwaſion, from them, and their company. Solomons words may receive ſome light by the collation: which I think is the beſt uſe we can make of ſuch authors: and I profeſſe that in many places of Scripture, both of the Old, and New Teſtament, where beſt Commentators left me very doubtfull, I have received much ſatisfaction from ſuch collations: as Beza doth profeſſe ſomewhere, that he was beholding to Anacreon, (a very wanton Poet otherwiſe:) for the right ſenſe of a place of Scripture, Plautus is the man that I mean: who in one of his Comedies, makes a father ſpeak to his ſon in this manner: ---Nolo ego cum improbis te viris, Gnate mi, neque in via neque in foro ullum ſermonem exequi, (Here we have the ſubſtance of the 14 and 15. verſes) Novi ego hoc ſeculum moribus quibus ſit; malus bonum malum eſſe vult, ut ſit ſui ſimilis. (Juſt to Solomon here, if we interpret this, to fall, of thoſe whom they entice: which is as natural an interpretation as any other, not omitted by Mercer:) then he proceeds to a deſcription of their violence: ---turbent, miſcent mores, mali, rapax, Avarus, invidus (avidus furti) ſacrum, profanum, publicum, privatum habent. Hiulca gens. ------quod manu non queunt Tangere, tantum fas habent quo manus abſtiniant. Cætera, rape, trahe, fuge, late &c. How excellently well is their unquiet life, broken ſleep, and continuall endeavour to doe miſchief, which expoſes them to perpetual flights, and dangers in thoſe words, Cætera, rape, trahe, &c.) their haſte, their greedineſſe, their fear, their flight, in few words, ſet out, and acted.

V. 17. For they eat the bred of wickedneſſe] Chap. 9.17. & 20.17. Some refer this for, to their unquiet ſleep, ſpoken of in the verſe before: as a reaſon in part of it. As if he ſaid: No wonder if they cannot ſleep quietly, who live by meer rapine, and know themſelves in danger in all places, of being taken, and ſeized, as enemies to the peace and quietneſſe of other men.

the wine of violence] Heb. violences, That is; gotten by wicked means, and moſt cruel oppreſſion, Amos 2. 8.

V. 18. unto the perfect day] Pſalm. 37.6. Signifiing, that the godly encreaſe daily in honour, till they come to perfection. Or rather, that their minds being enlightned by the Spirit of wiſdom in this life, they ſhall proceed from grace to grace, from vertue to vertue in this world, until they be come to the end of their race, and be admitted to the preſence of God; by participation of whoſe glory they ſhall ſhine themſelves, as the Sun doth in the firmament to our eyes. And many of them that ſlept in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake &c: And they that be wiſe, ſhall ſhine as the brightneſſe of the firmament, and they that turne many to righteouſneſſe as the ſtarres for ever and ever Dan 12.2.3.

The way of the wicked is as darkeneſſe] Eſay 59 9. Jer. 23. 12. ſome read it in the Hebrew, באפילה in darkneſſe ſo; not, כאפילה (with a caph:) as darkneſſe, as we have it. It may ſeem plauſible; but there is no need. For beſides that, there is כ veritatis, (as Hebrew Grammarians ſpeak) as wel as Similitudinis, and ſo either way; (with a beth, or caph; it comes all to one: it is more agreeable to the firſt member of the verſe, as the ſhining l.) with a caph, than with a beth. Now, although it is very true, literally (and that, therefore the literall and immediat ſenſe) that wicked men live in darkneſſe, in referrence to their lives and converſations, and to their actions and purpoſes: (and I wiſh it might be ſaid of the wicked only and that of the Latin Poet, were not generally true: O miſeras hominum mentes O pectora cæca! Qualibus in tenebris vitæ quantiſque periclis Degitur hoc vni quodcunque eſt!) yet miſtically the words may as truly be referred to eternal death, ſo frequently ſet out in Scripture by darkneſſe, as every man knoweth: as, eternal life, by light. See alſo upon Chap.3.18. She is a tree of life.

they know not at what they ſtumble] Like men in the dark they can foreſee no dangers, much leſſe prevent them, Eſay 59. 10. Joh. 11. 10 Joh. 2 11.

V, 21. Let them not depart from their eyes] Chap 3.3.21. Or, Let them not make them to depart: That is, let not the wicked (mentioned, verſe 19.) make thee neglect obedience to God.

in the midſt of thine heart] See Chap. 2. verſe 1. hide my commandements. So Seneca, aperto pectore haurire, upon the like occaſion.

V 22. and health to all their fleſh] That is, they ſhal have health of body: under the which, all other bleſſings of this life, promiſed in the law, are contained. See Chap. 3.8.

health] Heb. medicine.

V. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence] As men keep the heart moſt of all from wounding, becauſe the wound of it is mortal; ſo muſt they, in ſpiritual affairs, look principally to their thoughts, and afterwards to their tongues, eyes and feet. See alſo Jer. 17. 9. The heart is deceitful above all things, &c.

with all diligence] Heb. above all keeping.

out of it are the iſſues of life] Thence comes life naturall, ſpiritual and eternal. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſſe, blaſphemies, Matth. 15.19. and, A good man out of the good treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth good things; and an evil man, &c. Matth. 12.35. and therefore the Apoſtle would not have us to judge any man, (which muſt be underſtood of private judgement, and cenſures; and when the fact is not notoriouſly bad and ſcandalous,) but to leave all judgement to God, who only doth ſee the hearts of men, 1 Cor. 4. 5. Therefore judge nothing before the time, &c,

V. 24. a froward mouth, and perverſe lips] Heb. frowardneſſe of mouth, and perverſneſſe of lips Pſal. 34.12.13.14.

V. 25. Let thine eyes look right on] Look to thy way, like a traveller, and look not aſide: weigh thy actions beforehand by Gods Word: keep the mean, and avoid both extremes.

V. 26. Let all thy wayes be eſtabliſhed] Or, all thy wayes ſhal be ordered aright.

V. 27. Turn not to the right hand nor to the left] Deut. 5.32. Joſh. 1.7.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 2. D*iſcretion*] Heb. diſcretions: that is, all manner of diſcretion.

that thy lips may keep knowledg] That thou mayeſt not only be wiſe thy ſelf, but alſo able to teach others wiſdom, Mal. 2. 7,

V. 3 For the lips] I warn thee to harken to my words, leſt thou be deceived by the words of the adultreſſe.

a ſtrange woman,] See Notes on Chap. 2. 16.

For the lips of ſtrange women, &c.] Chap. 2. 16 & 6.24.

mouth] Heb. palate.

ſmother than oyl] By oyl and honey, he meaneth flattering and crafty enticements, Pſal. 55. 21.

V. 4. her end is bitter as wormwood] That which will come upon thee, if thou meddle with the adultreſſe. So Plautus (as by ſome hath been obſerved upon the place(in melle ſunt linguæ ſita veſtræ orationes Lacteque; corda, felle ſunt ſita, atque acerbo aceto: E linguis dicta dulcia datis, corde, amarè facitis amantes, &c.

and is bitter[2 Sam. 2. 26.

ſharp as a two edged ſword] A two edged ſword, applied proverbially to any thing that is very penetrative, whether to hurt, or to do good. Hence, as here in a bad ſenſe; ſo elſewhere, the word of God is likened μαχαίρα διστόμω (which is the word here too, in the Greek:) to a two-edged ſword. Heb. 4. 12. and Chriſt himſelf myſtically ſet out with a ſharp two edged ſword, coming out of his mouth: Proverbs 1. 16. any 2 12. to expreſſe his irreſiſtible power: to which purpoſe alſo a ſword is attributed unto God Deut.32. and Pſal.7.12.

V. 5. Her feet go down to death] Chap. 7. 27. All her doings lead to deſtruction.

her ſteps take hold on hell] By hell here, vve may ſafely enough underſtand hell as in common uſe, for a place of torments. Though fools make a ſcoff at ſin, Chap. 14.9. and have deviſed (men and women that are are given to this ſin:) many plauſible terms, (among themſelves:) whereby to colour and extenuat their baſeneſſe and villanie; yet they will find one day, that God is not ſo eaſily mocked, (Gal.6 7.) as they are eaſily deluded by the devil. However, what שאול was more commonly among the Hebrews; and ἄδης among the Greeks, hath already been ſaid upon Chap. 1. 12. as the grave So that as we have here firſt death; and then שאול all in one verſe, according to the phraſe and language of thoſe dayes, both among the Jews and heathens; without any tautologie though intended of the ſame thing: ſo ſhould I ſay (did not I fear to ingage my ſelf into an endleſſe controverſie; or at leaſt, not to be ended without many words:) that in the Apoſtles Creed (ſo it hath been callifed of old:) he deſcended into hell; was no otherwiſe intended. And indeed there might be another reaſon for it beſides the common; becauſe Chriſt, by ſome hereticks, was affirmed not to have died really. But this by the way onely: I leave every man free.

V. 6. Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ponder the path of life, her wayes are moveable, &c.] The words as Mercerus well obſerveth, are ſomewhat obſcure and admit of different interpretations. Some tranſlate, Semitam vitæ forſitan ſi ponderes, &c. to this effect, If thou beeſt about to conſider of the right way; the way that leads to preſent happines in this world, and to eternal life, hereafter? take heed of ſuch; avoid them with all poſſible care, ſince nothing can be more contrary to ſuch a purpoſe, or deliberation, than the wayes and company of ſuch lewd inſinuating women. Whether thou be already in the way, or upon a deliberation concerning the right way, take heed of ſuch: their company, if thou be right, will pervert thee: if yet to reſolve, and in the act of further deliberation (as moſt that are young yet) and inquiſition, they will blind thy judgement: thou ſhalt not be able to judge aright, of what is beſt and expedient: what leads to true happineſſe; what to certain miſery and deſtruction. It is the ſaying of Ariſtole in his Politicks, that οἱ ἐν πάθει ὄντες, they that are prepoſſeſſed with any paſſion, (wheher it be paſſion of love, or fear, or any other) cannot deſcern the truth. Ariſtotle teacheth in his Ethicks at large, that as men are habituated in their lives and converſations, ſo are their judgements inclined and ſwaied, concerning that which is morally good or bad: and that τοῖς πολλοῖς ἡ ἀπάτη διὰ τὴν ἡδονὴν ἔοικε γίνεσθαι: moſt men are corrupted in their judgement through pleaſure and ſenſuality; which they might have prevented, had they not run out into lewd courſes. Others would have this to be the ſenſe; That if a man be once habituated, and inured to lewd courſes, though afterwards, when he begins to find the inconvenience of it, he would fain get out, yet it is not in his power; veſtigia nulla retorſum: as one of the Latin Poets hath it; None that go unto her, returne again: neither take they hold on the paths of life: Chap. 2. 19. The conſideration whereof ſhould be of great force. to make men weary, if not altogether ſtupid, or of themſelves, very deſperate. Others again, becauſe the Hebrew verbs (תוע and תפלס) (according to the proprietie of that tongue) may be tranſlated either by the ſecond maſculin ſingular, or by the third feminin ſingular alſo; they refer this to the adultereſſe, and tranſlate: Per ſemitam vitæ non ambulat: vagantur ejus orbitæ, ne ſciat. Certainly, though it be the profeſſion of ſuch creatures, to intice and cheat others; yet themſelves were firſt cheated by the devil, before they could reſolve to proſtitute themſelves to ſo much infamie, (beſides the danger of eternal death, which few of that deſperate crew, think of) before God and men. Other Expoſitions there be, but reducible to theſe, as to the main: Yet I doe not find in any, that which I ſhould of my ſelf pitch upon, as moſt literal and probable. It is obſerved by ſome others too, but by Comicks eſpecially, who of all others ſhould be beſt acquainted with their cuſtoms and diſpoſitions: that as there is nothing more effectual to diſ-ingage the mind of thoſe that cleave unto ſuch as are here ſpoken of, than to ſee them (their manners and their conditions) in their own natural ſhape and colour, without any diſguiſe: and to know their own unaffected carriage and behaviour at home, when they are alone among themſelves: ſo there is nothing, that ſuch more avoid, than to be ſo ſeen and known. It made one of the Comedy, out of his good wil to his good friend and maſter, to applaud himſelf extremly, that he had found out a way, (——quomodo adoleſcentulus Meretricum ingenia & mores poſſit noſcere, Maturè ut cum norit perpetuo oderit) how he might make them known to him, by times, making no queſtion at all, but if once known, he would ever after abhor them: and after a pretty large deſcription of their domeſtick naſtineſſe and gluttony, ſo contrary to what they appear abroad; he concludes, (Noſſe hæc omnia, ſalus eſt adoleſcentulis:) That to know theſe things in time is happineſſe, and as it were deliverance from death to young men. I conceive therefore; that Solomons purpoſe in this verſe was no other, than to ſet out the cunning of ſuch creatures, who knowing well enough, that nothing can be more prejudicall to them then to be known, do what can be done by art to prevent it. It is a very hard, if not impoſſible thing, to diſcerne wel thoſe things, though we have them before our eyes, which are in perpetual motion: variety of ſhapes and objects, hinders the intention of the mind, and keeps the eyes of the body from faſtning upon any thing. Therefore ſaith Solomon, to expreſſe how ſhe avoids to be known, that her waies are moveable: which may alſo import frequent change of places (which the Hebrew נוע will bear very well, which alſo ſignifies to wander up and down) and habitations, a thing often practiſed by them that would not be known. And this ſhe doth, ſaith Solomon, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ponder the path of life: that is, leſt by loathing of her perſon through ſome caſuall diſtaſte firſt, thou ſhouldeſt come by degrees to a right apprehenſion of thy caſe, and ſo ſave thy ſelf before it be too late.

Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ponder] There is much weight in that word. It is not bare pondering that can do good alone, except after follow conſent, or aſſent and reſolution. But by pondering, he comprehends theſe alſo, as ſuppoſing that no man can be ſo mad or ſenſleſſe, (the deſire of happineſſe being naturall unto all men) as that after he hath ſeriouſly, again and again conſidered (which is underſtood by pondering: a thing not to be done, but with care and diligence) of his caſe and of the end and conſequent of theſe courſes he is in, that he ſhould continue in them to his apparent deſtruction, both of body and ſoul; both temporal and eternal. The word λογίζομαι is uſed in the New Teſtament, to the ſame purpoſe, which properly ſignifies, putare, to caſt accounts: a very proper and ſignificant word too, as any can be. It is the word uſed by St. Paul, Rom.8. 18. ſpeaking of the ſufferings of the godly in this world, compared with eternal rewards: λογίζομαι γάρ; For I reckon, &c. Certainly, want of this ſober, ſerious conſideration and ratiocination, (the proper work of a rational creature) is the greateſt cauſe of moſt mens predition.

V. 7. O ye children] O Solomon, and the reſt of my ſons: for they are Davids words. See Notes on Chap 4. 4. 11.

V. 8. come not nigh the door of her houſe] As from an houſe infected with the plague: come not nigh the door.

V. 9. Leſt thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years to the cruel] By honour, he may underſtand his wealth and good name: by others, the ſtrumpets themſelves; ſo ſtiled in ſcorn, in oppoſition to a lawfull wife, which by Gods conſtitution and ordinance, is one fleſh with her huſband, Matth 19.4.5. Or, her children and kindred. By the cruel ſome would have the huſband of this adultereſſe intended, of whom Chap.6.35.36. it is ſaid, that jealouſie is the rage of a man. that he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance, &c. that is, in effect (compared with verſe 32. before, that he that committeth adultery with a woman, deſtroyeth his own ſoul; &c, (that he will ſlay the adulterer without mercy: him therefore by the cruel here to be underſtood, which is not improbable. Yet there will be more emphaſis in the word, if it be underſtood of the adultereſſe her ſelf, it being the propriety of ſuch creatures, as they are deſcribed ordinarily by the Comicks, as to put off all ſenſe of honeſty, ſo of humanity. No high-way cut-throats can be more cruel than ſuch, when they find their time. Terence is noted to have done that which no man ever before him did: that is, to have repreſented ſome of that profeſſion, doing ſome acts of ingenuity. But it was the Poets ingenuity, it is thought, to ſet them out ſo, rather, than that any did really deſerve it. But beſides, there is a manifeſt alluſion in the vvords, betvven אחרים, (alieni) others, and אכזרי, (crudelis) the cruel. Such alluſions are very frequent in Scripture. There is alſo ſomevvhat obſerveable betvven the vvords of this, and the next verſe, vvhich I leave to them that read the Book in the Originall language.

thine honour] There be many interpretations of this vvord, upon this place: but, wealth, credit, and reputation; as hath been ſaid, moſt proper to the common uſe of the vvord, and beſt agreeing here. Yet if unto theſe any think fit to adde, vigor, ſtrength of body, which addeth no ſmall honour to the body, and fits a man for honourable actions, I am not againſt it. And here ſomevvhat might be ſaid in vindication of that forme of vvords, (in that excellent Formularie) in the rites of marriage: with my body I thee worſhip. There vvas great reaſon for it in thoſe dayes, vvhen (as once by the lavv of God, and by the lavv of nations, or civil lavv): concubins vvere lavvful, and had jus thori: but could challenge no honour, or vvorſhip, vvhich vvas due to the wiſe only. This very word, worſhip, is in the ancient Jevviſh forme, vvhich is exhibited by Buxtorfius, and the vvord there, פלח is alſo uſed of Gods vvorſhip, as our Engliſh vvord is. But this by the vvay onely, becauſe many men are ſo apt to cavill at that, vvhich they doe not underſtand.

V. 10. thy wealth] Heb. thy ſtrength and thy labours be in the houſe of a ſtranger] Leſt ſhe, her huſband and her children ſpend thoſe goods vvhich thou haſt gotten vvith hard labour.

V. 11. And thou mourn at the laſt] Roar, like a Lion: as if he vvere going to hell; he hath more horrour novv, than joy before.

when thy fleſh and thy body are conſumed] By ſome foul diſeaſe, vvhich follovvs looſe perſons in that kinde, Job. 20. 11. Some vvould make a difference here betvv[e]n fleſh and body. But it hath no ground: though indeed, fleſh properly taken, is not the ſame as the body which comprehends many things beſides fleſh: (or muſcles; to ſpeak anatomically; and according to Hippocrates:) as bones, ſinews, marrow, &c. and as true it is, that there is no part of the body, which was not to be corrupted and conſumed by diſeaſes proceeding from intemperancy, in this kind. And again, we may with the LXX. and ſome other tranſlations, by a figure called ἓν διὰ δυοῖν: (whereof there be many examples in Scripture:) take thy fleſh and thy body, for, the fleſh of thy body. But I think it more pathetical, and emphatical, if we take fleſh and body, (as uſually; in the Scripture) for the ſame: it being a precept of rhetorick, to inſiſt with variety of words, upon a thing, which is effectual to our end, and is of it ſelf plauſible. And what more effectual, to reclaim a man (that is not quite given over to a reprobate mind,) from theſe vicious courſes; than the conſideration of thoſe both painfull, and loathſome diſeaſes, that uſe to accompany them! And what more plauſible, than to perſwade men to love their own fleſh (which the Apoſtle ſaith, no man ever hated) and to make much of their bodies? which, in a wrong ſenſe, and to the prejudice of their ſoules, (that better part) moſt men are too prone unto, of their own accord.

V. 12. How have I] How brutiſh was I to do ſo, Pſal. 73. 22. Now he ſeeth his errour, though late firſt.

hated inſtruction] He ſheweth the true cauſe of continuing in adultery, to be hatred of inſtruction, although no adulterer in his health will confeſſe ſo much.

V. 14 I was almoſt in all evill] Whether of the evill of guilt, or, of puniſhment; or whether of both, (as moſt probable to me:) Expoſitors agree not. I take the words to be ſpoken of one, that never went to the utmoſt, in theſe infamous practiſes; nor long continued in that abominable ſin: who therefore now, as he doth acknowledge his folly, that he went ſo farre; yet with all the mercy of God, that he went no further; and was taken off, before his caſe was altogether deſperate; and his diſeaſe incurable. But ſee upon the next words, in the midſt of the congregation] I was made a publick ſpectacle of miſery for all men to gaze at, and almoſt utterly ruined. Or, (as an aggravation of his wickedneſſe) ſo deſperate and ſo inſenſible of infamy was I, that I did not care who knew it; who ſaw it: I gloried (as now is the faſhion; and many think themſelves the better gentlemen for it) in my lewdneſſe: ſo others. The firſt, is moſt agreeable to the ſenſe we have inſiſted upon, upon the former part. But either of theſe, is probable enough. And becauſe קהל ועדה here tranſlated, the congregation and aſſembly: and by others, as by the vulgar Latin, Eccleſia & Synagoga: are alſo ſometimes uſed, or applyed to any ordinary company of men; yea of bad men alſo, as Pſal. 26. 5. the congregation of evill doers. (Hebr. קהל מרעים) and Pſal. 126. 18. a fire was kindled in their company: (of Dathan and Abiram: Hebr. בעדתם and ſo in the verſe before, עדת אבירם the company of Abiram:) there be who interpret theſe words of the company of evill men, as if he intended to aſribe all the evill he did (as it often, nay commonly falls out; whereof ſee more in the Preface, and upon verſe 10. of the firſt Chapter:) to bad fellowſhip and company.

V. 15. Drink waters out of thine own ciſtern, and running waters, &c.] Of the meaning of particular words, in this, and the two next verſes, there is no doubt made: but of the ſenſe and meaning of the whole paſſage, there is. Some by ciſterns, &c. underſtand lands, and poſſeſſions, or worldly goods in generall; as if the aim of the words were to perſwade them that have means, to live of, and upon their own; and not onely contentedly to enjoy what God hath beſtowed upon them, but to endeavour that others alſo (the poor eſpecially) may be the better for what they have: ſo to uſe their means, and not to waſte them prodigally, and riotouſly with, and upon lewd company, whether of men, or women. So St. Baſil, or to this purpoſe, of old; and Junius, among the later, do interpret this paſſage. But becauſe women are ſpoken of immediately before, and preſently after two, ſo that the wole Chapter may probably be thought to be of one argument: to wit, to contain a ſerious dehortation from the company of lewd women, and to that end, firſt to ſet down the danger and miſery of ſuch a life; and then, the remedy, or antidote; to wit, lawfull mariage: there being nothing heterogeneous, or improper (this one controverted paſſage excepted) to that argument in the whole Chapter: this hath moved the greater number of Expoſitors, rather to interpret this paſſage alſo to the ſame purpoſe making the ſaid preſcribed remedy, an antidote againſt fornication and adultery, (to wit, lawfull marriage:) here to begin. Which is very plauſile in oppoſition to that former interpretation: though in that alſo there is ſomewhat to the general ſcope and purpoſe of the whole Chapter, to wit, againſt riotouſneſſe and lewd company; but nothing ſo direct and pertinent, as this ſecond interpretation ſeems to be. Neither can any doubt be made of the propriety, or probability of thoſe metaphors, waters, and ciſtern, and well, &c. ſo interpreted, which we have elſewhere alſo, to this, or the like purpoſe; where no queſtion can be made of the ſenſe: as Chap. 9. 17. Stollen waters are ſweet &c. and 23. 27. For a whore is a deep ditch, &c. and Eccleſiaſticus, (of which, what reference it may have to theſe Proverbs, ſee before in the Preface) 26. 12. Shee will open her mouth ——and drink of every water neer her, &c, Not to queſtion therefore, the propriety or pertinency of the allegory, to this place; that which I ſtick at, is, how to make theſe three verſes in the proſecution of the ſaid allegory, or allegorical expoſition, to hang together, which I confeſſe is more than I can well do my ſelf, or can ſay, that I have yet met in any other, what I thought ſatisfactory. Drink waters out of thine own ciſtern, &c. that is, ſay they, Get a wife of thine own, and delight in her, to extinguiſh the fire of luſt in a cleer well, and not in dirty puddles, which ſtrumpets are. Let thy fountains be diſperſed abroad, and rivers of waters in the ſtreets; that is, ſay they, from thee and thy wife, as pure fountains, let a numerous iſſue of well nurtured children ſpring or flow; which may runne, or ſpread in the ſtreets abroad, as ſo many clear riverets, to water and comfort by marriages and otherwiſe, the whole neighbourhood; and to be an ornament to thy ſelf. Children, indeed, as they are the chief fruit of marriage; ſo in oppoſition to adulterous beds too, is the mention of them very proper; becauſe neither ſo natural (and there is a natural cauſe for it:) to ſuch; to ſuch I mean, as make a trade of their proſtitution; nor any part (ordinarily) of their intention, in their unlawful copulations. The ſenſe therefore that they make of the words is good; but the expreſſion ſeems to me rather enigmaticall, than allegorical: and though there is apparent reaſon why Solomon ſhould expreſſe thoſe things rather allegorically, than otherwiſe; yet why ſo obſcurely, and enigmaticall, I cannot imagine. Neither is it the obſcurity onely, that I ſtick at, but the ambiguity. For what he ſaith in the ſecond verſe, in a more obvious conſtruction, may ſeem to croſſe the firſt; but eſpecially the third, Let them be onely thine own, and not ſtrangers with thee, to croſſe the ſecond: Let them be onely thine own, &c. that is, ſay they, let thoſe rivers of waters iſſuing from thoſe fountains; (that is, from thy lawfull wives: it being then lawful, or allowed to one man to have more wives than one) that iſſue, thoſe children, be thine only, and undoubtedly; as they may be, if thou meddle with no woman, but ſuch as is thine own: whereas, if unlawfully begotten, thou mayeſt have the name, but the true father will be uncertain, and others may challenge an intereſt in them, to thy ſhame and reproach: and ſome of them proving ſuppoſitions, ſtrangers ſhall carry away part of thy wealth and ſubſtance. This is good matter, if it can be made of theſe words: which, in ordinary conſtruction, ſeem rather to contradict what was before delivered. And hence it is, that ſome of old apprehending a manifeſt contradiction in the words, to reconcile them, did ſupply a negative in the ſecond verſe, Let not thy fountains be diſperſed abroad, &c. So the Roman edition of the Septuagint; and ſo Aquila his tranſlation, which is alſo followed by ancient Origen, and by Clemens Alexandrinus; as is obſerved by Cornelius à Lapide, upon this place. Others, but to the ſame effect, have found a way (becauſe they find it not in the Heb.) to ſupply this negative, reading the word by way of interrogation: ſhould thy fountains be diſperſed abroad, and rivers of waters in the ſtreets? There is no violence offered to the Text by this; and the coherence is much better by it. But it doth not give content: for I find it not followed by many. Theſe conſiderations as they make me to have the better opinion of the firſt interpretation; ſo they give me the liberty to caſt about and ſearch, whether any thing elſe may be found as probable for the ſenſe, as what hath been ſaid, and not lyable to the ſame exceptions; that is, not involved with ſuch obſcurity, or ambiguity of expreſſion. I cannot ſay that I have found what I would: but what I have thought of, I ſhall here impart to the reader. Why might not all this paſſage be taken literally, as well as allegorically? That this expreſſion, for a man to drink of his own well, or ciſtern: (for both come to one, and the difference in the words is but little in the original:) is an expreſſion of temporal peace and happineſs, may appear by 2 King. 18 31. eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his figtree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own ciſtern; repeated Iſa 36. 16. And what a conſiderable thing a well or a fountain, was in ancient times, as by many other evidences, ſo particularly may appear by the word frater, brother: which originally came from the Hebrew באר: but more immediately) as all learned Linguiſts acknowledge) from the Greek φρέαρ, (φρέατηρ, φράτηρ) which ſignifies a well; as if community of the ſame well, or fountain (pagani came thence alſo, and divers other words:) had been the greateſt bond of union among men. At ſuch times therefore ſuch advice could not be thought impertinent: That every man that was a houſe-keeper, and maſter of a conſiderable family ſhould be carefull to provide himſelf of a conveniency of water, both for his own uſe, and to pleaſure his poor neighbours: which no man, (to prevent ſtriſes and contentions, which often did ariſe about wells, and common waters) might challenge an intereſt in, but himſelf. That this doth very naturally ariſe from the words, I think there will be no queſtion; & many ſuch precepts, or admonitions there be in this Book, Mercerus doth often obſerve, that are meerly Oeconomical: which they that do not obſerve, and would be wiſer than Solomon, turn into impertinent allegories. All the objection will be, vvhich vvas againſt the firſt interpretation, vvhy Solomon ſhould interpoſe this here, vvhich is of a different argument from the reſt of the chap. This would be ſomevvhat, if there vvere not more to be objected againſt the common interpretation. We may therefore anſvver, that this is no more than vvhat is done throughout the vvhole book, there being ſcarce any chap ſome one or tvvo at the moſt excepted, where promiſcuouſnes of matter, through the vvhole chap. or ſome heterogeneous inſertions, where the Chapter runs moſt upon ſome one ſubject, may not be obſerved. Beſides, theſe Proverbs, as moſt are of opinion, being for the moſt part but collections, it is impoſſible that the common name of well or fountain, though literal, in the one; and allegorical in the other, might occaſion this conjunction of different precepts or inſtructions. And ſince the allegory or ſimilitude is grounded upon ſome reſemblance in the nature of the things, (which is particularly inſiſted upon and ſhewed by ſome Expoſitors: but more diſcreetly, and of purpoſe; as they profeſſe themſelves, paſſed over by others: Plura dici poſſent phyſica & medica de analogiâ ciſternæ & putei cum fœminâ: ſed parco caſtis auribus, &c. ſaith one:) it was not altogether improper, or inconſequent, from precepts concerning literal wells and waters; to paſſe, to allegorical; and to put both in one Chapter. Nay, though it be granted that what Solomon in this place, was chiefly, or only (if you will) to commend chaſtity; yet to make his words more gracefull and rhetoricall, he might uſe ſuch an entrance, or Proœmium as this, taken from the happineſſe (according to thoſe days) of being ſole maſter of one good fountain, from which plenty of water did iſſue, and ſpread it ſelf abroad into many branches: ſuch a fountain, unto which no other could claim any right, or title unto: and ſo paſſe very plauſibly and naturally, as it were, (there being ſo much affinity in nature) to the commendation of chaſtity. There be divers things of the ſame nature, in ch, 30. ſee there upon ver 15. The horſe leech. And upon chap. 6. ver. 16. Theſe ſix things, &c. But this I do but propoſe, in caſe it ſhould fall out with any other, as it hath done with me, concerning this paſſage, not to be ſatisfied with the common interpretation. If any can ſatisfie themſelves with it, I ſhall adviſe them to ſeek no further.

V. 16. Let thy fountains be diſperſed abroad] Although, according to that interpretation of the former verſe, which we have propoſed; theſe words may be interpreted to ſignifie plenty of waters, that iſſue out of one fountain; which plenty being a great bleſſing, (eſpecially in a hot country: to which purpoſe, beſides many other places of Scripture, I think Numb. 24. 7. and his ſeed ſhall be in many waters; will bear a good ſenſe:) muſt needs make the benefit and propriety of a good fountain the more conſiderable: yet even in this ſenſe, they ſeem to me not in the matter only, but in their very form and tenor, to have ſo much appearance of repugnancie to the former, and following verſe; that I can hardly perſwade my ſelf that Solomon would ſpeak ſo obſcurely. Neither ſhould I think it any great crime, or wrong done to the Scripture, if I ſhould joyn with them, that think (whereof upon the former words) that a לא or an אל is wanting. But to avoyd offence, I will rather ſay, that if the words be read with an interrogation, (as was ſhewed there) they would be more currant, ſo; & the ſenſe, not worſe. And there may be a good reaſon for it. For though in point of charity, to pleaſure poor neighbours; it be commendable; and, if not community, yet communication generally plauſible: yet in matter of wells and fountains (a thing ſo conſiderable in thoſe days) community and communication (beſides other inconveniences perchance:) might probably breed preſcription; and preſcription, quarrels and contentions; and in ſome caſes violence & oppreſſion. But I ſaid before, if any can ſatisfie himſelf with the common interpretation, I do not deſire to put him out of conceit with it.

V. 18. Let thy fountain be bleſſed] That is, love thy wife. The proper bleſſing of marriage is children; which they that transfer their love from the proper fountain, and ſettle it elſewhere, do not regard, or propoſe to themſelves. I take the aim of the words to be the ſame, as 1 Cor. 7. 3. Let the husband, &c.

rejoyce with the wife of thy youth] Which thou didſt marry in thy youth, and ſo mayeſt have lawful children by her to rejoyce in, ch 2. 17. Mal. 2. 14. See alſo upon ch. 2. 17. the guide of thy youth.

V 19. Let her be as the loving hinde] Heb. as the hinde of loves: that is, as the moſt beloved or amiable hinde. So, a man of reproofs: that is, oft reproved, chap 29. 1. Now becauſe it hath been the faſhion of ſome, at all times (and then was of more, perchance, in thoſe countries:) to bring up ſuch creatures by the hand, which being ſo brought up, they become very dear ſometimes (as in Nathans parable 2 Sam. 12. 3. we read of an Ewe-lamb, brought up by a poor man, which lay in his boſome. &c.) to them that have brought them up; It is the opinion of ſome, that Solomon doth here allude to ſuch. Others, that he alludes to their nature, being of themſelves both in their innocent carriage, and feature, very lovely unto others to look upon; and very loving among themſelves. I think he might have a reſpect unto both.

let her breſts ſatisfie thee] Heb. make thee drunk. Let them give thee abundance of content.

ſatisfie thee] Heb. water thee.

at all times] Not by fits, as men take content in ſtrumpets.

be thou raviſht alwayes with her love] Heb. erre thou alwayes in her love. As the hart wanders up and down when he miſſeth his beſt beloved hinde. It requires abundance of affection from the husband to the wife.

V. 20. And why wilt thou] Seeing there is ſo many inconveniences in adultery, and conveniences in marriage, Why ſhouldeſt thou be taken ſo with the adultereſſe.

a ſtrange woman] See Notes on chap. 2. 16.

V. 21. For, Or, Seeing that.

For the ways of man] If the former reaſons will not draw thee from adultery, yet let the conſideration of Gods judgements do it. It is the argument that prevailed with Job, and kept him in awe, as he profeſſeth of himſelf, Job 31. 1, 2, 3, 4. There is no queſtion, but it would with moſt men, that believe it really, that the wayes of men are before God, and that there will be a time of reckoning. But this faith is not in every man that is called a chriſtian.

before the eyes of the Lord] Though men ſee not thy adultery, yet God doth, and will puniſh thee for it, Heb. 13. 4.

For the wayes of man are before the eyes of the Lord. Job 31. 4. & 34. 21. Chap. 15. 3. Jer. 16. 17. & 32. 19. Heb. 4. 13.

V. 22. His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf] Having ſpoken of Gods judgements, and privity, in the former verſes, as the chief thing, that ſhould keep men in awe, if all men have faith to believe it; or prudence to conſider of it in time: he proceeds unto that which is more preſent and viſible: and that is, the puniſhment which (beſides the torments of an evill conſcience common unto all ſins; which by heathens themſelves, upon good obſervation and experience, are ſet out as a very hell.) attends every ſin, ariſing from the ſin it ſelf: as for example, drunkenneſſe; ſuch and ſuch diſeaſes; untimely deaths; &c. and moſt particularly, adultery. Beſides bodily diſeaſes innumerable, and a generall conſumption of the fleſh and body, as we had it before in the eleventh verſe: an adulterer doth expoſe himſelf to many dangers. See chap. 6. 30. Men do not deſpiſe, &c. And Horace, moſt appoſitly and fully: Audire eſt operæ pretium, procedere rectè Qui mæchis non vultis, ut omni parte laborent. ——Hic ſe præcipitem tecto dedit: ille flagellis Ad mortem cæſus: fugiens hic decidit acrem prædonis in turbam: dedit hic pro corpore nummos: &c.

with the cords of his ſins] Chap. 29. 6.

ſins] Heb. ſin.

V. 23 He ſhall die without inſtruction] Heb. becauſe there is no inſtruction. Or, becauſe of no correction: Or as Mercer: ſine correctione: without correction. If becauſe of no correction, the reaſon is given of his loſſe and deſtruction; becauſe he was never diſciplined by his parents, in his youth: nor viſited and chaſtiſed by God in his riper yeares: but was ſuffered to go on without any control. See Heb. 12. 5, 6, 7. Or if diſciplined, and chaſtiſed: yet his perverſeneſſe was ſuch, that he profited not by fatherly chaſtiſements: as it doth often fall out. Why ſhould you be ſtricken any more? you will revolt more and more. Eſ. 1. 5. and Jer. 2. 30. In vain have I ſmitten your children, they received not inſtruction; and elſewhere. The Greeks have a very proper word to this purpoſe. They call an intemperate riotous man, ἀκόλαστος: that is properly, an indiſciplined man: an unchaſtiſed; or, one that was never puniſhed: whether, never, actually, de facto, as we ſay: or, never, effectually, to his amendment.

he ſhall go aſtray] That is, he ſhall miſcarry: A very proper word. For all men naturally, ſeek one and the ſame thing: all, propoſe to themſelves the ſame end, generally: to wit, happineſſe, But in the right way to happineſſe: and what it is, that leads a man to reall, not conceited happineſſe: or, if you will, what true and reall happineſſe is, and wherein it conſiſteth; there is all the difference: and in the miſtake of this, is miſcarrying of no leſſe than life. Therefore all ſins, are ſometimes called in Scripture errors, or, ignorance: ἀγνοήματα: Heb 9. 7. & the Greek word for ſin, ἁμαρτία, or ἁμάρτημα, doth properly ſignifie, an erring from the ſcope: or, a ſhooting beſides the mark. The Septuagint expreſſe it by the præterit, ϗ ἀπώλετο δὶ ἀφροσύνην: and is periſhed through his folly; or, want of wit, and adviſedneſſe: which is not amiſſe. See more upon chap. 14. 6. The wiſdom of the prudent. Now if any ſhall think thereby to excuſe themſelves, becauſe what hapneth through errour, ſeems excuſable: let him ſee upon chap. 1. 20. Wiſdom cryeth without &c. out of Ariſtotle, &c. This going aſtray, if expreſſed by the the preterit, (as is ordinary, to put preterits for futures and vice verſâ:) might alſo be referred unto the cauſe of the miſcarrying (or unfortunate death:) of the wicked: to wit, their unſetledneſſe, in their judgements & reſoluoins; and continual wandring according to the propriety of the Hebr. word:) in their courſes, and actions: of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid out of Seneca: upon chap. . 15. whoſe wayes are crooked and much more might be added out of the ſame authour, if need were. See alſo upon chap. 21. 16. The man that wandreth out of the way of underſtanding.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. SUrety for thy friend, if thou haſt ſtricken thy hand, &c. Chap. 17. 18 & 20. 16. & 22. 26. Of the different tranſlation of the words of this verſe, ſee upon verſe 3. into the hand of thy friend. As for the matter here handled from this ver. to ver. 6. to wit, ſuretiſhip: ſome obſerve a coherence of matter or ſenſe between this, and that which was laſt ſpoken of, in the former chapter: to wit, riot, adultery, and whoredome: of which having ſaid among other things, that by it the wealth and ſubſtance of a man is exhauſted, verſe 10. &c. from that he now paſſeth to ſuretiſhip, is the likelyeſt after whoring, and the like, (whereof again verſe 26. of this Chapter. For by means of a whoriſh woman, a man is brought to a piece of bread,) to overthrow a man in his temporal eſtate. And as in the former chap. ver. 10. ſtrangers were mentioned; ſo here again. But ſince that in the greateſt part of the Book no ſuch coherence of matter is obſerved, and that there is no need of it here, more than elſewhere, I think with Mercerus, that the obſervation is rather curious, than neceſſary. As for the thing it ſelf, Suretiſhip, both here, and in divers other places of this book; as Chap. 20. 16. Take his garment, &c. much ſpoken againſt; Solomons intention herein was not to deter men from doing offices of friendſhip to their friends: ſuch as either giving, (all manner of liberality, and eſpecially to poor, being much commended in this book:) or lending, according to ability; commended by David, Pſalm 37. & 112. and no where ſpoken againſt by Solomon: but onely to warn men againſt the danger, and abuſe of pretended friendſhip: of which nature this kind of ſuretiſhip, which Solomon ſpeaketh againſt, ſeems to be; when a man is importuned, or ſollicited by his friend, (if he may be called or accounted a friend, who to eaſe himſelf, will put his friend upon ſuch inconveniences;) to engage himſelf for him, beyond what he is able, either at preſent, out of his own ſtore; or to bear hereafter, if he be put to it, as in common providence muſt alwayes be preſuppoſed, that he may probably: which at the beſt, (be the intentions on both ſides never ſo ſincere) is bad enough; and is beſides ſubject to much jugling and impoſture, whereby many plain honeſt men are undone by cunning foxes, under colour of friendſhip. Neither is Solomon the onely that hath been of that mind. It was one of the three famous precepts, or cautions, aſcribed unto the Gods, and graven upon the doors of Apollo's Temple at Delphos: and it ſeems that before Homer, (except he were the firſt authour of it: it is in his IX. Odyſſe,) there was a Proverb among the Grecians to that purpoſe, importing, that ſuretiſhip was the character of baſeneſſe and wretchedneſſe; whereas to give, or to lend, no man doubts, are rather of nobleneſſe and generoſity.

for thy freind] Or, to thy neighbour, as verſe 3.

if thou haſt ſtricken thy hand] Joyned hands with a ſtranger, as a ſurety, to pay thy friends debts, if he do not.

with a ſtranger] A man to whom thou oweſt nothing, nor knoweſt how he will uſe thee, if thou fall into his hands. Some think that here, by this word ſtranger, is particularly intended an uſerer, who muſt be a ſtranger indeed, taken in the propriety of the word; that is, ſome one of another Nation; no Jew, or Iſraelite; to whom all kind of uſury (among themſelves) was forbidden, Deut. 23. 19, 20. but a ſtranger might be an uſurer among them: as they alſo were allowed to lend upon uſe to them that were ſtrangers. But there being no mention made of any uſe here, but of lending and ſuretiſhip onely; there is no neceſſity, nor much probability, that an uſurer ſhould be intended. It may do as well, that ſtranger be here oppoſed to friend and acquaintance, as we ſaid before. See alſo upon Chap. 2. 16. from the ſtrange woman.

V. 2. Thou art] Or, And art.

Thou art ſnared] He forbiddeth us not to become ſureties for our friends according to the rule of charity; but wills, That we conſider for whom, to whom, and upon what terms we do it; ſo that the creditour may not be defrauded, nor our ſelves damnified.

with the words of thy mouth] Many think words bring no hurt, if they part with no preſent money; but Solomon tells us, Our promiſes do enſnare us.

thou art] Or, and art.

V. 3. when] Or, ſeeing.

into the hand of thy friend] Hebrew, בכף־רעך. Which words are differently expounded. Some, as Mercerus for one, think that the ſame is intended, as was before in the firſt verſe, called a ſtranger. For, ſaith Mercerus, it is ordinary in the Hebrew tongue, to indite any man a friend, whom we have to do with, (and ſo in ordinary Engliſh too) whether before known, or unknown. See alſo upon chap. 11. 15. He that is ſurety for a ſtranger. And ſo is the word neighbour, I am ſure, not by the Hebrews only, but ancient Grecians alſo uſed. And the reaſon, ſaith Mercer, why he was called a ſtranger before, might be to diſtinguiſh him (the creditour) from the friend, (for whom the money is borrowed, and the debt contracted) there alſo mentioned. But others by friend, underſtand a creditor indeed, but not the ſame as was before called a ſtranger; but one, who is a friend and acquaintance, properly. For they conceive, that two ſorts of creditors are here ſpoken of by Solomon; a friend, and a ſtranger. And to that end, ſome tranſlate in the firſt verſe, אם־ערבת לרעך, if thou be ſurety to thy friend, not, for thy friend, as we have it there. There is no queſtion but the words may be ſo tranſlated; nay, no queſtion, but that according to the more ordinary uſe of the particular, or prefixe ל, that is the more literall tranſlation of the two. Now, ſay they, what Solomon adviſeth here, ſhould be done by the ſurety, if the creditor be a friend; that he ſhould loſe no time, but ſpeedily humble himſelf, intreat, get mediators, other friends, &c. much more neceſſity is there, that the ſame ſhould be done, if the creditour be a ſtranger; whom no conſideration of friendſhip, or acquaintance doth oblige to uſe him kindly, or mercifully: and therefore à minore ad majus; under the name of friend, the ſtranger alſo is included in this advice. I like either of theſe better, than their interpretation, who by friend, would have the party, for whom this ſurety is in trouble, underſtood: as if he intended to ſay; Since it is ſo, that thou haſt convented, or contracted with thy friend, to become his ſurety, &c.

and make ſure thy friend] Or, ſo ſhalt thou prevail with thy friend.] The Hebrew word רהב is not elſewhere found in Scripture in the Conjugation Kal, (as they term it) but in this place; and Ezr. 3. 5. where it is tranſlated, to behave himſelf proudly. The child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the ancient, &c. But in Hiphil; Cant. 6. 5. there, to overcome; as here: and Pſal. 138. 3 to ſtrengthen: as ſome would have it, have alſo, confirmare; or, roborare: robora amicum tuum: but not ſo well I think. To overcome; certainly, fits but in this place; and it muſt be underſtood, of an overcoming by importunity; ſuch as Luk. 11. 8. is emphatically called ἀναίδεια: which otherwiſe doth more properly ſignifie impudencie.

Thy friend] Some would have thy friends, in the plurall; and ſay it is ſo in the Heb. But they are miſtaken. There is a jod in the Hebrew indeed; but not as a ſign of the plurall there; but a jod paragogicum; or, exuberant, as beſt Expoſitors agree. Now the meaning to ſome, is; That if we be not able to pay, nor can find no favour with the creditour, we ſhould be importunate with our friends to free us from him with all ſpeed, as beaſts or fowls, purſued, flye for their lives, verſ. 5. But others, with more probability, make this friend here, to be no other than he that was ſpoken of before, ver. 1. that is, either the creditor himſelf, from whom the danger is; or the debtor, for whom thou art engaged. I conceive but one & the ſame man to be intended. But the advice is good, that we ſhould deal with both in time, what by humility, towards the creditor, as, Mat. 18. 26. & 29. fell down, &c. (and indeed the word רפס here following, may very properly be turned, proſtrate thy ſelfe:) what by importunity, toward him, for whom we are in danger.

V. 4. Give not ſleep to thine eys, nor ſlumber to thine eye-lids] Pſ. 132. 4.

V. 6. Go to the ant, thou ſluggard] Moſt obſerve a coherence and think it materiall; which is, that having in the former words and paſſages given counſel to him that is bound, to beſtirre himſelf to get himſelf free with all poſſible ſpeed; he further encourages him (that he might not pretend diſability,) by the example of the induſtrious and provident ant; ſo that this, Go to the ant, &c. is more particularly ſpoken to him, ſpoken of in the former verſes; but yet ſo neverthe leſſe, that it was intended alſo as a general invitation and exhortation, (whereof all ſtand in need,) to all men, to be induſtrious and provident.

conſider her wayes and be wiſe] Concerning the ant, her induſtry, providence, and wiſdom, (which Solomon would have us to learn from her,) there be many things written by divers, which, becauſe I neither dare abſolutely reject, as falſe, there being many things in this kind, to many others incredible, of the truth and certainty whereof I make no queſtion: nor yet can upon my certain knowledge and experience, avouch my ſelf for true; I ſhall therefore, though here exhorted by Solomon, to conſider her ways, forbear particularly to inſiſt upon. A certain Biſhop, a learned man, of Italy, profeſſeth to have ſeen a kind of little Town (in length, four foot; and one foot broad;) erected by ants under a rafter, that lay on the ground, out of the way. He deſcribes it very particularly, and their converſation in it; and ſpeaks of it with marvellous confidence: and ſome others affirm to have ſeen the like elſewhere. But not to go beyond what all men know and acknowledge of them; here alſo, and again, Chap. 30. 25. avouched by Solomon himſelf; it will be worth our conſideration, by what power the ants do this, and how they come by this providence, and this wiſdom, which Solomon doth here commend unto us. For there be ſome, not ancient heathen Phylolophers onely, but even profeſſed Chriſtians, who grounding upon this, (not this paſſage, or teſtimony; but upon the thing it ſelf here ſpoken of and confirmed by Solomon,) and other like inſtances, and experiments, have maintained, that dumb creatures were endowed with reaſon (yea and ſpeech too, ſome have ſaid,) as well as men: and others have further argued hence, that the ſoules of men and beaſts, were of one nature, and eſſence; both the one, and the other, (as ſome have maintained) equally immortal; or, (as ſome others) equally mortal. But I will not digreſſe ſo far; neither, I hope, are they many among us, that need confutation. Divers have written of it; yet not any that I ſhould commend to the Reader more, than Origin; in that incomparable piece of his (which is extant in Greek, and but meanly tranſlated in Latin) againſt Celſus the Phyloſopher. All that I think neceſſary to ſay about it here, I ſhall contract into theſe few Poſitions. Firſt, that Solomons ſending men to the ant to learn wiſdom, is no argument (though ſome would make one of it) that therefore they are naturally endowed with more wiſdom, than men are. The argument is à minore ad majus; rather to ſhame us, than to aver any thing poſitively concerning them. If they, that want reaſon, can for their own preſervation, by meer inſtincts of nature, do ſome acts of reaſon; how much more unexcuſable are we, who by God and nature are endowed with reaſon, of purpoſe, to provide for the future: to forecaſt, & to foreſee, both for thoſe things that belong to the body; as for thoſe that belong unto the ſoul: if we make not uſe of it to that end? So Chriſt bids us to conſider (it is the ſame word) the ravens, Luk. 12. 24. and to conſider the Lillies of the field, ver. 27. and ſo may we in ſome caſes appeal to very fools & children; not that we would have them thought wiſe; but that they that are, or ſhould be, may be aſhamed, if in any thing they come ſhort of the wiſdom of ſuch. Secondly, we ſay, that ſuch acts in brutes proceed not from reaſon, properly, or any ratiocinative facultie;but are inſtincts of nature,imprinted in the phanſie: and that what we call their providence, is not theirs, properly to ſpeak, but his providence,who is their Creator, and of Nature whoſe power and providence, when we ſee ſuch things in dumb creatures, we ſhould as Origin well obſerves, ſo much the more admire, who can produce ſome effects of reaſon and wiſdom, even from them, that are not rational, nor by nature, capable of any wiſdom. So that wiſdom in them, is not wiſdom, properly, and truly; but analogically onely. It may be that may be it, that is intended, Chap.30.24. There be four things that are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wiſe; ſo there tranſlated: but in the Hebrew it is, ſapientia, effecta ſapientia; that is, as in the margin there, wiſe, made wiſe. For therein is the difference: All men are naturally endowed with the faculty; that is, all men are capable of wiſdom,by nature: but none become actually wiſe, but by ſtudy, and practice, and experience: whereas brutes; what wiſdom they have, it is born with them: (we ſpeak of ſuch inſtincts, or acts of wiſdom, in beaſts, as are above the ordinary nature or capacity of beaſts: ſuch as are there ſpoken of by Solomon: the providence of the ants, for one particularly,ver. 25.The ants are a people not ſtrong, &c.) they are wiſe, made wiſe, that is, their wiſdom is meerly natural, or a pure inſtinct of nature in them, no act or effect of reaſon, or ratiocination. So I think the words may be underſtood. But to return where vve began: vve ſay laſtly, from this and other like places of Scripture,we may learn, that the ſtudy and knowledge of nature, (if vvell uſed) is very profitable, and doth not a little conduce to piety, and true wiſdom: not therefore to be neglected, as by moſt, through idleneſſe, and want of induſtry, it is; not to be condemned, as by ſome ſupercilious ignorant men, who think it makes atheiſts rather, than promotes piety; which the abuſe of it indeed as of the Scriptures, and all other good things) may do, but not the right uſe, ſuch as we commend and wiſh. Having done with the ant, before we proceed to the other matter, I ſhall onely warne the Reader,that in ſome Editions of the Septuagints, or Greek tranſlations, after this of the ant, there followes immediately another like exhortation taken from the example of the Bee; Go to the Bee,&c. There is not any ſuſpition at all, that ever it was in the Original Hebrew: neither do any Expoſitors, that I have ſeen, (not Cornelius à Lapide; or Salazer,) propoſe it as authentick, but as an addition of the ſaid Greek Tranſlators meerly; who have many other ſuch, in other places; as is generally acknowledged. The onely reaſon that moveth me ſo far to take notice of it, as to warn the Reader of it, is, becauſe moſt ancient Greek, and ſome Latin Fathers alſo, becauſe they found it in that ancient Tranſlation (at leaſt in ſome copies of it) which to them for want of the Hebrew, was in ſome manner authentick, they take notice of it as part of Proverbs; whoſe allegations might trouble a man, that ſhould not know it before, and put him to an endleſſe labour of ſeeking, or breed in him ſome ſuſpition of a defect

V.7. which having no guide]The ant,that hath none to go before her to ſhew her how to do it,nor none to overſee whether ſhe do it or no,nor no ruler to puniſh her for idlenes,yet labours:much more ſhould men,that have thoſe motives ſhe hath not,Chap.30.25,27.

overſeer] Hebr. שטר of which word, if you deſire further ſatisfaction, ſee Fulleri Miſcell. Lib. 3. c 19. As to this place, there is nothing that requireth much illuſtration.

V. 8. Provideth her meat in the ſummer] When the weather is fair, the way ſmooth, and food to be had, ſhe provides againſt winter: ſo ſhould we againſt ſickneſſe and old age.

V. 9. How long wilt thou ſleep, &c.] Chap.24 33. He chides the ſluggard for being ſo long ſlothfull.

V. 10. Yet a little ſleep] The ſluggard anſwers, that he had need of more ſleeps and ſlumber: for ſlugards never have ſleep enough, but ever ſeek new occaſions. This is the moſt received, and, to me, moſt probable ſenſe. Yet the words will bear another ſenſe, followed by Mercer, and others: which is: Sleep little, (by way of precept or exhortation:) ſlumber little,&c. Or, A little ſleep, a little ſlumber; a little folding of the hands: to lye down: (or, ſleep) Leſt that thy poverty, &c. as followeth in the next verſe. The ſenſe comes all to one: but there is more emphaſis in the former interpretation. Some obſerve a gradation in the words: Firſt, ſleeping, then ſlumbering: and (which uſeſt to be the laſt uſually before a man, a laſie man, doth riſe:) Thirdly, follding of the hands, and all this, to ſleep: but better in the Hebrew, לשכב to lye down, properly: which may be equivalent to, before thou doſt riſe: or if they be words of the ſluggard himſelf: then; before I riſe.

ſleep] Heb. ſleeps.

ſlumber] Heb ſlumbers.

V. 11. So ſhall thy poverty come,&c.] Chap.13.4.& 20.4.As if God ſhould reply, Sleep on; but thou ſhalt be poor enough at length.

as one that travelleth] Suddenly, and unlooked for, verſe 15.

thy want as an armed man]So as it cannot be reſiſted,Lu.11.21,22.

V. 12. A naughty perſon,a wicked man,&c.] In this and the two next verſes is ſet down the character, or deſcription of a naughty man, or, a man of Belial, (of the uſes,and compoſition, or etymology of which words. I doubt not but there hath been enough ſaid in former Annotations, being ſo frequent in Scripture) as it is in the original Hebrew. Moſt of the marks or evidences here expreſſed, are taken from the outward carriage: which therefore muſt not be taken as infallible, or neceſſary;as if none were of that ſtamp inwardly,but thoſe in whom theſe outward ſignes are found; or aga,in all ſuch in whom they are found; but,as all ſuch deſcriptions muſt be underſtood, ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ, that it is ſo for the moſt part; and that theſe in whom thoſe outward ſigns or evidences do concur, are to be ſuſpected, till better known. Such a deſcription, from outward ſigns I mean, of a naughty man, we have in Martial; Crine ruber,niger ore, &c. Rem magnam praſtas Zoile, ſi bonus es. Some obſerve a coherence of matter between the former paſſage, and this: becauſe it commonly ſo falls out,that idleneſſe and ſluggiſhneſſe, breeds lewdneſſe and wickedneſſe: which is true enough; but that Solomon, in this connexion of paſſages, aimed at it, I will not warrant.

walketh with a froward mouth] Some by a froward mouth, here, underſtand one whoſe mouth or words, in his ordinary talk, and converſation, is divers from his heart: which in very deed,is a very eſſentiall mark of wickedneſſe: contrary to that ingenuons, and ſo much commended ſimplicity in them that are really good and upright. Others,ſaucy bold impudent language; ſpoken of before, ch 4.24.which,as commonly,doth iſſue,from a perverſe evill mind.

V. 13. He winketh with his eyes] To wink often, Chap. 10. 10. ſeems to be a mark of folly; He that winketh with his eyes, cauſeth ſorrow: but (rather, and; as Mercer there, and others) a prating fool ſhall fall; or, ſhall be beaten: (Punietur; Mercer) and accordingly,Phylo Judæus, Stultorum palpebra oberrant, quorum nec oculi quidem quieſcere poſſunt pra ſtultitiâ; as cited here by Salazar. But it is as often, and ſo here, a mark of an evill mind, and of a dangerous man; as is more fully expreſſed by Eccleſiaſticus, Chap. 27. 22.23. He that winketh with the eyes, worketh evill, and he that knoweth him, will depart from him. When thou art preſent he will ſpeak ſweetly, &c. But we muſt diſtinguiſh between a natural kind of winking, which may preed from weakneſſe of eyes,or ſome ſuch inward bodily cauſe: (Pliny makes frequent winking, to be a ſign of timerouſneſſe; Pleriſq; naturale eſt ut nictare oculis non ceſſent,quos pavidiores eſſe accepimus, lib. 11. 37.and hath no dependency from the heart or mind;and that which is occaſioned by the motions and ſuggeſtions of the mind, and inward thoughts. Certainly, when that there is much winking in a company,there is juſt cauſe to ſuſpect it not right: and at the beſt,if there be no wickedneſſe in the mind, yet there is incivility in the carriage; eſpecially if it be in company as good, or better than our ſelvess. But now it muſt be remembred, which was ſaid but very now, that theſe outward ſignes are probable, (a thing often inculcated by Ariſtotle in his Ethicks) not neceſſary. To ſpeak roughly, and to be full of geſticulations in company, are of themſelves bad ſignes, and to be avoyded; yet it is poſſible, that both may be ſometimes, where the heart is well affected. And on the contrary,none more dangerous and pernicious often, than thoſe that are moſt ſilent, or moſt ſmooth both in tongue and carriage, when in company. So that Cato (that Cato, who is taught to children, but of whom old men, and learned men may learn, without any diſparagement,) his advice is not amiſſe, when he ſaith, Demiſſos animo, ac tacitos vitare memento; Quâ flumen placidum eſt, forſan latet altius unda.

he ſpeaketh with the feet, he teacheth with his fingers, &c.] Iſidore doth bring a paſſage out of old Ennius, which doth very lively repreſent the many geſticulations, and buſie deportment of a miſchievous lewd woman in company; fit to be compared with this; Quaſi in choro pila ludens, &c. Alium tenet, alii adnutat, alibi manus eſt occupata, alii pervellit pedem, alii dat annulum ſpectandum, &c. Cornelius à Lapide, hath the whole paſſage.

V. 14 Frowardneſſe] Heb. Frowardneſſes.

he deviſeth miſchief continually] Beſides abundance of corruption in his heart,) Heb. frowardneſſes) he addes more by deviſing miſchief ſtill, even in the night, when workmen ſleep, Chap. 3. 16. Mic.2.1. Hoſ.7.6.

he ſoweth diſcord] As there is an extraordinary reward propoſed unto them that make peace, Jam.3 18.and elſewhere;ſo there is not a more divelliſh practice in the world,than the ſowing of diſcord, and the love of ſtriſe and contention. But unto them that are contentious, Rom.2.8. under which word all manner of wickedneſſe is comprehended, as appeareth by the oppoſite member. The wiſe man therefore, among other effects of wickedneſſe,reckons this particularly, that it cauſeth diſcord: a thing not prejudicial to particular men only. but to humane ſocieties in general, therefore of all things to be ſhunned and deteſted by all men,that have not abjured humanity,and common nature. See more upon the 16.verſe.

ſoweth] Heb. caſteth forth.

diſcord] Heb. diſcords.

V. 15. broken without remedy] Jer.19.11.

without remedy] A mockers miſery will abide on him,

V. 16 Theſe ſix things doth the Lord hate; yea, ſeven, &c.] This whole paſſage to verſe 20, ſeems to be but a rhetorical amplification, or emphatical proſecution of that which was delivered before ver. 14. to wit,that it is a moſt wicked thing, or the part of a very wicked man,to ſow diſcord.Thus to ſet it out the more emphatically, and that it might make the greater impreſſion, he reckons divers other things,which are commonly known to be very wicked, and in great deteſtation with God and man; after all which, he reckons that, as the laſt, or worſt of all: as if that were the utmoſt of wickedneſſe, beyond which nothing could go. Hereupon Expoſiters take great pains to ſhew why, and wherein ſowing of diſcords, or whiſpering, or a ſlandering tongue (for all come to one) ſhould be accounted the very worſt of ſins, and to God moſt abominable. There is no queſtion, but a great deal may eaſily enough be found to that purpoſe; for it is a moſt grievous ſin, and the cauſe of greateſt miſchiefs in the world. See Eccleſiaſticus, Chap. 28. 13. Curſe the whiſperer, &c. and St. James ſpeakes of the tongue with much bitterneſſe, as the occaſion of evils, Chap. 3. it is the ſubject almoſt of all that Chapter. However, I do not conceive that this was it that Solomon aimed at, nor that his words ſhould be taken and preſſed ſo preciſely, as if he intended poſitively to maintain, that ſowing of diſcord was a greater ſin, than any other here mentioned. I take it rather, to be a rhetorical (as I ſaid before) amplification, or aggravation; whereof there might be the more neceſsity, becauſe many that offend in that kind, by whiſpering, carrying of tales; (ſome, to ingratiate themſelves; others, out of an evil cuſtom, and a pleaſure they take in prating) and the like, do not apprehend what a ſin they commit, nor to what judgements, becauſe out of the reach of humane laws and cenſures, they expoſe themſelves and their families. Neither is it much material whether we tranſlate, ſeptem, ſeven; and ſo make all the vices, here recorded, equally hateful and abominable: or, ſeptimum, the ſeventh, [taking numerum cardinalem pro ordinali; as, una ſabbathorum, for, prima ſabbathorum, and the like) and ſo make the ſix firſt reckoned ſins, an object of Gods hatred, ſimply; but the laſt, or ſeventh, of his abomination, which is more: whereupon is tacitly implyed, that therefore it is the greater ſin, becauſe an object of greater hatred: either way, as I conceive, is not much material, becauſe the end of either expreſsion, is onely to make us ſenſible, that whiſpering, &c is no ſmall ſin, as many think; but of hainous conſequence, and by God himſelf extremly deteſted. It ſeems this way of amplification, by ſix, and ſeven, as it is here, was ordinary among the Hebrews, as appears by Job 5. 19. He ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven, &c. See alſo Hoſ. 6. 2. and Mich. 5. 5. and Amos 1. 3, 6. &c.

unto him] Heb. of his ſoul.

V. 17. A proud look] Heb. Haughty eyes. It is obſerved by moſt, that as in the former paſſage, the naughty man is deſcribed by ſeveral members; ſo here alſo in this enumeration of ſeveral vices, they are moſt of them, reckoned by the members of the body, beginning from the higheſt parts, and ſo downwards in order; which doth the more confirm the relation (which hath been ſpoken of) of this paſſage to the former.

V. 18. An heart that deviſeth wicked imaginations: feet that be ſwift in runing to miſchief] Solomon by theſe words ſeemeth to ſet out two ſorts of men, (though it is poſsible that one and the ſame man may have both qualities:) which are often ſeen in the world. Some men are great plotters; very able and cunning to deviſe wayes, whatſoever their own luſt, or their neceſsity doth caſt them upon: either, to compaſſe, what is deſired: or to avoid, what is feared. But very cowards though in mater of action and execution; and no men, at their hands or weapons. Others, dull and heavy to find, or invent; but quick and ſtout, to execute. Now, in point of wickedneſſe, and miſchief; which of the two be the worſt, I know not: but the plotter, (as before we concluded of counſels, upon Chap. 1. 5. ſhall attain, &c.) the more dangerous and pernicious of the two, certainly: both, abominable unto God, as we are here taught.

in running to miſchief] By miſchief, here, ſeems chiefely to be intended ſhedding of blood: as may be gathered by Chap. 1. ver 16. For their feet run to evil, and make haſte to ſhed blood; and by Eſay 59 7 (where both members of this verſe are contained; and will ſerve for further illuſtration:) Their feet run to evil, and they make haſte to ſhed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; waſting and deſtruction are in their paths. Blood, indeed (the ſhedding of blood) is the moſt crying ſin; at leaſt, in point of nature: which may be termed rightly κατ' ἐξοχὴν, ἄγος: piaculum, miſchief: and it is obſervable, that nature (or rather God, the Author of nature:) hath imprinted the horror of it unto the ſoul of man ſo deeply, that in ancienteſt times of the world, (neerer to the beginning of time, by ſome thouſands of years;) if a man were known to have committed murder, all men, (without any other lawes, or ſolemn excommunications, but the law, and voice of nature,) did ſhun his company, and thought themſelves polluted, if by any chance they had come neer him: ſo that for the moſt part, they that were guilty of it, proved miſerable fugitives and vagabonds (as Cain, by ſentence pronounced by Gods own mouth:) all their life time. And ſuch was the horror of the fact, among them commonly, that ſtrange expiations and penances, almoſt as bad as death it ſelf, were dviſed, and undergone by many, who thought they could never do enough, to reconcile themſelves to God and the world. Of which, if you pleaſe, you may read more, in him, whoſe deſerts will make him live, (though lately, to the great grief of all that love learning, corporally dead:) as long as learning, (ſo truly called; not that which ſome late ſophiſters, broachers of new doctrines, and anabaptiſts, would cry up for learning:) doth live in any part of the world: even learned Mr. Selden, in his 111 Book de Synedriis: his laſt work, and left imperfect, becauſe of his death. But now, who they be, that are guilty of this horrible and deteſtable ſin, of ſhedding of human blood, would be a diſquiſition well worthy to be taken into conſideration, by any Chriſtian, that aſpireth unto heaven: a reall I mean not imaginary, ſuch as many (I doubt) that are called, and call themſelves Saints upon earth, are likely to inherit. But I may not digreſſe ſo far. Learned Grotius hath handled the matter very well, in his Commentaries upon the Goſpels.

V. 19. ſpeaketh lyes] Chap. 19 5.

diſcord] Heb. diſcords.

V. 20. My ſon, keep thy fathers commandement, and forſake not the law of thy mother] Chap. 1. 8. See there.

V. 21. neck] See Chap. 2. 9.

V. 22. it ſhall lead thee] The commandement mentioned, ver. 20. That is, in effect, the Law of God; as is ſhewed upon Chap. 1. 8. My ſon, Hear the inſtruction of thy father, &c. and appears alſo by the words following, For the Commandement is a lamp, &c. compared with Pſal. 19. 8. &c. See upon the next verſe.

keep thee] Or, watch over thee.

it ſhall talke with thee] Direct thee what is to be done all day, as maſters in the morning appoint their ſervants what to do the day following.

V. 23. For the commandement is a lamp; and the law is a light] Pſal. 19. 8. & 119. 105.

the commandement is a lamp] The commandement of thy father, and the law of thy mother, interpreted as before, may guide thee, as a candle by night, and the light by day; and their reproofs are means to ſave you.

and the law is light] The order of the words in the Hebrew is: A lamp is the commandement, and the law is light: which in the Original runs very ſmoothly, and ſeems to imply a reciprocation of light, and law; law, and light. Now there is a double law, natural, and revealed: both theſe are lights, and ſo ſtiled in the Scripture. The natural law is, λόγος, reaſon: and Chriſt, λόγος, is ſaid to be the true light, that inlightneth every one that cometh into the world: which by Calvin and Beza, is interpreted of the natural light of reaſon, common to all men. However, I take Solomon here to ſpeak of the law of God revealed; as David Pſal. 19. 7. &c. where alſo we may obſerve the reaſon of the coherence, between the firſt and ſecond part of that Pſalm; from this place: the the former ſetting out the praiſes of light, in general; and the later, the praiſes of the law of God; as being that to the ſoul of man, what the light of the Sun is to the body.

lamp] Or, candle.

V. 24. To keep thee] Chap 2. 16. & 5. 3. & 7. 5. The verſe before may be included in a parentheſis, and this verſe depends on the end of the two and twentieth.

from the evil woman] Some men, very skilful in Scripture phraſe, and generally much approved for their labours in that kind, are of opinion, that here, and Pſalm 15. 4. (where according to our late tranſlation, we read it in the Engliſh, who ſweareth to his own hurt: but according to the former, who ſweareth to his neighbour;) the Hebrew word רע or rangh, may be taken for רע or reangh; that is, a neighbour. So the ſenſe would be: To keep thee from [thy] neighbours wife. And ſo indeed in this very Chapter verſe 29 we find it: So he that goes in to his neighbours wife: whereas I do not remember that ſhe is called evil elſewhere in this Book. However, this is not to make here ſin the leſſe, if ſhe be not called evil here. There is enough ſaid of her beſides, to make us know her. Nay, I think, thy neighbours wife, (that is, as hath been often ſaid already: another mans wife: (or, any one, that is not thine:) abſolutely ſpoken, is more effectual to the aggravation of the crime. I would not be thought to ſeek jeſts (I abhor it) in a ſacred ſubject. I do believe ſeriouſly, there be men in the world, that think fornication and adultery no great ſin, ſo it be among the godly; that is, ſuch as they account ſo, by their outward garbe, and manner of ſpeech: men and women of their tribe and profeſſion. To prevent ſuch diſtinctions, which the Devil may ſuggeſt, of an evil woman, which they will ſay perchance, is a common whore, that admits of all men; and a godly ſiſter, as they call them: thy neighbour, or, another mans wife; (or, any other, that is not thine:) I ſaid, is more abſolute and convincing. But becauſe there be ſo many other places of Scripture, in this very Book, to convince their madneſſe, that are ſo captivated to the ſpirit of error and deluſion; we need not fly to this for an argument to make this interpretation of the word, more plauſible. Either of the two, may do very well.

of the tongue of a ſtrange woman] Or, of the ſtrange tongue.

V. 25. Luſt not] Or, That thou luſt not.

Luſt not after her beauty in thine heart] Matth. 5. 28.

neither let her take thee with her eye-lids] Take heed of her fair looks as well as of her ſweet words; for if ſhe catch thee with her eyes, when ſhe hath brought thee to extreme poverty ſhe will take away thy life alſo.

V. 26. For] Or When.

piece of bread] 2 Sam. 2. 36.

and] Or, then.

the adultereſſe] Heb. the woman of a man; or a mans wife.

the adultereſſe will hunt] Heb. the wiſe of another man : that is, a whore. Or, A woman given to men.

for the precious life] Which ſhould be precious to thee, Mat. 16. 26. Or, after precious ſouls ; that is, propereſt perſons, and well qualified : well deſcended, well bred, wealthy, &c. There be alſo, who by precious ſouls, here ; would have the ſoul, properly taken, to be meant, And this may be a good ſenſe, if we take thoſe creatures to be as the Devils bait, or inſtruments, by which he catcheth ſouls. For he it is, that hunts after ſouls, properly ; though it may be adſcribed unto them alſo, whom he ſets on work, to compaſſe his ends. However, I think this ſomewhat remote : and I rather believe, that by precious life, is underſtood, not life onely, which though it be conſumed and corrupted by ſuch actions, yet is not the thing properly, that whores and ſtrumpets, hunt after ; but livelihood, or ſubſtance ; which is ſometimes called blood, and life : as hath been noted upon Chap. 1. 11. Let us hunt after blood. This greedineſſe, unſatiableneſſe, yea unmercifulneſſe and cruelty of ſuch women, towards thoſe that deal with them, is excellently well ſet out by ancient Comicks : who repreſent them as very harpyes, or cormorants, in point of prey. See, if you pleaſe, but Plautus in his Truculenta, where Aſtaphius ſpeaketh alone. You cannot have a better Comment upon theſe words. And therefore were Comicks anciently ſaid, to teach ; and they, among other titles, called teachers, becauſe of the good they did, by ſuch lively repreſentations, to reclaime many young ignorants, from their idle courſes. There be words in that Comedie which I have named, that make to my purpoſe very much. One laieth to their charge there, that by them young men did perire, periſh : intending, that they were the deſtruction of men. Now becauſe the word is more proper to deſtruction of the perſon, or life it ſelf ; than of ſubſtance : one of the company doth anſwer : Dicis contumeliam. Nemo hominum hic perire ſolet apud nos : res perdunt ſuas : uti perdiderunt Res ; abire hinc ſi volunt, uti jus, licet. The meaning of which words is, (for they are to my purpoſe :) that it is a ſlander, to ſay, that men did periſh there : No, their goods and their ſubſtance did indeed ; but for their perſons, when they had ſpent all, they might go whether they would : they would not hinder their liberty. So there. But withal it muſt be known, that in thoſe days, though at all times, the frequent uſe did conſume the body, and ſhorten life ; yet thoſe horrid diſeaſes, that will make a more ſpeedy end, and are of a more penetractive quality, were not known or heard of. More unexcuſable are they therefore, who notwithſtanding ſuch viſible deſtruction to their lives, livelihood, and very ſouls, (as Chriſt and his Apoſtles ſo plainly teach :) cannot be reclaimed. Precious life, we may interpret, whatſoever he doth peſſeſſe ; even that which is moſt precious ; goods, lands, and houſes : for even they are not ſpared, oftentimes ; but all goes, to maintain this wicked trade. Or, precious life, may be, any man his livelihood, or ſubſtance, be it more or leſſe ; which is precious unto wiſe men ; and none but mad men, or infatuated, would bring themſelves to beggery ; that is, to be a ſcorn unto all men ; for ſuch momentany pleaſures, more fit for brutes, than men.

V. 27. Can a man take fire in his boſom] A very fit ſimilitude, becauſe a wiſe, or woman is according to the Hebrew idiotiſme, ſaid to be taken into the boſom, when entertained for carnal copulation. See Gen. 16. 5. Sarai ſpeakes unto Abrahrm : I have given my maid into thy boſom. And Deut. 13 6. the wiſe of thy boſom. Beſides, there may be ſome intimation of dangerous inſinuation, when the word boſom, is applied unto lewd women. For then, and thereby chiefely, they have the opportunity to do miſchief : that is, to obtain what they will : and man then in worſe capacity to make uſe of his wit, and reaſon, againſt them, if he have any.

V. 28. Can one go upon hot coales] A man cannot uſe familiarity with ſuch, or dalliance, but it will turne to his ruine, Judg. 16.

V. 29. So he that goeth in to his neighbours wiſe] Moſt ancient Fathers take theſe words not of adultery committed ; but of outward familiar converſation by way of ordinary friendſhip and acquaintance, with another mans wife : as if Solomon here, and in the former verſes, addreſſed his ſpeech to them, who (as doubtleſs many do) frequent and love the company of ſome women, not out of any evil intention or purpoſe, either to corrupt, or to be corrupted, in that kind : but out of meer idleneſſe, curioſity, want of better employments, or happily, ſome reſpect (at leaſt, as they phanſie to themſelves) to their good and (for ſo is that good word in ordinary language proſtituted and prophaned) vertuous parts. If we ſhall ſo interperet this goeth in, here ; then the ſenſe of the former words muſt be, that as a man cannot take fire into his boſom, nor go upon hot coales, but he ſhall be burnt : ſo it is as impoſſible that a man (ſuch a one eſpecially, as Solomon ſpeaks to young and luſty, &c.) ſhould long converſe (by way of company-keeping, muſt be underſtood,) with a woman, (eſpecially, if wanton, and beautiful ; and cunning withal,) but the fire of love will kindle in him at laſt, ſo that by degrees he ſhall be drawn to that which at firſt he would not have thought. This is the more probable, becauſe it is very ordinary for all Writers, Poets eſpecially, to compare beautiful women to fire : as he in that Comick, Accede ad ignem hunc, &c. and divers others. However, I conceive that there is not leſſe ground for the former interpretation; from the context, and otherwiſe.

V. 30. Men do not deſpiſe a thief, &c.] Some would have this to be the ſenſe : Men do not deſpiſe a thief : to wit, to let him eſcape unpuniſhed ; though he be driven to it by ſome kinde of neceſſity, againſt his will. And if not a thief ; how much leſſe an adulterer ? But the authors of this interpretation contrary to the current of interpreters, might have done well, to have ſhewed, that the Original word בוז is ever taken for contempt in this kind ; which, I take, is more than they could. The more ſafe therefore and more received interpretation is, that Solomon doth here aggravate the crime of adultery above ordinary theft. The compariſon is very proper, adultery it ſelf being a kind of theft, and ſo called ordinarily by Latines and Grecians (furtum, furtivæ nuptiæ. γαμοκλόπος, &c.) but as a theft of a higher nature ; ſo, ſubject (among the Hebrews at leaſt) to much more danger and ignominy, than ordinary ſtealing. In moſt places, it was death : among the Athenians, though not death, yet was the puniſhment of it very ſhamful and ignominious, (τιλμὸς, ῥαφανίδωσις, &c.) deſcribed by the Scholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes. But though theft was not properly puniſhed by reproach ; yet it was a reproach doubtleſſe, and a great reproach too, to be convicted of it. This therefore muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively onely ; as if a man ſaid ; a thief is an honeſt man, to you ; or the like. Beſides, it doth much qualifie the caſe (in point of reproach at leaſt :) where apparent neceſſity, to ſave ones life, is the ground. Solomons mind is very well expreſſed (and it may be ſome confirmation to this interpretaion we follow :) by an ancient Poet, (though not ſo ancient as the title pretends,) commonly called Phocylides, in theſe words : Ὅστις ἔχων ἀδικῆ, κακὸς ἀνὴρ, ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἀνάγκης, Οὐκ ἐρέω τὸ τέλος βουλὴν δ' εὔθυνε ἑκάστου.

Men do not deſpiſe] The Civil law doth diſtinguiſh between Fures, latrones, and graſſatores : in their guilt, and in their puniſhment. Fur, properly, is a petty thief, that ſteales by advantage of the night, or privacy ; not by any force, but ſlight and cunning : ſheds no blood nor doth any other harme. Latro, is one, who whether in the night or day, ſets upon men by force, and firſt bereaves them of their lives, and then of their goods : as the faſhion is of moſt high-way, robbers, beyond the Seas. Graſſator, otherwiſe called Abigeius, is one ; or to ſpeak more properly, graſſatores, (or abigei : For they go alwayes by companies :) are they, that ſet upon men by force, whether in their houſes or upon the wayes : but openly, and without any intention to kill. Booty, is their aim, and that they live by. Now when Solomon ſaith that men do not deſpiſe a thief, it would be moſt proper to underſtand it of the graſſatores, (for latrones, they are to be looked upon rather as homicides, than theeves :) who indeed are more properly feared, than deſpiſed : neither is their puniſhment by the Civil law ſo great, as of abſolute theeves. But becauſe of that which follows, of reſtitution, if he be taken; it muſt needs be taken of ordinary theeves, that deal by ſlight, not of them that deal by open force. We ſay then, that Solomons words may aim at the ſame thing, that is delivered by our Saviour, where ſpeaking of the unjuſt ſteward, who ſeeing that he ſhould be turned out of his place, and conſidering with himſelf, that he was not brought up either to beg or to dig ; found a way, how he might ſubſiſt, when out of his place. An unjuſt way it is true, and therefore called the unjuſt ſteward : he ſhamfully and unconſcionably cozened his maſter by it : but what is conſcience to a man, that hath no further aim than this life ? who knows of no immortality of the ſoul : no day of judgement : in a word, whoſe ſummum bonum, or principal end is, in the goods of this preſent world ? Therefore, ſaith Chriſt, his Lord commended him. Why ? Becauſe he did not ſit down, like a fool; bemoaning his condition, and expecting that men ſhould pitty him : but as a wiſe man, according to his principles (wherein conſiſts chiefeſt wiſdom, as Ariſtotle ſheweth, in all our deliberations, to have a reſpect to our principles :) he did ſtoutely beſtirre himſelfe, loſt no time ; and by the help of his wits, found a vvay to live out of miſery. So may vve, upon this vvarrant conclude of a thief, that hath no principle to oblige him to conſcience ; or to think, that it vvere better for a man to ſtarve, (according to St. Pauls doctrine, Rom. 8. 35. —ſhall tribulation, &c.) or to ſuffer any kind of miſery in this vvorld ; than to incur the vvrath of God by an evil life : that ſuch a one, as a meer natural man, is more to be commended, than he vvho through vvant of vvit or ſpirit, can make no ſhift for his living. And all this tends but to aggravate the more the folly and vvant of vvit of any, that vvaſtes himſelf, body and goods upon harlots. The one, being hardly put to it by unavoidable neceſſity, finds a vvay (though not vvithout danger, becauſe of the lavv :) to ſubſiſt : the other, having plenty of both, a vigourous body, and competency of vvealth, for vvhich he can never be too thankful unto God ; ſuffers himſelf to be ſtript of both, and becomes a prey to a levvd vvoman, vvho her ſelf, (in her ovvn thoughts :) judges him a fool, vvhileſt he dotes upon her conceited beauty, at that rate. Who therefore of the tvvo deſerves to be more deſpiſed ? This therefore doth not properly tend, to compare the hainouſneſs, or greiveouſneſſe of the ſins, in point of lavv either divine, or human : but onely in point of vvit, and vvorldly vviſdom, vvhich more or leſſe deſpicable. And Cicero doth vvell teach us to diſtinguiſh betvveen contemnere, (to deſpiſe :) and malè exiſtimare, (to have an ill opinion.) Non enim (homines) omnes eos contemnunt, de quibus malè exiſtimeat. Nam quos improbos, maledicos, fraudulentos putant, & ad faciendam injuriam inſtructos; eos haud contemnunt quidem, ſed de iis malè exiſtimant. Contemnuntur ii, qui nec ſibi nec alteri proſunt; in quibus nullus labor, nulla induſtria, nulla cura eſt. Which is very pertinent to Solomons words.

V. 31. But if he be found, he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold] Of a ſevenfold reſtoration, we read not any where in the Law: but of double, and fourfold in ſome caſes; and in others fivefold: Exod. 22. 1, 4. &c. As therefore ſeven is often taken for many; ſo ſevenfold here, for manifold: by which word, all thoſe different reſtitutions appointed by the law, are comprehended. So moſt. Some by ſevenfold, underſtand ſepties, or ſeventimes: (as Pſal. 12. 6. purified ſeventimes, שבעתים the word here:) that is, ſay they, as often as he is convicted, though it be ſeventimes, or oftener; yet ſtill he can be but put to reſtitution: his life is not in danger. Sevenfold may alſo be taken, for plentiful: reſtitution with good advantage, ſuch as is preſcribed by the law. Neither is their ſubtilty altogether to be ſleighted, who joyning Exod. 22. the firſt and fourth verſes, there together; that is, five, and two, there appointed for reſtitution, in ſeveral caſes, would make up this ſevenfold of Solomons words.

V. 32. underſtanding] Heb. heart.

all the ſubſtance of his houſe] That is the worſt that can happen to him; and that is, in caſe he be very poor, and that all that he hath, will but ſerve to make reſtitution according to law, whether twofold, or ſevenfold, Exod. 22. 1, 4.

deſtroyeth his own ſoul] Life, and livelihood. See before upon Chap. 5. v. 4, 5. her ſteps take hold on hell.

V. 33. A wound and diſhonour ſhall he get] That is, death, appointed by the law, or be ſlain by the ſtrumpets husband. See ver. 34. or, a wound in his fame, which ſhall never be done away.

V. 34. therefore he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance] He ſheweth, that a man commonly ſeeketh his death that hath abuſed his wife; and ſo concludeth, That the husband will accept of no ranſom, to ſave the adulterer.

V. 35. He will not regard any ranſom] Heb. He will not accept the face of any ranſom.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 2. K*Eep my commandements, and live*] Chap. 4. 4.

and my law as the apple of thine eye] By this diverſity of words, he meaneth, That nothing ought to be ſo dear unto us, as the Word of God; nor we look on any thing more, nor mind any thing ſo much.

apple of thine eye] Pſal. 17. 8.

eye] Heb eyes.

V. 3. Binde them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart] Deut. 6. 8. & 11. 18. Chap. 3. 3.

V. 4. kinſwoman] Heb. kinſman.

V. 5. That they may keep thee from the ſtrange woman] Chap. 5. 3. & 2. 16.

V. 6. For at the window of my houſe I looked] I ſpeak not without reaſon, for I have ſeen the folly of thoſe that have ſuffered themſelves to be abuſed by harlots, Some make a queſtion, whether Solomon doth relate thoſe things ſimply, and hiſtorically, or whether parabolically: ſo they call it: but figuratively, I think they would ſay. For here is nothing of a parable, or ſimilitude, but a lively repreſentation of the thing it ſelf, which Solomon hath ſo often inſiſted upon; the ſubtilty of harlots, to intice a young man, and to draw him into their nets: the diſſimulation of the one, and the ſimplicity of the other; with the ſad conſequent of it, Such repreſentations of things, which bring them (if artificial indeed; or rather, very natural and lively:) to the very ſight; are called by rhetoricians, ἐνάργιαι: evidentia: whereof Quintilian hath divers choice examples out of Virgil, and Cicero. Some begin: videre videbar: as if we ſaid, Methinks I ſaw, &c. which I think is all intended here by Solomon, when he ſaith, I looked out of a window, &c. But Theognis, (often named, becauſe of the ſame ſubject as this Book is, and very ancient:) upon the like occaſion, in the repreſentation of a prodigal, and a miſer; he is as peremptory in his expreſſions, as Solomon: Ἐν τριόδῳ δ' ἕστηκα: I ſtood, ſaith he, in a place, where three wayes meet, &c. and then tells you what he ſaw.

V. 7. the youths] Heb. the ſons.

V. 9. in the evening] Heb. in the evening of the day.

in the black and dark night] He ſheweth, that there was almoſt none ſo impudent, but they were afraid to be ſeen; and alſo their own conſciences did accuſe them which cauſed them to ſeek the night, to cover their filthineſſe, Job 24. 15. 1 Theſſ. 5. 7.

in the dark and black night] Not ſo dark, literally, but that he could ſee him through the window, verſ. 6, 7. but he doth inſiſt the more upon it, the more effectually to ſet out to our apprehenſions, the horror of the thing: all ſins, of that kind eſpecially, being rightly deemed works of darkneſſe, (though committed in the light: and thoſe as rightly ſaid to walk in darkneſſe, (1 Joh. 1. 16. If we ſay that we have fellowſhip with him, &c.) that commit them, or make a practice of them, though the Sun be a witneſſe to their lewdneſſe, with the attire of an harlot] Whether a profeſſed harlot, one that all men might at firſt ſight know to be ſuch, (as in ſome Countries they are bound to a certain attire, of purpoſe to diſtinguiſh them,) or ſo attired (which may be ſaid of many, who perchance, intend no further hurt, though by their attire they give juſt occaſion of ſuſpition,) as might become an harlot better, than an honeſt vertuous woman, may be doubted. That ſhe was (the woman here deſcribed) a very harlot by her deeds and actions, is no queſtion: but whether a profeſſed one, ſuch a one as made a trade of it, not ſo much for her luſt, as for her living; a common publick harlot: that which follows afterwards, ver. 19, 20. concerning her husband, though not doubted by any Expoſitors that I can finde, makes it to me doubtful. My opinion is, (ſince I finde nothing about it in others) that ſhe was, if any ſuch really, as ſome think; but if not really, yet that this deſcription is intended of a common publick harlot: and that what ſhe ſaith of her husband, as though ſhe had one; or he that ſhe had, were a ſtranger to her lewdneſſe; it is to be underſtood, as cunningly and politickly ſpoken by her, the more ſtrongly and powerfully to incenſe and ingage the young fool, it being the manner of ſuch (as Horace, and divers others obſerve) rather to deſire to commit wickedneſſe with one that hath the reputation of an honeſt woman, than with a common profeſſed ſtrumpet. Somewhat ſhe her ſelf hath to that purpoſe, afterwards, Stollen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret, is pleaſant, Chap. 9 17.

V. 10 ſubtill] Heb. reſerved, if נצורה here from נצר, cuſtodivit, &c. But if as Mercer, and moſt others, from צור, obſeſſit, &c. then cincta corde, that is, compaſſed about with heart, or ſubtilty. And becauſe the word נצר is ſuppoſed by moſt, ſometimes alſo to ſignifie, to waſte, to make deſolate: ſome think that waſted that is, bereaved, or void of heart, may do well in this place, as before v. 7. of the young man, we had it: void of underſtanding. And certainly that ſenſe may fit ſuch a woman very well: yea though ſhe be granted (as moſt of that way:) ſubtile and crafty too. For there be none commonly, more unwiſe and fooliſh, as to the main end, to which all true wiſdom, or folly is referred; (as we obſerved before out of Ariſtotle:) than thoſe that are moſt ſubtile and crafty in their ordinary dealings and converſation; to bring ſome particular ends to paſſe, which they make their whole ſtudy. And to go no further than this very life, and this preſent world: How miſerable is the end commonly, of ſuch creatures? and how baſe and deſpicable, in the eyes of all men; how much abhorred and deteſted by them that have any ſenſe of ingenuity, or generoſity, are their courſes? Beſides daily affronts and ſcorn from them by whom they live; and in many places, legal puniſhments. We ſay therefore, the ſenſe is good: but whether their ſuppoſition be true, is that which I more queſtion. Two places are quoted for this ſenſe, Eſ. 1. 8. urbs devaſtata: or, deſolata. Indeed, the vulgar Latine hath it there, civitas quæ vaſtatur: but moſt other tranſlations, with the Chaldee paraphraſe; obſeſſa: or to that effect. So that we can build but little upon this place. The ſecond place, is out of the ſame Prophet, Eſ. 65. 4. where tranſlations are very divers: ſome ſpeluncis: ſome delubris: the Chaldee, cadaveribus mortuorum: Jun. cuſtodita: our Engliſh, monuments. I find none, but Aben Ezra quoted for that ſenſe. So that this ſignification of the word having no better ground; it will be much ſafer to ſtick to the known, and unqueſtionable. See alſo upon verſe 11. lowd and ſtubborne.

V. 11. She is loud and ſtubborn] He ſets down ſome proprieties of an harlot, which agree very well with thoſe deſcriptions we find of them in ancient Comicks; as that ſhe is clamorous, impudent, unruly, never at home, and the like: ſome of which proprieties are repeated again, Chap. 9 13. but ſome there alſo, which may ſeem contrary: as that ſhe is ſimple and knoweth nothing: contrary to what he ſaith here, in the verſe before, that ſhe is ſubtile of heart. We might anſwer in general, as before, that all ſuch marks and deſcriptions of manners muſt alwayes be read with a reſervation, ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ; that is, for the moſt part: which ſuppoſeth, that the contrary may be true ſometimes. See alſo upon verſe 10. ſubtile. But whether the ſame be intended there alſo, as is here ſpoken of, and deſcribed, is a great queſtion: of which, ſee more there.

V. 12. Now ſhe is without, &c.] He inſiſteth the more upon this, becauſe in thoſe times and countries, it was not the faſhion for honeſt women to be much abroad, nor without great occaſion: as by ancient Writers, Menander, and divers others, doth appear; And St. Paul, it ſeems, would have it the faſhion, every where; who among other things, requireth in vertuous and godly women, that they ſhould be οἰκουροὶ, Keepers at home, Tit. 2. 5.

V. 13. and kiſſed him] It was very ordinary among men (in thoſe dayes: among the Romans eſpecially:) to kiſſe one another (being friends) when they met in the way. Martial maketh mention of it, often in his Epigrams: yea and complains of it, becauſe it was a great hinderance to men that went about their buſineſſe, to be ſo often interrupted in the ſtreets. Onely in the extremity of Winter they forbare: or at leaſt, they were thought uncivil, (as by the ſame Martial doth appear) that did not then forbear. But that the ſame was done by and towards women too, that they kiſſed, and were kiſſed in the ſtreets; I mean civil women of honeſt reputation: I do not remember neither among the Romans, nor elſewhere. So then I take this for a certain ſign, that this here ſpoken of was a publick whore.

with an impudent face ſaid] Heb. ſhe ſtrengthened her face, and ſaid.

V. 14. I have peace-offerings with me] Heb. peace-offerings are upon me. Some Interpreters would have theſe peace-offerings, here mentioned to have reference to the young man, as though ſhe intended to ſay, that ſhe had made a vow to God concerning him, either for his good health, or her meeting with him, or both: and ſhould now acknowledge, and congratulate her ſelf, that ſhe hath obtained her wiſh; or to that effect. But certainly they are miſtaken, that think ſo. In ancient times, when ſacrifices were in uſe, both among the Jewes, and elſewhere, almoſt all the world over, they ſeldom did make any feaſt, (not ſober houſe-keepers, at leaſt) but when they did ſacrifice: whence it is, that as the word feaſt with us, which properly doth ſignifie a holy day, is taken for an invitation, and merry meeting; ſo ſacrifices in the Scripture is ſometimes (as Prov. 17. 1.) taken for good chear. Hence are thoſe expreſſions in Comicks, Rem divinam facio; uſed as a preface to an invitation: and, Sacrificant: dant inde partem majorem mihi, &c. and the like. Now ſacrifices, among the Hebrews, were of ſeveral kinds. For in ſome, (as in Holocauſts) nothing at all was reſerved; but all conſumed to ſmoak and aſhes. In others, the Prieſt had all the fleſh that was left: it was his due by the Law. In ſome others again, (of which kind were thoſe, that were called peace-offerings, properly: of which we read, Levit. 7. and elſewhere,) the greateſt part went to the offerer himſelf, who was at the charge of the ſacrifice: and thoſe were the ſacrifices that cauſed invitations and good chear. Here therefore, I have peace-offerings with me, is, in effect, I have good proviſion at home: this day I make a feaſt, &c.

this day have I payed my vows] Which declareth that harlots outwardly will ſeem holy and religious, both becauſe they may the better deceive others, and alſo flatter themſelves; thinking, by obſerving of ceremonies and offerings, to make ſatisfaction for their ſins. Which is the religion of many in theſe dayes, who think if they hear ſo many Sermons in one weeke, they need no other convoy to heaven, though otherwiſe very vicious; as malicious, covetous, fraudulent, railers, whoremongers, drunkards, and the like: and ſome miniſters are well enough content they ſhould think ſo, who therefore make that a ſpecial mark of the godly; (and will not allow that title to far honeſter men:) becauſe they reape no ſmall profit by it.

V. 15. to meet thee] As if her affection were, to him onely, which was ready for the firſt comer.

V. 18. our fill of love] be drunken with loves, Chap. 5. 19.

untill the morning] Which ſhews her unſatiable luſt.

V. 20 He hath taken a bag of money] There is no fear of my husbands ſudden return; for he hath taken money with him to ſupply the charge of a long journey. See before upon ver. 10. with the attire of an harlot. Certainly, if this woman had a husband really, and feared he ſhould know what ſhe did, ſhe was (which nevertheleſſe is moſt agreeable to the deſcription here made of her,) no common profeſſed harlot: it being one of the proprieties of ſuch, to be unmarried; or if married, yet to have the conſent and approbation of their husbands, in what they profeſſe. Now if according to the deſcription in the former verſes, a common harlot; and that what ſhe pretends here of a husband, be but a meer pretence, as we ſhew there; it muſt be underſtood likewiſe, that ſhe was a ſtranger, of another nation, and not a daughter of Iſrael: it being againſt the Law, Deut. 23. 17. that any ſuch ſhould be allowed to make profeſſion of that imfamous life. However, it muſt be added withal, that the word Deut. 23. 17. is קרשה, which whether it be the ſame as זונה here, in theſe Proverbs, and in the next verſe there, there is ſome queſtion: and in caſe the words (as is moſt probable) be the ſame; yet from 1 King. 3. 16. and other places of Scripture, but eſpectally in this Book of Proverbs, it may as probably be conceived, that notwithſtanding that law, Deut. 23. 17. by a kind of connivency, divers that were Iſraelitiſh women born, were permitted: but ſeparated though from the reſt, not onely by the common imputation of prophaneneſſe, but alſo by legal excommunications: ſo that they were either ſtrangers, really, and by birth; or held as ſtrangers, in the common eſtimation of men.

with him] Heb. in his hand.

the day appointed] Or, the new moon. We find the ſame word, Pſal. 81. 4. and not any where elſe in the Scripture. There tranſlated, the time appointed; in our Engliſh, as here; the day appointed: but there alſo, by ſome, New-moon. The common opinion is, that it comes from כסס which ſignifies, to reckon, to caſt up: to ſumme up: and ſo the noune of it, to ſignifie an appointed time, or ſeaſon. But they that would have it to ſignifie New-moon, they fetch it from כפה to cover, becauſe ſay they, the Moon is then covered by the Sun. But there is yet another interpretation of the word, as it may be ſuppoſed to deſcend from that radix, and that is, the feaſt of tabernacles: more commonly called פכוה, from פכך to cover, becauſe of the covering of boothes and tabernacles, wherein it was celebrated. This laſt interpretation may fit perchance, Pſal. 81. 4. but New-moon, much better here: and better too I am of opinion, than appointed day. For new-moons, were great Feſtivities; as appeareth by the words of David, 1 Sam. 20. 5. and if a man had occaſion to travel, yet it is likely he would endeavour to be at home againſt ſuch a Feſtivity. And divers Heathens in imitation of the Jewes, that lived among them; obſerved thoſe days, and forbare ordinary employments, as may appear by Horace, where the New-moon feſtivity, is called, triaſima ſabbatha.

V. 21. With her much fair ſpeech ſhe cauſeth him to yeild] Fair words prevail more to draw men to looſneſſe, than wanton geſtures, Chap. 5. 3.

with the flattering of her lips ſhe forced him] When once they begin to yeild, they go on, as it were by force.

V. 22. He goeth after her ſtraightway] If he had taken time to conſider of the ſin, and puniſhment, he might have eſcaped.

ſtraightway] Heb. ſuddenly.

as an oxe goeth to the ſlaughter] Which, thinking he goeth to the paſture, goeth to the ſhambles or as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks] VVho goeth cheerfully, not knowing that he ſhall be puniſhed. Or he may meane more generally, that the place whither this young man (though merrily and cheerfully, through his ignorance and folly,) is going, is in very deed no other, than as a place of ſlaughter to the oxe; or publick ſtocks, to one that is condemned to them: who probably (if he be not very deſperate and ſhamleſſe) goes but heavily to them, to become a publick ſpectacle, &c. and ſo would this young man go to a harlots houſe, as heavily, and more, did he rightly know whither he goeth.

as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks] Heb. as the ſtocks are for the correction of the fool. Or, and [to] the ſtocks, [which are] for the correction of the fool. This is the order of the words, in the Hebrew, which is ſomewhat intricat: and though our Engliſh doth expreſſe the ſenſe very well; yet that Engliſh, cannot, Grammatically, be made of the words; becauſe קופר being in regimine, as Mercer well obſerveth againſt Aben-Ezra; קופר אויר correction of a fool; or, the fool; muſt go together, and cannot be parted in the ſenſe. Therefore Buxtorfius hath another interpretation of the words: Et ſicut [vir] compedis ad eruditionem ſtultorum. It is very ordinary in the Hebrew, to leave out one of the ſubſtantives, whereof the ſaid Buxtorfius hath collected ſundry examples in his Grammer, and reduced them to certain rules. But this very Book of Proverbs will afford us enough, for our turn in this place. Chap. 17. 4. falſitas; for, vir falſitatis: a lyar. Chap. 10. 18. lying lips; for, a man of lying lips: as we ſhall ſee there. Chap. 14. 1. fooliſhneſſe, or folly: that is, a fooliſh woman. So here, velut compes: that is, vir compedis, or compeditus: and that is, (as I conceive; for I cannot make ſenſe of it otherwiſe: though he doth not expreſſe himſelf ſo cleerly:) compedibus implicandus, which doth imply; as a man goeth to the ſtocks, [which are] the correction [or puniſhment] of fooles: Or, as a man that is to be put in the ſtocks, to the correction of fools.

V. 23. Till a dart ſtrike thorow his liver] He ſhews the blockiſhneſſe of the young man, who never thinks of his danger, till he have undone himſelf.

ſtrike thorow his liver] Job 28. 24, 25.

ſnare] Chap. 1. 17. Eccleſ. 9 12.

V. 24. Hearken unto me now therefore] Being warned by this terrible example, harken rather to my wholeſom words, than to the alluring ones of harlots,

V. 26. For ſhe hath caſt down many wounded] That is, ſhe hath wounded many: Or, many have been caſt down, by thoſe wounds they received from her.

yea, many ſtrong men have been ſlain by her] Heb. and all that are ſlain by her are ſtrong men. Or, and they many; all that are ſlain by her. And they that are ſlain by her are many. So Junius, and ſome others. And it is well obſerved by ſome, that the Hebrew word, doth not onley ſignifie ſtrong: but many, alſo. So Num. 31. 1. and Pſal. 35. 18. according to moſt tranſlations.

many ſtrong men have been ſlain by her] Many ſtout men have been overcome by harlots; yea, the moſt of them that ſhe deſtroyes are ſtout men; ſo that the ſtrength of a man is oft overcome by the ſleight of a woman: none hath been ſo ſtrong, but, being careleſs, they have been overcome by luſt, Jud. 16.

V. 27 Her houſe is the way to hell] Chap. 2. 18. & 5. 5. Heb. the wayes to hell are in her houſe; that is, there are many wayes to hell in the harlots houſe.

way] Heb. wayes.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. Doth not wiſdom] This whole Chapter containeth nothing elſe, but the praiſes of wiſdom; humane and create, to verſe 22. By me, &c. Divine and uncreate, to verſe 32. Now therefore hearken unto me, &c. where beginneth, for concluſion, an exhortation unto men, to embrace ſo uſeful and heavenly a thing: VViſdom her ſelf, by a proſopopaia, under the perſon of a woman, being made to commend her ſelf: which though among men be not allowable (Chap. 27. 2. Let another man, &c.) becauſe we have nothing that we have not received, 1 Cor. 4. 7.

and becauſe the moſt perfect, in ſtrict judgement, are but as improfitable ſervants : Luke 17.10.in God, it is quite another thing; of whatſoever we can ſay by way of praiſe, is rather his nature, than what we call praiſe among men : and of whom we can ſay nothing properly, that may bring us unto ſome conceit of his nature, but but by way of praiſe and admiration. Beſides, that the benefit of divine praiſes, doth not redound unto God; but unto men, who by thoſe praiſe come to the knowledge and love of God; wherein is their felicitie. Some Expoſitors would have Chriſt to be the onely ſubject; but they give no reaſon at all, but that they think it not convenient, that theſe two ſhould be confounded, and repreſented under one perſon. But when they come to expound the firſt part of the Chapter, to verſe 22.they ſwallow far greater inconveniences, and improbabilities, to apply all to Chriſt's perſon: and whatſoever they bring: to prove that Chriſt muſt be underſtood, is taken from, or hath reference to that which follows, from verſe 22. By me, &c. which we alſo interpret of Chriſt. So that all in effect they do ſay, is, they do not think it probable, that Solomon would joyn divine ſubſtantial wiſdom, with that which is communicated unto men. Neither indeed doth he. For he ſpeaks of them in order, by themſelves. And why not of both, in one Chapter; and under one wiſdom; ſince all human wiſdom, even that of artificers and tradeſmen, is, in the word of God, adſcribed unto God? See before upon Chap. 1.ver.2.to know wiſdom.&c. the ſecond annotation: and Chap, 3.19.The Lord by wiſdom, &c.

Doth not wiſdom cry, and underſtanding,&c.] Solomon declareth, that man is cauſe of his own perdition; and that he can pretend no ignorance, foraſmuch as God calleth to all men aloud by his miniſters in his Church, to walk in the wayes of piety. See more upon Chap.1.20.wiſdom cryeth without,&c.

V. 2. in the top of high places] In the higheſt places, where ſhe may beſt be heard. Teachers were wont to be placed higher than their auditors, Neh.8.4.Act. 22,3.

by the way] Where men commonly paſs by, that ſhe may be heard of all men. Thus wiſdom ſpeaks openly, in the light not caring who hear her; whereas, the harlot ſpeaks in darkneſſe, and corners, Chap. 7.9,12.

V. 3. She crieth] Heb. They cry, Chap.1.20.

She crieth at the gates] Where the people reſorted for juſtice, and which they paſſed thorow for commerce, Ruth 4 1.Pſal.127.5. Jer.17.19.

gates] Heb. hand, or ſide of the gates, entry] Heb. mouth.

at the coming in at the doores] Where they muſt needs go in, and out upon all occaſions.

V. 4. O men] That is, great men, and mean, as Pſal.49.2. Wiſdom cries to all ſorts, excellent things] Chap, 22.20.See there.

V.6. I wil ſpeak of excellent things] Heb. princes : that is, words that do as much excell others, as Princes do the people : or, words that all men ought to be guided by, as by Princes. So we call the ſentences of Judges in times paſt, ruling caſes. Or, [words] of Princes : (according to Buxtorfius in his Theſ. Grammo.) that is, words that beſt become Princes, both as teachers, (becauſe of their authoritie:) and learners; becauſe moſt neceſſary unto them, who are to be examples unto others, See more in the Preface, concerning Proverbs in generall : and upon Chap. 1. 1. Proverbs : and the references there.

V. 7. my mouth ſhall ſpeak truth] There is nothing but truth in wiſdoms ſpeech; whereas, in the beſt mens ſayings there may be errours, as water mixt with wine, and droſſe with gold, Pſalm.12.6. & 19. 10.

mouth] Heb. palate. chap.5.3.

wickedneſſe is an abomination to my lips] I will ſet out the abomination of wickedneſſe by my lips. I will deſcribe it, and expoſe it to the view of all men, that it ſhall be abhorred by all, that will read and conſider. So moſt, or to the purpoſe. But becauſe wickedneſſe is often adſcribed to the tongue, or lips in Scripture; partly becauſe, out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, uſually, and partly, becauſe, from words, men uſually proceed to actions; (ſo Pſal.52.2,3,4. thy tongue deviſeth miſchief, &c. and Pſal. 140. 11. an evil ſpeaker, a wicked man, &c, according to the margin there, and Prov. 12. 13. 14. The wicked is ſnared, &c.) we may extend the words to actions alſo; as a proteſtation of perfect integritie and innocencie.

an abomination to my lips] Hebrew , the abomination of my lips.

V. 8. froward] Heb. wreathed.

V. They are all plain] Heb. right before him; that is, obvious, and eaſie to be found. We may not infer from hence, that the Scripture is plain, and eaſie to be underſtood by all that will read it. The contrarie is well known to them that have taken paines in a right way, that is (humilitie and conſtant praying, and a godly life, alwayes preſuppoſed:) by the help of good literature and knowledge in the tongues: (not by indulging to groundleſſe phanſies, and enthuſiaſmes,) to underſtand it. But this, That thoſe things that are abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, in point of faith; but eſpecially, to direct us to a godly life, (the beſt means to a ſound and ſaving faith :) are obvious enough to be underſtood, if men will read with diligence, and humilitie; and ſtudy a good conſcience (without which no knowledge is profitable) at the ſame time. The words alſo may be tranſlated : They are all ſtraight, to him that underſtandeth, as ſome would have them. And the ſenſe is good, ſo too : and more agreeable to the ſecond member. All men are not ſatisfied concerning the juſtice and equitie of all that they read in the Scripture. It hath made many; ſome, profeſſed; ſome, concealed athieſts. Our Saviour ſaith in a place, If any man will doe his will, he ſhould underſtand his doctrine, John 7. 17.) that is one condition : a man muſt ſtudy puritie of heart, and integritie of life, that will be a proficient in the knowledge of Scriptures: and Solomon ſaith here, he muſt be מבין one that underſtandeth: that is who doth heartily deſire knowledge, and underſtanding, and doth apply himſelf to the means, with conſtancie and ſedulitie. The deed ſometimes in Scripture, is put for the endeavour, ſo Geneſ. 37. 21. and he delivered them out of their hands, that is, he did his beſt to do it, and did think he ſhould. And Exod.8 18, the Magicians did ſo, that is, they did endeavour it, but could not, as followeth there.

to them that find knowledge] that is, that endeavour to find it, that are ſtudious of it, and apply themſelves to the means. See the former Annotations : and before, Chapter 2. 3. 4. If thou crieſt after knowledge, &c. If thou ſeekeſt after ſilver, &c.

V. 10. and not ſilver] That is, rather than ſilver, Hoſ.6.6.

V. 11. For wiſdom is better than rubies] Job 28. 15. Pſal. 19. 10. Chap.3. 15.& 16.16.

V. 12. I wiſdom dwell with prudence] Heb. ſubtiltie. See upon Chap. 1.4. ſubtiltie. And here we may adde, that it is ordinarie in ordinarie language; whether ſpoken ; or written ; when we are very earneſt upon the commendation of a thing, to give it the names and titles of thoſe things, (if there be any analogy, or ground in nature :) that we know to be in requeſt with them to whom we addreſs our ſpeech. So we may call good water, (when, and where it may be drunk ſafely; and there be in ſome places of the world, men and women of qualitie, we know, that drink no other, all their life:) wine, as if one ſhould ſay : this is my wine, my claret, and my ſack: and of any wholſome ordinary meat, here I have my partriges, and my feaſants : which every man would eaſily underſtand. So here, when Solomon doth adſcribe wit, and ſubtilty to true wiſdom, that is, to pietie and religion; he hath a reſpect unto the generality of men, who affect wit and ſubtilty (whence is that of the Poet : Aurum et opes et rura frequens donabit amicus. Qui velit ingenio cedere rarus erit, aboue all things. Such an expreſſion hath Arcianus (who of all philoſophers, greeke or Latin, both in language and doctrine, comes neareſt to Chriſtians ſimplicity;) upon Epictatus, lib 2. c. 2. περὶ ἀπραξίας : Τοῦτό σοι προοίμιον : τοῦτο διήγησις : τοῦτο πίστις : τοῦτο νίκη : τοῦτο ἐπίλογος. So the Apoſtle that Godlineſſe with content, is great gaine, 1 Tim. 6. 6 not intending gaine, as ordinarily taken, but that there is more happineſſe in godlineſſe, accompanied (as alwaies it is) with a contented mind, than in great wealth. In the ſame ſenſe we may ſay that all wit, and craft, and ſubtiltie yea wiſedome and eloquence: and all generally that is commendable and much deſired among men, is included in religion and godlineſſe, from which eternal bliſſe and happineſſe doth deſcend. And yet, in all this come ſhort of the ſtoicks, (whoſe philoſophy had much Chriſtianitie in it, though long before Chriſt, in great eſteem and ſplendor :) who maintaned of their wiſe man, that he was the only, not rich and valiant only; but faire and beautifull man of the world.

witty] Or, ſkilful.

V. 13. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil He then that doth not hate evil, feareth not the Lord, Chap. 16. 6. Gen. 20. 11. Job 1. 1. Pſal. 97. 10. This verſe doth ſomewhat interrupt the context; neither doth it properly contain, or concerne the praiſes of wiſdom, what ſome Rabbins have deviſed, to bring it to that, may be read in Mercerus: but it gives me little content. But ſince we have many ſuch interruptions, in this booke. I know not why we ſhould much ſtand upon it here. It may be thought that Solomon having ſpoken ſomewhat in commendarion of wiſedome, in the phraſe and language of the world; adſcribing to it ſubtilty, (which is often taken in a bad ſenſe)and the knowledge of witty inventions: which is an ambiguous word too as well as the former : he might think it ſeaſonable immediatly to inſert this of the fear of the Lord, &c. to prevent any either abuſe of his words; or miſtake of his intention. But this is not very materiall.

pride and arrogancie, and the evil way] Here be two words in the Hebrew, (גאוה and גאון) which are but one word, both in ſenſe and ſound, as if this word pride we ſhould make, pridneſſe, and prideſhip. Neither can it be ſaid, that it was for want of other words, whereby to expreſs pride and arrogancie. More true therefore, that it is an idiotiſme and elegancie of the Hebrew tongues, thus ſometimes by repeating the ſame word, to intimate and include all particulars, all diviſions, I mean, and differences of the ſame kind. So for example, Eſay 3 1. For behold the Lord doth take away from Jeruſalem, the ſtay and ſtaffe : in the Hebrew it is but one word with a little variation of the termination only. But then, what by that repetition of the ſame word is intended ; is immedially after declared, in this, and the following verſes ; by enumeration of particulars; the whole ſtay of bread, and the whole ſtay of water. The mightie man, &c Now we know there be divers kinds of pride; internal, external, ſpiritual worldly: Some are proud even in their humilitie, becauſe they are not proud. It is a large ſubject. All kind of pride is very abominable to God. See more upon Chap. 3. 34. He ſcorneth the ſcorner,&c.

V. 14. Counſel is mine, and ſound wiſedome] Hebr תושיה ſound wiſedome, here in oppoſition to humane wiſedome, which oftentimes proves folly, not in point of ſalvation onely, but in regard of the world, and worldly buſineſſes. In ſo much that ſome have doubted, whether there be any ſuch thing as worldly wiſedome, and prudence, really; becauſe they ſee it ſo often diſappointed and contrary events to follow. Of the Hebrew word, ſee upon Chap. 2. 7. ſound wiſedome for the right.

I have ſtrength] I have power to bring my counſels to effect, or, I give both policy and power.

V. 15. By me Kings reign] Rulers cannot rule juſtly, nor eſtabliſh their authoritie without wiſedome: for from Chriſt they have their power, and wiſdom to uſe it aright. See more upon Chap. 10. 11, 16. A divine ſentence, &c. Or, if Chriſt, the Eternal and uncreated Wiſdom, as afterward, be here properly intended; it agreeth with Coloſ. 1. 16. For by him all things were created, &c. and Rom. 13. 1. There is no power but of God.

and nobles] Heb. נדיבים: that is, according to the proprietie of the word, voluntarii, ſpontanei. And becauſe nothing better beſeems a Prince or great man, than to be free, and to do all things freely: Princes, and governours alſo are ſo called. Both ſignifications are very uſual and obvious in Scripture. Princes and Governours, I ſay, whether good, or bad: free, or exactours, without (as in many words it falls out:) any reſpect to the etymology. See Pſal. 83. 11. make their Nobles, &c. However, I cannot like ſo well of the Greek, that expreſſeth it here by τύραννοι, though I know that even by later Authours, the word is ſome times taken in the better ſence, & that it is true of Tyrants, as well as of Kings, (though in a different reſpect:) that they are made, not vicious, or tyrannical, but great and proſperous, not in favour to them, but in juſt indignation, and for a puniſhment, to others: by God, the ſupreme Ruler, and diſpoſer of all things.

V. 17. thoſe that ſeek me early ſhall find me] That is, they that ſeek me in my word diligently, with a deſire to profit by it, as ſtudents do, that riſe betimes to get knowledge.

V. 18. Riches and honour are with me] Chap. 3. 16. See there durable riches and righteouſneſs.] By theſe words Solomon doth ſeem clearly enough to interpret himſelf, what he principally, (if not onely) intended by theſe words before, Riches and Honour, &c. For who is ſuch a ſtranger in the things of the world, that knows not that worldly wealth and riches are the moſt uncertain and unconſtant things of the world? Who hath not ſaid it, and obſerved it, that hath any occaſion to ſpeak of riches? And who better, more pregnantly, and elegantly, than wiſe Solomon? witneſs thoſe words of his. Chap. 23. 4. 5. Labour not to be rich, ceaſe from thine own wiſdome: (for that indeed is the chief wiſedome of the world, and according to which men among worldlings are ſtiled wiſe:) Wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon that which is not? For riches certainly, &c. So that if Solomon had ſaid no more than durable riches, we might have underſtood him: But adding righteouſneſs, we are the more confirmed in this ſence. For the riches and juſtice, (which ſome would have tranſlated, riches of juſtice; as if there were a regimen in the words; but as I conceive not ſo rightly:) I take to be oppoſed to that which is called by Chriſt, (and I believe was ſo commonly) The Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, and the unrighteous Mammon: (that is, deceitful, tranſitory, inconſtant:) Luk 16 9. 11. which words, they that underſtand of ill gotten wealth and riches; beſides that, it is very inconvenient and improbable, that Chriſt ſhould bid us to be liberal or charitable out of il gotten goods, without mention of any ſatisfaction to be made; may be refuted by the oppoſite member; in the 11. verſe, if you have not been faithful in the unrighteous Mammon, who will commit to your truſt the true riches? as in the 10 verſe ἐλάχιστον, that which is leaſt, (to wit, worldly wealth, ſo inconſtant, and ſo periſhable:) to that which is much, or eternal. I like of Beza's tranſlation here very well, who renders it, Mammonâ fallac, and I wiſh the Engliſh (ſince there is ſo much ground for it) had been ſo too: deceitfull Mammon, in ſtead of unrighteous Mammon, or Mammon of unrighteouſneſs. See alſo upon Chapter 11. 18. a deceitfull worke and ſure reward. I will not ſay that ἡ ἀπάτη τοῦ πλούτου, the deceitfulneſs of riches, Mat. 4. 19. muſt be ſo underſtood, neither is it the ſame word in the Greek; though it may bear that ſence too in that place. Beſides, that juſtice, (whether by it we underſtand godlineſs, or general uprightneſs or juſtice preciſely, as the crown or foundation of the other vertues, it matters not here) hath a more peculiar relation to eternal life in the Scripture phraſe, may appear by that ſpeech, the reſurrection of the juſt, Luke 14. 13. for which John 5. 29. we have the reſurrection of life; that is, to eternal life; as by the oppoſite reſurrection of damnation doth appear. Now though we do not ſo well approve that a regimen ſhould be made of the word here, in point of Grammatical conſtruction, as we ſaid before; yet the ſence by the figure called ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, (whereof many examples be in Scripture, as, thy ſorrow and thy conception; Gen. 3. 16. for the ſorrows or pains of this conception, &c.) the ſence I ſay, may be all one: riches and righteouſneſs: for riches of righteouſneſs. Though this too is more than needs: ſince righteouſneſs alone, without any ſuch, whether Grammatical or figurative conſtruction after durable riches, may well ſtand for a further expreſſion of eternal life. We may obſerve beſides, that in the following verſes; juſtice is not joyned with ſilver or gold, but in ſome manner oppoſed unto them; ſo that Solomon having as it were by way of condeſcenſion to the weaknes of man, begun with promiſe of ſilver and gold; he doth now ſeem to recal or rather to interpret himſelf; propoſing unto us juſtice (that is, eternal life) as ſo much better, and which doth virtually comprehend in it ſelf whatſoever can be deſired. See alſo v. 21. to inherit ſubſtance, and the reference there.

V. 19. My fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold] Chap. 3. 14.

V. 20. lead] Or, walk: or make to walk.

in the midſt of the paths of judgement] For there can be no true juſtice or judgement, which is not directed by this wiſdom

V. 21. to inherit ſubſtance] Heb. להנחיל יש. See before upon Chap. 2. 7. He layeth up ſound wiſdom for the righteous, &c. I think true being, (as the word is expounded by moſt here) would have been a truer and more plain tranſlation. It is true that ſubſtance as it is interpreted by Platoniſts, who deny (as we ſaid in the reference,) that any thing had reality, of being, that was not eternal; or at leaſt, that was corruptible and temporary, may do as well. But otherwiſe, the word is ambiguous in ordinary Engliſh, and as I conceive, apt to be miſtaken by the vulgar.

and I will fil] Or, and fill.

V. 22. The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way] Much ado there hath been of old about theſe words, as unto them that are not altogether unacquainted with Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories and Hereſies, cannot be unknown. For what is here in the Hebrew קנני, well rendred poſſeſſed me: was by the Septuagint tranſlated ἔκτισέ με that is, created me: which the Arrians, who denied the Eternal Deity of Chriſt, took hold of, and made great boſt of this authority: and the Fathers, moſt of them for want of knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, were much put to it to anſwer them: yet many anſwers were deviſed; but among them all, not many very ſolid and ſatisfactory. Since the Hebrew Text hath been better underſtood, moſt men have been of opinion, that the Greek Tranſlation was right enough at firſt; but ſince that, either of purpoſe, or caſually by reaſon of the affinitie of the words, depraved: that is, that whereas they had rendred it, ἔκτησέ με (with an η from κτάω poſſideo:) that is, poſſeſſed me: it had been made afterward, ἔκτισέ με (with an ι from κτίζω: (that is, created me. Certain it is, that Aquila, and ſome other later Greek Interpreters had rendred it by ἐκτήσατό με, which is the ſame, but more uſual, as ἔκτησέ με. This though it be, at firſt hearing, very probable, and by moſt received; yet upon further ſearch it will appear, as I conceive not true. For firſt, the authour of Eccleſiaſticus, who lived about that time when the Septuagint did, and often, (as was obſerved in the Preface) expreſſeth Solomon, he hath the word κτίζειν often; and varied by ſeveral tenſes, Eccleſiaſticus 24. 89. (ὁ κτίσης ἁπάντων καὶ ὁ κτίσας με —— πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς ἔκτισέ με:) and though the book be now extant in Greek only, yet it was firſt (as all acknowledge) written in Hebrew: ſo that no queſtion at all can be made but that he intended, and ſo underſtood by Solomon, created; and not poſſeſſed. To him agrees the Chalde Paraphraſe, where Solomon is expreſſed: אלהא בראני בריש בריתיה, &c. And not here only, but alſo Gen 14. 19. and 22. where the word קנה is found, of God; both the ſaid Chalde Paraphraſe, and the Septuagint Interpreters, uſe the ſame words; the one, their ברא and the other, their κτίζειν. No queſtion therefore can be made, but they intended created: but whether rightly is another thing. For my part I could be content to believe, and I think I ſee ground enough for it, that the Hebrew word קנה had anciently both ſignifications to poſſeſſe and to create: (and ſo it may be in the fore-quoted place, Gen. 14. 19. 22. Poſſeſſor of heaven and earth, Creator of heaven and earth. with the LXX. and Chalde would not be much amiſs: and though I make no queſtion at all, but to poſſeſſe, is the more proper ſignification in this place, yet if it were granted that the word might be created alſo, I think we ſhould grant no more, but what might conveniently enough be interpreted according to St. Pauls expreſſion of Chriſt, Coloſſ. 1. 15. the Image of the living God, the firſt-born, (πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως) of every creature. Neither is the word ברא ſo proper to things that are made, or produced of nothing; but that ſometimes (as procreare, in Latine:) it is uſed of generation alſo; as Pſal 102 18 And the people ſhall be created, or born: according to the moſt Interpreters.

poſſeſſed me,] A very proper word to expreſs the eternal generation of Chriſt the ſon of God. Of a temporal, but myſtical generation it is uſed, Deut. 32 6 where Moſes ſpeaks to the Iſraelites: Is not he (God) thy father; קניך poſſeſſor tuus; as Junius his margent there; our Engliſh; that hath bought thee: ſo it may be too: but poſſeſſor is as literal and proper to the word; not improper to the place, and coherence; which is: Hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee?

in the beginning of his wayes;] That is, of creation: then poſſeſſed by him, and therefore before any creation: that is, in effect eternal, juſt. So S. John, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with in the beginning of his wayes: before his works of old]The Hebrews, becauſe(as is here obſerved by Mercer,) they have no proper word to expres Eternity,(for עולם is properly,ſæculum:קדם antiquity; and ſo of the reſt:) they are wont to ſet it out by expreſsions of times and things before the Creation: which though improper of it ſelf,yet is moſt ſuitable!(Eternity being a thing incomprehenſible to man) to mens apprehenſions and capacities. See upon verſ.25. concerning the mountains.

God(here poſſeſſed:)and the word was God, &c πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως the firſt-born of every creature. Col. 1 15. and ἀρχὴ κτίσεως τοῦ θεοῦ, the begining of the creation of God: (that is, of all that was created by God,) Apoc. 3.14. And here indeed as we noted before, begins another perſon to ſpeak;or if you will the ſame perſon; but in different relations: and ſo to verſ 32.where beginneth the exhortation grounded upon theſe ſeveral reſpective prayſes of wiſdom: ſee at the beginning of the Chap.upon v. 1. Doth not wiſdom.

of old] Pſal. 93.2. Heb from then: that is, before his works were made in the Creation.

V. 23. I was ſet up from everlaſting] Heb. נסכתי which may alſo be tranſlated, I was anointed: and is the ſame word (there actively; here paſsively:) uſed of Chriſt,Pſal.2.6. Yet have I ſet my King, &c.Chriſt was anointed King over the Church by Gods Decree,before the world was

V. 24. I was brought forth] He was begotten by the Father from Eternity.

V. 25. Before the mountains were ſetled] Some tranſlate merſi eſſent,or immerſi:that is, were ſunk: with reference to the waters, which are ſuppoſed lower than the earth: to expreſs a deep foundation, which ſuch a vaſt bulk (as if it were a building: as mountains are,need to ſtand firm: Others, fixi eſſent; were fixed; that is, in effect,ſetled.Such an expreſſion of Gods Eternity we have Pſal. 90.2. Before the mountains were brought forth, or that thou hadſt formed the earth and the world: even from everlaſting to everlaſting thou art God. So that the Arrians had no cauſe from ſuch expreſsions as theſe, fitted to the capacity of man, to argue againſt the eternity of Chriſt, the Son of God. See before upon the 22. verſ.

V. 26. fields] Or, open places.

nor the higheſt place of the duſt of the world] Heb. the beginng of the duſts of the world: that is, before the matter of the earth was made, וראש עפרות תבל which may alſo be tranſlated, & caput pulverum terræ: id eſt,potiorem partem: as Mercer expreſſeth it: that is, the head,or principal parts of the earth.

V. 27. When he prepared the heavens] Chriſt was with the Father in the creation of the world, when he made the heavens, girded in the Sea,ſet the clouds faſt above,and the fountains beneath.

a compaſs] Or, a circle.

V. 29. When he gave to the ſea his Decree] Gen. 2. 9,10. Job 38. 10,11.Pſalm104. 9. The Decree of the Sea,to keep it alwayes in its bounds.

V. 30. as one brought up with him] As a child with the father. Brought up by him, I think would have been more proper to that ſignification of the original word, (alumnus, in Latine) which moſt imbrace in this place. Brought up with him, ſhould rather (if I miſtake not in the propriety of the Engliſh phraſe) be ὁμοτρόφιμος; than alumnus, Rabbi Solomon indeed doth uſe that expreſsion in the Expoſition of the word, (the original word I mean; אמון) educata cum eo; but Mercerus doth intepprer him, apud illum: and אצלו I believe will bear by him (or as the Chalde) in latere ejus; as well as with him. But there be divers other Expoſitions of the word,followed by ſeveral Commentators. And this very interpretation of it by alumnus, is ambiguous; becauſe alumnus is both active and paſsive: either educatur, or educans: which is Junius his word and expreſsion in this place. See his notes there upon it; which is the ſence of many beſides him. Next unto him, the moſt received is artifex: which both the Septuagint, and the vulgar Latine;with ſome other of the Eaſtern tranſlations(the Chalde is for alumnus: (ſeem to aim at; ſo it would be in Engliſh I was coworker with him: or more literally I was a worker (or at work:) by him; or with him.) And this doth very well agree with the expreſsions of the Evangeliſt; (S. John ch.1. 3.) and of Saint Paul, Coloſſ. 1. 16.&c. And ſome that have taken the pains to examine the places,where the prepoſition אצל is uſed in Scripture (above ſixty in all) obſerve upon it, the diſtinct perſonalitie of this Wiſdom from the Father: becauſe never uſed in the ſcriptures, but of different ſubjects, and ſuppoſition.

I was dayly his delight]Heb. delights: that is, his greateſt delight: for even when the world was in making,God the Father took more pleaſure in his Son,than in his works.Agreeable to this,is that voice that came down from heaven concerning Chriſt when he was baptized,This is my wel beloved Son,in whom I am wel pleaſed:Matt.3.17.

rejoycing] Or, ſporting. So verſ. 31.

rejoycing alwayes before him] Heb. ſporting greatly, as little ones do before their parents. Or, rejoyceth with him in the works of the Creation. So the Pſalmiſt of God the Father, Pſal. 104. 31. The Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works.

V. 31. Rejoycing in the habitable part of his earth] Heb. ſporting greatly: ſo that the work of creation was no pain or labour, but a pleaſure to the Son of God.

my delights were with the ſons of men] Though he delighted in all the creatures, yet moſt of all in men; and came afterwards to dwell among them, John 1. 14. And if his wonderful love to the ſons of men; Himſelf ſpeaketh, John 15.13. Greater love hath no man than this,that he lay down his life for his friends. And here ends this excellent Character of Chriſt, as God,the Eternal Sonne of God the Father, the Saviour and Redeemer of men. Chriſtians, (ſincere Chriſtians) ſhould make much of ſuch paſſages,ſince that Chriſt to this day continueth, a ſtumbling block unto the Jews, and unto the Greeks (Heathens Mahometans, &c. the far greater part of the world) fooliſhneſs: Yea, and too many Chriſtians too, as Socinians, and others. I wiſh that even among them that are ſound enough in this point,there were not many that have found another way,of their own deviſing, without any ground of Scripture, to expoſe Chriſtianity to more contempt and ſcorn, and obloquy, than the greateſt myſteries of it,grounded upon aſſured revelation, could ever bring it to among infidels. They that ſhall reade Popiſh commentatours upon this Chapter:will eaſily underſtand what I mean. though I cannot without ſome horror,yet that the Reader may the better know how to value ſound Doctrine, grounded upon the Word of God; I will here give him ſome account of their extravagancies, that I ſay not blaſphemies: deteſted by none more, I verily believe than by the bleſſed virgin her ſelf, whom they would ſeem to honour. Beata Virgo, (ſaith Corn. à Lap.) fuit eſtque idea Sapientiæ: myſticè Dominus creavit & procedit Virgine, utpote Chriſti matrem,quaſi principium vivum, i.e.operum ſuorum,&c Beata virgo ab æterno prædeſtinata fuit, ut eſſet principium, i.e. prima princeps, & Domina omnium operum Dei: ut eſſet idea Sanctitatis, This may ſeem ſomewhat: but is litle or nothing in compariſon of what Salazar hath done, and yet he I know, not the firſt authour neither. He diſputeth it,and concludes it abſolutely, that omnia bona temporalia & ſpiritualia are in the power, and diſpoſing of the bleſſed Virgin: and that we may obtain velociorem ſalutem,(more quick and ſpeedier ſalvation or deliverance:)per matrem quam per Filium. And that the whole Trinity, Father,Sonne,and Holy Ghoſt, have paſſed in Heaven an abſolute Decree, ne quid unquam gratiæ, & auxilii ab ipſis in homines proficiſceretur, quod Virginis Oratio non impetraret: That is, (for I would have all men to take notice,) that no grace, favour, or aſſiſtance, ſhould iſſue from them to any, (a man or woman) that were not obtained (or granted,) at the entreaty of the Virgin. So he, and much more he hath there to the ſame purpoſe; ſo that I believe they that ſhall peruſe him, himſelf, will not find that I have done him any wrong. See alſo what hath been noted of Bonaventure's Pſalter, in the Preface upon the Pſalms.

V. 32. Now therefore hearken unto me] Seeing I am Eternal, and ſo dear unto God, and count you as my children, hearken to my counſel, and ye ſhall be happy.

bleſſed are they that keep my wayes] Pſalm 119. 1, 2. and 128. 2. Luke 11.28.

V. 34. Bleſſed is the man that heareth me] Chap.3.13.18.

waiting dayly at my gates]. No pains is too much to get wiſedome.

watching at the poſts of my doors] Men muſt take inſtruction when God offers it; and like ſcholars attend their maſters hours, verſ 17.

obtain] Heb. bring forth.

V. 35.Shall obtain favour of the Lord]Chap.3.4.So ſhalt thou find favour; &c. See there. Or, thou ſhalt obtain thy deſire whatſoever it is, of the Lord, Pſalm 145. 19. He will fulfil the deſire, &c. and John 9. 13.Now we know, &c. See upon Pſam 21. 2.his hearts deſire.

V. 36. all they that hate me love death.] Very emphatical.Hence we may learn, when it is in our power to prevent a miſchief; if we do not, we may be charged (before God) as the cauſe of it,and to have deſired it. Of life and death, how to be underſtood here. See upon Chap. 3. 19. Shee is a tree of life

CHAP. IX.

Verſ. 1. WIſdom] Heb. wiſdoms. See upon Chap. 1. 20.

Wiſdom hath builded] That is, Chriſt the ſupreme Wiſedom, Chap. 8. 1. Or rather wiſdom in general, oppoſed unto folly: a heavenly thing, even ſoe, as heathens themſelves ſpeak of it, that knew nothing of Chriſt, either as God, or man. See alſo upon 13.v. A fooliſh woman.

her houſe] He hath prepared him a Church. Or if wiſdom in general be underſtood, the building of an houſe, and hewing of pillars,may ſerve to ſet out the firmneſs and ſtability, yea, and the glory of true wiſdom, in its own nature; though it doth not allwayes fall out to wiſe men, in this world, according to their wiſedome, obſerved by Solomon, Eccleſ. 9. verſ. I returned, and ſaw under the Sun, that the race is not unto the ſwift, &c.

ſeven pillars] Many chief ſtayes and principal parts of his Church, as were the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, Paſtors, and Doctors. Some Rabbins by theſe ſeven Pillars, underſtand the ſeven liberall Arts. Others, the ſeven gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, Eſay 11. 2. Others, the ſeven firſt dayes of the Creation of the world. Many ſuch allegories may be deviſed; which may have ſome ground of application. But the moſt literal interpretation,is, to take ſeven, here, as is ordinary in the Scripture, pro numero perfectionis, for a perfect number : ſo that by ſeven pillars, be underſtood many pillars ; ſo many, both for number and variety, as might be ſufficient both to uphold, and to adorn the building.

V. 2. her beaſts] Heb. her killing.

ſhe hath mingled her wine] Heb. mingled it:or poured it out.So they did, in thoſe hot countreys, mix their wine with water, to allay the heat of it. So doth Chriſt fit his heavenly inſtruction for our earthly capacity.

ſhe hath alſo furniſhed her table] He compareth wiſdom to a great queen,who keeps open-houſe for all comers. So doth the King of heaven,Matth.22.2. This is oppoſed to the harlots feaſt, Chapter, 7. 14.

V. 3. She hath ſent forth] Salvation wrought by Chriſt will not profit us, except it be publiſhed to us.

her maidens] The incorrupt teachers and Miniſters of Chriſt, who are his ſervants, 2 Cor. 4. 2. Or more generally and literally, we may underſtand all them, whom God raiſed in ſeveral ages,and nations of the world, to teach righteouſneſs, and to reclaim men, whether by ſpeaking, or by writing from their vitious courſes. To this end tended all morall Philoſophy among the heathen, as appeareth by divers of their writings yet extant, from which, even Chriſtians,may reap great benefit.

the higheſt places,]Heb.the wings of the high places.See before upon Chap.2.20.24. in the chief place of concourſe.

V. 4. Whoſo is ſimple] He that knoweth his own ignorance, and is void of malice. See more upon Chapter 1. 4. to the ſimple.

in hither] Or aſide, as ver.15,16.

V. 5. eat of my bread] By meat and drink, is meant the Word of God, and the miniſtration of the Sacraments, whereby God nouriſheth his ſervants in his houſe, which is, the Church, John 6. 27. Or more generally, and probably, by bread here, we may underſtand any varietie of fiſh or fleſh, that may probably be ſuppoſed in a ſumptuous feaſt, and plentiful entertainment. So Geneſis 31.54. Then Jacob killed beaſts. (So our Engliſh margine there, which I think is more right than the Engliſh of the Text, in that place ; as Junius his Notes will tell you :) upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread, and they did eat bread, &c. and ſo elſewhere,frequently.

mingled] Or, poured out, as ver. 2.

V. 6. Forſake the fooliſh] Leave the company of ignorant and wicked men : or leave your fooliſh and ſinful wayes. So Prov.1.22. See upon Pſalm 14.1. The fool hath ſaid &c.

V. 7.He that reproveth a ſcorner] The 7. 8, 9, 10. verſes may be read included in a Parentheſis ; for in the 11. verſe, is a reaſon given of the Exhortation given in the fifth and ſixth verſes.

getteth himſelf a blot] For the wicked will condemne the reprover, and labour to defame him, Matthew 7.6.

V. 8. Reprove not a ſcorner] Meaning them which are incorrigible, which Chriſt calleth dogs and ſwine : or, he ſpeaketh in compariſon ; Rather rebuke a wiſe man, than a fool: not that ſcorners ſhould not be rebuked ſimply, or of none ; but adviſedly and diſcreetly, conſidering their malice, and the ſmall hope of doing them good. So Chapter 23. 9. Speake not in the ears of a foole, for he will deſpiſe the wiſedome of thy words. See alſo Chap.26.4.5. Anſwer not a fool, &c.

Reprove not a ſcorner, leſt he hate thee] We may underſtand this as ſpoken according to the rules of humane wiſedome, and by way of Divine condeſcenſion rather, as many things of the Law : (whereof, ſee Matthew 5. from verſe 21. Ye have heard, &c. to the end,) than abſolute approbation, or command. Though even among Chriſtians, who are tied to much more ſtrictneſs, we deny not but good uſe may be made of this admonition. For though charity doth oblige us, where we think we may doe good : yet upon this general warrant of charity, without any other obligation ; to take upon us to reprove all men promiſcuouſly, is rather a breach of charity, and common peace ; than a fulfilling of it. If therefore by our indiſcreet boldneſs (which commonly is an effect of pride) we incurre hatered, and expoſe our ſelves to dangers and perſecutions, we may thanke our ſelves : and it is to be feared, that we doe it rather to pleaſe our own humour (as naturally perchance, rigid and cenſorious :) though we pretend zeal, than to ſerve God. But if we have a particular calling, or commiſſion from God, to reprove, as either Magiſtrates, Maſters, Parents, Miniſters, and Preachers eſpecially ; then the caſe is altered ; and we muſt be ſo far from fearing hatred in the diſcharge of our duties, that we have more reaſon to fear, that we doe not diſcharge our duties as we ought to do, if we be not hated ; either hated, generally ; or at leaſt by ſome. Then muſt we remember the words of Chriſt; Ye ſhall be hated of all men : Matthew 10. 22. and Bleſſed are you, when men ſhall hate you: Luke 6. 22.

V. 10. The fear of the Lord.is the beginning of wiſedome] Job 28. 28. Pſal.111.10.Chap. 1.7. They then that fear not God, have not one ſpark of true and ſaving knowledge. See more upon chapter 1. 7.

and the knowledge of the holy is underſtanding :] A very plauſible ſence,and agreeable to ſome former expreſſions, if it can be made out of the original words : which we ſhall examine by and by. In the mean time for the ſence and matter of the words, beſides the former reference upon chap. 1.7. The fear of the Lord : ſo upon chap.2. 5. Then ſhalt thou underſtand. And becauſe, I find the words ſo pregnant and pertinent to the place ; to what you have there out of Plato ; adde this divine paſſage of one of the Roman Emperors, (inferiour unto none whether Emperor or other that we have heard of, but Solomon, for wiſedome :) out of the 5. book of his Meditations : Why ſhould imprudent-unlearned ſouls [mere worldly wiſe men, he meaneth : great Artiſts, great politicians, and the like :] trouble that which is learned and knowing, [or, underſtanding ?] And which is the [truly] learned and knowing [or, underſtanding ψυχὴ ἔντεχνος καὶ ἐπιστήμων, are his words:] ſoul ? She that underſtandeth the beginning and the end : [or, him that is the beginning and the end :] and hath true knowledge of that Rational Eſſence, that paſſeth through all things ſubſiſting [Greek τὸν διὰ τῆς οὐσίας διήκοντα λόγον .] and through all ages, diſpoſing and diſpenſing (as it were) this univerſe by certain periods of time. What doth he ſay by all theſe words, but what is ſaid by Solomon here ; and by Job and David in the references ? but by the Prophet Jeremy, chap.9.23 24. Thus ſaith the Lord, Let not the wiſe man, &c. more emphatically, than by any other. Yet this wiſe Roman had it not out of Job, or David, or any other inſpired Author,but from very ancient Philoſophers (as we have ſhewed elſewhere :) who had no other light to guide them unto it, than the light of nature. This would be conſidered by the Atheiſts of our times, as many of them as pretend to learning : as alſo by thoſe (great promoters of Atheiſme and Mahomatiſme :) who cry down humane learning as improfitable, or contrary to true godlineſs. But now to the Original words : ודעת קדשים בינה. All the queſtion is about the word קדשים which may either be taken Neutraliter, for holy things, as it is found in many places: or maſculine, for holy men: and in that ſenſe common enough : ſo that according to the firſt ſenſe of the word, the tranſlation would be : and the knowledge of holy things : (that is, of things that belong to Piety and godlyneſs :) according to the ſecond, The knowledge of holy men ; that is, that knowledge which holy men do profeſs, and that maketh men holy) is underſtanding. Neither of theſe is to be rejected ; and moſt Interpreters are for one of the two. But according to our Engliſh here, the word קדשום is not onely taken maſculine, but alſo κατ' ἐξοχήν, or per excellentiam,for the Holy of Holyes, or the Holy One ; abſolutely even God himſelf. Indeed we know that God is often ſtyled,The Holy one of Iſrael, (or Jacob,) and the Holy One : abſolutely, yea, Eſa. 57. 15. Holy is his Name. But the Original word here is not Holy in the ſingular, but Holyes in the plural : ſo that to make this traſlation good, it muſt be further ſuppoſed, that as אלהים and אדונים being plurals, (by an idiotiſme or civility rather of the Hebrew language ; which divers others have imitated therein : for to make a myſtery of it as ſome do ; I ſee but little ground of reaſon for it, and it doth give the Iewes great advantage againſt us :) are ſpoken of one God:ſo in this קדשים in this place,though plural yet to be underſtood and expreſſed ſingularly.But for an example of the like I know none,(Ch.30.3. of this book excepted : where the words in effect, being the ſame, we can conclude nothing from them to help us here :) in any other place of Scripture ; and if there be none ; (for I have not books by me at this time to determine it abſolutely :) then may we ſay of this Plural in this ſence and place, that it is a ſingular in more reſpects than one.All that I can find towards it is, that קדשים is joyned with אלהים, and both conſtrued ſingularly, Joſh. 24. 19. and that Hoſ. 11. laſt verſe, where the Text renders it and is faithfull with the Saints : the margin hath it, with the moſt holy, (which if allowed) doth agree with our Engliſh here ; but that in ſtead of holy, which is a Poſitive ; the plural is there expreſſed by a ſuperlative ſingular moſt holy. The Greek tranſlation of theſe words,that goeth under the name of the Septuagint, in the Roman edition, is double ; καὶ βουλὴ ἁγίων σύνεσις and τὸ γνῶναι νόμον, διανοίας ἐστὶν ἀγαθῆς which to reduce into one, a γὰρ hath been added ſince τὸ γὰρ γνῶναι, &c. as in divers other places we find, ſome times,two;ſome times three, ſeveral tranſlations, hudled and confounded into one. As for the latter of the two,καὶ τὸ γνῶναι νόμον, we might make a very perfect and elegant tranſlation of it, if we might take νόμον in a Philoſophical ſenſe, for God himſelf ; as is obſerved by Cicero, out of ſome ancient Greek Philoſophers, in his books of Philoſophy. But I do not believe that. Theſe Septuagint (whoever they were) were ſuch Philoſophers ; and I fancy not groundleſs ſubtleties.

V. 11. For by me thy dayes ſhall be multiplied] Chap. 10. 27. See upon Chap.3.18 She is a tree of life.

V. 12. thou ſhalt be wiſe for thy ſelf] I ſpeak not for my profit, but for thine : if thou hearken to me, the good will be thine ; and if thou ſcoff at my inſtruction,the hurt will be thine own, Job 35, 6, 7. Gal. 6. 5. The Grecians have an excellent ſaying to this purpoſe : Μισῶ σοφιστὴν ὅστις οὐχ αὑτῷ σοφός : That is, I hate that wiſe man, that is not wiſe unto ; (Or, for ;) himſelfe.

V. 13. A fooliſh woman is clamorous: ſhe is ſimple,&c.] See before,

Chap

Ch.7.11. She is loud and ſtubborn, &c. But whether the ſame, (as was there intimated) be intended here and there, is a great queſtion. Moſt and beſt Interpreters; (as Mercer, and others) becauſe this woman here is oppoſed to wiſdom, before deſcribed and ſet out at large in this very Chapter; ſome of wiſdoms words being alſo aſcribed to this woman, as verſe 16. who ſo is ſimple, &c. compared with verſe 4. before: and further moved perchance, becauſe the deſcription, Chap.7. doth not altogether agree, as is there ſhewed: for theſe, and what other reaſons, I know not; but their opinion is, that the ſame are not intended; and that what is ſpoken of the woman here, muſt be underſtood allegorically, making this (the allegory) to be the literal and immediate meaning of the words, Of all theſe paſſages and deſcriptions concerning harlots and adultereſſes in general, it was ſaid before, upon Chap.2. 16 from the ſtrange woman, &c. that they might very well bear an allegoricall ſenſe and application; and that it is very likely, that Solomon himſelf had a further aim, than the literall and immediate. Now there, as alſo Chap.5.3. &c. Mercerus is altogether for the literal ſenſe; Literæ ſenſus maxime placet (upon Chap.1.16.) and, Nos aliis relinquamus allegorias, &c. (upon Chap.5.3.) and Chap.7.11. no queſtion at all is made of the literall ſenſe: all the queſtion is, whether that deſcription be a hiſtory, (ſo far he is from ſuſpecting it an allegory) or a parable. Yet now the ſame Mercer is ſo much for the allegorical ſenſe, here, by this woman, underſtanding hereſie, falſe doctrine, and whatſoever oppoſeth it ſelf to ſound wiſdom, and the true Church and faith of Chriſt; that rather than the literal ſenſe ſhould be followed, he is content thoſe former paſſages alſo ſhould be taken allegorically of the ſame, ſo that the literal ſenſe be not utterly excluded. I would not conceal any thing from the Reader, where I think there is a liberty left, without any wrong to the Scriptures, that he may freely make his choice. As for mine own opinion, I rather encline to beleeve that Solomon did intend it of an harlot, accordingto the literal ſenſe; as in former chapters, yet ſo, that we exclude not the allegoricall ſenſe, which I think as proper and true, as the other, though not ſo immediate and literal. See more upon Chap. 2.16. from the ſtrange woman. As for that ſeeming contradiction in the deſcriptions, ſubtil of heart, Chap.7.10. and fooliſh, &c. here: how one and the ſame, in different reſpects, maybe both, both ſubtil, and yet fooliſh, &c. ſee before upon Ch. 7. 10. ſubtil: and upon Pſal. 14 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c. We may alſo with no leſſe probability ſay that folly in generall, (including all kind of ſin: whereof ſee upon Pſal.14.1. The fool, &c.) is here repreſented by Solomon under the type of a woman, and oppoſed unto wiſdom: ſo that two contrarie parties are here brought upon the ſtage to act their parts, and to ſpeak for themſelves. So vertue, and pleaſure, under the figure of two women, were fained by ſome very ancient heathens, to have appeared unto Hercules, being yet young, and unſetled in his reſolutions, what courſe of life to take; and each of them by turns have uſed their beſt rhetorik to him, to draw him: ſo wiſdom, power, and pleaſure, under the ſhape of three Goddeſſes, to Paris: and ſo in that excellent Map of the World, commonly called Cebetis tabula (a peice of very great antiquity) Error and Deceit, (as women there too:) are oppoſed to Παιδεία, that is true knowledge or learning: by which the ſeme is intended, as here by wiſdom. The reading of all which, joyned with this book of Proverbs would be of very good uſe, and make Solomons meaning more cleere in many places.

V.15. Who go right on their wayes] That would hearken to wiſdoms leſſons, if they were not ſeduced.

V. 16. Who ſo is ſimple] Wicked men, for the moſt part, (for all are not of one mind, nor equally deſperate) think themſelves the, onely wiſe men of the world, becauſe they enjoy the world freely indulging to their ſenſes and fleſhly luſts with all liberty; and make much of this life, whileſt they live: and thoſe that do not, they account, fools and idotes: and upon this account, they draw many unto them. Which indeed, upon this ground, that the ſoul is mortal, nor any account to be given after this life, would not be without ſome ground of reaſon: but if otherwiſe, that the ſoul (whereof few heathens ever made any queſtion) be immortal, &c. then is their wiſdom apparently meer brutiſhneſſe; it beingthe propriety of bruits, to look no further than the preſent. See ſomewhat to this purpoſe, upon Pſal. 35.4. Let them be confounded &c. where the Epicureans are ſpoken of.

Who ſo is ſimple let him turne in hither and as for him that wanteth underſtanding] Folly (or Vice) uſeth here the very ſame words, which were before adſcribed unto wiſdom verſe 4. Who ſo is ſimple, &c. whereby we are given to underſtand, that it is the property of vice to appear under the ſhape of vertue: and of devils, under the habit and diſguiſe of angels of light. It was ever ſo; we need not make a wonder of it in our dayes. Who are they, that have God; and godlineſſe, and Chriſt Jeſus, in their mouths, and writings, moſt? Let their deeds ſpeak. But ſo are ſimple people caught, and they that have more judgement; yet, when once engaged by worldly intereſts, (if men addicted that way:) their judgements are ſwaied by little and little by there affections, until (by a juſt judgement of God upon them, for loving the world more than the truth) they be quite perverted in their very judgements, and paſt feeling. So deluſionprevailes upon men, as we are taught by Scripture, and right philoſophy.

in hither] Or, aſide, verſe 4.

V17. Stolen waters are ſweet] Sinful delights taken by ſtealth, are the more pleaſant to perſons ſenſually affected; contrary to Ch.5. 15. So he, whom the Poet ſpeakes of: Si interdicta petes; ſi valli circumdata. Nam te Hoc facit inſanum Neither is it the caſe of ſenſual men only, but of moſt men, (even the beſt) generally, to covet after thoſe things moſt which are forbidden them. And as it is natural unto men ſo to do; ſo is it an argument of the corruption of mans nature, the fruit and effect of original ſin It hath bin obſerved by many: Nitimur in vetitum ſemper, cupimusque negata: Sic interdictis imminet æger aquis. Known verſes, but the more obſervable to us, becauſe of waters the inſtance; as in Solomon; ſo here: though it be not altogether the ſame caſe, becauſe the Poet's inſtance is of ſick folks particularly, who are apt to covet, and catch (in a feveriſh fit, or the like: and in thoſe hot countries, where water is the ordinary drink: to thoſe eſpecially that cannot go to the charge of wine:) at water, when it is forbidden them; who at other times perchance when they can come at it freely, would not make ſuch reckoning of it. But ſome ſtick at Solomons words, and becauſe water is ſo obvious and common a thing; they would have Solomon by ſtolne waters, to intend unlawful luſts and pleaſure, and that to be the literal ſenſe of the words. But they do not conſider, that in thoſe Eaſtern Countries water ſometimes is a very rare and precious commoditie; where wells were wont to be ſealed, and an object of ſtrife and envy as much as any thing, See more upon Chap.5 15. Drink waters out of thine own ciſterne. However, we deny not but unlawful luſts and pleaſures, of what kind ſoever, were intended by Solomon in general by this particular inſtance of ſtolne waters: andſins of incontinencie, very properly as in the former reference is ſhewed. And ſo it is with moſt Proverbs, or proverbiall ſpeeches. One thing is ſaid, and another is intended. But the general ſenſe, doth alwayes preſuppoſe the truth, and reality of the literal and immediate, upon which it is grounded; elſe it hath not the proprietie of a proverbe, (of this nature, uſed for confirmation, &c.) which is from matter of common ſenſe and experience, to inſinuate ſomewhat that is not ſo vulgarly known, or acknowledged. As if I ſhould ſay; It is a good horſe that never ſtumbleth; my intention may be, to excuſe ſome miſtake; yet it muſt be ſuppoſed, if I ſpeak pertinently, that really beſt horſes may ſtumble ſometimes. But the ignorance of matters of fact, in proceſſe of time; and the alteration of cuſtomes in the ſame countrie; or diverſity, in different countries and climats; make many proverbs to become very obſcure, or to ſeem impertinent, to ſome; which at firſt, and where firſt uſed, were moſt cleer, and evident. This may be the caſe of many Proverbs in this book; and therefore I have been the longer in vindication of the literall ſenſe: confirmed alſo by the following words, and bread eaten in ſecret: which have not the ſame anology with unlawful luſts, as waters (as is ſhewed in the former reference) have: and therefore more undoubtedly to be taken in the literal ſenſe; the literall ſenſe nevertheleſs (according to the nature, and common uſe of a proverb) extending to whatſoever is unlawfully got and enjoyed.

and bread eaten in ſecret] Heb. of ſecreſies: that is, eaten moſt ſecretly. Chap.20.17. Bread of deceit, &c.

V.18. dead are there] Prov.2 18 & 7.26. Heb. רפאים of which ſee upon Chap.2. 18. unto the dead, her gueſts are in the depths of hell] That is they are in extremity of danger, in the very jaws of death. The Hebrews often expreſſe death by variety of words; when either they would ſet out the horror, or the certainty of it; or both See Pſal.88.12, the grave: deſtruction: the darke: and the land of forgetfulneſſe: all, for one thing. But the moſt common word, by which they uſe to vary it, is שאול: which is the word here: tranſlated ſometimes hell, ſometimes the grave: of which ſee more on Chap.1.1 . as the grave, and Chap. 5.5. take hold on hell. The depths of hell, here; as the belly of hell. Jonas 2.2. out of the belly of hell cried I. So that there is no neceſſity of interpreting the words here, of the torments of hell; or to make that the literal ſenſe. There was not ſo much knowledge of hell, (as we take it now:) and Paradiſe in thoſe dayes. Though Solomon himſelf might know more than others; yet it is likely, that he would ſpeak as other did. This therefore I conceive to be the moſt literal immediat ſenſe; not excluding the other. Nay, ſince that φωτισμὸς, revelation, or bringing to light of life and immortalitie, which the Apoſtle tells us of, 2 Tim.1,10. I conceive it moſt proper for us Chriſtians to underſtand all promiſes of life, and denuntiations of death, of that which is eternal whether life or death; which is called by the ancients (and moſt followed in all their expoſitions:) the anagogicall ſenſe.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. THe proverbs of Solomon] Here indeed begin thoſe that we may more properly call Proverbs; or Sentence: moſt of that which hath gone before in the nine foregoing Chapters, containing rather matter of exhortation, in generall, to wiſdom and vertue; and dehortation from vice, and the love of pleaſure, under the repreſentation of a lewd woman; becauſe women, and the love of bodily pleaſure, is that which draws away moſt men from the right way: ſuch generall matter I ſay, fit for an introduction, or general preface, to particular moral precepts and ſentences; rather than proverbs, or ſentences. So that the name of Solomon may be here prefixed anew, as to a ſecond book, or different head of collection, taking this word proverbs, in a more proper ſignification, than before. It is Ariſtotles obſervation in the firſt of his Ethicks, that young men are not ſo capable of moral Philoſophy, becauſe, πάθεσιν ἀκολουθητικὸς. What he meaneth by πάθεσιν ἀκολουθητικοί; may be gathered from his 8. Book, where he makes it the propriety of young men (quatenus Young; for himſelf well diſtinguiſhes of young men, in the firſt) κατὰ πάθος ζῆν ϗ μάλιστα διώκειν τὸ ἡδὺ αὐτοῖς, ϗ τὸ παρόν; that is, to live according to luſt, or, ſenſe; and above all things to ſeek after pleaſure, and to regard that which is preſent only, It is not therefore without great cauſe, that Solomon before he begin with particular inſtructions, did judge this large introduction needful, where he doth ſo ſeriouſly exhort to the ſtudy of wiſdom, and as effectually dehort all young men (as moſt ſubject to it) from the love of pleaſure and ſenſuality. Somewhat to this purpoſe, ſee before in the Preface, and upon Chap. 1. verſe 1. The Proverbs.

A wiſe ſon maketh a glad father] See before upon Chap. 1. 8. the inſtruction of thy father To Plutarch's words there, adde theſe, which we reſerved for this place as moſt proper to be read here: Διὸ τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις κακῶς ποιεῖν ἀπείρηται, &c. that is; We are forbidden to do other men any wrong: but to mother and father, not evermore to be doing and ſaying ſomewhat, (though we do nothing to grieve them): wherby to glad their hearts, is generally accounted wicked and ungodly.

but a fooliſh ſon is the heavineſſe of his mother] Becauſe I ſee how apt ſome men are to impoſe their own phanſies upon Scripture, preſuming they ſhall finde readers that will gladly entertaine any thing that reliſheth of wit and curioſitie, though otherwiſe never ſo groundleſſe and impertinent, whereof we have a notable example in the expoſitions of ſome chief Expoſitors (as ſhall appear afterwards) upon this place: it wil not be amiſs to obſerve ſomewhat here in general concerning the forme, or character of moſt of theſe Sentences, or Proverbs; but more properly, (for the moſt of them) Sentences: which wil afford a good and ſeaſonable caution or προφύλαξιν against ſuch extravagancies, and groundleſſe curioſities. Obſerve, we then in the firſt place, that moſt of theſe Proverbs or Sentences (which you will:) conſiſt of two members, whereof the latter, is either oppoſite, or, exegetical, that is explanatory and confirmatory of the former. Oppoſites by antithets, (as they cal them) or otherwiſe, as it is accounted generally the moſt gracious, yea and powerfull kind of language (witneſs Demoſthenes his ſo much admired enthimemata; whereof we have ſome examples in Saint Pauls Epiſtles:) ſo they have this advantage alſo to illuſtrate one another, (according to the vulgar axiome, contraria ſimul poſita eluceſcunt:) and to make the whole more clear as we find in divers of theſe proverbs, the ſenſe whereof, were it not for the oppoſit member, would be very obſcure, and if not altogether inextricable, yet liable to much more debate. Where the ſecond member is meerely exegetical, that is, coincident in ſenſe with the former; the end of it is not only to make the ſenſe the plainer, which muſt needs be, when the ſame thing is repeated in other words: but alſo it adds weight to the ſentence, and gives it the more advantage (by this ἐπιμονὴν, as they call it:) to make impreſſion both upon the mind and memory. Which is far from tautoligie; a repeating of the ſame thing in ordinarie diſcourſe without any end or occaſion; through meer garrulitie, or want of wit. Where Solomon doth intend an exegeſis, or exegiſis:) or ἐπιμονὴν, he hath many wayes to varie the words, with much concinnitie and elegancie, not ſo eaſily to be diſcerned in tranſlations, as in the original words: ſo that though the ſame thing, in effect, be repeated; yet the underſtanding fixed upon the weight of the matter is well ſatisfied, and the eare at the ſame time well pleaſed. But to finde out the right meaning, where there is any doubt, we muſt not confine our ſelves to the members of one verſe, whether oppoſit, or exgeticall; but conſider well, whether there be not ſome paralel verſe to be found either in the ſame, or ſome other Chapter: and not to faſten upon any, though plauſible conceit, or interpretation of ſome one verſe, until we ſee how it will agree with the paralels, if any be found. Now to make application of what hath been ſaid to this particular place, that by this preſident the reader may be warned, and withall, directed how to help himſelf, when need is: A wiſe ſon with Solomon, maketh a glad father: but a fooliſh ſon, is the heavineſſe of his mother. When we find a fooliſh ſon in the ſecond member, oppoſed to a wiſe, in the firſt, and heavineſſe, to gladneſſe: who would not expect a perfect oppoſition of ſenſe between the ſecond members, as if he had ſaid, A wiſe ſon maketh a glad father, but a fooliſh ſon, is the heavineſſe of his father, and in father, who would not imagine mother alſo, things not expreſſed at all, (there being the ſame reaſon) to be included? But Solomon inſteed of repeating the word father, in the ſecond member, he varies it by mother; being, in this caſe, equivalent to father; ſo that his words ſo ordered, without any faſtiduouſneſſe of repetition, amount to this: A wiſe ſon maketh glad parents; or if you will, a glad father and mother, but a fooliſh ſon is the heavineſſe of father and mother. He might have ſaid, of both, I confeſſe; as afterterwards, upon another occaſion, Chap. 17. 15. but it pleaſed him better ſo to divide them to each member one; that one, comprehending both. So far we might have gone with much probabilitie. But to put it beyond all diſpute, look we upon the paralel places, and the buſineſſe is done. Firſt Ch. 1. 8. My ſon heare the inſtruction of thy father, and forſake not the law of thy mother. Ch. 17. 25. A fooliſh ſon is a grief to his father, and bitterneſſe to her that bare him. See alſo 23. 22. Hearken, &c. and Chap. 30. 17. The eye that mocketh, &c. Might not then Salazar, and Cornel. a Lapide have ſaved their labour, when they did put themſelves to it, to deviſe reaſons; why Solomon ſhould adſcribe gladneſſe, to the father: and heavineſſe to the mother particularly, why not gladneſſe, and heavineſſe to both rather: why moſt proper to the father, to rejoyce, when children do well; and moſt proper to the mother to greive, when otherwiſe? I know they had ſome Rabbins to lead them. But when Solomon himſelf doth ſo cleerly expound himſelf; why ſhould we ſeek any further? I would not have bin ſo long upon this place; but that what is here ſaid, may concren many other places; and the underſtanding reader many make good uſe of it. I would not have the inventions of men, to paſſe for divine wiſdom; if I could help it. It is enough that preachers take that libertie. Expoſitors ſhould be more accurat.

V. 2. Treaſures of wickedneſſe profit nothing] It may be taken of riches wickedly got, in general; or by unlawful means, which though enjoyed for a while, yet afterwards prove the deſtruction of many families. But comparing with Ch. 11. 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath but righteouſneſſe delivereth from death: it may more particularly be expounded of capital cauſes and judgements; when a man is publikely and legally queſtioned for his life or the like. Then integrity may do much, and more than any money, or bribes: but that muſt be underſtood, under a juſt government, or judge; whether King or other. For otherwiſe, that may be as true that wicked unrighteous men may with money and bribes break through all laws, as cobwebs, and pacifie their judge; be their cauſe never ſo odious, or horrid: when poorer men, for want of money, and ranſom, periſh for leſſe crimes and occaſions. And in Solomon himſelf in this very Chapter; The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City: (not as the Poet, ----hic murus aheneus eſto, Nil conſcire ſibi, nulla palleſcere culpa: which expreſſes well the former ſaying and obſervation) the deſtruction of the poor is their poverty. And Chap. 13. 8. The ranſome of a mans life, are his riches; but a poor man (here again the caſe is altered; and it is true, according to variety of circumſtances; that many poor whether guilty or not guilty, whether queſtioned or not ſo much as queſtioned; eſcape eo nomine, meerly, becauſe poor, and that they have nothing to loſe; and that many periſh, or are caſt ſometimes juſtly, ſometims unjuſtly, becauſe of their poverty, who might have eſcaped, if they had had any thing to give) heareth not rebuke. Somewhat to this purpoſe, ſee alſo in the Preface, before; and upon pſ 6. 13. He winketh, &c Thus muſt every wiſe & intelligent Reader ponder and examine many (if not moſt) proverbs, according to variety of circumſtances; & accordingly make application, of them for want of which conſideration many are deceived and by falſe application do themſelves and others more hurt, than good. And this is rather to pervert (as many illiterate, or factious, out of the pulpits daily) the Scriptures, than to uſe them to edification. But if we take the words with reference to God, and his juſt judgements, (which by wrath alſo, Ch. 11. 4. according to Rom. 2. 5. wrath, and, the day of wrath, and elſewhere the New Teſtament, may be underſtood) then it is abſolutely true, that riches cannot profit any man, to ſave either ſoul or body from the juſt hand of God, which only righteouſneſs and innocency (ſuch as man is capable of and God in his mercy doth accept) can do.

but righteouſneſſe] It was obſerved before upon Chap 3. 27. them to whom it is due; that the Hbrew word צדקה is by the Rabbins uſed, for alms: certain it is, that both the Hebrew word in the Old, as alſo the Greek δικαιοσύνη, in the New, are often taken for mercy, yea and δίκαιος ſometimes, (as Matth. 1. 27. δίκαιος ὤν: being a mercifull man not as we have it there juſt which is very improper there) for mercifull. Upon this ſenſe of the word צדקה is grounded by ſome, another interpretation of Solomons words, agreeable to our Saviours words. Luk 16. 9. Make to your ſelves friends of the Mammon of unrighteouſneſſe, &c. and to Dan. 4. 24. Break off thy ſins by righteouſneſs, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor: where if we take mercy, in the ſecond member, to be an interpretation of righteouſneſſe as in the firſt is very uſual, then righteouſneſſe muſt be taken in that Rabbinical ſenſe we have ſpoken of. We may adde the words of our Saviour, Luke 11 41. Give alms of ſuch things as you have, and behold all things are clean unto you. This ſenſe therefore being confirmed by ſo many pregnant paſſages, and the words affording it without any violence, we may not reject it. As to the thing it ſelf we ſay breefly; though true religion doth not conſiſt in giving of almes, properly, which is an external thing, whereas religion eſſenially is ſpiritual and internal; and that we are taught by St. Paul, that a man may ſell all that he hath, and give to the Poor, and yet reape not benefit from them to ſalvation; yet almes are ſo great an evidence of religion, as that which in God is moſt glorified & wherewith of all outward acts, moſt pleaſed, that we have warrant enough from reaſon and Scripture, to conclude, that that mans religion is not ſound and ſincere before God, who is not (according to his power) charitable, and bountiful to the poor. And eſpecially in matter of repentance, that that repentance is not true and real nor effectual to remiſſion of ſins, (ſtil ſuppoſing ſome ability) that doth not maniſeſt it ſelf to God and the world, by ſuch fruits.

V. 3. The Lord will not ſuffer the ſoul of the righteous to famiſh] Pſal. 37. 25. I have been young. See there. Though he ſuffer the Juſt to want for a time, yet he will ſend him comfort in due ſeaſon. Of this and other like temporall promiſes, annexed to godlineſſe and piety, ſee upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelfe &c. and other verſes of that pſalm.

the ſubſtance of the wicked] Or the wicked for their wickedneſſe according to Mercerus and others. Or againe according to others, which alſo ſeemeth moſt literall, the wickedneſſe of the wicked that is, wicked men. See alſo Chap. 14. 32.

V 4 He becommeth poore that dealeth with a ſlack hand] Chap. 12. 24. The Hebrew words ראש עושה כף רמיה may alſo (and are by Mercerus) be tranſlated, Pauper facit lingulam bilancium (כף often, a hand ſometimes, the needle, or tongue of a balance) fraudulentam: that is A poore man makes a deceitfull weight. Or, Lingula fraudulenta facit pauperem: that is, A deceitfull weight makes a poore man. So there would be an elegant alluſion between כף in the firſt and רי in the ſecond member. And certaine it is, that as poverty makes many a one fraudulent, (which made Agur, Chap. 30. 10. to pray againſt it) that otherwiſe would be honeſt: ſo fraudulency or fraudulent dealing, is the undoing of many, who by truth and honeſty might have thrived better. However this tranſlation we have here, is as good and warrantable, and more generally embraced.

with a ſlack hand. Or a deceitful hand] Ier. 48. 10. for ſlothful men very frequently live by deceiving others. See Chap 19. 15. an idle ſoule.

but the hand of the diligent maketh rich] So it is commonly which is enough to juſtify the truth of this ſaying. However though diligence & induſtrie be the ordinary means which God himſelf hath appointed to that end, yet it muſt alwaies be vnderſtood, that gods bleſſing doth go along without which no diligence can prevaile. When I ſay Gods bleſſing, I intend it in a general ſenſe; when God is pleaſed according to his generall order, and appointment, that ſuch and ſuch meanes being uſed, they ſhall be effectuall to ſuch an end. So many men though void otherwiſe of piety and religion, come to be rich, by uſing the meanes to which god in his ordinary providence hath appointed and promiſed a bleſſing, that is ſucceſſe: and many, otherwiſe godly and religious, come to poverty, becauſe they do not uſe the means that god hath appointed. Yet leſt men, if it ſhould alwaies and infallialy be true, that by diligence and induſttry riches may be got, ſhould caſt of all thought of God, and wholy depend of the means and ſecondary cauſes: therefore god is pleaſed ſometimes to croſſe his ordinary providence or generall order, in this particular: ſo that wealth ſhall come vnto ſome, they know not how and ſome others, though never ſo diligent and induſtrious, ſhall do no good. And this hath given occaſion to ſome other proverbs and ſentences, which may ſeeme to be repugnant and contrary to what is here ſaid: as in this very Chapter v. 22. The bleſſing of the Lord, it maketh rich and he addeth no ſorrow with it, where ſee the references. But they may eaſily be reconciled, if all things be taken into conſideration that ought to be conſidered, and all circumſtances well weighed: for want of which, ignorant men are apt to make fooliſh applications, whereby they both deceive themſelves, and others; and ſhamefully abuſe the Scriptures: as was ſaid before, upon the ſecond verſe, Treaſure of wickedneſſe.

V. 5. He that gathereth in ſummer is a wiſe ſon] He that takes his oppertunite for his buſineſſe, credits himſelf and his: he that neglects it, diſcredits both.

V. 6. violence covereth the mouth of the wicked] When their wickedneſſe ſhall be diſcovered, they ſhal be as dumb and not know what to ſay: or, other mens violence ſhall ſtop their mouths

V 7. The memory of the juſt is bleſſed] Pſal 112. 6. Men ſhall ſpeak of a juſt man after his death with praiſe, and of the wicked with diſdain and diſgrace. Or, the juſt ſhall leave a ſweet ſent behind him, and the wicked, a ſtinking ſavour.

V. 8 a prating fool] Heb. a fool of lips. See upon Chap. 11. 12. deſpiſeth his name.

a prating fool ſhall fall] He that ſhews the folly of his heart, by irregular ſpeech ſhall fall, though he look to riſe by his talk. See alſo upon Chap. 1. 5. A wiſe man, &c.

ſhall fall] Or, ſhall be beaten.

V. 9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely] Pſal. 23. 4. Upright wayes bring peace, though wicked men think them expoſed to danger: but crafty plots, to prevent danger, prove the ruine of the deviſers. See upon Pſal. 22. 9 Thou didſt make me hope, &c.

but he that perverteth his wayes ſhall be known] Heb. יודע ſhall be known, is by ſome Rabbins, both here and elſewhere expounded, ſhall be broken. So Judg. 8. 16. and with them he taught, (ויודע) the men of ſuccoth. He taught, (or, as in the margin there, he made to know) that is, (and ſo tranſlated by ſome) contrivit, he bruiſed.

V. 10. He that winketh with the eye cauſeth ſorrow] He that mocks others with his eyes. See Notes on Chap. 6. 13. He that winketh with his eyes, &c.

a prating fool ſhall fall] Verſe 8.

ſhall fall] Or, ſhall be beaten. See the reference before, to Chap. 6. 13.

V. 11. The mouth of a righteous man is a wel of life] Chap. 13, 14. It alwayes refreſheth others and cannot be ſtopt.

but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked] The ſame words, in the originall, we had before, verſe 6. but whether to be interpreted here, as there, the different coherence, makes it doubtful. There, violence, as a juſt judgement; is denounced to the wicked: as bleſſings, in the firſt member of the verſe, the reward of the juſt. Here violence, as proceeding from the mouth of the wicked, is oppoſed to life, that proceedeth from the mouth of the righteous: here therefore, violence, active: before, violence, paſſive. But as we have it in our Engliſh, we make but one ſenſe (without any reſpect had of the coherence, or context) of both places. But the mouth of the wicked covereth violence, as I concevie, is the truer tranſlation. All the difference is in the word חמס violence, whether we make a Nominative, or an accuſative of it. The originall word may be either: and why then may not we take that which will fit the context beſt? Now becauſe חמס may ſignifie iniquitie alſo, ſome make the ſenſe of the words to be, that it is the proprietie of a wicked man to conceale his faults, or ſins, and this is drawne to confeſſion by the papiſts. I cannot ſay but this may be vvithout any great violence to the vvords. Neither is it very cleare in vvhat ſence the mouth of the vvicked is ſaid to cover violence. But it may be vnderſtood of the vvickedneſſe of his heart, vvhich he covereth by faire ſpeeches, vvhen he doth intend miſchief: or figuratively his mouth may be ſaid to cover violence, that is, to be full of it: full of oaths, and curſes, and raylings, and the like. Pſalm. 109. 18 the wicked is ſaid, to cloath himſelf himſelf with curſing as with a garment: which cometh ſomewhat neer, though it be not altogether the ſame. We have had occaſion before to obſerve it more than once, that the ſame word, words, or phraſe, ſometimes in one and the ſame Chapter, yea verſe, is taken differently.

V. 12. Hatred ſtirreth up ſtrifes] By diſcovering and upbraiding mens faults to them, which love covereth, & ſo exſtinguiſheth ſtrife.

love covereth all ſin] 1 Pet. 4. 8. James 5. 20. in which places by ſins, ſome underſtand the ſins of him that loveth, or teacheth: but more probable, as by this place doth appear, that offences and wrongs, which uſe to cauſe ſtrife and contention, are to be underſtood.

V. 13. In the lips of him that hath underſtanding, wiſdom is found] Whereby he knows how to ſpeak without danger; which fools do not.

a rod is for the back of him that is void of underſtanding] Ch. 26. 3.

underſtanding] Heb. heart.

V. 14. Wiſe men lay up knowledge, but the mouth of the fooliſh is neer deſtruction] Comparing with Chap. 13. 3. He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips ſhal have deſtruction: I think it not improbable, that by knowledge, any thing that comes to our knowledge concerning other men, neighbours or others, ſhould be underſtood. Except we make this to be the ſenſe; that whileſt wiſe men are buſie, and in a manner wholly taken up with it, to ſtore themſelves with profitable knowledge, which may ſtand them in ſtead, in time of need; the fool, that hath nothing to buſie himſelf with, but to prate of other mens buſineſſes, meets with ſpeedy deſtruction. See alſo Chap. 18. 6, 7. If we ſtick to the former ſenſe, then to lay up, here, is as much as, to conceale, See alſo upon Ch. 12. 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge.

V. 15. The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong city] A rich man truſts in his riches: a poor man fears deſtruction, for want of wealth. See before upon verſe 2. and Chap. 18. 10, 11, 12.

V. 16. The labour of the righteous tendeth to life] That which a righteous man gets, he uſeth to preſerve his own life, and other mens; but wicked men uſe their wealth to undo themſelves and others.

V. 17. erreth] Or, cauſeth to erre. The original word will bear either; but the firſt more proper here, as I conceive. See before upon Chap 5. 23. ſhall go aſtray.

V. 18. with] Or, hath. But rather, as in many places, איש to be ſupplied: He that hideth hatred, is [a man] of lying lips; and he, &c. See before upon Ch. 7, 22, as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks.

V. 19. In the multitude of words there wanteth not ſin] Eccl. 5. 3. Jam. 3 2 Not of pondered words, but of raſh ones, which wiſdom teacheth men to forbear: or, men that are full of talk, cannot but talk amiſſe ſometimes.

V. 20. The tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver] Good mens words are of great price; wicked mens thoughts are of ſmal value.

the heart of the wicked is little [worth]] Firſt, I would have the reader by comparing verſes 8, 13, 14, 20, 21. of this Chapter, (not to ſeek further) to obſerve that the heart, tongue, and lips, are uſed promiſcuouſly for one and the ſame; the one ſometimes adſcribed to the juſt, or wiſe; the other, to the fooliſh; and contrarily: leſt men ſhould trouble themſelves with groundleſſe ſpeculations, and impoſe reaſons upon the Scripture (a very common thing) of their own deviſing. See alſo upon Chap. 15. 14. the heart of fools. Secondly, the original word מעט little, ſmal, properly may perchance as wel, if not better, with his prefix as, which is in the original, be here engliſhed, as nothing, or if you will, more literally yet, (this very word momentum, by reduplication of the firſt radical, to ſupply the guttural, of harſh pronounciation, coming as I take it, from the Hebrew, megnat,) as a moment: moment taken mathematically, for the leſt and loweſt of diviſions; that is in effect, as nothing.

V. 21. The lips of the righteous feed many] They are able to admoniſh, exhort, counſel and comfort others, when wicked men cannot preſerve themſelves. The Hebrew word ſignifieth alſo to rule, to govern, to lead.

but fooles die for want of wiſedome] Fooles, that is ſinners as often already hath bin obſerved,and references made to proper places. The reader, I hope, will not expect that we ſhould makeupon every verſe, for explication of words often vſed. If he do not thinke fit to read from the beginning : yet his concordance wil eaſily direct him to former paſſages, either in this booke of Proverbs or in that of the Pſalms where probably he may find what he doth looke for. See alſo ſomewhat to this purpoſe, upon Ch. 5. laſt verſe, he ſhall go aſtray. So that in effect Solomon by theſe words intends no other than what by the Apoſtle is expreſſed in other words. That the wages of ſin is death: Rom.6.laſt verſe.

of wiſdom] Heb. of heart.

V.22. The bleſſing of the Lord it maketh rich] Gods bleſſing makes men rich,without thoſe careful toils that covetous men are oppreſſed withall,Pſal.127.2,3. See alſo Chap.3.32 33 and Chap 11.24. and upon Pſal.25.14.The ſecret of the Lord,&c.and before upon ver. 4. but the hand of the diligent.

V.23. It is a ſport to a fool to do miſchief] Chap. 14.9

but a man of underſtanding hath wiſdom]Or, and ſo is wiſdom(or,to do wiſdom) to a man of underſtanding. That is, the ſtudy of wiſdom, is the delight and pleaſure of a man of underſtanding. See upon Chap.18 1. Through deſire,&c. Or, according to the former tranſlation, which ſeemeth to be moſt literall; comparing with Chap. 14 9. and 13.15. Good underſtanding, &c. by wiſdom, here we muſt underſtand (as Chap 11.2. with the Lord is wiſdom. See there:) the fruits of wiſdom, that is grace and favour, with God, and man. So ordinarily,and ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ : upon which proverbs are grounted, extraordinarily ſometimes, and by a ſpeciall appointment, a providence of God,a man may periſh (as to the world) through his wiſdom; when fools and wicked men flouriſh. According to ſome; a man of underſtanding hath wiſdom : that is,ſay they, to avoid doing miſchief But this ſeemeth ſomewhat frigid.

V.24. but the deſire of the righteous, it ſhall be granted] See upon Pſal. 21.2. his hearts deſire.

be granted] Or, yeeld fruit,as Chap.12.12. Or, [God] granteth : according to ſome,both here,and there.

V.25. As] Or.When,

As the wirlwind paſſeth] Aſſoon as a whirl-wind paſſeth away: or, when the whirl-wind of Gods wrath paſſeth over them.

ſo] Or, then.

the righteous] Or, to the righteous.

as vineger to the teeth] Very contrary to the teeth,by reaſon of its coldneſſe and aciditie,as out of divers ancients by Letenerus, in his Adagia ſacra, and ſome others, if obſerved. Yet verjuice is much commended : but there may be reaſon for that.

ſo is the ſluggard to them that ſend him] He is but a trouble and grief to them that employ him You may compare with Chap. 25. 13. As the cold of ſnow, and Chap.26.6. He that ſendeth.

V.27. The fear of the Lord prolongeth dayes] Chap.9.11. See more upon Chap.3.18.She is a tree of life.

prolongeth] Heb. addeth.

years of the wicked ſhall be ſhortened] Job 22.16.Pſal .55.23.See the former reference.

V.28 The hope of the righteous ſhall be gladneſſe,but the expectation,&c. This hope of the righteous; and this expectation of the wicked,here intended, though it may be extended to things temporall alſo, yet to relate chiefly to another world,and things eternal, appeareth firſt by Chap.14 32.the wicked is driven away in his wickedneſſe, but the righteous hath hope in his death : there is for the hope of the righteous. Now for the expectation of the wicked, When a wicked man dyeth, his expectation ſhall periſh ; and the hope of unjuſt men periſheth, Chap.11.7.See alſo upon Pſal.39.7. And now, Lord, what wait I for ? my hope, &c.

the expectation of the wicked ſhall periſh] Job 8. 13. and 11. 20. Pſal.112.10.They that fear not God are accounted wicked men, in Scripture phraſe, though they be not openly profane.

The way of the Lord] That is, godlineſſe,righteouſneſſe, ſee Rom. 2.9.10 Or, The way of the Lord : that is, his ſecret diſpenſations and providences, for the ſalvation of them that fear him. Hoſ. 14. 10. for the wayes of the Lord are right,and the juſt ſhall walk in them : but the tranſgreſſor,&c.

V.30. The righteous ſhal never be removed] Pſal. 37.22,and 125. 1. Out of his habitation : his children ſhal dwell there after him, Pſal, 37.29. See upon Pſal.37,2, For they ſhall ſoon be cut down, &c

V.31.The mouth of the juſt,&c]Plentifully,as a fruitful field doth corn.

bringeth forth wiſdom]To avoid croſs words,that bring deſtruction, the froward tongue] Heb. tongue of frowardneſſe; that is, accuſtomed to ſpeak frowardly.

ſhall be cut out] Like a bad tree, that bringeth forth evil fruit, Pſal 4.52.

V.32.The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable] That is, a godly wiſe man will take care both what he ſpeaketh, that it may be acceptable to God; and that it may be in an acceptable time : and God doth direct him, to make his ſpeeech ſeaſonable and acceptable(the anſwer of the tongue is from the Lord,Chap.16.1.) among men Compare with 11.27. procureth favour,and 12 2. obtaineth favour. It is the ſame word (רצון) in both places, as is here, bene placitum, properly, lips,tongue, and heart, as promiſcuouſly uſed, was obſerved before, in this very Chapter.

the mouth of the wicked ſpeaketh frowardneſſe] Things juſtly diſpleaſing to others.

frowardneſſe] Heb. frowardneſſes.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. A Falſe balance] Heb. balances of deceit.Under this word, he condemneth all falſe weights,meaſures and deceit.

abomination to the Lord] Though ſome men make light of it,yet God hates it.

A falſe balance is abomination to the Lord] Lev.19.36.Deut.25.15. Chap.16.11.& 20.10,23.

a juſt weight] Heb. a perfect ſtone

V.2. When pride cometh, then cometh ſhame] Chap. 15.33. & 16. 18.& 18.12. When man forgetteth himſelf,and exalteth himſelf above his vocation, then God, by ſome ſudden accident, bringeth him to confuſion.

but with the lowly is wiſdom] Chap. 3. 34. Surely he ſcorneth the ſcorners,(by St.James and St. Peter expreſſed,God reſiſteth the proud, &c.Jam.4.6.and 1 Pet.5.5,) but he giveth grace unto the lowly. The wiſdom therefore here intended, is Divine wiſdom, ſuch as makes one wiſe to ſalvation; and ſo throughout the book, the word(though ſometimes alſo more generally,for worldly wiſdom,and prudence:) muſt be taken of ſuch wiſdom eſpecially : But this, upon a ſuppoſition, that by grace)as moſt underſtand) ſpiritual ſaving grace is intended by Solomon. But there be alſo who in that place expound the word otherwiſe : to wit, of temporal temporarie grace and favour(and that too, from God :) with men. Truly, this place doth ſeem to favour much this interpretation. For, as by ſhame in the firſt member, temporal worldly ſhame is intended, ſo it ſtands with reaſon, that by wiſdom in the ſecond, the temporall worldly fruits of wiſdom; grace and favour : (of which ſee more upon Ch.10.23. a man of underſtanding hath wiſdom) ſhould be meant.

with the lowly is wiſdom] And, by conſequence, honour, from them that rightly weigh things.

V.3. integrity of the upright ſhall guide them] Chap.13.6.

V 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath] Chap. 10.2. Ezek.7.19. Zeph.1.18. Though well gotten and not by fraud,as verſe 1.

V. 5. direct] Heb. rectifie.

V. 6.The righteouſneſſe of the upright ſhall deliver them] It ſhall not only lead him in ſafe paths, but alſo free him out of dangers.

tranſgreſſours ſhall be taken in their own naughtineſſe] Chap.5. 22.

in their naughtineſſe] His plots to ruine others,ſhal ruine himſelf, Chap.5.22.

V. 7. hope] Or, (taking און as for הון as elſewhere, more than once:)expectation of ſtrengths; that is,the moſt ſtrong hope.

V.8. The righteous is delivered out of trouble] Chap.21.18.

the wicked cometh in his ſtead] It ſhews the great love of God to his,who brings them out of the ſnare,and their enemies into it, as in Mordecai's caſe,Eſth.7.9.

V.9. An hypocrite with his mouth deſtroyeth his neighbour] Job 8.13. A man that diſſembles with his neighbour, by fair words,leads him to deſtruction, unleſſe he be a wiſe man, that by knowledge finds out his drifts, and prevents them : or, a man that diſſembles with God, draws others to do ſo : but good men that know Gods Will, will not be drawn by him.

hypocrite] Or, profane man,Pſal.35.16.

V.10. The City rejoyceth] Becauſe of the good they get by them: whereas, by wicked men exalted they get hurt.verſe 11.

11. By the bleſſing of the upright the city is exalted] By the prayers of righteous men, a city is exalted. That is the proper ſignification of the word bleſſing, in this place, though ſome intend it to good counſels alſo, but not ſo properly. Now if the prayer of any juſt man may do much with God for the publike good: how much more theirs,that have a particular commiſſion from God, to pray, and to bleſſe ? Eſpecially, if not only lawfully called; but ſuch alſo, as approve themſelves by their holy converſation, not unworthy of their calling ? Truly, in ancient times the publick ſet prayers of the Church were thought ſo much to conduce to the publike welfare, that even Heathen Emperors, as may appear by ſome Edicts of theirs have made great reckoning of them: and it is a bad ſign,at any time, when thoſe mouths are ſtopped, by human authoritie, which God hath appointed to bleſſe.

by the mouth of the wicked] Not bad counſels only, which is not ſo proper here; (though mouth ſometimes be taken for deeds alſo : as hath been obſerved:) but abominable oaths,and curſes,by which God is extreamly diſhonoured and provoked.They might do wel to think of it,that pretend to a good cauſe. There is no cauſe ſo good, but may be loſt by ſuch impieties.

V. 12.void of wiſdom] Heb. deſtitute of heart.

deſpiſeth his neighbour] Speaketh ill of him,or to him;but he that is thorowly wiſe (Heb. a man of underſtandings) will not therefore deſpiſe others, nor reproach him, that reproveth him. Or the meaning may be, that a ſelf-conceited fool (as none commonly more ſelf-conceited, than thoſe that are more fooliſh) becauſe he thinks no body wiſe but himſelf, will not hear others when they ſpeak,either to deliver their opinions in a matter, or to give their advice ; no body ſhall ſpeak (by his good will) but himſelf:

but a wiſer man will be content to hear others,and to be ſilent himſelf. See upon Chap. 1. 5. A wiſe man will hear, and increaſe learning, &c. Theognis, (of whom, ſee before upon Chap. 1. 32 For the turning away of the ſimple, &c.) hath the very ſame, and almoſt in the very ſame words, but more fully expreſſed : Ὅστις (ſaith he) τοι δοκέει τὸν πλησίον ἴδμεναι οὐδὲν, Ἀλλ' αὐτὸς μοῦνος ποικίλα δήνε' ἔχειν : Κεῖνός γ' ἄφρων ἐστί, νόου βεβλαμμένος ἐσθλοῦ· Ἴσως (not æquè, as ſome there tranſlate : but either fortaſſe; or altogether vacant: as often : his meaning is, that there is no man, but is wiſe ſometimes, and may ſpeak to the purpoſe as well as another ;) γὰρ πάντες ποικίλ' ἐπιστάμεθα· that is, Whoever thinks his neighbour to know nothing, &c. I would wiſh them that are able to read this Author in his own language, (for by tranſlations they will hardly underſtand him,) even for Solomons ſake to read him accurately, whoſe ſayings will give more light often to divers of theſe Proverbs, than large commentaries. See alſo 12. 15. The way of a fool..

underſtanding] Heb. underſtandings.

V. 13. A tale-bearer] Heb. he that walketh, being a tale-bearer, Lev. 19. 16. and Chap. 20. 19. He that goeth about. See there.

A tale-bearer revealeth ſecrets] Things committed to him concerning the ſpeaker, or ſome other, upon condition of ſecrecy.

a tale-bearer] According to the propriety of the Original word, a peddler of tales.

V. 14. Where no counſel is, the people fall] 1 King. 12. 1. &c. Chap. 15. 22. Heb. counſels. Such as ſhip-maſters uſe to guide the ſhip well: for ſo the word ſignifies. Of the Original word תחבולות See upon Chap. 1. 5. ſhall attain.

V. 15. He that is ſurety for a ſtranger] Whoſe condition he knows not : or, for one whom he is no way obliged to, and therefore is not tyed to be bound for him. So a ſtrange woman is ſhe, that is not a mans own wife, Chap. 2. 16. and 6. 1. But comparing with Chap. 6. 1. My ſon, if thou be ſurety for thy friend, &c and becauſe it is no common caſe, for men to bind themſelves (in any conſiderable ſumme :) for ſtrangers, that it ſhould much need this caution; it is more likely that by ſtranger here, is to be underſtood another, ſimply, whoever he be, whether friend or other. See before upon Chap. 6. 3. into the hand of thy friend.

ſhall ſmart for it] Heb. ſhall be ſore broken. Heb. be broken by breaking : That is, to ſhivers, as an earthen pot with a fall : and we call it breaking when men are undone.

he that hateth ſuretiſhip, is ſure] Loveth it not, and will not do it without juſt cauſe. The hated wife, Deut. 21. 15. that is, leſs beloved.

ſuretiſhip] Heb. thoſe that ſtrike hands.

V. 16. A gracious woman retaineth honour, and ſtrong men retain riches] Some, becauſe עריץ, is commonly taken in a bad ſenſe, would have this the meaning, that as violence and oppreſſion is the way for men to get wealth : ſo meekneſſe and gentleneſſe, for women to get honour, their chiefeſt wealth. This might do, if Solomon might not ſeem ſo to approve violence in men, as he doth meekneſſe in women : or if there were no way, at leaſt no ſurer way, (which Solomon himſelf elſewhere contradicts) for men to get wealth, than by violence and oppreſſion. More probable therefore it is, that עריץ is here uſed in a good ſenſe, for an induſtrious, active, ſtout man : and that Solomon by theſe words intends to ſet down the commendation and proprieties as well of the man, that is maſter ; as of the woman, that is miſtris of a houſe and family : of the woman, that ſhe muſt be kind- affable, meek, gracious : this, her chiefeſt care, and credit : of the man, that he muſt be painful, laborious, reſolute, undaunted, and the like : as alſo to provide for the ſafe keeping of his goods againſt any violence. There was a proverbial ſaying among the Hebrews, uſed Eſay 49. 24. הירח מגבורים לקוח Shall the prey be taken from the mighty ? or, ſtrong man ? To which our Saviour alluding, grounds his parable upon it, Luke 11. 21, 22. When a ſtrong man armed, keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace. But when a ſtronger than he, ſhall come upon him, and overcome him he taketh from him all his armour wherein he truſted, and divideth his ſpoyles. I believe, if this had been thought of, this interpretation of Solomons words would have given all men good content ; and that they had forborn to ſeek further.

V. 17. The merciful man doth good to his own ſoul] He that is of a bountiful diſpoſition affords himſelf things needful, which a cruel man doth not : or, he that is good to others, ſhall receive a reward for it.

but he that is cruel, troubleth his own fleſh] According to the interpretation of the firſt member ; So this ſecond alſo doth afford a double ſenſe, which may eaſily be gathered. And ſo we take fleſh here, to be the ſame as ſoul, before : by both, the body, or whole perſon (as often :) being underſtood. Some by שאר would have the kindred, or neereſt relations, as wife and children, to be intended. And ſo the word is taken too, as in Geneſis often. So the ſenſe would be, that the cruel or extreamly miſerable, rationem nullum habet propinquitatis; hath no regard of them that are near to him, as by Grotius the words are paraphraſed. This alſo may be allowed. Some Rabbins upon the firſt, and indeed moſt literal ſenſe, take occaſion to reprove them that macerat their bodies by penances which the Law doth not require. Mercerus as a Chriſtian, not ignorant of what St. Paul profeſſeth of himſelf, and the practice of the Primitive times is more moderate : yet he blameth that exceſs, which doth rather dul the ſoul, than quicken it, to other more neceſſary duties & performances.

V. 18. The wicked worketh a deceitful work] That promiſeth a reward, but brings none, Rom. 6. 21. Eph. 5. 11. His reward, or that reward which he promiſed himſelf, and aimed at, even in this world, often faileth : but in caſe he ſpeed, to the utmoſt of his deſires ; yet is it no reward properly, but a bait rather, to lead him to eternal deſtruction.

to him that ſoweth] Pſal. 112. 9, 10. It is like good ſeed : it will certainly bring profit, Gal. 6. 8. 2 Cor. 9. 6.

righteouſneſſe] Sometimes it is taken for alms.

a ſure reward] Hebrew, שכר, Secher, for שכר Sechar, a reward. But becauſe Eſay 19 10. this word שכר Secher is there alſo found, (כל עשה שכר אגמי נפש there tranſlated in our Engliſh, all that make ſluces and ponds for fiſh ; or, of living things,) and by moſt, (among others, by learned Mercer,) conceived of neceſſity to ſignifie there obſtructionem], clauſuram, or ſomewhat (Junius renders it, excipulum,) to that purpoſe ; which granted, it followes, that שכר is there for סכר : a Sin, for a Samech : upon this, ſome Rabbins infer, that it is not without ſome alluſion to that word and ſignification there, that שכר is here put for שכר, the more emphatically, ſay they, to ſet out the certainty of the reward, as a fiſherman thinks himſelf ſure, when he hath the fiſhes incloſed in his net, or drag. Many ſuch ſcecret alluſions there be in the Scripture, which makes me, after Mercerus, to take notice of this obſervation. Yet I will not bind any man to believe it : if it may go for a probable conjecture, it is the utmoſt that can be ſaid of it.

a deceitful work —— a ſure reward] Heb. a reward of truth : So Luke 16. 9. 11. the Mammon of unrighteouſneſſe, that is, (as upon Chap. 8. 18. is ſhewed) deceitful ; is oppoſed to true riches.

V. 19. As] So.

As righteouſneſſe tendeth to life] He unfoldeth what he meant in the laſt verſe, expounding the laſt part firſt.

ſo] Heb. and.

V. 20. of a froward heart] Heb. עקש לב perverſe, crooked : full of diſſimulation, and hypocriſie, unſtable inconſtant, &c. See upon Chap. 2. 15. whoſe wayes are crooked, &c

V. 21. Though hand joyn in hand, the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed] There be no leſſe (as I find them reckoned by ſome, though ſome of them ſeem confident) than 14. ſeveral Interpretions of theſe words, which are not elſewhere in Scripture, but here and Ch. 16. 5. They may be found in Velrio his Adagies. I do not deſire to multiply words where I ſee no greater cauſe. The words ſeem to me, both of themſelves, and by the reaſon of the context, plain enough. Though wicked men plot and project never ſo much, and ſtrengthen themſelves by mutual counſels and confederacies, to ſecure themſelves ; yet when the time for their puniſhment, which God hath appointed is come ; all their deſignes, plots, and confederacies, in which they truſt, as though they had made a covenant with hell, and the grave, ſhall ſtand them in little ſtead. The ſcope of the words is not, to deny, but that wicked men by their cunning and policy may prevail a long time ; (as we call a long time : though the Prophet Habakkuk doth teach otherwiſe : though it tarry, wait for it ; becauſe it will ſurely come : it will not tarry, Chap. 2. 3.) God is willing they ſhould ; and hath ſome uſe for them ; but to ſet out the certainty, and unavoidableneſſe of their deſtruction ; which the longer it is put off, the more terrible and remedieleſſe it will be. This to me ſeems beſt. Yet I will give the reader an account of Mercerus his interpretation of the words alſo; not only becauſe of his authority, but alſo becauſe it agrees very well with the context. Hand in hand, he takes for, From hand to hand, and by that, he would have a ſucceſſion of judgements and puniſhments from father to ſon, to many generations, to be intended. We know the ſame is threatned in divers places of Scripture : and ſo, it will be more oppoſite (according to the uſual tenor of theſe Proverbs) to the next member ; but the ſeed of the righteous ſhall be delivered. But we cannot ſay ſo of Chap. 16. 5. where the former ſenſe ſeemeth to agree better. Theſe (among ſo many) be the two chief interpretations.

the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed] A wicked man cannot free himſelf from miſchief ; but a good man may free his poſterity alſo.

V. 22. As a jewel of gold] What kind of jewel, or ornament this נום (the original word) was, there be many conjectures; but conjectures only, no certainty: neither doth it much concern the ſenſe, or matter it ſelf. There be people at this day in ſome parts of the world, that weare rings at their noſe, or noſtrils, from which hang jewels, pearles, &c. It is poſſible ſuch a faſhion, or not unlike, might be among the Jews of thoſe dayes. However, it is more likely that Solomons words allude to the ringing of ſwine, as they call it, to keep them from digging ; a thing uſed in all places.

ſo is a fair woman which is without diſcretion] Heb. that hath departed from taſte : That is, that wants reaſon to guide her ſelf. Or, that hath loſt her ſavour : That is, her credit, by light courſes.

the expectation] Or, to the expectation.

V. 23. The deſire] Or, to the deſire.

The deſire of the righteous is onely good] The good ſhall have that happineſſe they deſire ; but the wicked can expect for nothing but Gods anger. See more upon the next words.

but the expectation of the wicked]As here expectation is not properly taken, but for event, or reward, which uſe to be the object of expectation; ſo deſire in the former member to I take for no other than event, or reward, for the ſame reaſon. So that the effect of the words ſeems no other than this,that all things work together(though ſeemingly otherwiſe for a time:)for good to them that love God: that nothing can happen to them but by a ſpecial providence for their good in the end; which ought to be our chief aim to refer all things to the end. As contrariwiſe,nothing to the wicked,&c. So that we ſhall not need to trouble our ſelves to reconcile theſe words, the deſire of the righteous is onely good: with divers other places of Scripture, importing that the beſt of men,are prone enough to covet and deſire things that they ſhould not; yea and to purſue ſometimes their deſires unto accompliſhment.

V. 24. ſcattereth] Pſal. 112. 9, 10.

and yet encreaſeth] He that giveth liberally,gets by giving: and the covetous loſe by not giving. See alſo upon Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecret of the Lord. And upon Chap. 10 4. The hand of the diligent.

V. 25. The liberal ſoul ſhall be made fat] 2 Cor.8.8,7,10. That is, rich.

The liberal ſoul] Heb. The ſoul of bleſſing.

he that watereth, ſhall be watered alſo himſelf] He ſhall be made richer, that he may ſtill do good. Heber. הוא יורא, which if from ירא, as ſome think must ſignifie, he ſhall caſt, (jaciet, profundet,) that is, he ſhall abound; as Junius expreſſeth it. But it is more probable, that יורא is here for יורה, from רוה, irrigare, that is, to water as it is here

V. 26. He that withholdeth corn] He that keeps corn till it be dear, or faulty.

the people ſhall curſe him] Heb. ſtrike him thorow. For curſes are like darts.

but bleſſing ſhall be upon the head of him that ſelleth it] They will pray God to bleſſe him.

V. 27. He that diligently ſeeketh good, procureth favour] He that riſeth betimes to ſeek good to himſelf, or others.

but he that ſeeketh miſchief, it ſhall come unto him] Pſal. 7. 15,16. & 9. 15, 16. & 10. 2. & 57. 6.

V. 28. He that truſteth in his riches, ſhall fall] Like a dry leaf,or as one that truſts to an unſure ſtay,Eſ.36.6. 1 Tim 6.17. but the righteous that truſt in God,ſhall flouriſh like a green leaf or branch.

the righteous ſhall flouriſh as a branch] Pſal. 1. 3. & 92. 12. &c. Jer. 17. 8.

branch] Or, a leaf: That is, a green leaf.

V. 29. He that troubleth his own houſe, ſhall inherit the wind] Chap. 15.27. By impoſing too much labour, ſparing too much, or raiſing quarrels; he ſhall not mend his eſtate, but impair it.

the fool ſhall be ſervant to the wiſe of heart] He that hath not wit to keep what his friends left him, muſt in his old dayes ſerve them, that are wiſer than himſelf.

V. 30. and he that winneth] That they learn of ſome, they teach others.

he that winneth ſouls, is wiſe] Subdueth them to the knowledge and will of God, 2 Cor. 10 4, 5.

winneth] Heb. taketh. Or, becauſe the noun that comes from that verb (one of them,) ſignifies, diſcipline, doctrine; ſome make that to be the ſignification of the verb alſo in this place; and tranſlate, qui diſciplina imbuit; that is, he that doth inſtruct, or teach: which pointeth at the ordinary way of wining of ſouls, by teaching; whether by publick preaching, or by private admonitions and inſtructions at home. But it is done often by a godly life, and good example, as effectually; and more effectually too, ſometimes.

V. 31. Behold, the righteous ſhall be recompenſed in the earth] 1 Pet. 4. 18. Puniſhed for his ſins.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. VV*Hoſo loveth inſtruction, loveth knowledge*] Rather, correction. To wit, by word of mouth, called reproof afterwards. It is a ſign he loves knowledge,that can bear his maſters reproof: but he that cannot bear it, loves it no more than a beaſt.

V. 3. the root of the righteous ſhall not be moved] Chap. 10. 25. The ſtate of the righteous, though it ſhake ſometimes, yet is like a deep rooted tree, it will not be blown down, whereas the wicked, when they ſeem ſtrongeſt.

V. 4. vertuous] Heb. Of vertue, Chap. 31. 10.

A vertuous woman is a crown to her husband] 1 Cor. 11. 7. Not onely an excellent helper, but alſo a chief ornament in the eyes of others, Chap. 31. 23.

V. 5. The thoughts of the righteous are right] Heb. judgement. That is, right as judgements ought to be.

the counſels of the wicked are deceit] Not only their raſh thoughts, but alſo their deliberate ones.

V. 6. The words of the wicked are to lie in wait for blood] Chap. 1. 11, 18. Or, words, for works and actions, as often.

the mouth of the upright ſhall deliver them] Thoſe whoſe blood the wicked ſeek to ſpoil, 1 Sam. 19. 4. or, themſelves. As Chap. 11. 9. An hypocrite with his mouth deſtroyeth his neighbour: but through knowledge ſhall the juſt be delivered.

V. 7. The wicked are overthrown, and are not] Pſal. 37. 37. Chap. 11. 21.

V. 8. A man ſhall be commended according to his wiſdom] Not alwayes ſoe; and that Solomon knew very well: Eccleſ. 9. 11. I returned, &c. See upon Chap. 10. 23 a man of underſtanding.

of a perverſe heart] Heb. perverſe of heart.

V. 9. He that is deſpiſed, and hath a ſervant] In ſome Engliſh Bibles that I have ſeen,the word hath,is printed in another letter;as though it were not in the Original Text: which may occaſion a miſtake,becauſe deſpiſed and a ſervant might ſeem to do very well together,without any ſuch ſupply. But the truth is,there is a לו (illi) in the Hebrew,which doth amount to the verb hath,in Engliſh. Except we make of it a reciprocal pronoune; as ſome do: and then the Engliſh muſt be: and is a ſervant to himſelf. Neither will the ſenſe be amiſs ſo. For though a man may bring himſelf into contempt by it with the vulgar; yet wiſer men will commend,and think him happy too, that can be his own ſervant, and ſuffice himſelf, without other help. Philoſophers much commend it, (τὴν αὐτουργίαν: ſelf-miniſtry:) and it is obſerved, that Homer (who knew what is commendable and vertuous better than many Philoſophers, as Horace thought:) doth ſet out his heroes,as not diſdaining ſometimes ſome very mean ſervices. Hence the vulgar: & ſufficiens ſibi: which,among men of underſtanding,is the higheſt of commendations and happineſs,and bringeth a man neereſt unto God,the only true αὐτάρκης.

V. 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beaſt] Is merciful even to the very beaſt that does him ſervice. He doth not overwork them, and affords them good keeping.

the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel] If they be cruel,when they pretend to ſhew mercy, what are they, when they come with a drawn ſword to ſhed blood?

tender] Or, bowels.

V. 11. He that tilleth his land, ſhall be ſatisfied with bread] Chap. 28. 19.

he that followeth vain perſons, is void of underſtanding] And, ſo neglects his buſineſſe, whereby he ſhould live. The Hebr. word ſignifieth vain things (and ſo uſed often:) as well as perſons, which gives us occaſion to conſider, whether this Proverb may not have ſome affinity with that in Eccleſiaſtes, He that obſerveth the wind, ſhall not ſow; and he that regardeth the clouds, ſhall not reap, chap. 11 4. There may be very good ſenſe made of it: and it puts me in mind of many vain precepts and obſervations that Heſiod hath concerning husbandry, in chuſing proper dayes, &c.

V. 12. The wicked deſireth the net of evil men; but the root of the righteous yield, &c.] Men who have no grounds in them of piety and godlineſſe, and are for the preſent onely; which when they ſee the proſperity of the wicked,and how they thrive in their bloody deſigns; who take up men, as fiſhes with the angle: they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag, Hab. 1. 15. they envy them (chap. 23. 17.) and covet extremly to be of their ſociety, that they may ſhare with them: but the root of the righteous, which hath its groweth, under ground, not ſeen by fleſhly eyes; by Gods conſtant and ſecret bleſſing yieldeth to abundance, without any ſuch violent indirect meanes. So we may expound it of temporal bleſſings alſo. But it is more likely that the fruits here intended, are the myſtical fruits of eternal life, to the righteous himſelfe; and the ſpiritual fruits of good inſtruction, and example, to the converſion, and ſpiritual improvement of many others; according to that we had before, The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life; and he that winneth ſouls, is wiſe, chap. 11. 30. In the firſt words, why he that deſireth the ſociety of bloody violent men, ſhould be called רשע (which commonly imports wickedneſſe in the higheſt degree:) and the bloody men themſelves רעים onely which is a more general word; firſt I anſwer, that thoſe diſtinctions of words do not alwayes hold: as for example,in the firſt Pſalm, firſt verſe, three ſorts of evil men by way (as many are of opinion,) of gradation being mentioned, רשעים are the firſt of the three: חטאים ſinners, the next: לצים ſcorners the laſt. Secondly, as there is great affinity of letters, ſo frequent permutation of ſignifications alſo between רוע to be evil רעה to have fellowſhip and רעע to bruiſe in pieces: or to deſtroy; (as the word is tranſlated chap. 13. 20.) it is not improbable that Solomon might make choice of that word in this place with alluſion(as there is a manifeſt alluſion in the very words chap. 13. 20.) to ſome of thoſe other ſignifications. Laſtly, the Hebrew word מצור here tranſlated the net; ſignifies hunting alſo, and (if the מ be radical) a caſtle or fortreſſe: which ſignifications are here followed by ſome. But for the firſt,whether net,or hunting,there will be no great difference of ſenſe. But if we tranſlate, fortreſſe, (as Junius doth: Deſiderat improbus præſidium malorum; ſed radix juſtorum dat illud:), then the beſt ſenſe (whether malorum, be taken for a Neuter, or a Maſculin: either of which the Hebrew רעים may be:) will be, that wicked men are very careful to provide for their ſecurity: but in vain; becauſe it is the prerogative, and as it were, the natural fruit and effect of integrity, and godlineſs: which is often inculcated in theſe Proverbs: and how to be underſtood, ſee upon Pſalm 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terrour by night, &c.

the net] Or, the fortreſſe.

the root of the righteous yieldeth fruit] Meaning, their heart within, which is upright, and doth good to all.

yieldeth fruit] Heb. יתן (dabit:) as Chap. 10. 24. where the Engliſh is: ſhall be granted.

V. 13. The wicked is ſnared by the tranſgreſſion of his lips] Heb.

The ſnare of the wicked is in the tranſgreſſion of his lips, Chap. 18. 7. An evil mans tongue brings himſelf into trouble, and a good man helps himſelf out, 1 Sam. 25.

V. 14 A man ſhall be ſatisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth] Chap. 13. 2. Pſalm 34. 12, 13, 14.

and the recompence of a mans hands ſhall be rendred unto him] A good man ſhall be rewarded, both for his good words and works.

V. 15. The way of a fool is right in his own eyes] Chap. 3. 7. His own device: for he thinketh himſelf wiſeſt, and hearkneth to no mans counſel. See upon Chap. 1. 5. A wiſe man will hear, &c. and Chap 11. 12. deſpiſeth his neighbours.

he that hearkneth unto counſel is wiſe] Heſiod (who is thought by ſome to have been before Homer: but of great antiquity certainly, and in many œconomical precepts and admonitions, well agreeing with Solomon:) makes two degrees of wiſe men: Οὗτοι μὲν πανάριϛοι,&c. The firſt, of them, that are wiſe of themſelves, and can ſee what is expedient, both preſent and future, without taking counſel of others: the ſecond of them, that will entertain good counſel given them by others.

V. 16. A fools wrath is preſently known] Or, A fool is known in the day of his wrath. For then he vents his folly.

preſently] Heb. in that day.

a prudent man covereth ſhame] Bridleth his affections, that he may not ſpeak, or do any thing that may ſhame him: or, hideth the ſhame of another, by taking no notice of an injury.

V. 17. He that ſpeaketh truth, ſheweth forth righteouſneſſe] Chap. 14. 5. Though truth and righteouſneſs, are different in themſelves; (and the Apoſtle ſpeakes of ſome that held the truth in unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 1. 18.) yet they have ſo much affinity, that a man may probably preſume, that he that loveth and uſeth to ſpeak the truth, is a right honeſt man; juſt and righteous in his dealings: and beſides it is a great means to preſerve juſtice and righteouſneſſe among men, to ſpeak the truth at all times.

a falſe witneſſe] Heb. of lies. The language of a falſe witneſs, or perfidious man, is full of guile, diſſimulation, and hypocriſie.

V. 18. There is that ſpeaketh like the piercings of a ſword] Pſal. 57. 4. & 59. 7. It is not every man that doth ſo, but there are ſome ſo bad, that their tongues wound like ſwords.

V. 19. The lip of truth ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever] A true ſpeaker can ſtand it out to the end; but a lyar can ſhift but a while. Or it may be underſtood as properly with reference to another world, that eternal life ſhall be the reward of truth; whereas all that is got by lying, and cheating, and ſuch indirect courſes is but for a moment, and ſhall ſoon vaniſh away.

V. 20. Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil] Or, Deceit returns into the heart. That is, they that ſeek to deceive others, hurt themſelves: but they that give good counſel, fare the better for it themſelves.

V. 21. There ſhall no evill happen to the juſt:] Becauſe all things that happen unto them in this world, whether in the nature of croſſe, or proſperous events, work together for their good, Rom. 8. 28. See the former reference upon Pſal 95. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid, &c. And of temporal promiſes in general, ſee upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c. and other verſes of that Pſalm.

V. 22. Lying lips are abomination to the Lord] Chap. 6. 17. Though God hate all manner of evil; yet lying is moſt hateful to him, being a God of truth, Revel. 22. 15.

they that deal truly are his delight] That do as they ſpeak, which lyars do not.

V. 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge] Chap. 13. 16. & 15. 2. He that is wiſe reveals his knowledge, onely when he may do good with it: but fools by prating ſhew their folly. Some of the ancients have excellent ſayings to that purpoſe, that we ſhould not conceal knowledg, but freely and ingeniouſly impart it unto others. Their meaning is, that we ſhould not conceal it out of envy; not that we ſhould make brags of it, or proſtitute it to the contempt of them, who are not likely to be benefited by it: which is to conceal it, in Solomons ſenſe. See alſo upon Chap. 10. 14. Wiſe men lay up knowledge.

V. 24. The hand of the diligent ſhall bear rule] Chapter 10. 4.

The ſlothful] Or, deceitful: For ſuch men live by their wits, not by their hands. See before upon Chap. 10. 4. with a ſlack hand.

V. 25. Heavineſſe in the heart of man maketh it ſtoop] Chap. 15. 13. As a heavy burthen weighs down the body.

a good word maketh it glad] A word of comfort from a friend.

word] Or, matter, Chap. 15. 20.

V. 26. The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour, but the way of the wicked ſeduceth them] יתר more excellent, here; is by ſome, (as Mercer and others: and ſo by our margin here,) rendred abundant: and ſome that follow this tranſlation, make this ſenſe of the whole, (which is agreeable enough to divers other places of Scripture,) that the juſt and godly ſhall abound in all good things, when the wicked, through their way, or wickedneſs, ſhall erre, or wander for want; that is, in effect, ſhall beg. I do not ſee, but this may do well enough: certain it is, that the Hebrew תתעם here, and by moſt interpreters, expreſſed ſeduceth them, may as well be tranſlated, cauſeth them to erre; or to wander. Yet ſeduceth them as it is more generally received, ſo will afford a more general and warrantable ſenſe; to wit, that the way of the wicked firſt or laſt, leads them to deſtruction: or that their wicked life, leads them to wicked opinions, and ſeduceth them from the truth, though right before in their faith. And this may be the ſenſe of this latter part, whether we tranſlate excellent, or abundant in the firſt. But if excellent, Rabbi Kimki makes the ſenſe of the whole (and this too, not improbable:) this: That righteouſneſs is of it ſelf, a more noble thing than unrighteouſneſs, and more commendable, few or none make any queſtion: and by conſequent, that a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour, or any other that is not righteous. What then is the cauſe, that ſo few apply themſelves that way, to follow his example? Becauſe they ſee, though (Virtus laudatur & alget: as one of the Poets hath it:) juſtice be commended and commendable, yet moſt men thrive in the world by injuſtice. To this purpoſe ſee more upon Chap. 1. 32. For the turning away of the ſimple, ---- and the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them. The vulgar Latin (which ſome take upon them to juſtifie as the moſt genuine ſenſe: profundè & germanè, ſaith Cornelius a Lapide, which I wonder at:) expreſſeth it: Qui negligit damnum propter amicum, juſtus eſt. It doth afford them that follow it, ſufficient matter of diſcourſe (and ſo their volumes come to ſwell:) how a man is bound to neglect his own profit, or advantage, for his friend, or neighbours ſake, There may be good uſe enough of that ſpeculation; but as to Solomons words, I conceive it altogether impertinent.

V. 27. The ſlothful man roſteth not that which he took in hunting] As if a man ſhould ſay; I am not the richer for any thing you ever gave me; the meaning may be, either not the richer, becauſe it did not thrive with me; or, becauſe you never gave any thing: ſo here, roſteth not; either when he hath it, lets it ſpoil, or be loſt through neglect and lazineſſe: or, roſteth not, becauſe through lazineſſe he will not take the pains to hunt, or to hunt diligently; and ſo gets nothing: which, of the two, is the moſt probable interpretation. In ancient times, before men were incorporated into towns and cities, hunting was a principal object of mans induſtry; and it is very likely that the Latin word ſtudium, came originally from the Hebrew צוד which ſignifieth to hunt. Moſt likely neverthelesſe, (as moſt are of opinion) that the words are to be taken proverbially, to this effect, that as it often falls out, that they that have taken great pains in hunting, and have got ſomewhat, yet through ſome either ſudden chance hapning to their own perſon, as either death or ſickneſſe; or ſome other caſualty, through which they are bereaved of their prey, they eat not of it: ſo it is with the wicked mans wealth, which though he ſcrapeth and heapeth together with much labour, yet he doth not at all, or not long, enjoy. This to be the right meaning of the words, moſt Interpreters agree: but for the truth of the ſentence, it muſt be remembred, (as hath been often told) that it is enough, if it be ſo for the moſt part; or that there be now and then, in every age, ſome notorious examples of it: which if there were not, it is not likely it would have become ſo common an obſervation among the wiſe heathen too, who alſo have divers ſayings and ſentences to this purpoſe. If it be objected, that it ſo falls out with the righteous too ſometimes, (or ſay, as often, or oftner, if ye will; though I believe it not) and therefore, not the proper caſe of the wicked; I anſwer, that the difference between the caſe of the righteous and the wicked, upon which the obſervation is grounded, is in their different condition at the time of their death: The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſſe, but the righteous hath hope in his death, Chap. 14. 32. See upon Chap. 10. 28. The hope of the righteous ſhall be gladneſſe, &c. See the reference there, and upon Pſal. 37. 1, 2. &c. Fret not thy ſelf, &c.

ſlothful man] Heb man of ſlackneſſe, as Chap. 10. 4. Mic. 6. 9. Or, fraudulent man. See before upon 10. 4. with a ſlack hand.

roſteth not] Learned Mr. Fuller, Miſcellan. l. 6. c. 13. would have the words tranſlated, non clathrabit. that is, doth not hang upon the rack; to preſerve, &c. He hath a great deal to prove that to be the proper ſignification of the word: but it doth not concern the ſenſe, in general; nor us much, in this place.

but the ſubſtance of a diligent man is precious] Heb. but the ſubſtance is precious of a diligent man. Such trajections (as they call them) are frequent in Scripture. Yet the words might be otherwiſe ordered too, but to the ſame effect; and this is the moſt probable conſtruction.

V. 28. In the way of righteouſneſs is life --- no death] See upon 3. 18. a tree of life. And 10. 2. delivereth from death.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. Inſtruction] Or, reproof.

V. 2. A man ſhall get good by the fruit of his mouth] Chap, 12. 14. He that uſeth his tongue aright, ſhall get good by it: he that doth otherwiſe, ſhall get hurt.

V. 3. He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life] Chap. 21. 23. From raſh and haſty ſpeeches. See before 10. 14. wiſe men.

V. 4. The ſoul of the ſluggard, deſireth, and hath nothing] He ever deſireth, but taketh no pains to get any thing: and therefore muſt loſe his longing.

V. 5. A righteous man hateth lying] A man is not righteous that abſtains from lying, unleſſe he do it out of the hatred of that ſin. See before upon Chap. 12. 17. He that ſpeaketh truth.

lying] Heb. a word of a lye.

and cometh to ſhame] By his lying.

V. 6. Righteouſneſſe keepeth him that is upright in the way] Chap. 11. 3, 5. 6.

the ſinner] Heb ſin.

V. 7. There is that maketh himſelf rich, yet hath nothing : there is that maketh himſelf poor, yet hath great riches] Theſe words will afford a double ſenſe ; the one œconomical ; the other, philoſophical. So I ſpeak, taking philoſophy here, for a ſpeculative ſcience : though I know otherwiſe, that æconomia : is a part of moral philoſophy. The firſt, œconomical, and moſt literal, tending to warne us, that the world is full of diſſimulation : and that we ſhould not judge of mens eſtates, in our mutual dealings, and commerces ; by what themſelves make ſhew : which is of dangerous conſequence : becauſe, for example, ſome will make themſelves poor of purpoſe, that they may receive ſupport from them, whom they are better able to relieve, or gratifie. Others, very beggars, or in a ſinking condition, make themſelves rich, that they may, by their ſuppoſed wealth and ability, have credit to take up where they will, and to borrow : through whoſe diſſimulation many are undone. The philoſophical, this ; That ſome men, (truly vertuous and godly :) though outwardly they appear poor, (that maketh himſelf : that is, that hath the port, & reſemblance: præ ſe fert, as the Latins ſpeak: or, maketh himſelf poor, becauſe he doth not apply himelf to the world, and contems the wealth and pomp of it : and ſo on the other ſide, makes himſelf rich, becauſe it is his onely ſtudy : ſee upon 10. 4. but the hand of the diligent) yet in very truth are rich : rich in their ſouls, the beſt riches. Others who appear rich (vicious ungodly men :) who in very truth, are very poor; naked and ſtarved in their ſouls. Somewhat to this purpoſe upon Chap. 12. 9 He that is deſpiſed, &c. And Rev. 2. 9. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty ; but thou art rich. Or, if we will take this maketh himſelf, of purpoſed diſſimulation, or deluded imagination : then Rev. 3. 17. Becauſe thou ſayeſt, I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have need of nothing ; and knoweſt not, that thou art wretched , and miſerable, and poor, and blind and naked. And on the contrary , that maketh himſelf poor : to wit, through humility of ſpirit , abaſing himſelf, as the greateſt of ſinners; wherein conſiſteth perfection of vertue and godlineſſe.

V. 8. but the poor heareth not rebuke] A rich man queſtioned and troubled, may make his peace by his riches : but a poor man is ſeldom queſtioned, or quarrelled with, having nothing to loſe. See upon Chap. 10, 15. The rich mans wealth &c.

V. 9. The light of the righteous rejoyceth] Chap. 4. 18, 19 The proſperity of good men is like the light of the Sun, which, encreaſing, brings more joy ſtill : but the proſperity of the wicked is like a candle, that leſſens till it goes out.

rejoyceth] Or, ſhall rejoyce.

but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out] Job 18. 6. and 21. 17.

lamp Or, candle.

V. 10. Onely by pride cometh contention] Angry men are provoked by wrongs ; but proud men contend for preeminence : or, the main cauſe of contention generally is pride. See Jam. 3. 13. &c Who is a wiſe man, &c.

with the well-adviſed is wiſdom] Proud men quarrel, becauſe they hearken not to counſel : they that hearken to it, are too wiſe to quarrel:

V. 11. Wealth gotten by vanity, ſhall be diminiſhed] Chap. 10 2. & 20. 21.

by vanity] By wickedneſſe, as 10. 2. Treaſures of wickedneſſe, Or, more probably (that being more agreeable to the ordinary notion of the Original word :) by vaine means, or courſes : as gaming, acting upon a ſtage, and the like.

by labour] Heb. with the hand.

V. 12. when the deſire cometh, it is a tree of life] Chapter 13. 19. See upon Chap. 3. 18. a tree of life.

V. 13. Whoſo deſpiſeth the word, ſhall be deſtroyed] Meaning, the word of God whereby he is admoniſhed of his duty.

ſhall be rewarded] Or, ſhall be in peace.

V. 14. The law of the wiſe is a fountain of life, to depart from the ſnares of death] Chap. 14. 27.

V. 15. the way of tranſgreſſors is hard] Or, harſh. And therefore diſpleaſing to others.

hard] Or, rough.

V. 16. Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge] Chap. 12. 23. & 15. 2.

layeth] Heb. ſpreadeth.

V. 17. A wicked meſſenger falleth into miſchief] An unfaithful meſſenger ſhall be puniſhed, becauſe he hath wounded his maſters eſtate by neglect of his buſineſſe : but a faithful one, which hath healed it, ſhall be rewarded.

a faithful ambaſſadour is health] Heb. an ambaſſadour of faithfulneſſe ; that is, a moſt faithful one, Chap. 25. 13.

V. 18. inſtruction] Or, rebuke.

but he that regardeth reproof, ſhall be honoured] Chap. 15. 5, 31. With riches and dignity.

V. 19. The deſire accompliſhed is ſweet to the ſoul] Verſe 12. God doth accompliſh the deſire of good men to their joy, Pſal. 145. 19. but not of the wicked, becauſe they cannot be drawn to leave their ſins. So ſome. But the moſt obvious, and more immediate expoſition is ; That all men (it being the nature of man, ſtill to be in the purſuit of ſome thing or other) have their deſires, in the accompliſhment of which is the chief comfort of their lives: whence it is, that fools or wicked men can ſo hardly be reclaimed, becauſe, being full of deſires, (ſuch as they are) they have found ſo much ſweetneſſe (not conſidering that it will be bitterneſſe in the end) in the accompliſhment, as they cannot promiſe themſelves from honeſt ends and deſires, to the ſweetneſſe of which, for want of experience, they are altogether ſtrangers : and therefore not eaſily perſwaded to forſake their wonted courſes According to this interpretation , it ſhould rather be, (which is the moſt proper and uſual ſignification of the Hebrew particle ו) and it is abomination, &c.

V. 20. He that walketh with wiſe men, ſhall be wiſe] And ſo preſerved, whereas a companion of fools, learning folly of them, ſhall periſh.

ſhall be deſtroyed] Heb. ſhall be broken. Or. ſhall be worſe ; (pejor erit ; Junius ;) from רוע, to be naught. The affinity of letters between theſe words רעע and רוע makes (as in many other Hebrew words of that kind) that they ſometimes exchange ſignifications. See upon Chap. 12. 12. The wicked deſireth, &c.

V. 21. purſueth] Heb. eagerly purſueth.

V. 22. a good man leaveth an inheritance to his childrens children] He leaves it to his children, and they to theirs, (as if you ſhould ſay; De benè quæſitis lætatur tertius hæres : according to the Poets expreſſion ; De male quæſitis vix gaudet tertius hæres, which comes to the ſame effect :) whereas the wealth of wicked men many times comes not to their own children, but to good men, that have no relation to them, Pſalm 37. 26.

the wealth of the ſinner is laid up for the juſt] Job 27. 17.

laid] Heb. hidden.

V. 23. Much food is in the tillage of the poor] Chap. 12. 11. If he follow his buſineſſe with judgement , without which, rich men may want. This interpretation is much confirmed by a paſſage in Eſay, where this very word משפט (Iſa. 28. 26.) is uſed concerning the myſtery of husbandry : there tranſlated diſcretion ; For his God doth inſtruct him to diſcretion, (or, judgement) and doth teach him However , the words may be otherwiſe, and warrantably too tranſlated to this effect : That a poor man may thrive and do well, through his labour and induſtry, (and Gods bleſſing upon it; as muſt be ſupplied from other places) when rich men are conſumed ; בלא משפט, quod non ſit ei jus: or, citra judicium: (both, Mercerus his expreſſions) that is, through unrighteouſneſſe. Which may alſo be confirmed by other like paſſages. This interpretation Mercer doth prefer before any other : but ſince the Original words will afford either, let the Reader take his choice. Junius is ſomewhat different ; Sed eſt qui conſumit ſe inertiâ ; (and in his margin, in non officio) that is but there is who deſtroyes himſelf through his ſlothfulneſſe : which ſenſe is, of it ſelf as warrantable, by comparing with other like paſſages, as any other ; but not ſo proper, as I conceive, to the Original words of this place.

V. 24. He that ſpareth his rod, hateth his ſon] Chap. 23. 13. Doth as one that hates him : lets him be corrupted, and ſo undone.

he that loveth him chaſteneth him betimes] Ere his ſin grow to an head.

V. 25. The righteous eateth to the ſatisfying of his ſoul] Pſal. 34. 10. & 37. 3. Hath food to fill his belly. Of all earthly promiſes, as life, wealth and the like, in the Old Teſtament, how to be underſtood by Chriſtians, hath often been ſaid, and references made almoſt in every Chapter, hitherto to thoſe places. I hope the reader will not ſtill expect it. We will onely take notice of a ſeeming contradiction between the words of David, and theſe of Solomon. David ſaith, Pſal. 17. 14. That God filleth the bellies of the wicked with his hid treaſure. And Solomon here, that the belly of the wicked ſhall want. Both true literaly, with ſome limitations of times and circumſtances : as moſt Proverbs are to be underſtood, as hath been obſerved more than once. But moſt true, and moſt conſiderable indeed, that even when the bellies of the wicked are moſt full , and they in ſight, moſt at eaſe ; then may they be ſaid, to be in moſt miſerable caſe, becauſe by proſperity they are fatted and culled againſt the day of ſlaughter : whereas by miſery, temporal and bodily viſitations, (had God been ſo merciful unto them) they might have come to repentance. Whereat, the grace of God is ſufficieut to the godly to make them happy at any time, St. Paul aſſuring us, that no tribulation, diſtreſſe, perſecution, famine, nakedneſs, peril, or ſword, can ſeparate true Chriſtians from the love of God, Rom. 8. 35.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſe 1. E*Very wiſe woman buildeth her houſe*] Encreaſeth the welfare of it, by looking well to her children and ſervants : but fooliſh women ruine the family. Pride then muſt not make a man deſpiſe the counſel af a prudent wife, nor affection force him to give way to a fooliſh There may be a further meaning alſo (if not the literal and immediate) in theſe words, God is ſaid to have made the godly midwives houſes. Exod. 1. 21. but theſe words are otherwiſe both tranſlated, and interpreted by ſome ; as Junius, particularly. But there is no queſtion of Ruth 4 11. where we find a ſolemn form of bleſſing women, when married, then in uſe among the Hebrews: The Lord make the woman that is come into thine houſe like Rachel and like Leah: which two did build the houſe of Iſrael, &c. Children alſo are called בנים, from בנה, which ſignifies to build. Why then ſhould not a wife, that is, a religious godly woman, be ſaid to build her houſe, not by her prudence and induſtry only, but alſo by her fertility; being made fertile by Gods ſpeciall bleſſing, as is often promiſed in the Scripture? As on the other ſide ſterility is alſo threatned, or at leaſt mentioned, as a curſe. So that as the godly woman may be ſaid to build her houſe in both thoſe reſpects,: ſo alſo the fooliſh or ungodly, to pluck it down, not only by her ſterility, but alſo by her bad carriage and adminiſtration.

V. 2. He that walketh in his uprightneſſe, feareth the Lord] Mens courſes ſhew, whether they fear God, or deſpiſe him.

but he that is perverſe in his wayes, deſppiſeth him] Job 12. 4.

V. 3. In the mouth of the fooliſh is a rod of pride] Some by a rod of pride, would have that rod underſtood wherewith the fool himſelf is puniſhed, often mentioned, as Chap. 10. 13. & 26. 3. A rod for the fools back, &c. and this rod, here called a rod of pride, becauſe many fools by proud talk (as much as any thing) expoſe themſelves to the laſh. Others more probably, by a rod of pride, underſtand proud ſcornfull words, words of repoach and contumely, very frequent in the mouth of fools, whereby they ſtrike at other men, as it were with a ſtaffe. The Latines uſe to ſay, virgula Cenſoria, of rigid and over-ſevere judgements and cenſures. Solomon might aym at both, that whileſt proud fooles ſtrike at others with their contumelious tongues, they expoſe themſelves to the ſtroak, which haply they might have avoyded: according to that of the Poet, Cadimus, inque vicem, præbemus crura ſagittis. There be alſo, who think that fools talk might be called here, a rod of pride, becauſe fools oftentimes (as children) ſpeak more freely of great mens faults, than wiſer men dare do. Which is true enough: the more is the pity. Even a wiſe man ſhall be acconnted a fool, if he ſpeak freely, though it lye upon him as a duty. However, I do not think this to have been Solomons meaning.

V. 4. Where no oxen are, the crib is clean] By the oxe, is meant labour; and by the crib, the barn: meaning, without labour, there is no food for cattel, much leſſe for men:

much increaſe by the ſtrength of the oxe] Solomons aym is not to commend oxen, for their ſtrength; but the care, and labour of men by which oxen become ſerviceable for ſo neceſſary a work, plowing, &c. (according to the cuſtom of thoſe places:) by which mens lives are chiefly maintained. It is a good ſign, of a careful and provident husband-man, when either oxen, or horſes, imployed in that work; are well kept.

V. 5. A faithfull witneſſe will not lye] Exod 20. 16 & 23. 1 Chr. 6. 19. & 12. 17. Many hate the imputation of falſe witneſſes, which make little or no conſcience of lying; eſpecially if it be upon an extraordinary occaſion, or for a friend, or in a good cauſe, or the like. But as he is a faithfull witneſſe in very deed, who will not lye; ſo he that telleth lyes, let his pretence be what it will, he is a falſe witneſſe. So many, upon a perſwaſion grounded upon ſome outward performances and appearances, (as long prayers, diligent hearing of the word, and the like,) that they are godly and religious, ſtick at no manner of unrighteouſneſſe in their daily practice, and dealings, and never think the worſe of themſelves for it: to whom St. John ſaith, Little children; Let no man deceive you; He that doth righteouſneſſe, is righteous, (even as he is righteous,) He that committeth ſin. is of the Devill, &c. 1 Joh. 3. 7. 8. Or, A faithfull witneſſe, &c. That is. He really deſerves the title and commendation of a faithful witneſſe, who not for his credit only, or any other worldly conſideration is faithful; but becauſe he maketh a conſcience (before God) to tell a lye; and not only in bearing of witneſſe, but even in his ordinary life and converſation doth avoyd to tell a lye: whereas others, who upon ordinary occaſions make no conſcience of lying, through cuſtom of lying, may be drawn in time to bear falſe witneſſe alſo. So ſome Rabbines, who are followed by ſome other Expoſitors. Both good; but I think the former the more genuine interpretation.

A faitfull] Heb. Of faithfulneſſes.

V, 6. A ſcorner ſeeketh wiſdom, and, findeth it not] That is, When a ſcorner ſeeketh. For it is not the propriety of a ſcorner to ſeek after wiſdom: but when he doth, it is for his own ambition, vain glory, (as Simon Magus did, Acts 8. 18, 19) or ſome other worldly end; not in ſimplicity, and ſincerity of heart, to glorifie God with it, or out of love of godlineſſe: in which caſe, no wonder if he ſeek, and find not. For he ſcorneth the ſcorners; but he giveth grace unto the lowly, Chap. 3. 34.

knowledge is eaſie unto him that underſtandeth] Chap. 8. 9. See there.

V. 8. The wiſdom of the prudent, is to underſtand his way: but the folly of fools, is deceit] Heb. חכמת ערום, tranſlated by Mercerus, Sapientia callidi: by Junius, Sapientia aſtuti. The matter of this ſaying, is excellent; and the expreſſion as pithy. There is not any thing, that men ordinarily are more ambitious of, and more heartily (ſome ſecretly, ſome openly), applaud themſelves in, than to be ſubtile, and crafty: or as we tranſlate, prudent, and worldly wiſe. Now Solomon tells us, here, what that craft, or prudence is, and wherein it chiefly conſiſteth, that makes men wiſe indeed; and ſhould be deſired: and what again is the proper craft of fools. A wiſe mans craft ſaith he, is to look into his own actions, and to obſerve himſelf: and the craft of fools, (or worldly wiſe men,) wherein they boaſt and glory, as great wiſdom; it is their folly: or, is meer folly. Or, Their folly, is their craft: which comes all to one. Stulti ſtultitiâ ſuâ hoc unum ſpectant, &c. as Mercerus here: that is, Fools through their folly mind nothing elſe, but how they may cheat, or over-reach, and over-plot others: this is their wiſdom: this is their wiſdom, and that wiſdom, (as thay deem it,) is their folly. By the antitheſis it clearly appears that the words muſt thus be ſupplyed and interpreted. And ſo Junius too; Sapientia aſtuti, eſt advertere ad viam ſuam: ſtultitia autem ſtolidorum, ad dolum. So that we have here in theſe words, that by ancient heathen Phyloſophers, and others, ſo much admired wiſdom, by them conſecrated in ſome of their moſt holy Temple, expreſſed in thoſe words, Know thy ſelf: and by Socrates afterwards (whoſe ordinary ſpeech, and motto, which became very famous in after ages, included in one verſe, Ὅττι τοι ἐν μεγάροισι, &c. to this purpoſe, was; That he that is wiſe, ſhould be wiſe at home, to obſerve his own actions, what juſt, what unjuſt; what right, what wrong, &c.) further advanced, for which he was himſelf among the learned Gentiles; both Romans and Grecians, little leſſe than adored: in theſe words, I ſay, moſt elegantly and pithily comprehended. It is a common ſubject in the writing of ancient Phyloſophers, and they have done ſo excellently well upon it, that Chriſtians (as many as are able) may be ſent to them to learn, and edifie. But eſpecially to what they have written concerning Anacharſis the Scithian Phyloſopher, his long ſearch for wiſdom among the Grecians, and his determination upon the matter, and their large Commentations upon it. There be other paſſages (ſee ver. 14. Their back-ſlider, &c.) in this Chapter, that would make a man ſuſpect, that Solomon was not unacquainted with ancient Phyloſophy; or rather, that ancient Phyloſophy hath been beholding to Solomon. Some expound the latter part of the verſe otherwiſe too, which is as agreeable to the Hebrew, and not leſſe agreeable to ancient Phyloſophy: But the folly of foules is deceit; that is, ſay they, the wickedneſſe of wicked men proceeds from the errour of their judgement. For all men, doubtleſſe, propoſe to themſelves the ſame end, happineſs; yea true happineſs: ſo that what they do contrary to that end, proceeds from want of judgement and knowledge, in diſcerning between that which is truly good, and that which is truly evill. Or to expreſs it in the words of an ancient Phyloſopher; Whoſoever ſinneth, doth in that decline from his purpoſed end, and is certainly deceived. And this is rational Ariſtotle's doctrine alſo, who diſputes at large and maintains, that he is a good man, who ἕκαστα κρίνει ὀρθῶς, judgeth aright of all things: and to whom (ἐν ἑκάστοις τ' ἀληθὲς φαίνεται:) the truth of all things doth appear: and again, that ἀγνοεῖ πᾶς ὁ μοχθηρὸς ἃ δεῖ πράττειν; that every naughty man is ignorant. Ethick Nicom, l. 3. c. 4. &c. Upon this ground they make excellent inferences againſt anger: but we will not digreſſe ſo far. Diodat is the man, who commends this ſenſe unto us. See alſo upon chap. 5. 23. he ſhall go aſtray.

V. 9. Fooles make a mock at ſin: but among the righteous, there is favour] This paſsage is very differently expreſſed by Interpreters. What we have here, Fooles make a mock; is anſwerable to the moſt uſual ſignification of the Hebrew word יליץ, confirmed alſo by chap. 10. 23. It is a ſport to a foole, to do miſchief. And as for the ſecond member, there will be found in it a very plauſible (obſervable in moſt of theſe ſentences) antitheſis, if with ſome we expound the whole verſe to this purpoſe; That as fools, being paſt all ſenſe of goodneſs, find ſome kind of pleaſure (ſuch as it is,) in ſin; ſo, and much more, there ariſeth רצון, an inward complacencie, peace, and pleaſure to the juſt from righteous actions, and a vertuous life. But becauſe the ſame word ſignifies alſo to ſpeak, (properly, to ſpeak as a mediatour, or interpreter,) ſome following that ſenſe, tranſlate, Stulti loquuntur delictum, & inter rectos eſt benevolentia: (ſo Mercer,) and expound, That as the talk of fools tends to give offence, to make bate, &c. or to excuſe and palliate offences; ſo the diſcourſe of the juſt, to maintain good will and friendſhip. Rabbin Ezra, cited by Mercerus, hath a very different interpretation of the word אשם, and thereupon grounds a very different ſenſe of the whole verſe: but I ſee ſo little probability in it, that I paſſe by it as impertinent. I dare not ſay ſo of Junius his tranſlation, and expoſition, which is not leſſe different, but more juſtifiable, if any ſhall like of it. It is this; Stultos conciliat reatus, &c. Guiltineſſe joyns fools, (or, wicked men) together: but among the juſt, that which is acceptable, (is the means of their conjunction.)

V. 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterneſſe] Great is the liberty (and for which, as ancient Phyloſophers teach, we owe great thanks to our Creator) vvherewith God hath endowed every man; the meaneſt of men, as vvell as the greateſt, in leaving the motions of his heart (in things civil, at leaſt.) not only free, but ſecret alſo: ſo that it is in our power, (of vvhich good uſe may be made often: as againſt our enemies, vvhen vve are foyled and the like,) as to conceal our joy, ſo our ſorrovv too. But all men have not equal power in that kind. They are accounted vviſeſt, vvho leaſt bevvray themſelves: but moſt dangerous vvithall. For they are moſt capable to do miſchief, if they be ſo minded. But it is the part of a wiſe man, never to truſt (in matters of concernment) any other mans countenance; till he know him very well: and even to remember, that the face of a man is one thing, and his heart another: and that at the ſame time when the face is compoſed to ſorrovv, the heart (though unviſibly) may be full of joy: and ſo on the contrary: It is not unlikely, that Solomon by theſe words, might aym at ſome ſuch caution; that men might be wary. It is poſſible alſo that theſe words may have ſome coherence of ſenſe with verſes 12, 13. and then the chief ſcope will be to let us know, that many whom we think very happy (in this world, at leaſt:) and ſometimes are apt to envie their happineſſe, becauſe they live in great plenty of worldly goods, are richly clad, fare well, and ſeem to us alwayes merry; may neverthéleſſe, notwithſtanding all this outward appearance, be ſad enough, (eſpecially when by themſelves, and out of ſight) at the heart: and on the other ſide, not a few, whom we either pity, or deſpiſe as vvretched and miſerable, full of comfort invvardly: and more happy in effect, even in this preſent life, than the former.

his own bitterneſſe] Heb. the bitterneſſe of his ſoule.

V. 12. There is a way which ſeemeth right unto a man Chapter 12. 15.

V. 13. Even in laughter the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heavineſſe] Ipſa voluptates in tormenta vertuntur. And again. Sed non iſta hilaritas longa. Videbis eoſdem intra exiguum tempus acerrimè ridere, & acerrimè tabere. And again, Ipſæ voluptates eorum trepidæ, & variis terroribus inquietæ: ſubitque cum maximè exultantes ſollicita cogitatio; Hæc quàm diu? They are Seneca's words, an ancient Latin Phyloſopher: the vvords othervviſe might as well be taken for ſome Expoſitors gloſſe: for none can be more to the purpoſe. Their very pleaſures, ſaith he, are mixed with fear, and diſquieted with many terrors: and even when they are at the height of their mirth and jovialty, this ſudden anxiety pierceth them through; Alas, how long will this laſt? All this of worldly mens joyes, of which we think Solomons words properly to be intended: But if extended further, to all worldly joyes and pleaſures in general, as divers Expoſitors apprehend it; ſee upon Pſal. 126. 5. They that ſow in tears, ſhall reap in joy, &c.

V. 14. The back-ſlider in heart] Heb. סוגלב by moſt tranſlated, averſus corde: by Junius, vir averſo animo; that is, He that is averſe in his heart: or, that turns his heart back, or away: to wit, from vviſdom, and her ſummons, or invitations: as Chap. 1. 24 &c. is more fully expreſſed. See there alſo, upon verſe 32. For the turning away of the ſimple, &c. It is the more likely that this here, hath relation to thoſe expreſſions there, becauſe there alſo, (as here, ſhall be filled with his own wayes) verſe 31. followes, Therefore ſhall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. He then that is averſe in heart: that is, whoſe heart is averſe from good counſel, &c. that is in effect, a fool: by which expreſſion is tacitly implyed, that no man is naturally ſo fooliſh, or wickedly bent but might be made wiſe enough to ſalvation, would he but apply himſelf to good counſel, and abide reproof: according to that of the Poet, Nemo adeò ferus eſt, qui non manſueſcere poſſit, Si modo culturæ patientem præbeat aurem. But the ſame may be called a back-ſlider too, in another reſpect: to wit, in reference to thoſe firſt principles and notions of nature; of which ſee upon Chap. 1 20. Wiſdom crieth without, &c. And ſo ancient Philoſophers expound the word fugitive too, of one who doth not in all things conform himſelf to the will of God.

and a good man ſhall be ſatisfied from himſelf] Heb. מעליו ex ſeſe, as Mercerus expreſſeth it: that is from himſelf, as we have it here; in effect the ſame as before מדרכיו with his own wayes: in ſome, that vvhether good, or bad, every one ſhall reap the fruit of his ovvn doings; as both in this book, and elſevvhere often, This I take to be the clear meaning, though there be ſundry other expoſitions of theſe vvords. There be that make this to be the ſenſe of the vvhole verſe: That ſinners indeed ſhall be puniſhed proportionably to their demerits, according to the rule of juſtice: but the juſt, through the ſuper-abounding goodneſſe of God, ſhall be revvarded beyond meaſure. Somewhat to that purpoſe the Apoſtle may ſeem to ſay, Rom. 6. laſt verſe. For the wages of ſin is death, &c. But this interpretation is chiefly grounded upon the מעליו we have ſpoken of; which they would have to ſigniſie, more than he; or, above him: which I think is more nice, than ſolid. What is (as I apprehend it) the moſt genuine meaning of the words, I have ſhewed: which may content ordinary readers. For their ſakes that are ſchollars, I ſhall further obſerve, the conſonancy of ancient Philoſophy, if not in the matter altogether, yet with the expreſſions of the Divine Scriptures. For that is a main point of ancient Philoſophy, that αὐτάρκης ἡ ἀρετή: that virtue, or the practice of virtue is ſufficient to happineſſe: and that he only is to be tearmed wiſe and happy, cui ex ſeipſo (Solomons word here מעליו) apta ſunt omnia quæ ad beatè vivendum fuerunt: as Tully hath it in a place. But ex ſeſe, or ſeipſo, (ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ, in the Greek:) is the word by them all uſed upon this ſubject, The matter is thus briefly expreſſed by Epictetus; Ἰδιώτου στάσις, καὶ χαρακτὴρ οὐδέποτε ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ προσδοκᾷ ὠφέλειαν ἢ βλάβην, &c. The ſtate and character of an idiot (that is, of one that is a meer worldling;) is, never to expect either good or evill from himſelf; but from things external onely. The ſtate and character of a Phyloſopher is, to expect all good or evil from himſelf onely. Epict. Ench. Cap. 71.

V. 15. but a prudent man looketh well to his going] That is, with moſt: vvill not eaſily be led by talk or applauſe of flatterers, or others, who ſpeak without ground; for their own ends. A wiſe man will take more care of his actions, than ſo. But may not this his, be referred to the talker as well, or ſeducer, included in, every word? Many ſuch figurative expreſſions there be in Scripture: whereof we ſhall have one manifeſt example in ver. 26. as alſo chap. 19. 23. And accordingly here the words may be ſupplyed: The ſimple believeth every man that ſpeaketh: but the prudent, &c. that is: but to that is wiſe, will obſerve the actions; the life and converſation of thoſe that ſeek to perſwade him to ſuch and ſuch things. According to our Saviours rule: by their fruit ye ſhall know them, Matth. 7. 16.

V. 16. but the fool rageth] The Hebrew verb is here tranſlated by divers others: tranſgreſſeth: or, paſſeth by: or, paſſeth on: as chap. 22. 3. (repeated alſo chap. 27. 12.) where we have the ſame ſenſe in effect: A prudent man foreſeeth the evill, and hideth himſelf: but the ſimple paſſe on, and are puniſhed. It is the ſame verb in both places, but different conjugations. Either of theſe tranſlations is warrantable enough, and makes no great difference in the ſenſe.

V. 17. a man of wicked devices is hated] Men can bear with him that is raſhly angry but they hate him that deviſeth miſchief to others in cold blood: or, a man that conceales the miſchief he contrives, is hated, 2 Sam. 13. 22.

V. 18. but the prudent are crowned with knowledge] Knowledge is their crown: they get credit by it, and wealth too, under a juſt government. See before upon 10. 23. but a man of underſtanding:

V. 19. The evill bow before the good] upon the former verſe; and the reference there.

V. 20. The poor is hated even of his own neighbour] Chapter 19. 7.

neighbour] Or, friend.

the rich hath many friends] Heb. many are the lovers of the rich.

V. 21. He that deſpiſeth his neigbour, ſinneth] He that will not give to the poor, ſhall be puniſhed as a ſinner, although he take nothing from them, Or becauſe it is the propriety and priviledge of charity, to cover a multitude of ſins, Jam. 5. laſt verſe: and 1 Pet. 4. 8. he that deſpiſeth his neighbour ſinneth, may be alſo (and is by ſome) interpreted, ſhall be found a ſinner: all his ſins ſhall be reckoned to him, and he ſhall be puniſhed without any mitigation. So 1 King 1 21. I and my ſons ſhall be ſinners: that is, ſhall be proceeded againſt as offenders: ſin will be imputed unto us, &c.

but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he] Pſal. 112. 9. See alſo on Pſal. 41. 1. Bleſſed is he.

V. 22. Do they not erre that deviſe evill] They that ſeek to hurt others, go out of the way of ſafety themſelves, and periſh miſerably.

mercy and truth ſhall be to them that deviſe good] Gods merciful promiſe ſhall be made good to them.

V. 23. the talk of lips tendeth only to penury] Idle prating, to which they are addicted, are ſeldom good for any thing elſe, and bring themſelves (beſides other inconveniences) to much contempt. But of ſerious diſcourſe, it was ſaid before, The lips of the righteous feed many: and there is not any thing more beneficial than ſpeech, if rightly uſed.

V. 24. The crown of the wiſe is their riches] Rather, A crown to the wiſe, (that is, an ornament, becauſe of the opportunity they have by them to make themſelves known, and to do good:) than, their crown abſolutely; which may be miſtaken, as though riches were the thing, wherein their excellency, and chiefeſt commendation lies: which is not the meaning In this ſenſe, wiſdom it ſelf is the true crown of men, (Chap. 4. 9.) whether rich or poor: but as riches, ſo a good wife, a crown: Chap. 12. 4. and ſo many other things, that are outward, and acceſſory.

but the fooliſhneſſ of fools is folly] So Solomon ſaith; A fool is a fool, though he be never ſo rich. Riches of themſelves, can never cure, nor cover his folly; but rather increaſe, and reveal it. It ſtands with reaſon it ſhould be ſo; ſince ἀνόητον ὁ πλοῦτος ἐστί; (as Ariſtotle obſerves in his Rhetoricks) wealth of it ſelf, is more apt to impare wit, than to increaſe it: and, Bonæ mentis ſoror paupertas; prudence and poverty, are reputed of a kind. However, through vulgar mens baſeneſſe, whoſe hearts and affections are ſet wholly to the world, and think nothing worthy to be looked after, but wealth and riches; let a man be never ſo fooliſh, or ſo wicked, he ſhall be told that he is wiſe and religious. The world is full of ſuch dunghill worſhippers: which made the Poet ſay, and in his ſenſe, truly enough; Stultitiam patiuntur opes; that it is a rich mans priviledge to be a fool, and yet to be reputed wiſe, Yet Solomon here in the right, nevertheleſs, that however men alter their names, they cannot alter the nature of things: a fool will be found a fool, and a wicked man, a wicked man; when that time ſhall come, propheſied of by the Prophet Eſay, that the vile perſon ſhall be no more called liberal, nor the churl ſaid to be bountifull, Eſay 32. 5.

V. 25. A

V. 25. A true witneſſe delivereth ſoules, but a deceitful witneſſe ſpeaketh lies] Verſe 5.

A true witneſſe delivereth ſouls] Saveth men by witneſſing the truth; whereas falſe witneſſes deſtroy themſelves and others.

ſoules] Or, lives.

V. 26. and his children ſhall have a place of refuge] Gods children, or the children of him that fears God, Pſal. 115. 13, 14. Though to the ſenſe it be all one, whether we read it, his children, that is, Gods: or, his, that feareth God: yet according to the beſt learned in the language, the tenor of the original Hebrew words doth import the latter: ſo that the words fully ſet out, will be: God or, The Lord is a ſtrong confidence to him that feareth him, and his children, (or the children of ſuch) &c. See alſo upon ver. 15. But a prudent man, &c.

V. 27. The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from the ſnares of death] Chap. 13. 14.

V. 28. In the multitude of people is the Kings honour] That is, the ſtrength; as appears by the oppoſition: for a king without ſtrength hath neither honour nor ſafety.

is the deſtruction of a Prince] Hebr. מחתת רזון which (becauſe רזון in the ſingular, is not found elſewhere, to ſignifie a prince; but leanneſſe only, as Pſal. 106. 15, aud elſevvhere) is by ſome, (as by Mercer, for one) tranſlated attritio maciei; that is, conſumption of leanneſſe; by others, timor tenuitatis; or to that purpoſe. It is moſt likely that Solomon intended by that word a Prince, (according to the expoſition of moſt Rabbins) and choſe rather to ſay raſon; than roſen, (the plural whereof roſenim, for principes, is ordinary) of purpoſe, to allude to raſon, as it ſignifies leanneſſe; as intimating thereby that that Prince which is without a people, is, (in outward eſtimation) more like to the carkaſſe, or the exuviæ of a Prince, than the reality. See upon Pſal. 106. 15. but ſent leanneſſe into their ſoul; of another alluſion to the ſame word: and upon Pſal. 58. 1. O congregation.

V. 29. He that is ſlow to wrath, is of great underſtanding, &c.] To overcome wrath and paſſion, with the ſpirit of meekneſſe and patience, is true wiſdom indeed, and a great conqueſt: whereof ſee more upon Chap. 16. 32. But to be able to expreſſe wrath, or rather the effects of wrath for a while, and to lay it up againſt an opportunity, as it gives men great advantage to do miſchief, ſo it argues a moſt Diveliſh temper and diſpoſition. Such anger the Grecians call κότος properly, and they make it the worſt kind of anger. Whereas cholerick angry men, though they ſhew more weakneſſe, and expoſe themſelves to more danger; yet they are commonly the beſt natures, that are ſo; who, as ſoon angry, ſo ſoon pacified. Bonorum animi irritabiles; is a common obſervation. Seneca goes further; alia animi mala ad peſſimos quoſque pertinere; iracundiam eruditis hominibus, & in alia ſanis, irripere: adeò ut quidam ſimplicitatis (of an ingenuous mind, voyd of diſſimulation or hypocriſie) indicium iracundiam dicant; & vulgò credatur faciliimus quiſque huic obnoxius.

he that is haſty of ſpirit exalteth folly] Shews it to all, even as things ſet on high are ſeen far.

haſty of ſpirit] Heb. ſhort of ſpirit.

V. 30 A ſound heart is the life of the fleſh] A heart free from paſſions, preſerveth the health of the body.

envy the rottenneſſe of the bones] Pſal. 112. 10.

V. 31. He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his maker] Chap. 17. 5. Matth 25. 40.

reproacheth his maker] His own maker, or the maker of the poor: for God made him, and in that ſtate, not to be deſpiſed, but to be relieved.

his maker] God is the maker of the rich; and of the poor: chap. 22. 2. Not creator of their perſons only; which we know he is; but not indeed here; but of their different fortunes: as he hath appointed the one, ſo the other alſo: The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich: bringeth low and lifteth up. 1 Sam 2. 7. Therefore, ſaith Homer in a place, it is not lawful for me, to deſpiſe thee: (ἀτιμῆσαι:) πρὸς γὰρ Διός εἰσιν ἅπαντες ξεῖνοί τε πτωχοί τε: becauſe all ſtrangers and beggars, (or poor:) are from God. But Heſiod yet more pertinently and expreſſely to Solomons words Μηδέ ποτ' οὐλομένην πενίην θυμοφθόρον ἀνδρὶ τέτλαθ' ὀνειδίζειν, μακάρων δόσιν αἰὲν ἐόντων. that is: Take heed of ever upbraiding any man for his (I leave out ſome poetical epithites, that are not to the purpoſe:) poverty; becauſe it is the gift of the Gods.

but he that honoureth him, hath] Or, but he that honoureth him hath.

V. 32. driven away in] Or, for. See upon Pſal. 1. 4. like the chaff. And chap. 10. 3. the ſubſtance of the wicked.

hath hope in his death] Job 13. 15. & 19 26. Pſal. 23. 4. 2 Cor. 1. 9. See upon Chap. 10. 28. The hope of the righteous, &c.

V. 33. Wiſdom reſteth in in the heart of him that hath underſtanding; but that which is in the midſt, &c.] Laying aſide other interpretations, that which both Mercer, and Buxtorfe, from ſome learned Rabbins commend unto us, (and the only that I can think probable,) is this; One that is truly wiſe and learned, can conceal his wiſdom, but where he ſeeth occaſion to uſe it: he is not ambitious to make ſhew of it. Whereas a fool that hath a ſmack of learning and knowledge, in all places, and upon all occaſions, out with it he muſt, or he is ready to burſt. See before upon chap. 12. 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge, &c. and upon chap. 18. 2. A fool hath no delight in underſtanding, but that his heart may diſcover it ſelf] Again, Wiſdom reſteth, &c. that is, A wiſe man will well conſider of a matter, before he deliver his opinion; and rather hold his peace in company, though among many inferiour to him in learning and wiſdom, than to utter any thing raſhly: But a fools bolt is ſoon ſhot. The more ignorant every man is, the more bold commonly and confident. Ἀμαθία θράσος, παιδεία δ' ὄκνον φέρει; as the wiſe Grecians of old. The heart of the righteous ſtudieth to anſwer; but the mouth of the wicked poureth out evill things, Chap. 15. 28.

V. 34. Righteouſneſſe exalteth a nation] A mean people grows great and honourable by juſtice, whereas a great nation is ruined by injuſtice, and ſuffering ſin to be unpuniſhed.

but ſin is a reproach to any people] There be two words in the original text, of different ſignifications; which cauſe great difference of interpretations. The firſt, חסד which ordinarily doth ſignifie mercy; and ſometimes (though it be denyed by ſome) reproach. The ſecond, חטאת which as it ſignifieth ſin; ſo alſo, ſacrifice for ſin, very frequently. As therefore from the ſecond notion of the firſt word, and the firſt, of the ſecond, this interpretation we have here, doth ariſe; ſo from the firſt, and ſecond, this; as naturally: Et miſericordia populorum [eſt velut] ſacrificium pro peccato. That is: And the mercy of people (or nations:) is as it were a ſacrifice for ſin. And for the probability of this ſenſe in reference to the context, or paralel place; it hath as much as can be required. Chap. 16. 6. By mercy (חסד) and truth, iniquity is purged. Chap. 20. 28. Mercy and truth preſerve the King: and the throne is upheld by mercy. Chap. 21. 21. He that followeth after righteouſneſſe and mercy (the very words of this verſe) findeth life, righteouſneſſe and honour. See alſo upon Chap. 10. 2. Treaſures of wickedneſſe, at the end of the obſorvation there, out of Daniel, &c. And that which ſeemeth to commend this interpretation unto us not a little, is that (as before intimated) it is not very certain, that חסד doth ſignifie reproach properly, any where in the Scripture, if this one place be controverted, or excepted. Levit. 20. 17 a wicked thing in matter of luſt, indeed; but upon another conſideration; as קדש a holy word of it ſelf, transferted to perſons moſt abominable. However, it is certain that the verb is ſo uſed, not only by Rabbins, but even in the Scripture, in this very book, chap. 25. 10. ſo that I would not rely much upon this. Let them both paſs, (as well they may) for probable interpretations, and let the reader make his choice. See alſo upon chap. 16. 6. By mercy and truth.

to any people] Heb. to nations.

V. 35. his wrath is againſt him that cauſeth ſhame] By doing the Kings buſineſſe fooliſhly, whereas he that doth it wiſely, gets the King credit, Iſai. 22. 18.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. A Soft anſwer turneth away wrath] Chapter 25. 15.

V. 2. but the mouth of fools poureth out fooliſhneſſe] verſe 28. Chap. 12. 23. & 13. 16.

poureth] Heb. belcheth, or bubleth.

V. 3 The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evill and the good] Job 34. 21. Chap 5. 21. Jer. 16. 17, & 32. 19. Heb. 4. 13.

V. 4. A wholſome tongue] Heb the healing of the tongue.

a tree of life] See before upon Chapter 2. 18. a tree of life.

a breach in the ſpirit] The original word, here tranſlated ſpirit, ſignifieth alſo the wind: as Pſal. 48. 7. Thou breakeſt the ſhips of Tarſhiſh with an Eaſt-wind: where alſo we have the ſame word for breaking, as is here. Hereupon ſome, Rabbins and Chriſtians, (as Junius, Piſcator, and others:) expreſſe the ſenſe of the words to this effect; is a breach by wind: underſtanding the Eaſtern wind, proverbially uſed to expreſſe a vehement ſudden breach, or ſcattering, as Jerem 18. 17. I will ſcatter them: &c. But I conceive the former tranſlation, the more emphatical of the two, and breach in the ſpirit, more directly to be oppoſed to a tree of life, in the former member, than, a breach by wind. If a man would indulge to his phanſie, he might (embracing that tranſlation, approved by many, a breach by wind:) think that Solomon might allude to the nature of words, which phyſically are but wind; as we ſay commonly: but I will not give my ſelf ſo much liberty.

V. 5. A fool deſpiſeth his fathers inſtruction] Chap. 10. 1, inſtruction] Or, rebuke.

but he that regardeth reproof, is prudent] Chap. 13 18.

V. 6. In the houſe of the righteous is much treaſure] Godlineſſe with contentment is great gain, 1 Tim. 6 6.

but in the revenues of the wicked is trouble] A wicked man may get much wealth, but he hath much care and trouble with it, becauſe Gods bleſſing goes not with it, Pſal. 127. 2. whereas a good mans treaſure may be his ſtrength, and without trouble, through Gods bleſſing. See 1 Tim. 6. 10. and pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows. It is not alwayes ſo; ſome wicked wealthy men enjoy themſelves (as to the world) and their plenty, quietly enough, even to the laſt. But it hath often been ſaid, that no moral ſentence, or obſervation, can be abſolute among men, by reaſon of the variety of circumſtances, the perfect knowledge whereof is above the reach of any man. We ſhall only ſay : 1. Some may be accounted wicked among men, (eſpecially when men of different parts doe judge) which are not ſo in the eyes of God: as on the contrary. Which made the Apoſtle, to referre all judgement, concerning men, to the great day, when the hidden counſels of every heart ſhall be made manifeſt: 1 Cor. 4. 5. Secondly God doth ſometimes reward wicked men, whom he hath uſed to accompliſh his will, in ſome things, with temporal bleſſings: Pſal. 17. 13, 14. But of temporal bleſsings, how to be underſtood by Chriſtians, &c. ſee upon Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c. and before, upon chap. 3. 18. She is a tree, and other places, to which reference hath often been made.

V. 7. diſperſe knowledge] Scatter it abroad in hope of increaſe, as husband-men do their ſeed. Pſal. 112. 9.

doth not ſo] Or, is not right. So Junius and divers others, making a noun, of that which, more uſually is an adverb.

V. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord] Chap. 21. 27. Iſai. 1. 11. and 66. 3. Jer. 6. 20. 7. and 22. Amos 5. 22. That thing is abominable before God, which the wicked think to be moſt excellent, and whereby they think to be moſt accepted : For they pray ſolemnly with ſacrifice, God hates it: but he accepts the bare prayers of the godly, without ſacrifice.

V. 9. that followeth after righteouſneſſe] That followeth eagerly after it, Chap. 21. 21. 1 Tim. 6. 11. Heb. 12. 14.

V. 10. Correction] Or, Inſtruction.

Correction is grievous unto him] Or, A grievous correction ſhall befall him.

Correction is grievous unto him that forſaketh the way] He that ſwarveth in his whole courſe from Gods Word, cannot endure to be reproved.

he that hateth reproof ſhall dye] Chap. 5. 12. &c. & 10. 17.

V. 11. Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord] Job 26. 6. Pſal. 139. 8. There is nothing ſo deep; or ſecret, that can be hid from the eyes of God: he knowes the ſoules in hell, and the bodies in the grave, and much more mens thoughts here. Of the word שאול how taken commonly among the Jewes of thoſe dayes. See before upon chap. 9. 18. the depths of hell: and the reference there; and upon verſe 24. hell beneath.

V. 12. one that reproveth him] Or, that one ſhould reprove him.

V. 13. A merry heart maketh a cheerfull countenance] chap. 17. 22.

but by ſorrow of the heart, the ſpirit is broken] chap. 12. 25.

the ſpirit is broken] So much, that a mans grief appeares in his face.

V. 14. the mouth of fools feedeth on fooliſhneſſe] Their heart receives fooliſhneſſe, as their mouth receives meat; for all things are nouriſhed by their like.

the heart of fools] Here, of fools; the mouth of the wiſe, the heart: and contrarly, verſe 7. the lips of the wiſe; and, the heart of fools: promiſcuouſly uſed. See before, upon chap. 20. 20. the heart of the wicked. And therefore the ſpeculations of ſome men here, and upon the ſeventh verſe, muſt needs fall to the ground.

V. 15. of the afflicted] That vexes himſelf needleſly through his own peeviſhneſſe, or other untowardneſſe. We muſt not underſtand it of godly ſorrow, or of the temporal afflictions of the godly: For godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation, but the ſorrow of the world worketh death. 2 Cor. 7. 10. See alſo Eccleſiaſtes 7. 2, 3, 4, 5. &c. Iſai. 57. 15.

V. 16. Better is little with the fear of the Lord, than great treaſure, and trouble therewith] Pſal. 37. 16. chap. 16. 8. 1 Tim. 6. 6.

Better is little with the fear of the Lord] Which uſually is without trouble, as on the contrary great troubles attend the treaſures of them that fear not God.

V. 17. Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a ſtalled oxe, and hatred therewith] Chap. 17. 1.

a dinner of herbs] The word ſignifies, a travellers dinner, a ſhort and ſudden one without preparation.

V. 18. A wrathfull man ſtirreth up ſtrife] Chap. 26. 21. and 29. 22.

V. 19. The way of the ſlothful man is as an hedge of thorns] He ever findeth ſome let or ſtay, and dares not go forward: There is a Lyon in his way, Chap. 26. 13. But if we compare with chap. 22. 5. Thorns and ſnares, &c & Hoſ. 2. 6. I will hedg up thy ways as thorns, &c. it may be thought as probably, that this hedge of thorns, is not intended by Solomon of imaginary thornes, (as the Lyon, chap. 22. 13. and 26. 13.) in the phanſie of the ſlothful only, but of real difficulties and perplexities, wherewith the ſlothful uſe to be intangled, and which they bring upon themſelves through ſlothfulneſſe and delay. I am much confirmed in this ſenſe, by a ſaying of ancient Heſiod, to this very purpoſe: Αἰεὶ δ' ἀμβολιεργὸς ἀνὴρ ἄτῃσι παλαίει. and ſo made plain; or, raiſed up, &c. in the ſecond member, will better agree with this ſenſe, than the former.

the ſlothfull man] To whom is oppoſed in the ſecond member, the righteous. Moſt likely therefore, that the ſame is intended here, who ch. 22. 5. is called froward. That all wickedneſſe doth proceed from ſlothfulneſſe, ancient both Philoſophers, and fathers do maintain; and Matth. 25. 26 ὀκνηρὸς and πονηρός: wicked and ſlothfull, are joyned together. But of this we have treated elſewhere more at large.

hedge of thorns] Hoſ. 2. 6. and Mich. 7. 4.

but the way of the righteous] Then a ſlothfull man is not righteous, nor a righteous man ſlothfull.

is made plain] Heb. is raiſed up as a cauſey.

V. 20. A wiſe ſon maketh a glad father] Chapter 10. 1. See there.

a fooliſh man deſpiſeth his mother] And ſo grieves her: as on the contrary, the father is made glad by honouring him.

V. 21. Folly is joy to him that is deſtitute of wiſdom] Chap. 10. 23. As fools rejoycing in evill live wickedly: ſo wiſe men rejoycing in goodneſſe live uprightly.

deſtitute of wiſdom] Heb. voyd of heart.

V. 22. Without counſel, purpoſes are diſappointed: but in the multitude of counſellers they are eſtabliſhed] Or, Break purpoſes without counſel: for in the multitude of counſellers thou ſhalt be ſtabliſhed.

Without counſel, purpoſes are diſappointed] Things raſhly undertaken, are blown away like chaffe. Chap. 11. 14. See there. However, the word here is סוד more properly ſecret counſel: and ſuch ſhould ſtate-counſel be. Want of ſecrecy, hath been the overthrow of many brave purpoſes.

counſellers they are eſtabliſhed] Heb. it is eſtabliſhed, purpoſes is eſtabliſhed, that is, according to the Hebrew idiotiſme, every one of them, and ſo, frequently.

V. 23. by the anſwer of his mouth] Anſwer is put for ſpeech, though no man ſpeak before, as it is often in the old and new Teſtament. See more upon verſe 28.

a word ſpoken in due ſeaſon, how good is it] Chap. 25. 11. If we will that our talk be comfortable, we muſt wait for a ſeaſonable time.

in due ſeaſon] Heb. in his ſeaſon.

V. 24. The way of life is above to the wiſe, that he may depart from hell beneath] Phil. 3. 20. Col. 3. 1, 2. Thoſe ſentences, and ſayings are accounted moſt witty and elegant, (which Quintilian calleth ἐξ ἀπροσδοκήτου,) that are grounded upon ſome common ſpeech, but taken in a contrary ſenſe; or contrarily applyed to vulgar apprehenſion: as, Shut thine eyes, that thou mayeſt ſee; (the Arabs have a Proverb to that purpoſe.) to wit, the eyes of thy body, that thou mayeſt ſee with the eyes of thy ſoul; which is the true light of man. Caſt thy bread upon the waters, Eccleſiaſtes 11. 1.) for thou ſhalt find it, &c. a thing contrary to ordinary ſenſe. And therefore the Grecians, of coſt ill beſtowed, and as good as loſt, (as when a man is bountiful to unthankful men,) uſed to ſay, σπείρειν ἐνὶ πόντῳ: to ſow upon the water, or ſea. But the meaning is, Loſe it, (thy ſeed, or bread,) as to men; that thou mayeſt receive it back from God, who is beſt able to repay thee. So is it here in this divine ſentence, wherein the acuteneſſe of the expreſſion ſeems to ſtrive with the excellency of the matter. The Grecians, of one that did not look to his way in going, were wont to ſay, that he did ἀναβλέπειν: that is, look up, as indeed, if a man be in his way, alone; and keep his eyes upwards, he will hardly avoyd to fall into ſome ditch, or ſtumble dangerouſly at ſome block, or the like. And there is a common ſtory, by Plato, and divers others recorded at large, of one Thales, a Philoſopher, who being in his way, and keeping his eyes fixed (for obſervation, being a good Aſtronomer) upon the heavens, as he went along, fell into a Well; for which he was pretty handſomely flowted by a malapert bondſlave of his own, which came to draw him out. The way of life, ſaith Solomon; that is, The way that leads unto life, or happineſſe; is above to the wiſe: whileſt he doth not only lift up his eyes often to heaven, but alſo and chiefly, whileſt he fixeth his thoughts and his heart there: by which he may be thought ſo much the more to expoſe his body to dangers that are from below. There may be an ἀπροσδόκητον in the words, in another reſpect too: if he ſhould (in the literal immediate ſenſe) ſay, that the beſt way to avoyd precipices, is to go aloft, which is contrary to common ſenſe; the ſureſt way to avoyd a fall, whereby our lives may be in danger, being to keep the loweſt way: according to that of the Poet, ——tolluntur in altum, ut lapſu graviore ruant: and, Qui jacet in terrâ non habet unde cadat. Now for the myſticall, or allegorical ſenſe, we are referred to Phil. 3. 20. Col. 3. 1, 2. which certainly was Solomons aym. I make no queſtion but that by the way of life, he intended, as preſent, ſo future happineſſe too: but whether by שאול, which ſometimes ſignifies a pit, or the grave, or the inferiour parts of the earth, he intended that which we now call hell; or onely deſtruction in general; may be doubted. It is more likely that he intended deſtruction in general. Learned Grotius his paraphraſe upon the words, is; Homo ſapiens in omnibus actionibus ſuis Deum reſpicit, ut à periculo ſervetur. Of the word שאול ſee more upon chap 9 laſt verſe: the depth of hell. It is well known, that many Jews and Rabbins have been of opinion, that the godly only ſhould ariſe, and live: and that the ſoules of other men, infidels and ſinners, did utterly periſh, as brutes: oppoſed by Chriſt, John 5. 28, 29. And was not this a thing, by all ſober men (though ſome that live like bruits, would be glad of the end of bruits, and that there were nothing beyond death:) to be dreaded, to be utterly extinct and annihilated; when others ſhould enjoy life and immortality? It doth not follow therefore, that if שאול were dreaded after death; it was therefore known as a place of torment, by them that dreaded it. What therefore is grounded by ſome men upon theſe words, I do not apprehend to be of much validity.

V. 25. The Lord will deſtroy the houſe of the proud] ch. 12. 7. & 14. 11.

he will eſtabliſh the border of the widow] Who hath no cauſe to be proud. And therefore the word widow is uſed proverbialy ſometimes, to denote men of very low condition, and dejected ſpirits. Pſa. 107. 40, 41. He poureth contempt upon Princes: &c. where the poor is oppoſed to Princes (lawleſſe and tyrannical) as the widow here to the proud in general.

V. 26. The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord] c. 6. 18 wicked mens thoughts & words diſpleaſe God; good mens pleaſe him.

but [the words] of the pure] Or, but to the pure.

pleaſant words] Heb. words of pleaſantneſſe.

V. 27. He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own houſe] Hinders the comfort of himſelf and his: whereas, he that hates bribes, ſo that he will nor receive them offered, much leſſe ask them, he and his ſhall live comfortably.

troubleth his own houſe] Chap. 11. 29.

V. 28. The heart of the righteous ſtudieth to anſwr:] Every man that hath ſome knowledge of the Hebrew, or is acquainted with Scripture phraſe of either Old or New Teſt. muſt needs know, that to anſwer, is as much, often, as to ſpeak: and might have done in the text, (I think) better, than, to anſwer: except thoſe that put it there, had thought themſelves bound to keep all Hebraiſmes: which we know they do not. Studieth then to anſwer, is as much as, will premeditate when he is to ſpeak. It ſeems that, that inſpiration (as they call it: that is, quicquid in buccam: whether ſenſe, or non-ſenſe:) was not in uſe, or not well thought of, in thoſe days: eſpecially upon ſacred occaſions: Eccl. 5. 2. Be not raſh with thy mouth, &c; what would become of many a man, in theſe days, that lives in good faſhion, if non-ſenſe, and vain pratling were baniſhed out of Pulpits? But, the people love to have it ſo: Jer. 5. 31. and ſo it is like to be, untill God mends it. Yet we deny not, but there be ſome, who, by the advantage of ſome natural diſpoſitions and long practice, are able to ſpeak very well without premeditation if need be, which ability of theirs, deſerves great commendation; but their modeſty more, if in reverence to God, they avoyd to put themſelves to it, (whether in preaching, or praying) but when there is great need. See alſo ch. 16. 23. The heart of the wiſe.

the mouth of the wicked poureth out evil things] Raſhly & abundantly, for lack of premeditation, See upon ch. 14 23. Wiſdom reſteth. &c

V. 29. The Lord is far from the wicked] Pſ. 34. 16. God is far off from wicked men, and will not hear their prayers: but he is nigh to good men, & hears them quickly: therefore the former muſt not preſume, nor the latter deſpair of the good ſucceſs of their prayers. ſee Pſ. 21. 2

he heareth the prayer of the righteous] Pſal. 145. 18.

V. 30. The light of the eyes rejoyceth the heart] As light delights the eyes; ſo good newes; or a good name joyes the heart.

a good report] See upon 25. 25.

report] Heb. hearing. Chap. 12, 25.

V. 31. The ear that heareth the reproof of life, abideth among the wiſe] Verſe 5. That ſuffereth himſelf to be admoniſhed by Gods word, that bringeth life, and ſo amendeth.

V. 32. inſtruction] Or, correction.

heareth] Or, obeyeth] getteth underſtanding] Heb. poſſeſſeth an heart.

V. 33. The fear of the Lord is the inſtruction of wiſdom] Job 28. 28. See the references, upon the next words.

before honour is humility] Meaning; that God uſeth to exalt them that are truly humble, See upon chap. 3. 34. For God reſ. and chap. 11. 2. with the lowly.

before honour is humility] Chap. 18. 12.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſe 1. The preparations of the heart in man, and the anſwer of the tongue, is from the Lord] Chap. 19. 21. & 20. 24, Jer. 10. 23. He derideth the preſumption of man who dare attribute to himſelf any thing, and yet can neither prepare his heart to ſpeak, nor ſpeak what he hath prepared, without Gods aſſiſtance: or, though man have never ſo well prepared himſelf, yet without God he cannot utter his conceptions; as ver. 9. In divers of thoſe Sentences, the firſt part ſerveth only to uſher in the ſecond, and to make the expreſſion the more emphatical: and ought not therefore to be preſſed as as a thing poſitively, or dogmatically, and abſolutely delivered. So 19. 14. Houſe and riches are the Inheritance of fathers, and (or, but) a prudent wife is from the Lord. The intent is not, to deny that riches come from God, which is elſewhere often affirmed; but only to ſet out a good wife, as a ſpeciall providence and gift of God, more conſiderable to man than riches are. See alſo upon Pſal. 10. 17. thou wilt prepare their hearts, &c.

preparations] Or, diſpoſings.

in man, and] Or, are of man, but.

V. 2. All the wayes of a man are clean in his own eyes] Ch. 21. 2. He ſheweth hereby, that man flattereth himſelf in his doings, calling that vertue which God calleth vice, Pſal. 36. 2. Eſay 5. 20.

the Lord weigheth the ſpirits] God weighs mens thoughts in an even balance, and finds them too light, and their actions alſo, Dan 5. 27. For I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified; but he that judgeth me, is the Lord, 1 Cor 4. 4.

V. 3. Commit thy work unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed] Pſal. 37. 5. & 55. 22. Matth. 6. 25. Luke 12. 22. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

Commit] Heb. Roll.

Commit thy works unto the Lord] Thoſe things that are too hard for thee, truſt God with them; as men uſe to lay their burdens on other mens ſhoulders, when they cannot bear them, and he will effect them according to thy Intention.

V. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himſelf] For his own glory. This is (hath been I am ſure) the moſt received interpretation. Junius, omnes, all men; not, all things; reſtraining it, (the ſenſe of the words here; I mean:) to men only. The difference is not great. But exceptions be made againſt this tranſlation of the Text; and conſequently, againſt the expoſition, as grounded upon it. For the thing is not denied, that God hath made all things for himſelf: but this denied to be the ſenſe of the words in this place: Geierus, the laſt I have ſeen, that hath written upon theſe Proverbs, (a man of great diligence, and good judgement, for the moſt part: a Lutheran:) is much againſt it. Two things are objected: Firſt, the accent under למענהו: And ſecondly, the irregularity of the affix Pronoun, if a præpoſition, according to our tranſlation, be made of the words. Theſe be niceties of Grammer, which might be anſwered well enough. There be examples of far greater irregularities in many places, which no man ſticks at. But the queſtion will be: If the words will afford another more literal interpretation, (that is, without irregularities:) & that interpretation of the words, as good and warrantable ſenſe, or matter: why not to be preferred? This we are novv to conſider of. The tranſlation commended unto us as moſt literal, is: Omne operatur Deus ad reſponſum ipſius: thas is, God hath created all things to anſwer him: or, to anſwer one another: for both are in the Hebrew affixe: or, to ſpeak more properly; The Hebrew affixe pronoun is indifferent to either. The Chalde paraphraſe is for the firſt; ut obtemperent ipſi: that is, to obey him. There is no difficulty in this. But from the other tranſlation, the ſenſe that is made of it, is not ſo obvious: By Junius in his Scholia, (as I find him quoted: for I have them not:) it is ſo ſet out: ſapientiſſimâ vi & ordinatione Dei ſic diſponi omnia, ut ſingula antecedentia facta conſequentibus, &c. that is: That all things by the great power and wiſdom of God, are ſo ordered, that every antecedent deed (or action) and thought, doth anſwer to the conſequent; and every conſequent, to the antecedent. I do not well know, what he intended: but I am ſure that the Stoicks anciently uſed the ſame words in the expoſition of their Fate, or Deſtinie. Others more plainly, draw the words to that mutual harmony and conſent of all natural things among themſelves to their mutual preſervation: obſerved by many, with admiration. But what then for the coherence? How comes in the wicked? Malo culpæ permiſſo, reſpondet malum pænæ immiſſum: ſaith Geierus, with ſome other words to that purpoſe. I muſt profeſſe my ſelf not much ſatisfied with any thing that he hath to this purpoſe, either of his own; or from others. I ſhall ſpeak what may ſeem ſtrange; yet no more, I am ſure, than what will be made good, (if taken) in the moſt literal ſenſe. Ancient Greek Philoſophers have written much more to the illuſtration of this ſenſe, than hath been done by any Commentator: This anſwering of things to one another, they call moſt appoſitly; τὴν τῶν πραγμάτων ἀντιςοιχίαν. But that which is moſt ſtrange, is, that they have upon this ſubject, that very inſtance Solomon hath, of the wicked: which they ſay, (and take upon themſelves to prove, though I will not undertake for the validity of their arguments:) was neceſſary to the world: yea ſo neceſſary, ſome ſay, that the world could not ſubſiſt without ſuch. This is not a place to dilate upon philoſophical ſpeculations; neither have I the books by me. For indeed if we take this; (with ſome Rabbins, and many Chriſtians) to have been Solomons meaning; why ſhould it be thought more philoſophical, than theological? But I have them not; at this time: neither, if I had, would I ſo much preſume upon the readers patience. Grotius is for this ſenſe too. Singula Deus facit (ordinat:) ad id quod ſingulis convenit. Etiam impius ad diem calamitoſum, [ordinatur à Deo] as exhibited by Geierus, where alſo his Note is: Nam ענה, ut & vox reſpondendi Latina, ſignificat τὸ συςοιχεῖν: ut Coh. 10. 19. So he. I think ἀντιςοιχεῖν had been better, and more ſuitable to the ſtyle of ancient Philoſophers: though συςοιχεῖν I know be the word uſed in the New Teſtament. So much may ſerve in this place.

yea even the wicked for the day of evill] In whoſe condemnation he intends to glorifie his juſtice, Job 21. 30. Or rather, to be executioners of his wrath for the puniſhment of others: who therefore Pſal. 17. 13, 14. are called the ſword: and, the hand of God. See alſo Pſal. 80 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand: upon the ſon of man, whom thou madeſt ſtrong for thy ſelf: out of Eſay and Hab. paſſages there to this purpoſe. See alſo upon Pſal 105. 25 He turned, &c. the ſame Authour being as earneſt upon this place alſo, to vindicate God from being the authour of ſin, or true cauſe of any evil, which ſome ignorantly from ſuch places would infer. Thus, if we ſtick to the firſt and moſt received, I ſaid, tranſlation of the words of the firſt member. But if we like beſt of the ſecond, as more literal, and approved of by eminent men; ſee what hath been ſaid there, V. 5. Every one that is proud in heart, is an abomination to the Lord) Chap. 6. 17. & 8. 13.

proud in heart] Ch. 11. 21. wicked. So, ſuperbia, is uſed by the Latines for any particular vice; and for vices in general. Hence came the denomination of Tarquinius Superbus; by which they intended, the wicked and tyrannical or unjuſt; as by many hath been obſerved.

though hand joyn in hand] See upon ch. 11. 21. Though hand, &c.

unpuniſhed] Heb. held innocent.

V. 6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged, &c.] Or, Where mercy and truth is, iniquity is purged; and where the fear of God ſhews it ſelf by departing from evill: that is, piety is a ſure token of reremiſſion of ſins, and not ſacrifices, without it. See alſo Matth. 23. 23.----the weightier matters of the Law, judgement, mercy, and faith, &c. This I conceive to be the aym of Solomon in theſe words, tacitly to reproove their error, who did think, (which was the opinion of many both Jewes and Gentiles:) that they could purge or expiate any ſin by ſacrifices, and oblations: and whileſt they acquitted themſelves of the duty, (& perchance above duty) with care & conſcience; were careleſſe otherwiſe, of their lives and converſations. Some would have the immediate aym of the words to be, to commend bounty, and charity to the poor; & would have ch. 10. 12. Hatred ſtirreth up ſtrifes: but love covereth all ſins: (as they interpret it: ſee there:) to be paralell to this. Of that ſenſe & ſubject ſee upon the 2. verſe of that ch. Treaſures of wickedneſſe, &c. But I do not believe either thoſe words there, or yet the ſenſe they would make of the words, to belong to theſe. I am glad I have Mercerus on my ſide. And I am much confirmed in this opinion by the ſecond member, the following words: and by the fear, &c. See there.

and by the fear of the Lord men depart from evill] By the fear of the Lord, according to the Hebrew phraſe, religion in general, and Gods worſhip, is underſtood. See upon Pſal. 130. 4. But there is forgiveneſſe with thee, &c. And, to fear, is as much as, to worſhip, in many places. So Jer. 5. 24. Let us now fear the Lord, that giveth us rain: and, Fear the Lord, and his goodneſſe. Hoſ. 3. laſt verſe And I remember, that Steuchus Eubinus (a very learned man) doth ſomewhere comend, (and deſervedly) the Sept. (as we call them) for expreſſing (in ſome place) the Hebrew words, by θεοσέβεια in Greek, that is: The worſhip of God. Whereas therefore ſome men did take upon themſelves to be very religious: great worſhippers of God, becauſe of their ſacrifices, wherein they were not only punctual, but free: Solomon would have them know here, that true religion, (or, fear of the Lord) did not ſo properly conſiſt in ſacrifices (ſo the Prophets, and David in many places we know:) as in departing from evill. Juſt as St James. Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To viſit the fatherleſſe and the widows in their affliction; (there we have the effect of the firſt member:) and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world: that is, to depart from evill. Jam. 1 27. So St. Paul (as to this ſecond member) *Neverthele*ſ*s the foundation ſtandeth ſure*, &c. and let every one that nameth the name of the Lord, (that is, profeſſeth to be religious; to fear God,) depart from iniquity. 2 Tim. 2 19.

V. 7. When a mans wayes pleaſe the Lord] He that will enjoy the favour of men for good, muſt get Gods firſt, Luke 2. 54. See upon chap. 3. 4. So ſhalt thou find favour.

V. 8. Better is a little with righteouſneſs, &c.] Pſal. 37. 16 ch. 15, 16. A little well gotten, is better than a great deal ill gotten, Pſ. 37. 16.

V. 9. A mans heart deviſeth his way] verſe 1.

but the Lord directeth his ſteps] See Notes on verſe 1.

V. 10. A divine ſentence] Heb. divination.

A divine ſentence is in the lips of the King] Divine ſentences and ſayings become them beſt that are in greateſt authority. See before in the Preface, and upon ch. 1. 1. The Proverbs. Or, divination, as the word doth properly import: of which ſenſe, how divination may be aſcribed to Kings and Princes more particularly than to other men, ſee learned Grotius his Notes upon Joh. 11. 54 And this ſpake he not of himſelf, but being high Prieſt that year, he propheſied, &c. Adde this pregnant paſſage of Cicero omitted (I wonder) by Grotius. Veteres qui rerum potiebantur, iidem auguria tenebant: ut enim ſapere, ſic divinare regale ducebant, &c.

Or if we underſtand it rather, of a certain diſcerning power and faculty, wherewith God doth endow many Kings & Princes, in maters of judgement, and the like, above other men; we have an example of it in King Solomon himſelf, 1 King. 3. 24. &c and other like examples of other Kings alſo, are there produced by the ſame Grotius in his Annotations upon that place: to which divers others might be added out of ancient and later Hiſtories. So of David, 2 Sam. 14. 17. for as an Angel of God, ſo is my Lord the King, to diſcern good and bad: and again, ver. 20. and my Lord is wiſe, according to the wiſdom of an Angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth. קסם properly, is ſuch divination, as is forbidden by the Law, Deut. 18. 10, &c. but here it ſeemeth to be taken more generally; as divers other words of that kind are. So that here is no warrant for any kind of divination, or aſtrology, which is unlawfull and forbidden. See upon Pſal. 58 5. to the voyce of charmers, charming never ſo wiſely.

V. 11. A juſt weight and balance are the Lords] Lev. 19. 36. chapter 11. 1.

all the weights] Heb all the ſtones.

all the weights of the bag are his work] If they be true and juſt, they are Gods work, and he delighteth therein: but if they be falſe, they are the work of the devil, and ſerve to their condemnation that uſe them.

V. 12. It is an abomination to Kings to commit wickedneſſe] Wiſe Kings hate injuſtice, knowing it will overthrow their Thrones.

for] Or, but.

V. 13. Righteous lips are the delight of Kings] Chap. 14. 35. & 22. 11. Many things are abſolutely delivered in the Scripture, which muſt be underſtood, rather, of what ſhould be, or uſually happens, than what is actually, or neceſſarily muſt be. So 1 Cor. 6. 19. Know ye not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt: and 7. 32. &c. He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord; and the like.

V. 14. The wrath of a King is as meſſengers of death] Chap. 20. 2. That is, he findeth out many means to execute his wrath.

a wiſe man will pacifie it] For there is no reſiſting it.

V. 15. In the light of the Kings countenance is life] The kings cheerful countenance rejoyceth the ſubjects, like ſun-ſhine; and enricheth them like the later rain.

his favour as a cloud of the later rain] Chap. 19. 12.

V. 16. How much better is it to get wiſdom, than gold] Chapter 8. 11.

V. 17. The high way of the upright, is to depart from evill: he that keepeth his way] It may be Solomon doth allude to travellers, who are ſafeſt, when they keep the road. So literally, to keep his way, may be underſtood; but otherwiſe, to keep his way; that is: to take care: to walk circumſpectly, to make a conſcience, &c.

V. 18. Pride goeth before deſtruction] Chap. 11. 2. & 18. 12. Mens eſtates are like earthen ware, the higher they are lifted, the greater is their fall and breaking. Pride makes many break in our dayes, Chap. 17. 19.

V. 19. Better is it to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly] Humility, the beſt of gifts; as pride, the worſt of vices, and moſt incompatible with true religion. For God giveth grace to the humble, &c. Jam, 4. 6. and every one that exalteth himſelf, &c. Luke 18. 14. and God dwelleth with the humble, Eſay 57. 15.

than to divide the ſpoyl with the proud] A proverbial expreſſion of higheſt worldly joy and exultation. I rejoyce at thy word, as one that findeth great ſpoyl, Pſal. 119. 162. See upon Pſal. 76. 4. than the mountains of prey.

V. 20. He that handleth a matter] Or, He that underſtandeth a matter.

He that handleth a matter wiſely ſhall find good] He means, That he that will bring his affairs to a good end, muſt have undeſtanding in his buſineſſe, and truſt in God. Or thus; It is good and commendable for a man, when he goes about any buſineſſe, to uſe deliberation, and to make uſe of his beſt diſcretion concerning the carriage of it: there is the better hopes of a good iſſue, when that is done. But nevertheleſſe, let no man truſt to his own wiſdom and diſcretion, but put his truſt in God, and depend of him for the event: which for a man to do in all things, is chiefeſt happineſſe.

truſteth in the Lord, happy is he] Pſal. 2. 12. & 34 8. & 125. 1. Iſai. 30. 18. Jer. 17. 7.

V. 21. ſhall be called prudent] Shall attain to the reputation of a prudent wiſe man: and by the effects, he ſhall approve himſelf ſo. Shall be called, may be alſo interpreted, ſhall be, or become: as often, in the Scripture. He that affects wiſdom in his heart, and applyes himſelf to the ſtudy of it, ſhall in time attain to it: as before, often.

the ſweetneſſe of the lips increaſeth learning] Wiſdom joyned with eloquence, doth much good.

V. 22. Underſtanding is a well-ſpring of life unto him that hath it) Chap. 13. 14.

him that hath it] Heb. the owners of it.

the inſtruction of fools is folly] Either that which the wicked teach others; or elſe, it is folly to teach wilfull fools.

V. 23. teacheth] Heb. maketh wiſe. A wiſe man will conſider of his words: nothing ſhall come out of his mouth, but what hath firſt been weighed in his heart. See before, 15. 28. and upon 14. 33. Wiſdom reſteth, &c. and upon chap. 15. 28. The heart of the right, The heart of fools is in their mouth: but the mouth of the wiſe is in their heart, Eccleſiaſticus 21. 26. Or, if any doth affect to ſpeak well, (as anciently it was the readieſt way, to wealth and honour) let him firſt take the care to ſtore his heart with good literature. For, ſcribendi recte, (there is the ſame reaſon for dicendi too:) ſapere eſt principium, & fons; as a learned Poet tells us: but a better Maſter, (to the ſame purpoſe) that, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. Matth. 12. 34.

and addeth learning to his lips] To himſelf or others.

to] Or, by.

V. 24. Pleaſant words are as an hony-comb.] Chap. 12. 25.

ſweet to the ſoul] Pleaſant and profitable.

V. 25. There is a way that ſeemeth right unto a man) Chapter 14. 12.

V. 26. He that laboureth] Heb, the ſoule of him that laboureth.

craveth it of him] Heb. boweth unto him. All the labour of a man is for his mouth; and yet the appetite is not filled, Eccleſ. 6. 7. We ſay commonly (and ſomewhat anſwerable to that all languages have) Take pains whileſt you can, (or, are young:) and it will be your own one day. And if we go no further than ſo, it is a very good encouragement to induſtry, that our ſelves ſhall reap the benefit of our labours; (if it fall out otherwiſe ſometimes, that is nothing to the purpoſe, as hath been often obſerved:) nay, that we cannot maintain life otherwiſe, for which we think no ranſome too great. All that a man hath will he give for his life. Job 2. 4. They are Satans words there: but we have better authority for it, if need were. Though this may ſerve, yet we may extend it further; that as we refuſe no labour to maintain this life; that is in effect, for the body: ſo ſhould we take pains as willingly for a better life, the proper life of the the ſoule:

Labour not for the meat which periſheth,&c.Joh.6.27. that is: if for that, much more for the other. And, If thou be wiſe, thou ſhalt be wiſe for thy ſelf: chap.9. 12, We ſhall reap the fruits (though not externally viſible:) of thoſe labours too, that we take for our ſoules: Our labour is not in vain: 1 Cor.15.58. Yet there be, who make a far different ſenſe of this whole verſe, Qui moleſtus eſt, moleſtus eſt ſibi: nam reflectitur in ipſum os ejus. So Junius: not he alone, I know; ſome Rabbines go that way too: and moſt Lutherans. The ſenſe is very good ſo too: very well expreſſed by old Heſiod. Οἷ αὐτῷ κακὰ τεύχει ἀνὴρ ἄλλῳ κακὰ τεύχων: Ἡ δὲ κακὴ βουλὴ τῷ βουλεύσαντι κακίστη. We need no other paraphraſe to Solomons words. If he had intended it, I know not how he could have done it better, And I ſhould ſooner be induced to believe that Solomons words are to be taken in this ſenſe; by this paralel place of that ancient Poet; (He that contriveth miſchief to another, doth contrive it to himſelf: Evill counſel will light upon the head of the Counſellor; what can be more verbative?) than by that reaſon which is given by ſome, becauſe ſay they, by the former, non reconditum quid videtur proferri; &c. no very hidden, or myſterious thing ſeems to be ſpoken, but what every body knowes, &c. Indeed, by this rule, every man taking to himſelf the liberty of his own judgement; we ſhall not leave perchance to Solomon many Proverbs; or ſhall make him ſay what we would have him; not, what he intended.

V. 27. An ungodly man] Heb. A man of Belial, 2 Sam 20. 1.

in his lips there is a burning fire] For he conſumeth himſelf and others. See Jam.3,6. And the tongue is a fire, &c.

V. 28 A froward man ſoweth ſtrife] Chap.6. 14,19. & 15. 18. & 26.21. & 29.22.

ſoweth] Heb. ſendeth forth.

a whiſperer ſeparateth chief friends] Heb. a guide. One that is of our intimate counſel, Pſal.55. 13. Mich. 7. 5. See more of the original word, upon chap.2. 17. the guide of her youth.

V. 29. leadeth him into the way that is not good] Either to undoe him, or to make him joyn with him in undoing others. See Chap. 1. 10,11, &c.

V. 30. He ſhutteth his eyes to deviſe froward things] The Hebrew word may be tranſlated alſo, He winketh: as by Junius and Buxtorſius. But however tranſlated, that winking, and ſuch like geſticulations are intended, is very probable: of which ſee before upon Chap.6. 13. He winketh with his eyes. Some would have this ſhutting of the eyes to be referred to the intention of the mind, which then is moſt it ſelf, when not diſtracted by external objects; to which the ſhutting of the eyes doth not a little conduce; as if he ſhould ſay, with his whole endeavour he laboureth to bring his wickedneſſe to paſſe.

V. 31. if he be found in the way of righteouſneſſe] Old men that fear God ought to be reverenced, Levit.19.32. Or, it is found: that is, God, for the moſt part, gives old age to righteous men, as a reward, Pſal 91. 16.

V.32. He that is ſlow to anger, is better than the mighty:] It is the opinion of many that are not very wiſe, that anger, is an effect of a great ſpirit, and of magnanimity; whereas there is no anger (we ſpeak not of moderate anger; upon a juſt provocation; an effect of nature:) but proceeds from weakneſſe; and to indulge to paſſions, is alwayes an argument of a baſe and cowardly diſpoſition: to vvhich therefore, as children, ſo vvomen, (as the vveaker ſex,) are naturally more ſubject than men. The Latins therefore very properly, and naturally, expreſſe all paſſions, (anger eſpecially,) by the vvord impotentia; and Solomon here uſeth theſe ſimilitudes, to let us knovv hovv much more true generoſity there is in meekneſſe, and clemency, than in paſſion and revenge. Seneca alſo in one of his Epiſtles, uſeth the ſame ſimilitude; Multa inveniuntur, qui ignem inferant urbibus, qui inexpugnabilia proſternant, & muros in miram altitudinem adductos, arietibus ac machinis quaſſent, &c. Nemo illis venientibus reſtitit, ſed nec ipſi ambitioni, crudelitatique reſtiterant. But Cicero's words come yet nearer, In omnibus ſeculis pauciores viri reperti ſunt, qui ſuas cupiditates, quàm qui hoſtium copias vincerent.

V. 33. The lot is caſt into the lap: but the whole diſpoſing thereof is of the Lord] See before verſe 1.& 9 This is not appliable to trivial light occaſions nor to ſuch lots, as are not warranted by the word of God: nor inferences to be made, from ſuch, of Gods approbation, or rejection. The Devill, by Gods permiſſion, and juſt judgement; may have the managing of ſome lots, for his own ends: yet God ſtill ſaid to have the diſpoſing, becauſe of his overruling power, when he pleaſeth; and that nothing can be without his permiſſion.

whole diſpoſing] Or, every judgement (or, ſentence.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſe 1. A Dry morſel, and quietneſſe therewith, than a houſe full of ſacrifices with ſtrife] Chap.15.17.

than a houſe full of ſacrifices with ſtrife] For where were many ſacrifices, there were many portions given to the people, wherewith they feaſted. Or, the word may ſignifie cattel ſlain to eat, not to ſacrifice. See before upon chap.7.14. I have peace-offerings,&c.

ſacrifices] Or, good cheer.

V. 2. A wiſe ſervant ſhall have rule over a ſon that cauſeth ſhame] Sometimes a wiſe and faithful ſervant is by the father ſet over ſlothful children, and hath part of the inheritance with them.

V. 3. The fining pot is for ſilver, and the furnace for gold] Pſal.26. 2. chap.27.21. Jer.17.10. Mal.3.3.

but the Lord trieth the hearts] Men can find out other things, but not other mens thoughts. Yea, it is a work for a man to know his own heart. Nothing more deceitfull, and wherein men are more ſubject to be beguiled, then in judging of themſelves. Without great diligence, and humility, and much ſeeking unto God by prayers, it is not to be done. Hence it is, that moſt men live ſo ſecure, becauſe ſo inſenſible and ignorant of their condition: as hath been obſerved before more than once. The words may be underſtood of trials by afflictions, by which God uſually doth uſe to cleanſe and purifie thoſe, whom he hath deſtinated to glory: That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, &c. 1 Pet.1.7. that we may be partakers of his holineſſe, Heb.12.10.

V. 4. a lyar giveth ear to a naughty tongue] No tongue ſo bad, but a lyar will hearken to it.

naughty tongue] Heb. of naughtineſſes; that is moſt naughty.

V. 5. Who ſo mocketh the poor, reproacheth his Maker] Chap.14. 31. See there.

unpuniſhed] Heb. held innocents.

and he that is glad at calamities] Whom the Grecians very properly call ἐπιχαιρεκάκους; and the vice it ſelf, (rejoycing at the calamities of others,) in one word, ἐπιχαιρεκακία.

V. 6. Childrens children are the crown of old men] Pſal. 127. 3. & 128. 3.

V. 7. Excellent ſpeech] Heb. a lip of excellency.

Excellent ſpeech becometh not a fool] As eloquent ſpeech ſhews a fool ſpeaks not like himſelf; ſo a Prince ſpeaks much leſſe like himſelf, if he ſpeak falſely. See upon chap.1.1. The Proverbs.

excellent] Or, high, magnificent, lofty language: ſuch as fools, that think themſelves wiſe, (eſpecially if in ſome authority:) do principally affect.

lying lips] Heb. a lip of lying.

V. 8. A gift is as a precious ſtone in the eyes of him that hath it] Chap.18.16 Heb. of the maſters of it. Which ſome refer to the giver; as if he intended, that rich men, with their mony, preſume they may do what they will. Others, to the taker, more properly. However, the ſenſe is the ſame; and for the truth, we have daily experience.

a precious ſtone] Heb. a ſtone of grace.

V. 9. He that covereth a tranſgreſſion, ſeeketh love] Chap.10.12. Concealing injuries done us, breeds peace; ripping them up, breeds diſcord among neareſt friends.

ſeparateth very friends] See upon ch.2.17. the guide of her youth.

ſeeketh] Or, procureth.

V. 10. A reproof entreth more into a wiſe man, &c.] A wiſe man is more affected with, and mends ſooner after a reproof, than a fooliſh perſon after many ſtripes.

A reproof entreth more into a wiſe man, than an hundred ſtripes into a fool] Or, a reproof aweth more a wiſe man, than to ſtrike a fool an hundred times.

V. 11. therefore a cruel meſſenger ſhall be ſent againſt him] An hangman or executioner. The wrath of a King is as meſſengers of death, Chap.16.14. The Hebrew word מלאך may likewiſe be tranſlated angelus; an Angel: and ſo ſome Rabbins underſtand it here; and think the ſame to be intended both here, and Pſal.78.49. Of which ſee more there.

V.12. Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man] It is better to meet a ſhe-bear, that falls on every one ſhe meets, as if he had ſtollen her whelps, than to meet a wicked man in a violent paſſion.

a fool in his folly] A fool, for, a wicked man: obſerved many times before. But by a fool here, we may alſo underſtand a great talker: for, ſuch, moſt fools are: ſo good an opinion they have of themſelves uſually. So Horace, Serm.lib.1. ſat.9. Ibam fortè viâ,&c. He doth there very wittily and elegantly ſet it out, as death yea a cruel violent death: (ſub cultro,&c.) to fall into the hands of a great talker.

V. 13. rewardeth evill for good, evill ſhal not depart from his houſe] Rom.12,17. 1 Theſ.5 15. 1 Pet.3 9.

V. 14. The beginning of ſtriſe as when one letteth out water] He that raiſeth ſtriſe, knows not how to ſtay it, no more than he that opens a breach to let out waters to drown a country; therefore begin not to contend at any time.

V.15. He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that contemneth the juſt, &c. Exod.23. 7. Chap.24.24. Iſa.5.23.

even they both are abomination to the Lord] Men think it mercy to favour wicked man in judgement, but God accounts it as bad as condemning an innocent.

V. 16. Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wiſdom] If a man have never ſo much opportunity and means, yet he will not uſe them, unleſſe he have an heart deſirous to learn. See upon chap.18.1. Through deſire, no heart] That is, no deſire: as before. Or, no natural ability, without which all labour is loſt. Non ex quolibet ligno fit Mercurius. Hence it is that Ariſtotle doth aſcribe ſo much to εὐφυΐα (a good natural diſpoſition) in his Ethicks, See alſo chap.27. 22. Though thou ſhouldeſt bray.

V. 17. A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity] chap 18. 24.

a brother is born for adverſity] They are true friends, and kindred, that forſake us not in adverſity.

V. 18. A man voyd of underſtanding ſtriketh hands] Ch. 6. 1. & 11. 15. See there.

underſtanding] Heb. heart.

in the preſence of his friend] Openly, in the preſence of the creditour, chap. 6. 3.

friend] Or, neighbour.

V. 19. he that exalteth his gate, ſeeketh deſtruction] He that makes him fairer gates than his neighbour, ſeeking to exalt himſelf above his degree, gives others occaſion to ſeek his ruine. Broad gates break men many times. By high gates, we may alſo (with ſome Rabbins) underſtand ſumptuous houſes and edifices, the very coſt whereof undoeth many, before they be up and finiſhed; and the envy, more, when finiſhed. Which made the Poet ſay; Auream quiſquis mediocritatem Diligit, tutus caret obſoleti ſordibus tecti caret invidendâ Sobrius aulâ. But the Hebrew word פתחו may alſo be expounded (as Mich 7. 5) of the mouth; He that maketh wide his mouth: or, He that ſpeaketh big. See Pſal 12. 3. to ſpeak proud things. The Lord ſhall cut off ——and the tongue that ſpeaketh proud things. And ſo among the Latines, Verba ſuperba; uſed for an argument of great and dangerous pride: and ἔπος μέγα, among the Grecians, Solomon, by uſing this word common to words and edifices might have a reſpect to both, to condemn pride, or affected greatneſſe in both.

V. 20. He that hath a froward heart] Heb, the froward of heart.

V. 21. He that begetteth a fool, doth it to his ſorrow] ch. 10. 1. See there.

that begetteth a fool] He that begetteth a fool, and, the father of a fool; in the next member ſeem to be all one. Becauſe of the certainty of the thing, they ſay. I know it was ſo in Pharaoh's dream: and there was great reaſon for it. But doth not hold ſo in words, of things preſent and obvious. I ſhould rather ſay, to make the ſpeech more pathetical, and thereby, more operative. However, beſt writers, have ſome tautologies; ſo apparant in ſome, that they may be thought to have affected them Neither were it altogether abſurd, or improbable, if we ſaid that by ילד here, though maſculin, and joyned with a maſculin verb, the mother is principally underſtood. I could ſay more to that: but I would not be too Grammatical.

V, 22. A merry heart doth good like a medicine] Chap. 15. 13. & 12. 25. A cheerfull heart helps well to recover health loſt: but a ſad one breeds deadly diſeaſes.

like a medicine] Or, to a medicine. Which ſenſe ſeemeth to be moſt literal, becauſe without any ſupplement. A cheerful heart helps the operation of Phyſick, that it may do good to the body, which heavineſſe (ſo the Rabbins, and Mercer out of them) doth hinder. But it comes all to one.

V. 23. A wicked man taketh a gift out of the boſome] That is ſecretly, as it were out of the boſom of the rich

V. 24. Wiſdom is before him that hath underſtanding, but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth] He ſeems to intend the ſame by this verſe, as before, Chap. 14. 6. A ſcorner ſeeketh wiſdom, and findeth it not: but knowledge is eaſie unto him that underſtandeth, beſides what he hath to that purpoſe elſewhere Yet ſome, by before him, underſtand by him, and conſpicuous in his very countenance and carriage: and referre to Eccleſ. 2. 14. & 8. 1 where the face is apparently ſpoken of, But I think the firſt interpretation is the moſt genuine. See upon the next words.

but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth] As one that hath loſt his way, (ſaith one here) and is beſides himſelf, nor knowes where he is, nor which way to turn. &c. I am very confident (though I find it not obſerved by others, which I wonder at) that Solomon by theſe words, doth allude to the words of Moſes, Deut. 30. 11 &c For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off It is not in heaven, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, Who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it and do it? Neither is it beyond the ſeas, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, Who ſhall go over the ſea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayeſt do it. Solomon therefore ſaith, that a man of underſtanding need not go very far, to find true wiſdom, having the Law of God before him, to inſtruct and direct him; which is able to make any man wiſe unto ſalvation: 2 Tim. 3. 15. Whereas a fool, that ſeeks wiſdom for credit, oſtentation, profit, or any other worldly ends; he keeps a great deal ado; ſeeks far and near; and when he hath done all, is never the nearer.

Wiſdom is before him that hath underſtanding] Eaſie to be gotten, or ready to guide him, or, appears in his face by his modeſt carriage: in fools, all is contrary.

V. 25. A fooliſh ſon is a grief to his father, and bitterneſſe to her that bare him] Chap. 10. 1. & 15. 20. & 19. 13.

V. 26. Alſo to puniſh the juſt is not good] Some refer this alſo, to verſe 23. A wicked man, &c. Others, (and ſo Mercer) interpret, To puniſh the juſt alſo, is not good. But we need not be ſollicitous about the coherence, in ſuch Collections; as was ſaid before.

nor to ſtrike Princes for equity] Or, that Princes ſhould ſtrike for equity: which is the part of a right Tyrant, to puniſh them that do well; not of a King See before, Chap. 16 13. and the Note there. According to the firſt tranſlation, (which is ours here) by Princes, muſt be underſtood inferiour Magiſtrates, who are often puniſhed by profeſſed Tyrants, for doing their duties; that is, for being juſt.

V. 27. He that hath knowledge ſpareth his words] Jam. 1. 19. It is a ſign of excellent wiſdom, for a man to moderate his ſpeech at any time, but eſpecially in his anger.

an excellent ſpirit] Or, a cool ſpirit. But the firſt, as more generally received, ſo more agreeable to the context: as doth appear by the following verſe. And to this ſenſe, ſparing of breath, or wind; (as chap. 7 11. A fool uttereth all his mind. It is the ſame word:) had been more proper, I think; than as we have it here, excellent in ſpirit. See alſo upon 12. 23. A prudent man.

V. 28 Even a fool when he holdeth his peace, is counted wiſe] Job 13. 5. The ſenſe of this ſentence hath been many wayes expreſſed by the Grecians as by Dion. Laertius, Plutarch, and others may appeare, and divers apothegmes made of it; but by all to one purpoſe: yet by an ancient Poet, a man would think (though he did not think of him perchance) in Solomons very words: Πᾶς τις ἀπαίδευτος φρονιμώτατός ἐστι σιωπῶν.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſe 1. T*Hrough deſire a man having ſeparated himſelf, ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdom*] Or, He that ſeparateth himſelf ſeeketh according to his deſire, and intermedleth in every buſineſſe. The ſenſe of this, and the next verſe, is generally thought very obſcure; and there is great variety of Expoſitions. The main queſtion is whether this ſeparation here mentioned, be ſpoken by way of commendation, or diſcommendation. Of one ſide it is objected, that the word התגלע, is never found in a good ſenſe: but on the other ſide, that תושיה, never in a bad. Moſt Rabbins interpret the words of a laudable ſeparation, when a man, through an earneſt deſire of wiſdom, or any good literature, doth ſeparate and ſequeſter himſelf from the world, and all other impediments, that he may apply himſelf to his buſineſſe: of which kind of ſeparation, Philoſophers treat at large, (Plato eſpecially) and ſhew the neceſſity of it to all that will ſpeed in the purſuit of true wiſdom, or learning. And that the ground of this ſeparation muſt be a ſtrong deſire, or no good to be done, the ſame teach alſo. Mercer, and ſome others, with the Vulgar Latine, would have contentious men here intended, who out of private ends and deſires ſeparate themſelves, that is, make quarrels, and break of friendſhip, and are apt to meddle in every matter, upon a pretence of reaſon, whatſoever they do, though, really, they will hear no reaſon. Others again will have the words to be meant of ſuch as out of a humour at firſt, ſeparate themſelves from the Church, and afterwards proceed to ſuch a contempt of God, and his word, as that they openly ſcorn and deride both. Laſtly, ſome think phantaſtick fools, and ſuch as affect ſingularity, and to be croſſe to all the world, and yet to meddle in all things, to be the men here intended. Of all theſe Expoſitions, the firſt beſt pleaſeth me; and beſides other reaſons, I am induced to this judgement by the obſervation of the coherence of ſenſe between this and the next verſe; this verſe (as I apprehend it) containing a lively character of one that is truly ſtudious of wiſdom, and goes the right way to attain unto it: the next, of one, that is an ambitious oſtentator of it; who doth not ſtudy to benefit himſelf, or any other, by it; but only to make a ſhew, and that he may make himſelf known, and get ſome reputation abroad. And by the obſervation of two words, of יתגלע in the firſt verſe, to which, (oppoſit in ſenſe, appoſite in ſound, to make an allusion) התגלות doth anſwer in the next. But let the Reader make his choyce.

V. 2. but that his heart may diſcover it ſelf] Niſi cum revelat cor ſuum; as ſome in Mercer, that is, but that he may diſcover his heart: or, wiſdom; ſuch as he hath, according to that of the Poet: Scire tuum nihil eſt, &c. See before upon chap. 14. 33. Wiſdom reſteth, &c.

V. 3. then cometh alſo contempt] Either contempt and ſhame from God lights upon wicked men; or elſe, he means, they contemn all others: both true, but this the more likely to be the ſenſe here.

and with ignominy reproach] Some tranſlate, & cum viro ignominioſo, opprobrium: The Hebrew will bear it, and it anſwers the firſt member better. Yet this, as we have it here, is the more literal of the two; and to the ſame purpoſe, ſo that there needs no alteration. Contempt: ignominy: reproach: a wicked man's moſt ordinary livery: and accordingly, they are called ὑβρισταὶ, in Greek; and ὕβρεις (contumely, reproach, properly:) any kind of ſin, or outrage.

V. 4. The words of a mans mouth are as deep waters, and the well-ſpring of wiſdom as a flowing brook] Chap. 20. 5.

as deep waters] Which can never be drawn empty, but ever bring profit Chap 10. 11.

and the well-ſpring of wiſdom, as a flowing brook] He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath ſaid, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water. Joh. 7. 38. It is not certain what place of Scripture Chriſt did eſpecially intend. It is conceived, that he alluded unto divers; of which this alſo might be one. This very ſimilitude, of wiſdom compared to a ſpring, is found in the writings of ancient Philoſophers alſo. Ἔνδον βλέπε, ſaith one: ἔνδον ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, καὶ ἀεὶ ἀναβλύειν δυναμένη, ἐὰν ἀεὶ σκάπτῃ.

wiſdom] By wiſdom, may alſo be underſtood here eloquence; or fluent ſpeech; as many do. Σοφία, wiſdom, in the N. T. often for eloquent ſpeech, as we have ſhewed elſewhere. στόμα καὶ σοφίαν, Luke 24. 15. Neſtors eloquence is ſet out by Homer, in words equivalent to theſe.

V. 5. It is not good to accept the perſon of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgement] Levit. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. & 16. 9. Chap. 24. 23.

It is not good to accept the perſon of the wicked] To favour and ſupport him, to the injury of him that hath the right on his ſide.

V. 6. his mouth calleth for ſtrokes] Encourageth others to fight, or cauſeth himſelf to be beaten, verſe 7.

V. 7. A fools mouth is his deſtruction, and his lips are the ſnare of his ſoul] Chap. 10. 14. & 12. 13 & 13. 3.

V. 8. The words of a tale-bearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermoſt parts of the belly] Chap. 12. 18. & 26. 22.

tale-bearer] Or, whiſperer.

are as wounds] They are firmly believed by ſome, and wound mens reputation irrecoverably. The Hebrew word מתלהמים is not found elſewhere, but here and Chap. 26. 22. where the ſame verſe is repeated. It is by ſome Rabbins, interpreted, blanda; that is, ſoft: as Pſal. 55. 21. The words of his mouth were ſmoother, &c. and by others, hidden, or cloſe. But this is the moſt likely ſignification, (approved by Mercer) that we have here: grounded upon the affinity of the word with להם percuſſit, &c.

as wounds] Or, like as when men are wounded.

innermoſt parts] Heb. chambers.

V. 9. is brother to him that is a great waſter] Will be as poor as he; for one gets nothing, and the other ſpends all.

V. 10. The name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower] Pſal. 18. 2. & 27. 1. & 144. 2. God rightly known, and ſpeedily called upon, keeps him ſafe againſt trouble.

is ſafe] Heb. is ſet aloft.

V. 11. The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit] Chap. 10. 15. See upon Chap. 10. 2. Treaſures of wickedneſſe, &c.

in his own conceit] The ſame word in the Original ſignifieth a picture, image, idol: and, conceit, imaginations. There is no queſtion but rich men's conceits and imaginations, (that truſt to their wealth, as moſt do,) are meer Idolatry: and ſo deſcribed and ſtiled by Job: If I have made gold my hope, &c. Chap. 31. 24, 25, 26. &c. How much better might many men imploy their zeal in deſtroying theſe Idols of their hearts; than in perſecuting poor ſtones, that ſerved onely to adorne the houſes of God?

V. 12. Before deſtruction the heart of man is haughty, and before honour is humility] Chap. 11. 2. and 15. 33. and 16. 18.

V. 13. He that anſwereth a matter] He that anſwers one word before he hear the whole matter, that he may underſtand it throughly, ſhews his own folly, and brings diſgrace upon himſelfe.

anſwereth a matter] Heb. returneth a word.

V. 14. The ſpirit of a man will ſuſtain his infirmities] That is, he that is of a cheerful temper naturally, and enjoyes peace of conſcience, he may bear much; though his body be caſt down, yet he may hold up (and his body will be the better for it too) in his ſoul and ſpirit. Some ancient Philoſophers have gone very far that way, maintaining that the pains of the body were nothing to the ſoul of man, becauſe of a different nature from the body: and it cannot be denied but their doctrine and diſcipline did bring forth ſome marvellous examples of patience, and reſolution, in greateſt bodily pains and torments. But generally, their arguments have more of ſubtilty, than ſolidity; and failed them when they came to the trial. As for the torments of a wounded ſpirit, they have been acknowledged by all men, and both pithily and pathetically ſet out by divers Poets and Orators: thoſe of a bad conſcience, eſpecially: but by none better, or more fully, than by Ariſtotle, Ethic. Nicom. l. 9. c. 4.

who can bear?] Some think that Solomons aim by theſe words is, to give a check to puſillanimity, and want of courage: who can bear; that is, who can endure? Or, quis elevabit, eriget, attollet? that is, Who ſhall lift, or, raiſe up? Indeed, it is a hard thing to apply comfort to a man that is ſunck in his ſpirit. Eſpecially, if it proceed from any natural diſtemper of the body, as often; though neither the patient himſelf, ſometimes, nor they that are employed to adminiſter comfort unto him, through ignorance, ſuſpect any ſuch thing: who therefore do more hurt, commonly, in ſuch a miſtaken caſe, than good. It were much more expedient, in ſuch a caſe, to repair to a learned Phyſician; than to men utterly ignorant of all natural cauſes and effects. But if a man be very puſillanimous naturally, it is almoſt impoſſible to make a good Chriſtian of ſuch a one. But the fearful and unbelieving, &c. Revel. 21. 8.

V. 15. and the ear of the wiſe ſeeketh knowledge] A man muſt uſe both heart and ear to get wiſdom: that is, both meditation of his own, and inſtruction from others.

V. 16. A mans gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men] Chap. 17. 8.

A mans gift maketh room for him] Getteth him liberty to ſpeak; and favourable audience of great men: or, brings him out of priſon, and exalts him to honour.

V. 17. He that is firſt in his own cauſe] The accuſer ſeems to be in the right, till the defendant ſhews the weakneſſe of his plea. But there is another ſenſe made of theſe words, of excellent uſe. The juſt is firſt in his own cauſe, or, tryal: that is, he begins with himſelf firſt, to examine and ſearch his own conſcience, that he may judge himſelfe, and condemne, if he ſee cauſe, (as moſt likely) before he meddle with others. Juſtus, prior eſt accuſator ſui; as the Vulgar Latin here, very well. Then cometh his neighbour and (after he hath done with himſelf; ſtrictly and impartially:) he ſearcheth him. We are not forbidden to reprove our neighbour, or thoſe whom we have to do with, except we finde our ſelves altogether innocent in the ſame kind (licentious wicked men would be glad of that: but Seneca hath met with them, and their objections long agoe:) No; but inſtructed to begin with our ſelves; not to ſpare our ſelves; and ſo ſhall we be in a better diſpoſition to deale with others. An excellent ſentence: any body will ſay ſo much; but few will be perſwaded, to put it in practice effectually.

V. 18. The lot cauſeth contentions to ceaſe] A lot is a good way to end contentions, for the avoiding of part-takings.

and parteth] It parteth, literally, whileſt it aſſigneth unto every one his portion: and parteth, figmatically, (but very truely too) whileſt it keeps them from falling one upon another, through ſtrife and contention.

V. 19. A brother offended is harder to be won than a ſtrong city] Becauſe he findes hurt where he had reaſon to look for help. Fratrum contentiones: an ancient Proverb mentioned by Ariſtotle, and divers others. Yet ſome of the Rabbins make a quite different ſenſe of the words, that a brother, though offended, will neverthleſſe upon occaſion be as a ſtrong city, &c. The Greek and vulgar Latine go further from the Hebrew; but their ſenſe is more warrantable; to wit, that the conjunction of brothers, is as a fenced city, &c. Theſe I mention onely: but the Hebrew words are clear, and the ſenſe of them unqueſtionable.

their contentions are like the bars of a caſtle] Which being ſtrong, will neither bow nor yield.

V. 20. A mans belly ſhall be ſatisfied with the fruit of his mouth] Chap. 12. 14. & 13. 2 and 21. 23.

V. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue] A mans tongue well uſed, brings life: ill uſed, brings death. Of the power of the tongue, beſides former references, ſee alſo Jam. 3. 2, 3. &c. and Math. 12. 37. For by thy words, &c.

V. 22. Whoſo findeth a wife, findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the Lord] Chap. 19. 14.

Whoſo findeth a wife, findeth a good thing] Marriage is good in it ſelf, for a wife is an helper. However by what followes, and obtaineth favour of the Lord, (which words upon another occaſion we had before, Chap. 8. 35.) compared with Chap. 19. 14. a prudent wife is from the Lord: it is very probable, that good, or prudent, muſt be ſupplied. And ſo moſt Expoſitors think.

V. 23. roughly] James 2. 3. Pſalm 31. 18. grevious things. The ſame word in the Original.

V. 24. A man that hath friends, muſt ſhew himſelf friendly] Some make this to be the ſenſe, Unuſquiſque diligit amicos, ut amicitias contrahant ſecum; Quia amicus, &c. that is, Every man is covetous of friends, to contract friendſhip with them; Becauſe a friend will ſtick, &c. But ſome others very differently, Vir qui multos habet amicos, [finis eſt] ut conteratur;; from another root, which is uſual enough; and is warrantable enough by frequent experience. A man of friends, [that is, who hath many friends: his end will be,] that he ſhall be broken in peeces; or, undone. But this doth not ſuit ſo well with that which follows.

and there is a friend that ſticketh cloſer than a brother] Chap. 17. 17. Oft-times friends are found that are more ready to do us pleaſure, than they that are near to us in the fleſh, and ſo more obliged to us. And in trouble, a friend ſticks cloſe to us ſometimes, when a brother forſakes us.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſe 1 Better is the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverſe in his lips, and is a fool] Though he be rich, as muſt be ſupplyed from Chap. 28. 6. Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightneſſe, than he that is perverſe in his wayes, though he be rich. But it ſeems alſo to be implyed in theſe words, perverſe in his lips: becauſe it is the property of many rich men, (and ſome affect it, as well becoming, they think, their greatneſſe) to ſpeak roughly; (which is a kind of perverſe ſpeaking) as was obſerved before by Solomon himſelf, Chap. 18. 23. The poor uſeth intreaties; but the rich anſwereth roughly.

Alſo that the ſoul be without knowledge it is not good] Some make this ſenſe of the words: Et iam abſque ſcientiâ deſiderium non eſt bonum: that is, Appetite, [or, deſire:] without knowledge, is not good; or a dangerous thing. An excellent ſaying. I have read it in ſome Comicks very well expreſt. There is nothing to be objected againſt this tranſlation, but the accent; which I do not conceive to be of much weight, except it be granted, that vowels and accents were anciently: which I do not believe. And then the coherence too, will be much better.

he that haſteth with his feet, ſinneth] He that doth things raſhly without premeditation, or fore-caſt: ſinneth; that is, (as the word is often uſed) ſhall ſuffer, or ſmart for it; according to the ancient Greek Proverb, Πϱοπέτεια ϖολλοῖς ἐςὶν αἰτία κακῶν: Haſt, (or precipitancy) is to many the cauſe of evils.

V. 3. and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord] Though mans fooliſh carriage makes his buſineſſe not ſucceed well, yet he layes the fault upon God Gen. 3. 12. Homer in his firſt Odyſſe, ſaith the very ſame, that Solomon doth here; to wit, That men, what evils they incur through their own folly and perverſeneſſe, they lay the fault of them upon the gods: Ὢ πόποι, οἷον δή νυ θεοὺς, &c.

V. 4. Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is ſeparated from his neighbour] Chap. 14 20.

V. 5. A falſe witneſſe ſhall not be unpuniſhed, and he that ſpeaketh lyes ſhall not eſcape] Exod. 23. 1. Deut. 19 16. Chap. 6. 19. & 21 28.

A falſe witneſſe ſhall not be unpuniſhed] Heb. a witneſſe of falſhoods: That is, a moſt falſe witneſſe. Let him be as cuning as he can to invent lyes, all his tricks cannot keep him from puniſhment.

unpuniſhed] Heb, held innocent.

V. 6. Many will intreat the favour of the prince] Heb. the face. Becauſe they that ſue for favour to a great man, faſten their eyes on his face, Pſal. 123. 2.

a friend to him that giveth gifts] Chap. 17. 8.

him that giveth gifts] Heb. a man of gifts.

V. 7. All the brethren of the poor do hate him] Chap. 14. 20. Neglect him, as if they hated him, Matth. 6. 24.

how much more do his friends go far from him] Are far off in affection, and help him no more, than if they were far of in place.

he purſueth them with words] To have comfort from them, or help. Or, puts them in mind of their promiſes.

yet they are wanting to him] Heb. לא־המה, that is, they (or, but they) not: or, they are not. So in the Text: but in the margin inſtead of לא it is noted לו as the more correct reading. In this Engliſh, both the one and the other, (the reading of the Text, and that of the margin) ſeem to be expreſſed: as in many other places beſides. What ſenſe ſome Rabbins make of the לו alone, may be ſeen in Mercer: he likes it not, neither can I. The לא alone, may ſerve to make this ſenſe we have here; but they not: that is, they are wanting to him. Such expreſſions are ordinary in the Hebrew.

V. 8. He that getteth wiſdom, loveth his own ſoul] Shall preſerve his life, and thrive, though all men fail him.

wiſdom] Heb. an heart.

he that keepeth underſtanding. ſhall find good] Heb. he keepeth underſtanding to find good.

V. 9. A falſe witneſſe ſhall not be unpuniſhed, and he that ſpeaketh lyes ſhall periſh] Verſe 5.

V. 10. Delight is not ſeemly for a fool] The free uſe of things is not to be permitted to him that cannot uſe them aright. Or, delight may be taken here for dainties and pleaſures; the uſual effects and evidences of wealth and greatneſſe. As if he ſaid, Wealth and abundance doth not become a fool. See Chap. 30. 22. For a ſervant, &c.

for a ſervant to have rule over princes] Chap. 30 22. Eccl. 10. 6, 7.

V. 11. The diſcretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to paſſe over a tranſgreſſion] Chap. 14. 29.

diſcretion] Or, prudence.

it is his glory to paſſe over a tranſgreſſion] To take no notice of it, or to forgive, and forget it, Levit. 19. 18. The Heathens themſelves could ſay, (and they have many ſayings to that purpoſe) that in nothing man came neerer to the glory and perfection of God himſelf, than in goodneſſe and clemency. See alſo upon Chap. 16, 32. He that is ſlow to anger, &c.

V. 12. The Kings wrath is as the roaring of a Lion: but his favour is as dew upon the graſſe] Chap. 16. 14, 15. & 20. 2. & 28. 15. Where the word of a King is, there is power: ſaith Solomon, in Eccleſiaſtes: and who may ſay unto him, What doſt thou? Eccleſ. 8. 4. And where power is, (without which the name of a King may be, but not the reallity:) there the Kings wrath, is as the roaring of a lyon: a thing much to be dreaded; of ſad conſequence, commonly: as a meſſenger of death, Ch. 16. 14. But, if a King ſtudy goodneſs, more than majeſty; or bring himſelf to want and penury by bad counſel, and ill husbandry: himſelf ſuffer his people to grow upon him, and thereby (as the nature of people is:) to contemn him: Or, if God, (for the ſins of either King, or people, or both:) doth pour contempt upon princes, Job 12. 21. a King may have occaſion enough to roar perchance, (as David ſpeaketh of himſelf) but all occaſion of terror will be from them, where the power is: who, the more vile, originally; the greater will their terror be; becauſe, Corpora magnanimo ſatis eſt proſtraſſe leoni; but (every School-boy can tell) Aſperius nihil eſt humili cùm ſurgit in altum. However, there be examples of ſtrange judgements. But this is enough to Solomons words; and leſſe could not be ſaid, to make him underſtood.

V. 13. A fooliſh ſon is the calamity of his father] Chap. 10. 1. & 15. 20. & 17. 21, 25. Heb. calamities. That is, the greateſt calamity.

and the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping] Chap. 21. 9. & 27. 15. As rain that droppeth in, and rotteth the houſe at length.

V. 14. Houſe and riches are the inheritance of fathers] Parents can leave their children wealth, but not good wives. See before upon Chap. 16. 1. The preparations of the heart, &c.

a prudent wife is from the Lord] Chap. 18. 22.

V. 15. an idle ſoul ſhall ſuffer hunger] Chap. 10. 4. and 20. 13. Or, deceitful. For ſuch perſons as live idly, neceſſity for the moſt part, makes them deceitful.

V. 16. He that keepeth the commandment, keepeth his own ſoul] That is, ſhall live: as appears by the antitheſis, ſhall dye; in the next words, Of eternal life and death; as Luke 10. 25. &c. this do and thou ſhalt live. Of temporal; He that kept the law, avoided thoſe puniſhments, (whereof ſome were capital) which the breakers of it did incur. And in reference to this. ſome tranſlate ſupplicio afficietur: that is, he ſhall ſuffer; to wit, by judgement of Law.

V. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord] Matth. 10. 42. & 25. 40 2 Cor. 9. 6, 7.

that which he hath given] Or, his deed.

V. 18. Chaſten thy ſon while there is hope] Chap. 13. 24. & 23. 13.

and let not thy ſoul ſpare him for his crying] Some, Et ad interficiendum eum ne eleves animam tuam: that is, And do not lift thy ſoul (to lift his ſoul unto any thing; that is, to covet, to deſire, to attempt: a known Hebraiſme: as Jerem. 22. 27. and elſewhere:) to kill him. This pleaſeth ſome, as the moſt literal, who except againſt that other, as forced, or not ſufficiently warrantable. But it is not ſo, as will appear by examining of particulars. Firſt, the ſame verb that ſignifies to lift ſignifies alſo to ſpare, or to forgive; as Num. 14. 19. according to all tranſlations; and Gen. 4. 6. & 13. according to ſome. So that taking the ſubſtantive ſoul, (which they make an accuſative) to be the nominative to the verb; thy ſoul ſpare him, will be the literal ſenſe of the words. This cannot be denied. What then? המית they ſay, is not found elſewhere for noyſe, or crying. What if it be not? How many words beſides, that are found but once in the Bible? or twice? Beſides, though the word, as here pointed be not elſewhere, in this ſenſe; yet with other points it is: Eſ. 14 11. and the noyſe of thy viols. And why may not that be the right pointing and reading of this place alſo? But that will trouble them more, that would have the pointing to be of the ſame antiquity and authority, as the conſonants. Let them chuſe, therefore; for either of thoſe two wayes we have ſpoken of, the word is juſtifiable in this ſenſe. And truly it is much more likely, that Solomon ſhould warne us not to ſpare, which is done ſo generally, and the undoing of ſo many children; than not to kill, which though it happens ſomtimes; yet rather as a prodigy, when it doth, or a miſchance, (ſo contrary to nature it is:) than as a thing purpoſed, or intended: not a thing certainly, that any father ſhould be ſuſpected to lift his ſoul unto; which is an expreſſion of a great longing, or eager purſuance after a thing. But laſtly, let us quit that controverted (though there be little cauſe) notion of the word and ſtick to that which is more common, of killing: yet even ſo ſhall we come to the ſenſe that we would have, & avoid that, which they embrace; but we think it not ſo convenient. And this difference comes from the different expoſition of the verb נשא which we firſt ſpake of, and different ordering of the ſubſtantive. Let not thy ſoul ſpare him to his deſtruction; or, to kill him. This needs no further explication. Onely we may obſerve, that in this caſe, as in many others, noted by many; Too great indulgence, proveth greateſt cruelty.

for his crying] Or, to his deſtruction; or, to cauſe him to dye. So Mercer. See alſo upon Chap. 23. 13.

V. 19. yet thou muſt do it again] Though he be brought out of danger, yet his paſsion wil bring him in again. Some make this verſe to cohere with the former, tranſlating; Magnus eſt excandeſcentiâ, condonans mulctam: dicens te, ſi eripias, deinde amplius mulctaturum: That is, Though thou forgive him, yet make thy ſelf very angry to him, ſaying, If he eſcape now, that his puniſhment ſhall be the greater hereafter: So Junius; but he onely: neither do I ſee any reaſon, why any man ſhould follow him.

do] Heb. adde.

V. 20. Hear counſel and receive inſtruction, that thou mayeſt be wiſe in thy latter end] Some (as Junius) of this thy latter end, make but a tandem of it: as if he meant, that thou mayeſt be wiſe at the laſt, (tandem aliquando) and no more. But I rather take it, that Solomon had a further aim than ſo: That thou mayeſt be wiſe in thy latter end; that is, Provide wiſdom againſt the time of death, when moſt needful, that thou mayeſt not die a fool. Much to this purpoſe is the prayer of the Pſalmiſt; So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdom, Pſal. 90. 12. He that hath wiſdom enough to die well, need to care for no more. But it is a great chance, if they that have been ſtrangers to it all their lives, find it at their death: if a wicked life, beget a godly death. So that he that prayes for wiſdome at his death; and he, that the conſideration of his death, may make him live wiſely, though they ſeem to differ in their words, in effect pray but the ſame.

V. 21. There are many devices in a mans heart, &c.] Job 23. 13. Pſal. 33 10, 11. Chap. 16. 1, 9. Eſay 46. 10.

neverthele ſſe the counſel of the Lord, that ſhall ſtand] Mans device ſhall not have ſucceſſe, except God govern it, whoſe purpoſe is unchangeable, Pſal. 33. 10, 11. Iſa. 14. 26, 27.

V. 22. The deſire of a man is his] Or, That which is to be deſired of a man is his.

The deſire of a man is his kindneſſe] A mans will is to be accepted for the deed, if he have nothing to give, 2 Cor. 8. 12. This is a good ſenſe; but much different from that which is made of theſe words by other Expoſitors. The truth is, the words are ambiguous; and admit of more ſenſes than one. The deſire of a man, &c. that is, ſaith Mercer, with the moſt Rabbins; It is the greateſt and choiſeſt ornament of a man, to be kind and bountiful; if ſo really. But many, becauſe they covet the praiſe and reputation of it, are very forward in promiſes, but fail in performance. Better a poor man, that really performes what he is able, than ſuch gaudy undertakers. Such men are very lively deſcribed by the Comick; id eſt genus hominum peſſimum, in Denegando modo queis pudor paululum adeſt &c. he ſets them out at large Others make this ſenſe; The kindneſſe of many (of the richer ſort eſpecially) is meer coveteouſneſſe: they give, but it is, that they may receive more. A poor man, that hath little or nothing to give, is far better than ſuch benefactors. Such men there be. there is no queſtion; too many: Comicks and Poets, if not experience, will tell us. The different expoſition of the word תאות is the chief ground of all this difference.

V. 23. and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied: he ſhall] Or, and he that is filled with it ſhall abide: he ſhall Or rather thus to be ſupplied: The fear of the Lord,&c. and [they that fear him,] ſhall abide ſatisfied. See upon Chap. 14. 15, 26.

he ſhall not be viſited with evil] Beſides former references to divers places in this Book, ſee alſo upon Pſal. 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid.

V. 24. A ſlothful man hideth his hand in his boſome] Chap. 14. 19. & 26. 13, 15. It greiveth him to bring it again to his mouth: which doth ſomewhat abate of the hyperboly. Yet St. Chryſoſtome tells us of ſome in his time, who for meer wantonneſs and daintineſſe, would ſay, that it was a labour to them to eat, and could have found in their hearts, to have their meat chewed unto them, to ſpare their pains. There is ſome controverſie about the word צלחת which ſome tranſlate, lebetem: others, manticam; not boſom, as here. But ſince it makes no difference of ſenſe, (as they expound it) we need not trouble our ſelves with it.

V. 25. Smite a ſcorner, and the ſimple will beware] Chap. 21. 11. Men that do ill out of ignorance, will amend by the puniſhments and reproofs of ſcorners, though they themſelves will not: or, ſcorners muſt be ſmitten that offend out of malice, that others may amend; but he that ſins out of frailty, will amend if he be but reproved, though he be not ſmitten, when he duely conſiders what he had done.

will beware] Heb. will be cunning.

V. 26. He that waſteth his father, and chaſeth away his mother, is a ſon that cauſeth] The words may be taken reciprocally alſo and that perchance the moſt literal ſenſe: A ſon that cauſeth ſhame, and bringeth reproach, is [as] he that waſteth his father, and chaſeth away his mother. Which may be an aggravation of childrens riotous courſes, (as, Rebellion, is as the ſin of witchcraft, and ſtubborneſs, as idolatry, 1 Sam. 15. 23.) which may cauſe as much grief to parents, as loſſe of goods, or life it ſelf: or, a prognoſtick intimation, that they that take ſuch courſes which cauſe ſhame and reproach; may in time alſo, &c. See alſo Chap. 28. 24. And ſo משדד may be tranſlated more properly, deſtroyeth: or, ſpoyleth. For it imports properly, a violent and ſudden deſtruction.

V. 27. Ceaſe my ſon, to hear the inſtruction,&c.] Some, becauſe מוסר inſtruction, or, diſcipline, is commonly taken in a good ſenſe, inverting (as ſometimes it muſt be) the order of the words, tranſlate, Ceaſe my ſon, to erre from the words of knowledge, that thou mayeſt hear inſtruction. So Junius; and Mercer likes it well.

V. 28, An ungodly witneſſe] Heb. A witneſſe of Belial.

the mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity] Taketh as much pleaſure in ſpeaking falſly, as gluttons and drunkards do in ſwallowing down abundance of delicate meats and drinks, Job 15. 16. Eph. 4. 19. Or, ſticks no more at it, than at the eating of bread, or any other daily and ordinary buſineſſe.

devoureth] Or, hideth: covereth, as Numb. 14. 20. when the holy things are covered. But the other, the uſual ſignification of the word, and better anſwering to ſcorneth, or derideth, in the firſt member CHAP. XX.

Verſe 1. VVine is a mocker] Wine, immoderately taken, makes men ſcoffers and furious: or, it overtakes men before they are aware, Gen. 9. 21.

V. 2. The fear of a King is as the roaring of a Lyon] Chap. 10. 14. & 19. 12. See there.

ſinneth againſt his own ſoul] Putteth his life in danger.

V. 4. The ſluggard will not plow by reaſon of the cold] Chap. 10. 5. & 15. 19. 22. 13.

cold] Or, winter.

V. 5. Counſel in the heart of a man is like deep water] It is hard to find; for it is as deep waters, whoſe bottom cannot be found, yet a wiſe man will fetch it out of him, by obſerving his words and manners. But if deep water here, be meant as deep waters, Chap. 18. 4 as moſt think; then the meaning will be, that though wiſdom be very profound, and as it were concealed in a wiſe mans breaſt; yet a ſtudious underſtanding man will find a way to draw out of it, for his need, and for his imitation.

V. 6. Moſt men will proclaim every one his own bounty] Some tranſlate, not, his own goodneſſe: but, uniuſcujuſque miſericordiam; that is, the bounty, or liberality of another. The ſenſe; Many are prone enough, ſay they, to proclaim or publickly to acknowledge their benefactors: but few to be found, that are really thankful, in point of requital, if occaſion be.

but a faithful man who can find?] Heb. a man of faithfulneſſes: that is, a man faithful in every thing.

V. 7. his children are bleſſed after him] Pſal. 112. 2. See there.

V. 8. ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes] Where righteous judgement is executed, there ſin ceaſeth, and vice dares not appear, ver. 26.

all evil] Or, every evil man, as ver. 26.

V. 9. Who can ſay, I have made my heart clean, &c.] 1 King. 8. 46. 2 Chron. 6. 36. Job 14. 4. Pſal. 51. 5. Eccleſ. 7. 20. 1 John 1. 8.

V. 10. Divers weights] Heb. a ſtone and a ſtone. An heavy one to buy withal, and a light one to ſell withal.

Divers weights, and divers meaſures, both of them,&c.] Deut. 25. 13. &c. chap. 11. 1. & 16. 11.

divers meaſures] Heb. an ephah and an ephah.

V. 11. Even a child is known by his doings] Children ſhew betimes whether they be enclined to good wayes or bad; and muſt be dealt withal accordingly. This is the common expoſition. Another is propoſed by Geierus, grounded chiefly upon the moſt uſual ſignification of the Hebr. word יתנכר which in this ſenſe, to be known, or to make himſelf known, (though moſt leſſe proper to the Original verb) is not found any where elſe; but, for, to carry himſelf as a ſtranger; to conceal himſelf, &c. in divers places. It is this: Even a child can ſo diſguiſe his doings, That whether his work be pure and right, [thou canſt not eaſily diſcerne.] And if a child; how much more a man? How careful then ought we to be whom we truſt? This indeed is a caution of ſo much conſeqence, as that it can never be too often repeated, or varied in words. Whence it is, that the heathens made an oracle of Epicharmus his words tending to that purpoſe: Νῆφε, &c. However if we like beſt of our tranſlation, as more commonly received; yet I am not ſatisfied, that Solomons aim was onley to tell us, that even children can diſſemble. I rather conceive, that his words might drive to this; to tell us, that a probable judgement may be made of a child, or youth, what he will be, when a man; by his education, and by what he is accuſtomed unto in thoſe flexible years: becauſe, Quo ſemel eſt imbuta recens,&c. The conſideration whereof would oblige parents (one main ſubject of this Book) to all poſſible care of their childrens education. See alſo upon Chap. 22. 6. in the way he ſhould goe.

V. 12. The hearing ear, and the ſeeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them] Exod. 4. 11. It is not poſſible then, that he from whom we have received theſe faculties, ſhould want them himſelf Which if he do not, and is privy to the actions, even the moſt ſecret, of men; as little doubt is to be made, but he will in due time reward all men according to their deeds. This to be the drift of theſe words, may be collected from Pſal. 94. 7, 8, 9. 10. Yet they ſay, The Lord ſhall not ſee, &c. See there.

V. 13. Love not ſleep, leſt thou come to poverty] Chap. 12. 11. & 19. 15.

open thine eyes, &c.] That is, Be vigilant, watchful; take pains, and ſhake off drouſineſſe.

V. 14. It is naught] He often diſpraiſeth it, that he may buy it the cheaper. But what the principal aim is, is not certainly known. Whether Solomon, by theſe words, intended onely to reprove the coveteouſneſſe of many buyers, who care not what they ſay, though never ſo much againſt their own conſciences, ſo they compaſſe their deſires. Or whether the inconſtancy, or partiality, of mens judgements; who now commend, becauſe their own; what they but now diſpraiſed and ſlighted, whileſt it was anothers. Or whether he would intimate thereby, that we ſhould not regard bare words and ſhews, becauſe moſt men can, and will diſſemble for their own ends and advantage. Many ſuch things may be thought off; but we can not be very confident of any thing, more than what the bare letter doth offer.

V. 15. but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel] He is richer that can ſpeak wiſely, than he that hath much treaſure. See alſo upon Chap 18. 4. Wiſdom.

V. 16. Take his garment that is ſurety for a ſtranger] Chap. 27. 13. Truſt him not without a pawn, that cares not whom he be ſurety for. But this muſt not be preciſely underſtood according to the letter: (for ſo, it would be againſt the Law, Exod. 22. 26, 27.) but rather proverbially, importing no more, than if he ſaid, Truſt him not by no means: make no account of him, as of a ſober man, or of credit, &c. Of ſuretiſhip in general, ſee upon Chap. 6. 1. Surety for thy friend.

V. 17. Bread of deceit] Heb. bread of lying, or falſhood.

Bread of deceit is ſweet to a man] Chap 9 17.

his mouth ſhall be filled with gravel] Fabius Verrucoſus, an ancient Roman, was wont to call a kindneſſe unkindly done, that is, with harſhneſſe of language, and ſome ſhew of reluctancy, panem lapidoſum; that is, gravelly bread: (quem eſurienti accipere neceſſarium ſit; eſſe acerbum) which a hungry man muſt needs accept, but cannot eat without much diſpleaſure.

V. 18. Every purpoſe is eſtabliſhed by counſel] Chap. 15. 22. & 24. 6.

with good advice make war] Heb. advices: that is, by ſtore of good counſel. Luke 14. 31.

make war] That is, make not war; take heed of it, without good advice, and mature deliberation. So the words muſt be underſtood; not as a command, but as a warning; rather diſſwading from it, than incouraging to it.

V. 19. He that goeth about as a tale-bearer, revealeth ſecrets] Chap. 11. 13 See there, of the Original word. To which may be added, that ſome make the proper notion of it, to be, fraudulentia (in the abſtract;) and thence, fraudulentèr: which is an adverb: and both here and elſewhere, Qui ambulat fraudulentèr. Whatever it may do elſewhere, (which makes me to take notice of it) here certainly tale-bearer, will do much better. The meaning of this ſentence is well expreſſed by an ancient Poet: Percontatorem fugito, nam garrulus idem eſt; that is, in effect: Take heed of a man, that cunningly inſinuates himſelf, with queſtions and quæres, where he is not concerned: for ſuch a one, if not a traytor, is a pratler, and will do you miſchief with his tongue.

flattereth] Or, enticeth. The moſt literal ſignification of the Original (here alſo followed by ſome) ſeems to be, qui deceptus eſt: So Junius: ſimplex fatuus: ſo Buxtorfius. And ſo the ſenſe will be, meddle not with him that hath no command, no government of his tongue: which to manage well, as it is accounted great wiſdom; ſo, to have no power of it, muſt needs be great folly and ſimplicity; and of dangerous conſequence. Others again, qui dilatat: that is, who openeth wide: which is juſtifiable too. See Gen. 9. 27. God ſhall inlarge Japhet: and that is the more common uſe of the word in the Syriack tongue.

V. 20. Whoſo curſeth his father or his mother, &c.] Exod. 21. 17. Levit. 20. 9 Matth. 15. 4.

his lamp ſhall be put out] Or, candle. See upon Pſal. 132. 17. a lamp for mine anointed: and Chap. 24. 20. the candle of the wicked ſhall be put out.

in obſcure darkneſs] Pſal. 112. 4. Iſa. 58. 10. then ſhall thy light, &c. It doth much aggravate the caſe, then, to loſe the benefit of the light, when there is moſt want of it: as on the other ſide, we are moſt ſenſible of the benefit of it, when it affords it ſelf in time of extremity.

V. 21. An inheritance may be gotten haſtily] It hath been obſerved by them that never heard of Solomons name; and it is a great chance, but in the compaſſe of 20. or 30. years a man (if he take heed:) may meet with examples enough, to perſwade him, that it is ſo indeed. See alſo upon Ch. 21. 5. of every one that is haſty The reader may take notice, that the reading of the margin, not that of the Text, as in divers other places, is here expreſt. Yet a man with little labour, might make ſomewhat of that which is in the Text: but when all is done, it muſt be granted, that the Sacred Scripture (neither was there any promiſe paſt, that it ſhould:) hath not been altogether exempted from the fate of other books.

V. 22. Say not thou, I will recompenſe evil] Deut. 32. 35. Chap. 17. 13. & 24. 29 Rom 12. 17. 1 Theſſ. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9. See more upon Pſal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded, &c.

V. 23. Divers weights are an abomination unto the LORD] Verſe 10.

a falſe ballance] Heb. ballances of deceit.

V. 24. Mans goings are of the Lord] Pſ. 37. 23. Ch. 16. 9. Jer. 10. 23.

how can a man then underſtand his own way?] To underſtand his own way, in this place, ſeems to imply; to foreſee the event of things, in the courſe of ones life; what is expedient, and what not: and the like. It was taken in another ſenſe, Chap. 14. The wiſdom of the prudent is, to underſtand his way, &c. But ſome tranſlate here; yet doth not he underſtand his way; that is, as they expound it, Though Gods providence ſhew it ſelf towards every man in the courſe of his life, many wayes; yet who is it, that takes notice of it, as he ſhould? Or to that purpoſe. The Hebrew will bear this too: neither is there want of paralel places, to make this ſenſe plauſible. See upon Pſ. 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c.

V. 25. It is a ſnare to the man who devoureth that which is holy] That is, to apply it or take it to his own uſe, which was appointed to Gods; yea, to go about to do it, by enquiring how the vow might be made void. Oh, that the godly men (as they perſwade themſelves) of theſe times, would conſider of this in cold blood; and how wretchedly they expoſe their underſtandings to the Devils illuſions in all that they do; when they ſtudy evaſions againſt ſuch manifeſt light!

V. 26. A wiſe King ſcattereth the wicked] Pſal. 101. 5. &c. ver. 8.

and bringeth the wheel over them] Which was a kind of puniſhment then in uſe; and in many places is yet.

V. 27. The ſpirit of man is the candle of the Lord, ſearching all the inward parts of the belly] There be ſundry kinds of knowledge, (as Philoſophers are wont to diſtinguiſh) in man, though proceeding all from one ſingle and ſimple fountain: but of all knowledge, that which they call reflexam cognitionem, whereby man doth reflect upon himſelfe, and is able to reaſon concerning himſelf, both of his nature, and actions; whether natural, or moral; is the moſt admirable, and a great evidence of the ſouls immortality. It is called here the candle, or lamp of the Lord, becauſe of the divine origine of the ſoul, (whereof this is a principal faculty,) which is as it were a ſparkle of the Divine Nature; and becauſe of the office it hath, under God, as it were, in man; to ſee and overſee the whole man; to ſearch into the moſt inmoſt and ſecret thoughts and actions; to guide and govern: and in ſum, to be a light, both in matters of practice, and ſpeculation. If a man might ſuſpect, that ancient Heathens had any thing out of Solomon, I ſhould ſuſpect this as ſoon as any thing. They tell us, (the writings of the Stoicks and Platoniſts are full of it:) of a certain δαίμων, demon, or ſpirit, ſo they call it, ὃν ἑκάϛῳ παρεϛαλην ϗ ἡγεμόνα ὁ Θεὸς ἔδωκεν, ἀπόσπασμα ἑαυτοῦ: whom God (being part of himſelf,) hath given to every man, to be a guide and overſeer of his life; οὗτος δ' ἐϛὶν ὁ ἑκάϛου νοῦς ϗ λόγος: and this, ſay they, is every mans reaſon, and underſtanding.

ſearching all the inward parts of the belly] Mans ſoul can dive into thoſe things, which his eyes cannot. Belly, for heart; is ordinary in Scripture and ſo κοιλία too in Greek ſometimes.

V. 28. Mercy and truth preſerve the King] Pſal. 101. 1. Chap. 29. 14. See upon 14. 34. but ſin is a reproach.

V. 29. the beauty of old men is the gray head] Chap. 16. 31.

V. 30. The blewneſſe of a wound cleanſeth away evil; ſo, &c.] Others with more probability, tranſlate; The blewneſſe of a wound, is a medicine (or cleanſing) to an evil (man:) and ſtripes (that penetrate) to the inward of the belly. So that there is no ſimilitude in the words, but the ſame thing (as often in this Book) twice expreſſed. The ſum is, that ſome be of that nature, that without perpetual baſting, and ſtripes, they will not be good, or do their duty.

ſo do ſtripes the inward parts of the belly] Sharp puniſhments make wicked men to bewail their ſecret ſins, CHAP. XXI.

Verſe 1. THe kings heart is in the hand of the Lord] Though kings ſeem to have all things at command, and to do what they will; yet are not their very wills altogether of their own diſpoſing, no further than God is pleaſed to leave them to themſelves: who, if he ſee good, can over-rule their very thoughts and wills, that themſelves (againſt their own wills, in a manner) ſhall deſire and endeavour not what is moſt ſuitable to their own proper temper and diſpoſition; but what God will have. Neither are the hearts of Kings onely, in the hand of God; but (according to that of the Pſalmiſt, He faſhioneth their heart alike, &c. Pſal. 33. 15. and before, Chap. 16. 7. when a mans wayes pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him; and divers other places to the ſame purpoſe) of all men equally: but of Kings and Princes eminently, as they are more eminent; in whoſe wills alſo, by reaſon of their power and authority, more men are concerned.

the Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord] This hath been thought ſo wiſe and notable a ſaying, that ſome wiſe heathens of the later times have made uſe of it, by whom it is called Ἀσσυρίων λόγος: a ſpeech, or ſentence of the Aſſyrians.

as the rivers of water] As water is drawn in trenches this way or that way: or, as a boat in the water is eaſily turned this way or that way.

V. 2. Every way of a man is right in his own eyes] Chap. 16. 2. See there: and upon 15. 6. in the revenues.

V. 3. To do juſtice and judgement, is more acceptable, &c.] 1 Sam. 15. 22. Chap. 15. 8. Iſa. 1. 11. Hoſ. 6. 6. Mic. 6. 7, 8. Matth. 23 12.

V. 4. An high look] Heb. haughtineſſe of eyes.

An high look, and a proud heart, and, &c.] Chap. 6. 17. רחב־לב here, and Chap. 28. 25. tranſlated a proud heart: doth properly ſignifie largneſſe of heart, as it is rendred 1 King. 4 29. And God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding exceeding much, and largeneſſe of heart, (ורחב לב) even as the ſand that is on the ſea ſhore. It is not therefore alwayes uſed in one ſenſe. Some take it here, and Chap. 29. 25. for coveteouſneſſe: or for exceſſe of joy. But by the tenor of the words in the Original, (רום עינים ורחב־לב) which run with ſome kind of alluſion,) it is more probable, that external and internal; that is, all kind of pride is intended: and ſo Mercer, and moſt others underſtand it. There is more difficulty in the next word, נר רשעים by moſt, as here, tranſlated, aratio impiorum: which ſome refer to the former words, High looks, &c. the plowing; that is, ſay they, the practice and uſual carriage: the marks, or evidences of wicked men: or the field, as it were, wherein they daily exerciſe themſelves. Others, take it by it ſelf, and by it underſtand, the deep plots and projects: as חרש which properly ſignifies to plow, doth alſo ſignifie to plot, or invent. But the ſame word נר may alſo, (and is by divers,) be tranſlated the lamp, or light: (as it is in our margin;) by which ſome underſtand the cunning and worldly wiſdom: others, the goodly ſhews and outward appearance; that is in effect, the diſſimulation and hypocriſie. Others, the pomp, ſtatelineſſe, and worldly felicity: and upon it, their pride and inſolency. That which makes this ſenſe moſt probable, is, that in two other places of this book, (Chap.13.9. and Chap. 24. 20.) we find theſe two words ſo joyned; the lamp (נר the word here; though not altogether pointed here, as it uſeth to be in that ſenſe; which may be thought ſomewhat; but indeed not much conſiderable) of the wicked. Beſides the word נר ſingly uſed in divers places, of ſome worldly enjoyment and felicity, what ever it be. But oratio is the more received interpretation the plowing of the wicked] Or, the light of the wicked.

the plowing of the wicked, is ſin] A bad crop follows their plots, Job 4. 8. Or, is ſinne: that is, fore-runner of their deſtruction, which is the fruit and effect of ſin. For. When the wicked ſpring as the graſs, and all the waters of iniquitie do flouriſh, it is, that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever, Pſal. 92 7. and before deſtruction, the heart of man is haughtie; and before honour, is humilitie, Chap. 18. 12.

V. 5. The thoughts of the diligent tend onely to plenteouſneſs] They that do their buſineſs wiſely and carefully, ſhall thrive: they that do it raſhly, ſhall not proſper.

V. 6. The getting of treaſures by a lying tongue, is a vanity, &c.] Chap.10.2.& 13.11.

of every one that is haſty, onely I want.] Before, An inheritance may be gotten haſtily at the beginning, Chap.20. 21. Haſtily there then in reſpect to the time, chiefly: as if he had ſaid, in a little time: here haſty, that is, raſh, precipitate in his actions, and carriage of his buſineſſes. Neither is that the ſame word in the Hebrew in both places.

toſſed to and fro] Like duſt, or chaff, by the wind: not conſtant: or abiding, as wealth that is well gotten.

V. 7. The robbery of the wicked] Their ſpoyling and deſtroying of others, ſhall turn upon themſelves: it will be their own undoing, and deſtruction.

deſtroy them] Heb. ſaw them. A fit word to expreſs, the torments of an evil conſcience, Act.5.33. διεπρίοντο, they were cut to the heart: ad verbum; they were ſawen: or the grievouſneſs of their puniſhment: Hebr.11.37. ἐπρίσθησαν they were ſawn aſunder) or, dwell with them they ſhall have no reſt, no reſpite, (when their time, the time of vengeance and juſt judgement, is once come;) from their miſery.

becauſe they refuſe to do judgment] Unjuſt judges are robbers then, who poll others, to maintain their luſts.

V. 8. The way of man] The wicked: or, a man left to himſelf, Gen. 8.21.& Job 15. 14 Other, (and I think better) Perverſus via vir etiam alienus. Junius alſo to the ſame purpoſe: Quiſquis via ſua volabilis eſt, alienus eſt. That is, in effect; that a man of a perverſe converſation, cannot be religious.

V. 9. It is betetr to dwell in a corner of the houſe top than with, &c. Chap.19.13. & 25.24.& 27. 15.

a brawling woman] Heb. a woman of contentions: that is, a very contentious woman.

a wide houſe] Heb. an houſe of ſociety.

V. 10. The ſoule of the wicked deſireth evil] James 4.5. It may be Solomon by theſe words, aims at thoſe men, whom the Greek properly call ἐπιχαιρεκάκους; who rejoyce at calamities, Chap.17. 5. who are ſo far from relieving a poor neighbour in his need, that they rejoyce at his miſery.

findeth no favour] Heb. is not favoured.

V. 11. When the ſcorner is puniſhed the ſimple is made wiſe] Chap. 19 25.

V. 12. The righteous man wiſely conſidereth the houſe of the wicked] Obſerving Gods judgements on wicked mens families, he takes heed of their wicked wayes.

but] Or, how. See upon Pſalm 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not, &c.

V. 13 Whoſo ſtoppeth his eares at the cry of the poore he alſo,&c.] Matth. 18.30. Iſa. 58 7, 9.

he alſo ſhall cry himſelf but ſhall not be heard] He ſhall cry as loud to God, in vain as the poor did to him.

V. 14. A gift in ſecret pacifieth anger] Chap. 17. 8 and 18. 16. To do a pleaſure to an angry man, in ſecret, pacifieth him.

V. 16. The man that wandereth out of the way of underſtanding ſhall remain,&c.; Heb. ינוח] quieſcet, requieſcet; properly: that is, ſhall reſt; and is oppoſed (wherein the elegancy of the Sentence doth chiefly conſiſt) to his wandring in his life time. The Grecians alſo uſe to expreſs proverbially the life of a worldly minded man, by ῥέμβεσθαι, to wander: and ῥεμβὸς a wanderer. See alſo upon Chapter 5. laſt verſe, he ſhall go aſtray Shall remain, &c. that is, he ſhall one day have reſt enough in his grave, from whence he ſhall never riſe to life. See upon Pſalm 49 laſt verſe; is like the beaſts that periſh.

Chapter 21.verſe 16. ſhall remain in the congregation of the dead.] Somewhat to that purpoſe we had before, Chap.2.18. and Chap.9. 18. where we conceive רפאים the dead, (with moſt Interpreters) to be but a ſynonomon of שאול the grave, or hell, of which word (שאול) there hath enough been ſaid upon Chap. 5. verſe 5. and elſwhere. But the LXX.& that is, after them, the vulgar Latine: in cætu Gigantum) tranſlate it, ἐν συναγωγῇ γιγάντων: in the congregation (or company) of the Giants. And a very learned man, in a particular Diatriba, upon this very place, and text doth endeavour to prove that cætus gigantum in Scripture, is uſed for the place of the damned which we commonly call hell. He doth examine many places of Scripture, and doth make it very probable, as all things elſe, that he doth undertake; ſuch was his learning; and the ſtrength of his brain and ratiocination: but among all theſe places of Scripture, that he doth examine; I doe not obſerve that he doth take notice of thoſe places, that make moſt againſt him, where the ſame word or words are uſed: beſides what elſe might be objected. But I ſhall not enquire into it further at this time. It is enough that I give notice of it to my Reader, who may make uſe of it as he ſhall ſee cauſe. All I ſhall further ſay, is that I have read him (which may be ſome degree of ſatisfaction to ſome perchance) and am not yet convicted, that it is otherwiſe than as I have delivered it, concerning the word שאול in the Scripture.

V. 17. pleaſure] Or ſport.

that loveth wine and Oyl] Of Oyl, ſee upon Pſal. 104. 15. Oyl to make his face to ſhine.

V. 18. The wicked ſhall be a ranſome for the righteous] Chap. 11. 8. God ſhall cauſe that to fall on the wicked, which was intended againſt the juſt, by delivering the juſt, and putting the wicked in their places.

V. 19. It is better, &c.] verſ 9.

in the wilderneſſe] Heb. in the land of the deſert.

V 20 and oyl in the dwelling of the wiſe] Meaning abundance of all things. Some tranſlate pinguedinem, which the word doth alſo ſignifie. But it comes to one. Oyle, anciently was much uſed inwardly, and outwardly: and was not only a treaſure it ſelf; but a ſign of plenty of all other goods, where it was plentiful.

but a fooliſh man ſpendeth it up) His own treaſure, not the godly mans.

V. 21. followeth after righteouſneſſe and mercy findeth life, &c.] Chap, 15 9.

V. 22. A wiſe man ſcaleth the city of the mighty] Eccleſ. 9. 14. &c.

and caſteth down the ſtrength of the confidence thereof] Wiſedome overcometh ſtrength, and ſtratagems in war win ſtrong cities.

V. 23. Whoſo keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his ſoul from trouble: [Chap, 12.13. & 18 21. See alſo Pſal.34.12, 13.

his tongue, keepeth his ſoul from trouble] Which bring others into ſuch ſtraights, that like a man in a narrow room, they know not which way to turn themſelves.

V. 24. Proud and haugty ſcorner is his name, who dealeth in proud wrath.] A man, though oherwiſe of a good nature, and plauſible converſation, may be cholerick, and ſubject to anger: but he that gives way to his anger; that cannot moderate himſelf in ſuch a caſe, cannot avoid the doing and ſpeaking of ſuch things for which he ſhall be accounted proud, &c. he ſhall ſuffer in his reputation very much. The ſcorner is an abomination unto men, Chapter 24. 9.

in proud wrath] Heb in the wrath of pride.

V. 25. The deſire of the ſlothful killeth him] Becauſe he cannot attain deſired food, he vexeth himſelf to death; and yet he wil not work for it.

V. 26. but the righteous giveth, and ſpareth not] Pſalm 112. 9. Hath enough for himſelf, and to relieve others daily, while the ſlothful man pines.

V. 27. The ſacrifice of the wicked is abomination] Pſal. 50. 9. Chap. 15. 8. Iſa 65 3. Jer 6.20. Amos 5.22.

with a wicked mind?] Heb. in wickedneſſe. Either thinking to ſatisfie God thereby for his ſin. or that God will accept of it, notwithſtanding his ſin. Jer 7.9,10. Mic.6.6 7,8. Or it may be, doth offer (or pray:) that he may compaſſe ſomewhat that is wicked and unlawfull, himſelf doth not think ſo, perchance: but it is his wickedneſſe that doth blind him; elſe, he would judge more rightly. Some make a contrarie ſenſe of the words: etiam quando ſolerter illud offerunt, that is, yea though they offer with great art, or ſkill. There be wicked men in the world, that know how to do it; to ſet out their devotions to the beſt advantage, in the eyes of men, that they may be thought religious and holy: but God will not be mocked, though he wink for a time. Others again; yea though he offer with a good wil or mind; That too, is done ſomtimes There be that are liberal enough of their goods to the poor. or to pious uſes: but otherwiſe very vicious in ſeveral kinds. But they cannot honour God with their gifts, that diſhonour him in their converſation. All this variety proceeds from the Hebrew word זִמָּה which hath different ſignifications, and uſes. But none ſo probable here. as the firſt, wickedneſſe, or, a wicked mind:) nor ſo generally received.

V, 28. A falſe witneſſe] Heb. a witneſſe of lyes.

A falſe witneſſe ſhall periſh] Chap 19.5,9.

but the man that heareth ſpeaketh conſtanly] The true witneſs: that ſpeaks no more than he heareth himſelf, ſhall be left alive to bear witneſs again, when God hath deſtroyed falſe witneſſes, and ſhall be heard with credit.

V. 29. directeth] Heb. יכין: but ſome Copies have it יבין (with a Beth) which ſignifieth he conſidereth: which ſeems to be more proper. It is the propriety of an ingenuous modeſt man, and one that makes a conſcience of his wayes, (oppoſed here to him that is hardened) to pauſe and conſider.

V. 30. There is no wiſedome, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord] Jer. 9.23.

V. 31. The horſe is prepared againſt the day of battel] Pſalm 33. 17.

ſafety] Or, victory.

but ſafety is of the Lord] Pſalm 3. 8. There was no truſting in humane policy, verſ. 30. nor ſtrength, verſ. 31. Iſay 30. 1. & 31. 1. See upon Pſalm 33 16. There is no king ſaved by, &c.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſ. 1. A Good name is rather to be choſen than great riches] Eccleſ. 7. 1. Credit and friendſhip is better than riches.

loving favour rather than, &c.] Or, favour is better than, &c.

V. 2. The rich and the poor meet together] Chap. 29. 13. Rich and poor muſt love one another, becauſe they live together, have need one of another, lie together in the earth, and have the ſame Maker: for God made the rich to help the poor, and the poor to prove the rich, Deut. 15. 11. Matth. 26. 11.

The Lord is the maker of them all] See upon Chap. 14. 31. his Maker.

V. 3. A prudent man foreſeeth the evil, &c.] Chap. 14. 16. (See there:) and 27. 12. The evil of puniſhment, and withdraweth himſelf; but fools run deſperately into danger.

V. 4. By humility, &c.] Or, the reward of humility, &c.

By humility and the fear of the Lord, are riches, and honour, and life] Pſalm 112. 3.

V. 5. Thorns and ſnares are in the way of the froward] Ch. 15. 19. See there.

V. 6. Train up] Or, catechize.

in the way he ſhould go] Heb. in his way. Bring him up vertuouſly, and he ſhall ſo continue. Quo ſemel eſt imbuta recens, &c. It is a common obſervation: yet it faileth ſometimes, which is the caſe of moſt of theſe moral obſervations; as hath already been obſerved, more than once.

V. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor] Eſpecially, if he lend him money; as follows in this verſe.

and the borrower is a ſervant] Greek, δανειζόμενος, &c. in many reſpects a debtor; (if a debtor in neceſſitie) becomes a ſervant, (if not a ſlave) to his creditour. It needs no further illuſtration, than common experience: eſpecially when the creditor himſelf (as ordinarily ſeen) is a ſlave unto Mammon, and ſaith (as Job intended it; that is, by his actions;) unto his gold: Thou art my confidence. But in another reſpect alſo (beſides which is ordinary;) Rabbi, Maimon, in his Halachoth (which is a ſubdiviſion of the Books of his Jad, divided into fourteen Books, and every Book ſubdivided into halach. and every halach. into Chapters) Sanhedr. cap. 6. would have the words of Solomon verified: becauſe ſaith he, it was in the power of the creditour to draw, or to compel (if he ſaw occaſion) his creditour unto the Synedrium or judgement of the LXXII. Judges, the power whereof ſee more in learned Maſter Selden, his III. de Synedr. cap. 11. p. 38.

to the lender] Heb. to the man that lendeth.

V. 8. He that ſoweth iniquity, ſhall reap vanity] Chap. 21. 4. Job 4. 8. Hoſ. 10. 13.

and the rod of his anger ſhall fail] Or, and with the rod of his anger he ſhall be conſumed. His wealth and authority, whereby he oppreſſed others, ſhall be taken from him. Eſay 14. 56. See alſo upon ch. 21 4. The plowing of the wicked.

V. 9. He that hath a bountiful eye] Heb. good of eye.

He that hath a bountiful eye ſhal be bleſſed] 2 Cor. 9. 6.

V. 10. Caſt out the ſcorner, and contention ſhall go out] Pſal. 101. 5.

V. 11. for the grace of his lips] Or, and hath grace in his lips. Some with no leſs probabilitie. He that continues pure of heart, his lips ſhall be grace, (or very gracious:) and the King ſhall be his friend: according to which, 2 fruits are here propoſed of an upright converſation, and ſimplicity of heart: acceptable vein of words, and with it, (as very conſequent:) the Kings favour. This ſeemeth to be the plainer of the two.

the King ſhall be his friend] Good Princes uſe their familiarity, whoſe conſcience is good, and their talk wiſe and godly. Righteous lips, are the delight of Kings, &c Chap. 16. 13. See there.

V. 12. The eyes of the Lord preſerve knowledge] Favour them that love knowledge.

the words] Or, the matters.

V. 13. The ſlothful man ſaith, There is a Lyon without] Chap. 26. 13. See there.

There is a Lyon without] He derideth them that invent vain excuſes, becauſe they would not do their dutie Ch. 15. 19.

V. 14. The mouth of ſtrange women is a deep pit] Ch. 2. 16. 5. 3. and 7. 5. and 23. 27. See upon chap. 5 15. Drink waters out of thine own ciſtern, &c.

he that is abhorred of the Lord, ſhall fall therein] So God puniſheth one ſin by another, when he ſuffereth the wicked to fall into the acquaintance of an harlot, Eccleſ. 7. 26.

V. 15. Fooliſhneſs is bound in the heart of a child] He is naturally given to it, and can hardly be parted from it, Job 11. 12. Hence σύνδεσμος ἀδικίας, the bond of iniquitie, Acts 8. 23.

the rod of correction ſhall drive it far from him] Chap. 13. 24. & 19. 18 & 23. 13. & 29 15. 17.

V. 16. and he that giveth to the rich, ſhall ſurely come to want.] To encreaſe his riches, as before. But moſt Interpreters underſtand the word, as ſpoken of one man. He that oppreſſeth the poor, and to that end bribes the rich, that he may do it ſecurely, or to redeem himſelf, if he be called in queſtion; a thing among worldly men, that have no conſcience, ordinarily practiſed: he that doth ſo, ſhall not thrive long by it; except it be for his further confuſion and condemnation in another world: to which other world, moſt of theſe ſentences concerning temporal rewards and judgements have reference. See before. Ch. 2. 7. He layeth up ſound wiſedome, &c. and upon Pſalm 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf, &c. Or, He that giveth to the rich; having met with his match at laſt, one more powerful than himſelf, who ſtrips him of all that he hath unjuſtly got from others whom he could maſter: as the greater fiſhes eat the leſs. So worldly men devour one another oftentimes, and through their unjuſt covetouſneſs, become executioners of Gods juſt judgements. Here Mercerus makes the Monoſtick Sentences (that is, thoſe that conſiſt every one of one ſingle verſe,) to the end in this ſentence. After this verſe indeed we may obſerve ſome alteration of ſtyle and method. Yet there be many Monoſtick Sentences in the following Chapters too; eſpecially, from Chapter 25. where Solomons name is again prefixed; to Chapter 30. where the words of Agur begin.

V. 18. if thou keep them within thee, they ſhall withal be fited in thy lips] For, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, Mat. 12. 24. and (as once before already;) Bene dicendi, ſapere principium & fons: as both Orators and Philoſophers teach. Others make it a double precept: If thou keep them within thee; and canſt make uſe of them skilfully, upon occaſion, with thy lips, &c.

within thee] Heb. in thy belly.

they ſhall be fitted] Or, prepared. See upon Ch. 15. 28. The heart of the righteous.

V. 19. That thy truſt may be in the Lord] He ſheweth what the end of inſtruction is; to wit, To direct us to truſt in the Lord.

even to thee, Or, truſt thou alſo.

V. 20. excellent things in counſels and knowledge] Hebrew, שלושים, that is, ducalia, or principalia, properly. See before upon Chap. 1. 1. Others, retain the more Original ſignification of the word and turn, terna or triplicia: (ſome, ter, or, tripliciter,) which is variouſly expounded by them. Some thinke that he alludeth to that threefold diviſion of the Old Teſtament among the Hebrewes: The Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, as they call them. Others, to the threefold diviſion of Wiſedome, Moral, Natural, and Theological: by them called, מושלים, בראשית, and מרכבה. Others, that he intends his three Books, to wit, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and Canticles. Many other ſuch conjectures there be; but ſo weakly grounded all, that we ſtick to the firſt Interpretation: much confirmed by Chap. 8. 6. where there is a word equivalent to this. See as before upon Chapter 1. 1.

V. 21. to them that ſend unto thee] Or, to thoſe that ſend thee. That ſend unto thee; to be reſolved in doubtful caſes, or hard queſtions. That ſend thee; that is, whoſe inſtruction is committed unto thee; or thoſe, to whom thou art ſent. To ſend, is a proper word; in this Argument: the word Apoſtle, comes from it.

V. 22. Rob not the poor] Oppreſs not the poor by might, nor by falſe judgements.

neither oppreſſe the afflicted in the gate] Zech. 7 10. See alſo upon Pſalm. 127. laſt verſe.

V. 23. For the Lord will plead their cauſe] Job 31. 21. Capter 23. 11.

V. 24. Make no friendſhip with an angry man] Chuſe not him for thy friend that is not able to rule his affections; for he would hurt thee by his evill converſation: and if he be very angry by Nature, (Heb. a man of wraths) come not in his company at all.

thou ſhalt not go] Of the danger of evil company; See upon Pſalm 26 4. I have not ſat; and upon Chap. 4. 16. unleſs they cauſe ſome to fall.

V. 26. Be not thou one of them that ſtrike hands] Chapter 6. 1. 11. 15. Which raſhly put themſelves in danger, by ſuretiſhip for others.

V. 28. Remove not the ancient land-mark] Deut. 19 14. & 27. 17. Chap. 23. 10.

land-mark] Or, bound.

V. 29. he ſhall not ſtand before mean men] Men that live as it were in the dark, and obſerved but by few; whereas Princes are the light, and all mens eyes are upon them.

mean men] Or, obſcure men.

CHAP XXIII.

Verſ. 1. C*Onſider diligently what is before thee*] Eat with ſobriety and diſcretion, what] Or, who.

V. 2. And put] Or, elſe thou putteſt.

And put a knife to thy throat] Bridle thine appetite, as it were, by force and violence. Or, whatſoever thou ſaiſt or doſt, be as careful, and circumſpect, as if a ſharp knife were ſet againſt thy th oat. Every man knoweth when he is under the barbours hand, and the raſor is about the throat, it concerns him to be careful how to behave himſelf: Or, if with ſome others we tranſlate, Impones cultellum gutturi tuo; that is, Thou doſt as good as put a knife to thy throat, if, &c the ſenſe will be, Thou mayeſt endanger thy life, if thou give way to thy greedy appetite.

if thou be a man given to appetite] Heb. אם בעל נפש Si dominus animæ; that is, If thou be maſter of a ſoul. If we ſupply appetite, the meaning will be, as it is here expreſſed, if thou be a man, &c. But ſome ſupply, rationall or intellective: and then the meaning will be, If thou be wiſe. But with Mercer, I rather incline to the firſt

V. 3. for they are deceitfull meat] For oftentime, the rich, when they bid their inferiours to their tables, it is not for any love they bear to them, but for their own ſecret purpoſes. A court complement.

deceitfull meat] Heb. meat of deceitfullneſſes, that is, moſt deceitful meat.

V. 4. Labour not to be rich] 1 Tim 6.9, 10. Weary not thy ſelf to get riches, nor take more pains than thy ſtrength can bear.

ceaſe from thine own wiſedom] Chap 3.5. and leave not. Men that are covetous, and have the art to gather wealth, think themſelves the onely wiſe men of the world. All other wiſedom that tends not to that end, they deſpiſe, Luk. 16. 14. But the Phariſees, &c.

V. 5. Wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon] Heb. Wilt thou cauſe thine eyes to flee upon.

upon that which is not ? for riches certainly &c.] See before upon ch. 2. 7. He layeth up ſound wiſdom. &c. and upon c. 8. 18 durable riches

V. 6 of him that hath an evil eye] That is, of a covetous man, who looks ſowrely on his gueſts; as on the contrary, a man of a good eye, is a liberal man, ch. 22. 9. for he looks chearfully on his gueſts.

V. 7. For as he thinketh in his heart, ſo is he] He is to be eſteemed according to his heart, not according to his words, now he thinks ill towards thee, though he ſpeak kindly to thee.

V. 8. ſhalt thou vomit up] He will do thee ſome miſchief for his good chear.

and loſe thy ſweet words] Which he hath ſpoken to thee; or thy chearful words at his table. Or, thus many ſtudied complements, wherein vain men pleaſe themſelves very much, and think to pleaſe others.

V. 10. Remove not the old land mark] Deut. 19. 14. & 27. 17. Chap. 22. 28.

land-mark] Or, bound.

enter not into the fields of the fatherleſs] To take away their corn, or do them harm.

V. 11. For their Redeemer is mighty] Job 31. 21. Chap. 22. 23.

V. 13. With-hold not correction from the child] Chap. 13. 14. and 19. 18. & 22. 15.

for if thou beateſt him with the rod, he ſhall not die] The rod uſed with reaſon, will not kill him; and it may ſave him from eternal death; or from death: which he may incur by Law, if he continue in his wickedneſs. So before Chap. 19. 18. let not thy ſoul ſpare, to cauſe him to die; that is, let not thy indulgence be the cauſe of his death.

V. 14 and ſhalt deliver his ſoul from hell] From deſtruction both of body and ſoul. But of hell, how commonly taken in thoſe dayes; See chap. 5. 5. Take hold on hell: and Chap. 9. 18. in the depth of hell: and elſewhere.

V. 15. my heart ſhall rejoyce] Chap. 10. 1. See there out of Plutarch.

even mine] Or, even I will rejoyce.

V. 17. Let not thine heart envie ſinners] Pſal. 37. 1. & 73. 3 Chap. 3. 31. & 31. & 24. 1.

fear of the Lord all the day long] Chap. 28 14.

V. 18. For ſurely there is an end] Ch. 24. 14. The proſperity of the wicked ſhall not continue long: or there is a reward for thy pietie in the end, Pſal. 37. 37, 38, & 58 11. See alſo before upon Ch. 10. 28. The hope of the righteous —— but the expectation, &c. and upon Ch 19. 20. that thou mayeſt be wiſe in thy later end.

end] Or, reward.

V. 19. guide thine heart in the way] In the obſervation of Gods Commandments: or in all thy courſes.

V. 20 Be not amongſt wine-bibbers] Rom. 13. 13. Eph. 5. 8.

of fleſh] Heb. of their fleſh. Or rather, of fleſh to themſelves: which to themſelves, according to the Hebrew idiotiſme, doth redundare, or abound: and it is accounted an elegancy in the Greek and Latine; when the Pronoun doth ſo. Of their fleſh, therefore would be but an improper tranſlation.

V. 22. Hearken unto thy father that begat thee, &c.] Ch. 1. 8.

V. 23. Buy the truth and ſell it not] Spare no coſt for truths ſake, neither depart from it for any gain: be a Merchant in buying it, but ſell it not again for any pretended or promiſed gain, as they do their beſt wares.

V. 24. The father of the righteous ſhall greatly rejoyce] Ch. 10. 1 and 15. 20. See upon v. 15.

V. 26 Give me thine heart] Give thy ſelfe wholly to wiſedome, and to walk cheerfully in the wayes that I preſcribe unto thee.

V. 27. For an whore is a deep ditch] Chap. 22. 14. See upon ch. 5. 15. Drink waters, &c.

a ſtrange woman is a narrow pit] So that a man cannot get out again.

V. 28. She alſo lieth in wait as for a prey] Ch. 7. 12.

as for a prey] Or, as a robber.

and encreaſeth the tranſgreſſours among men] She ſeduceth many, and cauſeth them to offend God.

Who hath woe, who hath ſorrow: Some conceive theſe words אוי and אבוי To have the original acclamations in the Bacchica ſacra; expreſſed by the Grecians, by ἐυοῖ, and σαβοῖ; or at leaſt to have given occaſion unto them: very plauſible I confeſs at firſt hearing. But when we ſhall conſider that theſe (the Greeks:) were acclamations of great joy; theſe, (the Hebrew:) words of ſorrow and lamentation; I doubt whether it will hold ſo plauſible.

V. 29. Who hath woe ?] Iſai 5. 11.

V. 30. mixt wine] Pſal. 75. 8. Ch. 9. 2.

V. 31. When it moveth it ſelf aright] Heb. when it goeth up and down in uprightneſſes: that is, when it ſparkleth, as the moſt generous wine uſeth to do.

V. 32. an Adder] Or, a Cockatrice.

V. 33. Thine eyes ſhall behold ſtrange women] That is, drunkenneſs ſhall bring thee to whoredom: or, make thee ſee ſtrange ſights, by diſturbing thy brain. Hebr. זָרוֹת, may be tranſlated (and is ſo by Mercerus, and others) ſtrange things, as well as ſtrange women. Strange things, ſay they; which hath reference to that which follows, ver. 34. Yea, thou ſhalt be as he that lieth down, &c. See there.

women] Or, things.

V 34. in the midſt of the ſea] Heb. in the heart of the ſea, Ezek. 27 4. Jonah 2. 3. In ſuch great danger ſhalt thou be: or, roll up and down as ſhips upon the ſea, Pſal. 107. 26, 27. Or, as ſome would have it, with reference to ſome former words; Thou ſhalt fancy ſtrange things, and think thy ſelf to be in the midſt of the Sea, &c. And there is an old ſtory to that purpoſe, mentioned by divers Ancients, of ſome that were drunk in a room, and fancying themſelves to be in a boat, in a great tempeſt, threw out of the windowes what ſo ever was in the roome, to ſave themſelves. But ſince the Pſalmiſt compares them that are toſſed in a Tempeſt, to drunken men, Pſalm 107. 27. I ſhould think it more likely, that drunkards are here compared to them that are toſſed in a ſhip, by Solomon.

V. 35. and I was not ſick] Drunkenneſs makes men ſenſeleſs, ſo that they feel no blows.

I felt it not] Heb. I knew it not.

when I ſhall awake, I will ſeek it yet again] By theſe words Solomon doth moſt emphatically ſet out the conditions and miſerie likewiſe, of practiſed drunkards: who though many times they find the inconvenience of drunkenneſs, and are ſo ſenſible of it, for a while, that they purpoſe with themſelves to leave it: yet their reſolution commonly doth not hold: they are no ſooner out of the ſmart of their exceſs, but they begin to long again after their beloved trade and company. So Horace the Poet, having repreſented one Alphius, an old uſurer, highly extolling and admiring the happineſs of a quiet countrey life, after a long diſcourſe to that end, by which he doth moſt ſweetly ſet out the ſeveral pleaſures of it, according to the ſeveral ſeaſons of the year: in the end he concludes, Hæc ubi locutus fœnerator Alphius, Jamjam futurus ruſticus; Omnem relegit Idibus pecuniam: Quærit Kalendis ponere. Aſſoon as he had done ſpeaking, (ſaith he) as one fully reſolved, with all poſſible ſpeed, to turn countrey man; he did earneſtly beſtir himſelf to get in all his money: but no ſooner had he got it in, but his minde was changed, and he was as much, or more troubled, with all poſſible ſpeed how to put it out again. It is alſo partly from a natural cauſe; becauſe drunkenneſs they ſay, will make a man very thirſtie: whence came the Proverb, to adde drunkenneſs to thirſt, Deut 29. 19. of obſtinate perſeverance in any evil thing. See alſo Eſay 56. 12. The words will bear an other Interpretation; or Expoſition rather, keeping the ſame Tranſlation. But I ſhall onely propoſe it, becauſe I have not met with it elſewhere. When I awake, were words in thoſe dayes among the Hebrewes Proverbially uſed, of things that could not be underſtood, though carefully ſought into, and conſidered of. Of which, he upon Pſalm 139. 18. when I awake, I am ſtill with thee. See Vatablus his Notes there. See alſo Mark 4. 27. ſhould ſleep, &c. and grow up, he knoweth not how. And would not this be very proper to that which goeth before, of the ſtrange effects of wine: To make this ſtupified ecſtaticall man conclude with it: That his underſtanding is loſt in the conſideration of thoſe ſtrange things that have happened unto him in his exceſs of wine: That he muſt reſt in aſtoniſhment, and paſſe the reſt in ſilence. The words for ought I know, are as proper to this ſenſe, as to the former. However, I diſlike not the form, not command this to be received, but onely to be conſidered of.

CHAP XXIV.

Verſ. 1. ENvious againſt evil men] Pſal. 37. 1, &c. and 73. 3, &c. See there, Chap. 23. 17. verſ 19.

V. 2 For their heart ſtudieth deſtruction] Though to others immediately, yet to themſelves alſo in effect; yea, worſe to themſelves, than they can bring upon others. See upon Chap. 16. 26. craveth it of him. The ſecond interpretation, and Heſiod's words there; of miſchief intended to others. See upon chap. 4. 16. unleſs, they cauſe ſome to fall.

V. 3. Through wiſedome is an houſe builded] The building of a houſe, is a thing that requireth good deliberation and judgement; for want of which, many by ſuch attempts have been ruined, Luk. 14.28. For which of you intending to build a houſe, &c. But by a houſe here, with beſt Expoſitors may alſo be underſtood, whatſoever doth properly belong to a houſe; and houſe keeping, as competent wealth a good wife &c.

V. 4. And by knowledge ſhall the chambers be filled] חדרים which ſome tranſlate interiora, or, conclavia: that is, ſecret places, that are for ſtore and proviſion; as Granaries, Barns, &c. though outwardly, (and therefore called out houſes:) ſeated.

V. 5. A wiſe man is ſtrong] His wiſedome is to him in ſtead of ſtrength, and he can do that by wiſedome, which cannot be done by ſtrength, Chap. 21.22. Eccl. 9.16.

is ſtrong] Heb. is in ſtrength.

encreaſeth ſtrength] ſtrengthneth might.

V. 6. For by wiſe counſel thou ſhalt make thy war] Chap. 20. 18. See there: and 11. 14. and 15. 22.

V. 7. Wiſedome is too high for a fool] Heb. wiſdoms: that is, the moſt excellent wiſdom, as Chap. 9.1.

too high for a fool] Ch. 14.16. A ſcorner ſeeketh wiſdom, and findeth it not: whereby it appears, that a fool, and a ſcorn, are put for the ſame in this book: as a fool, and a wicked man; as hath been ſhewed, and why.

too high] There is an Aleph in the word more than ſhould be: which makes ſome Expoſitors to interpret it, coral; as Job 28. 18. and Ezek. 27. 16. But there be many examples of ſuch ſuperfluous ſupernumerary letters: and the ſenſe however will come to one.

he openeth not his mouth in the gate] In place of judicature, where wiſedome ſhould be ſhewed: Ruth 4.1 See Chap. 8. verſ. 3.

V. 8. ſhall be called a miſchievous perſon] Heb. a maſter of miſchievous devices: that is a moſt miſchievous perſon. Let him plot never ſo, cunningly, and ſecretly, in hope to keep his reputation among men (which is the endeavour of moſt wicked men); yet he ſhall be known, and men will ſpeak of him, if not to his face, (becauſe of his power) yet among themſelves and behinde his back.

V. 9. The thought of fooliſhneſs is ſinne] Taking fooliſhneſs, for wickedneſs, (as uſually.) The meaning will be, that the very thought of wickedneſs though it proceed no further than bare thought, is ſinne. Nam ſcelus intra ſe tacitus qui cogitat ullum, facti crimen habet, and divers heathens have ſaid the ſame. Or, if we take thought here for deed, (as is ordinary:) then the meaning may be that every wickedneſs is a ſinne; that is, hated by God, and liable to his wrath. For ſo is ſinne taken ſometimes; whereof we have had examples formerly. And to this ſenſe, the oppoſite member will anſwer very appoſitly: ſo that the meaning of the whole verſe will be, that wickedneſs is abominable both to God and man, or (which comes to one) that wicked men expoſe themſelves to the hatred both of God and man

V. 10. If thou faint in the day of adverſity] Man hath no trial of his ſtrength, till he be in trouble: faintneſs then diſcovers weakneſs. Some, (ſo Mercerus for one) joyn the words thus: If thou beeſt remiſs, (to wit, in time of proſperie; that thou doe not then by applying thine heart unto wiſdom, provide againſt adverſity) thy ſtrength will be but ſmal in time of adverſity. The ſenſe is good both wayes; and the writings of ancient Philoſophers are full of admonitions and inſtructions to that purpoſe. But there be alſo, who make this verſe to cohere with the next; If thou beeſt ſlack, or remiſs, towards others, to their relief in their need) when thou thy ſelf ſhalt be in diſtreſs thou ſhalt find thy ſtrength but ſmall. For who ſo ſtoppeth his ear at the cry of the poor, &c. Chapter 21. 13. See there.

ſmall] Heb. narrow.

V. 11. If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death] Pſalm 82.4. Eſay 58. 6. 7. See alſo upon Pſalm 70. Thoſe that are appointed to die.

V. 12. doth not he that pondereth the heart conſider it?] None can be excuſed, if he help not the innocent when he is in danger, having ability and opportunity ſo to doe, Chapter 31. 8. 9. for God obſerveth his neglect, to puniſh him. See Job 7. 20. Jer. 17 9. 10.

keepeth] Or obſerveth.

according to his works?] Job 34.11. Pſal. 62. 12. Ier. 32. 19. Rom. 2.6. Rev 22.12.

V. 13. eat thou honey] This muſt not be taken as a command, but as a ſimilitude, onely grounded upon common practiſe; as if he ſaid; as honey is ſweet and pleaſant to the taſte of moſt men; ſo, &c. as followeth in the next verſe. Compariſons taken from the ſweetneſs of honey, are very frequent in all authors.

to thy taſte] Or, upon thy palate.

V. 14. So ſhall the knowledge of wiſdom be unto thy ſoul] Pſal. 19. 10. and 119. 103.

then there ſhall be a reward] Chap. 22.18. See there, and upon Chap. 2.7. He layeth up ſound wiſedom, &c.

V. 16. For a juſt] Or, For though a juſt.

and riſeth] Or, yet he riſeth.

V. 16. For a juſt man falleth ſeven times] Theſe words have been underſtood by many both Papiſts and Proteſtants, of falling into ſin, or by ſin; (which we may call a ſpiritual fall:) according to that of the Apoſtle, Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall, 1 Cor. 10. 12. and accordingly applications, have been made in diſpute of the words by many; but by as many or more ſince of all ſides ſo oppoſed, that it is in ſome manner forſaken. Cave de peccatis hæc accipias, ſaith Mr. Grotius here. The objections againſt it, are: Firſt that the original word נפל to fall, is not taken ſo, in this whole book; ſome ſay not in the whole Scripture, (writen in Hebrew:) but of temporal loſſes and calamities onely. Secondly, that that ſence doth not agree with the context; either antecedent, or following: which indeed (as I apprehend it) is the moſt materiall objection: which makes me to forbear the further examination of the former. See alſo the next obſervation.

falleth ſeven times] That is, often; as is ordinary in Scripture. So that it may very well be thought, that Solomon by theſe words intended the ſame as David, where he ſaith, Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all, Pſal. 34. 20. and by Job (a great confirmation of that interpretation commended unto us by later Expoſitors,) ſpeaking of the righteous: He ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, yea in ſeven, (which is as much as if he had ſaid ſeven onely: as appeareth by Proverbs, Ch 30.15. 18.21. compared with verſe 24.) there ſhall no evil touch thee. Touch thee; that is, (as I underſtand it) take ſuch hold of thee, that thou ſhalt not be delivered. And this word ſeven times here; puts me in mind of Luke 17. 4. And if he (thy brother,) treſpaſs againſt thee ſeven times in a day, and ſeven times in a day turn again unto thee, &c. It is likely that theſe words might induce ſome to underſtand Solomons words of ſpiritual falling, the rather; which we have the more reaſon to believe, becauſe it is very probably conceived by ſome, that from them, thoſe words in a day were intruded into ſome Copies of the Latine vulgar, in this place, which are not in the original, nor in any other Tranſlation that I know of.

and riſeth up again] Though thou bring him down often by thy wicked devices, yet God will raiſe him up again ſtill, but thou ſhalt fall for good and all.

For a juſt man falleth ſeven times, and riſeth up again, &c.] Job 5. 19. Pſal. 34. 19. and 37. 24.

V. 17. Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth] Job 31. 29. Pſal. 35. 15. ch. 17.5. See upon Pſal. 35.4. Let them be confounded, &c. concerning theſe very words. But divers other places of Scripture may be objected againſt this precept or counſel: as for example, Pſal. 58.10. The righteous ſhall rejoyce, when he ſeeth the vengeance: &c. and many other like. To this we anſwer, that there be private enemies, upon private quarrels and differences: and publick enemies in a publick cauſe, whether of State or Religion or both Upon the falling of a publick enemy, there is no queſtion but we may rejoyce; nay, muſt, in ſome meaſure, in thankfulneſs to God that hath delivered us: it is no ſmall part of that thankfulneſs, which he doth expect at our hands. But yet even then, our joy ſhould rather be in reference to Gods glory, (often not a little intereſted in our deliverance) and the publick good; than out of any pleaſure we take at the miſeries of others, who though our enemies, muſt ſtill be remembred as Gods creatures, of the ſame fleſh and blood, as we; deſcended of the ſame firſt-father Adam, and in that reſpect, (even whileſt we rejoyce at their overthrow, becauſe of the conſequence) an object of compaſſion, in their particular perſons. As for particular enemies, though we muſt be thankful to God for them too, if they were our enemies without cauſe, and ſuch as might do us hurt: yet our joy muſt be very moderate and wary; and if we have any generoſity at all, their fall will make us to forget our wrongs, (if they have done us any) and rather diſpoſe us to help them in their miſery, than (as it doth ſome baſe natures) provoke revenge.

V. 18. it diſpleaſe him] Heb. it be evill in his eyes.

and he turn away his wrath from him] To be avenged on thee. Some conceive that upon thee, is ſufficiently included in the original מעליו which is not without ſome reaſon: and therefore as I conceive ought to have been ſupplied in the very context, from him upon thee; there being many ſuch ſupplements in tranſlations, upon leſs ground of words, and leſs need as to the ſenſe For without this ſupplement, the words may ſeem to allow, though not outward rejoycing, and exaltation, yet inward contentment of mind for the ſufferings of our enemies: and a deſire (which is moſt uncharitable) of their continuation.

V. 19. Fret not thy ſelfe becauſe of evill men] Pſal. 37.1. Ch. 23. 17. Or, keep not company with the wicked.

V. 20. For there ſhall be no reward to the evil man] No good reward: for reward: in Hebrew it is end, becauſe the reward is not given till the work be ended, and the general reward will be in the end of the world.

the candle of the wicked ſhall be put out] Iob 21.17. Chap. 13. 9.

See upon Chap.21.4. the plowing of the wicked.

candle] Or, lamp.

V. 21. My ſon, fear thou the Lord, and the king] Firſt, the Lord, and then the king: ſo that if kin s command that which God hath ſorbidden, God muſt be obeyed before men, though kings.

meddle not with] Or, mix not thy ſelf with.

them that are given to change] Heb. changers. Cum rebellibus & ſeditioſis; as Mercer here; with rebels, and ſeditious Perſons; whoſe proper work hath alweyes been, rebus novis ſtudere, (as the common Latine phraſe expreſſeth it) to endeavour changes and alterations in a common wealth, the benefit whereof they reap.

V.22. For their calamity ſhall riſe ſuddenly] Though ſometimes put off for a long time; yet when it comes, it uſually comes very ſuddainly.

who knoweth the ruine of them both?] Of them that fear not God, and of them that fear not the king: or proceeding both from God and the king. There may be alſo ſome alluſion in the original words between שונים and שניהם which although it adde nothing to the ſenſe; yet it makes the words to run more ſweetly in their natural channel.

V. 23. Theſe things alſo belong to the wiſe] Some would have here a new diviſion, and make an inſcription of theſe words: Theſe alſo are [ſayings, or ſentences] of ſome that have been wiſe: or to that effect. By this, Solomons Proverbs ſhould end here. But how can that be, when the very next Chapter doth begin with a new inſcription bearing Solomons name? Except they would diſtinguiſh of Proverbs, which Solomon himſelf left, compiled into a book: and thoſe, being his alſo, which were gathered after his death. But there is no need, the words may tend unto this, to make that which followeth the more conſiderable, as indeed nothing can be more, than what belongeth to the adminiſtration of juſtice.

It is not good to have reſpect of perſons in judgment] Levit. 19. 15. Deut.1.77.& 16.19.Chap.18. 5. & 28.21.Joh.7.24.

V. 24. He that ſaith unto the wicked. Thou art righteous, him ſhall the people curſe] Chap.17.15.Iſaiah.5.23.

V.25. a good bleſſing] Heb. a bleſſing of good.

V.26. Every man ſhall kiſſe his lips that giveth a right anſwer] Or, he that giveth a right anſwer, kiſſeth the lips: that is, ſhews himſelf a friend. See upon Chapter 7. 13. and kiſſed him.

that giveth a right anſwer] Hebrew, that anſwereth right words.

V. 27. and afterwards build thine houſe] Be ſure of the meanes how to compaſſe it, before thou take any enterpriſe in hand, Luke 14. 28, &c.

thy work] We may underſtand of the materials of a houſe, as ſtone: timber, &c. which if provided in time, and ready, before work men be entertained; will ſave both money, and trouble, not a little. Others, by thy work without, underſtand matters of huſbandry; which ſhould indeed, (as the moſt neceſſary of the two) be well provided for, and ſetled; before we think of building of houſes.

V. 28. againſt thy neighbour without cauſe] Heb. חנם, that is, for nothing; or without a cauſe. The ſenſe may be; Do not offer thy ſelf, and ſhew thy ſelf forward; rather avoid it, if thou canſt. Or, without cauſe; that is, where there is no juſt ground; againſt thine own conſcience: that is, in effect; be not a falſe witneſſe: and ſo is the word here tranſlated by ſome of the beſt Interpreters.

and deceive not with thy lips] Or rather, (with Mercer, and other) and intice not with thy lips: that is, Neither be thou thy ſelfe; nor ſuborn any other to be a falſe witneſſe: which many will, do when themſelves are loath to appear. Some Rabbins would have the Original word הפתית to come from פתת, not פתה: and ſo the ſenſe will be; Bruiſe not thy neighbour with thy lips, by bearing falſe witneſſe againſt him.

V. 29. Say not, I will do ſo to him as he hath done to me] Chap. 20 22. See the reference there.

I will render to the man according to his work] He ſheweth what is the nature of the wicked, To revenge wrong with wrong, Math. 5. 39. Rom. 12.17.

V.32. conſidered it well] Heb. ſet my heart.

and received inſtruction] I learned by another, mans damage, to look well to mine own affairs.

V. 33. Yet a little ſleep, &c.] Chap. 6. 9. &c. See there.

V. 34. poverty] Heb poverties.

want] Heb. wants.

an armed man] Heb. a man of ſhield.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 1. THeſe are alſo Proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah] Here begins a new collection of Solomons proverbs, made by ſome, appointed by the king Hezekiah; whether thoſe mentioned, 2 Kings 18.18. (as ſome are of opinion) or any others. Divers ſtudious Princes, we know, among the later Emperours of Greece eſpecially, have had their Eclogarii, whoſe office was, by certain heads and common places, to gather out of ſeveral Books, what was thought moſt uſefull and profitable. It is likely that theſe Proverbs were collected out of ſome writings of Solomon, then extant, (as doubtleſſe there were many) which he had written ſince his own collection of Proverbs.

copied out] Heb. העתיקו, by moſt interpreted, tranſcripſerunt, that is, copied out; as we find it here. The word doth properly ſignifie the removing of a thing, from one place to another; as Job. 14. 18.& 18.4. and the rock is removed out of his place: וצור יעתק ממקומו And ſo here the vulgar Latin expreſſeth it, tranſtulerunt. Upon which and Chap. 9. 1, 2, &c. Wiſdom hath builded her houſe, &c She hath killed her beaſts, &c. is grounded Salazar, (one that hath taken great pains upon this Book) his opinion, which though perchance more accute, than probable, yet becauſe it hath no abſurdity, and may pleaſe many, I will impart unto the Reader. His conceit is, that Solomon wrote this book of Proverbs in the manner and method of a Συμπόσιον, or Banket-meeting: of which kinde of writing we have ſome examples in ſome ancient books, as Plato, Plutarch, and ſome others: where ſome learned men meeting together, ſpeak by turns, upon ſome learned ſubject: nothing differing from ordinary Dialogues, (a way of writing then much in uſe) but that it was at table, when they did both eat and ſpeak. The collocutors here repreſented, he would have to be, Solomon, Agur and Lemuel: and this to be the place, according to Solomons own order and method, where they ſhould come in: to wit, immediatly after the 24. Chapter; and then after them, Solomon, the chief ſpeaker, and maſter of the feaſt, to come in again, and conclude all, from Chap. 25. (as now digeſted, but Chap. 27. according to that order they would have) It is the glory of God, &c. to the end of Chapter 29. An unjuſt man is an abomination to the juſt, &c. This to have been the order, till Hezekiahs time, at which time, to the end that all that vvas Solomons might be together, Agur and Lemuel, their parts, to have been caſt at the end, as novv they are: and this to be the proper meaning of this העתיקו tranſtulerunt, that is, they did remove. But hovv this vvill ſtand vvith the interpretation of that vvord Lemuell, vvhich by moſt is received. I muſt leave to Salazar himſelſe to anſvver: It cannot be denyed but there is ſomevvhat plauſible in this conceit: the reader may be pleaſed to conſider further of it, there is no hereſie in it if he like it.

V.2. It is the glory of God to conceale a thing] God doth not reveal the cauſe of his judgements to man: neither doth he need any counſellors, to adviſe him. Eſay 40.13. Jer.23. 18. Rom 11.34. His judgements are unſearchable: to be adored by men, though not underſtood.

the honour of kings is to ſearch out a matter] Though kings oftentimes by a ſpecial providence, are endowed with extraordinary parts of wit and judgement, (whereof ſee upon Chap. 16.10. A divine ſentence, &c.) above ordinary men; yet it is an honour unto a king, not to affect to be like unto God, in giving no account unto any of his actions, nor uſing any counſel: but the contrary; to adviſe with them that are wiſe, and to enquire diligently, before he reſolve. Beſides, an honour to a king too, not to truſt others altogether, but himſelf to be preſent and aſſiſtent, at the ſearch and examination of things; to judge himſelf, and deliver his opinion, according to the quality of the cauſe.

V. 3. and the heart of kings is unſearchable] He ſheweth that it is too hard a taſk for a ſubject to attain to a reaſon of all the ſecret doings of the king, even when he is upright, and doth his duty.

is unſearchable] Heb. there is no ſearching.

V. 4. Take away the droſſe from the ſilver] When vicious perſons are removed from the king, he is a meet veſſel for the Lords uſe.

V. 5. Take away the wicked from before the king, &c.] Chap 10.8. It is not enough that a king be upright himſelf, but he muſt alſo put away from him bad counſellours and ſervants if he deſire to have his throne firm.

V. 6. Put not forth thy ſelf] Heb ſet not out thy glory.

and ſtand not in the place of great men] If thou be none of them.

V. 7. For it is better that it be ſaid unto thee, Come up hither, &c.] Luke 14. 10.

whom thine eyes have ſeen] For as it was an honour to thee to be admitted into the kings preſence; ſo thy diſhonour will be the greater, becauſe it is in his ſight.

whom thine eyes have ſeen] An expreſſion (among Eaſtern people,) of great favour and honour done to a ſubject and inferior, from a King or prince. And hence the Satrapæ (or noble Perſians) had their denomination from this priviledge, of beholding their kings face at all times, as learned men in thoſe languages do ſuppoſe. To this alſo is alluded by Chriſt, Math. 18, 10. their Angels alwaies behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

V. 8. Debate thy cauſe with thy neighbour himſelf] Matth. 5. 25. & 18. 15.

diſcover not a ſecret to another] Or, diſcover not the ſecret of another. Let not others, through your contention, become privy to your ſecrets; which may afterwards prove prejudicical to you both. But eſpecially take heed, that through heat of ſtrife and contention tion thou do not diſcover thy friends ſecret; which when known, will be an eternall blot unto thee; all wiſe men will abhor ſuch a one.

V.10. Leſt he that heareth it, put] Or, Leſt he hearing, put.

put thee to ſhame] By paſſing ſentence againſt thee, and ſo thou be aſhamed for ever.

V. 11. A word fitly ſpoken is like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver] Chap. 15. 23. Some kind of ornament uſed in thoſe dayes; whether about beds, tables, or houſes; or ſomewhat by it ſelf is not known; nor much material. The conjunction of gold and ſilver together, is alſo mentioned, Cant. 1. 11. borders of gold, with ſtudds of ſilver: which muſt needs be very beautiful to the eye: but the curious inlaying, and artificious interlacing, is the thing here chiefly aimed at, in this ſimilitude. Some tranſlate, in reticulis argenteis; that is, in net-work coverings made of ſilver: others, in theca: the Hebrew word משכיות may bear it.

fitly ſpoken] Heb. ſpoken upon his wheels.

V. 12. wiſe reprover upon an obedient ear] Chap. 9.9.

V. 13. As the cold of ſnow in the time of harveſt, ſo is a faithful meſſenger, &c. Chap. 13.17.

in the time of harveſt] In the time of great heat, when men have need of cooling.

V. 14. of a falſe gift] Heb. in a gift of falſhood.

is like clouds and wind without rain] Which have an outward appearance, and are nothing within: ſuch are covetous men, that would be thought to be liberal. Or vaine men that promiſe much, but performe little. It may be they have it not; but their ambition to be thought ſome body, makes many to undertake freely, beyond either power, or purpoſe.

clouds and wind without rain] Jude verſe 12.

V. 15. By long forbearing is a prince perſwaded] Gen. 32.4. &c. 1. Sam. 25. 24. &c. Chap. 15.1. & 16.14. By not miniſtring occaſion to provoke him further.

a ſoft tongue breaketh the bone] That is, the heart that is bent to anger, and hardeſt to be pacified.

V. 16. eat ſo much as is ſufficient for thee] Uſe moderately the pleaſures of this world: or, go not too often to thy neighbours houſe, as verſe 17.

V. 17. Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbours houſe] Or, let thy foot be ſeldom in thy neighbours houſe.

weary of thee] Heb. full of thee.

V. 18. A man that beareth falſe witneſſe againſt his neighbour, is a maul, and a ſword and a ſharp arrow] Pſal. 120.4. Chap. 12.18. See the Note upon Chap. 24.28. and deceive not, &c.

Confidence in an unfaithfull man] Or. The confidence of an unfaithfull man (that is, a tranſgreſſor, a wicked man:) in time of trouble, &c. to which purpoſe we have divers proverbs before. Or, A falſe, (or, deceitfull) confidence in time of trouble. The Hebrew will beare either of theſe, as well as the firſt; and the ſenſe will not be amiſſe, let us take which we will. If this laſt pleaſe, we muſt ſuppoſe the words to have reference to riches eſpecially, which are properly ſtyled deceitfull (the deceitfullneſſe of riches, Mark. 4.9. and the Mammon of unrighteouſneſſe, Luke 16 9. 11. that is, deceitfull, as before noted) and of which it was ſaid before, riches profit not in the day of wrath. Chap. 11. 4. beſides other proverbs to the ſame purpoſe.

like a broken tooth and a foot out of joynt] That makes a ſhew, but is of no uſe at all.

V. 20. As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather] This ſentence doth admit of two contrary ſenſes and interpretations; of which, which is the trueſt, when both the words, and the nature of the thing will admit of either, is hard to determine. We ſhall therefore propoſe both, and leave the choyſe to the Reader. But firſt of niter and vineger it muſt be known; that anciently they were often, and upon ſeverall occaſions (as by the teſtimonies of ſeverall ancients, diligently collected by Salazar, and ſome others, doth appear:) joyned together: and in ſome caſes, vineger adds virtue; in others, it takes away from the niter. Now the Hebrew word here uſed מעדה as it doth ſignifie to put on, or adorn: ſo alſo, to take away. The ſenſe therefore may be: As he that puts on a garment in cold weather, and tempers niter (as in divers caſes it muſt, to make it operative, and phyſicall: or tempers it, to take away the force of it, which Ariſtotle ſaith it doth, being of a contrary nature:) with vinegar; ſo is he that ſingeth ſongs to a heavy heart; that is, in effect: as thoſe things, are moſt proper, and ſeaſonable; ſo is Muſick, or ſongs, &c. That muſick, in general; and ſongs, particularly, that are fitted to that end, to comfort and to revive, may do much with many (for all are not of one temper) to allay ſorrow; beſides what we read in the Scripture to that purpoſe, as of Saul, 1 Sam. 16.24. and of others elſewhere; dayly experience may ſufficiently ſatisfie. This ſenſe is followed by Junius, and ſome Rabbins: approved alſo by Cornelius a Lapide, and ſome others. But as we ſaid before, all men are not of one temper, nor equally affected to, and with Muſick: nor all Muſick of one kind: and there be degrees of ſorrow too. As true therefore, (to be generally ſpoken) that Muſick, or ſinging of ſongs, (which for the moſt part are a teſtimony of a light heart:) is very unſeaſonable to an heavy heart. And to this effect, it ſeems were Solomons words underſtood by Sirach, the authour of Eccleſiaſticus: of whoſe imitation of Solomon, we have ſpoken in the Preface. For ſo he: A tale out of ſeaſon, is as Muſick in mourning. Chap. 22.6. The ancient Grecians alſo had a Proverb to this very purpoſe, as by Druſius upon this very place is very well obſerved: 'Ου ναῦλα κωκυτοῖσιν, ὂν λύρα φίλη. And Plutarck in his Sympoſia, or Table talks, excepts againſt Euripedes for his contrary judgement. Symp. 7. Quaſt. 7. as I find him cited by the ſame Druſius, in the ſame place.

V. 21. If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat: and if he be thirſty, give him water to drink] Exodus 23. 4. Romans 12. 20.

V. 22. For thou ſhalt heap coals of fire upon his head] Pſalm. 140. 10. Thou ſhalt bring Gods vengeance on his head, and Gods bleſſing on thine own. So moſt interpreters, both upon this place; and upon Romans 12 20. where this Proverb is uſed: or rather, this very paſſage, cited by the Apoſtle. So moſt, later Interpreters, and ſo divers, if not moſt ancients too, collected by Salazar upon this place. But this ſeems to be too uncharitable an interpretation, and contrary to what in this very book of Proverbs, Chap. 20. 22. & 24.29. and elſewhere, (whereof ſee more upon Pſalm 26. So will I compaſſe thine altar, &c. and Pſalm. 35 4. Let them be confounded, &c.) is commanded. For what greater revenge, or more malicious hatred can there be, than for a man either to wiſh or to uſe means, that his enemy may incur the wrath of God; the utmoſt of evils, and moſt direful imprecations? Divers things I know, are anſwered by divers; but nothing that ſatisfies me ſo much, as Saint Chryſoſtomes anſwer; which is, that Solomon and after him Saint Pauls intention was not by theſe words to allow, much leſſe to command ſuch vindicative policy; but becauſe moſt men in the heat of their anger, are incapable of any other reaſon or conſideration, but what tends to revenge; this by way of condeſcenſion is propoſed unto them for the time, that if they muſt needs be revenged, and nothing elſe will content them; this is the only way to turn the wrath of God from themſelves upon their enemies, not to revenge our ſelves, but to leave them to God, and rather to requite good for evil: that afterwards when the edge of their anger, and the danger of their fury, is taken away; they may be perſwaded to do that out of charity, which before they did out of mere policy. But if there be danger in this interpretation, as certainly there is, and matter of ſcandal too; why ſhould not we rather prefer that which may be as proper to the words, and much ſafer, for the ſenſe? Which is according to Saint Auſtins golden rule, whereof he gives an inſtance, theſe very words of Solomon: Si praceptiva locutio eſt, ſaith he, aut flagitium aut facinus vetans, &c. that is, If it be a precept forbidding any lewdneſſe, or wickedneſſe, commanding ſomething that is profitable or beneficial; there is no figure in the words, If otherwiſe it is, a figure. For example, If thine enemy, &c. water to drink. Here goodneſſe and bounty is enjoyned: no figure here therefore. But in the next verſe; For thou ſhalt heap coales, &c. here malice ſeems to be commanded: Doubt not therefore but that the words are figurative; and whereas they admit of two ſeverall interpretations; the one, tending to evil, the other to good: let thy charity rather imbrace that which is to good; that theſe coales of fire thou mayeſt underſtand to be nothing elſe, but the burning groanes of hearty repentance, whereby his pride is healed, who grieves with himſelf, that he hath been his enemy, who was ſo good as to endeavour his good, whileſt he did him evil; So Saint Auguſtine. Others by coales of fire, underſtand ſuch, by which the fire of love and charity is kindled in the heart. Did not our hearts burn: Luke 24 32. in a different ſenſe, it is true, but that too, figurative; and in a good ſenſe too. Of a live coale, taken from the altar, to take away iniquity, we read Eſay 6 6, 7. And the word חתה here uſed, ſeems to have particular relation to the altar, or cenſer, which from thence was called מחתה. But of this metaphor, of coales of fire, that the words may be taken as well in a good, as in a bad ſenſe, there is no queſtion. All that can be objected is, why theſe coales ſhould be ſaid to be heaped upon the head, which ſounds more like an imprecation, (εἰς κεφαλὴν σοί, the ancient Grecians were wont to ſay;) than in the boſome, (as before Chap. 6. 7.) or heart; the proper ſeat of love and charity. Some think the ground of the ſpeech might be, a way that ancient Phyſitians had to cure apoplexies and phrenſies, that proceeded from cold cauſes, by applying coales to the head. Saint Auguſtine indeed, in one of his Sermons, ſeemes to apprehend it ſo. Others would have it a compariſon taken from founders, or caſters of metal, who by adding much fire, will make the hardeſt iron, or ſteel at laſt to melt. A probable conjecture; but that it doth not ſatisfie, why the head particularly, not the heart, or any other part, ſhould be mentioned. But it is a very difficult thing, to give a reaſon of old Proverbs, when at ſome times ſome extraordinary chance, for which no reaſon can be given, but that it hath ſo hapned, is enough to give occaſion to a Proverb. If a houſe both a great and high, be on fire, coals and ſinders, as I have ſeen it my ſelf, wil fly very far, ſo that if a man be neer, he ſhal be forced to ſtand further off, or to cover his head with ſomewhat, more than ordinary; as I think Pliny doth relate of himſelf, or his Uncle, in the burning of mount Veſuvius. Some ſuch thing ſpoken of ſome one at firſt, that was not willing to go from his houſe, though on fire, till the coales fell ſo thick upon his head that he muſt either burn or go; ſome ſuch thing, I ſay, might be occaſion enough to make this a proverbiall ſpeech, appliable to them, who in a manner againſt their wills are forced to do ſomewhat or other, which of themſelves they are moſt averſe from. Such a thing is,when a malicious enemies obſtinacie is overcome with goodneſſe, and unexpected kindneſſe. And doth not Saint Paul himſelf interpret it ſo, when he adds preſently, (which to me ſeems to make the buſineſſe very clear,) Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good? How is evil overcome with good,but when the malice of an implacable (of himſelf) enemy is overcome; ſo that of a foe, he becomes our friend? Beſides, there be paſſages in divers ancient authors,of beſt account, ſo pat and pregnant to this very ſenſe, of overcoming the moſt obſtinate and malicious, by conſtant unconquerable goodneſſe; that it is very likely the ſame thing might be intended by Solomon alſo. There is a very pregnant paſſage in Xenophon to that purpoſe. But I will content my ſelf with one, out of a Greek Author too, but already done in Engliſh to my hands: Conſider, (ſaith he, exhorting himſelf to goodneſſe, and patience,) that meekneſſe is a thing unconquerable, (or, irreſiſtable; that is his meaning,) if it be true and naturall, and not affected(or, not ſcoffingly) or hypocriticall. For how ſhall even the moſt fierce and malicious be able to hold on againſt thee, if thou ſhalt ſtill continue meek and loving unto him, and that even at that time when he is about to do thee wrong, thou ſhalt be well diſpoſed and in good temper with all meekneſſe to teach and inſtruct him better? Not ſo my ſon,&c. So he, Seneca: Vincit malos pertinax bonitas,nec quiſquam tam duri infeſtique adverſus diligenda animi eſt,ut etiam vi tractus bonos non amet: that is,Pertinacious goodneſſe will overcome evill men: neither is any man ſo rigid and perverſe againſt that which of its ſelf is lovely, that even when he is drawne by force he ſhould not love them that are good. Among later Interpreters, (though moſt, as hath been ſaid, for the contrary,) yet Mercer is for this interpretation: and likewiſe Druſius in his Hebrew Proverbs,Claſſe 11. l. 1. Beneficentia erga inimicos. See alſo upon Pſal. 35.4. Let them be confounded, &c. And as for that maine objection, why the head rather than any other part, which makes it to ſound as an imprecation; whatever the Greek phraſe may be; yet in the Hebrew, in matter of bleſſings,as well as curſes and imprecations, we find the head mentioned as in this very book of Provebs, Chap.10.6.bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt, and 11.26 but bleſſing, &c. It may be alſo that upon his head, is no more than upon him: which is not without example. See more upon Pſal.140.9.10.

V.23. The North wind driveth away raine] Job.37.22.

The North wind driveth away raine: ſo doth an angry countenance a back-biting tongue] Or, The north wind bringeth forth rain: ſo doth a back-biting tongue an angry countenance. This, as to the ſecond part, or member of the verſe, I take to be the trueſt tranſlation,becauſe לשון סתר here, ſeems to anſwer to צפון in the firſt part, the North, which in Hebrew comes from a root that ſignifies to hide. And certain it is, that the Hebrew תחולל, may be tranſlated,bringeth,or begetteth, as wel as driveth away. It ſignifies both.But then the queſtion will be, how the North wind can be ſaid to bring the rain, which by moſt authors, (as by Homer,and divers others) is ſaid to drive it away. Some Rabbines tell us, that it doth ſo in Jeruſalem, becauſe of the Sea, though in moſt parts of the world otherwiſe, They ſay ſo; but contradicted by ſome other Rabbines: neque ego crediderim, ſaith Mercer; and ſo ſay I too.If then we tranſlate, as we think moſt probable, The Northwind driveth away the rain,ſo doth a ſecret tongue (for that is the proper ſignification of the Hebrew words) an angry countenance: by a ſecret tongue, we muſt underſtand,a ſoft, inſinuating, cloſe; oppoſed to a rough and plain tongue: to the ſame purpoſe,as before verſe 15. and a ſoft tongue, &c. and Chap. 15. 1. A ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath, &c. and Chap. 21.14. A gift in ſecret(בסתר: as here לשון סתר) pacifieth anger, &c. So ſecret love,Chap.27.5.

V. 24. It is better to dwell in a corner of the houſe top than with a brawling woman and in a wide houſe]Chap,19.13. and 21.9

V 25. from a far country] I ſee no antitheſis in the words which ſhould make Solomon, (as Mercer would have it)though he intended neer,as well as far, rather to ſay far.I take his meaning to be, from a far country,that is, altogether unexpected; and the more unexpected, the more welcome.

V.26. is as a troubled fountaine and a corrupt ſpring] Which is a thing to be grieved at by all men, as being a publique miſchief. Or rather, falling, not to be underſtood of any outward calamity; but falling, that is, yeilding to him through timorouſneſſe, in an evill thing, when he ſhould generouſly have oppoſed him: compared before to a well of life Chap.10.11. for his good inſtruction,and other good fruits of his mouth.

V. 27. good] Or,hurtfull,Chap.10.2, to eate much hony] verſe 16.

ſo for men to ſearch their own glory is not glory]Heb.וחקר כבודם כבוד that is, and to ſeek (or ſearch) their glory, glory. Which moſt underſtand of too much curioſity in the ſearch of things abſtruſe and Divine; as of Gods nature, counſels. &c. By their glory, ſome underſtand God particularly: called their glory, Pſalm 106. 20. Thus they changed their glory, &c. Others, refer it to honey, (as if plurall, honeys) but to the ſame purpoſe, as they that underſtand God. And ſo, glory, the laſt word, ſome ſupply, or repeat the negative, is not glory: others, but to the ſame purpoſe,expound it,as it is uſed ſometimes,is grievous,or heavy.And to this purpoſe the Vulgar Latin is not amiſs,et ſcrutator Majeſtatis opprimetur a gloriâ.

V.28. He that hath no rule over his own ſpirit, is like a city that is broken down, and without wals] Chap. 16.32.

is like a city that is broken down] Which lies open to all aſſailants,and ſo is in extreme danger.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſe 1. AS ſnow in ſummer] For theſe things are then unſeaſonable, 1 Sam 12 17.

V.2. As the bird by wandering, as the ſwallow, &c.] Sicut paſſeris eſt vagari, &c. that is, As it is natural to the bird (or, the ſparrow, particularly; as the word is interpreted by others;) to wander; and to the ſwallow, to flye; a thing not to be wondered at, &c. ſo cauſeleſſe curſing is as little to be regarded. But if we read לו according to the Hebrew margin: then; As the ſparrow,and ſwallow, after ſome wandring, return often to the houſe they are uſed; ſo cauſeleſſe curſes will return, or fall upon him that is the author of them.

V.3. A whip for the horſe, a bridle for the aſſe, and a rod for the fooles back] Pſal.32.9.Chap.10.13.

V. 4. Anſwer not a foole according to his folly, &c.] Anſwer him not according to his folly: That is, as fooliſhly as he ſpeaks with vain ſpeeches, and railings: or, conſent not unto him in his ſayings or doings, but, anſwer him, to convince him, though thou have no hope to inſtruct him: or, obſerve a fit time and place to anſwer him: or, anſwer him briefly,and be not full of words, as he is. See alſo in the Preface: and upon Chap.10.2. Treaſure of wickedneſſe,&c.

V.5. his own conceit] Heb. his own eyes.

V.6. cutteth off the feet] As he that cuts off his legs, or the legs of his meſſenger, receives loſſe thereby: ſo doth he that imployes a fool in his buſineſſe. Or, He that ſends a fool about his buſineſſe; is as if he ſent a man on an errand that hath no legs; and he is ſure to ſuffer for it. Yet I muſt freely acknowledge. that I am not very well ſatisfied with any thing that I have read upon this verſe. Further time and conſideration may bring ſomewhat to light, that as yet is hidden.The underſtanding reader, upon this warning,if he he pleaſe,may take it into his conſideration.

damage] Or,violence.

V.7. The legs of the lame are not equal] One goes up, and the other down, which is an unſeemly thing.

are not equal] Heb. are lifted up. But I think their opinion very probable, that take דליו here, not for a verb, but for a noun ſubſtantive, there being examples of ſuch formes (not to ſpeak how frequent it is among the Rabbins:) in Scripture. If ſo, the ſenſe will be; As the lifting up of the leggs in one that is lame,ſo, &c. that is, As dancing doth not become a lame man,&c. a moſt elegant and appoſite ſimilitude, as any can be imagined. For as dancing is an extraordinary kind of going; or motion of the feet, not naturall, but according to art; ſo is a Proverb, or ſentence, an extraordinary kind of ſpeech; the right uſing, and application whereof, according to ſeveral circumſtances, of time,place, perſon, &c. doth require much judgement and diſcretion; and therefore very ill becoming the mouth of a fool. Yea, though we ſhould make an imperative of the word, attollite,lift up, as ſome do; or an indicative are unequall. (to wit, in; or, for dancing:) as others; yet the ſame ſenſe may be made of it, and will fit much better, than any thing elſe, that I have lighted upon.

V. 8. As he that bindeth a ſtone in a ſling] That is, Sicut aliquis lapidem alligat vel applicat baliſtæ, ut eum ejaculetur,&c. As he that doth bind, or apply a ſtone to a ſling,or ſtone-engin, to caſt it of; ſo doth the honour, that is given to a fool,ſoon paſſe a way. So Buxtorf in his Dictionary.

As he that bindeth a ſtone in a ſling] Or, As he that putteth a precious ſtone in a heap of ſtones (where it is not ſeen but trampled upon,with other ſtones,) ſo is he,&c. Some think that he alludes to thoſe heap of ſtones, uſed in ancient times, as your Mercuriales ſtatuæ, for directions of wayes, and therefore ſacred, and worſhipped by travellers, by caſting of a ſtone into the heap,&c. Some would have מרגמה to be the ſame as ארגמן that is,purple: Ut eſt ligatio lapidis vilis in re pretioſâ, &c. As the binding of an ordinary ſtone in purple, (or, a precious thing:) ſo is honour to a fool. See Buxtorfius who before.

V. 9. As a thorn goeth up into the head of a drunkard] That runs into his hand and hurts himſelf: or, which he takes up to hurt others. Or, as a thorn coming,(ſome, growing:)into the hand of a drunkard,&c. The handling of thorns, for any uſe; doth require, we know, much circumſpection; elſe, it may do more hurt, than good: ſo a parable, &c. And here it may be obſerved, that by a Parable, or Proverb, any divine ſentence, or piece of Scripture, may be underſtood. It is the ſottiſhneſſe of many: they think if they can utter many places of Scripture upon any occaſion, with expedition; they are great Clerks; and expect to be admired for it by others: whereas it is well known, that fools, and phrantick men,becauſe they want judgement, have often a great advantage of memory above other men. Scriptures, in the hands of ſuch, are very thorns indeed: they do themſelves much hurt, by their ignorant gloſſes and applications; and give great ſcandal to others. But yet worſe than theſe, (if worſe can be,) are thoſe, who affect prophane jeſts, to make themſelves, and others (not much better than themſelves:) ſport, by ſcurrilous applications, or detortions of Scripture phraſes and ſpeeches: who if Magiſtrates were as zealous of Gods honour; as they ſhould; would have their tongues, ſome; and others, their eares: (the hearers and approvers of ſuch profane mirth:) boared with hot irons, that they might be examples unto others.

The great God that ſerved all things, both rewardeth the foole] The beſt ſenſe that can be made of this tranſlation of the words, is, that God hath created all things for himſelf, and rewardeth, or hireth: (the moſt proper and immediat ſignification of the word,) even the fools and tranſgreſſours. See upon Chapter 6. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himſelf. Some make this ſenſe (without any great violence to the originall words:) of the words: A wiſe, (or ſkilful man) doth forme all things, (that he goes about,) rightly, or, is alſo to do any thing. But he that is not, is forced to hire others; or, but he that hireth others, ſhall have his work done fooliſhly, (that is, unſkilfully) and negligently: or ſuperficially. How this may ariſe from the words, they that have any knowledge of the tongue, will eaſily ſee: and it were impertinent, to endeavour to ſatisfie others, who are in no capacity to judge.

the great God that formed all things, both rewardeth the fool, and rewardeth tranſgreſſors] Or, A great man grieveth all, and he hireth the fool, he hireth alſo tranſgreſſours: That is, Wicked men when they are in place and power, make uſe of all ſorts of wicked men for the oppreſſing of others. So ſome. Others, Great men; that is, Kings and Princes (ſuch as are tyrannical, and fear not God,) often make no conſcience what burdens they lay upon their poor ſubjects, that they may have the more to beſtow upon ſuch as they ſettle their affections upon, as fit inſtruments of their pleaſures, or cruelty, &c. Junius his tranſlation; Ut plurimum dolore afficit omnes ebrius, though I find none that follow him, yet ſince that obſcurity of the place, is ſuch, that it is not eaſie to determine any thing certainly; may deſerve to be taken into conſideration: He makes it a continued ſenſe, with the foregoing verſe, concerning drunkards; to this effect: For the moſt part [the drunkard] grieveth all men. As he rewardeth, (that is, puniſheth:) himſelf, that is a fool, (or, through his folly:) ſo others alſo that paſſe by.

The great God that formed all things] God rewards all manner of tranſgreſſours, whether they ſin, of folly, or of malice, Chapter 11. 31.

V. 11. As a dog returneth to his vomit] 2 Pet. 2. 22. That is, A fool, who after correction, promiſes, &c. returneth to his folly, is as a dog &c.

returneth to his folly] Heb. iterath his folly.

V. 12. there is more hope of a fool than of him] For the fool wil rather be counſelled than he, and ſo may ſooner come to true wiſdom. Matth. 21. 31. To this purpoſe Thucydides hath an excellent ſaying, Ἀμαθία μετὰ σωφροσύνης ὠφελιμώτερον, ἢ δεξιότης μετὰ ἀκολασίας; that is, Simplicity with ſobriety (or humility, is to be preferred before unruly wit; or dexterity.

V. 13. The ſlothful man ſaith, there is a Lyon in the way, a Lyon in the ſtreets] Chap. 22. 13.

in] Heb. between.

V. 14. As the door turneth upon his hinges] And never goeth off the hinges: ſo a fool toſſeth to and fro in his bed, but will not out.

V. 15. The ſlothful hideth his hand in his boſome, it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth] Chap. 19. 24 See there.

it grieveth him] Or, he is weary.

V. 17. medleth] Or, is enraged.

is like one that taketh a dog by the eare] He that being not called, goes about to end ſtrife, may ſooner catch hurt, than do good, by bringing himſelf to danger on both ſides.

V. 18. a mad man] Or, one that feigns himſelf mad, 1 Samuel 21. 13.

fire-brands] Heb. flames, or ſparks.

V. 19. So is the man that deceiveth his neighbour] Wrong done in ſport may work much miſchief.

V. 20. Where no wood is] Heb. without wood.

where there is no tale-bearer, there ſtrife ceaſeth] Chapter 22. 10.

tale-bearer Or, whiſperer.

ceaſeth] Heb. is ſilent.

V. 21. As coales are to burning coales, and wood to fire; ſo is a contentious man to kindle ſtrife] Chap. 15. 18. & 29. 22.

ſo is a contentious man to kindle ſtrife] Heb. a man of contentions. That is, a very contentious man.

V. 22. The words of a tale-bearer are as wounds, and they go down in the innermoſt parts of the belly] Chapter 18. 8. See there, innermoſt parts] Heb. chambers.

V. 23. Burning lips, and a wicked heart] Burning with affection, and making profeſſion of much love to us, when evill is intended, as an earthen veſſel covered over with droſſie ſilver, which makes a ſhew as if it were good maſſie ſilver.

V. 24 diſſembleth] Or, is known.

V. 25. ſpeaketh fair] Heb. maketh his voyce gracious.

for there are ſeven abominations in his heart] Meaning many, He uſeth a certain number for an uncertain, Chap. 24. 16.

V. 26. Whoſe hatred is covered] Or, hatred is covered in ſecret: or, his hatred.

his wickedneſſe ſhall be ſhewed before the whole Congregation] God will give him over to ſome great ſin, that he may be publickly puniſhed.

V. 27. Whoſo diggeth a pit, ſhall fall therein: and he that rolleth a ſtone, it will return upon him] Pſal. 7. 15, 16. & 9. 15. Eccleſ. 10. 8.

he that rolleth a ſtone, it will return upon him] Up an hill, which fals down again on his own head.

V. 28. A lying tongue hateth thoſe that are afflicted by it] Seeketh to do them more miſchief, whom he hath hurt before. Some (making the verb to be active here; which is more commonly paſſive:) Lingua fallax odit atterentes ſe: (or, qui illam reprimit: Vatablus:) A lying tongue hateth thoſe that cruſh it, (or, repreſſe it:) which is very plauſible. Some, turning the paſſive plurall into a ſingular; invert the order of the words, thus: Attritus (i. e. modeſtus) homo linguam odit mendacem: that is, A contrite (modeſt) man hateth a lying tongue. Indeed, lying muſt needs be very odious to a mortified man, and it is a queſtion, whether any man can avoid the occaſions of lying ſometimes; that is not altogether dead to the world, and all worldly vanities. Hence, to lye, in Scripture, for, to ſubmit; becauſe they that are afraid to offend ſuperiors, of whom they depend, and whom they ſeek to pleaſe in all things, are forced to this baſe ſhift oftentimes: according to the old ſaying, Obſequium, amicos, veritas, odium parit, that is, Complyance, begetteth love; truth, enmity.

and a flattering mouth worketh ruine] A flatterer ſeeks to undo men, as well as falſe witneſſe: but the one doth it ſecretly, and the other openly.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſe 1. B*Oaſt not thy ſelf of tomorrow*] James 4. 13. &c.

to morrow] Heb. to morrow-day.

thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth] Every day is as it were child of ſomthing. To morrow may bring forth that which may croſſe thy buſineſſe, or thy comfort: therefore preſume not of either, if thou neglect the preſent occaſion, Matth. 6. 34.

V. 3. heavy, Heb. heavineſſe.

V. 4. Wrath is cruel, and anger is outragious] Heb. wrath is cruelty, and anger an overflowing.

but who is able to ſtand before envy?] For the envious are obſtinate, and cannot be reconciled.

envy] Or, jealouſie; Chap. 6. 34.

V. 5. Open rebuke is better than ſecret love] He doth us more good that reveales his hatred to us by railing on us, than he that profeſſeth he loveth us, and dare not reprove. See upon Chap. 25. 23. a ſecret tongue, &c. and Chap 28. 23. But the meaning may be alſo, That open rebuke from a friend that deals freely with us upon occaſion, is better than much profeſſed love, that never ſhews it ſelf, (though there want not oppertunity,) by any effects. This ſeemes to me the better of the two.

V. 6. Faithful are the wounds of a friend] Pſal. 141. 5. The rebukes of a friend that pierce deep, are better than the fawning of an enemy.

deceitful] Or, earneſt, or frequent. Or, deprecanda; as Junius and Buxtorf.

V. 7. The ful ſoul loatheth an honey-comb] Want ſometimes is better than plenty.

loatheth] Heb. treadeth under foot.

to the hungry ſoul every bitter thing is ſweet] Job. 6. 7.

V. 8. As a bird that wandreth from a neſt] And ſo is unſetled, and in danger: So is a man out of his dwelling, or calling. Vita deſultoria: in Latine, noted for an unhappy life. Seneca hath much to this purpoſe, in his ſecond Epiſtle. And we have had ſomewhat before too, out of him, that would do well here too.

V. 9. Oyntment and perfume rejoyce the heart] See upon Pſal. 45. 8.

whether they have made thee glad.

ſweetneſſe of a mans friend by hearty counſel] Pſal. 55. 24.

by hearty counſel] Heb. from the counſel of the ſoul.

V. 10. neither go into] Or, but go not into.

neither go into thy brothers houſe in the day of thy calamity] Seek help from an ancient friend in time of trouble, rather than from thy kindred; for theſe will ſooner fail thee, than he, who loves thee better, and dwels neerer to thee.

better is a neighbour that is neer, than a brother far off] Chap. 17. 17. & 18. 24 Old Heſiod, whom we have been beholding to already more than once, gives a reaſon, which it is proboble, that Solomon might have in his mind: Εἰ γὰρ τοι καὶ χρῆμ᾽ ἐγχώριον ἄλλο γένηται, γείτονες ἄζωστοι ἔκιον, ζώσαντο δὲ πηοί. If any ſuddain occaſion (ſaith he) call for help; neighbours will run half naked to thy aſſiſtance, when kindred, that live further off, muſt take time to dreſſe and prepare themſelves.

V. 11. My ſon, be wiſe, and make my heart glad; that I may anſwer him that reproacheth me] Chap. 10. 1. & 23. 24. See there.

that I may anſwer him that reproacheth me] See Notes on Pſal. 127. 5.

V. 12. A prudent man foreſeeth the evil, and hideth himſelf] Chap. 22. 3. See there.

V. 13. Take his garment that is ſurety for a ſtranger, and take a pledge of him for a ſtrange woman] Chap. 20. 16. See there.

for] Or, that is ſurety for.

V. 14. He that bleſſeth his friend with a loud voice] He that praiſeth a man before others continually to his face, is as tedious to a wiſe man, as if he curſed him.

with a loud voice, riſing early in the morning] If we take it literally, it muſt be ſuppoſed that the cuſtome ſalutationum matutinarum, (of morning ſalutations) was in uſe among the Hebrews, as well as among the Romans. But it may be, that all theſe words tend but to this, to tell us, that unſeaſonable praiſes are as odious and troubleſome, as a loud voice or noiſe, early in the morning, to many that ſleep beſt then, and would not willingly be diſturbed.

V. 15. A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike] Chap. 19. 13. See there.

a contenteous woman] Heb. a woman of contentions: That is, a very contentious woman.

V. 16. Whoſoever hideth her, hideth the wind] Though husbands, many times, to cover their own ſhame, do their beſt, that their wives may not be known abroad to be ſuch ſcolds; yet it is to as much purpoſe, as if they would hide ſome bluſtring wind (not louder perchance than ſome womens tongues) that it might not be heard; or keep in the ſent and fragrancy of ſome precious ointment, which they have about them, which is impoſſible.

bewrayeth] Heb. proclaimeth.

V. 17. Iron ſharpeneth iron: ſo man ſharpeneth, &c.] By mutual friendly conference (and ſometimes emulation) the wits of men grow commonly more vigorous and quick; and their induſtry too. There be other interpretations too, I know: as Ferrum cudit ferrum, & homo cudit hominem: commended unto us by Conſtantius the Emperour: and well approved of as to the ſenſe, by ſome others. But ſince this is the moſt literal, and not inferior to any, for the ſenſe; why ſhould we nodum in ſcirpo quærere? There be divers Proverbs (in ancient authors) to the ſame purpoſe: as, Unus homo, nullus homo. Σύν τε δύω ἐρχομένω, &c.

V. 18. Whoſo keepeth the fig-tree, ſhall eat the fruit thereof] 1 Cor. 9. 7. It ſhould be as natural to a good maſter, to recompence a faithful ſervant, as it is to a fig-tree that is well kept, to yield good fruit. On the other ſide, ſervants ſhould not be diſcouraged, if they be not preſently rewarded; but muſt wait patiently, as the husband-man doth, who takes a great deal of pains, before he reaps any benefit: eſpecially they that plant young trees, they muſt expect a great while before they eat of the fruit.

waiteth on] Or, obſerveth.

ſhall be honoured] That is, rewarded: or plentifully provided for. So honour, is often taken; as 1 Tim. 5. 3, 4. Honour widdows, &c. where ſee learned Expoſitors, Grotius, and others.

V. 19. As in water face anſwereth to face] As a man can gueſs at his own face by ſeeing the ſhadow of it in the water, though he cannot ſee it immediately: ſo may he gueſſe at another mans thoughts by his actions, although he cannot directly ſee his heart. Or it may be underſtood of a mans own conſcience, which the true looking-glaſſe, wherein every man may ſee and know himſelf. Or he might mean perchance, that a man may ex ſuo ingenio (as ſome ancient Latine Authors expreſſeth it) aliorum ingenia æſtimare: an honeſt man may eaſily gueſſe by himſelf, what is in another honeſt man, like himſelf, his mind about a buſineſſe: and likewiſe a wicked man judge of another like himſelf, by himſelf. By not a few, this ſenſe, (as literal indeed, as any other:) is moſt approved: That as a man carries himſelf towards another; ſo he may expect to find him towards himſelf: if friendly, ſincerely, liberally, &c. It falls out ſo very commonly: and good uſe may be made of it, by them that are wiſe. However, the contrary (as in moſt morall ſayings; as before often hath been obſerved;) is as true ſometimes, and it hath been the undoing of many, not to know it in time. Some men, (ſuch natures there be:) the more they have been obliged, the greater and fiercer enemies they prove. King David found it ſo in his particular, as he complains in divers places: and there be other Kings, (not to ſpeak of private perſons:) beſides David, that have found it ſo too. And therefore this caution was neceſſary.

V. 20. never] not.

the eyes of man are never ſatisfied] Eccleſ. 1. 8,

V. 21. As the fining-pot for ſilver, and the furnace for gold Ch. 17. 3.

ſo is a man to his praiſe] True praiſe is gotten by well-doing, as gold is made praiſe-worthy by the fire. Or, a man may be known by his praiſes, according as he is affected when he is praiſed, or diſpraiſed by others. He that admits of all praiſes, whether deſerved, or undeſerved; that greedily hunts after popular applauſe; that eaſily ſwells when he is commended; he is a vain glorious weak man. A puſillanimous man, that can bear no reproach patiently, though undeſerved; and the like. Some would have this the meaning; A man may be known what he is, by them by whom he is commended: He good and vertuous, whom good and vertuous men commend; He ſober, or intemperate; as thoſe are, that ſpeak well or ill of him; and the like. They that forſake the Law, praiſe the wicked, Chap. 28. 4. See alſo 29. 27. Some would make a more general ſenſe of the words, That every man may be known what he is, in point of vertue, or vice, by common fame, and report. This too, may be true ſometimes, and wiſe men (as we ſaid a little before) may make good uſe of it; but ſubject to ſo many limitations and reſtrictions, as the contrary may ſeem the more true of the two. Neither do I believe, that Solomon intended it.

V. 22. yet will not his fooliſhneſſe depart from him] A fool will be beaten to death, before he will leave his folly, Jer. 6. 29. This muſt be underſtood chiefly, of thoſe that are grown in wickedneſſe by long continuance, and paſt the years of ordinary correction: that it may be reconciled, to Chap 22. 15. Fooliſhneſſe is bound, &c. Yet Horace delivers it more abſolutely, Nemo adeò ferus eſt, qui non manſueſcere poſſit; ſi modò culturæ, &c. I believe him as he doth expreſſe himſelf: If men will lend a patient ear, and will be attentive to good counſel, and inſtruction. For in this caſe, though long cuſtom, or natural inclination, may reſiſt for a time: yet at laſt, the tenet of beſt Philoſophers will prove true, that: Voluntas determinatur ab intellectu: the will will be overſwaied by reaſon. But it falls out ſometimes, that the will is ſo ſtrongly ſet before; and the affections, ſo flagrant; that the power of ratiocination being quite blunted and obſtructed by it, and them; whatſoever comes to the outward ear, though never ſo often inculcated, ſticks there, and makes no impreſſion at all, I will not ſay upon the heart, but not upon the underſtanding; and for want of ſuch impreſſion, never comes ſeriouſly to be conſidered of: and in that caſe, no wonder if all the reaſoning in the world, though of it ſelf never ſo ſolid, and convincing; prove altogether ineffectual. I ſpeak this of them, that have the power of reaſon and ratiocination in all other things, but what concerns their amendment. I do not think that Solomon intended here natural fooles.

V. 23. look well] Heb. ſet thy heart.

V. 24. For riches are not for ever] If thou wert never ſo rich, or hadſt a crown, yet thou mayeſt be poor; therefore look well to be educated in ſome trade that may maintain thee, if wealth fail. More probable, that Solomon by theſe words, from the 23. verſe, to the end of the chapter, intended to commend husbandry unto us, as the moſt natural, moſt profitable, and moſt certain occupation: and withal, to give them that follow it, (though the uſe of it may be extended further) a caveat, that if they mean to thrive by it, they muſt not altogether truſt to the care of others, under them; but take good notice themſelves, of all things; and truſt their own eyes moſt.

riches] Heb. ſtrength.

to every generation] Heb. generation and generation.

V. 25. The hay appeareth] This declareth the great goodneſſe of God towards man, who giveth him food for himſelf, and his ſervants, and his cattel, ſummer and winter; and by conſequence, requires care in man to preſerve all theſe things for their ſeveral uſes, Gen. 1. 28, 29 Pſal 104. 14 & 147. 8, 9. This tends alſo to the comendation of husbandry, which affords ſo many commodities; and ſhould not therefore be neglected, though a man think himſelf otherwiſe never ſo well provided for. This may help when other things fail.

V. 26. are] Or, which are.

V. 27. maintenance] Heb. life.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verſ. 1. The wicked flee when no man purſueth] Levit. 26. 36. Becauſe their own conſcience accuſeth them.

as bold as a lyon] That is, in time of peace, and under a juſt government, according to lawes eſtabliſhed; not arbitrary: which is to be preſuppoſed in many of theſe ſentences: as we have noted before. See alſo verſe 12, 28. and chap. 29. 2. Yet even in times of greateſt trouble, confuſion, and tyranny; religious men, if they ſee themſelves called to it, may and ought to be bold and reſolute, upon ſure confidence of Gods love and mercy; and (as to the world, and mans judgement:) their innocency. However, boldneſs in troubles, is no certain evidence, either of a good cauſe, or a good conſcience. Great malefactors, (beſides notorious ſchiſmaticks and hereticks,) have been known, ſome in all ages, to behave themſelves with great reſolution, to the laſt. It doth often proceed (as timorouſneſs, in ſome truly godly) from the temper of the body, beſides divers other circumſtances, in particular caſes; which wiſe men, and well verſed in matters of the world, will eaſily underſtand.

bold] Heb. confident.

V. 2. many are the princes thereof] The Princes and Kings thereof live but a little while; they are ſoon taken away, ſo that within the compaſſe of a little time, they be many that reign ſucceſſively; whereby the State of the common-wealth is oftentimes changed; eſpecially if they be not Princes of one ſtock and family: or, if of very different (as often) tempers and diſpoſitions. Or, many are the Princes and Governours of it at one time; which is not accounted, generally, the beſt of governments.

but by a man of underſtanding] It may be read, So becauſe of men of underſtanding and knowledge, the princes life ſhall be prolonged. Which is a great benefit to the land, for many troubles come where the government is often altered. Or, by a man of underſtanding, a wiſe King, or Prince may be underſtood.

by a man of underſtanding and knowledge the ſtate thereof ſhall be prolonged] Or, by men of underſtanding and wiſdom ſhall they likewiſe be prolonged.

V. 3. like a ſweeping rain which leaveth no food] Which ſweeps all the corn away.

which leaveth no food] Heb. without food.

V. 4. ſuch as keep the law, contend with them] Not onely condemn them, but reſiſt them alſo.

V. 5 underſtand all things] This may be underſtood of prudence and diſcretion in matters of life and converſation; and daily occurrences. But rather, (which will agree better with the former verſe) of a right judgement, concerning Gods providence: whereof, ſee upon Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecret of the Lord, &c. and Pſal. 28. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord,&c. See alſo 1 Joh. 2. 20. & 27. and Pſal. 111. laſt verſe.

V. 6. Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightneſſe] Chap 19. 1. perverſe in his wayes] Heb. in two wayes: That is, which goeth out of the way to the right hand, or to the left, or. that runs out of the mean into either extream, Deut. 5. 32. Joſh. 1. 7.

V. 7. Whoſo keepeth the law, is a wiſe ſon] Chap. 29. 3.

is a companion of riotous men] Or, feedeth gluttons.

V. 8. He that by uſury and unjuſt gain increaſeth his ſubſtance, he ſhall gather it for him that will pity the poor] Chap. 13. 22. Eccleſ. 2. 26.

by uſury] See upon Pſal. 15. 5. He that putteth not out his money to uſury.

unjuſt gain increaſeth his ſubſtance] Heb. by increaſe.

he ſhall gather it for him that will pity the poor] For God will take away the riches of the wicked uſurer, and give them to him that ſhall do good with them.

V. 9. even his prayer ſhall be abomination] He that will not be taught by God, muſt not think that God will ſupply his need Chap 15. 8. Zech 7. 11, 12, 13. See alſo Joh. 9 31. Or, he that liveth ſcandalouſly, and doth not apply himſelf to the keeping of Gods commandments; though he often pray, and make long prayers with great ſhew of fervency of ſpirit, (which ſeduced, and ſeducing people, who in oppoſition to ſet prayers will not allow the Lords prayer; call, praying by the ſpirit:) yet his prayer ſhall be, &c.

V. 10. Whoſo cauſeth the righteous to go aſtray in an evil way, he ſhall fall himſelf into his own pit] He that ſeeks to draw good men into a trap, ſhall fall into it himſelf, while they hold their own.

V. 11. in his own conceit] Heb. in his eyes.

the poor that hath underſtanding ſearcheth him out] All his outward pomp and ſtatelineſſe removed, he conſiders him in himſelf, and judgeth of him, that his condition is miſerable; rather to be pityed, than envyed by any that is wiſe; and doth underſtand, what true happineſſe is.

V. 12. When righteous men do rejoyce, there is great glory] Verſe 28. Chap. 11. 10. & 29. 2. Eccl. 10. 6.

when the wicked riſe, a man is hidden] Good men hide themſelves for fear of oppreſſion. See upon verſe 1. as bold as a lyon.

hidden] Or, ſought for.

V. 13. He that covereth his ſins, ſhall not proſper] Pſal. 32. 5. 1 Joh. 1. 9, 10.

and forſaketh them] It is not enough to confeſſe our ſins, unleſſe we alſo forſake them.

V. 14 happy is the man that feareth alway] Which conſtantly ſtandeth in aw of God, and is afraid to offend him at any time, Chap. 23. 17.

but he that hardneth his heart ſhall fall into miſchief] Rom. 11.20.

V. 15. ſo is a wicked ruler over the poor people] For he leaves nothing, but undoes them utterly.

V. 16. underſtanding] Heb. underſtandings: That is, void of all kind of wiſdom.

is alſo a great oppreſſour] And therefore ſhall ſoon be cut off: as appears by the contray in the end of the verſe. It may alſo be tranſlated, The Prince that wanteth underſtanding, (the ו in ורב may abundare, as elſewhere ſometimes) is a great oppreſſour: that is, The Prince that greately oppreſſeth, wanteth underſtanding. Some think it great wiſdom to find out wayes how to extort money: but that wiſdom is meer folly. The event will ſhew it, in time; though it may do for awhile.

great oppreſſour] Heb. great of oppreſſions: That is, a very great oppreſſour.

V. 17. A man that doth violence, to the blood of any perſon, ſhall flee to the pit, let no man ſtay him] Gen. 9. 6. Exod. 21. 14.

A man that doth violence to the blood of any perſon] Or, is oppreſſed with. For blood lies heavy on a murtherer, and will bring him to an untimely end, in deſpight of all his friends.

doth violence to the blood] The Hebrew word עשוק is properly, of a paſſive form: but there be divers others of that kind, which nevertheleſſe are interpreted actively: So that it may be tranſlated either way.

perſon] Heb. ſoul.

V. 18. Whoſo walketh uprightly, ſhall be ſaved] Chap. 10. 25.

but he that is perverſe in his wayes] See notes on verſe 6.

ſhall fall at once] Heb. in one. He that uſeth to halt now on one ſide, and then on another, will be ſure to fall on one ſide or other. Or, דרכים (his wayes:) though it have the form of a Dual, may be (as ſometimes) for a plural; which is moſt likely. And ſo באחת may as well be tranſlated at once. Of the ſudden ruine of the wicked, ſo often threatned in the Law, &c. ſee more upon Pſal. 37. 1. &c. Fret not thy ſelf, &c.

V. 19. He that tilleth his land, ſhall have plenty of bread] Chap. 12. 11. See there.

V. 20. A faithful man] Heb. a man of faithfulneſſes: That is, a very faithful man.

A faithful man ſhall abound with bleſſings] God will bleſſe them that are true in their contracts, and curſe them that deal falſly, that they may be rich quickly.

but he that maketh haſte to be rich, ſhall not be innocent] Chap. 13. 11. & 23. 4. 1 Tim. 6. 9.

innocent] Or, unpuniſhed.

V. 21. To have reſpect of perſons, is not good] Chap. 18. 5. & 24. 23.

for a piece of bread that man will tranſgreſſe] He that uſeth to take bribes, will eaſily be corrupted, and do unjuſtly for the ſmalleſt reward that is, Ezek. 13. 19.

V. 22. He that haſteth to be rich, hath an evil eye] Or, he that hath an evil eye, haſteth to be rich, verſe 20.

hath an evil eye] That is, a covetous eye, Chap. 23. 6.

poverty] Or, reproach. Not that the ſame word in the original Text, doth afford both thoſe ſenſes; but becauſe the original Text doth afford, according to variety of Copies, two ſeveral words, or readings: חסד and חסר: the one whereof ſignifieth want; (or poverty:) and the other, reproach. But חסר poverty, is the reading of moſt Copies. Neither would the ſenſe be amiſſe, if the other were embraced.

V. 23. He that rebuketh a man, afterwards ſhall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue] Chap. 27. 4, 5, 6. See there.

He that rebuketh a man, afterwards ſhall find more favour] It may be the party reproved will be angry at firſt, but when he hath conſidered how juſtly he was reproved, he will love the reprover, 1 Pet. 2. 12. But flatterers pleaſe at firſt, till men periſh by following their counſel, and then they curſe them.

V. 24. and ſaith, it is no tranſgreſſion] That either ſaith ſo within himſelf, ſo to diſpence with his conſcience, as if he did not offend God therein: or being found, and charged, makes that his pretence to ſave his credit. But the very heathens might have taught ſuch a one more conſcience: witneſſe him in the Comedy; Egon' patri ſurripere quicquam poſſim, tauto ſeni? Atque adeo ſi facere poſſem, pietas prohibet. And, Qui mentiri aut fallere inſuevit patrem, aut Audebit; tanto magis audebit cæteros, a deſtroyer] Heb. a man deſtroying. לאיש משחית, as before, Chap. 18. 9. by which may be underſtood, a high-way theef and robber: a companion unto ſuch; that is, either like to become one of them himſelf; or, converſant with ſuch wicked perſons, from whence he learns this wicked doctrine.

V. 25. He that is of a proud heart, ſtirreth up ſtrife] Chap. 13. 10. He that truſts in his own ſtrength, ſhall waſte his goods at law: but he that truſts in God ſhall be rich. See alſo upon Chap. 21. 4. an high look and a proud heart, &c.

V. 26. He that truſteth in his own heart, is a fool] And ſhall bring himſelf into many dangers, which he cannot get out of, for not conſidering wiſely of his wayes.

V. 27. He that giveth unto the poor, ſhall not lack] Deut. 15. 8. Chap. 22. 9.

but he that hideth his eyes] Iſai. 58. 7.

ſhall have many a curſe] Chap. 11. 26.

V. 28. When the wicked riſe, men hide themſelves: but when they periſh, the righteous increaſe] Chap. 29. 2. and verſe 12. of this Chapter. See the reference there.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verſe 1. HE that being often reproved] Heb. A man of reproofs.

without remedy] See before, Chap. 6. 15.

V. 2 when the righteous are in authority, the people rejoyce] Chap. 11. 10. & 28. 28. Eccl. 10. 5.

in authority] Or, increaſed.

V. 3. Whoſo loveth wiſdom, rejoyceth his father] Chap. 10. 1. & 15. 20. & 27. 11. See there.

but he that keepeth company with harlots, ſpendeth his ſubſtance] Chap. 5. 9. & 28. 7 Luke 15. 13. And ſo grieveth his father.

keeps company with harlots] Heb. feeds harlots.

V. 4. he that receiveth gifts] Heb. a man of oblations.

V. 5. ſpreadeth a net for his feet] He that giveth ear to the flatterer, is in danger, as the bird is, for which the net is laid.

V. 6. In the tranſgreſſion of an evil man there is a ſnare] To catch the righteous by their bad example: but the righteous avoid it, and rejoyce. Or (according to beſt Expoſitors) the meaning may be, that a wicked man (what by terrour of conſcience, inwardly; what by chances and caſualties, outwardly) is never out of fear and danger: when as the juſt and righteous, may enjoy themſelves in full ſecurity: of which ſecurity, ſee upon Pſal. 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terrour by night, &c. See alſo Chap. 10. 9. He that walketh uprightly, &c.

V. 7. The righteous conſidereth the cauſe of the poor] Job 29. 16, 17. I was a father to the poor, and the cauſe which I knew not, I ſearched out. And I brake the jaws of the wicked, &c. To conſider of the poor, Pſal. 41. 1. in another ſenſe; of which ſee there.

V. 8. Scornful men bring a city into a ſnare] Ambitious perſons, which ſcorn all but themſelves, as Chap. 3. 34. do by ſeeking their own ends bring miſchief upon a ſtate: which men of better temper, help to turn away. Or, more generally, and according to the moſt uſual ſignification of the word, ſcornful men; that is, proud wicked men, that make a mock of godlineſſe, and contemn them that fear God, and make a conſcience of their wayes; as idiots, or ſuperſtitious fooles.

bring a city into a ſnare] Or, ſet a city on fire.

V. 9. whether he rage or laugh, there is no reſt] Whether the fool look angerly or merrily, he that contends with him, ſhall never be quiet. Others; whether the wiſe man deal with him ruſly, or more gently, and as it were laughing, (Ridentem dicere verum, Quid vetat?) it comes all to one; there is no end: neither fair means, nor foul, can do any good upon him. This therefore muſt be underſtood of one that is hardned in his wickedneſſe, and paſt feeling. See upon Chap. 27. 22. Though thou ſhouldſt bray, &c.

V. 10. The blood-thirſty] Heb. men of blood.

but the juſt ſeek his ſoul] Or, and ſeek the ſoul of every juſt man.

the juſt ſeek his ſoul] Take care to preſerve other mens lives, Pſal. 142. 4. Or, thoſe that are juſt and upright themſelves, know how to value the life of a righteous man, and will not be wanting unto him at any time, to bring him out of danger. They interpret his danger, to be theirs, and as they would do for their own lives, ſo they will for his. Others: The juſt ſeek his ſoul, that is, they require it (the life of the upright:) at the hands of the blood thirſty, and will not ſuffer them to eſcape unpuniſhed. Or, (which comes to one) they ſeek the ſoul (or life) of the blood-thirſty, to bring him to juſt puniſhment. The original words will afford any of theſe ſenſes.

V. 11. A fool uttereth all his mind] Chap. 14. 33. Wiſdom reſteth, &c. and 17. 27. He that hath knowledge, &c. See there.

mind] Heb. ſpirit: or, wrath, Iſai. 25. 4.

V. 12. all his ſervants are wicked] They will tell him lies daily to pleaſe him. Regis ad exemplum: ſuch as the ruler is, ſuch will the ſervants be: All books are full of obſervations to that purpoſe. See alſo Eccleſiaſticus 10. 2. As the judge of the people is himſelf, &c.

V. 13. The poor and the deceitful man meet together] Heb. man of deceits: That is, the moſt deceitful man. But here, comparing with Chap. 22. 2. (The rich and the poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all) it is moſt probable, that by a man of deceits, is meant an uſurer; and by an uſurer, a rich man, in general: becauſe, as moſt uſurers, (thoſe that make it their profeſſion) are unconſcionable and fraudulent; (See more upon Pſal. 72. 14. He ſhall redeem their ſouls, &c.) ſo, moſt, rich.

the Lord lightneth both their eyes] Both to the one, and to the other, (and by conſequent, unto all) God is the Author of life and being. He maketh his ſun to riſe (here, he lightneth the eyes) on the evil, and on the good, &c. and Joh. 1. 9. of Chriſt: That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world: being ſpoken of natural light, but whether rational, or vital, we will not here diſpute. The ſame God alſo, that hath appointed that ſome (though not any by unlawful means) ſhould be rich; and others poor: by which diverſity of ſtates and conditions, Commonwealths are maintained. To inlighten the eyes alſo, in Scripture, is ſometimes to comfort and cheriſh; to revive: as Ezra, 9. 8. that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage. Poor men oftentimes, whom we account miſerable for their poverty; by a ſpecial bleſſing, have a greater ſhare of cheerfulneſſe, and inward contentment; than thoſe that we account very happy, judging by the external appearence onely.

the deceitful man [Or, the uſurer.

V. 14. The King that faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever] Chap. 20. 28.

V. 15. The rod and reproof give wiſdom] Verſe 17.

a child left to himſelf, bringeth his mother to ſhame] Chap. 10. 1. & 17. 21, 25.

V. 16. but the righteous ſhall ſee their fall] Pſal. 37. 36. and 58. 10. & 91. 8.

V. 17. Correct thy ſon, and he ſhall give thee reſt] Chap. 13. 24. & 22. 15. & 23. 13, 14.

he ſhall give delight unto thy ſoul] Heb. delights, or, dainties. That is, abundance of delight.

V. 18. Where there is no viſion, &c.] That is, no prophecy: for Prophets were called Seers: and becauſe it was the office of Prophets alſo, to teach and inſtruct the people, by propheſie is ſometimes intended, (as here) publick teaching and preaching.

periſh] Or, is made naked.

he that keepeth the law, happy is he] Want of preaching may damn men, but ſtore of it cannot ſave them, unleſſe they be obedient to it, 1 Sam 3. 1. And, Not the hearers of the law, are juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified, Rom. 2. 13. and Jam. 1. 22. Or, as ſome others: Though, where no preaching is, the Church be in a manner diſſolved, and the generality of people be in great danger; yet it followeth not, but that they that live conſcionably, and practice what they formerly have learned, and know; may do well enough, and be ſaved. Another interpretation, (in reference to thoſe times under the law) not leſſe literal, offers it ſelfe alſo: Where no viſion is; that is, When God doth withdraw himſelf from his people for their ſins, ſo that no Oracle, no ſigns of his appearance, (as Pſal. 74. 9. We ſee not our ſigns, there is no more any Prophet, neither is there among us any that knoweth how long) are left; no wonder, if through multiplicity of publick woes and confuſions, many, both good and bad, do periſh: yet even then this may be their comfort, that are pious and godly; that through their perſeverance in good, they ſhall be happy in the end. See upon Pſal. 9. 6. O thou enemy, &c. and upon Pſal. 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid, &c. Some ancient heathens alſo did maintain, that ἡ μαντικὴ, that is, Oracles, were neceſſary to the preſervation of a Common-wealth: as Socrates, in Xenophon, diſputeth, and Plutarch ſomewhere doth confirm out of experience.

V. 19. A ſervant will not be corrected by words] He that is of a ſervile, and ſurly nature, will not amend without blows.

though he underſtand, he will not anſwer.] He will not anſwer to thy call, but make as though he did not hear thee. Or, though he know his maſters will Luke 12. 47. (which is a great aggravation of his diſobedience: becauſe maſters ſometimes expect that ſervants ſhould do their duty, without ſpeaking to them) and be told of it never ſo much; yet he will not obey. So ſome take anſwering here, for execution, or performance: and Job 19. 16. I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer: I intreated him with my mouth.

V. 20. Seeſt thou a man that is haſty in his words] Rather, in rebus ſuis; as Mercer and others: that is, in his buſineſſes. It agrees with 26. 12. Seeſt thou a man wiſe in his own conceit? there is more hope, &c. For a ſelf-conceited man uſeth not to deliberate long: but truſteth to his own wiſdom and thinks it a diſparagement to take advice from others: hence is his haſte and precipitancy in buſineſſes.

in his words] Or, in his matters.

V. 21. ſhall have him become his ſon at the length] He will think much to do any ſervile work.

V. 22. An angry man ſtirreth up ſtrife, and a furious man aboundeth in tranſgreſſion] Chap. 15. 18. & 26. 21.

V. 23. a mans pride ſhall bring him low] Job 22. 29. Chap. 15. 33. & 18. 12. Matth. 23. 12. Luke 14. 11.

V. 24. he heareth curſing, and bewrayeth it not] Some refer theſe words to that publick examination of perſons ſuſpected, mentioned, Exod. 22. 8. which was wont to be, ſay they, (grounding upon Levit. 6. 4, 5.) with tender of an oath with imprecations to the party: but more likely it is, (with ſome others) that Levit 5. 1. And if a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, &c. is intended. But of the right meaning there too, there is ſome controverſie among Expoſitors, ſome tranſlating, the voice of adjuration; others, the voice of blaſphemy.

curſing] Or, an oath; Iſai. 24. 18.

V. 25. The fear of man bringeth a ſnare] He that feareth man more than God, falleth into a ſnare (which he ſeeks to avoid) and is deſtroyed, Chap. 10. 24. Or, by the fear of man, may be underſtood a continual worldly fear and trepidation, which they that fear not God, and put their truſt in him, are ſubject to: oppoſed to that ſecurity of the godly, of which, ſee before upon verſe 6. In the tranſgreſſion of an evil man, &c. Neither is this contrary to Chap. 28. 14. Happy is the man that feareth alwayes: becauſe that is ſpoken of another kind of fear; a religious, or conſciencious fear; upon which a godly mans ſecurity is chiefly grounded.

ſhall be ſafe] Heb. ſhall be ſet on high.

V. 26. Many ſeek the rulers favour, but every mans judgement cometh from the Lord] Chap. 19. 6.

the rulers favour] Heb. the face of a ruler.

every mans judgement cometh from the Lord] He needeth not to flatter the ruler, but rather pray to God who can incline the Judge to paſſe ſentence as he pleaſe, Chap. 21. 1. Or, by judgement (Heb. משפט) may be underſtood, ſtate and condition of life; riches, or poverty; greatneſſe, or lowneſſe, in point of dignity: which though they ſeeme to depend from the power and will of Princes, (where abſolute) eſpecially: yet the Wiſeman tells us here, that it is God in heaven that doth rule, and over-rule all things.

CHAP. XXX.

Verſ. 1. THe words of Agur, the ſon of Jakeh, &c.] Though theſe names be found no where elſe in Scripture, which hath made ſome men to interpret them, as myſtical: (ſo the Vulgar Latine, and divers ancients :) yet it is more probable, that ſuch a man there was really, famous in his time for his wiſdom ; whoſe Diſciples, among others, are conceived to have been theſe two here named, Ithiel, and Ucal. But when, or where he lived, is altogether uncertain : Moſt Rabbins would have Solomon himſelf to be the object of theſe ſeveral names : and they make ſtrange interpretations of them to that purpoſe : but there is no appearance of any ſolidity in any thing they deliver concerning this matter.

even the Prophesie] Any inſtruction may be called a propheſie, (and ſo in the New Teſtament ſometimes) becauſe it was the office of Prophets to teach and inſtruct, as well as to propheſie : as hath been ſaid already upon the 18. verſe of the former Chapter. But ſome would have the word to ſignifie here, comportatio ; that is, ſay they, συναγωγὴ, a collection : and theſe Proverbs here inſerted, to have been collected out of other Writings of this Agur : or out of his ſayings, and ſentences, then extant. It is but a conjecture, for which I ſee but little ground.

unto Ithiel and Ucal] Which were Agurs ſcolars, or friends

V. 2. Surely I am more brutiſh than any man] It may be read thus ; Surely I am too fooliſh to be a great man, nay I have not the knowledge of an ordinary man in me. So the words are uſed, Pſal. 49. 2. & 62. 9. It ſeems Agur had not his knowledge by humane inſtruction, but by divine inſpiration, as Amos had, Amos 7. 14. Herein he declareth his great humility, who would not attribute any wiſdom to himſelf, but all unto God, Pſal. 73. 22.

V. 3. I neither learned wiſdom] Or thus, I have not learned wiſdom, but I know the knowledge of the holy ones ; That is, I have not been taught by men, but by God, as the Angels of heaven are, by a more immediate illumination. They are called holy ones, Dan. 4. 13, 17. & 8. 17. Or, I have not attained to any great meaſure of true wiſdom, or, of the knowledge of holy and heavenly things. There is a not, in the firſt member, which ſome (as in ordinary conſtructions) would have to belong to the ſecond member alſo ; ſome confine it to the firſt onely : whence this variety is.

the knowledge of the holy] See upon Chap 9. 10. and the knowledge of the holy is underſtanding.

V. 4. Who hath aſcended up into heaven, or deſcended ?] This, and what elſe followes in this verſe, tendeth onely to this, to ſet out the difficulty, or rather impoſſibility of Divine heavenly wiſdome to man : to which purpoſe there is a whole Chapter in Job, to wit, the 28. Surely there is a vein for the ſilver, &c of which, ſee what is ſaid upon Chap. 1. 20. Wiſdom cryeth without, &c. as for thoſe particular words, Who hath aſcended &c. ſee John 3. 13. Rom. 10. 6, 7. and upon Chap. 17. 24. but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth.

Who hath aſcended up into heaven] Who is every where, &c. None but God.

who hath gathered the wind in his fiſt ?] Job 38. 4. &c. Pſal. 104. 3. &c. Iſa. 40. 12. &c.

what is his Name, and what is his ſons name, if thou canſt tell ?] If any ſuch man, that could do theſe things, ever were in the world, tell us ſomewhat of his generation, or pedigree ? either father, or ſon. The word father is not here, but it may be included in the word name, becauſe it was, and is yet the faſhion among the Hebrews, and moſt Orientals, to name every man by his father ; as here, Agur, the ſon of Jakeh, and the like. Or thus ; if yet alive and in being ; what is his name ? Or if dead ; where are any of his poſterity ? what is his ſons name ? Of Chriſt, Eſay 58. 8. Who ſhall declare his generation ? And it ſeems to have been a proverbial ſpeech among the Jews, of one that was but an ordinary man, that they knew whence he was ; (that is, his generation, father, mother &c.) as of one that was not that they knew not ; as of the Meſſias. John 7. 27. (though verſe 42. of the ſame Chapter, that Chriſt was to be of the ſeed of David, they knew well enough,) they ſpeak.

V. 5. Every word of God is pure] Pſal. 12. 6. and 18. 30. and 19. 8. 119. 140.

pure] Heb. purified.

he is a ſhield unto them that put their truſt in him] Pſal. 18. 30. & 84. 11, 12.

V. 6. Adde thou not unto his words, leſt he reprove thee and thou be found a lyar] Deut 4. 2. & 12. 32. Rev. 22. 18, 19. To adde, here, is as much as to counterfeit, or to impoſe : as when a man pretends to have had a revelation, or to deliver ſome meſſage from God ; which, if not true, he doth impoſe upon God, and at the ſame time, but in another ſenſe, doth impoſe upon men too : a right impoſter, in either ſenſe.

leſt he reprove thee, &c.] God ſometimes ſuffers impoſters, through the credulity of men, and ſome falſe ſigns (though true ſometimes in the event, and that, by a ſpecial providence of God, to try us Deut. 13. 1, 2. If there ariſe among you a Prophet, &c.) to prevail very far : ſometimes he ſpeedily reproves them, when their forgeries and impoſtures, and pretended enthuſiaſmes are ſoon diſcovered, and come to light : for which they are juſtly abhorred by all that have any ſolidity of either faith, or judgement in them.

V. 7. Two things have I required of thee] O God.

deny me them not] Heb withhold not from me.

deny me them not before I die] So long as I live.

V. 8. Remove far from me vanity and lyes] Take care of my ſoul and body, ſo as to keep me from falling into any vain or deceitful courſe, and to afford me a competent livelihood, fit for my eſtate and charge.

feed me with food convenient for me] Matth. 6. 11. Heb. of my allowance, or, my part. For in well-ordered Families, every ſervant hath his proportion daily, Chap. 31. 15.

V. 9. Leſt I be full, and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord ?] Deut. 32. 15.

Leſt I be full, and deny thee] Meaning, that they that put their truſt in their riches, forget God, and that by too much wealth, men have occaſion to do ſo.

deny thee] Heb. belye thee.

and take the name of my God in vain] By falſe oaths.

V. 10. Accuſe not a ſervant unto] Heb. hurt not with thy tongue.

Accuſe not a ſervant unto his maſter] For no fault, or for a light one. A ſervants good will is not to be contemned.

and thou be found guilty] To wit, Before God. Or, and thou be made deſolate. That is, leſt the fruit of his ill wiſhes fall upon thee.

V. 11. There is a generation that curſeth their father, &c.] Here begin his quaternaries, that is, his coupling, or comparing of things, by four in number : to which kind of expreſſion his own genius, it ſeems, and phanſie did lead him : and being not ordinary, it is the more emphatical, and apt to make the more impreſſion in the phanſie of the Reader ; as alſo, eaſier to be committed to memory. Of theſe quaternaries, from this to the end of the Chapter, there be ſix in all. In this firſt, he propoſeth four kind of men or ſinners, which of all others he conceived moſt abominable both in the ſight of God and men. It is not ſo fully expreſſed here ; but that to be the aim, may be confirmed from, Chap. 6. 16. Theſe ſix things doth the Lord hate, &c.

that curſeth their father, and doth not bleſſe] The ſenſe of this is further expreſſed verſe 17. The eye that mocketh at his father, and deſpiſeth to obey his mother. &c. ſo that, to curſe, and, not to bleſſe, is in effect no more, than to ſlight, and diſobey.

V. 12. that are pure in their own eyes, and yet not waſhed, &c.] There be two kinds of pride ; Spiritual, and worldly pride. Sometimes they meet together in one ; as when a man hath a great opinion of his own goodneſſe and excellent parts : and thereupon in his ordinary converſation openly aſcribeth to himſelf, and deſpiſeth others ; as the proud Phariſee did in the Goſpel ; and thoſe in Eſay, Chap. 65. 5. Stand by thy ſelf ; come not near to me, for I am holier, &c. And ſometimes they are ſevered : as if a man be humble and lowly, outwardly ; but proud in himſelf, for this very humility, and whatſoever elſe he phanſieth good and commendable in himſelf ; whether real, or imaginary. For diſtinction ſake, we may call the one internal, and the other external pride : though commonly, neither the one be without ſome external evidences ; nor the other, ever found, but from ſome inward cauſe and diſtemper. The firſt kind ſeems to be ſpecially intended here ; as the ſecond, in the next verſe. By worldly pride, we comprehend that alſo, which is altogether grounded upon external things, as wealth, honour, beauty, and the like.

V. 13. lofty are their eyes] Chap. 6. 17.

V. 14. There is a generation, whoſe teeth are as ſwords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, &c.] Job 29. 17. Pſal. 52. 2. & 57. 4.

V. 15. The horſe-leech hath two daughters, &c.] It doth not appear clearly what this, and the next verſe tend unto. For to take them barely, as if he intended only to tell us of ſome natural things that are unſatiable, is more proper to a Naturaliſt, (as by ſome is well obſerved,) than one that takes upon him to teach and propheſie, verſe 1. This hath moved ſome of the Rabbins to ſeek out ſtrange interpretations, and they have found a way to make coherence of ſenſe between the three verſes here following, and thoſe four before, from ver. 11. There is a generation that curſeth their father, &c. They would have עלוקה, by inverſion of letters, (עלק, for עקל) to ſignifie here, not hirudinem, or horſe-leech : but perverſitatem, that is, wickedneſſe ; and ſo make theſe four mentioned inſatiable things, to be intended as particular puniſhments to thoſe four kinds, or generations of ſinners inſiſted upon in the former verſes. To make this good and plauſible, what they ſay of every particular word, except I apprehended more ſolidity in it than I do, would not, I think, be much to the purpoſe. Yet if any be ſo curious, they may read Aben Ezra, either in his own language ; printed with divers Bibles : or, if they will, in Latine, as it is ſet out by Antonius Giggeius, a Doctor of the Ambroſian Collodge in Italy. Moſt Expoſitors are of opinion, that by theſe ſeveral examples, the covetous unmerciful extortioner, and oppreſſour of the poor, mentioned in the 14. verſe, is aimed at : which is very probable.

the horſe-leach hath two daughters] The leach hath two forks in her tongue, which here he calleth her two daughters, wherewith ſhe ſucketh the blood, and is never ſatiate : even ſo are the covetous extortioners unſatiable. But this of two forks is denyed by ſome, who quote Authors, that have written of that ſubject. Not two they ſay ; but three : and therefore by two daughters here, they underſtand any that reſemble, in their converſation, the unſatiablneſſe of the horſe-leech ; ſuch as are particularly mentioned in the following verſe. A certain number, for an uncertain, as they would have it. Or, two daughters, becauſe of the word, give, give; doubled.

V. 16. and the barren womb] Some; and the narrow womb. And there be reaſons from nature, given for both. But I will not entertain my reader with ſuch diſcourſes.

It is enough] Heb. Wealth.

V. 17. the raven] Such children ſhall come to an untimely end, and be denied burial. Thoſe horrible judgements which, as of all ſinners the moſt inhumane and unnatural, they muſt expect one day at the hands of God, are here ſet out by ſuch temporall evils, as among men are commonly moſt dreaded. See before upon ver. 11. There is a generation that curſeth, &c. Some ſuch ſaying alſo ancient Grecians had concerning tyrants, the worſt of men.

of the valley] Which haunt the valleyes to ſeek for carrion.

the valley] Or, the brook.

V. 19. The way of an Eagle in the aire, the way of a ſerpent:] Others inſtead of via, that is, the way: they tranſlate, veſtigium, the foot-ſtep. The words may ſeem to differ but little: but the difference of ſenſe, that is made of theſe different words, is more apparant, and conſiderable. If we ſay foot ſteps, in the ordinary notion; it is ſure enough, that neither, Eagle in the aire; nor ſerpent upon a rock; nor ſhip, upon the ſea, leave any print of either feet, bulck; or body, by which they may be traced. But then ſay they, how ſhall this be verified of, the way of a man with a maid: is not impregnation, or being with child (the natural and ordinary conſequence) a very ſufficient token or argument, by which the way of a man, in this kind maybe known & deſcried? They may be thought to ſay ſomewhat: but upon further conſideration, the objection will appear but weak and impertinent. For the queſtion is not of conſequents, (whether probable or neceſſary:) by which antecedent actions may in time be diſcovered; for ſo it may be objected of the reſt; as for example, if a ſerpent paſſe by, though he may not be known by his foot-ſteps, yet by ſome noyſe, (ſibila lambebant linguis vibrantibus ora: in the Poet:) or by ſome effect of his fierceneſſe, or the like he may perchance: and ſo of the reſt: but of certain ſignes and marks, in the place, in the nature of footſteps. But this will bring us to a phyſicall conſideration, never (though handled by many Phyſicians and Naturaliſts, at large;) to be determined; whether there be any certain natural ſignes of virginity, by which a maid may be known from her that is not. As for thoſe ſignes mentioned in Scripture, moſt agree, that it was by a ſpeciall diſpenſation of God, for a time, and no general caſe otherwiſe. They that will be ſo curious, as to deſire further reſolution in this particular, may read (not to mention others at this time:) Joh. Benevonicii Epiſtolicas Queſtiones, where they ſhall find this matter agitated both by a Phyſician, and a Divine; both learned men: yea and this very place we are now upon, conſidered of upon this occaſion. Now thoſe that are againſt this tranſlation of the word, by veſtiginm, or footſtep; and maintain it muſt be, way: (the moſt literal, to the original word:) they are put to it to tell us, what it is that is ſo extraordinary in the flight of an Eagle, &c. that Solomon ſhould here inſiſt upon them, as things of ſuch abſtruſeneſſe, and not to be comprehended by the wit of man. Of an Eagle, they ſay, becauſe of all birds ſhe onely flyeth ſtrait upwards: of a ſerpent, becauſe of his ſwift motions without feet: of a ſhip, becauſe of her ſtructure, maſts, ſayles; and eſpecially her rudder, by which ſo vaſt a body is guided and turned at will; and laſtly, for the way of a man in a maid, they tell us of ſome myſteries, affections, paſſions, ſecret wooings and communications, by which the moſt watcfull are often deceived. I will forbear further arguing: and deliver my opinion as briefly as I can. When I have well weighed all circumſtances and particulars; what is ſaid by others, and what my own judgement doth ſuggeſt unto me; my opinion is, that of the three firſt particulars, being but an introduction, as it were, to the laſt; footſteps will do beſt: of the laſt, wayes. I conceive that Solomon his aym was, to ſet out the ſecret wayes of young lovers, (not eaſily to be diſcerned or prevented by the greateſt care of parents, or others, that have charge of them;) by things that have ſome affinity, in that they leave no print, or footſtep after them; and conſequently, to warne ſuch whom it might concern, to be the more careful: not to truſt words, countenance, proteſtations, and the like; but according to the cuſtome of thoſe times and places, to keep their virgins out of all ſight, and acceſſe; which from this very cuſtome of cloſe keeping, and recluſedneſſe, were called עלמות in the Hebrew tongue. Many ſuch warnings we may finde in ancient Authors. And there may probably be ſome emphaſis here in the very word עלמה Solomon intimating by that word, that though virgins be recluſe, and out of ſight, according to the ordinary cuſtome; yet for all this, if there be not ſome extraordinary care and obſervation; a man may find a way, or make his way, to compaſſe his deſignes. Of the ſecret wayes and communications of lovers, beſides Comicks; Ovid, De arte amandi will ſufficiently ſatisfie them that deſire further ſatisfaction. And as for the nature of love, in reference to ſecrecy, there is an ancient inſcription in ſome part of the world, which beginneth Ælia Lalia Criſpis: written ſo miſtically and ænigmatically, that it hath poſed the wits of many learned men to find out the meaning; and divers expoſitions have been made of it; both philoſophical, and others: ſome ſuppoſing the philoſophers Stone to be intended; others, ſome other thing: until at laſt ſome happily lighted upon the truth, and did ſo throughly unriddle it, that no further queſtion, I think, can be made about it. As for the Jewes exception, and objection againſt Chriſtians, that the word עלמה doth not properly ſignifie a maid; it can have no ground at all from this place, ſince it is ordinary, in all languages, and among all men, to call things by their names, and titles, according to outward appearance and profeſſion; though in reality of truth it be quite contrary. That the ſame word דרך in the original Text ſhould be taken for foot-ſtep, properly, and for way more generally; there being ſo much affinity in the thing; can be no wonder at all: and it hath been obſerved before more than once, that the ſame word, or phraſe, where there is no ſuch affinity in the thing, is ſometimes uſed in different ſenſes, in a very little compaſſe of words: ſometimes, in the ſame verſe, or line. Beſides, there is no neceſſity that עלמה here ſhould be taken of a tainted, or corrupted maid: according to that interpretation of the wayes of a man; of ſecret wooing, communications, &c. that hath been inſiſted upon.

V. 20. of an adulterous woman] Though not the ſame ſpoken of in the former verſe; yet the ſame thing, in effect, is ſtill proſecuted: the myſtical hidden courſes of love, whether a maid, or a married woman be the object.

midſt] Heb. heart.

and wipeth her mouth] She hath her deſire, and after counterfeiteth, as though ſhe were an honeſt woman: as a licouriſh, and filching ſervant, eats ſtolne bread, and wipes his mouth after it, and appeares as if he had not ſtolne it.

V. 22. For a ſervant when he reigneth, &c.] Chap. 19. 10. Theſe commonly abuſe the ſtate whereunto they are called, and the comforts they receive. There is no obſcurity in the words; and no man, that hath any knowledge of the world, will require, further confirmation or illuſtration of the ſenſe.

V. 23. an handmaid that is heir to her miſtreſſe] Which is married to her maſter after the death of her miſtreſſe.

V. 24. but they are exceeding wiſe] They contain matter of great inſtruction in them.

exceeding wiſe] Heb. wiſe, made wiſe. See upon Chap. 6. 6. conſider her wayes and be wiſe.

V. 25. The ants are a people not ſtrong, yet they prepare their meat in the ſummer] Chap. 6. 6. &c.

ants are a people] Or, ants a people.

V. 26. The conies are but a feeble folk] So Gods people, though feeble, have God as a powerfull rock to protect them, Pſal. 18. 2. & 40. 17. See upon Pſal. 104. 18. and the rocks for the conies.

conies are but feeble] Or, conies a feeble.

V. 27. The locuſts have no King] How much more ſhould thoſe that have governours over them, live orderly under them.

have] Or, which have.

by bands] Heb. gathered together.

V. 28. The ſpider taketh hold with her hands, and is in Kings Palaces] Chap. 22 29.

taketh] Or, which taketh.

V. 31. grey-hound] Or, horſe. Heb. זרזיר of which word, not elſewhere to be found in the Scripture, there be divers other tranſlations; as, cock, &c. but not any grounded upon ſo much probability as either of theſe, greyhound, or horſe. See (who can; and deſires further ſatisfaction) Fulleri Miſcellanea, lib. 5. cap. 12.

grey-hound] Heb. girt in the loins.

againſt whom there is no riſing up] Eccleſ. 8. 4. A king whoſe power is incontrolable: or a king that keeps his ſubjects in due order, ſo that there is no inſurrectioon in the ſtate. This ſenſe is not to be found fault with, as very proper to the place, and agreeable to the Hebrew words, מלך אלקום עמו, Yet the learned reader may take notice from a very learned man, Mr. Edward Pocock, (as for his other abilities, but eſpecially for his ſingular knowledge of the Oriental tongues, a great ornament to the Univerſity of Oxford:) that the ſame words according to the Idiotiſme of the Arabick tongue, according to which divers places of the Scripſure; in Job eſpecially; (ſee one example upon Pſal. 104. 26. that Leviathan whom thou haſt made, &c.) by learned Expoſitors are interpreted: may alſo be tranſlated, Rex cum quo populus eſt: vel, Quem ſequitur populus ſuus. That is, A King with his people about him: or, whom his people doth follow. And this would agree well with Chap. 14. 28. In the multitude of people is the Kings honour, &c.

V. 32. If thou haſt done fooliſhly in lifting up thy ſelf] If thou have evill thoughts againſt thy King, give them over, for thou wilt not prevail, verſe 31. Eccleſ. 8. 3 & 10. 20. The word alſo (according to beſt Expoſitors) may more generally be interpreted, of any evill, which through errour, or raſhneſſe, we are in the purſuit of. Many are of that nature. They would not willingly treſpaſſe, but if once they have entred upon a buſineſſe, (or opinion;) though the unreaſonableneſſe of it doth appear to them afterwards, they are ſo rigid and inflexible, (which they interpret conſtancy and reſolution) they will hardly be perſwaded to go back. This advice may belong to ſuch.

afte

lay thine hand upon thy mouth] Job 21.5. & 40. 4. Mich. 16.

V. 33. ſo the forcing of wrath bringeth forth ſtriſe For, churning, wringing, and forcing, there is but one word in the Original, מיץ and but one word (varied in numbers onely; אף and אפים) for noſe, and wrath: which makes the whole expreſſion much ſweeter, and Proverb like in the original Hebrew, than it can be in any any tranſlation, And ſo it is, not here onely but in many others of theſe Proverbs. By forcing of wrath, or forcing wrath, as ſome render it, is meant long and reiterated provocations, able to extort an indignation even from the moſt gentle and patient. Then by contention, we muſt underſtand ſuch as St. James writeth of where envying and ſtriſe is, there is confuſion and every evill work, Jam. 3. 16. Provocation of wrath inevitably bringeth forth ſtriſe and miſchief.

CHAP. XXXI.

Verſe 1. THe words of King Lemuel] That is, of Solomon, who was called Lemuel, that is, of God, becauſe God had ordained him to be King over Iſrael, rather than any of his elder brethren, 1 King. 2. 15. 22. Or, it may be, was ſo called of mother, in his infancie, with ſome inverſion or tranſpoſition of letters, for more eaſie pronunciation, from his right name Solomon. It is very ordinary, in all places of the world.

the prophecy that his mother taught him] The Doctrine, ſee upon Chap. 30. 1. even the prophecy) which his mother Bathſheba taught him.

V. 2. What my ſon! and what the ſon of my womb, &c.] This abrupt beginning, and often repetition of the word ſon, doth well ſet out the affectionate care of a tender and wiſe mother, for her deareſt child, in this main buſineſſe. Many mothers, yea moſt, have affection enough to their children (an affection of fondneſſe and cockering:) but they uſe it not aright, for their good and vertuous education. Leſſe of that affection, would do their children more good.

the ſon of my vowes] Whom I made many vowes to God for, before I had thee, as 1 Sam. 1. 11. Or, that thou mighteſt be King.

V. 3. Give not thy ſtrength unto women] Solomon was forewarned to avoyd wantonneſſe by his mother here, and by his father, Chap. 5. 9. yet he fell into it. Wiſdom and inſtruction fail of their fruit oftentimes.

nor thy wayes to that which deſtroyeth Kings] Meaning, that women are the deſtruction of Kings, if they haunt them, Chapter 7. 26.

V. 4. it is not for Kings to drink wine] That is, the king muſt not give himſelf unto immoderate drinking, and ſo neglect his office, which is to execute judgement. See Eccleſiaſtes 10. 16, 17.

to drink wine] Either, to drink wine without mixture, a thing not uſed in thoſe hot countries, (whereof ſee upon Pſal. 75. 8. full of mixture:) but by intemperate men, in Latin properly called merobibi: or to drink wine not for ſtrength (for which uſe it was ordained by God, and for comfort in time of need:] but for drunkenneſſe: Eccleſ. 10. 17.

V. 5. Leſt they drink and forget the law] Quid non ebrietas deſignat? as the Latin Poet. There is no manner of wickedneſſe that drunkenneſſe is not capable of, and they guilty, in ſome meaſure, that wilfully, and wittingly, expoſe themſelves to the danger of it.

pervert] Heb. alter.

of any of the afflicted] Heb. of all the ſons of affliction.

V. 6. Give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts] Upon this place, (as is conceived by many,) eſpecially, was that cuſtom of the Jewes grounded, to give wine to them to them that were condemned to death: as we read in Chriſts caſe, Matth. 27. 24. (according to ſome Copies: for others read there ὄξος, vineger; not οἶνον, wine: but ſee Beza there;) and Mark 15. 23. called therefore Amos 2. 8. the wine of the condemned; according to ſome; though otherwiſe, and more probably interpreted, by moſt, But that there was ſuch a cuſtome among the Jewes no man doth queſtion: and all Rabbins bear witneſſe: but whether at all, or how juſtly grounded upon theſe words of Solomon, is another queſtion; concerning which all are not of one opinion. But this is not a place for it. Certain it is, that Solomons words, (and that according to beſt Expoſitors) will admit of a more generall interpretation: ready to periſh, that is, through poverty, &c. as Deut. 26. 5. a Syrian ready to periſh was my father, &c. which is confirmed by the verſe following, Let him drink, and forget his poverty, &c. and that wine is proper and natural, to revive the heart of the diſtreſſed and afflicted, whether through want, or any other croſſe and affliction, we are told, Pſal. 104. 15.

of heavy heart] Heb. bitter of ſoul.

V. 8. Open thy mouth for the dumb] Defend their cauſe that are in great danger, and unable to help themſelves, Chap. 24. 11.

ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction] Heb. the ſons of deſtruction. See upon Chap. 24. 11, 12.

V. 9. judge righteouſly, and plead the cauſe of the poor and needy] Levit. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 16. See alſo upon Pſal. 72. 4. He ſhall judge the poor of the people, &c.

V. 10. Who can find a vertuous woman] Chap. 12. 4. This commendation of a good wife is ſet out elegantly in the Hebrew. Every verſe to the end of the Chapter begins with a ſeveral Hebrew letter, according to the Alphabet: as divers choice Pſalms do. See upon Pſalm 25. at the end.

V. 11. The heart of her husband doth ſafely truſt in her] Commits with confidence the houſhold affairs to her, as Potiphar did to Joſeph, Gen. 39. 4, 6.

he ſhall have no need of ſpoil] He ſhall not need to get riches by indirect means, as many ſouldiers do; for his wife will fill his houſe with goods, as the camp is full after the ſpoil of a city: Or, ſpoils may be put here for all manner of proviſion: which is the more likely, and, by moſt, approved interpretation. See the like Pſal. 111. 5. and verſe 15. here, giveth meat to her houſhold.

V. 14. She bringeth her food from a far] She ſells her cloth to the merchant for things needful, verſe 24. Or, rather, ſhe provides for all neceſſaries for her houſe, and houſe-keeping, (whereof divers things come from far places) long before hand; and in due ſeaſon; that ſhe may not be to ſeek, when ſhe ſhould uſe them.

V. 15. giveth meat to her houſhold] As a lyon riſeth betimes to get a prey, that may ſerve him and his all the day; ſo doth ſhe riſe her ſelf, and raiſe her maids betimes, to get food for her family by labour.

meat] Or, prey, Pſal. 111. 5. See before upon 11. no need of ſpoil.

a portion to her maidens] To appoint every one their ſtint of work, or, of meat.

V. 16. and buyeth it] She purchaſeth it with the gains of her travel.

buyeth] Heb. taketh.

with the fruit of her hands ſhe planteth a vineyard] She not onely looks that her ſervants work, but works her ſelfe alſo, verſe 27.

V. 17. She girdeth her loines with ſtrength] She uſeth vigilancy and diligence, in her labour, 2 King. 4. 29.

V. 18. She perceiveth] Heb. She taſteth.

She perceiveth] Or, When ſhe perceiveth.

She perceiveth that her merchandiſe is good] Her circuitio, or negotiatio; as the word סחרה is alſo tranſlated; that is, her dealings, doings, negotiation. She conſiders of it upon her pillow, (which is the beſt time for conſideration) and finding that all matters thrive with her, according to her own hearts deſire; ſhe reaps this fruit of her labours, proper to her ſelf, and, and greater than any other: a complacency within her ſelf, and ſweet contentment of mind. This is likely to be in the night, eſpecially, when the thoughts are moſt free: which, as I conceive, gave Solomon occaſion immediately upon it, to mention, her candle burning in the night. Moſt others make this to be the coherence, (which is very good ſo too,) that finding how all things thrive with her, ſhe is thereby encouraged to encreaſe her induſtry, and to labour night and day; which nevertheleſſe muſt be underſtood as ſpoken hyperbolically, or figuratively, implying no more, in effect, but that ſhe plyeth her buſineſſe with great conſtancy and alacrity. Were it not for this coherence between the two members of the verſe; this her taſting of her merchandiſe, might very literally be underſtood of her both skill, and care in taſting and trying her ſeveral wares and commodities, before ſhe paid for them; no contemptible commendation, in point of œconomy, and domeſtick providence. Ὥσπερ οὖν (ſaith an ancient author to this purpoſe) ἐπειδ' ἄν τις καταπλεύσῃ τῶν ἐμπόρων, —— ἀλλὰ πρότερον γευσάμενος, &c. that is, As when an unknown merchant comes to you with a ſhip laden with wares, (or proviſions) you do not preſently diſcredit him, becauſe unknown, but having firſt taſted of his wine, or what ever elſe it is, that he brings, having made trial of it, if it pleaſe you, you buy of it; if it doth not, you leave it: So, &c.

V. 19. She layeth her hands to the ſpindle] There be divers things in this deſcription, that ſeem to belong to an induſtrious poor woman, ſuch a one as the beſt of Latine Poets doth deſcribe at large in that excellent Poem of his called Moretum: one, who by her labour, and induſtry, makes a hard ſhift to get her living: other things againe, that ſet out an induſtrious Indeed, but very wealthy woman; a woman, of great rank and quality. It may be that Solomon might of purpoſe, mixe both; to ſhew, that whether rich or poor, a woman may be vertuous and induſtrious in her kind, according to her temporal eſtate and condition. But withal, we muſt know, that divers things have reference to particular cuſtomes of thoſe times, much different from ours; (at leaſt in England,) as that which is written here of the ſpindle, or diſtaffe. For certain it is, (as by divers teſtimonies of ancient authors may further appear.) that time was, when even Kings Daughters were not aſhamed of that employment.

her hands] Or, then her hands.

V. 20. She ſtretcheth] Heb. ſhe ſpreadeth.

yea, ſhe reacheth forth her hands] She not onely gets to maintain her family, but alſo to give to the poor, which ſhe doth liberally, not with one hand alone, but with both, when need is.

V. 21. ſcarlet] Or, double garments.

her cloathing is ſilk and purple] This may be underſtood, as ſpoken hyperbolically, or metaphorically, for choice and good. Byſſus (which may be tranſlated, either ſilk, as here; or, fine linnen, as in Luke: the Hebrew שש doth comprehend both) & purpura, are an expreſſion of exceſſe, Luke 16. 19. However, rich and honourable women may be cloathed with ſilk and purple; it becomes them well enough; ſo they do not make that their chiefeſt ornament, and be proud of it, which doth very ill become true nobility.

ſilk and purple] Some learned men (ſee Bochartus, in his Geographia Sacra:) would have ſilk and purple, by a figure called ἓν διὰ δυοῖν (often mentioned in theſe obſervations) to be byſſum purpurâ tinctam; that is, ſilk dyed with purple. I will not diſpute it, becauſe it is not material to the ſenſe.

V. 22. She maketh her ſelf coverings of tapeſtry] For beds.

V. 23. Her husband is known] Noted, becauſe of his wives good houſwifery, or by the good cloathes ſhe makes him.

in the gates] In the aſſemblies and places of judgement, Chap. 1. 21. Ruth 4. 1.

V. 24. and ſelleth it] She not onely provides cloth for her family, but alſo to ſell, and for a great price.

V. 25. and ſhe ſhall rejoyce in time to come] Or, and ſhe laugheth at the time to come. That is, ſhe is ſo well provided of all things neceſſary for her family, that ſhe fears no want. See Job 5. 21, 22.

V. 26. She openeth her mouth with wiſdom] She teacheth her children and ſervants, not onely the fear of God, but alſo how to labour, and get a living, and alſo how to be provident, that they may be bountiful unto the poor in future times.

and in her tongue is the law of kindneſſe] Et inſtructio gratiæ ſuper lingua ejus; according to ſome: that is, And inſtruction of grace is in, or upon her tongue. Inſtructions of grace, for, gracious inſtruction; according to the Hebrew idiotiſme, very frequent in all parts of Scripture.

V. 28. Her children ariſe up] To do reverence to her, when ſhe comes in, and they ſpeak highly of her, as well living as dead.

her] Or, her ſaying, as Pſal. 105. 15.

V. 29. Many daughters have done vertuouſly] This is the commendation her husband and children give her.

have done vertuouſly] Or, have gotten riches.

excelleſt them all] Heb. aſcendſt above them all.

V. 30. a woman that feareth the Lord] Before he ſpake ot the apparel of her body, now he declareth the apparel of her mind, which is the fear of God, and that is her greateſt ornament, 1 Pet. 3. 4, 5. whether joyned with beauty, or ſevered from it.

ſhe ſhall be praiſed] Heb ſhall paiſe her ſelf. That is, ſhall give juſt cauſe to all men to praiſe her, verſe 31.

V. 31. Give her of the fruit of her hands] Confeſſe her diligent labours, and commend her therefore.

let her own works praiſe her in the gates] Foraſmuch as the moſt honourable are clad in the apparell that ſhe made, Acts 9. 39. Or, let them ſpeak in the publick aſſemblies of her curious works, to her great praiſe, when ſhe is dead and gone. She ſhall have praiſe, both in publick and private.

ANNOTATIONS

On the Book of

ECCLESIASTES.

Eccleſiaſtes, Or, the Preacher.

The Argument.

T*He Authour of this Book both by the Style, and by the Title of it appeareth to have been* Solomon, ſince no other ſon of David was King in Ieruſalem, but he: He ſeemeth to have written it in his old Age, when he took a more ſerious view, of his paſt Life. The Honours, pleaſures, wealth, wiſdom, he had ſo abundantly enjoyed: The Errors and miſcarriages which he had fallen into; The Large experience, and many obſervations he had made, of things Natural, Moral, Domeſtical, Civil, Senſual, Divine: The Curious and Critical inquiry he had made after true happineſſe, and what Contribution all things under the Sun could afford thereunto. Concerning which, He doth, 1. In the general diſcover the utter vanity and inſufficiency of all things here below to make a man Bleſſed, in regard of their mutable nature, of their weakneſs and diſproportion to the Soul of man: of the wearineſs which is contracted by the ſtudying of them: and the Impoſsibility of over drawing from them more than hath been formerly extracted; and conſequently the fruitleſs attempt of any that ſhould ever after go about to receive ſatisfaction from them. 2. He demonſtrateth this General propoſition touching the moſt Vain Vanity of all things under the Sun by an Induction of thoſe particulars, from which, above all others, men uſually expect the greateſt contentment. Thoſe are. 1. Wiſdom and Knowledge both natural and moral, for inquiry whereinto no man was ever furniſhed with greater abilities and ſtronger inclinations in himſelf; or with more fitting proviſions and aſſiſtants from without, than Solomon was, in regard of the greatneſſe of his dignity and eſtate; and yet after all he concludeth, That Wiſdome and Knowledge do but increaſe grief and ſorrow, ſo far are they from bringing ſuch bleſſedneſs to the ſoul as may fully ſatisfie the deſires thereof. 2: Pleaſures and Delights, which he had as much advantage by his greatneſs to Enjoy, and by his wiſdom to Examine, as ever any other man ſhould have: and yet all the content he expected from them, did end in hatred of them, and deſpair of ever mending his condition by them. 3. Honour, greatneſs, and power in the world, concerning which, he ſheweth that it is ſo far from making men Happy, as that without the fear of God to correct and temper it, it is the occaſion of much wickedneſs to thoſe that have it, and of much miſery to thoſe that ſuffer under it: It uſually breaking forth into oppreſsion and violence, whereby men in power carry themſelves like beaſts towards their brethren, and ſhall themſelves die like beaſts, undeſired and unlamented. It being likewiſe matter of much diſcouragement to men that are oppreſſed by it, making them weary of their lives, careleſs of their labours, reſolved rather upon idleneſs, than upon envied imployments; and to get what they can privately to themſelves, than having been publickly uſeful to be repayed with no other Rewards than wrong and danger: by which means Society and Community of ſervices amongſt men, ſo greatly beneficial to publick intereſt, are obſtructed and diſſolved. 4. An outward form of Religion and of Divine worſhip, into which fooliſh men by carnal confidence, and ſuperficial performances, do alſo put diverſe vanities, and make even Gods ſervice unuſeful to their Happineſſe. 5. Riches and great poſſeſſions, which are ſo farre from ſatisfying the heart of man, as that they occaſion more cares, leſſe ſleep, leſſe quiet, are ſnares and occaſions of much Hurt to the owners oft them, who, living, poſſeſſe them with ſorrow; and dying, part with them with wrath and indignation: Having litle benefit by them in their life, as having not power to enjoy them nor in their death any comfort from them, as leaving them to they know not whom, being not at all exempted by them either from miſery or mortality.

And having thus diſcovered the vanity of the principal things from whence the Heart of man might have expected ſatisfaction: He doth thereupon preſcribe many excellent means for healing and abating of that Vanity, and for procuring tranquility unto the mind: and peace and comfort to the life of a man. Such are, Contentation of heart in the ſweet and free Enjoyment of all outward Bleſſings, with thanksgiving, and in the fear of God. Quiet and Humble Acquieſcency under the holy and powerful providence of God in all the Events which befall us in the world. Sincerity of heart in his worſhip, and prudent piety in our vowes, prayers, and addreſſes unto him. Patience of ſpirit under all the oppreſſions we meet with in the world. A compoſed preparedneſſe of mind to undergo ſorrows and afflictions. Prudent and pious moderation of ſpirt in our behaviour towards all men, that ſo we may preſerve our names from Calumny, and our perſons from danger. Meekneſſe, Charity, Patience toward ſuch as offend, conſidering Common frailty, and our own weakneſſe. Sobriety of mind, contenting our ſelvos with a meaſure of wiſdom and knowledg, and not buſying our ſelves with things too high for us. Practical Prudence, which may render us beautiful in the eyes of others. Loyalty and obedience towards Mugiſtrates, that our lives may not be made uncomfortable by their diſpleaſure. VViſdom to diſcern of time and judgement. Preparedneſſe of heart againſt inevitable evils. Submiſſion to Holy and invincible Providence of God, admiring his works, adoring his judgements. Joyful fruition of Comforts, Conſcionable and induſtrious walking in our particular Callings. Wiſdom how to carry our ſelves amidſt the many Caſualties which meet us in the world, ſo as that we may by our loyalty towards Superiours decline the danger of diſpleaſure from them: and by our Charity to Inferiours, lay up a good foundation for our ſilves, againſt the time to come. Laſtly, Moderation in the uſe of comforts here; And preparation by the fear of God, and keeping of his Commandments, for death and Judgement hereafter. That by theſe means as our Life is ſweet, ſo our Death may be welcome. That the piety of our yonth may help us to bear the infirmities of our age, and to lift up our Heads in the day of Redemption.

CHAP. I.

IN this Chapter, we have, 1. The Inſcription of the whole Book, verſe 1. wherein the Author thereof is deſcribed by his Natural Relation, the ſon of David, His Civil Relation, King in Jeruſalem: and his Church Relation, a Preacher; or a penitent ſoul, returning into the boſome of the Church, from whence by many groſſe miſcarriages he had ſecluded himſelf. 2. A generall Propoſition, ſetting forth the utter inſufficiency of all things under the Sun to make a man Bleſſed, and the extreme vanity which is in them, in relation unto ſuch an End, (however otherwiſe uſeful and beneficial they may be, within their own ſphere, when ſanctified, to ſweeten and comfort the life of a man; who hath placed his Happineſſe in God:) inſomuch, that all the labour which is taken, to extract happineſſe from the Creature, will be wholly fruitleſſe, and without any profit at all, verſe 2, 3. 3. The proof of this general Propoſition;

1. By mans mortality, whereby he is quickly removed from the fruition of them, whereas that which makes a man happy ought for ever to abide with him, verſe 4.

2. By the Inſtability of all other Creatures; they come, and preſently they go, and are never in a fixed condition: If coming, they make happy; then departing, they leave miſerable again. By which inſtability of the Creatures, being themſelves continually unſatiſfied, is implyed, 1. Their weakneſſe to miniſter ſatisfaction to ſo noble a creature as man, verſe 5, 6, 7. 2. The reſtleſſe and fruitleſs labour which is taken in ſeeking ſatisfaction from things which only affect the ſenſes, ſince the Eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor the ear with hearing verſe 8.

3. By the continuall Viciſſitudes and returns of the ſame things, which having failed once, yea often before, are never likely to afford further ſupplies, than already they have done (which indeed are none) towards the happineſſe of a man. And therefore except they can miniſter ſome new matter of ſatisfaction to the ſoul, which was never found in them before, and which indeed they will never do; impoſſible it is, but the ſame diſappointment which others have met with, muſt likewiſe befall thoſe who ſhall from the ſame things ſeek for that, which the wiſeſt of men heretofore were never able to extract from them, verſe 9, 10, 11.

4 By Solomons own experience, who by the dignity of his place, by the inclination of his heart, by the greatneſſe of his wiſdom and learning, and by the abundance of his wealth; was able to go as far as any other man could in this enquiry after true happineſs; and when he had ſet himſelf to make a moſt Critical and accurate ſearch into all things here below, doth conclude of them all in general, and of the moſt excellent of them all in particular, namely of wiſdom and knowledge, that they are not only Vanity, and ſo unable to ſatisfie the ſoul, but are further Vexation of ſpirit, as cauſing much grief and ſorrow to that heart which is immoderately converſant about them.

Verſe 1. THe words of the Preacher, the ſon of David, King in Jeruſalem*] Theſe words are the inſcription of this Book, ſetting down the Authour thereof by his parentage, dignity, and deſign in this writing. The Authour is prefixed, as owning and avowing the doctrine therein contained: His dignity is added, to ſet on the drift and ſcope of the Book the better. A King. Such a King, the ſon of David, ſo piouſly educated, 1 Reg. 2. 2. 3. 1 Chr. 28.9. Prov.31. 1. ſo ſolemnly by God ſelected, ſeparated to that Humour, 2 Sam 7.12.—15. 2 Chron. 1.1. ſo admirably endowed with inward wiſdom, whereby he was fixed, as in ſpeciall for the work of Government, 1 Reg. 3. 12, 28. ſo likevviſe for all natural and moral inquiries, 1 Reg.10.3. 1Reg.4.29.——34. So rightly furniſhed with all outward means to further ſuch an iniquiry, 2 Chron.9. 22. ſo fixed and wholly taken up with it. ſometimes vitiouſly taking his fill of outward pleaſures, 1 Reg. 11. 1. ſometimes critically, ſetting himſelf to extract the quinteſſence of all ſublunary perfections, Eccleſ.1. 17. and laſtly, being inſtructed by God, an inſpired perſon, and called out to publiſh this as a Preacher of ſo neceſſary a truth to Gods people; In all theſe reſpects, there is much Authority added to what the wiſe man delivers in this Book, and he doth hereby excite the acception of the people thereunto, as unto the words of a penitent Convert, and of a wiſe, holy, and potent Prince.

The Words of the Preacher] Some read it as a proper name, the words of Koheleth ſon of David, and ſo would have it to be one of the names of Solomon as Jedidiah, 2 Sam.12.25. Lemuel, Prov. 31. 1. It is uſually out of the Greek rendred Eccleſiaſtes, or the Preacher: as if Solomon had publickly delivered it to the Congregation, (as vve find ſometimes Kings and extraordinary perſons have ſpoken to the people in their Church aſſemblies, 1 Reg. 8. 1. 12.) But it ſeemeth chiefly to ſignifie Solomons repentance, and reuniting himſelf to the congregation of Gods people, from whence by his idolatries and other apoſtaſies he had departed: and ſo the ſenſe is, The words of the ſoul, or perſon congregated or gathered unto the Church, or congregation of Saints, Pſal.89.6. viz. of the ſon of David, King in Jeruſalem. Some were not to be admitted into the congregation at all, Deut.23 3 Nehem.13. 1. and others by idolatry and apoſtacy, did ſhut out themſelves from the aſſemblies of the Saints, by joyning themſelves to other gods. Now here Solomon doth by ſerious and ſolemn repentance return into the boſom of that congregation, from which by his idolatry he had departed, and turned his heart from the Lord God of Iſrael, 1 King 11.9. And doth therein. and thereunto declare the vanity of all other wayes, ſave onely the fear and worſhip of the Lord, unto true happineſſe. And herein he imitateth his father David, whoſe name is haply here for that cauſe mentioned, that as David being converted did publiſh his repentance unto the Church, in that ſolemn penitential Pſalm, Pſal. 51. So his ſon, having fallen from his integrity, did take the ſame courſe to give glory to God in the great congregation Pſal.40. 10. and to make known his repentance to all the Church, that thereby he might glorifie God, and ſtrengthen his brethren. Whence he frequently in this book giveth himſelf this title, as of a penitent convert, chap 1.12. & 7.29 & 12.8,9,10. The word is a Participle or Adjective of the Feminine gender, yet joyned here to a verb maſculine, as elſewhere to a verb feminine, chap. 7. 27. There, becauſe of the grammatical congruity, Here with relation to the perſon thereby ſignified. They uſe to ſupply the ſenſe with the word nepheſh, ſoul, which is mentioned preſently after it, Chap. 7. 27. 28. and ſo that word is elſewhere ſupplyed, 2 Sam. 13. 29. ſo where it is ſaid, Gen. 49. 6. My glory, be not thou united unto their aſſembly; the Noun is maſculine, the verbe feminine, to ſignifie that by glory, the ſame to be underſtood in that clauſe, which was expreſſed by the feminine Noun, the ſoul, in the former clauſe: and ſo glory ſeems elſewhere to ſignifie the ſoul of a man, Pſalm. 30. 12. If it be enquired what may be the cauſe why Solomon doth not prefix his proper name to this Book, as to the other two, of the Proverbs and Canticles: Though it be not neceſſary to be curious in queſtions of this nature, yet this may be inoffenſively conjectured; 1. That he ſeems hereby to intimate, That by his former ſins he had as it were forfited his name of Peace, and ſo we find that by reaſon of thoſe his ſins, God ſtirred up adverſaries againſt him, 1 King. 11. 14, 23. 2 To note his ſincerity, who now choſe to be known rather by the name of a penitent convert, than of a peaceable Prince, as if he who had troubled Iſrael by his ſins, did no longer deſerve his name of peace, as the prodigal ſaid to his father, I am no more worthy to be called thy ſon. So in Scripture, men have taken new names ſutable to a new condition, Gen. 32. 28. Ruth. 1. 20. Mark 3. 16, 17. Nehem 9. 7. The other additions likewiſe to his name of penitence may ſeem to be looked on by him as aggravations of his ſins. 1. That he was the ſon of David, a godly father, who had given him ſuch holy education, who had provided him materials to build Gods houſe, and greatly encouraged him to advance the worſhip of the Lord; who had been an example to him to take heed of falling into groſſe ſins, that the ſon of ſuch a father ſhould fall ſo fouly. 2. That he was a King on his fathers throne, and that not by right of inheritance, but by ſpecial deſignation from the Lord, who had ſingled him out above his brethren, and had appeared unto him twice, and gave him wiſdom and princely endowments for ſo great a place, that he ſhould defile the throne whereunto he had been ſo graciouſly advanced; and from thence give to all the people ſo ſad an example of ſenſuality and apoſtacy. 3. That he was a king in Jeruſalem, an holy city, where was Gods throne as well as the thrones of the houſe of David; that he ſhould defile the Lords land, and his dwelling place. Theſe were conſiderations worthy for ſuch a penitent to have his eyes on, for his greater humiliation. Thereby teaching us, 1 That the ſins of the child are greatly aggravated by the godlineſſe of the parent, Jer. 22. 15, 16, 17. 2. That the ſins of the child are greatly aggravated by the falls and miſcarriages of the parent, Dan 5. 18. ——23. 3. That ſins are greatly aggravated by the dignities and priviledges of thoſe that commit them, 2. Sam. 12. 7. 8. 9. Deut. 32. 12.——19 Amos 2. 9.——13. 3. 2. 4 That the greater the perſon is that ſinneth whereby the ſcandal to the Church is likewiſe the greater, the more ſolemn ought his repentance to be, Numb. 12. 14, 15, 16. 2 Chron. 33. 12, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19. 5. That the power of grace is exceeding great, which can ſubdue the hearts of the greateſt men, unto the heavieſt yoke of publique and ſolemn repentance, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5, 6. And further, from the deſcription of the perſon, and his writing of this book; we may obſerve, 1. That eminency of wiſdom without the continued aſſiſtance of grace, cannot keep a man from groſs and foul lapſes. Never a wiſer man than Solomon, and never any Saint fell into more fooliſh luſts, God is pleaſed ſomtimes to ſuffer men to fall into ſuch ſins, the contrary graces whereunto they had moſt eminently been adorned withall. As David, a moſt ſpiritual man into fleſhly luſt; Lot, whoſe righteous ſoul had been vexed at the filthy converſation of the Sodomites, into another ſort of unnatural impurity, by inceſt with his daughters: Job, into impatience: Moſes, the meekeſt man alive into great paſſion of mind Numb. 20. 10. Peter, the boldeſt diſciple, into baſe fear and cowardiſe of ſpirit, in denying his maſter. 2. That hight of honour and abundance of wealth, are ſore ſnares and temptations, even to the wiſeſt and moſt excellent men, Mark 10 23, 25. 1 Tim 6. 9 Iſaiah 39. 1, 2. 3. That repentance ſets a man moſt againſt that evil, by which he had moſt diſhonoured God, and been foiled under temptation. Abundance of knowledge and treaſures drew Solomons heart too far from the Lord, and being converted, he ſets himſelf moſt to diſcern the emptineſſe and vanity of them. So Zacheus, Luke 19. 8. And Mary Magdalen, Luke 7. 37, 38. 4. That the Lord maketh the falls of his Servants very beneficial unto his Church; Davids fall was an occaſion of his penning ſome excellent Pſalms, and Solomons of writing this excellent book, ſetting forth the vanity of thoſe worldly things, whereby even wiſe men are, many times, drawn away from God. 5. That the Saints, after ſome great offence given by their falls to the Church, make it their buſineſſe, upon their repentance, to do ſome more notable and eminent ſervice to the Church: as Peter, who had been moſt fearful in denying Chriſt, was after moſt forward in preaching him, and moſt bold in the profeſſion of him, Acts 1. 15. & 2. 14 & 3 12. & 4. 8. & 5. 29.

V. 2. Vanity of vanities ſaith the preacher, vanity of vanities, All is vanity] The ſcope of the wiſe man is to direct us in the right way to true happineſſe. And this he doth, firſt, negatively, aſſuring us that it is not to be found in any thing under the ſun. Secondly, affirmatively, that it is to be found onely in God and his ſervice. For the former, this is the laſt iſſue and reſult of all that curious inquiry, which Solomon made into the utmoſt excellencies of creatures, here below. He was furniſhed above all other men, with all variety of requiſites for ſuch a work, ſet himſelf critically about it, to diſſect as it were, and take a thorow view of the creature, and having ſo done, this is the upſhot that all is nothing but very vanity. And this he doth in a vehement and pathetical manner, that it may be the more obſerved. He doth not ſay, all is vain; but in the abſtract, (which is much more emphatical) All is vanity: not vanity onely, but vanity of vanities; that is, extreme vanity. The Genetive caſe of the Noun, according to the uſe of that tongue, ſupplying an Adjective of the ſuperlative degree Gen. 9. 35 Cant. 1. 1. Hoſ 10, 15. 1 Tim. 6. 15. And this propoſition he doubleth and repeateth again; thereby intimating, 1. The unqueſtionable certainty of it, Gen. 40. 32. Iſa. 8. 9. 2. The great conſequence of it, as being a truth neceſſary to be inculcated, that it might make the deeper impreſſion on the heart, Ezek. 21. 27. Pſal. 62. 11. Rev. 18. 2. 3. The natural unaptneſſe which is in us to give credit to it, or to take notice of it except it be thus inculcated upon us. Jer. 22. 29. 4. The earneſt affection of the wiſe man in preſſing this neceſſary truth, with which he himſelf in his repentance was ſo deeply affected Repetitions argue vehemency of affections, and earneſt contending for the things ſo repeated, Ezek. 16. 6. Luke 23. 21. Gal. 1. 8. 9 Pſal. 93. 3.

And becauſe it might be thought to be true onely of ſome things, and that ſome other things which Solomon had not looked ſo narnowly into, might haply have more excellency in them, therefore he addeth, to prevent this objection, that all is vanity. All, not ſimply, but with limitation to the ſubject matter of which he treateth in this book; every thing ſeverally, all things joyntly. Not any one thing alone, not all things collectively and together are able to ſatisfie the ſoul, and to make it happy. It is true, the works of God are all good and excellent, ſought out of all thoſe that have pleaſure in them. But good in their kind and order; of excellent uſe to ſet forth the glory, power, wiſdom and goodneſſe of God, and of neceſſary ſervice for the uſe of man, 1 Tim. 4. 4, 5. Yet withall vain in other reſpects; 1. Comparitively vain, when put in the ballance with God, and heavenly things, Job 15. 15. Iſa 40. 15, 16, 17, 2. Vain by that ſuper-induced vanity, whereunto they are ſubjected by the ſin of man, Rom 8. 20. 3. Vain in order unto happineſſe, the ful poſſeſſion, the moſt vigorous fruition of them, cannot being real ſatisfaction to the ſoul of a man; Man himſelf, the nobleſt of them all, and that at his beſt eſtate, being altogether vanity, Pſal, 39 5, 6. 11. Pſal. 62. 9. & 144 3. 4. They are vain. 1. In regard of their unprofitableneſſe unto ſuch an uſe Jer. 16. 19. 2. In regard of their falſeneſs and deceitfulneſs to thoſe who lean upon them, Job 15——20. Pſ. 31. 7. & 62. 10. Jon 2. 8. 3. In regard of their inſtability and impermanency, as being under the bondage of corruption Rom. 8. 20. 1 Cor. 7. 30, 31. Pſal. 39, 11. 2 Cor. 4. 18 And in all theſe reſpects uſeleſſe unto happineſs; for that which makes a man happy, muſt bear a thorow proportion to all the wants, deſires and capacities of the ſoul, and muſt withal be of an equal duration and continuance therewith; neither of which is to be found in any worldly thing.

ſaith the preacher] Both by inſpiration, as a Pen-man of the holy Ghoſt: and by experience, as one who had learned it dearly and to his coſt. He ſets his name as in the inſcription to the whole book, ſo here, a ſecond time to this, which is the ſumme of the whole book, confidently owning the truth thereof; as ſometimes the Apoſtle addeth his name emphatically, to ſet on what he affirmeth or deſireth, 2 Cor. 10. 1. Gal. 5. 2. Philem. ver 9, 19. So 1 Pet. 5. 1. 1 Joh. 1. 1, 3. They who ſpeak to the Church ſhould do it experimentally, and from demonſtration of the truth to their own hearts, that they may be confidently able to own, and to avow what they ſay.

V. 3. What profit hath a man of of all his labour which he taketh under the ſun?] Or, What remaineth and abideth with a man of all his labour? What is added to him, or what more hath he by it?

of his labour] The word imports toylſom and troubleſom labour, and ſo rendred by the Septuagint, μόχθος; and by Aquila, κόπος.

under the ſun] This may relate to either paſſage of the verſe; either, what remaineth to a man under the ſun; that is, nothing under the ſun wil tarry or abide with him. Or, Of all the labour which he hath laboured under the ſun; do in relation to worldly matters here below. There is a converſation and a labour in order to things above the ſun; which wil remain with a man, and profit him, Phil. 3. 20 Col. 3. 1, 2. Joh. 6. 27. But labour in earthly things wil not do ſo. We are ſaid to labour under the ſun, becauſe earthly labour is done by the light of the ſun, Pſ 104 22, 23. Joh. 9 4. and becauſe by that light we are more comforted in the frution of worldly things, as Eccleſ. 11. 7. and becauſe the benefit we expect from our labours, is wrought inſtrumentally by the warmth and influence of the ſun Deut. 33. 14. Here then the wiſe man proveth his general propoſition Whatſoever is unprofitable and periſhing; is very vanity: all things under the ſun, about which the anxious and toylſom labour of man is converſant, are unprofitable and periſhing, for nothing of them wil remain unto him, or abide with him. Therefore they are al vain. And this he propoundeth by way of interrogation, which maks the negative more unqueſtionable, as appealing to the conſcience of every man, and challenging any man to diſprove it. The Scripture uſually denies more emphatically by way of interrogation as Gen. 30. 2. 2 Sam. 7. 5. compared with 1 Chro. 17. 4. Mat. 16. 26. Zech. 1. 5. And he further inſiſteth on this point as certain and neceſſary, Chap. 2. 11. & 3. 9. & 5. 15. The ſum is this; 1. Whatever fruit we have from worldly things, we get it with very hard and toylſome labour, either of the mind or body, Gen. 3. 17. 19, Job 5. 7. 2. However that labour be uſefull and ſubſervient to our temporal condition, yet it is wholly unprofitable in order unto happineſs. 3. The foundation of this unprofitableneſs, is; 1. It doth not cauſe a man to excell, it adds nothing of reall worth unto him at all, James 2. 1--------6. Eccleſ. 9. 14. 16. Pſal. 49. 12, 13, 20. 2. It doth not abide with him; all the comfort it brings, is dying comfort; it ſtops at the grave and goes no further. Now nothing is profitable to a man which he cannot tranſport beyond the grave, which he doth not carry with him into another world, Job 1. 21. & 21. 21. Pſalm 49. 14, 17. John 6. 27. 1 Tim. 6. 7. Thoſe works are beneficiall which follow a man, Revel. 14. 13. therefore we muſt lay out our labour upon a life that abides and abounds, John 10. 10. Iſaiah 55. 2. and not labour in the fire and for very vanity, Habbac. 2. 13. Luke 12. 6. Matth. 24. 38 39.

V. 4. One Generation goeth, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth for ever] By Generation is meant the time wherein a body of men do live and continue together, ſo we read of this or that generation, Luke 21. 32. Heb. 3. 10. the ſecond, third, tenth generation or ages of men yet to come, Deut. 23. 2, 3, 8. A mans own generation, or the age wherein he liveth, Acts 13. 36. There is a conſtant ſucceſſion of men to one another, a fixed time, as the dayes of an hireling, Job 7. 1---10. & 14. 14. The inward principles of change and mortality are alwayes working, and life is like a ſhepherds tent, which doth not continue in one place or ſtay, Iſaiah 68. 12.

But the earth abideth or ſtandeth for ever] Continueth much longer than the men that are upon it; for ever, noteth often a long time, ſo long as the preſent courſe and order of nature is to continue, Pſal. 119. 90. ſo long as ſuch or ſuch an adminiſtration laſteth, Gen. 9. 12. 1 Sam. 2. 30, 1 Sam. 13. 13. otherwiſe we know the earth is to be changed, and in ſome ſenſe at the leaſt to paſſe away, as now the inhabitants thereof do, Matth. 24. 35. Pſal. 102. 25. 27. There ſeems to be a double ſenſe in the words, both Conſonant to the preſent argument. 1. That man cannot be happy by any thing which is here below, in regard of his tranſitory condition, fathers going, and childrens ſucceding; a mans labour haply may enrich him, or bring him to honour, but it cannot lengthen out his dayes beyond one generation, and then he and all his acquirements muſt part, and in this reſpect the earth on which he treads, is in a better condition than himſelf, for it abideth to the end, 2. Man ſeeking happineſſe from the earth and earthly things, muſt needs be diſappointed of his expectation, becauſe he paſſeth away, and the earth ſtaies behind him. If he could carry the earth along with him, he might happly promiſe himſelf his wonted contenment, but the earth abides where it was, when he goeth from it, and can enjoy it no more, Job 7, 10. Pſal. 49. 17. Here then we may obſerve. Firſt, a determinate time prefixed to the life, ſtates, honours, offices of men; at uttermoſt, they are but for one generation, wherein every man hath his ſervice to do, his warfare to accompliſh, his race to run, Job 7. 1. & 14. 5. 1 Cor. 9. 24. Phil. 3. 14. 2 Tim 4. 7. Acts 13. 36. Secondly, the providence of God, in continuing the ſeveral ſucceding ages of men, that he may ſtil have a ſeed to ſerve him, that one generation may declare his works to another. That the admirable contexture of the works of providence, carried along by pieces, through various ſucceſſions of men, may at laſt moſt glriouſly ſet forth his wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſſe, Pſalm 22. 30. 31. and 102. 18. Iſaiah 38. 19 Eccleſ. 8. 17. Thirdly, a mans labour under the ſun is for himſelf and his poſterity: but his labour about heavenly things will abide with, and benefit himſelf for ever. Fourthly, ſo long as the generations of men continue, ſo long doth the Lord by his decree continue the earth for their ſupportance and ſalvation, becauſe he hath given it to the children of men, Deut. 32. 8. and when the generations of men are ended, it ſhal then appear that the whole Creation was ſubject to vanity, and to the bondage of corruption, Rom. 8 20. 2 Pet. 3. 5, 7,

V. 5. The ſun alſo ariſeth, and the ſun goeth downe, and haſteth to the place where he aroſe] Or, panteth towards the place. A metaphor from one who runs earneſtly to ſome mark, or preſſeth forward with ſtrong deſire to ſomething it would attain, Pſalm 119. 131. Job 7. 2. A like expreſſion, Pſalm 19. 6, 7. & 104. 19, whereby is ſignified an unwearied, yet conſtant and regular motion founded in a covenant or ordinance of heaven, Jer. 31. 35, 36. & 33. 20. Job 38. 33. from which without a ſpeciall and extraordinary reſtraint from God (as Ioſh. 10. 12. Iſa. 38. 8. Job 9. 7.) it never varieth, Having thus affirmed of all things under the ſun, that they are vain, he here beginneth with the ſun it ſelf, which doth as it were weary it ſelf out of breath, with continual motion, 1. If it did bring happineſſe to a man in its riſing, it would remove it again in its ſetting. 2. Though the earth abideth for ever, and the ſun moveth regularly over it with its warmth, and the winds blow on it, to refreſh the fruits thereof, Cant. 4 16. and the waters paſſe through it to make it fruitful, Gen. 2. 10, 11. yet all this can benefit a man onely in his own generation, but connot convey any durable happineſſe unto him. 3. The earth abides alwayes alike, the ſun moves, the winds blow, the rivers run after one conſtant manner in one age as in another. If they have never yet made any happy, they never will, becauſe they do miniſter but the ſame comforts again. 4. Mortality and mutability here is as naturall to man, as ſtanding to the earth, the motions of the ſun, the circuites of the windes, the flowing of the Rivers: ſo that it is as impoſſible for him to be happy by creatures on earth, as it is to alter the covenant of day or night, or to ſtop the regular and invariable courſes of the Heavens. 5. The ſun runs his courſe, obſervs his time of riſing and ſetting, and though he ſet, he riſeth in equall glory again, but when man goes, he returns hither no more, Job 14. 7, 12. 6. Obſerve the conſtant and ſteady obedience of other creatures, to that law of working, which was primitively implanted in them, they act as it were knowingly, Pſal. 104 19. willingly, Rom 8. 20. vigorouſly with joy and ſtrength, Pſal. 19. 5. and thereby ſhame thoſe who have indeed a principle of light and reaſon, but act not in conformity thereunto.

V. 6. The wind goeth towards the South, and turneth about unto the North, &c.] As the ſun, ſo the winds have their courſes, whereby is noted the uncertainty of outward things, if they pleaſe in their coming, they muſt diſquiet in their departing, whereas the matter of happineſs muſt be ever preſent, and permanent. Here we may alſo note the wiſe providence of God in the circuites of the winds and other ſublunary creatures, which he bringeth out of his treaſure and directeth as it pleaſeth him for the uſes of men, one while making them helpful to one part of the earth, and another while to another. Pſalm 135. 7. Job 37. 7. & 38. 22. Jer. 10. 13. Deut 28. 12. Pſalm 78. 26. Gen. 8. 1. Exod. 8. 1. & 14. 21. He ſeemeth likewiſe to have reſpect to thoſe windes which in ſome parts of the world, have a very regular and uniform motion in ſome moneths of the year, blowing conſtantly out of one quarter, and in others, out of another. The words [going, circling, whirling about, returning] are uſed to ſhew the reſtleſs, and unquiet nature of theſe things, their buſie and ſpeedy motion, as if they were ever out of their place; all which ſhew how ful of vanity they are, and repreſent the diſquiet agitations of the mind of man, till it fix upon him that is immutable.

V. 7. All rivers run into the ſea, yet the ſea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again] Though rivers haſtily run into the ſea, as into their ciſtern, yet the ſea is not filled, ſo as to ſwell above the earth, or overflow the bounds within which God hath decreed it to ſtay, Job 38. 8.----11. Pſal. 104. 8, 9. Jer. 15. 22. The reaſon whereof is, becauſe there is a perpetual and proportionable return, as faſt as by ſome channels, waters go from their fountains to the ſea, by others, they return from the ſea, into the earth again. Thus, which way ever we caſt our eyes, we every where meet with evidences of inconſtancy and mutability here below, as teſtimonies of that vanity which all things under the ſun are ſubject unto. 1. By the continual motions of theſe creatures, he ſeemeth to deſcribe the reſtleſneſſe of the mind of man, in enquiring after good. 2. The diſ-ſatisfaction which it every where meeteth withall, finding no reaſon to reſt or ſtay there, whither it had formerly haſted with greateſt ſpeed, As all rivers cannot fill the ſea, ſo all creatures cannot fill the heart of man It moves every way, forward and backward, to the South, and to the North, from one content unto another for full ſatisfaction, but can finde none, Pſal. 39. 6. & 74. 11, 19. Prov. 19. 21. Luke 10. 41.

V. 8. All things are full of labour, man cannot utter it: The eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor the ear filled with hearing] All things, to wit, all theſe and the like things. This is a cloſe of the former argument. Having ſhewed the unquiet motion of ſun, windes, rivers, he here concludeth his Induction of particulars, with a generall aſſertion, that as it was in them, ſo it is in all things elſe, no man is able with words to run over all particulars, but as it is in ſome, ſo is it in the reſt which cannot be numbred. They are ſaid to be full of labour, or wearineſſe, becauſe they weary out man in his ſtudies, and edeavours about them, Geneſ. 3. 17, 19. Pſalm 127. 2. Here is alſo another argument, proving the main propoſition, whatever things bring toylſome labour and wearineſſe with them, cannot make a man happy, but are altogether vaine, as to ſuch a purpoſe: But all things under the ſun do bring unto him that is converſant about them toylſome labour and wearineſſe, therefore they cannot make men happy. This toyle and wearineſſe doth not onely appear in grievous and unpleaſing labour, whereunto men are againſt their wils compelled, Job. 5. 7. Lament. 5. 5. Jerem 20. 18. not onely in thoſe labours which the Lord is pleaſed to blaſt and fruſtrate of an expected end, when men labour as it were in the fire, and reap no fruit of all their pains, Habac. 2. 13. Hag. 1. 6. Levit. 26. 20 Iſaiah 17. 11 & 55. 2. Eccleſ. 5. 16. Luke 5. 5. But it is alſo true of thoſe labours which a man ſets about with greateſt delight and willingneſſe, they alſo have wearineſs and ſatiety attend on them; the very honey comb bringeth a loathing with it, Prov. 27. 7. And this general he proveth by a double inſtance. The eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor the ear with hearing] and accordingly, it is in all other numberleſs particulars. A man may cloy and tire out theſe faculties, before he can at all ſatisfie them He ſeemeth to inſtance in theſe rather than others, 1. Becauſe the exerciſe of them is eaſieſt, and leaſt labour is ſpent in the uſing of them, there is not much force or ſtreſs put forth in ſeeing an amiable and beautiful object or in hearing ſome excellent muſick. 2. Becauſe they are the moſt curious and inquiſitive ſenſes 3. Becauſe their delights are ſweeteſt: as being ſenſes which have neareſt cognation unto reaſon, and are principal inſtruments and handmaids to the ſoul in her nobleſt operations. Now if the moſt ſpiritual, unwearied, rational ſenſes cannot be ſo ſatisfied, but that they are pricked with further deſires of new objects to delight them, Acts 17. 21 or ſatiated and glutted with the exceſſe of what did delight them before; how much more is this true in thoſe other faculties, where there is more labour in purſuing their objects and more loathing in frution of them, Prov. 27.20. And this is ſuch labour and wearineſs as no man can utter it, no man can expreſs how many wayes any one faculty may be wearied out, nor recount all thoſe objects, which when they miniſter ſome delight, do yet leave no ſatisfaction behind them. As the happineſs which vve expect in God, cannot be uttered, 1 Cor. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 12.4. ſoe the labour and vvearineſs vvhich the mind contracteth by exceſſive ſearch into the creatures, cannot be uttered neither.

V. 9, 10, 11. The thing that hath been, it is that which ſhall be; and that which is done, is that which ſhall be done: and there is no new thing under the Sun, &c.] The ſubſtance of theſe verſes is this, If no man hath ever hitherto been able to find out happineſſe in the creature, let no man think novv or hereafter to do it, ſince there is no nevv thing out of vvhich it may be extracted. All naturall cauſes and effects continue as they vvere at the beginning, Gen 8. 22 Jerem. 31.35,36 and all humane and voluntary actions, counſels and ſtudies, having the ſame principles of reaſon to produce them, and the ſame objects to draw them out, are in ſubſtance the ſame now as heretofore. And though ſome diſcoveries of new things have been made, as the Marriners Card, the Art of Printing, Gun-powder, &c. of which learned men have written, yet from defective and inſufficient principles of happineſſe, ſuch as all naturall things are, no thing, though new, can be ſufficient unto ſuch an end, ſince the particulars cannot afford that which the general hath not comprized within it. As face anſwereth to face in water, ſo the courſes of naturall cauſes and effects, and the hearts deſires; counſels of the men in one age; do anſwer unto thoſe of another, Matth, 24.38,39. Prov. 27. 19.

V. 10. Is there any new thing whereof it may be ſaid, See this, It is new?] This is a chalenge to any man to produce any new thing if he can, with a peremptory repeating of the former aſſertion, and denying the ſucceſſe of any ſuch attempt. He ſpeaketh of ſuch new things as may ſo far ſurpaſſe the things which had been diſcovered before, as to be able to ſatisfie the heart, and make it truly bleſſed. And this he confidently denyeth, that any thing can further be extracted out of the womb of nature in order unto humane happineſs more than had been already diſcovered. Men may haply flatter themſelves in their inventions, as if they had invented new things which were not before, and ſuch as may afford more matter of content and ſatisfaction than other men in former ages have found. But he ſhews that this is but a miſtake, for, It hath been already of old time which was before us.] The diſcoveries of former ages have been as pregnant towards ſatisfaction of the heart, as any of after ages can be.

V. 11. There is no remembrance of former things, neither ſhall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with thoſe that ſhall come after.] If new things be found out, as many old things are forgotten, ſo that ſtil the ſtock of nature is as defective towards happineſs in our age, as in another. Shortneſs of life, and narrowneſs of experience, cauſeth us to forget the things which have been before us, which were they all in our diſtinct view, no one thing would occur without its pattern and paralel, at leaſt ſomething as excellent as it in former ages: and as things paſt are forgotten by us, ſo things preſent will be forgotten by thoſe that ſhall come after us.

Here then we ſee, 1. The aptneſſe which is in man to nauſeat and grow weary of the things which he is uſed unto, though they be otherwiſe never ſo excellent, Num. 11.6. 2. The wantonneſſe of our hearts in having an itching deſire after new things, and ſuch as former ages were unacquainted with, Acts 17. 21. 3. That it is Ignorance and inexperience which maketh things appear new, which indeed are old. 4. That the vanity which our forefathers have found in things here below, is an infallible argument that we ſhall find the ſame, and ſhall certainly miſcarry, if we think to get more ſatiſfaction out of the Creature, than others have gotten before us. Job 8.8,9. & 15. 18. 5. That new things are not to be looked for under the Sun, or in the courſe of natural cauſes and effects: But in a ſpiritual and heavenly converſation all things are new: durable, excellent. In the ſtudy of Gods word and ways, there are ever new and wonderful things to be diſcovered Pſal. 119 18. 2. Cor. 5.17. 2 Pet. 3. 13 Rev. 21. 5. Gods mercies and Judgements are wonderful, and he doth many times ſtrange things, which neither we nor our forefathers have known, Deut. 4. 32---36. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

V. 12, 13. I the Preacher was King over Iſrael in Jeruſalem. And I gave mine heart to ſeek and ſearch out by wiſdom, concerning all things that are done under heaven: this ſore travel hath God given to the ſons of men, to be exerciſed therewith.] Having ſhewed the vanity of things under the Sun in generall: He now proceedeth unto ſome ſpecial and principal things, wherein men are now apt to place felicity. And he begins with the knowledge of things natural and humane: ſhewing, that if any man could in that reſpect make himſelf happy, he himſelf had more meanes to do it than any other man. And the better to gain belief to what he ſhould deliver, He gives it them upon the word and experience of a Convert; a King; an inſpired King, a moſt wiſe and active King a King in Jeruſalem, the ſeat of God; provoked unto this inquiry by the ſtrong inclination of his own heart, by the ſpeciall Call, and direction of God, by the eye and help of that habituall wiſdom which by prayer he had obtained of God in a more eminent manner, than any other man; and by his zeal towards the people of God, and towards his houſe at Jeruſalem. I, being ſuch a perſon, ſo compleatly furniſhed with al internal & external advantages do teſtifie the truth which I have delivered upon mine own moſt exact & accurate trial, that all is vanity.

I the Preacher] Or the Convert, who am returned by repentance unto the Communion of Saints, from whence by my ſins I had formerly wandred, am able now by ſad experience to ſeal the truth which I have ſo dearly bought, touching the vanity of all outward things. So this Book was the fruit of Solomons converſion and returning to the boſome of the Church.

was King over Iſrael] This book therefore was written when he was on his throne furniſhed with wiſdom from God to manage his Royal Office, and with abundance of wealth to proſecute this inquiry after true happineſſe, 1 Reg. 3.7---16.

over Iſrael] Gods peculiar people, a wiſe and underſtanding people Deut. 4 6,7. for whoſe good Solomon had ſought his wiſdom, and out of the care of whoſe welfare in ſoul and eſtate, he had made this ſolicitous ſearch in Jeruſalem] This being expreſſed thus twice, in this, and in the firſt verſe, hath ſome emphaſis in it. In Jeruſalem was the houſe of the Lord, and the Teſtimony of Iſrael, Pſal. 122. 1,2,3. Here God was in a ſpeciall manner preſent and might moſt comfortably be ſought, Pſal. 132.13.14. There were continual attendances of the prieſts, officers, and wiſe men about the Temple, 1 Chron. 25. 26. There were the thrones of juſtice, and publique conventions of State, Pſal. 122. 5 There were the Maſters of the Aſſemblies, or a Colledge and Senate of the moſt learned men of the Nation, Eccleſ. 12. 11. 2. Reg. 22. 14. ſo that there he met with all the furtherances which a learned and wiſe man could deſire in the proſecution of ſuch a deſign.

And I gave my heart] I did cheerfully and purpoſely ſet my ſelf about it, and made it my buſineſſe and delight, 2 Chr. 11.16. 1 Chr. 22.19. 2 Cor. 8.5.

to ſeek and ſearch out] Searching is more than ſeeking, and denotes an orderly and accurate exploration, ſuch as merchants uſe, who with great diligence procure rareſt commodities out of ſeveral Countries, Eccleſ. 7.25. Ezek 20 6.

by wiſdom] An excellent inſtrument in ſuch an inquiry.

all things done under the Sun] All natural cauſes and effects, all human counſels & events: this phraſe is much uſed by Solomon in this book, whereby is limited the ſubject matter about which he inquires the ſore travel] Or, afflicting labour; as Chapter 2. 23. and 4. 8.

hath God given to the ſons of man] It is his ordinance, he hath called them to ſearch his works and wayes.

to be exerciſed] Or afflicted and diſtracted therein, therefore not at all to be made bleſſed thereby.

From hence we may obſerve: Firſt, That the beſt way of teaching is out of our own experience, and exact diſquiſition, Pſal. 66. 16, 17. Gal. 1.16.

2 That ſound Repentance doth notably fit a man to know and ſearch out the will of God, and to diſcover and teach the vanity of all other things, 2 Tim 2 25. Jam. 1.21. Luke 22. 32. Pſal. 51. 12, 13.

3. That men in higheſt authority are by their ſtudies as well as their power to ſeek the welfare of thoſe over whom they are ſet, and to endeavour with all their hearts to fit themſelves with wiſdom and abilities for diſcharge of their office 1 Reg. 3. 7, 8 9. Luke 2. 52. Acts 6. 4. 1 Tim. 4. 13. 14 15.

4. That the piety, age, dignity, authority, experience of a perſon, though it adde nothing to the truth it ſelf, yet hath a great power to perſwade and prepare the hearts of hearers to the entertainment of it, Philem verſe 9. 2 Cor. 10. 7 8. & 11. 5, 6. 22, 23. & 12. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 11. 1 Cor. 9. 1, 2. & 15. 8, 9, 10.

5. That largeneſſe of gifts and helps from God, ſhould quicken us unto a more cheerfull and vigorous ſtudy of our duties, Matth. 25. 16, 17.

6. That largenes of heart in knowledg of things natural, moral, human divine, are royal endowments, and things fit for a King to ſet his heart upon, Prov. 31. 4. The greater our place, power, wealth is, the more noble and ſerious ſhould our thoughts and imployments be.

7. The more men abound with worldly things, the looſer ſhould they keep their hearts from them, and the more ſhould they ſtudy the vanity of them, leſt otherwiſe they ſteal away their hearts from God Pſal 62. 10.

8. The dignity, wiſdom, piety of the people being duely conſidered, doth whet and adde vigour to the ſtudies and cares of thoſe who are ſet over them for their good, 2 Reg.3,8,5. Mark 6.5,6.

9. We ſhould improve the benefit of places and perſons amongſt whom we converſe, to fit our ſelves thereby for the ſervice of the Church. It is not only a comfort,but a furtherance unto wiſe and learned men, to live in places where wiſdom and learning is profeſſed, Acts 1. 4.

10. It is a great comfort when men have helps and encouragements, anſwerable to their imployments, and having ſuch, when they have hearts to uſe them,Prov.17.16.

11. Here are the right principles of ſucceſsful diligence in our place; 1 A willing heart, when a man goes about his work with all his ſtrength, Eccleſ 9.10. 2. Attendance on the call of God, and for that reaſon ſubmitting unto travel and pains,Acts 26.19.Gal. 1.15. 3. Stirring up the the gifts which God hath given us as furtherances unto duty, 2 Tim. 1. 6. Exquiſite inſpection into the buſineſſes about which we are imployed, that we may not through our own negligence come behind in any gift, 1 Cor.12.31.&14 12.

12. It is the will of God, that even our honourable and our neceſſary mployments ſhould be accompanied with ſore travel, that we may be kept humble in our ſelves, weaned from the creature,and made the more thankful for any aſſiſtance the Lord giveth us in our labours, and for any bleſſing upon them, Job 5. 7. ,Gen. 3. 19.

13. The ſtudy of the creatures is of excellent uſe to lead us to the knowledge of the Creator, Rom.1.19. Pſal.111. 2.

V. 14. I have ſeen all the works that are done under the ſun, and behold all is vanity and vexation of ſpirit] The former words ſhewed the exactneſſe of Solomons ſearch into natural and humane things. That it was the labour of an aged Convert, (for Solomon was drawn away from God in his old age, 1 Reg.11.4.) of a wiſe King, furniſhed with all helps for ſuch an inquiry:That it was an accurate and deep ſearch, not looſe or ſuperficiall, That it was undertaken with great impulſion of heart, and with a ſpecial call of God : and now after all this he concludes, all the things] That is the ſeveral kinds of them, 1 Reg. 4. 33. He had gotten as large and as intuitive a knowledg as humane curiſioty or induſtry, with all manner of furtherances could attaine unto. Which appeares not to be an arrogant boaſt, but a true accompt of the fruit of his ſtudies, the Holy Ghoſt teſtifying the ſame thing of him. 1 Reg. 4 29 34 & 10. 23.

1. That he had ſeen] That is, diligently heeded, and fully underſtood, as to the iſſue of this inquiry: all the works done under the ſun,Exod. 33. Eccleſ 2.13,14.

2 That he found all to be vanity and vexation of ſpirit] Not only vain and ineffectuall to confer Happineſſe : but,which is worſe,apt to bring much affliction and trouble upon the heart of him who is too earneſtly converſant about them. From ſeverall originall Roots there are by Interpreters given ſeverall explications of this word Evill or Affliction of ſpirit. Breach, contrition, torment of ſpirit; feeding upon or conſuming of the ſpirit: or vanity and feeding upon wind, as fruitleſs labour is expreſſed, Hoſ. 12 1. 1 Cor. 9.26. Thus he applies his general concluſion particularly unto all kind of knowledge, Natural or Moral. There is ſore travel in the getting , danger of forgetting it again , diſcovery thereby of more Ignorance than a man obſerved in himſelf before; inſufficiency and impoſſibility of perfecting the underſtanding or ſatiating the deſires thereof. Such and many other Conſiderations, make knowledg it ſelfe,as to the procuring of true Happineſſe, altogether Vain.

V 15. That which is crooked cannot be made ſtrait] This is the reaſon of the vanity of knowledge,becauſe it cannot rectifie any thing in us which is amiſſe nor ſupply any thing which we want to make us happy, Eccleſ.7.13. The wiſeſt and wealthieſt king with all his power and knowledg was not able to remedy all the evils which he ſaw ,or to ſupply all the defects which he could diſcover.

The words may be underſtood two wayes; 1 in relation to Knowledge it ſelf, to ſhew the vanity and vexation thereof. For. 1 Much of it is exceeding tortuous, intricate, and abſtruſe, there are many knots and difficulties, Dan 5, 12, ſo it cannot be clearly and plain-demonſtrated, but in the inquiries thereunto,the mind will be left dark and unſatisfied; there are δυσνόητα, not onely in the Scripture, 2 Pet.3.16. but in the book of nature too,Job 28.20,21.& 37. 14,15,16.& 38.16—33.2. The defects of this kind are innumerable,the things which a man knoweth not,are infinitely more than thoſe which he knoweth,Job 116——9.

2. In relation unto the efficacy of knowledge. The heart and life of man is naturally crooked and perverſe,very tortuous wicked, and deceitful, Jer. 17. 9. Pſal.125.5. and it is exceeding defective both in principles,and in power to do good as it ought, Rom.3. 23. 2 Cor. 3. 5. Now all the moſt exquiſite natural knowledge is not able to rectifie theſe things, either to reſtore man to his original integrity,or ſupply his manifold defects. Such knowledge wil puffe up, 1 Cor.8.1 but it will not ſanctifie Rom.1.20.21.32.Jude verſe 20. The Lord indeed by his grace and ſpirit doth both, Luke 3. 5. Pſal,84.11. 1 Theſſ. 3. 10 Eph.3.19. 1 Cor. 1. 5 but no natural or acquired knowledge is able to do it.

3. As it cannot rectifie that which is amiſſe in man, ſo neither in any other thing Sin hath brought much diſorder,corruption, confuſion upon the whole Creation. Rom. 8. 20. infinite are the defects and failings every where. And none of this can all the wiſdom of man be able to correct, but he muſt ſtill leave it as he found it, vain and imperfect So it will be till the time of the reſtitution of all things, when God will make a new earth and a new heaven, and deliver the Creature from the bondage of corruption, into a glorious liberty,Acts 1. 21. 2 Pet. 3.13. And all this he affirms of the moſt excellent natural knowledge; how much more vain and unprofitable are the perverſe and impertinent ſtudies of many men, which have nothing of ſolidity or uſefulneſſe in them, Col. 2.8. 1 Tim.6.4,5 Rom. 1. 22. 1 Cor.1.20.

V.16,17. I communed with mine own, &c] This is a prolepſis wherein he meeteth with an objection, viz. That the knowledge of the creatures might make a man happy , though he had not attained unto it, not for any defect in them, but in the narrowneſſe of his own underſtanding. To which he anſwereth, That if any man could have found it out in them, he ſhould in regard of the greatneſs of his parts, and exquiſite induſtry ; as Chap.2. 12.

I communed with mine heart] I caſt up my accompts, and exactly viewed the fruit and ſum of all my labours in getting knowledg. I did ſeriouſly deliberate,and take a view of mine own heart, Pſal. 4. 5. True wiſdom makes a man thoughtful and diſcurſive within himſelf.

I am come to great eſtate, and have gotten, or added, more wiſdom] Or, I have gotten great eſtate and wiſdom, and added to it, I have exceeded and increaſed in wiſdom So the word ſeems elſewhere to import, 1 Sam. 20 41. Eſay 9. 3. Amos 8. 5. Or, I have come to be a great man, Joel 2. 20 to do great things, ἐμεγαλύνθην.

than all they that have been before me] 1 King. 4. 30. & 10. 27. yea all that come after him too,Chriſt onely excepted, 1 King. 3. 12.

in Jeruſalem] Where the ſtudy of wiſdom was, more than in other places.

my heart had great experience. Had ſeen much wiſdom and knowledge] Wiſdom ſeems to note the generall knowledge of things, divine and humane; Knowledge, the experimental : or wiſdom the habite and inſtruments; knowledge the acquired perfection gotten by the help of that habitual wiſdom. Here, 1. He ſeems to have magnified wiſdom in his choyce, which alſo may be implyed in the word הגדלתי, 1 Reg. 3. 9, 11. 2. To have increaſed it. 3. To have carried it to his heart, it was inward and experimental knowledge. 4 To have delighted in it,and gone ſeriouſly and with full purpoſe about it.

gave my heart] See verſe 13. The more wiſe any man is, the more he laboureth to grow in wiſdom.

to know wiſdom , and to known madneſſe and folly] Chapter. 7. 25. Hereby he underſtands moral, political, and practical knowledge, in order to his better government, to obſerve the difference between wiſe and vertuous, and between fooliſh and wicked actions. The word rendred folly, is in this only place writen with the letter ש Sin in all others with the letter ס Sameth, and ſo may be here rendred either folly, or prudence. And this he found to be vexation of ſpirit, or feeding on wind; obſerving how ſhort men came of the one, and how much the other did abound. Or finding by his own experience, that neither the perfection of morall wiſdom ſo far as it is acquireable by humane diligence,nor yet the pleaſures and delights of vitious and fooliſh courſes could quiet and ſettle the heart of man, 1 Cor. 1. 20. Eccleſ. 11. 8, 9. A bare ſpeculative knowledge of good, and an experimental preſumptuous knowledge of evill,ſuch as Adams was in eating the forbidden fruit, are ſo far from making men happy, that they increaſe their miſery.

But here Solomon may ſeem to have committed an errour againſt the moral wiſdom which he here profeſſed to enquire after,namely, in ſpeaking ſo much of his own eminency in gifts beyond other men, John 8. 13. He doth it not falſly, arrogantly, nor proudly and vain-glorioufly, to magnifie himſelf, but humbly, in acknowledging Gods gifts, and neceſſarily to diſcover thereby the truth of that doctrine he was now teaching the Church by his own experience : and ſo it is lawful to make mention of Gods gifts and graces beſtowed on us, as the Apoſtle doth,1 Cor. 14. 18. & 15.10.2 Cor. 11.5,6.

V.18. in much wiſdom] Or, in the abundance of wiſdom, as Pſal. 72.7, & 51. 1, Prov.20 6 15 Hoſ.8.12.Or in the man who is much in wiſdom, or who hath much wiſdom,Job.11.2. The ſenſe is every way the ſame.

is much grief] Or, anger,or indignation. Whence the Chaldee paraphraſe. The more knowledge any man hath, without repentance, the more wrath is upon him from the Lord, as Luke 12.47. But the meaning,according to the ſcope of the context, is, That abundance of wiſdom is alwayes accompanied with a proportion of trouble and perturbation of mind; as indignation to ſee how little fruit, and howmuch diſappointment a man doth meet with in it,and how little accompt is made of it in the world, as Eccleſ 9. Grief and diſcontent,when the more wiſdom a man hath: the more ignorance he doth diſcover in himſelf, and the more paines ſtil he muſt take to go on unto more knowledg yet unattained; and yet ſtill find his crookedneſſe of mind, and monifold defects uncorrected: unſupplyed feare of looſing, and forgetting what with ſo great paines had been gotten. Some begin the next Chapter with theſe words, and ſo make them a tranſition to the next endeavour of Solomon, to find out happineſſe in ſome other thing, and ſo the ſenſe runs thus. Foraſmuch as in much wiſedom there is much greife, &c. and this was not the way to attaine true happineſſe and content to toyl and weary out my ſelfe with paine, ſorrow of mind and body in the attaining of wiſedome; Therefore I ſaid in my heart. Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth &c Yet the purpoſe of the wiſe man is not to deter men from ſo noble a labour as the ſtudy of wiſedome and learning, but to raiſe up to the ſtudy of heavenly wiſdom and the fear of God, whereby their other knowledge would be ſanctified, ſweetned, and made excellently uſeful and comfortable to them.

CHAP. II.

BEing diſappointed in his expectation from the knowledge of the Creature, he now reſolveth to ſearch what good may be found in the uſe and fruition of it, and ſo ſets himſelf to try what content either ſenſual, or rational pleaſures could bring to the heart; which he doth, from verſe 1. to verſe 12. and finding that he had changed for the worſe, he goes back again to the conſideration of wiſdom and madneſs, and finding as much diſappointment the ſecond time, as he had done the firſt, verſe 12-----23. He concludeth, that there is no comfort nor tranquility to be found in the uſe of Creatures, till by the favour of God it be ſweetned unto us, verſe 24, 25, 26.

Verſe 1 I Said in my heart] I purpoſed within my ſelf, and did reſolve with intimate affection to try what pleaſures would do, Chap. 1.16. Luke 12.19.

Go to now] It is an adverbial form of exhorting and quickening his heart unto ſuch a courſe.

I will prove thee with mirth] Or, by mirth, as by the inſtrument of enquiring after happineſs, Judges 6.39 1 Kings 10. 1. I will make tryall another way, whether pleaſures will content thee, Pſalm 26.2. The word being deriveable from another root, admits of another ſenſe, but to the ſame purpoſe, I will pour out my ſelf in delights, or I will abound in delights. Pleaſures do melt and poure out the ſoule; hence Reuben is ſaid to be unſtable as waters, Geneſ. 49. 4 Ezek. 16. 15. Luſts have a greedineſs and exceſs in them, Epheſ. 4. 19. I will wholly give my ſelf, my heart ſhall flow forth into delights, I will fully gratifie my ſenſes, and indulge my fancy in all pleaſing things.

therefore enjoy pleaſure] Or, ſee good. To ſee, is to enjoy, Iſaiah. 53 11. Pſalm 34. 8. & 4 6. Live plentifully, indulge to thy ſelf all delights, reſtrain not thy ſelf from any deſire of thine eyes.

V. 2. I ſaid of laughter] By laughter, he meaneth any exceſs of joy, and merriment, when the heart is ſo full, that it cannot contain its delight within, but it breaketh forth into the face, voyce, and outward behaviour, Gen. 21. 6. Pſalm 126. 2. Luke 6. 21.

or I ſaid to laughter, Thou art mad] By a proſopopœia. Exceſſe of joy tranſporteth the mind, and as it were diſplaceth reaſon, argues much levity, vanity, incompoſedneſſe of judgment. True joy is a ſevere and ſerious thing, keeps the heart alwaies in a ſtayed and fixed condition, but the joy which breakes forth into laughter, is like the crackling of thorns, Eccleſ. 7, 6. and hath ſorrow at the bottome of it: as a mad man the more merry he is, the more miſerable, Prov. 14. 13. Jam. 4 9.

and of mirth, what doth it?] What good or profit bringeth it with it? Job 35.6,7. Matth, 20.32. The interrogation bids a challenge to all the maſters of mirth, to produce any one ſatisfactory fruit which it affordeth. Thus we ſee by the example of Solomon, that the heart cannot ſtay long on any one enquiry wherein it meeteth with diſ-ſatisfaction, but it quickly haſteneth unto another, as a bee flyeth from flower to flower, when there is not enough to ſatisfie it, as a ſick man that removes from one bed, couch, chamber, unto another for eaſe, and finds none; Eſay 57. 10. Jer. 2. 23, 36. 2. That in ſuch kind of changes uſually the heart goeth from better to worſe, as here Solomon from wiſdom to pleaſures. 3. Here is obſervable the nature of ſenſual mirth, it tends towards exceſſe and ſo towards undecency and madneſſe: for here is not condemned moderate, but exceſſive pleaſure, when a man gives up his heart to it, and makes it the buſineſſe of his life.

V. 3. I ſought in my heart] upon ſerious deliberation, and further exploration of that good which men may in this life attain unto, finding that neither wiſdom alone, nor pleaſures alone, could bring me unto it, I purpoſed to temper them together; and ſince I found that wiſdom and knowledge was accompanied with grief and ſorrow, I intended to mitigate thoſe griefs with bodily delights: and yet ſo, as that my wiſdom might reſtrain thoſe delights from any exceſſe, and from diſabling me in the duties which I owed to God or men.

to give my ſelf unto wine] To draw my fleſh with wine. Or, to draw forth my ſelf unto wine. Abſtinence doth ſhrink and contract the body, and keep it under, 1 Cor. 9. 27. Dan. 1. 10. feaſting and mirth doth draw it forth, Pſal. 73 7. That leanneſſe, or waſting of body which by hard ſtudies I had contracted, I now purpoſed by more delicacy of living, and indulgence to draw forth into freſhneſs, fulneſs, and beauty again, Or, to draw with wine, to ſpend more time in feaſting, banqueting and delights, than formerly I had done. So drawing ſignifies ſometimes continuance and prolongation of a buſineſſe, Pſal. 85. 5. Iſai. 13. 22. Ezek. 12. 28. So the glutton, Luke 16 19.

unto wine] (i. e.) By a Synecdoche, unto all kind of delicates in eating and drinking, in banquetting and feaſting. As bread ſignifies all neceſſaries, Amos 7. 12. with 6. 11. ſo wine all delicates, Prov. 9. 2. Cant. 8. 2. & 2. 4.

yet acquainting mine heart with wiſdom] Or, leading my heart by wiſdom, reſolving to keep ſuch a temper, as to carry my ſelf not licentiouſly, but wiſely, in the uſe of pleaſures, to keep my ſelf from being captivated unto, or ſwallowed up of theſe carnal delights as uſing them not ſenſually, with a brutiſh exceſſe, but critically and rationally, to find out what real content they do afford unto the heart of an intelligent man. I did ſo give my fleſh unto wine, as though I kept my heart for wiſdom ſtill.

and to lay hold on folly] By folly, he meaneth thoſe pleaſures, the laying hold on which he found in the event to be nothing but folly. Thus to lay hold on them, is fully to poſſeſſe a mans ſelf with them, and to embrace and apprehend them with all ones ſtrength, Iſa. 56. 4. 1 Tim. 6. 19. Phil. 3. 12, 13. It may likewiſe ſeem to intimate thus much, That he held folly from mixing with his pleaſures, or coming into his heart along with them, to hold it, as a man holds an enemy from doing him any hurt, Judg. 12. 6. & 16. 21.

till I might ſee what was that good for the ſons of men] This was the end of his enquiring; it was not to drown himſelf in ſenſuallity, but to diſcover what kind of courſe was that, which would render this preſent mortal life more comfortable to a man. He did it not vitiouſly, but to make an experiment only. Solomon found in himſelf emptineſs and indigency, he felt ſtrong appetitions after ſome good which might ſupply thoſe wants; and he had active principles of reaſon to inquire what that good was, which nature did ſo much want, and ſo greatly deſire. And this reaſon and habitual wiſdom he imployed to the uttermoſt, to diſcover that good under heaven, which might moſt perfectly ſatisfie the wants and deſires of the reaſonable ſoul.

under heaven] As before under the Sun. He was not ignorant, but that in the heavens there was a ſupreme and infinite good, which the glorified ſouls ſhould enjoy unto endleſs ſatisfaction; but he ſpeaketh here of that good under the Sun, which may moſt ſweeten the mortal life of man.

all the dayes of their life] That is, true good which is durable, and commenſurate to the ſoule that feeds on it. Now moſt of the things he here recounteth; are onely for ſome ſeaſons of life, as painful ſtudies, vigorous pleaſures, active nogotiations; when age and infirmities come, they forſake him; and ſo theſe good things dye before the man that ſhould enjoy them, 2 Sam. 19. 35. Pſalm 90. 10. Eccl. 12. 3, 4, 5. Therefore in this enquiry, the duration of the good, is as requiſite to be conſidered as the quality of it; whether it will continue with a man as a ſtay and comfort to him all the dayes of his life. Nothing will do this but godlineſſe, Pſal. 92. 13, 14. There can be no time, no condition in a mans life, wherein the fear of God will not be comfortable unto him

Here we obſerve; 1. That in all theſe inquiries Solomon begins with his heart, thereby noting unto us, that the good which muſt ſatisfie a man, muſt bear proportion to his heart, and to his inward man. 2. That he tempers his pleaſures and his pains in ſeeking knowledge, together; teaching thereby, that the right uſe of pleaſures, is not to take up the the whole man, but to mittigate the bitterneſs, and pains of ſeveral ſtudies thereby. 3. That a man hath never greater need of the bridle of wiſdom, than when he is in purſuance of carnal delights. 4. That pleaſures and folly are very neer of kin; and a very hard thing it is to hold folly ſo faſt in, but that it will get looſe, and immixe it ſelf in carnal delights. 5. That a free and full indulgence unto pleaſure, though not upon ſenſual, but critical and more curious aims, will by degrees ſteal away the heart, and much abate more ſpiritual and heavenly delights: corruption ever creeping in with curioſity, Prov. 20. 1. & 23. 3. 6 It is a noble and high frame of ſpirit to look out in every thing which a man undertakes, after that which is truly and principally good for his heart, in the uſe of that thing. 7. That the comfort of a mans life under heaven, is to the doing of that good which God hath given him his ſtrength and life for. 8. That nothing is truly the good of a mans life, which is not commenſurate in duration and concinuance thereunto, and which will not properly miniſter comfort unto him, into whatſoever various conditions of life, as ſickneſs, poverty, bondage, disfavour, old age, &c. he may be caſt into.

V. 4. Having upon further deliberation, declared his purpoſe, to ſearch for good amongſt pleaſures and bodily delights; he now ſheweth what magnificent and royal proviſions he made, in order to that deſign, ſumptuous diet, ſtately buildings, vineyards, gardens, orchards, forreſts, parks, fiſh-ponds honourable retinue of ſervants, poſſeſſions, of all ſorts of cattel, treaſures of gold, ſilver, and all precious things; muſick, vocal, inſtrumental, and all theſe in great abundance, as far as royal wealth could procure, largeneſs of hearts deſire, or exquiſite wiſdom contrive: In all which he took exceeding much joy and delight, being withheld by no manner of impediments from the full fruition of them; yet in the concluſion, he paſſeth the ſame cenſure here, as he had done before That al was vanity, &c.

I made me great works] I did not ſtoop to baſe and inconſiderable things, to find out that pleaſure which might ſatisfie my deſires, but I ſough it in magnificent works, becoming the royal ſtate of a King, as Eſth. 1. 4. Of which works he doth immediately ſubjoyn a large Catalogue

I bulded me; Or to my ſelf, or for my ſelf (it is dativus commodi) houſes, large and ſtately, thirteen yeers in building, 1 Reg. 7. 1. ——— 13. and 9. 15, 17, 18, 19. Houſes for habitation and houſes for ſtate and pleaſure; winter-houſes, and ſummer-houſes, Amos 3. 15. David had built an houſe of Cedar before, 2 Chron. 2. 3. but Solomon contenteth not himſelf with that.

vineyards] Cant. 8. 11. David likewiſe had vineyards and orchards, and cattel, and treaſures, and ſervants ſet over all theſe, 1. Chron. 27. 25. ——— 31. yet Solomon will have them in greater magnificence, having no wars nor troubles to interrupt him, as his father had.

V. 5. I made me gardens and orchards] Gardens for flowers, plants, ſpices, Cant. 6. 2. orchards, or paradiſes for trees of all ſorts; under which we may comprize forreſts and parks, or, places for choiſeſt cattel, Cant. 4. 13, 14. Neh. 2. 8. which were places of great pleaſure and delight, Eſth. 1 5.

V. 6. pools of water, to water therewith the wood, &c.] Artificial ponds and receptacles of water, whether ariſing from ſprings, or otherwiſe by aque-ducts, and other means derived thither, 2. Reg. 18. 17. Theſe uſed to be in, or near great gardens, and near princely works, 2 Reg. 20. 20. Neh. 2. 14. & 3. 15. Gen. 2. 9. 10. Cant. 7. 4. To water the wood or forreſt, whereby he ſeemeth to mean the gardens and orchards, before mentioned, for the ſpaciouſneſs of them. So a forreſt is elſewhere called an Orchard, or Paradiſe. Neh. 2. 8. Theſe things in theſe hot countries, were accounted ſpecial bleſſings and from thence, they have their name, Joſh. 15. 19. Theſe things he had as materials for his wiſdom, 1 Reg. 4. 33.

V. 7. I got me ſervants and maidens] Some he bought or hired from abroad, others, were born unto him in his houſe: and theſe he had for the manifold duties of his royal family: Such had David, 1 Chron. 27. 26 — 31. and ſo Solomon, 2 Reg. 4. 7. & 5. 16- 17 and 10. 5.

And had ſervants born in mine houſe] Sons of mine houſe; the children of an handmaid born in her maſters houſe, were born ſervants unto the maſter of the houſe, Gen. 14. 14. & 15. 3. & 17. 12. Jer. 2. 14. hereunto David alludeth, when he ſaith, I am thy ſervant the ſon of thy handmaid, Pſal. 116. 16 The ſervants of Solomon, which were certain publick Officers, appointed by Solomon, we read of long after, Exra 2. 58. Neh. 7. 60. who may ſeem to be thoſe of the Canaanites, whom Solomon made bondſlaves. 1 Reg. 9. 21. Some by ſons of the houſe, underſtand thoſe Officers whom Solomon did ſet over his houſe, to order the affaires thereof, 1 Reg. 4. 27.

poſſeſſions of great and ſmal cattel] Or, I had cattel both great and ſmall, or herds and flocks. The firſt word is generall to all cattel, great or ſmall; the two next, the ſpecies of that general, Gen. 34. 23. 1 Reg. 4. 22, 23, 26.

above all that were before me in Ieruſalem] As more wiſdom, Chap. 1. 16. ſo more wealth, and proviſions for that wiſdom to work upon, 1. Reg 3 13. & 10. 23.

V. 8. I gathered me alſo ſilver and gold] I heaped it up; as Pſal. 33 7. 1 Reg. 9. 28. & 10. 14. 15. 27. The wayes of this great gain were Tribute, 1. Reg. 10. 25. honorable preſents, ſent out of the high admiration of his wiſdom from other Princes, 1 Reg. 10. 10 & 4. 34. and merchandize, or free-trade into remote Countries, 1 Reg. 9 26. 28. & 10. 15. 28.

and the peculiar treaſure of Kings and of Provinces] Precious rarities, or moſt choice and deſirable things which men uſe to lay up in their treaſures; the chief rarities of ſeveral countries, 1 Chr. 29. 2. 3. Hence whatſoever is intimately dear and honourable, is metaphorically called ſegullah, Exod. 19 5. Pſal. 135. 4. Mal. 3. 17. The Apoſtle rendreth it περιούσιον, Tit. 2. 14. others, ἐξαίρετον, that which is of principal worth and eſteem, Iſai. 39. 2. The preciouſeſt and moſt deſireable things, which Kingdoms and Provinces could afford, or wherewith Princes and Provinces did uſe to preſent him, 1 Reg 4. 21. & 9. 11. & 10. 2. 10. 2 Chron. 9. 9. 10.

I gat me men-ſingers, and women-ſingers] Theſe as well as thoſe, becauſe naturally their voice is ſweeter than mens: So we finde them joyned, 2 Sam 19. 35. 2 Chron. 35 25. and we read, that not only Moſes and the men, but Miriam and the women did ſing at the overthrow of Pharaoh, Exod. 15. 1. 20. 21. 1 Sam. 18. 6, 7.

and the delights of the ſons of men, viz. muſical inſtruments. &c.] The word tranſlated, muſical inſtruments, is no where elſe uſed in the Scripture, and hath various interpretations put upon it. Some underſtanding by it, beautiful daughters, denominated from their breaſts, as elſewhere from their womb, Judges 5. 30. Others, for choice and delicate women, taken as a prey in War, as we find there the manner was: and others for divers other things, as we find in Hierom, Druſius, Mercer, and others But the moſt received ſenſe, and moſt agreeable with the former delight of ſingers, is muſical inſtruments.

V. 9. So I was great, and increaſed] Or, added to my greatneſs; as Chap. 1. 16. 1. 1 Reg 10. 23.

alſo my wiſedome remained with me] This he addeth, 1. As a rare and unuſual thing, that pleaſures ſhould not at all ſmother and ſuppreſs wiſedom: 2. As an argument towards the main concluſion, that in the midſt of all theſe delights, he did intend the buſineſs for which he uſed them, namely, by wiſdom to obſerve, what reall good and ſatisfaction they did bring to the heart of man.

V. 10. And whatſoever mine eyes deſired, &c.] It might be objected, that his wiſedom haply, and his fear of God, reſtrained both his eye and his heart, from ſo full a fruition of theſe delights, as were requiſite to extract all the comfort of them; ſo Job reſtrained his eye, Job 31. 1. and Solomon adviſeth a glutton to reſtrain his appetite, Prov. 23. 2. Numb 15. 39. To this he anſwereth, That whatſoever his eyes deſired, (as the eye is one of the principal ſeats of deſire or luſting, 1 John 2. 16. Joſh 7 21.) he did not reſerve any thing of it from them, which withheld his heart from any joy: Neither did any accidental hinderance, interced; as war, or ſickneſs, or ſorrow or any notable affliction, which might debar him from a liberal and cheerful uſe of all this his greatneſs. The eye here is taken ſynechdocically for all the ſenſes, (for in this ample preparation, there was proviſion for them all.) Much labour and care he had taken to make thoſe proviſions for the fleſh; (as the Apoſtles phraſe in another ſenſe is, Rom. 13. 14.) and there was no other fruit of all that labour, but having gotten them, to enjoy them my heart rejoyced] That is, I my ſelf did intimately rejoyce and pleaſe my ſelf in the fruit of my labours.

this was the portion of all my labour] This was all the fruit, benefit, and as it were, inheritance, which my labours in this kind did purchaſe for me. A metaphor from the manner of dividing inheritances, Numb. 18 20. or, ſpoils, 1 Sam. 30. 24.

V. 11. Then I looked on all, &c.] After all this, I turned and looked back, or took an impartial ſurvey of all my works, which with ſuch painful labours and trouble I had wrought: and found, that the fruit was not anſwerable to the toyl which was ſuſtained for the reaping of it: but that this alſo was vanity, a periſhing withering, and dying comfort, a feeding upon wind, and that it left no abiding benefit behind it, ch. 1. 3.

V. 12. And I turned my ſelf,] Here Solomon doth once more ſeriouſly apply himſelf as he did before Chap. 1. 17. to take a view of wiſdom and folly. Becauſe it might haply be objected, that at the firſt conſideration of them, he might let many things ſlip, which were of weight and moment in his preſent inquiry. Becauſe ſecond thoughts, and ſolemn review of former ſtudies, may haply beget ſome retractation, and diſcover ſome error: The later day being uſually the diſciple of the former; and we uſe to ſay, that the ſecond thoughts are the wiſeſt: therefore when the Scripture will put a thing beyond the queſtion, it ſayes it over again, Gal. 8. 9.

I turned my ſelf] This notes reconſideration and ſpecial heedfulneſſe, to inquire a new into a buſineſſe, and likewiſe a wearineſſe of thoſe pleaſures which had diſappointed him, John 20. 14.

to behold wiſedome, and madneſſe, and folly] To compare the one with the other, that I might the better underſtand them, as contraries ſerve to ſet forth one the other. There is nothing more uſual in Solomons Proverbs than this kind of antitheſis, to put contraries together for mutual illuſtration.

for what can the man do that cometh after the King] Here man and King ſeem to be oppoſed, what further progreſs can any private man make in this diſquiſition, than I who am ſuch a King? This is a prolepſis or anſwer to a tacite objection; for it might be ſaid, it was a high and bold attempt for one man out of his particular experience to paſs ſo confident a ſentence of vanity, and vexation, upon all wiſdom and great works To this he anſwereth, that no man after him could do more in this enquiry, than he had done, who was ſo eminent in wiſedom, in power, in induſtry, who was as it were fitted and ſtirred up by God unto this buſineſs; and therefore if any man after him ſhould ſet about the ſame work, he ſhall do no other thing than that which the King had done before him. This appears to be no arrogant boaſt in Solomon becauſe the Scripture teſtifieth the ſame of him, 1 Reg. 3 12. The man who will not believe it upon my report, but will make triall of it himſelf, if he will go with the ſame wiſedome and integrity about it as I have done, ſhall find the ſame vanity in the bottom of every creature, as I have found. So here are two reaſons why Solomon challengeth belief in this point. 1. The advantages which he ſo great a king had above any other man, to draw forth all the flower and quinteſſence of the creature. 2. The double diligence which he uſed in it, in not onely viewing throughly once, but reviewing again the things upon which he paſſed ſuch a judgement.

what the man] The words intimate a kind of indignation, diſdain, undervaluing of any one who ſhould attempt ſuch an inquiry after him, as Pſal.8. 4. Quid dignum tanto tulit hic promiſſor hiatu; what is the man who cometh after the king, whom they have made king before; ſo ſome read the words: but the moſt genuine and coherent ſence is that which our tranſlation expreſſeth; he that comes after, can do nothing but what they have done: i. e. what is done already before them. The active voice indefinite uſed for the paſſive, as Iſa. 9.6. Jer.23.6. Gen. 16. 14. 1 Sam.23. 22.

I would obſerve hence, 1. That the double and multiplyed experience of wiſe, great and good men, doth gain much credit and ſtrength to the doctrines ſo confirmed, 1 John 1.3. Heb. Chap. 11. and 12.1. Jam. 5.10,11.

2. That the more prejudice is in the heart of men againſt a truth, the more care muſt be uſed to vindicate the ſame from all ſhew of exception, Tit. 1.11 & 2.8. Acts *6.*10. and 18.28.

3. For a man to ſpeak the truth of himſelf touching the gifts of God beſtowed on him, and to mention his own experiences, onely ayming therein at the glory and truth of God, and the edification of the Church, is no arrogance, or violation of modeſty, but an improving of Gods gifts to the ends for which he gave them, Chapter, 1.16.

V. 13. Then I ſaw that wiſedome excelleth folly, &c.] That there is an excellency in wiſdom more than in folly, &c. This Solomon confeſſeth, that indeed there is a great difference between wiſedom and pleaſures, that being many wayes more excellent than thoſe; and therefore though the ſtudy of wiſedome be not without pain and ſorrow, Chap. 1.18. yet it is not therefore to be rejected. Wiſedom leaves behind it ſome permanent good, as the word here imports, whereas pleaſures do periſh in their uſe, and nothing ſtayes behind them but the ſting and ſorrow. The ſorrow of wiſedome is in the getting, but the ſorrow of pleaſures is after the uſing, and enjoying of them. It is true, wiſedome and knowledge are vain, in order to a higher and nobler end than they bear proportion unto, viz. to make man truly happy: yet they are of excellent uſe, and ſingular ornaments to the ſoul which hath them; ſo the Apoſtle though he tell us that charity is more excellent than gifts, the one ſerving for edification onely of others, but the other for ſanctification of a mans ſelf, yet acknowledgeth that they are all operations of Gods Spirit, and beſtowed on men for very profitable uſes, and accordingly to be earneſtly deſired, 1 Cor. 12. 4,7,31, & 14.1,39. yet we are ſo to eſteem gifts, as that we prefer ſalvation and happineſs before them, Luk. 10.20.

As far as light excelleth darkneſs] Wiſedome to the mind being as light to the body, and therefore the Rabbins called their wiſe men the light of the world; as our Saviour his Apoſtles, Matth. 5. 14. Light is many wayes comfortable, it ſhews things in their diſtinct forms, it diſcovers any thing hurtful, that it may be avoyded, or beneficial that it may be embraced, whereas darkneſs confoundeth all things, and expoſeth a man to many dangers. Light is pleaſant in it ſelf, Eccleſ. 11. 7. and it is metaphorically uſed to expreſs the moſt excellent things, as joy, Pſalm 97. 11. Eſter 8.16 liberties and deliverance, Iſa. *9.*1. Glory, 1 Tim. 6. 16. Proſperity, Mic 7. 9. Life it ſelf, Job 3.16, 20. and uſually, wiſedome and knowledge, whereunto it is here compared, Dan. 5.14. And it is very uſeful and neceſſary for direction in our works and labours, Iohn 11. 9. 10. But darkneſs on the other ſide is very uncomfortable; it is uſed to expreſs the moſt calamitous and diſconſolate condition, Iob 30. 26. Eccleſ. 5.17. Iſa. 8.22. Amos 5.18,20. Iſa. 50. 10. Eccl. 11 8. very unuſeful, as putting a ſtop to all labour, Exod. 10. 23. Joſh. 4 9. very dangerous, as cauſing a man to ſtumble at every ſtone, to fall into every pit, to wander out of his way &c. Joſh. 11. 12. and 12. 35. and folly and ignorance in the mind, is uſually expreſſed by the name of darkneſſe, Eph. 4. 18. and 5. 8. Rom. 1. 21. In the creation, darkneſſe was the firſt evil which God removed, and light the firſt good creature that he made, Gen. 1.2,3. light excelleth darkneſs, as the beautifull and orderly frame of nature, doth the firſt confuſed chaos.

V. 14. The wiſe mens eyes are in his head] The reaſon of the former compariſon, a wiſe man is in the light, but a fool in darkneſs. In his head, as in a watch-tower, from whence he ſeeth his way before him a far off, taketh notice of things to come, as well as things preſent, is circumſpect and heedful, judicious and wary in his undertakings: Therefore they who are called wiſe men in one place, Deut. 16. 19. are called men that have their eyes open, in another place, Exod. 23.8 They do in the beginning of a buſineſs look forward to the end of it, they forecaſt events, foreſee conſequences; their eyes try their wayes. as Pſalm 11. 4. ſo looking ſtrait forward, denoteth pondering and weighing a mans actions, Proverbs 4.25,26. hence it is that Moſes ſaid to his father in Law, who was a very wiſe man, Thou ſhalt be to us in ſteed of eyes, to guide and counſel us, Numb 10.31. where the LXX. render it πρεσβύτης, thou ſhalt be an Elder, a Counſellour, a guide amongſt us; ſo Job ſaith of himſelf, that he was eyes to the blind, Job 29. 15. A Counſellour and guide unto them. Thus the excellency of wiſdome is deſcribed by the eye, as being the principall part of the body, and moſt beneficial to the whole, 1 Cor. 12. 16, 17, 21. Matth. 6. 22. and what the eye is to the body, that is, to the mind, Eph. 1.18.

But the fool walketh in darkneſſe] Hereby we underſtand what is meant by having the eyes in the head, namely, to have them uſefull for guiding and ordering our wayes, ſo as that we may not erre, wander, ſtumble, fall, miſtake, miſcarry in our affairs. The antitheſis ſhould have run thus, but the fools eyes are in his heels, or he hath no eyes to ſee; but the uſe of Scripture is to put in the place of the antitheſis, that which ſhall in ſenſe amount thereunto, as Prov. 12.27. the one part of the verſe is parabolical or proverbial, but the antitheſis is plain and familiar; ſo Prov. 14. 3. and 15.19. The fool is raſh, heady, inconſiderate, cannot diſcern events, nor foreſee dangers; knows not which way to chuſe, or to refuſe; his eyes are any where, rather than in his head, Prov. 17. 24. is carried headlong in his buſineſs, eaſily ſnared and taken Proverb. 4.18,19. 2 Pet. 1.19 Matth. 13. 15, 16. By darkneſs here, we may underſtand blindeſs, Act. 13.11. and then walking in darkneſs, is a diſcovery of folly, when a man wants eyes, and yet will be wandring and venturing abroad; when he knows not whither he goes, nor what dangers are in his way.

Thus far he hath ſhewed the excellency of wiſdom above folly, now he ſheweth wherein, notwithſtanding, they do ſo far agree, as that vanity belongs unto them both.

And I perceived] The meaning is, notwithſtanding this excellency of the one above the other; yet I perceived that one event hapneth to them all] They are equally ſubject to the ſame unhappy events; the wiſeſt man that is cannot by his own counſel exempt himſelf from the ſame common calamities which other men fall into: as two wayes which ſeem to part, the one turning to the right hand and the other to the left, and yet both at laſt bring to the ſame town, chap. *9.*2. and 3.19.

V. 15. Then ſaid I in mine heart] i. e. Therefore, or hereupon I ſaid in mine heart, if it happen to me, even to me, as to the fool, to what end have I taken ſo much pains to be more wiſe and learned than he, being by all my wiſedome not a whit protected from thoſe evils which he hath by his folly expoſed himſelf unto.

That this alſo is vanitie] Some make this to be a judgement on that haſty and angry inference, why was I then more wiſe? and ſo the meaning to be; this was my infirmity and vanity, to undervalue wiſedome, and meaſure it by the caſuall events which befall it, as Pſalm 73. 13. —— 15. and 77. 10. But the meaning is, that in this reſpect wiſedome is no more able to make a man happy, or to bring perfect tranquillity to the ſoul, than folly is: albeit in other reſpects there be a ſingular excellency in it above the other.

Here then obſerve, 1. That the moſt excellent endowments of mind that are, cannot perfectly ſatisfie the heart of man.

2 That yet there is a ſpecial beauty and goodneſs in ſuch gifts, to draw the delight of the heart unto them, as being to the mind, as the eye to the head, the guide and the beauty of it; or as light to the eye, a moſt congenial and ſuitable good unto it.

3. That events and ſucceſſes depend not upon the counſels of men, nor upon the gifts of God beſtowed on them, but his providence hath the caſting voice, and doth over-rule and order them all as pleaſeth him, Eccleſ. 9. 11. Pſalm 127. 1, 2. many times thoſe who have leaſt wiſedome or goodneſſe, have greateſt ſucceſſe Iob 21. 7.—13. Pſalm 73. 3. 12. Ier. 12. 1, 2. Hab. 1.13. Mal. 3. 15. and many times the wiſeſt and moſt circumſpect men, are moſt fruſtrated in thoſe courſes which were contrived with greateſt skill and cunning, 2 Sam. 17. 14. Iob 5. 12.—14. Iſa. 19. 11.—14. 1 Cor. 1.20.

4. That notwithſtanding the Providence and Counſel of God hath the preeminency in the events of things, yet that hindreth not the excellency of wiſedome above folly, neither are we thereby at all incouraged to find fault with our ſelves for any labour in the uſe of means, onely we muſt ſo uſe them, as not to deifie them, nor to truſt in them, but wholly to depend upon God for his bleſſing on our Counſels, to ſubmit to his wiſe and holy purpoſes, when they are diſappointed, to admire his goodneſſe when at any times he turneth our imprudence or improvidence unto good and maketh the event not anſwerable to our follies, but to his love.

5. That we cannot judge of the wiſdom or folly, the goodneſs or badneſs of men by outward events, becauſe theſe happen alike to all, Chap. 8.14. & *9.*11.

V. 16. There is no remembrance &c.] What he obſerved in the general before, he now maketh good in two particulars, viz oblivion and death, which are both alike common to wiſe men and to fools. Wiſe men may ſeem to ſecure at leaſt their names though they cannot their bodies from mortality; by ſuch magnificent works as Solomon here wrought, and by ſuch noble contemplations as he was converſant in; but he aſſures us here the contrary, and elſewhere; that Piety onely keepeth the name from rotting with the body, Prov. 10.7. Pſalm 112 6. Pſalm 49. 11, 12 Ier. 17. 13. Time will eat out all the monuments of wiſdom, or though they continue, yet the renown of a wiſe man doth him no good at all, he is not after death ſenſible of it, or comforted with it, ſo Chap. 1. 11. new wiſe men, that ariſe in after ages, will darken and eclipſe the honour of thoſe that went before them: and ſo will it be done to them in the ages that follow. To be ſure, no mere wiſe or great mans honour ſeparated from Piety, will hold pace with his being; at the laſt day there will ſo much ſhameful matter be diſcovered againſt the wiſeſt of wicked men, as they ſhall then loſe all their renown, and ſhall appear to be veſſels of diſhonour and ſhame for evermore, 1 Cor.4.5. 2 Tim. 2.20.

And how dieth the wiſe man? as the fool] The ſecond fate common to both. This how, in a paſſionate interrogation, noting grief that it is ſo; wonder that it is no otherwiſe: and indignation or diſdain, that things ſo exceeding different in their worth, ſhould both of them periſh alike. Thus there is a Quomodo dolentis, of grieving, Lam 1.1. admirantis, of wondring, Acts, 2.7.8. Indignantis, or objurgantis, of chiding and diſdain, John 5.44. Matth. 23 33. And becauſe it may be objected that this Argument may as well diſable Piety from making a man happy, as wiſedom: Since the ſame queſtion may be framed of them, as well as of theſe, how dieth the juſt man? as the unjuſt: we muſt remember that piety follows a man, and ſo abides with him after death, which no other acquired excellencies do either as ornaments or as comforts, Rev. 14.13. Death doth not cut off their ſpiritual life & union with Chriſt, which was that which made them happy here. VVicked men are dead, being alive, 1 Tim. 5.6. and good men live in death, John 11.25, 26. Mat. 22.32. therefore the Iews called their burying places domus viventium, the houſes of the living. Therefore there is no durable life or honour, but in the fear of the Lord.

V. 17. Therefore I hated life, &c.] This is the effect which this great vanity of the moſt excellent humane endowment wrought in the heart of Solomon, made him weary of living to ſo little purpoſe, as to dye at laſt like the baſeſt of men, He ſaw no lovelyneſſe or deſireableneſſe in life it ſelf, (though the chiefeſt outward bleſſing) all the courſe thereof being full of evil, grievous, cruciating, diſquieting labour, all which at laſt runneth down like the waters of Iordan, into the ſame lake of death, with the other refuſe of men. Many mens poverty, pains, ſickneſſe, worldly troubles, have cauſed them to complain of their life; but here is one who had health, peace, honour, abundance of all the contents which the world could afford, not murmuringly, but as it were judiciouſly and critically making the ſame complaints. The greatneſſe of his wiſdom being, ſuch, as that all the comforts of life were too narrow to ſatisfie the inquiries of it, he ſaw little valuable or deſirable in it.

Here obſerve: 1. That life it ſelf is too mean a thing to bring full content to the ſoul of man. It muſt be ſomething better than life which muſt do it, Pſal. 63.3.

2. That in the greateſt confluence of worldly things, the life of a man may be full of grievous labour, and he weary of it, not onely out of anguiſh of ſpirit, but of natural wiſedome obſerving the vanity thereof.

3. That the wiſdom of man, without making uſe of the grace of God, is very apt to undervalue the greateſt outward bleſſing which humane nature is capable of; as Solomon here doth life. There is naturally ſo much diſtemper in the heart of man, that except all things anſwer his own deſires and expectations, he will fall out with his very life, and pick quarrels with the choyſeſt bleſſings that God here affords him. As a little cloud hides the light of the whole Sun from the eye, ſo amidſt a multitude of enjoyments, a little labour or trouble which comes along with them, doth darken the beauty, and remove the content of them all, Gen. 30 1. Pſal. 59.15. Eſth. 5.13.

4. Concerning this point, of being weary of life or hating it as an unlovely and undeſireable thing, me may note, 1. That life is the choiceſt and principal outward bleſſing which God here affords us, and that unto the comfort and preſervation whereof all other outward bleſſings are directed, Matth. 6.25. 2. That though in a way of obedience we are to undervalue it at the command of God when he calls on us to lay it down Luke 14.26. Act. 20.24. 1 John 3.16. John 12.25. and in compariſon of a better life, we may groan for a deliverance from it, and to be with Chriſt, Phil. 1.23. yet it is a great fault out of paſsion, murmuring, outward troubles, nay, out of largeneſs of heart, as here Solomon doth, to diſeſteem and wax weary of ſo great a bleſsing, Gen 27.46. Numb. 14.2. Job 10.1. and 36.20. Jon. 4.3, 8.

V. 18. Yea, I hated all my labour, &c.] All thoſe magnificent and excellent works, which with ſo much labour I had wrought. They were all ſo far from miniſtring unto my heart any ſolid contentment, that I grew wholy out of love with them, had no regard nor reſpect at all unto them. If by hatred here, and in the former verſe, he meant onely an abatement of that love and delight which his heart might over-ſenſually take in them, then this was a very commendable fruit of the vanity which he diſcovered in them; according to the counſel of the Apoſtle, upon the ſame ground, 1 Cor. 7.29,30,31. 1 John 2.15 Love not the world, that ſeems to be a worldly and ſecular life, or Temporal being, nor the things of the world, that is, the proviſions and materials which are the fewel of luſt in the world: and ſo hatred ſometimes ſignifies an abatement and moderation of love, Matth. 10.37. compared with Luke 14 26. John 12.25. Gen. 29 30,31. But if by hatred is meant a deteſtation and abhorrency of them, ſo as to leave off all care of duty to be exerciſed in worldly things, according to the travel which God hath appointed for the ſons of men, Ch. 1.13 Epheſ. 5.28. 2 Theſ. 3.10.——13. and this to do, becauſe we find not that plenary ſatisfaction from them, which they were never ordained to adminiſter, then this was an inordinate hatred which did not belong unto the works themſelves, (being in themſelves good) but unto the ſinful diſtemper of the heart from whence it proceeded. Such was the ſullen diſtemper of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, Numb. 11.6. & 20.4 Jon. 4.1.

Becauſe I ſhould leave it unto, &c.] Here the wiſe man doth ſubjoyn reaſons of this his wearineſs and diſlike of all his paſt labours: 1. Becauſe he was to leave them; there was a neceſſity of parting with them at the laſt. As the heart of man in this ſtate of corruption is naturally apt to cleave to the world and worldly things, ſo there is a peculiar delight in thoſe works which are the fruit of his own wiſedome and labour: and he finds it more hard to wean and take off his affections from them, than from any other. As the Apoſtle ſaith of a mans own proper luſt, ſo we may of his own labour and work, that it doth more eaſily draw away the heart, Iam. 1.14. therefore when God puniſheth ſuch men, he uſually doth it in the works of their own hands, in their principal and peculiar imployments; as Tyrus in her merchandize, Ezek. 27.27. Pharaoh in his river, Ezek. 29.3.4. The wiſe man is apt to glory in his wiſedome, and the ſtrong man in his ſtrength, &c. Ier. 9.23. Dan. 4.30, 31. This is the firſt ground of vexation, They muſt leave their wealth to others, Pſal. 49.10, 12.

V. 19. And who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a fool?] 2. The reaſon of his forementioned diſlike of all his labour; becauſe he muſt leave them to the man that comes next after him, who haply may be very unfit to ſucceed him in ſo wiſe and great works. It is not in mans power to leave the works of his hands, when he muſt himſelf no longer enjoy them, unto ſuch as are moſt likely to improve or preſerve them: but be he what he will, wiſe or fooliſh he muſt have, not onely the fruition of my labours: but the dominion over them, Pſal. 39.6. And this is a great vanity, to know a mans ſelf how to get great things, and to know how to preſerve, and to enjoy them; but not to know what will become of them at the laſt: A wiſe man it may be will alter all; a fool will ſcatter and diſſipate all, and ſo all the fathers wiſdom may quickly come to nought by the ſons folly, wherein I have laboured and wherein I have ſhewed my ſelfe wiſe] Which by my labor and my wiſdom I have gotten. He underſtandeth humane wiſdom in managing worldly affairs to the beſt improvement, Iſa. 10 13. Ezek 38.4, 5. Theſe are the two great principles of humane actions, Wiſdom to direct; Labour to execute: Wiſdom by counſel guideth labour; and Labour through experience encreaſeth wiſdom. That wiſdom is fruitleſs, which doth not produce labour; and that labour is uſeleſs, which is not managed by wiſdom. Some conceive that Solomon here did foreſee, or at leaſt fear that Rehoboam by his folly might ſcatter many of thoſe great works and loſe much of that ample power and wealth which his father by his wiſdom had gotten, 1 Reg. 12.13,15.

V. 20. Therefore I went about to cauſe my heart to deſpair of all the labour, &c.] I went about, or, I circled. The meaning is, Having turned hither and thither to take a view of all humane actions, and every where diſcovering notable vanity in them all, I found my ſelf, after I was wearied in this round, brought at laſt to utter deſpair and deſpondency of ſpirit; being without hope of ever finding out that in any of my labours for which I had undertaken them. When I found after all my labour, this ſad uncertainty attending on them, that it was out of my power to diſpoſe them for the future ſo, but that they might fall into the hands of a fool that would demoliſh and diſſipate them all; who by his folly would extinguiſh the monuments of my wiſdom; and by his luxury the fruits of my labour: Then I beſtirred my ſelf to make my heart deſpair, to call it wholy of from all my labours. The word importeth a deſiſting from a purpoſe or work undertaken, a changing of a mans counſel, finding the attempt to be fruitleſs or unſeaſable, Iſa. 57.10. Ier. 2.25. & 18.12. There is a Rational deſpair, when a man having erroneouſly ſought for ſome good from that which is wholly unable to afford it, doth thereupon give over ſo fruitleſs an inquiry, and betake himſelf to that which is more effectual, Iſa. 55.2. and there is a paſſionate deſpair proceeding from that frowardneſs of heart which ſuch a diſappointment is apt to produce in carnal minds; when, becauſe a man cannot enjoy that good from a thing which he expected, he will therefore wholy fall out with it, though it be otherwiſe good in its degree, and doth bring ſuch comfortable fruit as God appointed it for. This is a ſinful deſpair: For the Lord hath made many promiſes unto the labour which we take about outward things, Prov. 12.24. and 13.11. & 31.31. Pſal 128.1,2. And hath a word of bleſſing ever proportionable to thoſe ends and uſes for which he hath appointed them, Deut 28 2--8. Mat. 4.4. If Solomon mean here the former deſpair then it was an effect of his wiſdom, dictating unto him not to place his hopes upon vain things which would delude and abuſe him, but to take off his heart from the inordinate love of empty things. If the later, then it was a corrupt and froward averſion from from things good in their degree, becauſe the providence of God might haply diſpoſe otherwiſe of them than he deſired. Duty & labor about outward things belongs unto us, but the diſpoſition of them into what hands he pleaſeth, belongeth unto God. In the mean time, it is a good argument to draw off the heart from anxious and inordinate toyl about worldly things: and rather to imploy our thoughts about the education of our children, leſt much wealth in the hands of a fooliſh ſon prove an argument of our folly; whereas a little eſtate with principles of wiſdom and piety inſtilled into him that muſt enjoy it, will be a greater bleſſing unto him, and an evidence of more wiſdom in our ſelves.

V. 21. For there is a man whoſe labour is in wiſdom, &c.] i. e. who, 1. by his habitual skill and faculty of contrivance. 2. by his experimental and improved knowledge; and 3. by his juſt, honeſt, and righteous dealing;concurring all;4.with diligent labour,(unto which kind of principles ſo attempered, the bleſſing of God is uſually annexed,) doth get a fair and full eſtate: and when he hath all done,muſt leave it to another who never took thought about it, nor ſtirred hand or foot towards the gathering of it. This is a third reaſon of the wiſe mans wearineſſe of his life and labours namely, that he ſhould be a very drudge for another man, and ſhould uſe all his skill and pains, and ſuffer ſo much anxiety and diſquiet onely to purchaſe reſt and idleneſſe for his ſucceſſour.And this is a gteat & ſore evill,that the labour ſhould be one mans,and the fruit thereof anothers,and is often threatned as a puniſhment, Job 5.5. Hoſ.7. 9.& 8.7. Deut. 28. 30,31,32,33. Pſ.39. 6. Pro. 13, 22.

ſhall he give it for his portion] Or, ſhall he give his portion. That which in all reaſon after ſo much labour ſhould have been the portion of him who laboured for it, he is compelled by death to give or leave it to another man, ond ſo to make it that other mans portion.

V. 22, for what hath man of all his labour,&c. What is there unto a man of all his labour? Nehem. 6.. 6 viz. what profit, comfort, advantage, can a man have of ſuch labour wherein all the pain is his, and all the fruit and benefit another mans? chap, 1. 3, & 3. 9 Pſal.39.6.

vexation of his heart] Hereby are noted thoſe diſcruciating. diſquieting, careful thoughts, whereby he doth project and contrive within himſelf all wayes of gain, and how to increaſe and preſerve a great eſtate, Pſal.49. 11. Hab.2.5,6. 1 Tim.6.9,10. This may refer to all the three Reaſons before given; 1. What hath man left to himſelf of all his labour and vexation when he is dead and gone, all the world is then gone to him, Job 1.21. 1 Tim. 6. 7. Pſal.49 17. 2 What good hath he by all that pains which was taken for another man, who if he were wiſe, would be able to take the paines for himſelf, and if fooliſh, will be likely to make all another mans pains fruitleſſe, which he took to provide for him, Job 27. 16,17. 3. What hath he of all his Labour more than the other man who ſate ſtill, and lived quietly, and ſaw him toyl and drudge to get him an eſtate who laboured not for it? nothing at all more as to concernment and fruition, much more as to wearineſſe and vexation.

V. 23. For all his dayes are ſorrowes, and his travell grief] &c.] Theſe words are very emphatical,to ſet forth the pain and trouble of ſuch a man who toyls for others: and the wiſe man cloſeth this diſquiſition as he did the firſt, Chap. 1. 18. only this is expreſſed with greater emphaſis,as being the greater evill of the two;as ver. 21. 1. The words are many, to ſhew the greatneſſe of the trouble 2. The word tranſlated ſorrows, ſignifieth a very painful and cruciating grief, the grief of ſome ſore wound, Gen.34.25. Jer. 51. 8. and uſed in the caſe of Iſraels ſorrow in their bondage in Egypt, Exod.3.7. and in Babylon, Lam 1.12. and to expreſſe the ſorrows of Chriſt, Iſa.53.3,4. See Job 33.19. Prov.14. 13. 3.The Abſtract is uſed for the Concrete, it is not ſaid, All his days are ſorrowfull,but very ſorrow it ſelf, which addeth much force to the ſenſe, as Gen.3.6. Pſal.5.9. & 39 5. Hag.2. 8. Gen 12. 2. Cant. 5. 16. 4. The word is in the plural number, all his days are ſorrows, (i.e.) full of ſorrow? great ſorrow, and variety of ſorrow; as Iſa. 63. 6 2 Pet.3.11. So it is ſaid, that the Sodomites were ſmitten with blindneſſes, Gen.19.11. 2 Cor.1.3.Eccl.5.6.

and his travel [or anxious and careful labour] grief. Or, indignation,his weariſom imployments,full of diſquietneſſe,and of continual ſollicitude, meeting,withall, with many miſcarriages and diſappointments, do ſtir up much grief and diſpleaſure of heart. Hereby is noted the exceeding great trouble of heart, which ariſeth out of an inordinate converſing about worldly things, and apprehenſion of parting with them. For the leſſe meaſure there is in the labour of getting them, the more trouble there is in the thoughts of parting with them. If the life of the beſt men be full of evill and labour,Gen.47.9. Pſal.90. 10. Job 14.1. & 5. 7. (Our mother brings us forth in ſorrow and unto ſorrow)much more unquiet muſt be the life of thoſe who labour in the fire, and for very vanity. Habbac.2. 13.

yea, his heart taketh no reſt in the night] The night was appointed by God for man to reſt in, as the day to labour,Pſal.104 23.& 127 2. Job 4.13. But ſuch a man depriveth himſelf of that bleſſing, which God by the very ſeaſon offers him, Job 7. 3.4,13,14. Eccl.5. 12,13. Prov 3. 24. Or, if ſuch a mans body, through labour and wearineſſe, do ſleep, yet his heart is ſtill taken up with unquiet thoughts and cares; for the heart may be awake when the body ſleeps, Cant 5. 2.

V. 24. There is nothing better for a man,than to eat, &c.] In this verſe, and ſo to the end of the Chapter is contained, that which is the whole ſum and ſubject of this book, which is to ſhew, wherein the only good which a man can attain unto in his labour about worldly things, doth conſiſt, and the happineſſe of this preſent life which is to get the heart ſeaſoned with the fear of God, and to be good in his ſight, or approved of him; and then, in the aſſurance and joy of his favour, to make uſe of all outward good things with quiet contentment, with freedom, cheerfulneſſe and delight, which is a ſpecial bleſſing which the Lord gives unto his own ſervants. The Apoſtle puts all this into two words, Godlineſs and Contentment, 1 Tim.6.6.

The words admit of a ſeveral reading, though all run to the ſame iſſue. There is nothing better for a man than- -- - ſo our verſion The word [than] according to the reading is to be ſupplyed, it not being in the Original. And ſo Interpreters agree,that ſuch a word as niſi,or tantum may be underſtood, as it is neceſſary to be ſupplyed elſewhere; as Iſa.1.6. where,in the Original, the words run in this manner, There is no ſoundneſſe in it, wounds and bruiſes,&c. where the vvord but,or only is neceſſarily te be ſupplyed; no ſoundneſſe, [but] wounds or bruiſes: So here, There is not good for a man that he eat; the word but is to be ſupplyed, There is not, or it is not good for a man but that he eat: It is expreſſed, Chap.3.12. Others read the words with an interrogation, Is it not good for a man that he eat, &c? (i. e.) It is good.Others read thus, This good is not in a man, (i.e.) in the power of man, that he eat and drink, &c. As he cannot help it, but he muſt in time leave his outward things, which with ſo much labour he hath gotten, and that to ſuch as it may be, will not diſpoſe of them to his deſire; ſo even while he doth actually poſſeſs them himſelf, it is not in his power to uſe them,much leſs to enjoy them with delight and pleaſure, without the ſpeciall gift of God. All amounts to the ſame iſſue; which is this: Since there is in all the ſtudies, labours, affairs of men ſo much vanity and vexation, as hath been here diſcovered, by the ableſt and wiſeſt inquirer into the creature; it remains, if we would effectually free our ſelves from this vanity and vexation, that giving over thoſe anxious and diſquieting labours, we betake our ſelves to a free, cheerful, and comfortable uſe of thoſe good things which God hath bleſſed us withal; and that ſo we may do, to commend our ſelves by ſincerity of heart unto God, from whoſe hand and gift alone this mercy proceedeth, and not from the power or will of man.

make his ſoul ſee or enjoy good] i. e. Make himſelf to enjoy the good which outvvard bleſſings do afford, the like phraſe making to ſee good is uſed, Pſal.4.6. & 50. 23. ſupra, verſ. 1.

in his labour] 1. In the fruit of labour, not of idleneſs, 2. Of his ovvn labour, of that vvhich is righteouſly his ovvn, not gotten from others by violence or injuſtice.

this alſo I ſaw that it was from the hand of God] Or the ſpecial gift of God, as verſ.26. Chap.3:13. & 5 19.1. Chr.29. 16 It may ſeem but an eaſie thing vvhen man hath, vvith much toyle and trouble, gotten proviſions about him, to eat the fruit of his ovvn labours, yet he hath no povver to do it vvithout Gods bleſſing.

Here vve may obſerve. 1. That the utmoſt good of all vvorldly labours reach no further as to real benefit, than the ſupply of the body, Eccleſ.6.7. 1 Tim.6. 7, 8.

2. That it is not in the power of man,after all his hard labour for theſe things, either to uſe them, or with cheerfulneſſe and joy, to delight at all in them, without the ſpeciall hand and gift of God; to ſay nothing of ſickneſſe, or ſorrow, or other diſtempers within, and of robbers without, which may take away the taſte of any ſweetnes in them,and conſequently the deſire of them, 2 Sam. 19. 35.Job 33. 19, 20, ſo that the floore and the wine-preſſe ſhall not feed us, Hoſ.9.2. & 2 9. There is ſuch a ſordid and baſe cruelty in the mind of a man towards himſelf, as to defraud and grudge himſelf the fruit of his own labour, Eccleſ. 6 2,4,8. much leſs can a man with cheerfulneſs,contentment, and ſweet tranquility, make uſe of theſe bleſſings without the ſpecial favour of God unto him therein, Prov. 10 22. Pſal. 128. 1, 2. Nehem.8. 10, 12. 1 Chr.29.22. Act.14.17. Deut.8 12.———18 Phil 4.11,12,13.

3. That the happineſs of this life ſtandeth in a free,cheerful and contented enjoyment of the good bleſſings of God, together with the ſenſe and comfort of his fatherly love. 1 Tim.6.4.

4 That all the ſweetneſs of outward bleſſings ſtandeth in this that they are reached out unto us, from the hand, and ſanctified by the bleſſing and grace of a merciful Father, Pſal. 37. 16. Prov. 15. 16 1 Tim.4.5. 1 Tim.6.17. It is the love of God which puts ſweetneſs into all outward mercies.

5. Honeſt labour whereby a mans bread is his own,is the proper object of our comfortable fruition. Then only we can rejoyce in our eating and drinking and other outward delights when in them we taſte the ſweet of our righteous labours, Prov.16. 8. Eph. 5. 28. 2 Theſ.3. 12.

V. 25. for who can eat, or who elſe can haſten thereunto more than I?] He proveth what he had ſaid,that it is the gift of God becauſe he ſo wiſe,ſo wealthy a Prince,who had ſo great variety to hold up his delight, could of himſelf find nothing in all his great eſtate, but matter of vexation,What power can others have to enjoy them, when he could not; or elſe it may refer to the former part of the foregoing verſe. There is nothing for a man then to eat and drink and enjoy good in his labour: this he proveth by his own experience. As by his own experience, he hath all along proved the vanity and vexation of the creatures in other reſpects; ſo here, by his own experience he proveth, that the only tranquillity is, having made ſure of the favour of God, to eat and drink with cheerfulneſſe. He doth not mean ſenſual Epicure-like ſurfetting on the creatures, but a quiet, free contented uſe of them; who is fitter to eat of my eſtate, and to make haſte ſo to do, i. e. readily and cheerfully to do it, than I my ſelf who laboured for it? and I unto whom God hath given ſuch plenty, and ſuch readineſſe of heart to uſe it, can by my own taſte of Gods goodneſſe give to others a judgement and aſſurance hereof. So verſe 10 12.

who elſe can haſten thereunto more than I?] This noteth a ſpecial promptitude and cheerfulneſſe of heart, which Solomon did put forth in the fruition of the good things he had gathered, as Job 20, 2. others read it, who hath taken more care thereunto, to abound in delights and contents than I? Other, who hath quicker ſenſes to diſcern the comforts of them, than I? but the firſt ſenſe ſeemeth more genuine; for as in the former verſe, he ſpake, 1. Of eating and drinking, or of the free uſing of Gods bleſſings. 2. Of making the heart to enjoy them: So here he telleth us that his practice, was ſutable; who can eat? that relates to the former, and who can haſten more than I, that relates to the latter.

V. 26. for God giveth to a man that is good in his ſight, wiſdome, and knowledge, and joy, &c.] Having commended this free and comfortable uſe of Gods bleſſings, with Godlineſſe and contentment, by the authour of it, it is the gift of God: He here further commends it by the ſubject of it, unto whom God doth afford ſo excellent a gift: many gifts of God are common to good and bad men, Matth. 5. 45. 1 Cor. 13. 1, 3. but this is a peculiar bleſſing which he beſtowes on his beloved, Pſal. 127. 2. the ſubject of it is a good man, the Character of that good man, he is good in his ſight, good in the judgement of God, who trieth the heart, Gen. 17. 1. 1 Cor. 10. 18. Rom 12 1, 2. 1 Tim 2. 3. Heb. 13. 21. The gift of God to this man. 1. Wiſdom to get, 2. Knowledge to uſe, 3. Joy to uſe cheerfully and comfortably all outward bleſſings, and this is illuſtrated by an antitheſis.

but to the ſinner he giveth travel, to gather and to heap up,] i. e. He giveth them up, or leaveth them to their own greedy deſires, to gather and heap together with much anxiety and tormenting ſollicitude, Habbac. 2. 6. Luke 12. 18. Pſal. 39. 6.

That he may give to him that is good before God] That is, that God may diſpoſe of it by his own over-ruling providence, beſides and againſt the purpoſe of the gatherer, to whom he pleaſeth, or to thoſe that fear him, making wicked men but the drudges and purveyers for others. Iſa. 10. 7. Prov. 13. 22. & 28. 8. Job. 27. 16, 17. Eſter 8. 1, 2. Iſai. 65. 13, 14. as wicked men built the ark but Noah enjoyed it, according to the Greek proverb, one man makes the garment, but another wears it.

This alſo is vanity] viz. for a wicked man to labour for others whom he loves not, nor ever intended his labour for.

Here we ſee, 1. Goodneſſe conſiſts in approving a mans ſelf to God. 2. That ſweet and perfect contentment is peculiar unto good men. 3. That wiſdom or skill to get riches is the gift of God, Deut. 8. 18. 4. That knowledge to uſe them being gotten is likewiſe Gods gift, as verſe 24. 5. That good men onely are the proper ſubject of true joy, Gal. 5. 22. 6. That amongſt other curſes God doth many times puniſh vvicked men with giving them up to the inſatiable deſires of their covetous hearts, to weary themſelves in gathering wealth to no purpoſe of their own, of Eccleſ. 4. 8. 7. Gods providences many times diſpoſeth the labours of wicked men for the uſe and good of the godly.

CHAP. III.

IN this Chapter the wiſe man proceedeth, in diſcovering the vanity of worldly things, and of all mens toyl and labour about them, in regard of the total uncertainty of future events, as having their whole dependance on the predeterminate purpoſe of God, and not at all on the anxious care and thoughts of man. And that therefore ſince man is not able to alter the ſeries and contexture of events, fore-ordained by God, he ought with contentment of heart to enjoy his condition, and to fear the Lord, and depend on his providence, which is not poſſible for him by all his own ſollicitude to prevent, or eſcape. And therefore though he may cheerfully enjoy preſent bleſſings, yet he muſt not have his heart glued to them, nor build his chifeſt hope on them, in regard they are ſo variable and ſubject to unavoydable changes and uncertainties. So that the doctrine of the ten firſt verſes of this Chapter ſeemeth to be; 1. An argument enforcing the former counſel of the wiſe man, Chap. 2. 24. That ſince there is a ſet and prefixed ſeaſon for all, even the moſt contingent events, and that it is out of the power of man by all his thoughts, counſels and cares, to break through the limits of Gods providence in the guidance of them; therefore our wiſeſt way is to yield our ſelves unto God, to depend on his counſel and proviſion, to reſt contented in that which he gives, and not to diſquiet our ſelves with the cares, fears, hopes of ſuch things, as are wholly without the order of our wiſdom or power. 2. A caveat in the uſe of outward comforts, ſtill to remember that they are changeable, ſubject to time and providence to wear them out, and deprive us of them: and therefore not to be offended, if we have not alwayes our deſires, nor enjoy them ſo long, and in ſo conſtant a tenour of ſucceſſe, as we could wiſh our ſelves. 3. A further obſervation of vanity in outward things, in the various actions of other men, as he had before diſcovered it in his own labours.

V. 1. To every thing there is a ſeaſon] A predeterminate and an appointed time: So it is uſed, Eſt. 9 31. Ezra 10. 14. Nehem. 13. 31.

to every purpoſe] To voluntary and contingent things, which ſeem moſt in a mans own power; yet theſe are over-ruled, for their beginning, duration and ending, by the providence of God. To every purpoſed buſineſſe: Where note; 1. That all events in the world, both natural and contingent, voluntary, or fortuitous, are all of them limited and bounded for their beginning duration and ending, by the providence of God, Pſal. 31, 15. Job 14. 14. Act. 17. 26. So we read of a time for wrath, Pſal 37. 13. Ezek. 7. 7. Hoſ. 5. 7. Iſa. 40. 2 A time of love, Exek. 16. 8. 2 Cor. 6. 2. A time to work in, Joh. 2. 4. A time to ſuffer in, Joh. 7 30. & 8. 20, & 13. 1. & 17. 1. It is great wiſdom for men to obſerve the providences of God in this point, that they may accordingly behave themſelves towards him, 1 Chron. 12. 32. Luke 19. 42 Eccl. 9. 12. Jer. 8 7. 2. That whatever are the thoughts or cares of men, yet the purpoſes of God muſt ſtand; no man can by his anxious fears or contrivances, mend or alter his condition. Means we muſt uſe in obedience unto God, and expectation of his promiſed bleſſing, but events and ſucceſſes we muſt leave wholly unto him, Iſa. 46. 1 . Prov. 19. 21. Pſal. 33. 10, 11. Matth. 6. 27. Jer. 10. 23. 3. That all things under the Sun are ſubject to continual changes; there are various revolutions and viciſſitudes of events, now one thing, and anon the contrary, to the intent that men ſhould, neither be wanton in proſperity, nor deſperate in adverſity, but ſhould alwayes fear before the Lord, and ſeek for a kingdom which cannot be ſhaken, 1 Cor, 7. 29.-----31. Prov. 27. 1. Jam. 4. 13, 14. Dan. 2. 21.

V. 2. The Wiſe man ſubjoyneth an Induction of ſeveral particulars, obvious to every mans experience, whereby he demonſtrateth the truth of this general Propoſition. Some of theſe particulars are things natural, and wholly out of the power of man: others humane and voluntary, ſuch as are done and directed by the skill of man. To teach us, that all the moſt free and contingent actions are under the Law of Gods providence, directed and limited thereby, as well as thoſe which are moſt natural and neceſſary, 1 Reg 22. 24. Iſa. 10. 5, 6, 7. Act. 4 27, 28.

Some again begin with pleaſant inſtances, and end in ſad ones. Others begin with ſadneſſe, and end with delight. The Lord as he pleaſeth ordering the affairs of men ſo, as that ſometimes they have their good days firſt, and afterwards ſorrow: ſometimes evill firſt, and after, deliverance, Luk 16. 25. Job 42. 12. Joh. 21. 18.

Another thing to be remembred here, is; That the Lord doth not by every one of theſe particulars ſignifie what is good or lawfull to be done, but only teach us that not onely the good actions of men, but their ſins, non only their ſerious actions, but thoſe which are moſt Ludicrous and vain, are all of them under the decrees and over-ruling counſels of God, directing of them and their ſeaſons as it pleaſeth him, Matth. 10 29, 30. Gen. 45. 5 & 50. 20. Judg. 21. 21, 22, 23.

A time to be born, or to bear and bring forth[Called the hour of a woman, Joh. 16 21.

and a time to die] Called the Hour wherein a man muſt depart, Joh 13. 1. For, though the ſentence of death hath ſometimes been revoked, Iſa. 38. 1, 5. yet, the predeterminate time fore-fixed in the purpoſe of God was not altered.

V. 3. A time to kill] There is a providence of God in the violent deaths of men, directing actions either ſinful or fortuitous, as it pleaſeth him, 2 Reg 10. 30. compared with Hoſ. 1 4. Exod, 21. 13. 1 Reg. 22. 34. Hoſ 6. 1. 1 Sam 2. 6. Job 30. 26.

to beat down, and to build] Jer. 1. 10 & 18. 7. & 31. 28. Eſay 5. 2, 5.

V. 4. A time to weep] viz. From the Lord; for he ſpeaketh all along of the providence of God, in whoſe hand all our times both of ſorrow and joy are, Pſal. 80. 5. Ruth. 1. 20, 21.

and a time to laugh] Pſal. 126. 1, 2. Gen. 21. 6.

to mourne] As in funeralls and publick calamities, Chapter 12. 5.

to daunce] i. e. greatly to rejoyce, and expreſſe joy in the outward behaviour, 2 Sam. 6. 14. Act. 3. 8.

5. A time to caſt away ſtones, and a time to gather them together] Some by this, underſtand the erecting of trophies over conquered enemies, as Joſh. 8. 29. 2 Sam. 18. 17, 18. Zach. 9. 16. Others, the demoliſhing or erecting of buildings, all ordered by Gods providence, Luke 13. 4. Judg 9. 53. Lam. 2. 2, 5, 7, 8, 9. & 4. 1. Zach. 5. 4. Mic. 1. 6. 2 Reg 3. 25. Mark. 13. 1, 2.

to embrace, and to abſtain from embracing] 1 Cor. 7. 5.

V. 6 to get] Prov. 10 6.

to caſt away] Either out of neceſſity, as Jon. 1. 5 Act. 27. 18, 38. or out of charity, Prov. 11. 24. Eccleſ. 11. 1. or out of ſpecial duty to God, Heb 10. 34. Matth. 10 37, 38. and 10. 29.

V. 7. To rent] As the cuſtom was in mourning, Job 1.20 Joel 2.19. to ſpeak, to keep ſilence] According to difference of ſeaſons, Prov: 26. 4,5. & 25.11. Amos 5. 13.

V. 8. A time of war] 2 Sam. 11.1.

Thus Solomon by an Induction of divers particulars, and thoſe very various, and each by way of antitheſis with his contrary joyned to him, ſome natural actions, ſome civil, ſome domeſtical, ſome vitious, ſome vertuous, ſome ſerious and ſolemn, others light and ludicrous, ſome wiſe, ſome paſſionate; by all theſe he aſſureth us, that there is a holy and wiſe work of God in predefining, ordering, limiting, tempering, diſpoſing of all theſe and the like affaires of men, and ſo qualifying in the life of a man one contrary with another, and ballancing proſperity and adverſity by each other, that in every condition a good man may find cauſe of praiſing God, and of truſting in him, and of exerciſing this tranquility and contentment of mind, even in contrary conditions becauſe the holy hand of God is in the one, as well as in the other, Job 1.21. Phil. 4. 11, 12.

V. 9. What profit hath he that worketh, in that wherein he laboureth?] As Chap. 1. 3. Matth 6.27, In vain is it for a man by any anxious toyl to go about to effect any thing according to his own will, if the counſel and providence of God be againſt it. When he builds, God may pull down, or put in ſome accident and caſual event which ſhall divert, or undo all: Yet he doth not intend to reſtrain men from needfull Labour in their callings; but from truſting in or building on their Labours, and fretting if ſuch fruits follow not thereupon as they intended and expected; but patiently to ſubmit to the holy Will of God, unto whom it belongeth to diſpoſe of our perſons, of our liberties as it pleaſeth him. Whence obſerve, That carking and caring is indeed a ſtriving with the irreſiſtible providence of God, which no labour of ours can alter, or bend to our wils, Iſ. 4.1,5.9. Jon 4 8,9. as on the other ſide, glorying of our own ſtrength or wiſdom, is a robbing him of his honour, Deut. 8,17,18. Habbac. 1. 16. Labour is ſubordinate unto providence, but muſt never ſtrive with it. There is no profit to any man in his Labour, without Gods bleſſing, which therefore he muſt pray for, & rejoyce in without fruitleſs anxiety for the future.

V. 10. I have ſeen the travell] Chap. 1.13. men might be apt to thiuk when they ſee ſo many turns and changes in the world, that all things are carried by a blind and raſh diſorder, caſually and uncertainly, as it falls out, without any beauty or order in them. To this he anſwers, That it is God who hath given unto men this travel to exerciſe themſelves in various and contrary employments, paſſions, events, and that he doth, though we do not ſuddenly obſerve it, direct them all unto a beautiful iſſue: all theſe contraries work together, for good, Rom 8. 28. Again, men might think on the other hand, If man have indeed no profit of all his labour, but when all is done, God alone orders the Event, then to what End ſhould he weary himſelf in ſo fruitleſſe an employment? To this alſo there is an anſwer in theſe words; God hath given to man his work, which he is to undertake in obedience to Gods command: and God doth uſually diſpenſe his mercies unto us in the uſe of means, and by a bleſſing on our labours, Prov. 10. 4,22. Joh. 21. 3,6. Acts 27.22,31. And though Labour do not effect what we expected from it, but Gods providence ſhould (as ſometimes it doth) act contrary to, or diverſly from our endeavours; yet this good there is in honeſt Labour alone, and this End God hath in requiring it of us, we are Exerciſed therein, and ſo kept from idleneſſe, and the evill effects which would follow thereupon. Labour is not only a duty, but in this reſpect beneficial, (even when it miſcarrieth as to the principal end aymed at in it) that the heart is thereby kept in that ſtation and order wherein Gad did originally ſet it, Gen. 3. 17,18,19.

V. 11. He hath made every thing beautiful in his time; or in the time and proper ſeaſon thereof.] This is a further commendation of the wiſe providence of God in the government of the world, and all the events which happen in it, to the end that men may with more quietneſſe and contentment acquieſce therein. We might be apt to ſtumble and be offended at the ſeeming confuſions which are in the world, and the great uncertainty of affaires therein. But however it ſeem ſo unto us, who are not able to put together all the pieces of Gods providence, nor to foreſee that frame and feature which he will form them unto at the laſt, yet this is certain, that as in the work of Creation all things were very good, Gen. 1, 31. So in the work of Gubernation and providence, All things will at laſt appear to be very beautiful, and thoſe things which ſeemed but as confuſed heaps when they lay aſunder, will, when Gods whole work is done, (Iſa. 10. 12.) and they are all put together, appear to have been full of order, and decorum: as beauty in the body ariſeth out of an equall temperament of contraries together, and ſo in a curious piece of hanging various colours wiſely mixed, make an elegant piece: and letters which in the Printers boxes ſeem all confuſed, and ſignifie nothing; yet being ſet together by an exquiſite Copy, they afford us a learned and elaborate work: as we ſee in the Hiſtory of Joſeph and his brethren, of Davids troubles and Kingdom: Mordecai, Eſther, and Haman, of the Jewes crucifying of Chriſt, &c.

Again God hath made every thing beautifull in its time] As cold and froſt, are as orderly, as neceſſary, as uſefull in the winter, the the ſeaſon for them, as fruits, and flowers, and other delights as in the ſummer. Sorrow and Affliction is in the ſeaſon of it as uſeful and needful for men and in its kind as beautiful, as mirth and joye in another ſeaſon, 1 Pet. 1.6,7. Jam. 1. 2,3. & 5.7,11. Eccleſ. 7.13, 14. Pſal. 104. 24.

alſo he hath ſet the world in their heart, &c.] Theſe words are in this place very difficult, and variouſly both rendred, and underſtood. Some read them thus, Quamdiu ſeculum eſt, as long as the world, or worldly things continue, the Lord doth put into the mind of man the work which God doth from the beginning to the end, excepting onely that vvhich man cannot find out, or attain unto: and ſo the ſenſe to be, That God hath in the book of the world, and of his providence in the Government of all things therein, ſo legibly repreſented to the mind of man his righteous and beautiful ordering of them all, that man may if he ſet himſelf about it, eaſily diſcover Gods wonderful wiſdom therein; as Acts 14.17. Rom 1.19,20. only indeed ſome things are unſearcheable to human reaſon, which he is to admire and adore, waiting till the time of the revelation of Gods righteous Judgements for the full and diſtinct underſtanding of them, Rom. 11. 33 34. Job. 9. 10. & 11.7,8,9. Others, by putting the world in mens hearts, underſtand, according to one of the uſual acceptions of the word, עולם, a deſire implanted in man of eternity and perpetuity, and ſo the ſenſe to be, That albeit God doth make every thing good and beautiful, yet the heart of man is ſo ſet upon immortality, that he cannot find out amongſt any of Gods works here which have a beginning and an end, or are meaſured by time, any thing wherein his heart may fully and finally reſt.

But that which ſeems moſt agreeable to the ſcope of the place, and grammer of the words, is this; God hath indeed made every thing beautifull in his time, and thereupon men ought with quiet and cheerful hearts to obſerve Gods providence in all things, and therein to reſt, without anxiety or diſcruciating care: but man cannot find out the work of God, nor obſerve the beauty thereof ſo exactly as he ſhould; which is the reaſon that he doth not ſo patiently acquieſce therein. Of this defect he giveth two reaſons.

1. That they have the world in their hearts, they are ſo taken up with the thoughts, and cares of worldly things, and are ſo exerciſed in the ſore travel belonging unto them; that they do not naturally look up to the wiſe and holy diſpoſition of God, ſo as to reſt therein. This duty is the remedy of ſuch cares, Matth. 6. 26. 30.32. and ſuch cares are the hinderance of this duty.

2. They cannot find out the work which God doth from the beginning to the end] Man being of ſhort continuance, doth not many times live to obſerve a full point in the works of God. Their beginning may be in one age and their end in another. That part which I ſee in my days, may appear to me full of diſorder and confuſion, as heaps of ſtone and lime, and other proviſions towards a goodly building: whereas if I did live to ſee the end of God in ſuch works, it would appear, that in their time, or maturity they would be full of beauty: that fruit which is moſt ſweet and delicate in its ſeaſon, is ſowre and unpleaſant while it is yet green. It is the End of Gods work which ſets forth its beauty. Works of providence, as works of Creation, may begin in a Chaos, and ſeem without form and void, Gen. 1. 2. but they end in admirable order and beauty, Chap. 8. 17. Pſal. 37.37.38. Jam. 5.11. Hab. 2.3. So here is the doctrine of the excellent beauty which is in Gods providences. The reaſon why man is not thereby perſwaded unto contentment and patience in all eſtates, namely, his natural impotency to obſerve the ſame. The grounds of that impotency, 1. His worldly-mindedneſſe. 2. His ſhort continuance: yet he ought by faith, and by the evidence of Gods dealings in other ages, to rectifie this defect, and upon that ground to build his cheerful enjoyment of bleſſings while God beſtowes them upon him. So it follows.

V. 12. I know that there is no good in them: but for, &c.] I know by my tryal and experience, that there is no good in or for them, i. e. for men; but onley with contentment of heart to rejoyce in Gods bleſſings, and to do good in his life, i. e. to live in the fear of God; as Chap. 2. 24,25. or to do good unto themſelves in a liberal enjoyment of their life and labours, as Pſal. 49. 18. or to do good to others in the time of their joy, as Neh. 8. 10, 12.

V. 13. And alſo that every man ſhould eat, &c.] Here are the parts of this contentment, to eat drink, enjoy our labours, and to rejoyce in them. Whereby is meant not a gluttonous, luxurious, and intemperate uſe of theſe things, as they, 1 Cor. 15. 32. Matth. 44. 49. but a free and comfortable uſe, without anxious thoughts for the future, moderated by the fear of God, as before, Chap. 2. 24.

V. 14. I know that whatſoever God doth it ſhall be for ever, &c.] Here from the unchangeablneſſe of Gods providence, the permanent and irrecovable courſe of his counſels, the Abſolute perfection of his works, wherein there is nothing defective, which requires addition, nothing ſuperfluous, or to be taken from them; he doth further teach us with willingneſſe and contentment to ſubmit to God, whoſe Counſels we are not able by all our cares to alter or diſannul.

ſhall be for ever] The works themſelves may alter and vaniſh, but the Counſel of God is conſtant and immutable, and he doth in a ſtable and fixed way diſpoſe of all things to holy ends, beyond the power of any creature, either to alter or evade it, Mal. 3. 6.

His decrees are like chariots proceeding out of mountains of braſs to note their firmitude and immutability, Zach. 6. 1, 2. which no power can ſhake or remove, Iſa. 38. 10. Job 38. 31.——35. and 48. 8. & 42. 2 Job 9 12. Iſa. 14. 27. & 46. 10.

and God doth it, that men ſhould fear before him] Gods decrees and immutable providence ſhould not drive us either into deſpair and a wilful neglect of all means, in the uſe whereof God expecteth that we ſhould wait upon him, and in which as in the way of his providence, he uſeth to work good for his people: nor do they allow us to lean on our own wiſdom, and to deifie our own counſels, or burn incenſe to our own nets; but by them we are taught, in conſideration of Soveraignty, power, and wiſdom of God in all things, to ſtand in awe of him, to ſubmit unto him; in bleſſings to be thanfull, in ſufferings to be patient, becauſe ſtill it is the Lord that decrees, orders, diſpoſeth and over-ruleth all Job 1. 21. 1 Sam. 3. 18. 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26. Pſal. 37. 5, 7.

V. 15. That which hath been, is now, and that which is to be, &c.] Chap. 1. 9. This is an explication of what was laſt ſaid, verſe 14. to ſhew how what God doth is for ever: The things themſelves paſſe, and others ſucceed in their places, but this ſeries of things is carried on regularly and uniformly by a ſtanding Law, and fixed decree, appointing a perpetual and proportionable Succeſſion of things one after another, as hath been from the beginning, Gen. 8. 22. Jer. 31. 35, 36. Job 38. 10, 33.

and God requireth that which is paſt.] That which time thruſteth forward, and ſo maketh to be paſt, God reſtores and brings it back again. And this is alſo an excellent argument of contentment in our eſtate, be it what it will: 1. Becauſe God dealeth not in a ſtrange and unuſual manner with us, otherwiſe than with others before us; that which now is our Caſe, hath been the caſe of other good men, and will be the caſe of others when we are gone, 1 Cor. 10. 13. A humane Temptation there, is that which God doth uſually exerciſe men withall, as elſewhere the rod of a man, 2 Sam. 7. 14, 2. Becauſe God tempereth our lives, and doth not keep us alwayes in one and the ſame eſtate. In trouble he bringeth back and reſtoreth comfort to thoſe that wait on him, Pſal. 126. 1. 4. as to Job, Chap. 42, 12. In abundance, he can ſhake our mountain which we thought unmoveable, and bring back our ſorrous again, Pſal. 30. 6, 7. ſo that in both reſpects we ought to carry an awfull, reverend, and humble heart towards God in all conditions; quietly referring our ſelves in every eſtate unto his Fatherly diſpoſal, who beſt knoweth what is good for us.

V. 16. And moreover I ſaw under the Sun the place of Judgement, &c.] I ſaw another Vanity under the Sun. Having formerly ſhewed the vanity of knowledge, and of pleaſures, and of humane Labours, in regard of the internal anxiety and travel of mind that doth accompany them, and of the external changes they are ſubject unto, and manifold miſcarriages and diſappointments which are incident unto them, together with the remedy hereof, a free and cheerful enjoyment of Gods bleſſings with piety towards him for the preſent; and a comfortable dependance on his holy providence, with godly fear for the future: upon a viſible objection which might be made againſt the providence of God, (which he had ſo much commended) with which Temptation many good men have been ſhaken, to wit, the proſperous impiety and oppreſſions of wicked men, and the ſad condition of the Innocent and oppreſſed, Job 21. 3.——13. Pſal. 7. 2.——5. Jer. 12. 1. Habac. 3. 14. he proceedeth to vindicate the doctrine of providence, and to ſhew the vanity of men in honour and great place without the fear of God: (for all the vanities in this book are ſtill to be underſtood in that ſenſe, the fear of God being the remedy of it, and that which maketh all other outward good things ſweet and comfortable to us,) The greateſt honour without a holy uſe of it, is ſo far from making a man happy, that it is an occaſion of much wickedneſſe amongſt men, one man proving a devill and woolf unto another, and making no other uſe of povver, than lyons or bears do, to miſchief others by. This wickedneſſe is aggravated, in that it was committed under the pretence of Gods ordinance; Magiſtracy and Courts of Juſtice vvere erected by Gods appointment to be Sanctuaries and places of refuge for vvronged innocency to rapair unto for ſuccour and relief: now then, for thoſe who vvere ordained to comfort and help poor and oppreſſed perſons, to be themſelves through bribery, partiality, and injuſtice, the greateſt oppreſſours, and that vvith ſo high a hand, as to make the very tribunals of judgement, to be ſlaughter-houſes, and ſhops of cruelty, This vvas a great vanity amongſt men, and a great Temptation, vvhereby a poor mans comfortable vvaiting on the providence of God is in danger to be ſhaken.

We here note, 1. That Povver vvithout Piety, is very apt to degenerate into cruelty and oppreſſion. It is an unvveildy and a vvilfull thing, that vvants much ballance of humility and ſelf-denial to temper and allay it, Iſa. 1. 21, 22, 23. & 10. 13, 14. Jer. 22. 24, 17. Mich 3. 9, 10, 11. Habac 1. 13, 14. Ezek. 22. 25.

2. That it is the height of impiety, to fetch power and advantage from any ordinance of God to commit it, Iſa. 5. 2?. 1 Sam. 2. 17. Jer. 23. 25, 38. Jer. 14. 14, 15. 1 Reg. 22. 11, 12, 24. Joh. 19. 10 Iſa. 36. 10, Mal. 2. 8.

3. That wickedneſſe is many times groſſely aggravated by the circumſtance of place vvhere it is committed, Hoſ. 6. 8. Ezek. 8. 6, 9, 17 Iſa. 26. 10 Mal. 1. 7. Matth. 21. 12, 13.

and the place of righteouſneſſe, that iniquity was there] This is the ſame thing repeated, as the uſe of that tongue, and of the Scripture is, vvhereby may be ſignified; Hovv uſual a thing it vvas in places of judgement, here and there, one as vvell as another, to find this corruption, Jer. 5. 5. Iſa. 5 7.

V. 17. I ſaid in my heart, God ſhall judge the righteous and the wicked, &c.] This is the cenſure Solomon paſſeth upon this vanity, that though povver do oppreſs, and the poor be oppreſsed, yet this ought not to diſcourage good men from contented vvaiting on the providence of God, nor to encourage or embolden vvicked men in their wayes of tyranny or oppreſſion, becauſe the Lord will in due time review all again, and paſſe a righteous judgement upon the one, and the other.

I ſaid in mine heart] I comforted my heart againſt this vanity, by the conſideration of the righteous judgement of God.

God will judge the righteous] By a ſentence of abſolution.

and the wicked] By a ſentence of condemnation.

for there is a time there] (i. e.) With God, in the judgement to come. The antecedent is to be underſtood in the relative; as Num. 7 89. Him, for, God, Eſter 9. 25. She, for Eſter, Pſal. 114. 2. His Sanctuary, for, Gods Sanctuary, Job 1. 21. naked ſhall I return thither; namely to the earth.

Here we ſee, 1. That faith can look on the pride and power of wicked men as a very vain thing, even when they are in the height of their greatneſſe, Job 5. 3. Pſal. 92. 7. & 39. 5. 37. & 10. 20. & 35, 36. Habbac. 2. 7. Luke 12. 20.

2. That it is matter of comfort to men oppreſſed, that the Lord will judge their cauſe over again, and right them againſt their oppreſſours. Therefore they ought patiently to wait on him, and to expect what iſſue he will give them out of their troubles, Eccleſ. 5 8. Jam. 5. 7. Pſal. 7. 6, 7, 8, 9, 11. & 9. 4, 9.

3. There is a prefixed time beyond which God will no longer ſuffer innocency to be oppreſſed, nor tyranny to prevail, and we are patiently to wait for Gods time, who will certainly come when wicked men have filled up their meaſure. Acts 17. 31. Jam. 5. 7, 8. Job 21. 30. Pſal. 37. 13. Habbac. 2. 3. Zach. 5. 5.——7.

V. 18. I ſaid in my heart concerning the eſtate of the ſons men] The order, condition, manner of men, or concerning men themſelves, as Pſal. 110. 4. Eccleſ. 8. 2. or concerning the degrees of men, ſuperiours, and inferiours.

That God might manifeſt them] I ſaw that man being in power, did not, could not rightly conſider his own frail condition, and therefore that God muſt manifeſt them, in his righteous judgement, or by his word unto themſelves, and make them know their own natural vileneſſe; and that they are, as to outward reſpects, but as the beaſts that periſh, Pſal. 49. 20. as Pſal. 82. 6, 7. ye are Gods By office, but ye ſhall dye like men; ſo here, men by reaſon, by power, by dignity; But ye ſhall dye like beaſts. Others thus, That they might clear, or purge God when he judgeth them, and ſhall make them ſee that they lived like beaſt, Pſal. 51. 4. Others, that God indeed hath choſen and advanced them to dignity, but by what is ſeen, and doth outwardly appear of them, they are by their cruelty and injuſtice, no better than beaſts; as Mic. 3. 3. Zeph. 3. 3.

That they themſelves are Beaſts] Heb. A Beaſt. Or that theſe are as a Beaſt to thoſe, or as a beaſt, one to another; the ſingular number is put collectively, they act the part of all kind of hurtfull beaſts one towards another: ſo Chriſt called Herod a fox, Luke 13. 32 and the hypocritical Jevves, vipers, Luke 3. 5. See Pſal. 22. 12, 16 & 10 9. & 57. 4 2 Tim. 4. 17. Pſal 80. 13. Ezek. 22. 27. Jer. 5. 6. Pſal 68. 30. Amos 4. 1. Matth 7. 6. 2 Pet. 2. 22. Ezek. 2 6.

Some render thoſe words על־דברת בני האדם by Secundum rationem humanam; and thence infer, that Solomon ſpeaketh here according to judgement of carnal and corrupt reaſon, and under a Proſopopœia, doth deliver the judgemet of Atheiſts and Epicures, touching the mortality of the Soul, and the total parity of condition between men and beaſts in regard of mortality, who thence allow themſelves in all kind of violence, oppreſſion, and luxury: and ſo they underſtand all that followes to the end of this Chapter, to be ſpoken as in the perſon of an Epicure and Atheiſt: The ſame events happen to man and beaſt, their end the ſame, their originial and matter the ſame, their ſenſes, breath, notions the ſame, their ſoul alike earthly, for who knows that mans ſoul goes upward more than a beaſts, and therefore it is equal, that they ſhould live ſenſually, without fear, or care of the future as beaſts do.

But the neceſſity of ſuch a ſenſe doth not appear, ſince the wiſe mans purpoſe here ſeemeth to be no other but to humble the higheſt of men, as in the former words, by conſideration of Gods judgment over them; ſo in theſe to the 21. verſe, by the conſideration of their own mortal & earthly condition, wherein as to many particulars they agree with the bruit beaſts: for he ſpeaks not here of mans immortal or heavenly condition; but throughout this Book the ſcope is to ſhew the vanity of earthly things, and of human actions in order unto things under Sun, which vanity is by no means to be remedied, but only by the fear of God. The vanity of all the honours and labours of this life, he here diſcovereth by the equal condition in meer outward reſpects between men and beaſts.

V. 19. For that which befalleth the ſons of men, befalleth beaſts, even one thing befalleth them] For as for the Event of the ſons of men, and the Event of beaſts, one Event is to them both, Pſal. 49. 10.

as the one dyeth, ſo dyeth the other] Or, as is the death of the one, ſo is the death of the other, Chap. 2. 15, 16.

they have all one breath] They draw in and out the ſame aire; by the ſame kind of vital organs, mans breath is in his noſtrils, as the breath of beaſts, Iſa. 2. 22. Job 27. 3, 4. Gen. 2. 7 He ſpeaks not of the ſoul of man, but of Animal and vital breath, which is common to both, Ezek. 37. 5, 10. So we read of the common proviſions which God makes in regard of this life, for beaſts, birds, fiſhes, and men, and the common fate which attends them all, Pſal. 104. 11, 12, 14, 15, 21, 23, 27 --- 30.

ſo that a man hath no preeminence above a beaſt] In outward reſpects, without piety to raiſe him above a meer corporal and ſenſual uſe of them: nay in many outward things beaſts have the preeminence, ſome more ſtrength, others more agility; ſome more exquiſite ſenſes, others longer life, moſt more healthy, more hardy, able to work more, able to bear and endure more, than man.

for all is vanity] All equally vain and mortal.

V. 20. All go into one place, all are of the duſt, and all turn to duſt again] As they agree in one vital principle, ſo are they ſubject to one Law of mortality, their original, in regard of bodily conſtitution, the ſame, [illegible] by diſſolution their condition in regard of bodies the ſame, Gen, 3. 19. Job 34. 15. Pſal. 22. 16 We muſt ſtill remember, that he ſpeaketh of mans meer natural condition, as he is under the ſun. Otherwiſe, in regard of mans future condition, his body is again to be raiſed, and brought to Judgement.

V. 21. Who knoweth the ſpirit of man that goeth upward, and the ſpirit of the beaſt which goeth downward to the Earth?] It is true indeed there is a future happineſſe belonging unto men who have immortal ſouls, which beaſts have no right unto, nor are capable of; The ſoul of the one goes upward, Chap. 12. 7. Luke 18. 27. Act. 7. 59. whereas the ſouls of beaſts periſh. But no man can by ſenſe diſcern the aſcent of the one, or the deſcent of the other; and Solomon ſpeaks not of mans future celeſtial happineſſe in this Book, but of the vanity of all outward things, without true piety, to ſatisfie the heart of man while he is under the Sun. As for the other celeſtial happineſſe, it cannot be diſcerned by a natural diſquiſition, but is revealed in the word unto a few, 1 Cor. 2. 9. — 11.

V. 22. Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man ſhould rejoyce in his own works] He repeates his former concluſion, Chap. 2. 24. & 3. 13. from theſe vanities, ſince there is ſo little difference in outward things between a man and a beaſt; therefore to remedy this vanity, he is in the fear of God, while he liveth, to enjoy with cheerfulneſſe and contentment his own labours; for that onely which he ſo doth enjoy, is his own portion: and not to trouble himſelf with thoughts or cares for the future, ſince being gone, he hath no more ſhare in them, nor knowledg of them.

for who ſhall bring him to ſee what ſhall be after him?] If he hoard them up for others, and uſe them not himſelf, what good will he have of them when he is gone? Who can foretel him what uſe ſhall be made of them, what good ſhall be done with them? therefore let him take comfort of them himſelf before he die, Chap. 5. 18.

CHAP. IV.

HAving ſhewed the vanity of oppreſſion, and injuſtice in thoſe who are in place of power and judgement, who carry themſelves like beaſts to their brethren, and muſt themſelves die like beaſts, undeſired, unlamented. He ſheweth further in this Chapter diverſe other vanities, which are conſequents upon oppreſſion and miſgovernment; both in perſons oppreſſed, whoſe life is a wearineſſe to them, verſe 1, 2, 3. and in other men; who thereby are ſubject to be envyed for their induſtry and proſperity, verſ. 4 and there upon ſome fooliſhly give over all imployment, verſe 5, 6. Others ſcrape together what they can get, and live privately and alone, out of the eye of the world, and from being obſerved, verſ. 8. and thereupon he returneth to ſhew the vanity even of the greateſt power, when it thus oppreſſeth the people verſe 13, 14. yea, of the moſt regular power, through the mutability of the affections of the people, verſe 15, 16.

Verſe 1. SO I returned, and conſidered all the oppreſſions, &c.] Returned and conſidered, (i. e.) conſidered again; the verb is put for the adverb, as is uſual in the Scripture, in verbs which ſignifie repeating, or iterating of an action; as Gen. 25. 1. Abraham added and took a wife, (i. e.) took another wife, or married again, Pſal. 106. 13. They made haſte and forgat, (i. e.) They ſoon forgat: Hoſ. 9. 9. They were profound, and corrupted themſelves, (i. e.) They deeply corrupted themſelves: So Iſai. 64. 4. Gen. 26. 18. Rom. 10. 20. Pſal. 6. 10. He had conſidered violence and injuſtice in the ſeat of judgement, before, Chap. 3. 16. and had ſhewed the vanity of that, and yet notwithſtanding that a good man ſhould endeavour to rejoyce in his labours: But when he looks on it again, he finds inſtead of rejoycing, nothing but the tears of oppreſſed men, without ſtrength in themſelves, without comfort from others, which muſt needs render their lives very grievous and irkſom to them.

all the oppreſſions] It importeth, either violent, or fraudulent detaining of mens goods or rights from them, Jer. 22. 3 Luke 3. 14. & 19. 8. 1 Theſſ. 4. 6. Jer. 5. 26, 27.

and behold the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed] The greatneſſe of this evil is ſet forth, 1. By the grief of ſuch poor oppreſſed perſons, it ſqueezed forth tears out of their eyes, Lam. 1. 2. 2. By their helpleſneſſe, they had no comforter: It is ſome eaſe of a man in ſorrow, to ſee others pity him, and a great aggravation of miſery to be without a comforter, when a mans adverſaries are ſo powerful, ſo malicious and cruel, that others are afraid, ſo much as to pity him, Job 6. 14, 15. & 19. 21. 3. By their impotency to eſcape from the hand of their oppreſſours. So much is implyed in the next words, which way ever we read them, whether ſo, as to repeat the negative of the former clauſe with the latter, which is uſual, Pſal. 1. 5. Job 30. 20, 25. & 31. 20. thus, And no power from the hand of their oppreſſours, namely, to eſcape from them. They have no power but to weep, none to help themſelves. Or elſe, as we read it, On the ſide of their oppreſſours there is power, ſo much as to keep others from comforting them. So the word hand, is ſometimes rendred by the word ſide, Pſal. 140. 6. Prov. 8. 3. The doubling of that clauſe, notes the ſadneſſe of their condition; as Job calls once and again for pity, Job 19. 21.

V. 2. Wherefore I praiſed the dead which are already dead, &c.] I eſteemed the dead more happy. The dead which are already dead; this is emphatical; our mortality makes us, as it were, dead while we live, much more our luſts Matth. 8. 22. Eph. 2. 1 1 Tim. 5. 6. Rev. 3. 1. Prov. 9. 18. There are dead men that are yet living, and dead men that are already dead. Men are ſaid to be dead likewiſe that are in a deſperate condition, under an invincible calamity, as the Jews in Babylon, Iſa. 26. 19. Ezek. 37. 11, 12, 13. 1 Cor. 15. 31. 2 Cor. 1. 9, 10. Oppreſſion is, in the Scripture account, a killing, a devouring of poor men, eating them up, gnawing their bones, Hab. 1. 13. Pſal. 10. 8. — 10. & 14. 4. Zeph. 3. 3. Ezek. 22. 27. Mic. 3. 2, 3. Pſal. 8. 3, 4, 5. The emphaſis then of the place is this, I eſteemed thoſe more happy who are already quite dead, than thoſe who do thus continually die, and languiſh away under the cruelties of their oppreſſours. This may ſeem to be ſpoken after the judgement of the fleſh, becauſe grievous miſeries and oppreſſions make men weary of their life, and chooſe rather to die. Death is a haven to ſuch a ſoul after ſhipwrack Job 3. 13. — 16. Jon. 4. 3. 1 Reg. 19. 4. And indeed life being the greateſt of meer outward bleſſings and that whereunto all the reſt are ordered, Matth. 6. 25. it can hardly be either rationally or piouſly undervalued, becauſe of the evils which cruſh and lie heavy on it, or the contrary thereunto deſired, ſave onely in order to the eſcaping evils which are worſe than death, and to obtaining of good things which are better than life. In which ſenſe the Apoſtle deſired to depart, that he might be with Chriſt, Phil. 1. 23. Therefore he here ſpeaketh according to the judgement of men under oppreſſion and who lie groaning and ſighing amidſt many miſeries; whoſe reaſon is darkned by the weight of their ſorrows; for oppreſſion, in this ſenſe, makes even a wiſe man mad, Chap. 7. 7.

more than the living who are yet alive] By the living who are yet alive he ſeems to mean thoſe poor men, who languiſh and pine away under their oppreſſions; of whom we can ſay onely, as we do of a man ready to die; He is yet alive, his breath is not quite gone, he doth live, and that is all; as Luke 10. 30. He doth not ſimply prefer death before life; but the eaſe and quietneſſe of death, before the miſeries and ſufferings of a dying life, Job 3. 17, 18. 19.

V. 3. Yea, better is he than both they, &c.] He ſpeaketh onely according to the judgement of ſenſe, and with relation to the greatneſſe of outward miſeries, which he, who is yet unborn, hath not ſeen in others, or felt in himſelf, Job 3. 10. & 10. 18, 19.

ſeen the evil] To ſee good is to enjoy it, Chap. 2. 24. To ſee evil is to have experience of it, and to ſuffer it; in which ſenſe the Serpent told Eve, that her eyes ſhould be opened to know good by the loſſe, and evil by the danger of it, Gen. 3. 5. and this kind of not being, and not having been born, though it cannot reaſonably or piouſly be preferred before a ſorrowful life, which will conſiſt with the fear of God, yet it may, before a curſed condition, which ſinks a man under the wrath of God, Matth. 26. 24.

Here then we may obſerve, 1. The ſad condition of men under the power of oppreſſors, when they have not ſo much abatement of their miſery as to be pitied. 2. The cruelty of powerful oppreſſors, which deters others from compaſſionating thoſe whom they oppreſſe. 3. The dangerous temptation which oppreſſion expoſeth men unto, even to be weary of life, as we ſee in the caſe of Job, Eliah, and others. 4. The inconvenience in caſes of difficulty, which relate any way to conſcience, to conſult with carnal reaſon, which will eaſily lead us into extreams.

V. 4. Again, I conſidered all travel and every right work] Here he proceedeth to another vanity, ariſing out of the former of oppreſſion and miſgovernment, under which men uſually are diſcouraged from all ingenuous and uſeful undertakings, from all noble enterprizes of any ſort, by reaſon of the envy and danger, which, partly, through the jealouſies of ſuperiours, partly through the malignancy and evil eye of equals, or inferiours, they are by their eminency and induſtry expoſed unto. By every right work, we are to underſtand not ſo much works done in integrity towards God, as the ingenuous and accurate works, of humane iſſue, done by the wiſdom and practick cuning of artificers in any kind; ſuch as the wiſdom of Bezaleel, Exod. 31. 3, 4. and Hiram, 1 Reg. 7. 14.

that for this a man is envyed of his neighbour] That the more he deſerves for his induſtry, and ingenious neſſe of invention, the more he is expoſed to envy and danger; envy being like thoſe moths and cankers which uſually feed on the richeſt garments, as we ſee in many examples Gen. 4. 5. Numb, 11. 27 --- 29. 1 Sam. 18. 7, 8. Gen. 26. 12 --- 14. & 37. 8. 1 Sam. 17. 28. Dan. 6. 3, 4, &c. And this is a great vanity and diſappointment, when that from whence a man might have expected credit and thanks from, the world, ſhall procure him hatred and danger, and muſt needs thereupon be a great diſquieting of heart, and diſcouragement againſt ſo fruitleſſe endeavours, Prov. 37. 4. Pſal. 73. 12, 13.

V. 5. The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own fleſh] This is one fruit of this danger and envy, taken up by fooliſh and ſlothful men, they refuſe to take pains, and rather chooſe to be poor than to be envyed. Here is the character of an idle perſon, 1. He is a fool, to make ſo abſurd an inference, that for fear of envy and trouble, will not onely neglect duty, but undo himſelf. 2. He foldeth his hands; puts himſelf into a poſture of idleneſſe, compoſeth himſelf to do nothing. Labour requireth the ſtretching forth of the hands, Prov. 31. 19. Lazineſſe wraps them up in one another, Prov. 6. 9, 10. & 26. 14. & 19. 24. 3. He eateth his own fleſh; bringeth himſelf to extream poverty, contracteth weakneſſe in his body, enfeebleth his mind, waſteth his ſtock, conſumeth his family, bringeth the curſe of beggary upon himſelf and his. For as the diligent hand maketh rich, Prov. 13. 11 ſo the ſlack hand maketh poor, Prov. 10. 4. He thinks it a part of wiſdom to ſpare his pains, and ſit quiet; and becauſe he cannot attain ſo much dexterity and skill as another man, therefore enviouſly to ſit down and gnaw his own fleſh, either with hunger or indignation, Prov. 26. 16. Whereas indeed he is a fool, (i. e,) 1. A wicked man, in neglecting the duty of labour, which he oweth to himſelf, to his family, to his generation, and whereunto by the ordinance of God he is appointed, Gen. 3. 19. Tit. 3. 14. 1 Theſſ. 3. 10, 11. 2. An abſurd man, to reaſon himſelf into contempt and beggary, and to be cruel to himſelf, becauſe he is fretted at other men, Prov. 11. 17. Pſal. 27. 2. For as he had before touched the vanity which ariſeth from others, ſo here that which ariſeth from a mans own ſelf

V. 6. Better is an handſul with quietneſſe, than both the hands full with trouble and vexation of ſpirit] This may be here taken, either as Solomons own words, and then to import a ſeaſonable remedy againſt the evils here ſpoken of, viz. envy, idleneſſe, and covetouſneſſe; namely, ſweet contentment with a competent eſtate, rather than vexation with a greater, Prov. 15. 16, 17. & 17. 1. Pſal. 37. 16. Luke 12. 15 Or rather as the words of the ſluggard, and then they are his apology for his lazineſſe: If he ſtrive to excel in his profeſſion, he ſhall many wayes diſquiet himſelf, he cannot do it without much travel, nor after all that travel be free from much envy and danger. And therefore he rather chooſeth a ſmaller portion, with more eaſe and contentment. In which, there is a great deal of falſe arguing; 1. It is falſe, when he calleth his ſlothful and idle way of living, reſt, or quietneſſe. For true tranquility of mind is the conſequent of a fruitful converſation. Pſal. 119. 165. bodily reſt a fruit of honeſt labour, Pſal. 127. 2 Eccl. 5. 12. 2. It is falſe, when he calleth induſtry in a mans courſe of life, vexation of ſpirit, whereas honeſt labour taketh off the heart from many vain thoughts and deſires, which would more ſorely vex it. 3. It is a great prophaneſſe to palliate his own ſin, under the name of reſt and quietneſſe of ſpirit, and under the protection of Gods own truth to find an hiding place for his bruitiſhneſſe and ſenſuality; as Saul pretended ſacrifice to excuſe rebellion, 1 Sam. 15. 15. 2 Sam. 15. 7, 8. Prov. 7. 14, 15. Hoſ. 12. 8. 1 Reg. 21. 9. 4. It is alike prophaneſſe to give ear to the wiſdom of the fleſh, againſt the duties of our calling, and to argue from inconveniences, which we fear, to diſcourage our ſelves from thoſe labours which God hath promiſed to bleſſe. God ſaith to encourage us unto duty, That his light ſhall ſhine on our wayes, he will comfort and bleſſe us in them, and his Angel ſhall keep us in our wayes, Pſal. 91. 11. but the ſluggard ſaith to diſcourage himſelf, There is a Lion in the way, Prov. 22. 13. as if Lions were more terrible to affright, than Angels to protect. 5. It is a vain conceit, to think contentment is tied unto a ſmall eſtate, and vexation to a greater; whereas true content knows as well how to abound, as how to want, Phil. 4. 11, 12. and diſcontent will make men as anxious, as froward, as impatient under a ſmall eſtate, as craving, hoarding, coveting under a greater. Prov. 30. 9. Pſal. 59. 15. The words of this verſe are proverbial, the former part, by the word handful, expreſſing a little eſtate; as Pſal. 72. 16. Ezek 13. 19. The other, by hands full, a greater and more plentiful, gotten with all the ſtrength and labour of the whole man, Mic. 7. 3.

V. 7. vanity under the Sun] Another vanity, and quite contrary to the former; as fooles when they avoid one extream, fall into the other.

V. 8. There is one alone, &c.] One, (i. e.) one by himſelf; as Gen. 19. 9. and not a ſecond; that is, either no companion, or member in his family to provide for, or no heir to ſucceed him in his eſtate; none for whom he can ſay, It is this man for whom I labour. See v. 15.

neither child or brother] His labour is not founded in any natural love of thoſe, for whom he is bound to provide, 1 Tim. 5. 8. Gen 47. 12. Prov. 17. 17. but meerly on the inordinate love of riches themſelves.

This covetous wretch is here deſcribed, 1. By his ſolitarineſſe, he lives all alone, he cannot endure two mouthes in a houſe.

2. By his exceſſive labour; there is no end of all his labour: He toyls infinitely, and without meaſure, Iſa. 2. 7. Job 22. 5. Some by labour, underſtand wealth gotten by labour. He hath a vaſt eſtate, and yet is as greedy as if he had nothing.

3. By his inſatiable deſires, neither is his eye ſatisfied with riches] He hath enough for his back, his belly, his calling, the decency of his ſtate, and condition, but he hath not enough for his eye. Though he can but ſee it, and have no uſe of it, yet he is diſpleaſed that he ſees no more. The eye is the inſtrument of coveting, 1 Joh. 2. 16. Joſh. 7. 21. Chap. 1. 8. and 2. 10 A covetous man, though he have as much as his eye can ſee, yet he would have more ſtill, Iſa. 5. 8. Hab. 2. 5 Prov. 30. 15. Job 20, 23, 24.

4. By his folly and inconſiderateneſſe, he doth not weigh with himſelf the abſurdite of his ſo living, he ſtill goes out of himſelf in labour after riches, but never comes to himſelf, to reaſon and argue the caſe, or to call himſelf to an account of his doings, Jer. 8. 6. Luke 15. 17. Pſal. 4. 5.

5. By his inhumanity and ſelf-cruelty, denying thoſe comforts to himſelf, which God hath given him, uſing himſelf worſe than God would have the Oxe uſed in the Law, Deut. 25. 4. Treading out the corn, and yet muzzling himſelf, Chap. 6. 2.

6. By the groundleſneſſe of this cruelty, He hath none, while he lives, for whom he doth it, and when he dies, he leaves no heir, kinſman, ſecond, to enjoy it, but undergoes all this toyl, and bereaves himſelf of all comfort, for he knows not whom, Pſal. 39. 6. The cenſure of all which is, that it is vanity, and a very ſore and grievous affliction.

V. 9. Two are better than one] Good more than one: ſo the comparative uſeth to be expreſſed; as Chap. 7. 1, 2, 3, 5, 8. Prov. 8. 11. Hag. 2. 10. Upon occaſion of the ſolitary life of this miſer, he ſheweth the benefit of ſociety, and mutual helpfulneſſe which thereby one man affordeth unto another, therefore God made woman for a companion and an helper unto man, Gen. 2. 18. and Chriſt ſent forth his diſciples by Two and Two, Mar. 6. 7. Luke 10. 1. not onely that they might be joyful witneſſes of the truth which they were to deliver, as Moſes and Aaron, Joſhua and Zorobbable, in reference unto whom we read of Two witneſſes, Rev. 11. 3, 4. and in that reſpect the Apoſtle uſually joyneth one or two more to himſelf in the inſcription of his Epiſtles, as joynt witneſſes of the truth of the doctrine therein delivered, 1 Cor. 1. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 1. Phil. 1. 1. Coloſſ. 1. 1. 1 Theſſ. 1. 1. But withal, That they might with more eaſe and ſucceſſe carry on the miniſtery, whrein they were imployed, and help mutually to ſtrengthen, to encourage, to comfort one the other.

becauſe they have a good reward for their labour] Or, a Benefit mutually from each other in their labour, by counſel, by comfort, by aſſiſtance and co-operation, by ſupply of any want, or infirmity which may befal each other, 1 Sam. 23. 16, 17. 2 Cor. 8. 18, 19, 22. Act. 13. 2, 5. Prov. 27. 17. Act. 19. 29. Phil. 4. 3. They do both promote the common good, they do the more eaſily compaſſe it, they do the more ſweetly enjoy it. This mutual benefit is further opened in ſome particulars of mutual danger, mutual reſt, and mutual defence.

V. 10. If they fall] That is, if one or either of them fall, the plural is uſed diſtributively or partitively to either of the ſingulars: as, The wicked men they flye, Prov. 28. 1. i. e. every man. She ſhall be ſaved, if they abide, 1 Tim. 2. 15. i. e. if any of them abide. Falling, here, may be underſtood in all ſenſes, for corporal falls, into a pit, from a horſe or the like. Metaphorically, if they fall into diſeaſes, diſgraces, dangers. Spiritually, into ſins or errours. In any adverſities, The ſociety of friends is uſeful to pity, to reſtore, to ſupport, to convince, to comfort. Whereas ſuch a ſolitary worldling as he ſpake of before, is forſaken of all, and hath none to ſtand to him. This is ſometimes the lot of the godly in trouble, but then God ſtands by them, Pſal. 22. 11. 2 Tim. 4. 16, 17.

But wo to him that is alone] Wo to him, is in the Original, one word made of two; as is obſerved out of Kimchi. It is here an interjection of grieving, with a denouncing of ſome evil which is coming towards a man: It is once more uſed in this Book, Chap. 10. 16. and hardly at all elſewhere in that ſenſe. Wo to him that is alone, or, to him that One, when he falleth, and there is not a ſecond to lift him up.

V. 11. Again, if two lie together, then they have heat, &c.] This alſo may be underſtood not onely literally, as 1 Reg. 1. 1. 2. but metaphorically for all kind of mutual aſſiſtance, and encouragement in any work which is to be done, Heb. 10. 24. Luke 14. 32.

V. 12. And if one prevail againſt him] i. e. Some ſtranger or third perſon aſſault. and be too hard for him, that is, for one of the two, then two. or three ſhall ſtand againſt that One, and ſhall be eaſily able to reſiſt him. See 2 Sam. 10. 11. Jer. 41. 13. 14. Pſal. 127. 5. This is another benefit of ſociety and friendſhip, aid and protection againſt aſſaults, whether outward, or ſpiritual in temptations from Satan. In all thoſe, and ſo proportionably in all other caſes; in war, in peace, in danger, in buſineſſe, day and night, in the multitude of counſellors there is ſafty, Prov. 11. 14. & 14 22. provided that this Society be undertaken in the fear of God, and in good and lawful things; otherwiſe, combinations in wickedneſſe are curſed, Pſal. 64 5, 6, 7. Pſal. 83 3. — 9. Nahum 1. 10 12. Prov. 11. 21.

two ſhall withſtand him] Or, ſtand before him with confidence and courage to help one another, Standing, is a military poſture, Epheſ. 6. 11, 13, 14 Pſal. 94. 16. Eſther 8. 11. Standing before one, as an enemy to deſtroy him, Rev. 12. 4. Hence that expreſſion of looking one another in the face, 2 Chron. 25. 17.

a threefold cord or a triple twiſted thread, is not eaſily broken] A Proverb ſetting forth the ſtrength and benefit of concord and ſociety.

V. 13. Better is a poor and wiſe child, &c.] From this verſe to the end of the Chapter, Solomon proceedeth to ſet forth the vanity of the Higheſt and moſt eminent condition amongſt men, namely, of Kingly dignity, which he ſheweth both in fooliſh and wilful Princes, who refuſe to be counſelled, and in all other, be they never ſo circumſpect. To manifeſt the former, he taketh firſt one of the moſt contemptible perſons, one could think on, and compares him with one of the moſt honourable; a child to an aged man, a poor child to a potent King. Childhood is alone very contemptible, and expoſed to neglect and ſcorn; looked on as raſh, heady, unſtayed, without judgement or experience, Iſa 3. 4, 5. 1 Reg. 3. 7. 1 Cor. 14. 20. Eph. 4. 14. 2 Chron. 13. 7. Hereunto poverty being added, will make ſuch an one much more neglected, Eccl. 9. 15. Jam. 2. 3, 6. Prov. 14. 20. 1 Tim. 4. 12. on the other ſide, old age alone is venerable. though but in an ordinary perſon, Lev. 19. 32. Iſa. 3. 2, 3. Gray hairs alone are a Crown, and beauty, Prov. 16. 31. how much more honourable, when they are joyned with a Crown; yet this poor child being wiſe, is preferred before that aged King being fooliſh and intractable; as Prov. 19. 1. The wiſdom of ſuch a child here, is his knowledge of God in his Word, whereby a young man is inſtructed how to order his wayes; as that of Timothy, 2 Tim. 3. 15. Pſal. 119. 99, 100. The fooliſhneſſe of ſuch a Prince is; He knoweth not to be admoniſhed; He cannot counſel himſelf, and he will not be counſelled by others. So, not to know, doth import a fooliſh obſtanacy and impotency in the mind, a neglect of what is offered unto a man to conſider of, Iſa. 56. 11 & 7. 16. contrary to that which is called knowing, or conſidering in the heart, Deut. 8. 5. Prov. 29. 7.

Here we ſee, 1. That wiſdom makes the meaneſt perſon honourable, maketh the face ſhine, Chap. 8. 1.

2. That the fear of God teacheth children wiſdom, 2. Tim. 3. 15. 1 Sam. 16. 18. & 18. 5. Pſal. 119. 98, 100 Dan. 1. 20.

3. That intractableneſſe of heart againſt counſel, is an evidence of folly. Solomon though the wiſeſt of Princes, yet had a Council about him of aged and the moſt able men, whoſe counſel Rehoboam rejecting, ſhewed his weakneſſe, 2 Chron. 10. 6. & 13. 17.

4. That old age, and power, without a corrective of wiſdom, are very likely to render men wilful, and opinionative, Job 32. 9.

V. 14. For out of priſon he cometh to raign] Out of the houſe of men bound, Judg. 16. 21. Gen. 40. 3 7. Iſa. 14 17. from the midſt of bonds and fetters. He cometh] Namely, the poor and the wiſe child: For theſe words are a confirmation of thoſe before, from the event which hapeneth to both; The wiſdom of the child advanceth him from a priſon, to a throne; from chains, to a Crown. The obſtinacy and folly of the other, hurrieth him from power to poverty; from honour to contempt. Out of priſon he cometh to raign; i. e. from the loweſt and moſt obſcure condition, Job 5. 11. Pſal. 113. 7, 8 Gen. 41. 14, 39 — 44. 2 Sam. 7. 8. Dan. 2. 25, 48. & 3. 26, 30. & 6. 3.

whereas alſo he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor] Or, whereas he in his kingdom is born poor, i. e. is made poor. So paſſing from one condition to another, is a kind of birth: but the other ſenſe is more emphatical, he who from his childhood was a King and in actual poſſeſſion of his Throne, becometh poor, Pſal. 149. 8. Job 12. 19 20, 21. 2 Chron. 33. 11. & 36. 3, 4 6. 2 Reg. 25. 6, 7. Dan. 4. 30 — 33.

V. 15. I conſidered all the living, which walk under the Sun, with the ſecond child that ſhall ſtand up in his ſtead] Theſe two verſes ſet forth another vanity attending upon Kingly power, not for the fault of the perſon, but through the inconſtant and fickle diſpoſition of the people, who ever have, and ever will be given to changes, worſhip the riſing Sun, and grow weary of him who is likely ſooneſt to leave them.

all the living] That is all the preſent generation of men living under a preſent Prince or Government. He ſpeaks of the generality of men, and therefore expreſſeth them under a general notion of living men, Job 30. 23. Dan. 4. 17. And withal, to intimate a ground in them of what he here conſidered, when the father is going away, and the ſon ready to ſucceed, they think that they muſt live and be preſerved by the living, and not by the dead, and accordingly worſhip him under whom they expect protection and preſervation of life; for, for that end, was Government inſtituted, 1 Tim. 2. 2.

which walk under the ſun] Elſewhere, which ſee the ſun, Chap. 7. 11. another expreſſion intimating this to be the popular humour of the generality of men or the vulgar people, who go up and down the ſtreets; as the vulgar are diſtinguiſhed from the greater and nobler ſort, Jer. 5. 1, 4. 5. or walking may be joyned with the following words, viz.

with the ſecond child] I obſerve that the generality of people walk with the ſecond child, joyn themſelves unto him, and flatter and crouch to him, forſaking in their affections and behaviours the father, becauſe he is about to forſake them.

which ſhall ſtand up in his ſtead] Namely, in the fathers or predeceſſours ſtead. By ſtanding up he meaneth, riſing to the Throne, Dan. 11. 2. they look on the predeceſſour as falling, ſinking, lying down, ſtooping towards the grave, and therefore apply themſelves to his heir. Whereby he noteth as the unhappineſſe of Princes, who if they live long, live to ſee their glory die before themſelves; ſo the fickleneſſe of the generality of the people, who do not honour Rulers for their office ſake, as they ought to do; and eſpecially ſhould reverence it the more, by how much the more experience they have had of happineſſe under it Rom. 13. 1 — 5. 1 Pet. 2. 13, 14, 15. but honour them meerly out of intereſt, and ſelf-reſpect, not conſidering ſo much preſent duty, as future advantage. There is naturally in the minds of the people a wearineſſe of being long under one Prince, a querulouſneſſe and repining at every thing which pincheth them, and thereupon a deſire to change him for the next, not ſo much out of choice or aſſurance that he will be better, but out of natural levity and inconſtancy; as ſick men change beds, chambers, couches, but carry their diſeaſe with them, they love changes for the very change ſake 1 Sam 8. 5, 18, 19, 20. and 12. 12, 13. 2 Sam. 15. 12. 1 Reg. 2. 15. 2 Sam. 20. 2. Prov. 14. 21.

V. 16. There is no end of all the people, &c.] By all the people, he meaneth the giddy and inconſtant multitude, whoſe levity and diſcontent with their preſent eſtate, is the cauſe that they thus deſire continual changes, and reject to day, whom yeſterday they adored. There is no end of all the people, or, to all the people] There are infinite numbers of people in every age and generation who ſtand thus affected: it is not a contingent or unuſual thing, but very common. It is not a vanity which Princes have experience of onely ſometimes, as in ſome few perſons; but it is the general diſeaſe of the vulgar, to ſtand thus variouſly affected towards their Princes, in all ages. So this phraſe, There is no end, is uſed to expreſſe a great or infinite number, Iſa. 2. 7. ſupra, verſe 8. Job 22. 5. Nahum 3. 3. Again, There is no end to all the people] The people never put an end or a ſtop to this vanity but it paſſeth on, from one generation to another. They which went before did ſo, ſo do theſe now, and ſo will they do which follow. 3. By no end, may be meant no ſatisfaction to deſires, no through and fixed acquieſcency of heart in the people towards their Princes; they will ſtill entertain expectations of new men, and new events to ſatisfie their deſires. So the word End, is uſed for that wherein the heart may acquieſce, and look no further for ſomething elſe, Prov. 23 18. They do not terminate and fix their affections in one man, be he never ſo wiſe, or worthy, but grow weary of him, and joyn themſelves unto his Succeſſour.

even of all thoſe that have been before them] Namely, before the father, and the ſon, or ſucceſſour which was ſecond unto him. The word [before] may ſignifie either in the preſence of them, i. e. who have been officers under them, or done ſervice, and born allegiance to them, 2 Sam. 16. 19. 1 Reg. 10. 8. or elſe at antecedence in time unto them. They who were before them did thus languiſh in their affections to the father, and apply themſelves unto the ſon.

They alſo that come after ſhall not rejoyce in him] i. e. In the ſon, unto whom now they ſeem ſo zealouſly and with ſo much loyalty to joyn themſelves.

not rejoyce] That is, they will be weary of him, troubled with him, wiſh themſelves freed from him. The verb negative by a μείωσις, ſeems to import the Affirmative contrary unto it, as is uſual in Scripture, Exod. 20. 7. Prov. 17. 21. Zach. 8. 17. Rom. 4. 19. This then is Hereditary to all people; There is no End of it, they can never be ſettled or contented with the preſent eſtate, as they before did diſlike the father in expectation of the ſon, ſo they after will caſt off the ſon in expectation of the grandchild, and ſo it will be in all generations.

This is vanity and vexation of ſpirit] This muſt needs be matter of indignation and grief to Princes, to ſee ſo much falſeneſſe and inconſtancy in their people, to ſee their Honour grow old and decrepit with their bodies.

CHAP. V.

THe Wiſe man having ſpoken of the vanity which attendeth on the very higheſt condition of men here below; ſeems here to make a kind of digreſſion, and to go yet higher unto the conſideration of that, which principally concerns man in this Life, to wit, The worſhip of God. This is the ſuprem Remedy of all the other Vanities, and may ſeem here to be ſubjoyned (as alſo it is in the end of the Book) to that purpoſe, to ſhew that though neither knowledge, nor pleaſures, nor honours, nor crowns, can make men happy, though it be beyond the ſphere and activity of any Creature to adminiſter compleat tranquility to the heart of a man: yet even in this life a man may be happy by worſhipping of God and Communion with him As if he ſhould have ſaid; We have gone through the world, and ſought as high there for ſatisfaction, as ever any man could arrive, even to Crowns and Thrones, and yet have miſſed of it. It remains therefore that we go higher yet, before we can be truly happy, and that is from the world to the Sanctuary; from the Thrones of Princes, to the Throne of grace; from the Creature, to God, In whoſe ſervice alone there is compleat felicity.

But beſides this, I take it, the ſcope of the Wiſe man is, by way of prolepſis, or anſwer to a tacite objection, to diſcover yet a higher and a ſtranger vanity than any he had ſpoken of before, namely, vanity in the worſhip of God, not as it is in it ſelf, but as it is performed by vain and fooliſh men. They might ſay, we do eaſily agree with you in all that you have ſaid, we know we muſt look above the Creatures, if ever we intend to arrive at true happineſſe. Therefore what pains ſoever we take about things under the Sun, yet we ſeek for our Happineſſe no where but in God, and in his ſervice. Solomon now, acknowledging the truth of this in the theſis That the worſhip of God is the true felicity of man in this life; doth withal aſſure theſe men, that they may put vanity in the very worſhip of God, and render even that, by their fooliſh and carnal performance, wholly unprofitable to any ſuch end: yea there may be therein divers vanities, verſ. 7. for diſcovery and avoiding whereof, he preſcribeth a ſolemn caveat to thoſe, who being convinced of vanity in the Creatures, do go to God in his worſhip to mend themſelves.

This is, 1. General, relating to all parts of Gods worſhip, which is, in our Approaches unto God, to look to our affections, and to prepare our hearts to meet with him, not reſting in outward ſacrifices, which are but the oblations of fools, who think they do well, when in truth they do the contrary, verſ. 1.

2. Particular, in ſome ſpecies of worſhip: 1. In Hearing, which he ſaith muſt be done with Readineſſe, with a docile and tractable ſpirit, yeilding up it ſelf to the whole counſel of God, verſ. 1. 2. In prayer and ſpeaking unto God, where is firſt condemned a double Vanity; Raſhneſſe of tongue, Haſtineſſe of heart, both enforced by conſideration of Gods Greatneſſe, and of our own vileneſſe, verſ. 2. Secondly, preſcribed fewneſſe of words, without vain, and unneceſſary babling, and that becauſe of Gods Majeſty, and the folly of ſo doing, verſ. 3.

3. In Vowes, which being once made, are to be performed, and that cheerfully, without grudging or delay, which doctrine he doth, 1. prove, 2. vindicate from ſhiftings and excuſes. He proveth it, 1. By the folly of the contrary courſe, it argues a levity of ſpirit to dally, and to be off and on with God, who as he is conſtant himſelf in all his promiſes, ſo he expecteth conſtancy from us in all ours. 2. By Gods diſlike of ſuch folly and falſeneſſe, verſ. 4.

Next he vindicateth it from a double excuſe which men are apt to make: 1. It was free for me to vow; the thing was in mine own power, therefore it is not ſo hainous a thing though I do fail, becauſe I was not bound to what I vowed till I had vowed it. This he anſwereth, That it had been better to have kept this Liberty ſtill, and not to have vowed, than after vows to reſume Liberty when it is too late, verſ. 5.

2. But I was miſtaken, there was an Errour in my Vow. To this he gives a double anſwer, and ſets it on with weighty conſiderations: Firſt, Look well before thou vow, that thou do not bring a bond of ſin upon thy ſelf: Suffer not thy mouth to cauſe thee to ſin. Secondly, take heed of pretending errour and overſight, out of unwillingneſſe to do what thou haſt promiſed: Say not that it was an errour. For conſider, 1. Thou art in the preſence of the Angel. 2. Thou provokeſt Gods anger. 3. The damage which by that anger thou wilt ſuffer, he will deſtroy the work of thy hands, diſappoint thee in that benefit, the preſervation whereof thou didſt aim at in excuſing thy vow. 4. The folly of ſuch vain excuſes. There is a vanity in all parts of worſhip, when undertaken by fools, or wicked men: the fools Sacrifice, verſ. 1. The fools voyce, verſ. 3. The fools vow, verſ 4. Divers vanities in all this, verſ. 7.

Now having ſhewed the vanities in the carnal performance of Divine worſhip, he doth (as he had done formerly in the other Vanities which he ſpake of before) preſcribe a Remedy of this alſo, viz. The inward principle of all Right and Spiritual worſhip which is to fear God, verſ. 7.

And becauſe it might be objected, That piety it ſelf is not likely to ſecure a mans tranquility and peace, in as much as we find poor and righteous men every where, all a Province over, oppreſſed and perſecuted by great men in high place: he removeth this objection. 1. By ſhewing the compaſſion of God and his Juſtice, He ſees and regards it. 2. The greatneſſe and power of God, that he is higher than any of thoſe that oppreſſe his ſervants, verſ. 8.

Now he proceedeth to another Vanity, which is in Riches and outward poſſeſſions. They are of two ſorts; 1. Subſtantial and Real wealth, in the profits and fruits of the earth, corn, cattel, &c. 2. Inſtrumental, in that which is by mens agreement made a meaſure to other wealth, viz. ſilver and gold. Concerning both which he ſheweth, 1. The excellency of the former, in regard of real and general profit, before the latter, verſ. 9. 2. The vanity both of the one and the other, when, 1. Inordinately loved. 2. Immoderately increaſed.

This vanity is ſhewed, 1. Abſolutely, in that the inordinate love of them is unſatisfiable, verſ. 10. and that troubles and cares are proportionably increaſed in the increaſe of them, verſ. 11.

2. Comparatively, and that, 1. In reſpect of any Real benefit and good in the fruition of them. The owner hath no more true profit by them, (further than that he looks on them as his own) than any of his friends and ſervants, who are fed and cloathed by them as well as he: onely his cares are increaſed. 2. In reſpect of conſequent reſt and quietneſſe, The ſervants heart is leſſe troubled, his body more refreſhed, than the owners, verſ. 12. 3. In regard of the evil effects of Riches:

1. The damage and hurt which ſometimes a man layes up with them againſt himſelf, verſ. 13.

2. The uncertainty of their abode with a man; having hurt the owners, they periſh themſelves, verſ. 14.

3. The certainty of parting with them; they muſt die, they cannot carry one handful away with them, verſ. 15, 16.

4. The ſordid and uncomfortable uſe of them, verſ. 17.

5. Impatiency and fretfulneſſe in parting with them, or in getting of them, verſ. 17.

Laſtly, he gives the Remedy of this Vanity and vexation, in the right uſe of Riches, viz. In a free and cheerful enjoyment of them: which is here commended, 1. By its goodneſſe to the owners. 2. By its comelineſſe and commendableneſſe towards others 3. By its equity, It is the fruit of a mans Own Labour, and provided for his Own Life. 4 The End of it, and his Right to it, It is His portion, all that he is ever like to get by it, verſ. 18. 5. The Author of it; it is a ſpecial Gift of God. 1. To give Riches 2. To give an heart to enjoy them, ver. 19. 6. Freedom thereby from the trouble of all his Labours, when himſelf taſtes the fruit of them, and hath experience of Gods ſpecial bleſſing, in anſwering the deſires of his heart, and cauſing him comfortably to enjoy them, verſ. 20.

Verſ. 1. K*Eep thy foot when thou goeſt to the houſe of God*] He had gone up and down the world, from learning to pleaſures, from pleaſures to Honours, from Honours to Thrones to find out Happineſſe, and had met with nothing but vanity. Now he ſends us to a fitter place to find it; The Houſe of God, vvhether his Temple, or other Synagogues vvhere God is preſent vvith thoſe that ſerve him; here they ſhall find remedies againſt the vanity of other things, and that which will ſtay and fix their hearts, Pſal. 73. 16, 17. Pſal. 4. 6, 7. Onely we muſt take heed of putting vanity into Gods worſhip, leſt we be there diſappointed of our aims, as well as elſewhere. This Caveat he gives us in thoſe words, Keep thy foot] or, each foot. The letters are plural, the points direct to read it in the ſingular number. So foot, for feet, Pſal. 119. 105. This Enallage of numbers is very uſual, the ſingular for the plural; as Pſalm 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid, &c. They, i. e. fools are corrupt. In that day a man ſhall caſt away his idols which they have made, Eſay 2. 20.

Keep thy foot] Seriouſly adviſe how thou art to behave thy ſelf in Gods preſence, look to thy heart and affections, let thy heart be fixed, thy affections compoſed, thy thoughts ordered, call all that is within thee together to ſerve him, Pſal. 57. 7. & 103. 1. A metaphor from men that walk in dangerous ways, who take heed to their ſteps leſt they ſtumble and fall: or rather an Alluſion to the ſpeech of God to Moſes, Exod. 3. 5. So Exod. 19. 21. Joſh 5. 15. As Mephiboſheth dreſſed his feet when he went to David, 2 Sam. 19. 24. So they uſed waſhings, and purifyings before they came into Gods preſence, Exod. 19. 14, 15. Numb. 8. 7. Pſal. 26. 6. Heb. 10. 22. Lev. 19. 30. & 16. 2, 3. Gen. 28. 16, 17. Exod. 40. 32.

and be more ready to hear, than to offer the ſacrifice of fools] Or, Draw neer to hear, rather than with, or as fools, to offer a ſacrifice, who think to be accepted for their outward work. The Infinitive uſed for the Imperative, as Exod. 20. 8. Matth. 5. 39. Luke 22. 42. or we may read it in the Infinitive, thus, for to draw neer to hear, i. e. to bring before God an obedient heart, is better than when fools do give a ſacrifice. Or, than to give a ſacrifice of fools, or as fools. He doth not forbid or condemn ſacrifices, but he perferreth obedience, and ſheweth the vanity and folly of thoſe, who are very forward in the outward acts of religion, without the love and ſervice of the heart, 1 Sam. 15. 22. Hoſ. 6. 6. Iſa. 1. 11 --- 18. Amos 5. 21, 22, 23, 24. Pſal. 50. 7. --- 17. & 51. 16, 17. Iſa. 66. 2, 3. Prov. 15. 8, 21, 27.

be more ready] The word is, Draw neer to Hear. It is a word very frequently uſed in Scripture, to expreſſe our addreſſing our ſelves unto the ſolemn Service and Worſhip of God, Levit. 9. 8. 1 Sam. 14. 36. 2 Reg. 16. 12. Pſal 73. 28. Iſa, 58. 2. Ezek. 44. 15, 16. Matth. 15. 8. whereunto there is a frequent alluſion in the New Teſtament, Epheſ. 2. 18. Heb 4. 16. & 7. 25. & 10. 1, 21. & 11 6. It importeth a ſerious compoſing of our hearts, in an humble, reverend, and holy manner to appear before God, and to have a comfortable acceſſe unto the Throne of grace, Lev. 10. 3. Heb. 12. 28, 29.

to hear] Whereas there are two parts of worſhip, ſacrifice and obedience, be thou moſt carefull of this, which is the ſpiritual and inward part of ſervice rather than of that which fools, hypocrites, wicked men can offer as well as thou. Be ready to receive inſtruction, and to accept of what God ſayes, Pſalm 85. 8. Job 34. 32: 1 Sam.3.10. Acts 9.6.& 10.33. James 1. 19. Be ready to obey and give up thy will to every one of Gods holy Commandments, Pſal. 119. 128.

than to offer the ſacrifice of fooles.] Than as fooles, (i.) wicked men do, to offer up ſacrifice, and neglect obedience, Mic. 6. 6, 7, 8.

for they conſider not, know not, that they do evil.] Some would have the word, But, to be ſupplied, They know not, But to do evil: They can onely do evil, even when they worſhip God; as Iſa. 1. 6 See Chap.2.24. Others thus, non attendunt ad facere malum, or ad factionē mali: which is to the ſenſe of our Verſion. They are here called fools, and that is further expreſſed, by want of knowledge: They know not, and that doth further appear by doing of evil, Iſa.1.3,4. Jer.8.9. The moſt natural ſenſe is, as we render it, They know not that they do evil: when they do evil, they conſider it not, they underſtand it not; the like phraſe, 1 John 2.6,9. ὁ λέγων μένειν, ὁ λέγων ἐν τῷ φωτὶ εἶναι. He that ſaith to abide, (i.) that he abideth. He that ſaith to be in the light, (i.) that he is in the light. So here, They know not to do evil, (i.) that they are doing of evil. And hereby is meant by an auxeſis, they think they doe very good ſervice: So when the Lord is ſaid not to command a thing, the meaning is, that he doth forbid it, Lev. 10 1. He will not hold them guiltleſs that take his Name in vain, (i.) he will hold them very guilty, Exod. 20. 7. He will withhold no good thing from them that walk upright, (i.) He will largely ſupply them, Pſalm 84. 12. He will not break a bruiſed reed, (i.) he will bind them up and ſtrengthen them, Iſa. 42 3. Abraham was not weak in faith, (i.) he was ſtrong, Rom. 4. 19. Men may think they do God good ſervice, when they doe greatly offend him, Iſa.66.5. Prov. 14. 12. Iſa. 58.2,3. Hoſ.8.2,3. Joh. 16.2. Acts 26.9.

Theſe things are here obſerveable; 1. That in Gods worſhip we do in a ſpecial manner draw nigh unto him.

2. That when we doe ſo, we ought to prepare and compoſe our hearts and affections by Faith and Humilitie to appear before God.

3. That a prepared heart brings purpoſes of obedience, and to hear God in all that he ſhall ſay unto it.

4. That mere outward ſervice without the heart prepared obediently to ſerve the Lord, is but a ſacrifice of fools, a mere formal and ceremonial worſhip.

5. That Hypocrites may think they pleaſe God when indeed they provoke him, and know not that they do evil, John 4.22.

V. 2. Be not raſh with thy mouth] Having ſpoken in general of the due preparation of the heart unto Gods ſervice, he now giveth direction in the particulars of prayer and vowes.

Be not raſh] Go not about Gods worſhip, as men that, in a fright or terrour, being amazed, fly haſtily they know not whither. Do not precipitate thy words, nor ſpeak any thing haſtily, unadviſedly, according to the dictate of carnal and haſty deſires, before God, or in his houſe and preſence. We know not what to ask as we ought, Rom. 8 26. and are very apt to put our greedy and ſudden paſſions into Prayers, complaints, deprecations, to think God deales not well with us, if we be not anſwered according to our wills, and in our owne time, Pſalm 31. 22.& 116.11. Job 10. 2, 3, 18. Jer. 15. 18. Jon. 4.2, 3. Matth.20. 20, 21. Pſal 77.7--10.

and let not thine heart be haſty to utter any thing before God] Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, Matth. 12. 34. Therefore the remedy of raſhneſs in our words, is to compoſe our thoughts and affections aright; to let our heart guide our tongue not to bring raw, tumultuary, indigeſted thoughts into Gods preſence, but to get a collected heart, to pray with underſtanding, with ſpirit, with judgement, and according to Gods will; as David found his heart to pray to God, Sam. 7.27. and called together his ſcattered affections, that he might fix them upon God, Pſalm 103 1. Dan.9.2.3 Rom.8.26,27. 1 Cor. 14.15. 1 John 5.14.

We may likewiſe underſtand the caveat, as directed againſt that carnal pride and contradiction of ſpirit, whereby the heart is apt to riſe againſt God and his Word, when we hear of more ſpiritual ſervice required by God, than our fooliſh ſacrifices do amount unto, or our carnal hearts are able to perform, James 1.19.20. Rom. 10.21. Acts 13.45.& 28. 19.

before the Lord] That is, in his houſe or ſanctuary. Therefore they who ſin here, are ſaid to provoke the Lord to his very face, and to do evil before his eyes, Iſa.65.3.& 66.3,4.

for God is in heaven, and thou on the earth] Theſe are two Arguments to enforce this caveat upon us; the one drawn from Gods greatneſs the other from our vileneſs. Mean perſons behave themſelves with all humility and reverence, when they ſupplicate unto men of honour and eminency. Much more ſhould men do ſo unto God. So Chriſt teacheth us in prayer to come unto God, as with confidence and comfort, becauſe he is a Father; ſo with reverence and fear, becauſe he is a Father in Heaven Matth.6.9 His being in heaven denotes, 1 His dominion over us as Lord & Maſter, Eph 6 9. 2. His glory and majeſty above us, 1 Reg 8. 27. that we might learn to fear before him, Mal. 1. 6. Deut. 28. 58. Heb. 12. 18, 29. 3. His holineſs and purity, Deut.26.15. Iſai.57.15 & 63.15. Hereby to raiſe us unto heavenly mindedneſs in our approaches unto him, Col 3 1, 2. Lam 3.40,41 4. His power to anſwer us and to do for us according to our deſires, 2 Chron. 20 6, 7. Pſalm 115. 3: Matth.5.45. & 7.11. 5. His omniſcience, he looketh down on us, and ſeeth how we behave our ſelves in his preſence, Matth. 6.32. Pſalm 11. 4 & 33. 13, 14. 6. His juſtice and diſpleaſure againſt evil doers, Pſalm 14. 2, 3. Rom. 1. 18 In all which reſpects, we ought to take heed of an haſty, raſh, and unadviſed frame of heart in Gods preſence. Mans being on earth ſignifieth his baſeneſs and vile condition, his great diſtance from God, and by reaſon of corruption, in his great diſſimilitude unto him. He is of the earth, earthly, 1 Cor 15. 47. Pſalm 10. 18 This conſideration of our natural and ſinful vileneſs, ſhould greatly humble us in our approaches unto God, Job. 4. 19. & 25. 4 5, 6. & 40.4. Gen.18.17. Iſaiah 6. 5.

therefore let thy words be few] Firſt, uſe not raſh and vain babling, and empty, heartleſs repetitions as the heathen, Matth. 6. 7. but weigh and chooſe out words to ſpeak unto him, Job 9. 14 Eccleſ. 12. 10. He ſpeaketh not againſt all length in prayer: for Chriſt prayed whole nights; nor againſt all repetition, when it proceedeth from zeal, love, and holy fervencie; as that of Daniel, Chap.9.16, 18, 19. but of that which is a clamorous and vain ingeminating of the ſame thing without faith or wiſedome, 1 Reg. 18 26. Secondly, let thy words be few, (i.) Let not thy vowes be more, than thou mayeſt comfortably perform.

V. 3. For a dream cometh through the multitude of buſineſs, and a fools voice is known by multitude of words] (i.e) As multitude of buſineſs produceth dreams, ſo multitude of words diſcovereth folly. When two ſentences are connected together by a copula there is frequently imported a ſimilitude between them; Prov.17.3. & 25. 23, 25, 26, 27.& 26, 3.7, 9, 11.14, 17, 20, 21. Iſa. 53. 7. Another argument moving unto the former duty, becauſe, as certainly as much buſineſs produceth dreams, ſo much ſpeech diſcovereth folly within, Prov.10.19 Eccleſ 10, 11—14. Iames 3. 2.

V. 4. When thou voweſt a vow unto God, defer not to pay it] He giveth direction in the other particular, wherein men uſe to addreſs themſelves unto God, viz. vowes; and as he did in the former forbid raſh haſtineſs: ſo he doth in this, warn to take heed of grudging delayes. A vow is a ſolemn promiſe, or promiſſory oath made made unto God, wherein a man doth voluntarily bind himſelf unto ſomething, which was in his own power to bind himſelf unto. He doth not direct us here to make ſuch a vow, but having made it, to take heed of breaking faith and promiſe with God, who never fails in any promiſe of his unto us Ioſh. 21. 45. nor delayeth to perform it in its time, Exod. 12.41, 51. Hab.2.3. 2 Pet. 3 9. This then is the firſt Rule concerning vowes, That lawful vowes muſt be ſpeedily and cheerfully performed, Pſalm 66.13, 14 & 76.11, Numb. 30.2. Deut 23.21. Iſa.19.21. Matth. 5. 33. God would not have an alteration in a vow though it were for the better, Lev. 27.10. Thus Hanna made haſte to perform her vow in dedicating her child unto God, as ſoon as he was weaned, 1 Sam. 1. 11, 24, 28. God calls on Iacob, and minds him of his vow made before, and expected that he ſhould go to Bethel, and pay it as he had promiſed, Gen. 35. 1 compared with Gen. 28. 20, 22.

for he hath no pleaſure in fooles] He is greatly diſpleaſed with thoſe who go about one while to flatter him in making a vow, and afterwards to mock him in refuſing or delaying to perform it, Prov. 20. 25. This is one reaſon, drawn from the folly in offending God; whereunto there is another adjoyned.

V. 5. Better it is that thou ſhouldeſt not vow, than that thou ſhouldeſt vow and not pay] It was arbitary, and in our own power to make the vow, for vowes were to be of things in a mans power, Numb. 30. 3.----15. Deut. 23.22. Acts 5. 4, But it is not in our power, whether being made, we will pay it or no, for we bring a bond upon our ſouls, and the vowes of God will be upon us, Pſal. 56. 12.

V. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cauſe thy fleſh to ſin] Theſe words contain the ſecond Rule concerning Vowes, which is to teach us to avoid all raſh Vowes which are unadviſedly made, and that is done two wayes; 1. When we vow things ſinful, when our mouth cauſeth us to ſin 2. When in lawful things we vow, and preſently repent, ſeeking after ſhifts and evaſions to elude the obligation; and to excuſe our ſelves. Suffer not thy mouth, by making an haſty vow, to cauſe thy fleſh] That is, thy tongue, or thy ſelf to ſin. Fleſh is taken by Synochdoche, for the whole man, Gen.6. 12. Iſa. 40 5. Rom 3 20. It may ſeem here to be uſed for the whole man, to intimate, that raſh vows are uſually grounded upon fleſhly, rather than ſpiritual reaſons. A man did not go about them with his ſoul and ſpirit, upon ſolemn and ſerious grounds but to gratifie himſelf in ſome carnal intreſt or other, or to cary on ſome ſinful end, Act.23 12 13. Mal.1.14. 2 Sa.15.8,9. Pro. 7.14. A like expreſſion, Ec.11.10.

neither ſay thou before the Angel] By the Angel ſome do underſtand the Prieſt, or Meſſenger of the Lord towards the people; ſo they are called, Job 33.23. Mal. 2.7. Rev. 1. 20 for in the caſe of an oath, wherein there was error or ignorance, the perſon was to bring a ſacrifice, and the Prieſt was to make an attonement for him, Lev. 5 4, 5, 6. And then the meaning is, Do not when thou haſt vowed, repent and grudg, and go to the Prieſt, acknowleging an error or ignorance, that ſo thou maieſt ſave charges, and lick thy ſelf whole, by offering a ſacrifice to excuſe a vow. Others underſtand the Angels of heaven, who are ſent forth for the good of the Elect, and who obſerve our behaviour in Gods worſhip; as that in the Apoſtle uſeth to be underſtood, 1 Cor. 11.10. Matth.18.10.Luk 12. 8. 1 Tim.5 21. the Greek reads it, πρὸ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ. Before God; it may happily be meant of the Temple or Houſe of God, where they did pay their vowes,Pſal.66 13. wherein there were Cherubims drawn, in token of the preſence of the Angels, and their protection to the Church, 1 Reg.6.29,32. Others underſtand it of Chriſt, who is the ſearcher of hearts and will not be mocked, cannot be deceived; who is the Angel of the Covenant, and who is in the midſt of his people, his Candleſticks, when they come to worſhip,Exod.23. 20, 21. called the preſence of God, Exodus 33. 14 Mal. 3. 1 Iſay 63.9.Joſh.12. 41. It ſeemeth to me to have ſome alluſion to the Hiſtory of Balaam, who when the Angel ſtood in the way againſt him, made ſuch an excuſe as this, It was an errour, I knew not that thou ſtoodſt againſt me, if it diſpleaſe thee, I will go back, Numbers 22. 34.

that it was an errour] That is,either do not vow ſo raſhly and unadviſedly, as to be at laſt brought to a neceſſity of confeſſing a ſinful errour, but adviſe beforehand that thou mayeſt not erre. Such a raſh vow was that of Jephthah, Judges 11. 30,31 35. and that other of Saul, 1 Sam.14.24, 29,39, 40 Or elſe, do not excuſe thy ſelf for breaking thy vow, by ſaying, thou didſt it imprudently, and wert miſtaken in it, it was an ignorance which thou art willing, by ſome ſacrifice,or other way of devotion to expiate; as ſacrifices were to be offered for the ignorances of the people, Levit.2.27. Num.15. 24 25.Heb.9.7 Do not cover a wilful prevarication with a ſpecious pretence,nor after vowes make inquiry, Prov.20.25.

wherefore ſhould God be angry at thy voice?] The word ſignifies foaming anger; Why ſhould he through anger foam againſt thee? An interrogation of dehorting. As, Why will ye die, (i.e.) Be careful that ye may not die. This is one reaſon God will be angry. Another, Thou ſhalt feel his anger, he will deſtroy the work of thy hand. He will not bleſs thoſe endeavours, for the accompliſhing whereof thou didſt make that vow;thou deſtroyeſt the vow, he will deſtroy thy work,Deut.28.15 &c, The third followes.

V. 7. For in the multitude of dreams, and many words, there are many vanities: but fear thou God] Or, In multitude of dreams there are alſo vanities: and ſo in many words. Or, As in multitude of dreams, ſo alſo of words there are divers vanities. Some take ברב not for a Noun, but for the Infinitive mood of the Verb; and render it thus, Quia ſicut in multiplicare, or, quando multiplicantur ſomnia, etiam vanitates multiplicantur: ſic ſe habent verba multa. As when the dreams are multiplyed,vanities alſo are multiplied, ſo it is in many words. In all,the ſenſe is the ſame. Mercer, a moſt learned Interpreter,makes the connexion and ſenſe to be thus,I have given thee theſe cautions,to be tender of thy behaviour in the preſence of God,that thou mayeſt not by dreams,fancies,vanities,or multitude of difficult buſineſſes, be brought to utter any thing raſhly before God, but amidſt all dangers or dreams or vanities, or difficulties to fear God, and not to ſuffer thy ſelf to be withdrawn from him by any temptations. But the words ſeem to preſcribe the ſame remedy againſt raſh vowes, as before againſt other haſty addreſſes unto God,verſe 3. There is a πολυσύνδετον in the conjunction copulative, as elſewhere,Gen.43.8.& 25. 34. The plural & vanitates, is as much, as plurima vanitas, great vanity, or many vanities; as Prov.1.20. Wiſedoms,(i.)principal or excellent wiſedom,Iſa.64.6. Our righteouſneſſes (i.) moſt righteous actions,Gen.19.11. Blindneſſes, (i.) Thick and through blindneſs,Pſal.45. 15. With gladneſſes, (i.) with great gladneſs, 2 Pet.3.11. What manner of perſons ought we to be in holy converſations and godlyneſſes, (i.) In all manner of holy converſation and godlyneſs: Cant. 5.16. His palate is ſweetneſſes,and he is altogether,or every whit of him is deſires, (i.) Moſt ſweet, and moſt deſireable, Dan.9.23. A man of deſires, (i.) Greatly deſired or beloved,Iſay,53. 3. A man of ſorrows, (i.) Full of ſorrows.

but fear thou God] This is the remedy of all vanities in worſhip, to ſerve God rather with inward reverence and fear than with raſh, haſty, many, formal, empty expreſſions. The fear of God is the foundation of all holy duties,Chap.12.13. Iſay 29.13.Deut.28.58. Mal 1.6.Heb 12.28,29.

V. 8. If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poor and violent,&c.] The connexion of theſe word, with the former,ſtands thus: The fear of God doth many times expoſe men unto injury and violence, and that every where, all a Province and Countrey over, and that not onely from ordinary perſons but from great men, and that without remedy; becauſe if haply they have recourſe unto judgement and juſtice for eaſe, even they find wreſting, perverting, diſtorting of juſtice: So that a mans tranquility in this life, may ſeem to be but little mended by piety and fear of God, whereby he is in danger of being reduced to poverty and diſtreſs. This is a ſtumbling-block, which may cauſe men to be offended at the wayes of God, Matth.11.5,6.& 13.21.Gal. 5. 11.and good men have ſtumbled at it,Pſal.73.12,13. Againſt this temptation, he here ſubjoyns a ſeaſonable antidote;they ſhould not be much amazed at it, but rather comfort themſelves, that there lieth an appeal to an higher Court, where they ſhall certainly be righted and their innocency vindicated. If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poore; and that ſuch oppreſſion, as that thou haſt no remedy againſt it, but it is powerful enough to wry and pervert judgement: And yet further, no eſcape from it, but it meets with thee all the Nation or Province over. If you ſee a poor man that fears God, not onely ſuffer under the meanneſſe of his condition, but under fraud, calumny, violence, where ever he goes; as Ezek 18. 12, 18 Job 20. 19. Micah 3.2.Iob 24.2.---12. & 19 7,8.Pſalm 74.20,Ier.6.6,7. & 20. 8. Ezek. 8. 17.

marvel not at the matter] Be not amazed or aſtoniſhed at it: ſo much the word imports,Iſay 13.8.Iob 2*6*. 11.Think it not a ſtrange thing, 1 Pet. 4. 12. Doe not think hardly of God, nor diſtruſt his providence, or grow weary of his ſervice. What wonder at all is it to ſee power cruſh povertie; or wickedneſs ſuppreſs pietie? Pſalm 37. 8, 9.

at the matter] Or at the will or purpoſe, to wit, of God, in ſuffering, and ordering this thing: for theſe things happen not without his appoyntment and providence, Hab. 1. 12. Iſay 10. 5. Pſalm 17. 13.

for he that is higher than the higheſt regardeth, and there be higher than they] Higher. viz. God, who is higher: the relative without the antecedent, which is very uſual: or, The High from above; The High regardeth it. It ſeemeth to be a vehement and emphatical anadiploſis: the ſame word is uſed for from above, Gen. 27.39. and 49. 25. This kind of elegant and emphatical repetition is frequent in the Scripture,Pſalm 22. 1.Ier.7.4 & 22 29. Ezek.21.27. 2 Sam. 18.33. 1 Reg.18.39. Iudges 5.30. Pſalm 98.4,5,6.& 124.1, 2.Hoſ 2.2.Dan.10 19 And according to this ſenſe, God is ſaid in a way of judgement to look down from heaven upon the violence of great men,and to ſpeak from thence in his wrath unto them, Pſalm 2.4,5. & 11.4,5,6. Exod.2.23 24. 1 Sam. 9. 1*6*. Pſalm 93.4. Or, He that is higher than the High, God, who is the High above all the earth the High and mighty One,above the Potentates of the world who are called High ones, Iſa. 24.21. Iſay 2. 11, 12. 2 Sam.23.1. He that is King of kings,and Lord of lords, Higher than the Kings of the earth, Pſal.89.27.

regardeth] Obſerveth the violence of proud men to avenge it. Or keepeth the poor who are oppreſſed by them, Iſay 3,14. Prov. 22. 22,23. Pſalm 10.12.---18.& 11.5. and 68.5 & 72. 4.

and there be higher than they] Namely, The Holy Angels who are ſent forth for the good of the Church, Heb. 1. 14. who pitch their tents about believers,and are guardians over them, Pſalm 34. 7,& *9*1.11. who behold the face of God, as Miniſters ready to execute his commands in behalf of them,Matth. 18.10. whoſe ſervice God is pleaſed to uſe in the puniſhment of Tyrants, and ſubverſion of States,Iſay 37.3*6*. Acts 12.23.

V. 9. Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all] Here he returneth to conſider the vanitie of all kind of Riches; amongſt which, though ſome are to be preferred before others, as namely, corn and cattel which are the profits of the earth, yet both the one and the other, are unable to make the poſſeſſors of them happy. Yet withal, the words may ſeem to have ſome relation to what went before, namely, That God in his providence hath ſo ordered things in the civil body, that the Head cannot ſay to the Foot, I have no need of thee: the King himſelf wanteth the help, and cannot ſubſiſt without the labour of poor men, and that may be a check unto oppreſsion and violence.

the profit of the earth is for all] Or. above all other profit.He commendeth husbandry, conſiſting in tillage and grazing, above all other wayes of gain, as extending to the neceſſary ſupply of all men whatſoever; for bread is the ſtaff of life, Iſay 3.1. Gen. 41 55. Prov 24.7.& 27.23,24 & 31,16. Adam, even in innocence was to have dreſſed the earth,Gen.2.15. There is an excellency or profit of the earth, in, or above all. The ſubſtantive is put for an adjective of the ſuperlative degree; as Gen. 12 2. Pſalm 21. 7. Pſalm 88 9. Cant. 5.1*6*.

the King himſelf is ſerved by the field] Or, the King himſelf is for the field: or the King is ſerved for the fields ſake, that under him men may quietly labour and eat the fruits of the earth; or the King himſelf dreſſeth his field, is as it were a ſervant to his field to order and husband it. It lies on him to take care of husbandry, that he and his people may be nouriſhed. The moſt ſimple meaning is to ſhew, that from the meaneſt to the greateſt, the fruits of the earth are neceſsary for every mans ſupportance. Therefore Ioſeph reſerved the fifth of the fruits of the Earth for Pharaoh,Gen 47.24. and it is recorded for the commendation of King Uzziah, that he was a lover of husbandry, 2 Chron.2*6*.10.

V. 10. He that loveth ſilver ſhal not be ſatisfied with ſilver;nor he that loveth abundance with increaſe] This may be underſtood,either abſolutely by it ſelf, to ſet forth the unſatiable greedineſs of covetous wretches,whoſe deſires are like the grave and never ſay, It is enough, Hab.2.5,6,8,9,Iſa 5.8.or comparatively, with relation to what was ſaid before. There is a profit and real benefit which the earth bringeth unto thoſe that labour about it, but money though a man increaſe it never ſo much, and though it appear never ſo lovely unto him, yet it cannot of it ſelf ſatisfie any deſire of nature; if a man be hungery, it cannot feed him; if naked, it cannot cloath him; if cold, it cannot warm him; if ſick, it cannot recover him. As it is an Inſtrument of traffique, which anſwereth unto All things, Eccleſ. 10. 1*9*. So it may be a defence to a man, Chap. 7. 12. and may provide other things for him. But if God ſhould withhold the fruits of the earth, and forbid that to bring them forth, abundance of wealth would be as uſeleſs as ſo many ſtones: a man hath no good of money, nor of other trades,further than they purchaſe or manage for us the fruits of the earth.

The latter clauſe ſome thus render, He that loveth it, ſhall not have any increaſe by, or in the abundance thereof Increaſe here, is a word which ſignifieth the increaſe of the earth, ſuch fruits as may be eaten: and money is not fructus edulis,though it come out of the earth. But the prefix ב ſet before the word Abundance, being ſometimes a note of the Accuſative caſe, and expreſsing the object of an action, we may well render it as it is in our verſion; He that loveth abundance; as Gen.34.1.&37.2. Prov.9 5.Multitude or abundance, here, is taken in the ſame kind, for gathered wealth; as Pſalm 37. 16.

V. 11. When goods encreaſe, they are encreaſed that eat them] He ſhewed the vanity of the love of money; here he ſhews the vanity of Husbandry and great poſſeſsions: or elſe goeth on upon occaſion of the laſt words, he that loveth abundance, ſhall not be ſatisfied with encreaſe; becauſe as his wealth increaſeth his charge and family,and friends, and retinue will increaſe likewiſe. The poſſeſſour can have no more real good nor ſatisfaction from his great eſtate, than his ſervants have; many hands muſt be ſet on work,and conſequently many bellies filled, many backs cloathed, and all they have their real ſhare as fully, as he himſelf in the things which he poſſeſſeth: no man had greater experience of this than Solomon,of whoſe numerous Family, and large expence, we read, 1 Reg.4.22, 26. So we read of the great Family of Abraham,Gen.14.14.

and what good, or what profit is there to the owners thereof] Chap.1.3.& 2.14 & 3.9.

ſaving the beholding of them with their eyes?] He hath no advantage above others, ſave that he ſees them eat that, the property whereof is his: and this is ſome good; for it is a more bleſſed thing to give, than to receive,Acts 20 35. or, he can onely pleaſe himſelf with looking on his land and moneyes as his own, whereas the real benefit which they yield, doth accrue unto others,as well as to himſelf. And if his eye have any advantage above his ſervants in this reſpect; Theirs have an advantage above his in another; for, they are refreſhed with ſweet ſleep, which his are uſually deprived of.

V. 12. The ſleep of a labouring man] Or of a ſervant, or of him that tilleth the ground, or is converſant about any painfull trade and work, Geneſis 4 2. 2 Samuel 9. 10. Proverbs 12. 11. Iſay 19.9.

is ſweet] Whether he eat little or much: If he eat little,his labour cauſeth ſweet ſleep: If much,his healthineſs and ſtrength cauſing good concoction, doth not ſuffer his ſleep to be diſquieted with crude and offenſive vapours. Beſides labour taking up the mind doth free it from thoſe careful thoughts and covetings which are uſually the hinderers of ſweet ſleep.

but the abundance of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleep] This may be underſtood either of abundance of wealth, with the many cares, buſineſſes, fears, troubles, which are conſequent thereupon, Gen.41.29. Prov.3. 10. Luke 12. 16, 17. or of the fulneſs of diet, gluttony and exceſs of delicious fare,which cauſeth diſtempers,and ſo hindreth ſleep. This ſeemeth rather to be intended, (becauſe he mentioned eating before) and ſo to be directed againſt rich gluttons, who ſpend their time in riot, feaſting and exceſs,and ſo overcharge nature with intemperance, beyond its ſtrength, Luke 16.19. and 21. 34. which cauſeth indigeſtion and malignant vapours, whereby ſleep is removed or diſquieted,Eccleſ.8. 16. Prov. 4.16.17. and this is a great vexation; for ſweet ſleep is a bleſſing of God to man,Pſal. 127. 2 Prov. 3.24.

V. 13. There is a ſore evill which I have ſeen under the Sun] An evil that cauſeth ſickneſs, a very grievous and bitter evil. Or an evil falling on men,Chap 6.2.

riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt] Prov 1.19. Either being unto them occaſions of ſin,and fuel of luſt, cauſing pride, vanity,oppreſſion,violence,gaming, gluttony, idleneſs, exceſs, Hab.2. 9. 10. Luke 12,15.——21. 1 Tim.6.9,10. Luke 16,19.Deut.6. 11,12.& 8.10.——12. Prov. 30.9. Jam.2.6,7.& 5.3.—6.or elſe expoſing them unto envy and danger,to rapine and violence,Prov. 13.8. 2.Reg 25.6,7,9, 12.

V. 14. But thoſe riches periſh by evill travell] Or, with much affliction. Either by their own improvidence, imprudence,luxury, &c. or by the fraud, circumvention and violence of others, or by caſualties and miſcarriages in trading: or by ſome ſecret blaſt and curſ from God,Prov.23.5 and that after much travel and toyl to get them,after much ſolicitude& anxious care to keep them,after much providence and tenderneſs towards his children to lay up for them.

he begetteth a ſon, and there is nothing in his hand] Or in his power and poſſeſſion, Dan.2.38. John 3.35. 1 Reg.20.6. 1 Chron. 29. 12. his hand, (i.) either the fathers,to leave unto the ſon,or the ſons to inherit after his father.

V. 15. As he came forth of his mothers womb, naked ſhall he returne to go as he came] Though he could ſecure all his wealth from periſhing,yet he himſelf muſt leave them, and go out of the world as naked as he came into it. And that which hath no power to free us from death, to comfort us in death, to go with us into another world after death, is no foundation of happineſs or ſolid tranquillity,Job 1.21. Pſal.49.17. 1 Tim.6.7 Luke 12.20.21.

to go] (i.) To dye,Chap. 6.4.Job 16.22.Pſal. 39.13 Phil.1.23. Return,viz.to the womb of the common mother, the earth, Job 1. 21. Eccleſ.12. 7.

and ſhall take nothing of his labour] That is, of his eſtate gotten by hard labour,Chap. 2.19 Prov 5.10.Deut. 28.33. which he may carry away, or cauſe to go along with him, in his hand He cannot carry ſo much as one handful of all that he hath with him.

V. 16. And this alſo is a ſore evill] As before verſe 23. That though his riches haply are not kept for his hurt; nor do not periſh in his time, yet they will not at all keep him from death, nor profit him in it. Riches will not profit in the day of wrath.

that in all points as he came, ſo ſhall he go] His death and his birth are over againſt one another in an exact proportion.

and what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?] For that which will not ſtay, which cannot be held faſt, which is emptineſs and very vanity. So words of wind, are empty and vain words, Job 16 3. A man walking in wind,that is, a lying Prophet, Mic 2.11.ſo to reap a whirlwind, Hoſ. 8. 7. to fill the belly with the Eaſt wind,Job 15 2. to inherit wind, Prov. 11. 29. to bring forth wind; Iſa. 26. 18. To feed upon wind, Hoſ 12.1. To ſpeak into the ayre, 1 Cor. 14.9 To beat the ayre, 1 Cor.9.26. Are expreſſions of very vain and fruitleſs enterprizes. Here money is compared to wind; The one hath wings to fly away with, Prov 23.5.ſo hath the other, Pſal. 104 3. The one cannot be held, Prov. 30. 4. neither can the other, 1 Cor. 7. 31.

V. 17. All his dayes alſo he eateth in darkeneſſe, and hath much ſorrow and wrath with his ſickneſſe] Or, according to the words in their order thus, Alſo all his dayes he eateth in darkneſs, and much ſorrow, and his ſickneſs, and wrath. A further vanity of riches in the hands of a covetous worldling; he denies himſelf a full, free, and comfortable enjoyment of outward things, he cannot unbend himſelf from his carking cares,even when he goes to eat, but as he gets, ſo he uſeth and enjoyeth his wealth in darkneſs, i e. (for the words following are exegetical) in ſorrow, and wrath, even unto very ſickneſs.

All his dayes he eateth in darkneſſe] It may be underſtood either literally, that he doth ſo lengthen out his labour, and grudge to ſpare himſelf any times even of neceſſary refreſhment as that he deferreth eating till it be dark,till he can work no longer. Or rather metaphorically, he eateth without any pleaſure, and with much trouble and anxiety of mind; ſo much darkneſs commonly importeth,Iſa.49.9,10.& 50.10.Mic.7.8.

and hath much ſorrow] Or, indignation. The word in ſome copies (as the learned obſerve) is read with the points of a noun; in others, of a verb; and ſo they render it, multum iraſcitur, or indignatur, he is very angry, or he ſorroweth much,and hath ſickneſs, and wrath. The meaning (as I conceive) is he eateth in darkeneſſe,baſely,and wretchedly, as a ſlave to his riches,he ſtorms, grieves, frets, is even ſick with anger and vexation, at the expences he is put unto in keeping but a mean and a ſordid table. The Greek by a very eaſie miſtake in the letters which are much alike, read it thus, All his dayes he is in darkeneſſe, ϗ ἐν πένθει, and in mourning and in ſorrow and in ſickneſſe and in wrath. His ſickneſs,for he hath ſickneſs. The Affix is uſed for the ſeparate and abſolute pronoun; as Pſalm 115.7.Ezek 29.3. Our reading, He hath ſorrow and wrath with his ſickneſſe, (where the conjunction copulative is rendred by the prepoſition, [with] as ſometimes elſewhere, 1 Sam. 14. 18.) ſeemeth to intimate ſuch a ſenſe as this,All his dayes; or while he lives he eats in ſorrow,and when he falls ſick, and is in danger of death, he hath much wrath and indignation in his ſickneſs,for fear of parting from his wealth,which he ſo dearly loveth, and hath ſo hardly laboured for.

V 18. Behold, that which I have ſeen, It is good and comely, &c.] Here is ſubjoyned a remedy of this Vanity, ſetting forth the right uſe of riches, to take away all this ſinful anxiety which is converſant about them;which is, in the fear of God comfortably to enjoy his good bleſſings without afflicting our ſelves for the future, but caſting our cares upon him, who careth for us.

that which I have ſeen is this] He ſpeaketh out of experience, and upon exact ſtudy and inquiry after the truth; as 1 Joh.1.1,3. John 1.14.Chap.1.13. & 2.24.& 3,22.

It is good and comely] Good and comfortable to a man himſelf. Comely,decent,honourable,and of good report toward others Or, there is a good which is alſo comely. Or, it is good,yea,it is comely. Or, Behold, I have ſeen that which is good, that which is comely. The like manner of expreſſion, 1 Sam.15.20. Pſalm 10 6. Teaching us in our converſation. 1. To look unto that which is good in it ſelf,and then to that which is decent towards the world, Phil 4.8.

that a man eat and drinke, and enjoy good of all his labour] Or,in all his labours,to ſweeten his labours with a comfortable fruition of the fruit of them. Of all his labours; So the Prepoſition ב is uſed, to ſignifie as much as Ex or De, Exod. 12. 43. Leviticus 22. 4

all the dayes of his life which God giveth him] When God gives life,we ſhould not deny the comforts of it to our ſelves, for it is his portion] All the good he can ever have from them: A metaphor from diviſion of heritances; or from diſtribution of meat at a feaſt. It is that which God hath allotted him of all his labour. But withal he muſt remember, that God allows him but a part; God himſelf, and the poor, and his family, countrey, friends, challenge part likewiſe in thoſe goods, wherewith God hath bleſſed him, Prov. 3.8. 1 Cor. 9 13, 14. 1 Cor. 16.2. Gal. 6.6, 10, 2 Cor. 12. 14. 1 Tim. 5.8. I ſa. 23.18.

V. 19. Every man alſo to whom God hath given, &c. Here is onely a further inſiſting on the ſame argument; as Chap. 2. 24. & 13. 3. and 6.2. He ſhews, 1. That God gives us our wealth, Deut. 8. 18. 2. That he gives us dominion over our wealth, that we may not be captivated unto it; every man is a ſlave to his eſtate further than God ſets them free. 3. Wherein this power ſtands; 1. in uſing it, to eat thereof. 2. in uſing it proportionably to his condition; or as Divines ſpeak, Secundum decentiam ſtatus, to take his portion. 3. To uſe it with fruition and cheerfulneſs, to rejoyce in it, 1 Tim. 6. 17. 4. Not to let his joy ſwallow up his duty, nor his delight his labour, but to ſweeten his labour with joy, and to moderate his joy with labour, Eph. 4. 28. 5. To uſe and to enjoy his own, the fruit of his own labour, not to be burdenſome or injurious unto others, 2 Theſſ. 3. 12.

V. 20. For he ſhall not much remember the dayes of his life] Some make the ſenſe to be thus; Although he give not much, or although it be not much which God hath given, (which ſenſe the diſtinguiſhing Accent doth ſomewhat favour) yet he ſhall remember, that all his life long, God ſweetneth that little unto him with the joy of his heart: And a little with joy and cheerfulneſs, and Gods bleſsing, is better than much riches of the ungodly, Pſal. 37. 16. Prov. 17. 1. Luke 12. 15. Prov. 15. 17. Dan. 1. 15. But our tranſlation preferreth another ſence, which ſeems moſt conſonant to the drift of the place. He that in this manner, doth cheerfully enjoy the bleſsings which God gives him, ſhall not, with much ſorrow or wearineſs, remember the troubles of his life; neither ſhall his labour be very irkſome or grievous unto him, becauſe the Lord doth anſwer him, or doth proportionably unto his labours, return comfort to him in the joy of his heart, in the joyful and contented fruition of them.

becauſe God anſwereth him in the joy of his heart] Anſwereth all his labour with joy, giveth him ſuch joy of heart, as is a full compenſation for all his labour. As money is ſaid to anſwer unto all things, in a proportionable value to them all, Eccl. 10. 19. ſo ſhall his joy bear a full value to all the labour which was taken for it. Other Expoſitions there are, but this is moſt genuine and natural.

CHAP. VI.

IN this Chapter is continued a further deſcription of the common vanity of riches, in the hands of a covetous perſon. He is here ſet forth, Firſt, by the good things which he hath; 1. Riches in abundance, riches and wealth. 2. Honour, and both to the uttermoſt of his deſires, verſe 2. 3. Many children. 4. Many years, a great old age, verſe 3. 6.

Secondly, By his miſery, which makes all that vaine unto him. 1. God gives him not power to enjoy it. 2. A ſtranger eateth it. 3. His ſoul is not filled with good. 4. He hath no burial, verſe 2. 3.

Thirdly, the cenſure of all this. 1. Abſolutely, 2. Comparatively. Abſolutely; It is firſt, an evil, ſecondly, a common evil; thirdly, a vanity; fourthly, a diſeaſe, verſe 1, 2. Comparatively, an untimely birth, or abortive is better: For, 1. He is born dead, and ſo free from ſenſe of miſeries, which the other diſcruciated himſelf withal. 2. He departs in darkneſs without the loſs of light and comfort, which the other denies unto himſelf. 3. His name is covered in darkneſs, the others name is odious, verſ. 4. 4. He hath not ſeen the Sun, nor known any thing: the other hath indeed ſeen the Sun, but hath ſeen no good, nor known any thing but ſorrow and vexation, and at laſt goes to the ſame place, verſ. 5. 6. This vanity he further opens:

Firſt, By the narrow uſe of riches, and all the labour converſant about them; it terminates in the body; it cannot ſatiate the minde nor appetite; that is, if evil and covetous, inſatiable; if wiſe and prudent, above ſatisfaction by theſe things, verſ. 7. That they cannot ſatisfie the mind, appears, becauſe then wiſe men might find out ſome more good in them than fools; but the wiſeſt can have no more out of them, than for their mouths, and ſo have fools, and the pooreſt men that know how to live, as well as the richeſt, verſ. 8.

Secondly, by the vanity of wandring and endleſs deſires; the wiſe, the fooliſh, the rich, the poor have things preſent and neceſſary; ſo long as they live they have enough to that uſe; and this is a real fruit, much better, than to let the heart wander and weary it ſelf in endleſs deſires, v. 9.

Thirdly, By the impoſſibility of mending a mans condition by theſe things, or of raiſing him above the ſtate of mortality and infirmity. A man will be but a man how rich ſoever he be, and all his wealth will not guard him againſt the evils incident to humanitie, verſe 10. He will be ſtill never the better, by ſuch things, as doe but increaſe vanity, verſe 11.

Fourthly, By the ignorance of man to make the beſt uſe of things, and to reſolve himſelf, whether a great or a moderate eſtate be better for him; eſpecially, conſidering the ſhortneſs of his life, and the ignorance of what will become of his eſtate or family after he is gone, verſ. 12. Thus we may connex the two laſt verſes, with the argument of thoſe before: or rather we may take them for a general concluſion of all the precedent vanities; ſince ſo many things there are which increaſe vanity what is man the better for them? verſ. 11. For firſt, amongſt them all, he can hardly know what is good for himſelf. 2. If he do, he can enjoy that good but a little while, his very life (the beſt outward bleſſing he hath) is vain, and but a ſhadow. 3. When his life is over, he ſhall be never the better for any thing which comes after him. 4. Neither can he pleaſe himſelf with the fore-ſight of what ſhall be after him; becauſe he cannot tell it to himſelf, neither can any man elſe declare it to him.

Verſ. 1. THere is an evil which I have ſeen under the Sun] He ſhews the miſery of a diſconted covetous diſpoſition, and that it is a ſpecial gift of God to beſtow upon a man the ſweet enjoyment of outward bleſſings, which when he hath, he is apt enough to deny unto himſelf.

and is common amongſt men] Or, much and great. Covetouſneſs is both a great ſin, and yet a very uſual and frequent ſin, that is to be met with, in all parts of the habitable world, where ever the Sun riſeth and ſetteth. The commonneſſe of ſin, doth not at all extenuate the greatneſs of it, but rather aggravate the ſame, Pſal. 14. 1, 3. Jer. 5. 1, 5.

V. 2. A man to whom God hath given, &c.] There is a man, who hath all things that heart can deſire; not onely riches, but ſubſtance of all ſorts lands, moveables, with honour and great place, 2 Chron. 1. 11, 12.

ſo that he wanteth nothing for his ſoul of all that he deſireth] He is, not defective, or deſtitute of any thing which his ſoul can wiſh for; his ſubſtance extends to all juſt and large deſires; it cannot be exhauſted or worn out, Deut. 8. 9. Iſa. 51. 14. 1 Reg. 17. 16. He ſpeaketh out of the boundleſs deſires of covetous men, which are never ſatisfied, but of the juſt deſires, which a man of dignity and honour could have, in order to the decency of his eſtate, and to the quality of his place. He cannot rationally wiſh for any thing towards the ſatisfaction of his juſt deſires, which his eſtate will not plentifully afford him, Pſal. 73. 7. Luk. 12 17, 18. Job 21. 7. —— 13. Pſal. 17. 14. All this a covetous wretch is ſaid to have from God, not in a way of bleſsing, as if God did proſper and approve of his ſordid, or ſinful wayes of gain; but in a way onely of providence, his Sunne ſhining on the juſt and unjuſt; Matth. 5. 45.

yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof] Chap. 5. 18, 19. To eat of them, importeth a moderate and prudent uſe of them, for neceſſity and delight, taking a mans own portion; that is a ſpecial curſe and judgement of God, when a man hath not an heart to enjoy the bleſsings which God beſtoweth on him: as the contrary is a bleſsing from God, Ch. 5. 19.

but a ſtranger eateth them] One that is in no relation of neerneſs, blood, friendſhip to him: or an enemy, who ſpoyleth and plundreth him of them. This is noted as a great affliction, Hoſ. 7. 9. Deut. 28. 33. Iſa. 1. 7. Lam. 5. 2. Jer. 5. 17. Here the learned obſerve a difference between a mans own uſe of his goods and a ſtrangers; for he himſelf doth but eat of them; but a ſtranger eateth them. The former noteth care, moderation, providence: The later, cruelty and devouring without pity, without meaſure.

This is a vanitie and an evil diſeaſe] Not onely a fruitleſs thing, but a very grievous trouble, when a man by ſordid thoughts, baſeneſs of ſpirit, unquiet and inceſſant cares, greedy deſires, diſtruſtful jealouſies, anxious fears, thronging imployments, keeps himſelf from taking any delight in his abundance, and pierceth himſelf through with divers ſorrows, 1 Tim. 6 10.

V. 3. If a man beget an hundred children] He ſpake before of one who had none to ſucceed him in his eſtate, but a ſtranger; here, he ſhews the miſery of a covetous perſon to be as great though he have many children, and live many years. Theſe be great bleſsings in themſelves, Pſalm 127. 3, 4 5. therefore children were called the glory of their Parents, Hoſ. 9. 11. Job 5. 25 26. Pſal. 21. 5. & 128. 6. But covetouſneſs takes away the comfort of them.

an hundred children] Very many; a certain number for an uncertain; as 1 Cor. 14. 19. Prov. 17. 10. 1 Sam. 18. 7.

many yeares ſo that the dayes of his yeares be many] He ſeemeth, ſpeaking of long life, to correct himſelf, and call it rather, many dayes, than many years: ſo Gen 47. 9.

and his ſoul be not filled with good] Or, ſatiſfied with good. Either in regard of his own inſatiable deſires, or of ſome curſe of God, mixing bitterneſs therewith, as Chap. 5. 10. Job 9 25. By his ſoul, is meant τὸ ἐπιθυμητικὸν, his appetite and deſires; as Gen. 34. 8. 1 Sam. 20. 4. Pſal. 103 6 Others, underſtand this of the vanity of children and old age without riches, when a man is ſo poor, that he hath nothing to ſatisfie nature while he lives, and cannot leave enough to bury him when he is dead. Which ſenſe is touched at in the Contents of the Chapter, in our Engliſh Bibles and alſo that he have no burial] Either through cruelty of murtherers and ſpoylers, or through neglect of heirs and ſucceſſors, who deny him an honerable interment. It is a part of humane miſery to be without burial, Deut. 28. 26. 1 Reg 14. 11 13. 2 Reg. 9. 37. Iſaiah 14. 20. Jerem. 8. 2. and 16. 4. & 22. 19. 2 Chron. 21. 19.

I ſay, that an untimely birth is better than he] In regard of outward reſpects, never to have felt good or evil, not to be born at all, or to be born and dye at once, than to live long in miſery, and then dye without love or honour from any. Hereby is noted the baſe condition of ſuch a perſon, who is worſe than an untimely birth, which hath not had the ordinary comfort of the meaneſt living creatures, to ſee the Sun, Job 3. 10, 11, 12, 16. Pſal. 58. 8.

V. 4. For he cometh in with vanity] (i.) He is borne, job. 21. Ioſh. 1. 9. To no purpoſe. That which never comes to perfection, but melteth and vaniſheth away aſſoon as it is borne, is borne in vain.

and departeth in darkneſſe] Or, into darkneſſe, or obſcurely without any notice. A periphraſis of death, Eccleſ 11. 8.

his name ſhal be covered with darkeneſſe] (i.) Shal utterly be forgotten; there ſhall never be any mention of him.

V. 5. hath not ſeen the ſun] Iob. 3. 16. Hath not felt any worldly delight, and therefore is not affected with the loſs of it.

nor knowne] Hath had no uſe, either of ſenſe or reaſon, and ſo cannot compare the evil of loſs with the good of fruition.

this hath more reſt than the other] For he reſts immediately from the womb, whereas a covetous man lives a toylſome and unquiet life, and then parts withall, unwillingly, into the condition of the abortive.

V. 6. Yea though he live a thouſand yeares twiſe told] Whereas it might be objected, that the one hath lived a long life, and that alone is a bleſſing; and therefore in that reſpect he is to be preferred before an untimely birth. He anſwered, that long life, without ſeeing good, doth but lengthen our miſery; It is not the life, but the good, which makes a ſolid difference, Pſal. 34. 12. elſe the evill of the day, Matth. 6. 34. makes day and life it ſelfe undeſireable, Iob 3. 20.——23. 7. 1. 2.

Do not all go to one place] As well he that lives longeſt, as he that never ſaw the Sun: and though one never ſaw the Sun, yet if the other never ſaw good, but onely wearies himſelf with ſorrowes and vanities, and goes to the ſame duſt; what difference is there between them?

V. 7. All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite is not filled] For his mouth; For his bodily ſubſtance, and the ſervices of life. Here is firſt a metonymie of the ſubject, the mouth for the nouriſhment which is put into it: and then a ſynechdoche, of the part for the whole; food being, though the principal, yet but one part of mans neceſſary proviſion; all which the Apoſtle compriseth in food and rayment, 1 Tim. 6. 3. All the real fruit which any man can reap of all his worldly labours, is to have his daily bread, the bread of his allowance, or food convenient for him, Prov. 30. 8. Things ſimply neceſſary for life, and things ſecundarily neceſſary for the decency of his condition, and proportion of his quality and degree in the world.

yet the appetite is not filled] (i.) Either the covetous deſires of a worldling remain ſtill inſatiable, he is not contented with his own portion, he cannot contain his heart within the limits of reaſon or religion; but though he have abundantly ſufficient for all his wants, yet he toyled ſtil as if he had nothing, Ch 4. 8. Or elſe, the ſoul is not filled; riches may benefit the body, and feed, and cloath, and comfort that, but to the nobler part of man, they can afford no ſatisfaction, they do not beare any proportien at all. They cannot hold the ſoul, Luke 12. 19, 20. They cannot help the ſoul in the day of trouble, Prov. 11. 4. Zeph. 1. 18. They cannot follow it into another world, Pſal. 49. 17. They have no ſutableneſſe, either in excellency or in duration unto it.

V. 8. For what hath the wiſe more than the foole, &c.] This queſtion is a denyal, The wiſe man hath nothing more than the fool. Internal excellency there is in wiſdom above folly, Chap. 2. 13. But here he ſpeaketh with relation to wealth, and the outward events of things, in which regard the wiſe man hath no peculiar prerogative above the fool. The one fares as deliciouſly, is cloathed as richly, hath lands and revenues left him by his anceſtors, as well as the other. The wiſeſt man can but provide for back and belly, and ſuch other conveniencies, as outward things are proper to ſupply, and ſo much may he do, who hath wealth without wit. Outward things promiſcuouſly happen unto all, and beyond their own uſe, they are not able to ſupply a wiſe man more than a fool.

what hath the poore which knoweth to walk before the living?] A poor man that lives hath the ſubſtantial benefit of outward things, as well as the richeſt or the wiſeſt. What hath he leſſe than the rich? he knows how to get his living, and walk through his ſhort time of life, as well as the other. Or, what hath the poor wiſe man, who by his induſtry and prudent converſing amongſt men doth maintain himſelf, more than the poor fooliſh man, who makes a ſhift to live as well as the other?

to walke before the living] That is, to live decently and diſcreetly amongſt men, Chapter 4. 15. Iſaiah 42. 5. Pſalm 56. 13, Chap. 7. 12.

V. 9. Better is the ſight of the eyes, than the wandring of the deſire] By the ſight of the eyes, he meaneth things preſent, and in poſſeſſion, which we have before us, in our eye, and in hand: by the wandring or walking of the ſoul, he meaneth an inſatiable and endleſſe perſuit of the heart after things which we have not, and cannot eaſily overtake. So ſight is oppoſed by the Apoſtle to faith, Becauſe ſight looketh on things in poſſeſſion; Faith, on things in expectation, 2 Cor. 5. 7. and ſo property or poſſeſſion is before called the ſeeing of things with the eye, Eccleſ. 5. 11 and on the other ſide, unſatisfied deſires are expreſſed by wandering of the heart up and down, Iſaiah 57. 10. Jer. 2. 25. & 14. 10. when the mind is not ſtayed and fixed with contentment in its preſent condition, but like a Bee flying from flower to flower, from creature to creature, to gather more. This then is the plain meaning of theſe words, It it better for a man quietly and contentedly to enjoy the things which he hath in preſent poſſeſſion, than to rove up and down, and weary himſelf with anxious ond unſatisfied deſires after things which he hath not: ſince the poor man hath as much the ſubſtantial and principal benefit of outward things, as the rich, namely life and health, and food convenient: ſince the wiſeſt man that is, can fetch no more real good out of wealth, than fooles themſelves do enjoy from it, it is much more comfortable to enjoy what we have, than endleſly to weary our ſelves in hoarding and hunting after more, Matth. 6. 25———31. This is the ſame in ſenſe with that, Chap. 4. 6. but ſpoken here by Solomon as a remedy againſt covetous deſires; there, by the ſluggard, as an apology for his lazineſs. Though ſome would have it here underſtood in the perſon of a covetous rich man. As if he would anſwer Solomons queſtion; what good hath one more than another, the wiſe than the fools, the rich than the poor? yes ſaith the covetous rich man, he hath an eſtate to looke on, the other is continually vexed with want and deſires, and it is much better to be in poſſeſſion of a good eſtate, than to languiſh under poverty; and be ever in a craving condition. But the former ſenſe is more genuine.

This alſo is vanity and vexation of ſpirit] That is, in the latter ſenſe It is a vaine and troubleſome thing to poſſeſſe good things onely to looke on them, and not to vſe them. Or rather in the former ſenſe The wandring of the foole up and down after new gaine, and denying it ſelfe the comfortable fruition of preſent contentments, is vanity, becauſe much can do a man no more reall good, than a little cheerfully uſed: and vexation of ſpirit becauſe inſatiable deſires do bring perpetual diſquiet upon the heart of a man.

V. 10. That which hath been, is named already] He ſheweth the vanity of wandring deſires, and greedy endeavours after greater things than God hath yet afforded a man: for whatever things have been or are, whether a man be rich or poor, noble or baſe, his condition comes not unto him by chance, but is preaſſigned him, in the purpoſe and decree of God, and therefore much better it is for him, contentedly to enjoy what God gives, than with a vain and ineffectual ambition, to ſtrive for things without his reach. Eſpecially ſince no things acquirable by humane induſtry, can exempt or protect a man from the evils, or common miſeries, which mankind is expoſed unto. Let one grow as rich, as potent, as honourable as the world can make him, A man he was before, and he will be but a man ſtill, from earth he came, and to earth he will go, he lyes under a degree of mortality and infirmity, which by the help of no worldly wealth or greatneſſe, he is able to break through.

That which hath been The name of it is called already] That is, Its ſtate, quality, order, condition, every thing belonging to the nature and being of it; every thing externally happening unto it, is all preordained in the counſel and decree of God; He by his immutable and irreſiſtable providence hath aſſigned unto every one his order, and doth by his wiſdom diſpoſe of all things belonging unto men; they are under his care and allowance, and therefore ouhgt not anxiouſly and ſollicitouſly to inſiſt upon proviſions for the future: but rather comfortably to enjoy things preſent, and in a conſcionable diſcharge of duty, to wait for a like bleſſing and providence of God for hereafter, as ever before they have had experience of, Pſalm 33. 11, 13, 14, 15. 1 Sam. 2. 7, 8. Acts 2. 23. & 4. 28.

and it is known that it is man] Be his wealth or honours what they will, yet a frail, mortal, mutable, earthly creature he is ſtill, as he was before. And though men have been ſo dementated with worldly greatneſs, as to take divine honour to themſelves, and to think themſelves lawleſs, and exemoted from the bonds of other men, yet it is known and viſible, that they remain men ſtill, and ſo God will at laſt make them known to themſelves, Pſal. 9. 20 Ezek. 28, 6, 9. Iſa. 2. 22. & 31. 3.

neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he] He cannot implead God, nor enter an action or ſuit in judgment with him, he cannot call him to an accompt, or judge him; he may not think by contending with God, to alter or break through the order of his providence or decrees, Iſa. 45. 9. Job 9. 2, 3. 12 Jer. 50. 44. Job 4. 17. Rom. 9. 20. Pſal. 51. 4. 1 Cor. 10. 22. Ezek. 22. 14. Pſal. 33. 10, 11. Job 34. 23.

V. 11. Seeing there be many things which increaſe vanity, what is man the better?] This is commonly underſtood as a further argument againſt inſatiable deſires of wealth, becauſe where there are many of them,their increaſe doth but increaſe vanity; that is the uſual concomitant of great abundance,more cares,more diſtractions, more feares,more troubles and imployments come along with them, and yet man is not a whit better than he was before; he was fed and clothed then, & he is no more now. Can he carry any of them away with him? can he find out any more excellency in them? will there any real advantage remain unto him more than his own portion, and comfortable accommodations by them? But I rather conceive theſe words to be a ſolemn concluſion of all the former diſcoveries of vanity in the creatures, and repetion of what he gave ſummarily before, Chap. 1. 3. it was there laid down as the Propoſition which he undertook to demonſtrate, and having demonſtrated it, it is here in the cloſe of the whole diſcourſe reſumed again, and the whole drawn together in one brief recapitulation; ſeeing there are thus many things, wiſdom, folly, pleaſures, honours crownes, riches, that encreaſe vanity, what is man the better in regard of ſolid happineſſe and contentment for any, or for all of them?

V. 12. For who knoweth what is good for man in this life?] Amongſt ſuch variety of things under the Sun which the heart of man is apt to be drawn unto, neither he himſelf nor any other is able certainly to inform him, which of all thoſe is beſt for him to enjoy and reap comfort from. Whether it be better for him to be rich or poor, in a high or low condition, in a private retirement, or in publick ſervice, ſome mens greatneſſe hath undone them, other mens meanneſs hath ſecured them, 2 Reg. 25. 9, 12. Some men had not been ſo wicked, if they had not been ſo learned; others had not been ſo vitious, if great wealth had not excited and been fuel to feed their luſts. Achitophel might have lived longer with leſſe wiſdom, and Nabal with leſſe wealth. No man can tell whether that which he ſnatcheth at, as the ſilly fiſh, with moſt greedineſſe, and greateſt expectation of contentment from it, may be temper'd with poyſon, or have a hook under it, and ſo be the occaſion of his greater miſery, Rom. 1. 22. 2 Pet. 2. 18, 19. Rom. 6. 21. Prov. 1. 13, 18, 19.

All the dayes of his vain life which he ſpendeth as a ſhadow] If he do by chance, rather than by election, happen upon that way and courſe which was beſt for him: yet his very life, the beſt of all outward bleſſings, is it ſelf but a very vanity and ſhadow. It is but a very little while before he muſt part with it, and all thoſe comforts which rendred it peaceable and cheerfull to him. A very elegant deſcription of the ſhortneſſe of mans life, all the number of the dayes of the life of his vanity, which he ſpendeth as a ſhadow: 1. He calleth them dayes, not years. 2. Dayes that may be numbred, which likewiſe intimateth fewneſſe of them, as Job 16. 22. Iſa. 10. 19 Pſal. 105. 12. Num. 9. 20. 3 A life of vanity; a very vain life. The ſubſtantive for the adjective; as Pſal. 31. 3. & 68. 31. Pſal. 140, 12. Rom. 7. 24 Epheſ. 4. 24. Phil. 3. 21. 4. A life ſpent like a ſhadow, that hath little of ſubſtance while it laſts, and doth preſently vaniſh away, Pſal. 39. 6. & 144. 4. Job 14. 2. Jam. 4. 14. Job 8. 9.

for who can tell a man what ſhall be after him under the Sun?] As a man can have little ſatisfaction by outward good things here in his own ſight and life time: ſo can he promiſe himſelf as little in name or family, when he is gone; becauſe he can by no meanes foreſee or foreknow future and contingent events, Chapter 2. 18, 19.

CHAP. VII.

THe Wiſe man having ſet forth many vanities of this life, and the great diſappointment which men meet with, who ſeek for happineſſe and ſatisfaction from them, and thereupon the vexation which naturally ariſeth from ſuch a diſappointment: and having interwoven ſome general remedies againſt theſe vanities, namely, the fear and worſhip of God, and the cheerful enjoyment of outward bleſſings: He here proceedeth to many other particular means of healing the vanities of this life, and procuring tranquility and peace to the mind of man in the midſt of them. Such are, 1. A good name, verſe 1. 2. A compoſed preparedneſſe of mind to entertain death, the chiefeſt outward evil, and conſequently to bear any other ſorrow, verſe 2, 3, 6. 3. Moderation and patience of ſpirit to bear with preſent evils, and to digeſt injuries, expecting the end and iſſue which God will give, verſe 7.——10. 4. Wiſdome to defend a mans ſelf againſt the vanity of riches, verſe 11, 12. 5. Acquieſcency in the government of all things by the wiſe providence of God, verſe 13, 15. 6. Contentation of heart in all eſtates, as well adverſity as proſperity, conſidering Gods wiſe and juſt attempering of them together for our good, verſe 14. 7. Prudent and pious moderation of our behaviour, ſo as that we may not by raſh zeal, or inordinate walking, expoſe our ſelves to danger and trouble, verſe 16, 17. 8. Reſolution and conſtancy in the fear of God, verſe 18. 9. Wiſdom of meekneſs, charity, and patience toward ſuch as offend, conſidering the general frailty of humane nature, and the experience and ſenſe of our own weakneſſe, verſe 19——22. 10. Contentment with ſuch a meaſure of wiſdom as is in this life attainable, and not to buſie and diſquiet our thoughts with things which are above us, verſe 23, 24. Now as before in the handling of humane vanities he did occaſionally intermix ſome remedies thereof: ſo here in handling the remedies of it, and the means to obtain tranquillity of mind, he doth here and there intermix ſome other vanities, which are great occaſions of vexation and unquietneſſe of the heart of man: one principal one, whereof he had very ſad experience, he doth here ſubjoyn, namely, the bitterneſſe of an enſnaring woman, verſe 25.——29.

Verſe 1. A Good name is better than precious oyntment] Or, A name is good before good oyntment. A name, for a good name, as a wife, for, a good wife, Prov. 18 22. By a good name, underſtand that which hath its foundation in an innocent, unblameable and profitable life, when a man hath reverence in the conſcience of others, 2 Cor. 4. 2. for the name of the wicked will rot, Prov. 10. 7. So to be a man of name, is meant an eminent perſon, renowned in his generation, Gen. 6. 4. 1 Chron. 5. 24. and names of men, Rev. 11. 3. & 3. 4. may ſeem to note ſpeciall perſons of honour and renown.

better than ſweet oyntment] So the name of Chriſt which ſignifieth his gratious doctrine, Acts 9. 14. is compared unto ſweet oyntment, Cant. 1. 3. called the ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, 2 Cor 2. 14, 15. Pretious Aromatical oyntments were things greatly in uſe and eſteem amongſt the Iſraelites, and a ſpecial part of their treaſures: appointed by God to anoint the holy veſſels of the Tabernacle, Exod. 30. 22——33. uſed in the conſecration of perſons to offices of honor and emminency, Exod. 28. 41. 1 Sam. 16. 13. Pſal. 89. 20 called therefore the oyl of gladneſſe, Heb. 1. 9. Iſa. 61. 3. uſed likewiſe in Feaſts, great entertainments and expreſſions of joy, Amos 6. 6. Eſter 2 12. Pſal. 23. 5. Luke 7. 46. Reckoned amongſt the ſpecial bleſſings of God and treaſures of that people, Pſalm. 92. 10. Job 29. 6. Deut. 33. 24. Prov. 21. 20. Iſaiah 39. 2. whence ſome would have it here taken ſynechdochically to ſignifie all kind of riches, before which Solomon doth here prefer a good name; as alſo Prov. 22. 1.

and the day of death, than the day of ones birth] Some underſtand here a note of ſimilitude to joyne the two clauſes together, As a good name is better than ſweet oyntment, ſo is the day of death than the day of birth. Others repeat the former clauſe in the latter unto ſuch a man who hath a good name, better is the day of death, than of birth. And the clauſes ſeem to have Cognation with one another: for the day of Birth is a time of feſtivity and rejoycing, and accordingly uſed to be celebrated, Geneſ. 40. 20. Mark. 6. 21, 22. in which kind of ſolemnities, they uſed to anoint themſelves with ſweet oyntments: as on the other ſide, in dayes of ſorrow, they abſtained from them, 2 Sam. 14. 2. Dan. 10. 23. On the other ſide, The day of Death removes a man wholly out of this world, and leaves nothing of him behind, but onely his Name and Memory, which the Lord threatned wicked men to blot out, and cauſe it to rot, Deut. 29. 20. & 32. 26. Prov. 10. 7. Job 18. 17. But the name of good men remains behind them, as the ſweet ſavour of a precious perfume, when the ſubſtance of the perfume it ſelf is conſumed with the fire: or as ſpices when they are broken and diſſolved, leave an excellent ſent behind them. And ſo the meaning is, That although the day of birth be a day of Feaſting and joy, and the day of death a day of ſorrow and mourning: yet unto a good man this is much better than the other, and the memoriall which he leaves behind him, is much ſweeter than that of ſpices or perfumes. If we take the latter clauſe alone, without connexion to the former, then they relate unto the many vanities and vexations which the life of man is expoſed unto; in which conſideration, That day which delivers a man from them, is better than that day which lets him into the poſſeſſion of them: for man is born unto much trouble and ſorrow, Job 5. 7. & 14. 1. but a godly mans death puts a period to all his ſins, to all his ſorrows, Rom. 7. 24. Rev. 14. 13. 2 Cor. 5. 6, 7, 8 Phil. 1. 23.

V. 2. It is better to go to the houſe of mourning, &c.] As to a good man, the day of his Death is better than the day of his birth, becauſe it puts an end unto all thoſe ſorrows and vanities which he was born unto: ſo for thoſe that remain alive, it is better to go to a funerall, the houſe of mourning, than to a feaſt, or a birth-day-ſolemnity, the houſe of jollity and rejoycing.

for that is the end of all men] Or, in the which is the end of all men. In which houſe of ſorrow, a man is minded of the common end of all men. A man ſeeth his own end in the end of another man, and is admoniſhed of his frailty and mortality, for it is the way of the whole earth, Joſh 23. 14. Heb. 9. 27.

and the living will lay it to heart] Or, will put it up, and faſten it to his heart; will be ſeriouſly and ſadly affected with it and have deep impreſſions thereby made upon his ſpirit, of the greatneſſe and power of God, who draweth away our breath, and we periſh, Pſal. 104. 29. and of his own vanity and baſeneſs, even in his beſt eſtate, Pſal. 39. 5 putting in the heart, noteth diligent attendance on a thing, σὺ δ' ἐνὶ φρέσι βάλλεο σῇσιν, Deut. 11 18. Iſa. 42. 25 Luke 21. 14. whereas feaſting and jollity is very likely to draw off the heart from the remembrace of God, Job 1.5. Deut.8.12—14. Iſa. 22. 13.Amos 6.3—6. Deut 32.15. Iſa.5 11,12.

V. 3. Sorrow is better than laughter] That ſorrow which ariſeth from the meditation of death, a ſad, a ſober, and compoſed temper of ſpirit, whereby a man is rendred capable of inſtruction, and ſenſible of ſerious things which concern his peace, is better, and doth a man much more good, than laughter and the jollity which belongeth unto feaſtings. The word ſignifieth anger, and ſo by ſome is the ſenſe rendred, that charitable and wholſom anger which reproveth men for their faults, and ſo maketh them ſorrowfull; is better than the flattery of Paraſites, which feedeth their fooliſh luſts with laughter and vain mirth; and ſo tendeth unto ruine.

for by the ſadneſſe of the countenance] Heb. by the ilneſſe or badneſſe of the countenance, Neh.2.2.badneſs of the heart, 1 Sam. 7.28. The heart is made better. Vain luſts and fooliſh, exorbitant light affections are check'd and ſuppreſſed; as the outward man is grieved, the inward man is amended, Prov.20.34.1 Cor.4.16,& 7.9,10. whereas on the other ſide, empty mirth doth diſſolve the heart, and let it out unto more vanity, Chap.2.2,3.Hoſ.4.11 Eſth.1.10.1 Sam, 25.36.

V. 4. The heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning] He proveth ſorrow to be be better, wholſomer for the ſoule than laughter, by the judgement and choice of wiſe men, and of fooles. That which wiſe men prefer, is indeed better than that which fooles make choyce of: but wiſe men prefer ſpectacles, places, occaſions of ſorrow; fools make choyce of the contrary: ergo that is better than this. Wiſe men conſider the end of things; and chooſe the moſt proper meanes unto the beſt ends: whereas fooles look onely on things preſent and before their eyes; By the houſe of mourning, we underſtand any place or object which occaſioneth mourning; ſo the grave is called domus ſeculi, the houſe of ages, or mans long home, Eccleſ. 12. 5. So, a trench is called a houſe of meaſures, 1 Reg. 18. 32. Iſaiah 3. 21.

The heart of the wiſe] When his body is elſewhere, yet his thoughts and heart are thinking on the evill day, which wicked men thruſt far from them, Amos 6. 3. So Job in proſperity did with a religious fear forecaſt evil, Job 3. 25. Neh. 2. 2—5. Pſal. 137.6.

but the heart of fooles is in the houſe of mirth] Though he may by poverty, buſineſſe, or many other diviſions be abſent in his body, yet his good will; he would have his ſhare in every merry meeting; his heart is upon pleaſures, and his love runs wholly that way, ſo that he is amazed and overwhelmed through unpreparedneſs of heart when any ſuddain evil overtakes him, 1 Pet. 4. 3, 4 2 Pet. 2. 13, 14. Houſes of joy we read of, Eſay 32.13 Here then we are taught to moderate our ſelves in regard of outward pleaſures, becauſe love of them is the character of a fool, and of an heart eſtranged from God, Job 21. 12, 13. Prov.21 17.1 Cor.7.30. 1 John 2. 15, 16.

V. 5. It is better to hear the rebuke of the wiſe, than for a man to hear the ſong of fooles] He inſtanceth in another cauſe of ſorrow, namely, the rebukes of wiſe and good men, which though they may ſad the heart of man for the preſent; yet they are much more wholſome and beneficiall, than the ſongs and flatteries of ungodly Paraſites, which ſooth men in their ſinnes, and feed the flame of their luſts and corruptions. It is better to hear, (i.) patiently, and obediently to liſten to the counſel and reproof of a prudent friend who doth ſeaſonably and faithfully diſcover his errours to him, than that a man ſhould hear the ſong of fooles Prov. 13. 18. & 15. 31. 32. & 27. 6. Pſalm. 141. 5. It is a token of a wiſe and teachable diſpoſition, to receive with meekneſs the words of reproof, as David did, not onely from Nathan a Prophet, 2 Sam.12.7—13 but from Abigail a woman, 1 Sam 25. 32 33. Heb. 13, 22. Prov.9 9 & 17 10. By the ſong of fooles, underſtand any flattering ſpeeches, or any merry and pleaſant diſcourſes being a Synechdoche, whereby all kind of Jeſts, and bewitching pleaſures are ſignified, Iſa,24. 8; 9. Gen. 31. 27.

V. 6. For as the crackling of thornes under a pot, ſo is the laughter of the fool:] The voice of thorns, ſo the noiſe of chariots, is called the voyce of chariots; and the noiſe that firre makes in ſtubble is called the voyce of a flame, Joel 2. 5.Ezek 1 24. Fooles are elegantly compared unto thorns, they are burdens to the place they live in, Gen, 3. 17, 18. They are intractable, he muſt be fenced which toucheth them, 2 Sam. 23.6 7. They are unprofitable, good for nothing but the fire, Heb.6 8. The laughter of theſe fools, that is, all thoſe flatteries, jeſts, vain, and frothy diſcourſes, mimicall and apiſh practiſes, whereby they beget laughter; and feed the delights of vain men like themſelves are compared to the noyſe of thorns burning under a pot; as theſe make a ſuddain blaze, and a great noiſe but do no good; preſently go out, and the meat is left as raw as when it was put in; in ſtipulis magnus ſine viribus Ignis Incaſſum furit: whereas a ſolemn fire in coales or great wood, boyleth the meat without any ſuch noiſe: ſo the effuſe mirth and jollity of fooles, (i.) of wicked men, though it may ſeem to promiſe more pleaſure and content, than the more ſad and ſevere converſation of ſerious men; yet that doth ſuddenly vaniſh without leaving any ſolid joy behind it; whereas the reproof of wiſe men ſinketh down into the heart, and helps to work out the ſcum and vanity which lay within it, Pſalm 58. 9. & 118. 12. and as the crackling of thorns to the ear: ſo the laughter and vain mirth of fooles to the heart of a wiſe man is wholly offenſive and unſavoury. Hereby ſeems likewiſe to be noted the aptneſſe of vain men to be caught with every light and empty pleaſure; as fire doth ſuddainly take in thorns, and paſſe thorow them, Exod. 22. 6.

V. 7. Surely oppreſſion maketh a wiſe man mad, &c.] This may be underſtood two different wayes: 1 That even wiſe men when they ſee innocence oppreſſed, and violence prevail inſtead of juſtice, or when they themſelves are unrighteouſly oppreſſed, are hereby much ſhaken and diſcompoſed, tempted to paſſion and indignation againſt ſo great diſorder, Pſalm 73 2, 3, 8, 13, 21. Prov. 23. 17. Hab. 1, 2, 3, 13, 14 2 Sam. 16. 9 and then the latter clauſe is thus to be taken, and it, namely oppreſſion, deſtroyeth the heart of a gift, (i.) An heart endowed and adorned with excellent gifts from above; which ſenſe the Chaldee Paraprafe favoureth: and many times, when two ſubſtantives come together, the latter is taken adjectively, as Pſalm 5. 6. a man of blood, (i.) a bloody man. Pſalm 140. 11. A man of tongue, (i.) an evil ſpeaker. Luke 4. 22. words of grace (i) gracious words. Epheſ. 4. 24. holineſſe of truth, (i.) true holineſſe: and in this ſenſe likewiſe doth the Septuagint, and the vulgar Latine render this clauſe, ἀπολλύει τὴν καρδίαν εὐτονίας αὐτοῦ. Perdet Robur Cordis Ejus. So by Cor munoris, they underſtand Cor munificum & liberale.

2. Oppreſſion, (i.) wealth gotten by oppreſſion, maketh a wiſe man mad When a wiſe man turneth oppreſſour, and ſeeth bribes and gifts come in apace he becometh mad in greedineſs to get more, or mad in violence againſt his poor neighbours, or mad in his underſtanding; his eye is blinded, his heart is infatuated and beſotted, he is bereft of his wonted wiſdom, ruining his family when he thinks to raiſe and to eſtabliſh it: and ſo gifts do deſtroy his heart, (i.) his underſtanding, Hoſ. 4 11. Deut. 16. 19. Exod. 23. 8. Either ſenſe will conſiſt well with the ſcope of the wiſe man in the whole context, which is to perſwade unto patience againſt fretfulneſſe, when oppreſſours grow rich, and run madding after gain, and to direct them to wait quietly and obſerve the end of ſuch men, (as David alſo directeth; Pſalm 37. 37, 38. & 73. 17.) and not to break forth into anger and madneſſe at the preſent diſorder which we conceive to be in theſe things.

V. 8. Better is the end of a thing, than the beginning, &c.] This maxime holds in many things. The beginnings are difficult and painfull, the end fruitfull, and rewards thoſe pains; as in the ſtudies of learning, in the wayes of vertue, in the bearing of afflictions, &c. Heb. 12. 11. On the other ſide, the beginnings of vice ſeem ſweet and pleaſant, but they end in bitterneſſe, like the role that was ſweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly. Rev. 10. 9. 10. 2. Sam. 2. 16. So in the buſineſſe, a man may ſuddenly enterprize ſome great work, and glory in the conceit of his abilities, who after comes off with ſhame, and is not able to finiſh it, for want of wiſdom to forecaſt events, Luke 13 28——32. 1 Reg. 20. 11. perſeverace is that which crowns and honours an enterprize, Matth. 10 22. Heb 3. 6. Rev 2. 26. Many begin in the ſpirit, who end in the fleſh, Gal. 3. 3. They uſe to ſay of the Devil, that he cannot change his feet. He can begin like a Saint, and transform himſelf into an angel of light: but he will ſtill end like himſelf. But though this be appliable many wayes, yet here the ſcope of the Wiſe man is to Arm us with moderation of ſpirit againſt the preſent and prevailing oppreſſions which we meet with. Although thou ſee much violence, and do thy ſelfe ſuffer much evil thereby, yet do not diſpond, nor give over waiting upon God, do not look onely on the preſent face of things: but patiently expect what iſſue he will give; go on in his way be not diſmayed nor affrighted from any good purpoſe; many times the end is comfortable, when the beginnings are troubleſome, and they who ſowed in teares, do reap in joy, Pſalm 126 5, 6, Pſalm 73.17. Jam 5.11. Heb.10. 36.37. Phil. 4. 5. Iſaiah 10. 12, 24. 25.

and the patient in ſpirit, than the proud in ſpirit] Long in ſpirit. That can long reſtrain and keep in anger or impatience. This is frequently in Scripture attributed unto God, Exod 34.6. Neh. 9 17. Pſal.145.8. and it is the evidence of his power, Num 14 17, 18. Nahum 1.3. and ſo it is of wiſdom and ſtrength in a man, Prov. 14. 29.& 16.32.

than the proud in ſpirit] The proper antitheſis had been, than the haſty, or ſhort in ſpirit, as the expreſſion is, Prov. 14 29, 17. Exod. 6.9 But his purpoſe is to ſhew, that patience is rooted in humility; the meaner eſteem men have of themſelves, the more willing they are to indure what God inflicts, and to wait his time for an iſſue out of trouble. Whereas pride and high-mindedneſſe makes men wilful, and impatient of any oppoſition, Prov. 13. 10 Therefore when God humbled David, we finde how ſtrong he was to bear the railing and curſing of Shimei, 2 Sam. 16. 11, 12. Hab. 2. 3, 4.

V. 9. Be not haſty in thy ſpirit to be angry] Do not fret at the oppreſſion and violence which thou ſeeſt in humane affairs; do not raſhly and haſtily give way to murmuring and impatience. So the Chaldee paraphraſe underſtandeth it of contumacy and frowardneſſe againſt God and his providence, when things go not as we would have them. Be not haſtily nor revengefully angry againſt rich oppreſſours, Pſalm 37. 1 Prov. 23. 17; 18. & 24, 19 Chap. 5. 2. Anger is naturally an haſty paſſion, and very apt to prevent reaſon. The Philoſopher compares it to a dog which barketh at a man before he obſerve whether it be his maſter, or a ſtranger, and to an haſty meſſengerr which runs away without his arrant. And therefore ſlowneſs and deliberation is neceſſary to keep it in, James 1. 19. Proverbs 19 11 & 15 18. Titus 1. 7. It being of it ſelfe very wilful, and haſty, Gen 49. 6. Hab. 1. 6. David was overtaken in this point in the caſe of Nabal, 1 Sam. 25. 21, 22. and the diſciples, whom our Saviour rebuketh for it, Luke 9, 54, 55.

for anger reſteth in the boſome of fools] A thing is ſaid to be in the boſome, when it is much loved, cheriſhed, delighted in, Deut. 13. 6 & 28. 56. John 1. 18. Ruth 4. 16. fools delight in anger. It reſteth, It is in its proper place, it never departeth from him, Is ever at hand, ready to enrage and enflame him. A wiſe man uſeth anger as Phyſick, in its proper time, but a fool uſeth it as his conſtant dyet. It is bound up in the heart of a fool, and as it were ſewed and ſealed up in it. It is an Inmate in a fool, it is but as a paſſenger through the heart of a wiſe man, it doth not lodge in it all night, Epheſ. 4. 26. therefore the Apoſtle exhorting unto perfect patience, directeth us to pray for wiſdom as the foundation of it, James 1. 4, 5.

V. 10. Say not thou, What is the cauſe that the former dayes were better than theſe] He doth not forbid us with godly ſorrow, and holy zeal to bewail the corruption of the dayes wherein we live, and to be ſenſible of the ſins or judgements which make them evil; for there is no queſtion but ſome ages are worſe than others, there were purer, and then darker and corrupter times of the Church, Gen, 6. 11. 12. Amos. 5 13. Epheſ. 5. 16, 2 Tim. 3, 1 —— 5. 2 Theſ. 2. 3. Luke 18. 8.

But 1. He condemneth our aptneſſe to paſſe ouer the good things which we enioy in our own age, and to looke only on that which pincheth us, to complaine of wrong, oppreſſion, iniuſtice now, as if former ages had not the like reaſons or other evils, which we are freed from, to complaine of as well as we; Iſrael had Gods preſence, and Manna in the wilderneſſe, and they value not that, becauſe they miſſe the onians they had in Egypt, Exod. 16, 3. Num. 11. 4 5, 6. & 14. 1 —— 4.

2. He teacheth us not to charge the evils we lye under unto the times, but to our ſinnes, which make the times evil: for that is all one, as if a man ſhould think he ſhould be better, if he were removed into another chamber, or did lye on another couch. He that is wicked now, would have been ſo in the beſt of times, Matth. 23. 30. Thou canſt not change the world, thy work is to mend thy ſelf: a bryar is but a bryar, though it be in paradiſe; and a lilly is a lilly, though it grow in a wilderneſſe.

3. According to the ſcope of the place his principal purpoſe is, to reprove that repining diſpoſition which is in us, whereby we are apt to murmur at the providence of God, becauſe he hath given us our lot in an age of trouble, when violence haply and oppreſſion prevaileth: and ſo fooliſhly to charge God, as if humane affairs were not ballanced with ſo equall and indifferent a diſtribution of bleſſings as they ought to be; do not, ſaith he, queſtion the Government of the world nor the wiſdom and righteouſneſſe of God therein; Leave Gods work unto him, to whom it belongeth to temper and order the ſeveral ages of the world in what manner it pleaſeth him. Attend thou on thine own duty, be contented with the preſent condition of the times, ſtudy how to ſerve God in thy generation; leave not thy ſtation, depart not from thy rank, afflict not thy ſelf with the things which thou canſt not help, walk with God, as Noah did in the worſt of times, Gen. 6. 9. and let the badneſs of the age thou liveſt in, make thee more wiſe, more circumſpect, more humble, as fire burnes in hotteſt the coldeſt weather.

otherwiſe thou doſt not wiſely; inquire concerning this matter] This is a μείωσις, the meaning is. It is a fooliſh arrogancy to complain of the providence of God, as if thou wert wiſe enough to teach him, or to mend his works, Job 38. 2, 3. Job 21. 22.

V. 11. Wiſdom is good with an inheritance: and by it, &c.] This is to be underſtood comparatively, for wiſdom is good of it ſelf alone but it is better, more uſefull and beneficial to a mans ſelf and others, when it meets with an inheritance: As the Rabbines ſay, Bona eſt lex cum viâ terra, Wiſdom without wealth is deſpiſed, Chap 9. 15. and wealth without wiſdom is a ſnare, a temptation, fuel of luſt, pride, vanity, luxury, oppreſſion, 1 Tim. 6. 9. Pſal. 49. 6. Prov. 28. 11. Therefore as life, expreſſed here by ſeeing of the Sun, is uncomfortable without the meanes and ſupports of life, an inheritance to maintain it: So an inheritance is unweildly and harmful without wiſdom to order it. But wealth in the hand of a wiſe and good man, is an excellent inſtrument, whereby he is enabled to do much good, Iſa. 23. 18. Prov. 3. 9. Iſa. 60. 6, 9. Luke 16. 9. 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19. Here we ſee, 1. It is not having of wealth, but right uſing of it, which makes life comfortable; for a fool may have it. 2. That wealth without wiſdom to uſe it aright, is not good unto the owner of it. 3. That it is an eſpecial skil and wiſdom, ſo to manage an eſtate, as that it may be for good to our ſelves and others. 4. That wealth is a great ornament unto wiſdom, Proverbs. 14 24. and a great inſtrument unto the works thereof: Therefore they uſe to ſay, that wealth is the ſinews of action. 5. That it is happier for a wiſe man to have an inheritance, an eſtate derived on him from his anceſtors, than to be put to get wealth by his own labour & induſtry: res non parta labore, ſed relicta.

and by it there is profit to them that ſee the Sun] That is, by wiſdom with an inheritance, there is more profit, or more excellent advantage to men in this life, than if they were ſeparated. Or, though wiſdom with an inheritance be good, yet the fruit of wiſdom is more parmanent, and more excellent, and beneficial, than the profit of an inheritance.

V. 12. For wiſdom is a defence, and money is a defence] In the Original the words goe thus, For in the ſhadow of wiſdom, and in the ſhadow of money. But the excellency of knowlede, &c.] Where there is either an ellipſis of ſome Verb, ſupplied by the Chaldee verſion; as a man is preſerved in the ſhadow of wiſdom, ſo is he preſerved in the ſhadow of money. And by others, A man reſteth, and is ſheltred againſt danger under the ſhadow of wiſdom, and of money, Or elſe an hypallage, in the ſhadow of wiſdom, that is, in wiſdom there is a ſhadow. The doubling of the prefix Beth, noteth the proportion of the one, and the other, in that which is in common affirmed of them; as the one is a ſhadow, ſo is the other. And ſo the vulgar Latin rendreth it, As wiſdom defendeth, ſo money defendeth. Which kind of propertion is commonly expreſſed by a double Caph; as Iſa. 24. 2. Or laſtly, the Prepoſition ב may here from a Nominative caſe; as Pſal. 55. 18. Hoſ. 13. 9. and in other places, as ſome learned men have obſerved. A ſhadow, (i.) a Defence by a metaphor borrowed from the ſhelter, which in thoſe hot countries men received under trees from the ſcorching of the Sun, Job 7. 2. Iſa. 25. 4. & 30. 2, 3, Pſal. 121. 5, 6. Numb. 14. 9. Jon. 4. 6, 8. Wiſdom is thus a refreſhing defence from oppreſſion and danger, Prov. 3. 18. Eccleſ. 9. 15. Acts 23. 6 —— 9. And money is a defence; it will arm, it will ranſom and buy a man out of danger, Prov. 13. 8 & 10. 15. & 19. 4.

but the excellencie of wiſdow is, that wiſdom giveth life to them that have it] They both defend, and therefore both together are very profitable; but of the two, wiſdom is the moſt excellent; he meaneth ſpiritual wiſdom, joyned with the fear of God which is the beginning of it, for this giveth life, Prov. 3. 16. & 9. 11. which riches cannot do Pſal. 39. 5, 6. & 49. 16 —— 19. Prov 11 4. Rich Nabal dyed with ſorrow, when wiſe Abigal ſaved the life of the family, 1 Sam. 25. 33, 37, 38. Therefore wiſdom is better than wealth, Prov. 8. 11. & 16. 16. & 4; 5 —— 10. Many times a mans wealth ſhortneth his dayes, either by his own luxurious and inordinate uſe of them, or by expoſing him to the cruelty of theeves and murderers. But a mans wiſdom will fence him againſt ſuch dangers; or at leaſt will quiet and comfort him under them, that he ſhall not ſink nor deſpond.

V. 13. Conſider the work of God: for who, &c.] He ſeemeth to have preſcribed wiſdom, with an inheritance, or unqueſtionable eſtate, to be the beſt remedies againſt oppreſſiion, violence, and thoſe other evils, which in a bad age we are apt to complain of: But becauſe ſuch may be the badneſſe of the times, and ſo prevalent the injuries and corruptions thereof, as that neither wealth nor wiſdom can defend a man againſt them: He here therefore directeth to another act of wiſdom, namely, to look above the creatures, and all ſecond cauſes, unto the righteous hand and irreſiſtible providence of God in them all; and where wiſdom cannot mend our condition, nor make the times, or the men thereof, or our affairs therein, ſo right and orderly as we would have them, there to let it, at the leaſt, teach us contentment, ſilence, and an humble acquiſency in the good pleaſure of the Lord. Many things there are, which no humane wiſdom can rectifie. In a publique Peſtilence or Famine, no ability of man can purge the air, or open the windows of heaven to ſupply us. In a ſhipwrack, no wiſdom of man can rebuke the winds and ſeas and command a calm. But in all ſuch caſes, wiſdom muſt teach us to ſubmit to God, and to wait upon him.

See the work of God] (i.) Diligently view and take notice, in the courſe of the world, of Gods over-ruling providence. The Scripture commonly uſeth words of external ſenſes, to expreſs the actions of the ſoul within, Chap. 2. 24. & 3. 10.

the work of God] Namely, his righteous government of the world; when thou art apt to complain of the times, and the oppreſſions therein, then remember, how crooked ſoever things are, it is God that hath ordered and appointed all things; and it is vain for thee to think, that by thy ſollicitude or anxiety, thou canſt rectifie every thing which thou art apt to complain of; for the dercees of God are unalterable, like mountains of braſs which connot be moved, Zach. 6. 1. Chap. 1. 15 Therefore make that light by patience, which thou canſt not correct.

for who can make that ſtraight, which he hath made crooked?] This ſhews the unalterableneſs of Gods order, which he in his providence hath placed things in, It may be underſtood, 1. In the courſe of nature, Be not angry, nor fretful againſt Gods work, in unſeaſonablneſſe of winds or weather, in loſſes by ſea or land in ſickneſſes or infirmities, or deformities, which God bringeth upon thee or thine; nor at the miſcarriage of any means, or weakneſſe of any endeavours thou uſeſt to rectifie theſe things. This ſin was the fault of Iſrael in the wilderneſſe, they murmured at things which they could not mend, Exod. 17. 2, 3. Numb. 11. 4, 5, 6. 2 Reg. 6. 33. on. 4. 8, 9. 2. In Civil policy, and the managing of humane ſocieties; If thou ſee great concuſſions in States, depopulating of Countries, tranſlating of Kingdoms, plucking down and rooting up, the ſword devouring as it pleaſeth; wonder not murmur not, but ſeriouſly conſider, that God hath an over-ruling providence therein, and whatever elſe diſpleaſeth thee, yet reſt ſilent and contented with what he doth, Job 9. 5 — 13. Job 12. 14 — 24. Pſal. 75. 6, 7. Iſa. 2. 10 - - 19. Dan. 2. 11. Jer. 18. 6 — 10. & 47. 6, 7. Ezek. 14. 17. 3. In the ſins and prevailing wickedneſſe of men in any kind, when thou ſeeſt men incorrigible in wickedneſſe, ſo crooked, that no means will reclaim or rectifie them; conſider the work of Gods moſt righteous judgement in hardning whom he will; and remember that God is ſo holy that he would not ſuffer ſin to prevail, if he were not alſo ſo wiſe and powerful as to order it to his own glory, and that no wickedneſſe of man ſhall proceed further, than to execute what his predeterminate counſel hath appointed, and that the remainder of it he will reſtrain, Rom. 9. 18. 1 Sam. 2. 25. Gen. 50. 20. Exod. 7. 3, 4. 2 Theſſ. 2. 11, 12. Act. 4. 28. Rom. 11. 8. Pſal. 76. 10.

V. 14. In the day of proſperity be joyful, but in the day of adverſity conſider] In the day of good be thou in good. Or, Be thou good; That is, joyful, and cheerful. The prefix ב, ſometimes denoting a Nominative Caſe, as ſome Learned have obſerved. Or, it may note a fulneſſe of joy; Be thou very joyful: as the like phraſe ſeems to import, Exod. 32. 22. 1 Joh 5. 19. Joh. 9 34. Mark. 5. 2, 25. Pſal. 29. 4. & 33. 4. When God gives thee proſperity, do thou enjoy it with a cheerful and a thankful heart.

but in the day of adverſity, or, in the day of evil conſider, or, ſee] Times of trouble and affliction are called evil dayes, Amos 5. 13. Eph. 5. 16. Eccl. 12. 1. Conſider; he doth not ſay, Be thou in evil, or do thou droop and languiſh under thine affliction; but conſider the righteous providence of God, behave thy ſelf wiſely, and ſutably to his viſitation; ſee from what hand it comes, to what iſſue it tends; be not fretful; uſe not ſinful means to extricate thy ſelf out of trouble; look on it as the work of God, which though it ſeems crooked unto thee, yet thou canſt not make ſtraight, verſe 13. nor by murmuring, or wreſtling, mend thy ſelf. Therefore in the day of evil, ſee to thy ſelf, take heed of any undecent and unbeſeeming behaviour of heart; ſo much the word ſeeing ſometimes doth import, Mark 12. 38. & 13. 9. 1 Cor. 0. 12. as alſo ſerious obſerving of what is propoſed unto us, 1 Sam. 24. 11. and accurate perpending and attendance upon it that we may learn ſomething by it. So ſhould we behave our ſelves in the time of trouble, Mic. 6. 9. Pſal. 94. 12. & 119. 71. Iſa. 26. 11. & 42. 25.

God alſo hath ſet the one over againſt the other] Hath ſo ordered and tempered the life of man, that good and evil ſhould be, as it were, inter-woven with one another, that the viciſſitude of them ſhould take off the heart, either from ſurfeiting on proſperity, or deſponding in adverſity; as God hath ſet Winter and Summer, Day and Night, over againſt one another, Gen. 8. 22. Pſal 74. 16, 17 ſo good and evil in the life of man, Lam. 3. 38. Iſa 45. 7. that in proſperity, a man might not ſay, He ſhall never be moved; nor in adverſity, He ſhall never be delivered; but that in the one, he might learn moderation; and in the the other, might exerciſe faith and hope, and might thankfully receive both good and evil at Gods hand, Job 1. 21. & 2. 10. Habet has vices conditio mortalium, ut adverſa ex ſecundis, ex adverſis ſecunda naſcantur. As in a curious and well proportioned building, one ſide doth anſwer unto that which is over-right it, Ezek. 40. 21, as in a ballance, the weight in the one ſide, doth poiſe and anſwer to the wares in the other; ſo doth God meaſure forth good and evil in the lives of men, and proportion them to one another, ſo as may be beſt fitted for human frailty, and may moſt conduce unto the ſpiritual good of his ſervants, 1 Cor. 10. 13. Pſal. 90. 15. & 103. 9 14. 2 Cor. 1. 4, 5, 9, 10. Iſa. 57. 16 — 18.

to the end that man ſhould find nothing after him] Or, To the end, that man ſhould not be able to find out, or to foreſee any thing that is to befal him afterwards; that it being impoſſible for him, by his providence or prudence, to prevent that order and viciſſitude of events, which God hath fore-ordained, he may thereupon reſolve patiently to ſubmit to the will of the Lord, (which muſt obtain notwithſtanding all our unquietneſs) and to adore the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, who as he doth by his Soveragin authority, whatſoever he pleaſeth both in heaven and earth: ſo doth he by his admirable wiſdom, and Fatherly goodneſſe, ſo diſpoſe of things, and ſo temper them together for the good of his ſervants, that none, who comes after him, can mend his work, be able to order things better to his own advantage, than God hath done; and hereupon ſince no man can find out any thing ſuperfluous, any thing defective, any thing irregular in the work of God, any thing, which if he had been conſulted, might have been better done, every man therefore ought to take heed of fretting or complaining, or finding fault with the providence of God towards him, and believe, that what the Lord doth, is beſt done and accordingly acquieſce in it, and with ſilence and ſubmiſſion yield unto it, 1 Sam. 3. 18. 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26. & 16. 10 Pſal. 39 9. Acts 11. 17, 18. Iſa. 39. 8. Rom. 8. 28. Job 9 12, 13, 14, 15, 32. Mic. 7 9 Lam. 3. 26 — 39. Job 40. 4.

V. 15. All things have I ſeen in the dayes of my vanity, &c.] He confirmeth the former doctrine of Gods dark and wonderful providence, by his own obſervation and experience. All theſe things have I obſerved in my vain and ſhort life, Chap. 6. 12.

there is a juſt man that periſheth in his righteouſneſſe] Is oppreſſed and ruined, being innocent; or, for his righteouſneſſe; as Naboth, 1 Reg. 21. Hab. 1. 13. In, ſometimes is as much as for; as Gen. 29. 18. Hoſ. 12. 13. Gen. 18. 28. Jon. 1. 14. Matth. 6. 7. Acts 7. 29.

and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life] Lives impunely in a wicked way without controle, and that many times, becauſe he is wicked, Job 21. 7. Jer. 12. 1, 2. The Lord hereby teaching us, that there is a day to come wherein he hath appointed to judge the world in righteouſneſſe, called the day of the revelation of his righteous judgements, Acts 17. 31. Rom. 2. 5. He is moſt juſt and righteous now in all his wayes of providence, but many times in them he hideth himſelf, Iſai. 45. 15. that he may exerciſe the faith and patience of his ſervants, and that the perdition of wicked men at the laſt, may by his long-ſuffering and patience towards them, be the more conſpicuous.

V. 16. Be not righteous overmuch] Some would have this ſpoken in the name, and according to the judgement of carnal Reaſon, as a politick precept unto neutrality and indifferency in good courſes, ſeeing piety and righteouſneſſe doth ſo often expoſe men unto danger, be not therefore over-forward and religious, over-wiſe and ſcrupulous; be not ſo inflexible upon grounds of conſcience, remit a little of thy ſtrictneſſe, and accommodate thy ſelf to the exigence of times and circumſtances, ſlacken thy hand, ſtrike ſail, looſen the rudder bonds in a tempeſt. Why ſhouldſt thou unneceſſarily expoſe thy ſelf unto danger? But I rather conceive that the name of the mean is here given to the extream, for a man may many times do a thing conſcienciouſly, and upon an opinion of duty, and thereby involve himſelf in much trouble and danger, when indeed there was no neceſſity ſo to do, 1 Sam. 15. 21. 2 Sam. 21. 1, 2. Joh. 13. 8. Rom. 10 2, 3. Phil. 3 6. Act. 26 9. Joh. 16. 2. Col. 2. 18. 1 Tim. 5. 23. and in this ſenſe the meaning is, be not righteous overmuch, be not too much bent on a thing, juſt in thine own opinion but temper thy zeal with godly wiſdom, adviſe with others, lean not on thine own underſtanding; make not thy ſelf over-wiſe, as if thine own private judgement were ground enough to regulate all thy behaviours by, flatter not thy ſelf in any opinionative confidence of thine own ability to judge of all that is fit to be done, but think ſoberly of thy ſelf, Rom. 12. 3. The more humble thou art, the more wary and circumſpect thou wilt be, and the more wary, the more ſafe. Some apply this againſt too much rigor and ſeverity in cenſuring of men for unjuſt, when we ſee them periſh, or for righteous when we ſee them proſper, grounded upon the doctrine of the former verſe. But I rather take it for a Caution and direction to moderate our zeal with prudence leaſt it bring upon us the forementioned danger, Matth. 10. 16. It was the commendation of Agricola in Tacitus, Retinuit, quod eſt difficillimum, ex ſapientia modum. Quiſquis plus juſto non ſapit, ille ſapit.

V. 17. Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou fooliſh, &c.] Though there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedneſſe, do not thou thereupon take courage to let looſe the reines to all luſt, or to make the impunity of others an encouragement to any exceſſe of wickedneſſe in thy ſelf, for this is folly and madneſſe to run againſt a rock, becauſe ſome one or other hath eſcaped ſhipwrack. He doth not here allow any degree of wickedneſſe, but becauſe in many things we ſin all, and no man by his greateſt vigilancy can preſerve himſelf wholly from miſcarriage; therefore he warneth us to beware above all, of breaking forth into preſumptuous ſins, and ſuperfluity of naughtineſſe, Jam. 1. 21. Exceſſe and profuſeneſſe of evil, 1 Pet. 4. 3. greedineſſe of luſt, Eph. 4. 19. Jer. 6 7. & 2. 23, 24. & 8. 6. Hoſ. 4. 2. Mic. 7. 3.

why ſhouldeſt thou die before thy time?] Why ſhouldeſt thou by exceſſe of ſin conſume thy body, waſte thy ſtrength, caſt thy ſelf into the danger of civil juſtice, or under the curſe threatned againſt deſperate ſinners, Pſal. 55. 23. Prov. 10. 27. Job 15. 32.

V. 18. It is good that thou ſhouldeſt take hold of this, &c.] Take hold, that is, firmly and conſtantly keep to it, and never let it go, Iſa. 56 4. Job 17. 9 Prov. 4. 13.

of this] Meaning either that which he ſpeaks of in the preſent verſe, the fear of God, whereby the heart will be preſerved from vitious and imprudent extreams, and the dangers enſuing thereupon. Or elſe, the mediocrity he before ſpake of, it is good that thou hold faſt this counſel, to follow the middle and ſafe way, ſincerely keeping unto duty, and yet wiſely declining danger, and then the clauſes [of this] and [from this] muſt relate unto the two former precepts; it is good that thou take hold of this; namely that thou be not over-much wicked, and withall; that thou withdraw not thine hand from that,namely, that thou be not righteous overmuch.

for he that feareth God ſhall come forth of them all] Of all thoſe dangers, which extreams are likely to draw men into. He that ordereth his wayes in the fear of God, turneth aſide neither to the right hand, nor to the left, but doth obſerve one precept, as that he departeth not from another, ſhall thereby be preſerved from the dangers which lye on either hand, Pſal. 34. 9 — 16. ſhall have comfort in trouble, and deliverance out of it; for the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, he doth teach them how they may walk without offence, Pſal. 25. 12, 14. Job 22. 28. Pſal. 32. 7, 8.

V. 19. Wiſdom ſtrengtheneth the wiſe, more than ten mighty men that are in the City] By wiſdom he meaneth that wiſdom which he adviſed in the three preceding verſes, that fear of God, whereby men are taught to keep an holy moderation, and to avoid all unneceſſary and imprudent extreams in evil times, this wiſdom will keep a man from the dangers mentioned, verſ. 15. more than ten, that is, many mighty men, or principal Commanders can preſerve a City. A godly man, who hath God for his friend, and his Angels pitching their tents about him is thereby much ſafer from dangers, than a City is by the power of many Dynaſtæ or Potentates who are intruſted with the defence of it, 2 Reg. 6. 16. Eccl. 9. 16. Iſa. 8. 10. 2 Sam. 20. 16 — 22. Prov. 24. 3, 4, 5. Zach. 2. 5. Pſal. 34. 7. Prov. 3. 21 — 26. & 4. 12, 13.

V. 20. for there is not a juſt man upon earth, that doth good and ſinneth not] Though ſome conceive theſe words to have no relation or connexion to the words going before, or following after, yet they ſeem to have a very fair aſpect both wayes. 1. To the former words; there is no man ſo juſt, but he will ſometimes be overtaken with ſin,which will eaſily expoſe him unto danger,if he have not ſpiritual wiſdom to behave himſelf, in a fair accommodation towards others. 2. To the following words,there is no man ſo juſt, who doth not ſometimes fall into ſin, and therefore he ought to bear with the errors and faillings of others. The common corruption of the beſt men requireth of them, both wiſdom towards themſelves to prevent danger, and charity towards their brethren to forgive offences: wiſdom towards themſelves, that they give not occaſion to any to reproach and ſpeak evil of the wayes of God, Col. 4. 5, 6. 1 Theſſ. 4. 11, 12 Eph. 5. 13, 16. 2 Cor 11. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 12, 15, 16. Charity towards others,when they are overtaken with a fault, as conſidering themſelves, who are, without Gods continued aſſiſtance, equally obnoxious to the ſame miſcarriages,Gal. 6. 1. Col. 3. 13.

not a juſt man upon earth] For the Saints in heaven are made perfect, they ſin no more, Heb. 12. 23. The words in their abſolute ſenſe are a full teſtimony of the imperfection of our inherent Righteouſneſſe in this Life, and that even juſtified perſons come very ſhort of that exact and perfect obedience, which the Law requireth, Pſal. 103. 3. 4. & 143. 2. 1 Reg. 8. 46. Iſa. 64. 6. Prov. 20. 9. 1 Joh. 1. 8, 10. Rom. 7. 14 — 23.

V. 21. Alſo take no heed unto all words that are ſpoken, leſt thou hear they ſervant curſe thee.] Set not thine heart upon all words that men ſpeak, or all things that they do unto thee; ſet not thine heart over-curiouſly to know them: when thou doſt know them, lay them not to heart, be not troubled at them, do not ſet thy ſelf to revenge them,let them not diſquiet thy mind,ſee them and ſee them not, 1 Sam. 9. 20. 2 Sam. 13. 20. 1 Sam. 25. 25. & 1 Sam. 10. 27. Prov. 19. 11. & 20. 3. It is a great point of wiſdom to diſſemble injuries, to connive at them, to take no notice of them, to paſſe them by with meekneſſe, and neglect, 2 Sam. 16. 10, 11. This meekneſſe he requireth to be ſhewed even towards mean and abject perſons, or towards the pooreſt ſervant in a mans family, who doth ſometimes, it may be, through our own provocation, utter ſome hard and undutiful ſpeeches againſt us, Joh 31. 13, 14.

V. 22. for oftentimes alſo thine own heart knoweth, that thou thy ſelf likewiſe haſt curſed others] The order of the words ſeems to be inverted; for the meaning is, thou art conſcious to thy ſelf that thou haſt oftentimes curſed or ſpoken evil of others. The conſideration of our own frequent paſſions and infirmities, ſhould move us patiently to ſuffer, and willingly to pardon the overſights of our brethren, Gal. 6. 1. Tit. 3. 3 Jam. 3. 1, 2. Matth. 7. 1 — 5. The more ſenſible any man is of ſin in himſelf, the more meek and charitable he will be towards others. Pride is the ground of contention and ſenſoriouſneſſe, Prov. 13. 10.

V. 23. All this have I proved by wiſdom: I ſaid I will be wiſe, but it was far from me.] He profeſſeth the truth of all which he had before taught, that wiſdom is an excellent protection to a righteous man againſt his own corruptions, and dangers enſuing thereupon, and confirmeth it by his own experience and tryal, according to that great wiſdom which God had given him. Yet withal, he acknowledgeth how ſhort he came of that perfection in wiſdom, which he promiſed himſelf by the diligent uſe of means to attain unto, profeſſing the great difficulty he found therein: 1. He was endued with the Spirit of God, and with his fear, which is ever accompanied with ſpiritual wiſdom, Pſal 119. 99, 100. 2. He had perſonal and extraordinary promiſe of wiſdom above any other men, 1 Reg. 3. 12. 3. He had uſed all the means to increaſe this excellent grace of God in himſelf; 1. He did very highly prize it, Prov. 3. 13 — 26. & 8. 11, 12. 2. He had the benefit of a Religious education, and his fathers inſtructions to quicken him in it, Prov. 4. 4 — 13. 3. He ſet his heart wholly upon it, that,according to the property of wiſe men, he might be yet wiſer, and get more knowledge, Prov. 9. 9. & 10. 14. Eccleſ. 1. 13. 4. He prayed earneſtly unto God for it, (which is an excellent means to get wiſdom, Jam. 1. 5. Eph. 1. 17. Col. 1. 9.) 2 Chron. 1. 10. 5. He had humility, and a due ſenſe of his want of wiſdom,(which alſo is a fit diſpoſition of heart to be taught of God, 1 Cor. 3. 18. & 8. 2. Pſal. 25. 9. Matth. 11. 25.) 1 Reg. 3. 7. 6. He had all outward furtherances and accommodations towards the getting of it, wealth, peace, power, authority, to call in all the aſſiſtances which might be uſeful unto him in it, Eccl. 2. 9, 10. 7. He had an extraordinary ſtock of infuſed wiſdom to begin withal, which he greatly improved by long and accurate experience, 1 Reg. 4. 30. Eccl. 1. 16. And yet after all this he profeſſeth, That though he ſaid he would be wiſe, Though the purpoſe of his heart was wholly ſet upon it,yet he found that it was far from him. Teaching us thereby, 1. The unſearchable deepneſſe and diſtance of wiſdom in its whole wideneſſe from the nobleſt and moſt ſublime underſtanding of man, Job 28. 12 — 21. & 37. 15. — 23. & 38. per totum, Rom. 11. 33, 34. 2. That the moſt perfect Saints are the moſt ſenſible of their imperfection; as the more delicate the ſenſes are, the more ſharply are they affected with what offends them, Rom. 7. 14 — 24. & 12. 3. 1 Cor. 15. 9, 10. & 13. 9, 10. 3. That it is the nature of ſpiritual wiſdom to diſcover ſpiritual wants, and the more the ſoul knows of God, the greater doth it diſcern and bewail its diſtance from him; as things neereſt the Center make moſt haſte unto it, Exod. 33. 11, 18.

V. 24. That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?] Or, that which hath been, is far off and exceeding deep: the word is doubled, to note the ſuparlative degree, as Prov. 20. 14. He ſheweth the cauſe why he was far from wiſdom, becauſe the works of God, whether of Creation, Redemption, or Providence, are very profound, abſtruſe, and myſterious, greatly diſtant from the eye, and beyond the comprehenſion of the weak and narrow reaſon of man, Prov. 2. 4 Job 11. 6 — 10. Pſal. 139. 6.

V. 25. I applyed mine heart to know, and to ſearch, and to ſeek out wiſdom, &c.] Or, I and my heart turned every way, left no means unattempted, exactly to diſcover wiſdom, &c.] The uſing of many words unto one purpoſe, implyes the exquiſite and curious ſearch which Solomon made in this inquiry; as Deut. 13. 14. See Chap. 1. 13, 17. & 2. 3, 12. Solomon was not ſo much diſcouraged by the difficulty, as provoked by the excellency of wiſdom, and made no other uſe of the profoundneſſe and abſtruſeneſſe thereof, than to multiply his endeavours in ſearching after it.

to ſeek out wiſdom and the reaſon of things] The curious art and ſubtile contrivances of things: the ſame word is uſed, ver. 27, 29. Chap. 9. 10. 2 Chron. 26. 15. whereby we are taught in the diſquiſition of knowledge, eſpecially that which is ſpiritual, not to content our ſelves with a ſuperficial ſhew, but to get rooted and grounded principles, that we may be able with full aſſurance to give a reaſon of the hope which is in us, 1 Pet. 3. 15. and to have a diſtinct comprehenſion of the truth, that we may be rooted and fixed on it, Eph. 3. 16, 17, 18. & 4. 14. and give a clear and deliberate Judgement upon it.

I, and my heart] That is, I did heartily and ſeriouſly ſeek out. The copulative Vau, doth either import a prepoſition, I with my heart did ſearch, as 1 Sam. 14. 19. or a more clear explication; I, that is, my heart: ſo the learned conceive that copula many times to ſignifie as much as, That is, as Gen. 35. 22. 1 Chron. 21. 12. 2 Sam 17. 12. 1 Sam. 17. 40. & 28. 3.

And to know the wickedneſſe of folly, even of fooliſhneſſe and madneſs] Or, the fooliſhneſſe of madneſſe: as the Apoſtles expreſſion is, ἁμάρτωλος ἁμαρτία, a ſinning ſin, Rom. 7. 13. ſo here the Wiſe man expreſſeth the deſperate wickedneſs & folly of corrupt hearts: by wickedneſs of folly, and fooliſhneſs of madneſs, thereby ſignifying the vaſte and deep corruption and deceit which is in the heart of man. The knowledge whereof he did ſearch after, that he might be the better able to convince and to diſſect the conſciences of others, 1 Cor. 14. 24, 25. Heb. 4. 12. Ezek. 14. 5. Iſa. 49. 2. Pſal. 45. 5. Rev. 1. 16. onely his ſtudy is in this order; firſt he ſearcheth and ſeeketh out wiſdom, as an antidote againſt the danger of his ſecond ſtudies, to diſcover the wickedneſſe, folly, and madneſſe of ſenſual pleaſures. And therefore we ſhall obſerve, that in the particular wickedneſs which he ſpecifieth in the next verſe, namely, the inticements of a whoriſh woman, he doth often premiſe the Commendations of wiſdom, and the ſtudy of that, as an effectual prevention of that miſchief, Prov. 2. 10 — 19. & 5. 1, 2, 3. & 6. 6, 20 — 24. Prov. 7. 4, 5. & 9. 10 — 13.

V. 26. And I find more bitter than Death the woman whoſe heart is ſnares and nets, &c.] He ſheweth the diſcovery which he had made by his ſtudy to find out the wickedneſſe of folly, and fooliſhneſſe of madneſſe, by inſtancing in one particular vanity of the wiles and ſubtilties of harlots, which it was neceſſay for him to adde to the former catalogue of vanities, that he might give to the Church then, and leave a record for all poſterity to take notice of his ſpecial Repentance for thoſe groſſe miſcarriages which by that means he had been drawn unto. And here he gives, 1. The Character of an whoriſh woman, deſcribed, 1. By her ſubtilty. Her heart is ſnares and nets, her cunning devices to deceive & intangle ſenſual perſons, are as gins laid to catch ſilly creatures, who are enticed with the bait, but diſcern not the danger, See Prov. 2. 16. & 6. 24, 26. & 7. 5. & 9. 16, 17. & 22. 14. 2. By her power, her hands, wherewith ſhe catcheth, holdeth, embraceth him, are as ſtrong cords to hale ſimple fools as an oxe to the ſlaughter, Prov. 7. 13, 21, 22. Judg. 16. 15 — 19. 3. Here is the great danger of theſe nets and bands to the ſouls of men.

They are more bitter than death] More pernicious, and bring more heavy miſeries with them. We read of the bitterneſſe of death, 1 Sam. 15. 32. and of a worſe bitterneſſe, the end of a ſtrange woman is bitter as wormwood, and her ſteps take hold on hell, Prov. 5. 4, 5. Death may be ſweetned and ſanctified, made a welcome and a deſireable thing to a believer, 1 Cor. 15. 55. Phil. 1. 23. Luke 2. 29, 30. But the bitterneſſe of hell is incureable; death may be honourable, to die in a good cauſe, in a good old age, to go to the grave in peace, lamented, deſired, with the ſweet ſavour of an holy life, and many good works to follow one, Rev. 14. 13. Phil. 1. 21. Pſal. 116. 16. But to conſume and putrifie alive, under a tabes of impure luſts, to periſh, as Tiberius did at Capreæ, quotidie perire me ſentio, to ſhipwarck a mans honour, ruine his eſtate, ſhorten his years, conſume his fleſh, put a hell into his conſcience, to bury his name, his ſubſtance, his ſoul, his carkaſſe, in the boſom of an Harlot; this a bitterneſſe beyond that of death, Prov. 5. 9, 10, 11. & 6. 26, 33. & 9. 16, 17, 18.

whoſo pleaſeth God ſhall eſcape from her, but the ſinner ſhall be taken by her] Here is intimated the great wrath of God againſt this ſin. It is a ſin which he uſeth to give over reprobates, and thoſe whom he in ſpecial manner hateth, unto; a ſin which few repent of, to take hold of the paths of life again, Prov. 2. 19. & 22. 14. Amos 7. 17. Rom. 1. 24 — 28. Epheſ. 4. 18, 19. A man is not preſerved from the power of this temptation by his own wiſdom or ſtrength, but onely by the ſupernatural grace of God.

V. 27, 28. Behold, this I have found (ſaith the Preacher) &c.] This, which he had ſpoken of, verſe 26. or which followeth, verſe 28.

ſaith the Preacher] This is added, 1. To give credit from his wiſdom and experience to what he here affirms; eſpecially having made ſo diſtinct and accurate an inquiry, weighing and comparing one by one, to find out the account, and to come to a determinate and clear judgement in the caſe, and to make a certain concluſion. 2. To teſtifie to the Church his repentance. This have I found, ſaith the ſoul, which, by ſound repentance, is returned unto the Congregation of Saints, which was before enſnared in the nets and bands of ſeducing women, and that upon ſerious and ſad recollected thoughts, which he hath not yet given over, but doth inſiſt upon the ſame penitent inquiry ſtill.

one man amongſt a thouſand have I found, but a woman amongſt all thoſe have I not found] The meaning is not to condemn one ſexe rather than the other; (for all have ſinned and come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 23.) and Solomon had known good and wiſe women, as well as men, Prov. 18. 22. & 19. 14. Prov. 12. 4. & 31. 10 — 30. But he ſpeaketh here of his obſervation, according to his former ſenſual converſation with wanton women, which ſeems to be the reaſon of the number here mentioned: for Solomon had a thouſand wives and concubines all ſtrange women of the neighbour wicked nations, which turned away his heart from the Lord unto idols. Amongſt all theſe thouſand, Solomon had not found one good one, 1 Reg. 11. 1 — 9. Or the ſubtile counſels of one man, amongſt many, may more eaſily be diſcerned, than of any harlot, becauſe their flatteries and dalliances do ſteal away the heart, and put out the eys and judgement, and infatuate a man ſo, that he can look no further, than the preſent delights wherewith they do bewitch him, Hoſ. 4. 11. Judg. 16. 17 — 21. Prov. 7. 21, 22. & 5. 6.

V. 29. Lo, this onely have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have ſought out many inventions] This onely: He could not diſcover all the ſtreams of wickedneſſe and folly amongſt men: but the original and fountain of them all he doth diſcover, namely, the corruption of the heart of man by the fall; this he found, that their wickedneſſe was not from God, nor by creation, but from themſelves, and their willing entertainment of the temptation of the Serpent. Some more ſubtilly expound theſe words, as a confirmation of the former: God made Adam Right, and ſo he continued ſo long as he was alone: but when the woman was given unto him, ſhe tempted him, and then they ſought out many inventions. Becauſe the woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, 1 Tim. 2. 14. But here he ſpeaketh of both ſexes together, under the name of man, and ſheweth, that they were made without any of this ſinful and ſubtile wiſdom, after the image of God, endowed with divine wiſdom to diſcern the way unto true happineſſe, and with perfect ability to purſue the ſame, Gen. 1. 26. Col. 3. 10. But though he were made upright, yet he was as a creature, mutable, and ſo ſubject to be overcome by temptation, and accordingly he did eaſily admit of the temptation of Satan, and ſought out many inventions of his own; did not content himſelf with that way to happineſſe which God had preſcribed, but phancied to himſelf an higher perfection, and yeilded to follow thoſe new wayes unto bleſſedneſſe, which Satan and his own deceived heart, did ſuggeſt unto him, and ſo fell from his primitive honour, and became like the beaſts that periſh, and contracted a bottomleſſe and unſearchable depth of ſinful deceit, which none but God can throughly ſearch and diſcover, Jer. 17. 9. Iſa. 57. 10. Jer. 2. 23, 24. & 31. 22. By many inventions, he meaneth all theſe vain, though crooked counſels, and carnal ſhifts wherewith men do pacifie, palliate, excuſe, defend all their ſinful courſes, Pſal. 119. 133. Rom. 1. 21. 2 Cor. 10. 5. Gen. 6. 5. Ludovicus De Dieu tranſlateth the words thus, Ipſi autem quæſierunt cogitationes magnatum, They ſought out the inventions of mighty men, or of the Angels, who were not contented with their own ſtation, but forſook it, Jud. 1. 6. and ſo relateth to the temptation of the Serpent; Ye ſhall be like unto Gods, you ſhall be advanced into an nobler and more honourable condition, than now you are in, Gen. 3. 5. theſe thoughts being ſuggeſted by Satan, they ambitiouſly entertained, and ſo fell from their primitive perfection.

CHAP. VIII.

THe wiſe man proceedeth in this Chapter, to give further precepts touching tranquillity of life. And they are, 1. Practical prudence with the fear of God, which ſtamp a kind of majeſty and luſtre on the face of a man, and make him to be had in reverence of others, verſ. 1. 2. Obedience to Magiſtrates, without haſtily attempting, or obſtinately perſiſting in any rebellious deſign; it being in their power, as they pleaſe, to avenge themſelves upon us, verſ. 2, 3, 4, 5. 3. Preparedneſſe of heart to bear inevitable evils, by a prudent obſervation of times, and judging of what is in a concurrence, of ſuch and ſuch circumſtances fitteſt to be done, and where things are dark and undiſcernable, to diſpoſe our hearts quietly to yeild to the providence of God, verſ. 6, 7, 8. 4. Becauſe it is a very great temptation unto diſpleaſedneſſe and impatiency of ſpirit, when a man liveth under wicked Rulers, againſt whoſe cruelty, all a mans wiſdom and meekneſſe can hardly be ſecurity enough: He therefore, 1. Obſerveth the providence of God in this particular, verſ. 9, 10. 2. The reaſon of that inſolence and exceſſe of evil in the lives of ſuch men, verſ. 11. 3. The grounds of comfort unto good men in this temptation, and of terroure and reſtraint upon evil men, notwithſtanding their preſent power and proſperity, verſ. 12, 13. Laying down a general propoſition concerning Gods providence in the affairs of this life, whereunto good men ſhould ſubmit, verſ. 14. 5. A cheerful enjoyment of outward and preſent bleſſings, without anxious ſollicitude for the future, verſ. 15. 6. A patient reſting in the providence of God, admiring his works, and adoring the unſearchableneſſe of his counſels; whoſe judgements, though they may be ſecret, yet they cannot be unrighteous, verſe 16. 17.

Verſ. 1. WHo is as the wiſe man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing?] He had ſet his heart to ſeek out wiſdom and folly, Chap. 7. 25. And having them handled the latter of theſe two, (as the uſe of the Scripture many times is, when two members, or branches of a ſubject are propoſed, to handle the latter firſt, and then to reſume the former. Behold how good and pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity, Pſal. 133. 1. Pleaſant as the precious oyntment of Aaron, verſ. 2. Good and profitable, as the dew of Hermon, verſ. 3. Iſa. 56. 3, 4, 6.) he doth here return to the former member, ſhewing the excellency of wiſdom, whereunto no other is to be compared. The prefix Caph may be underſtood, either as a note of ſimilitude, Who is as the wiſe man? (i.) None is to be compared to him: And ſo it may be underſtood as ſpoken of himſelf, Who hath attained a greater meaſure of wiſdom than I have? who yet with my utmoſt ſtudies have not been able to find out the perfection of it, Chap. 7. 23, 24. Or it may be taken [illegible], and ſo the ſenſe to be, that no man can attain unto perfect wiſdom, as verſe 16, 17.

and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing?] Here are two ſorts of wiſe men noted unto us: 1. He that is wiſe in himſelf. 2. He that is able to teach others wiſdom. Or, who is able truly to judge of all affairs, and rightly to diſcern what in every caſe is to be done, or left undone? Dan. 2. 4, 5, 7. & 4. 9, 16.

a mans wiſdom maketh his face to ſhine] This ſeemeth to allude to the brightneſſe of Moſes his face, Exod. 34. 29, 30, 35. the like whereunto we read of Stephen, Act. 6. 15. Hereby is noted, 1. That wiſdom doth beautifie a man with tranquillity of mind, and cheerfulneſſe of countenance, ſpem fronte ſerenat, Pſal. 4. 6, 7. Prov. 15. 13. & 17. 24. Pſal. 34. 5. 2. That it maketh his light of holineſſe to ſhine out unto others, Matth. 5. 16. Joh. 5. 35. Phil. 2. 15. 3. That it rendreth him reverend, venerable, amiable in the eyes of others, and doth conciliate ſpecial honour and favour unto him, in the hearts of thoſe that converſe with him, Job 29. 7 — 16. 4. That it illightneth his eyes, that he may more cleerly underſtand what he is to do, and to leave undone; the light of the Lord ſhineth on his wayes, Pſal. 25. 9. Job 22. 28. Pſal. 32. 8. 1 Joh. 2. 20.

and the boldneſſe, or, ſtrength of his face ſhall be changed, or, doubled] By the ſtrength of the face, we may underſtand fierceneſſe, impudency, ſourneſs, auſterity; as Dan. 8. 23. Deut. 28. 50. Prov. 7. 13.

& 21. 29. Iſa. 3. 9. Pſal. 10. 4. Jer. 5. 3. Wiſdom changeth all this into mildneſſe, meekneſſe and ſereneneſſe of countenance; as Moſes was the wiſeſt and holieſt, ſo he was the meekeſt man, Num. 12. 3. Prov. 11. 2. 2. By ſtrength of face, we may underſtand, confidence and courage; For the righteous is bold as a Lyon, Prov. 28. 1. Guilt and ſhame caſt down the countenance, Gen. 4. 5, 6. Righteouſneſſe and Wiſdom embolden it, 1 Sam. 1. 18. Job 11 15. Luke 21. 28. And in this ſenſe, ſome read the text thus, (which the Original word well bears) The ſtrength of his countenance, his confidence and courage ſhall be doubled, Chap. 7. 19. Iſa. 40. 31. Prov. 4. 18.

V. I counſel thee to keep the Kings commandment, and that in regard of the oath of God] I to keep. There is in the Original an Ellipſis, and ſomething neceſſarily to be ſupplyed, as is uſual in other places, Pſal. 120 7. Hoſ. 14. 8. 2 Cor. 9. 6. Matth. 25. 9. 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. 1 Tim. 4. 3. Gen. 25. 22. Matth. 21. 30. I, if thou wilt admit of my counſel or perſwaſion, thus adviſe thee. It is put elliptically, to intimate a ſpecial emphaſis, and to give authority to the precept, Gal. 5. 2.

To keep the Kings command] To obſerve the mouth of the King. The Angels are ſaid to ſee, or obſerve the face of God, in token of obedience and readineſſe to execute his commands, Matth. 18. 10. Eſth. 1. 14. 1 Reg. 10. 8. The mouth is often uſed for the command, which proceedeth from it, Exod. 38. 21, Numb. 4. 27. Joſh. 1. 18. Our obedience muſt not be according to our own fancies or conjectures, but according unto the preſcript of the Law, for the Law is the mouth of the Magiſtrate. This is one ſpecial part of prudence, in order unto tranquillity of life, to be faithful and obedient towards Magiſtrates, and not to make our ſelves wiſer than the Law.

and that in regard of the oath of God] Theſe words are both an enforcement, and a limitation of the duty preſcribed; 1. An enforcement: it is neceſſary to yeild obedience unto Magiſtrates, not onely out of fear towards them, becauſe of their ſword; but out of conſcience towards God, and becauſe of his vows that are upon us, Rom. 13. 5. and ſo it ſeems to relate unto ſome covenant and oath of fidelity, which was taken by them towards their Princes. We read of the covenant between the King and the people, made before the Lord, 2 Chron. 21. 3. and a promiſe or league made in the preſence of God, was likely to be by the intervention of an oath, as the covenant between Abimelech and Abraham, Gen. 21. 23, 24. See Gen. 26. 28, 29. & 31. 44, 53. And this may ſeem to be intimated in that phraſe of Giving the hand under Solomon; which we render, by ſubmitting themſelves unto him, 1 Chron. 29. 24. A like ceremony, whereunto, Abrahams ſervant uſed, when he ſware faithfulneſſe unto him, Gen. 24. 2, 3. Gen. 47. 29. So giving the hand, was a ceremonial confirmation of ſome ſworn covenant or promiſe, Ezra 10. 19. Ezek. 17. 18. χεῖρας δ᾽ ἀλλήλων λαβέτην, καὶ πιστώσαντο, Iliad. 2. And hence ſome here by Juramentum Elohim, underſtand the Oath of the Magiſtrates, who are ſometimes in Scripture ſo called, Exod. 22. 28. Pſal. 82. 1, 6. Joſh. 10. 34. Thereby to teach them to rule for God, not by their own luſt, but by his law, and for the good of his people. But I rather underſtand, by the oath of God, an oath ſworn unto God, Iſa. 19. 18 & 44. 4 2 Chron. 15. 12, 14. & 34. 31, 32. So that we are bound to be obedient unto Magiſtrates for the Lords ſake, 1 Pet. 2. 13 — 17. as ſervants are required upon the ſame account, to yeild obedience to their maſters, Eph. 6. 5 — 8. 2. This clauſe containeth a limitation, by which our obedience unto men is to be bounded: Keep the Kings command; yet ſo, that thou do not violate thine oath and obedience due unto God. Thy ſervice to the one, muſt be ſuch as will conſiſt with the fealty to the other; for we are bound unto God and his ſervice by oath and covenant, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Neh. 9. 38. & 10. 29. Pſal. 119. 106. and no ſubordinate obedience to others, muſt make us forget our duty unto him, 1 Sam. 19. 1. & 22. 17. Dan. 3. 16, 17, 18. Act. 4. 19. & 5. 29. 1 Pet. 2. 17. Prov. 24. 21. 1 Reg. 21. 3. Eſth. 3. 2. 1 Sam. 14. 45.

V. 3. Be not haſty to go out of his ſight, &c.] Or, Go not haſtily out of his ſight; When two Verbs finite come together, either the latter is to be taken infinitely; as Deut. 2. 31. Eſth. 8. 6. Pſal. 102. 13. or the former adverbially; as Gen. 24. 18. 1 Sam. 4. 14. Hoſ. 9. 9. Be not haſty to go. It ſignifies ſuch haſte, as ariſeth out of terrour and perturbation of ſpirit, in which ſenſe the word is frequently taken, Exod. 15. 15. 2 Sam. 4. 1. Job 23. 15. He ſheweth the root of rebellion, namely, impatiency, fear, perturbation of ſpirit, whereby men fling off from their allegiance. Servants are ſaid to ſtand in the preſence of their lords, 1 Reg. 10. 8. Eſth. 1. 4. So that haſting out of their preſence, implies, a declining and caſting off of obedience, Jon. 1. 3. 1 Reg. 12. 16. This is one part of obedience li[illegible]bidden; haſtineſſe in taking offence, diſcovering of choler and diſcontent, flying away in paſſion, either from the preſence, or from the commands, or from the anger of a King; not remembring that Kings have many eys, and can ſee at a great diſtance, and long arms, and can eaſily reach thoſe that flye in diſcontent, from them. Obedience, innocence, calmneſſe of ſpirit, a meek and yeilding diſpoſition, may ſecure, and reconcile a man, (for a ſoft anſwer, turneth away wrath) when turbulency and unquietneſſe, will but plunge him into greater diſfavour and danger. Another and worſe errour is, wilfully to perſiſt in diſobedience, and to boyl up the former paſſion into habitual ſtubbornneſſe.

Do not thou ſtand in an evil thing] If thou haſt been tranſported with perturbation, and gone out of the way; cool and draw back betime, do not harden thy ſelf in thy defection; but labour, by forbearance and mildneſſe, to recover his favour again, Prov. 15. 1. & 25. 15. & 30. 32. To ſtand in a thing, is to have a fixed and unmoved reſolution upon it, 1 Cor. 7. 37. Eph. 6. 11, 13, 14.

for he doth whatſoever pleaſeth him] This is not ſpoken to confirm, or give allowance unto any revengeful and cruel actions of Princes, as if their power did ſerve to execute their own luſts; but he ſheweth, beſides the ſinfulneſſe of it, how unſafe, and how fruitleſſe it is to reſiſt thoſe, who have power to do what they pleaſe, and who being injured and provoked, can eaſily break in pieces thoſe, who riſe up againſt them.

V. 4. Where the word of a King is, there is power: and who may ſay unto him, What doſt thou?] Think not that thou ſhalt be able to eſcape the wrath of a King: for if he but ſpeak the word, he hath power enough to reach thee where ever thou goeſt: where ever the command of a King comes, it is accompanied with power enough to be avenged on any that provoke him. He never wants inſtruments to execute his diſpleaſure. When Saul pronounced death upon the Prieſts, there wanted not a Doeg to ſet upon them, 1 Sam. 22. 18. Dan. 5. 19.

and who may ſay unto him, What doſt thou?] This elſewhere is ſpoken of God, who worketh all things by the counſel of his own Will, and doth whatſoever he pleaſeth both in heaven and earth, Job 9. 12. But of Princes and Magiſtrates it cannot be abſolutely and ſo fully ſpoken; for being ſubject unto errour, and miſcarriages, they may with humility and wiſdom be admoniſhed, 1 Sam. 14. 45, 46. But he ſpeaketh here of the great power which they have, againſt which the people dare not to mutter, Prov. 30. 31. and ought not without much reverence to conteſt withal, Job 34. 18.

V. 5. Whoſo keepeth the commandment; ſhall know no evil] This may be underſtood either of the Commands of God; piety and godly wiſdom will teach a man to walk ſo circumſpectly, as that he ſhall not provoke the wrath of the King to his own ruine: or of the commandment of the King, whereof he ſpake, verſe 2.

he that obſerveth his Commandment, ſhall know no evil,] None of the danger before mentioned, ver. 3. ſhall live ſecurely, and quietly out of fear, Rom. 13. 3, 4. 1 Tim. 2. 2.

and a wiſe mans heart diſcerneth both time and judgement] This is a qualification of the precept; a wiſe man will not, for fear of danger, or hope of advantage, do all that is commanded him by a blind obedience; but he conſidereth the ſeaſon wherein, and the manner how to execute commands: or he knowes to finde out a proper ſeaſon, and right way to apply himſelfe unto the Prince, to prevent his diſpleaſure, to gain his favour, to qualifie or alter his Commands, if they be any way grievous, 1 Chron. 21. 3. Judg. 6. 27. Gen. 32. 7, 8, 13, 16, 17. & 33. 12, 14. 1 Sam. 25. 18. --- 1 Chron. 12. 32. Neh. 2. 4, 5, 12, 16. Eſth. 4. 5. & 7. 2, 3. & 8. 5, 6.

V. 6, 7. Becauſe to every purpoſe, there is a time and judgement: therefore the miſery of man is great upon him; For he knoweth not that which ſhall be: for who can tell him when it ſhall be?] Becauſe to every purpoſe or enterprize there is a proper ſeaſon, and peculiar manner of acting, upon which narrow points, the happy ſucceſſe of ſuch undertakings do depend, and this cannot without much wiſdom be duly obſerved: hence it cometh to paſſe, that the miſery of man is great upon him. This general is to be applyed to the particular caſe, a man by incurring the diſpleaſure of his Prince, bringeth much miſery upon himſelf, becauſe he wanteth that wiſdom, which ſhould ſuggeſt a proper opportunity, and right way of regaining his favour again. When there is ignorance and folly within, dangers and ſnares without, it is very hard for a man to walk ſafely. There is no greater part of wiſdom than the prudent obſerving of times, circumſtances, and the right manner of tranſacting buſineſſes that are of weight and conſequence unto us, Jer. 8. 7, 8. Amos 5. 13. Luke 19. 44. Prov. 15. 23. Act. 22. 25. — 29. Act. 23. 6, 7.

for he knoweth not that which ſhall be.] Becauſe a man cannot foreſee future events, nor exactly judge of the conſequences of actions, therefore it is very difficult to avoid many of thoſe miſeries which by reaſon of this ignorance do attend him. There is one ſeaſon, and one manner of acting, which would have been ſeconded with ſucceſſe, if a man could have foreſeen it, but any other time, any other way of proceeding, would miſcarry: great therefore muſt needs be the miſery of man by reaſon of this ignorance, who hath a thouſand wayes to miſſe the mark, and but one to hit it. A man cannot ſo much as fore-appoint his own actions for the future, much leſſe foreſee the conſequences and iſſues which would follow thereupon, Prov. 27. 1. Jam. 4. 14. None can foretel a man what ſhall be, but God alone. Iſa. 41. 23. & 44. 7. & 46. 10. Onely this a wiſe and holy man may be ſure of, that whatever falls out ſhall be for his good, though it may be contrary to his deſire and expectation, 1 Cor. 3. 22.

V. 8. There is no man that hath power over the ſpirit, to retain the ſpirit, neither hath he power in the day of death] By ſpirit, he meaneth the breath of life, or the ſoul. So it is often underſtood, Gen. 6. 19. Job 7.7. Iſa. 42.5. Pſal. 104. 29. Luke 8. 55. Jam. 2. 26. This may be underſtood, 1. Generally, to ſignifie the weakneſs which is in man to help himſelf againſt the greateſt future evil, namely, death: no power, induſtry, wiſdom, can keep the ſoul, when God by death requires it: no man hath the dominion over his own life, to live as long as it pleaſeth himſelf; nor over death, to repell and reſiſt it when it comes, Pſal. 49.7 —— 10. Heb. 9.27. 2 Particularly, to the preſent argument of obedience to Princes, whoſe vvrath is as the roaring of a Lyon, vvhoſe diſpleaſure cannot be avoyded. An offender hath no povver to retain his life, vvhen ſupreme authority paſseth judgement againſt it: and therefore vve ought vviſely to take heed of thoſe provocations vvhich are likely to caſt us under ſo great danger: for the puniſhment of rebellion can no more be avoided, than the vvind can be held faſt. Therefore vve ought to keep our ſelves ſtill vvithin the bounds of duty, and that will preſerve us from evil, as verſe 5.

to retain the ſpirit] To ſhut it in, to keep it from going avvay. Neither hath he, or any man povver in the day, or, over, and againſt, the day of death to adjourne and prorogue it; æquo pede pulſat pauperum tabernas, regumque turres. The povver of a King is as little againſt death, as the povver of the meaneſt beggar. And therefore ſome have obſerved, that vvhereas vvhen David is mentioned upon other occaſions, he is uſually ſpoken of by name of King David; when his death is ſpoken of there is no mention of his dignity and office, but onely of his name, 1 Reg. 2. 1.

and there is no diſcharge in that war] Or, no weapon wherewith we can prevail in our war with death. There is no apparatus bellicus againſt ſuch an Adverſary, no arrovv or javelin that a man can let fly in this cumbate: Or, there is no miſſion into this battel, in vain doth any man go forth to make war againſt death. So the word ſeemeth to be underſtood, Pſal 78.49. οὐδὲ ἔςι παρατάξασθαι εἰς πόλεμον. So Symmachus rendreth it. It is not poſſible to ſtand in battel array againſt ſuch an adverſary: the Septuagint render it thus, οὐκ ἔςιν ἀποςολὴ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ πολέμου. There is no miſſion or dimiſſion in that war; which ſenſe our Interpreters ſeem to follow, in their Verſion. There is no diſcharge in that war, no man can have a Vacation or an Exauctoration from that warfare. There is no protection or deliverance from the hand of death.

neither ſhall wickedneſſe deliver thoſe that are given to it] Unquiet wickedneſſe, ſinful ſhifts, which men in danger are apt to betake themſelves unto, though a man turn himſelf every way, and move every ſtone, yet he ſhall not be able to deliver himſelf. Saul and Pilate would fain ſhift off the guilt of their ſins upon the people, 1 Sam. 15.21. Matth. 27.24. and Caiphas pretended neceſſity for his perſecuting of Chriſt, Joh. 11. 50. but this did not deliver their ſouls. By wickedneſſe, here may be underſtood, in relation to the argument of the text, Rebellion, Sedition, diſobedience againſt Magiſtrates, as 1 Sam. 24. 13. The words are a μείωσις, wickedneſſe ſhall not deliver, that is, It ſhall deſtroy thoſe that uſe it; as Rom. 1. 16. Pſal. 51. 17. Prov. 17. 21. Prov. 14. 4.

V. 9. All this have I ſeen, and applyed mine heart unto every work, that is done under the ſun: There is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.] With his wonted tranſition he paſſeth on to the obſerving of another Vanity, which was to be found amongſt men; I applyed or gave mine heart unto every work, as Chap. 7. 25. teaching us with ſpeciall attention to obſerve the wayes of Gods providence in the world, Pſal. 111. 2. 1 Pet. 1.10, 11. When he was thus conſidering of the right means of living comfortably, by yeilding due obedience unto Government: He found that ſome Princes were ſo tyrannical and intolerable, that it was very hard for men to live quietly under them, they go on without controll, and miſerably afflict the poor people, Prov. 28. 15, 16. for whoſe good and comfort they were appointed, Rom. 13. 4. God thus pleaſing in his Juſtice many times to puniſh the ſins of a Nation, by giving them up into the hands, and under the will of unrighteous Governours, Zach. 11. 6. Hoſ. 13. 11. Job 34. 30. Iſa. 10, 6. & 14. 20. & 19. 4. But he ſheweth the vanity of ſuch Tyrannical courſes. They tend at laſt to the hurt of thoſe that uſe them: the Rod which beateth the children, is uſually at laſt thrown into the fire. As their power hath put into their hands a greater liberty of ſinning, ſo hath it heaped up for them a greater meaſure of wrath, Iſa. 10. 12. Dan. 11. 36. —— 40. Iſa. 14. 4. —— 23. 1 Reg. 15. 29, 30.

V. 10. And ſo I ſaw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the Holy: and they were forgotten in the city where they had ſo done: This is alſo vanity.] Theſe words are obſcure, ſome underſtanding the former part of wicked rulers, and the latter part of good rulers? others, the whole, onely of wicked ones. The ſum of the former ſenſe is this; When I conſidered the rule of Tyrants over others, I obſerved that when they were dead and buried, they did as it were come and return again in their children or wicked ſucceſſours, who reigned like them, Job 8, 18, 19. or when they had been deprived and depoſed, and ſo as it were buried, I ſaw them return to dominion again. But other good men, who had walked with God in his holy place, are driven out of ſight, made to run into corners, and as it were buried in forgetfulneſſe, Prov. 28. 12, 28. Pſal. 12 8. even in that city where they had done Right. This he looked on as a great Vanity, that the memory of good men ſhould periſh; and wicked men ſhould be had in honour. But the other ſenſe which applyeth all to wicked Rulers, ſeemeth to be more genuine, and is follovved by our Tranſlation; I ſavv vvicked Rulers continue all their life long in the place of the Holy one, to be had in great honour, and after they had gone in and out before the people in the place of Juſtice and Government, (which is in the Throne of God) I ſavv them magnificently buried in very great pomp and ſolemnity, Luke 16. 22. yet being dead, notvvithſtanding all thoſe flatteries and formalities in their funeral, their name and memories did quickly periſh and dye vvith their bodies, inſomuch, that in that very city vvhere they had lived in ſo great power, and been buried in ſo much ſtate; they vvere preſently forgotten; neither the nobleneſſe of their families, nor the flatteries of their creatures, nor the magnificent monuments erected for them, vvere able to preſerve their names from rottenneſſe, Pſal. 37. 9, 10, 35, 36. Prov. 10. 7. By the place of the Holy, or of the Holy one, as Hab. 3. 3. underſtand the tribunals of Judgement, vvhereon they ſit as his Vicegerents, Deut. 1. 17. Pſal. 82. 1. Exod. 22. 28. 1 Chron. 29. 23. 2 Chron. 19 6. By coming and going, ſeems to be intimated the adminiſtration of the publick office of Government, elſevvhere expreſſed in the like manner, by going in and out before the people, Numb. 27. 17. Deut. 31. 2. 1 Reg. 3. 7.

And they were forgotten] The Septuagint render it, and they were praiſed; upon an eaſie miſtake of one letter for another in the Original word.

where they had ſo done] Others, vvhere they had done right, in the firſt of the tvvo former ſenſes; ὡς δίκαια πράξαντες, as Symmachus: or vvhatſoever they did vvas accompted Right, and ſo it is applyable to the latter ſenſe.

This is alſo Vanity] All the povver and pomp of vvicked men in their Life, and funerals, is but meer Vanity, ſince vvhen they are gone, their names and memorials periſh vvith them.

V. 11. Becauſe ſentence againſt an evill work is not executed ſpeedily: therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evill.] Here is intimated the Reaſon why wicked Rulers go on without remorſe or controll in their tyranny and oppreſſion all their life long; namely, becauſe the Judgements of God threatned againſt them, are not preſently put in execution. The proſperity of wicked men doth exceedingly ſtrengthen and harden them in their wickedneſſe. This proceedeth from infidelity, and a root of atheiſme in their hearts, they cannot ſee afar off, or if they do, yet becauſe evil ſeems far from them, therefore they go on ſecurely, abuſing the goodneſſe and long-ſuffering of God unto preſumption, which ſhould have led them unto repentance, Rom. 2. 4.

Firſt, we here, ſee that there is ſentence pronounced againſt every wicked work, Iſa. 3. 10, 11.

Secondly, That the Lord is ſlow in putting that ſentence in execution, being willing that men ſhould repent, 2 Pet. 3. 9.

3. That the ſentence being pronounced though it come ſlowly, yet it will come ſurely againſt ungodly men. It is every day nearer and nearer, and the longer it ſtayes, the more heavie it will be. It comes with feet of vvooll, but it will ſtrike with hands of lead, Gen. 6. 3.

4. That wicked men abuſe Gods patience unto preſumption, and becauſe they ſee all well with them, do deſpiſe his threatenings to their own deſtruction, Iſa. 5. 19. Jer 5. 12. & 17. 15. 2 Pet. 3. 4. Ezek 12, 22. Pſal. 55. 19.

5. That Impunity maketh wickedneſſe more exceſſive and outragious, and the heart of man is the more filled and emboldned in wickedneſſe, by how much the more experience it hath of Gods ſlovvneſſe to vvrath, Matth. 24. 48, 49. Prov. 7. 18, 19, 20. 2 Pet. 3. 3, 4.

therefore the heart of the ſons of men is full in them, or is fully ſet in them to do evill.] is bold in them, ſo Aquila: therefore the ſons of men do evill. ἀφόβῳ καρδίᾳ, with a fearleſſe and preſumptuous heart; ſo Symmachus: the phraſe noteth an height of confidence and reſolvedneſs on ſinful courſes, called in the Scripture, madneſs, exceſs, greedineſs, ruſhing, breaking forth, ſuperfluity, &c. Eſter 7. 5. Act. 5. 3. Gen. 6. 12, 13. Luke 6. 11. Jer, 50. 38. 1 Pet. 4. 4. Epheſ 4. 19, Jer. 6. 7. & 8. 6. Hoſ. 4. 2. Jam. 1, 21.

V. 12 13. Though a ſinner do evil an hundred times, and his dayes be prolonged: yet ſurely I know, &c. Here he anſwereth the Temptation whereby good men are apt to be offended at the proſperity of wicked men, Pſal. 73. 2, 3. Jer. 12. 1. and wicked men to be hardened in their ſins thereby: Though a ſinner do continue to do evil, and eſcape puniſhment an hundred times, never ſo often, as Chap. 6. 3.

and his dayes be prolonged] Or, his puniſhment delayed: or God do put off his anger, and not ſtrait way execute it upon him, Chap. 7. 15. Iſa. 48. 9. Deut. 4. 40. Exod. 20. 12. yet ſurely I know, and do confidently affirm, that it ſhall be well with them that fear God. Iſa. 3. 10, 11. The order of the conſequence is inverted, and firſt the remuneration of good men is mentioned, before the puniſhment of evil men, to ſtrengthen their faith, and to comfort them againſt the oppreſſions and injuries of their potent adverſa-

ties

ries, becauſe uſually the rage of tyrants doth vent it ſelf againſt thoſe that fear God.

which fear before him] This is the character of a good man, they fear God ſincerely, they tremble at his preſence, they labour to commend their hearts and conſciences unto him in well-doing, Iſa.8. 13. When wicked men proſper and rage, they fret not, they fear not their cruelty, but ſtill they hold faſt their integrity, and go on ſteadily in obedience and patient waiting on God.

But it ſhall not be well with the wicked, neither ſhall he prolong his days which are as a ſhadow] It ſhall not be well] This is a μείωσις, leſs being ſaid than is intended: for the meaning is, It ſhall be very ill with him; as Exod 20.7. Pſal.34 .5. Rom. 1. 16. Pſal. 84. 12. Iſa 42.3. Rom.4. 19. Revel.12.11.

neither ſhall he prolong his dayes] Long life is oftentimes promiſed as a bleſſing, Prov.28.16. Exod.20.12. Pſal 91.16. Prov.3. 2. and the contrary threatened as a curſe, Pſal 55. 23. and though they ſeem to live long, their longeſt life is but as a ſhadow, which ſuddenly is gone, Pſal. 144.4 wrath doth at laſt certainly overtake them. Whereas in Scripture ſometimes prolonging of ones dayes, relates to a life after death, and a victory over it, Iſa 53. 10.

V. 14. There is a vanity which is done upon the earth] He doth not paſs this cenſure upon the wiſe and righteous providence of God, who ordereth all the ſeeming confuſions and diſorders which are in the world, and who is pleaſed after a ſeeming inequality to diſpence good or evil unto men, contrary to what our reaſon doth judge moſt equal and righteous, Job 9. 22. & 21. 7, 8. But firſt he ſpeaketh according to the judgement of fleſh and blood, which is apt to judge hardly of ſo ſtrange a diſtribution, Pſal 73. 13, 14. 2. He doth it, to ſhew the vanity of all outward things which do variouſly happen unto men under the Sun, which being diſtributed without any great difference, ſometimes evil things to good men, and good things to evil men, do lead us neceſſarily to think but meanly of them, and to look after a further Judgement, vvherein revvards and puniſhments ſhall be in a more notable manner diſpenced, Chap.7 15. 1 Cor.15.19. And even in this diſtribution there is much goodneſs ſhevved to one man in his ſufferings, vvhereby his graces exerciſed: and much vvrath and juſtice to others in their proſperity, vvhereby they are many times hardened and enſnared, Pſal.69.22. Hoſ.13 6.

V. 15. Then I commended mirth, becauſe a man hath no better thing under the Sun than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry, &c.] Some make this to be a ſenſual and carnal deduction dravvn from the former obſervation, that ſince by a mans moſt circumſpect walking he can no more free himſelf from evils, than if he lived more looſely, and ſince evil men do many times go away with the rewards of good men, and good men ſuffer ſuch things as they had not deſerved: ſince a man gets nothing by his holineſſe, nor loſeth any thing by his wickedneſſe: It is therefore the beſt way to take our pleaſures, to eat and drink and be merry, and to take no further care than how we may for the preſent gratifie our licentious deſire, 1 Cor.15. 32. Iſa. 22. 12, 13. Amos 6.3.—6. Pſal 73. 11, 12. But I rather underſtand the words in the ſenſe formerly expreſſed. Chap.2.24. & 3. 12, 13, 22. & 5. 18. Since it is impoſſible for a man to free himſelf from thoſe common vanities and temptations which are under the Sun, Therefore there is no greater wiſdom, no better remedy for our preſent vexations, than to compoſe our hearts in an holy calmneſſe and ſecurity, not over-curiouſly or querulouſly to inquire into the dark providences of God in the word, but with an holy ſubmiſſion to commit our ſelves to the Lord, and in his fear, and with cheerfulneſſe and thankſgiving to enjoy the preſent bleſſings which his bounty hath beſtowed upon us, without any unquietneſſe of ſpirit at the diſorders we ſee, or any anxious and ſollicitous thoughts touching any thing which for the future we may fear, Phil, 4. 11, 12; 13. 2 Theſ. 3. 12.

for that ſhall abide with him of his labour, in the dayes of his life, which God giveth him under the Sun] This is the only fruit which a man can reap in this life from all his labours; greater benefit he can never expect from any thing under the Sun, than to have food and rayment, with cheerfulneſſe of heart in the uſe of them.

V. 16, 17. When I applyed my heart to know wiſdom, and to ſee the buſineſſe that is done upon the earth] He here concludeth with a reaſon why a man ought not anxiouſly to perplex or diſquiet his thoughts about the works of Gods providence, in the Government of the world, why good men are afflicted, and ill men advanced; becauſe when a wiſe man hath applyed his mind, made it his buſineſſe, broken his ſleep in this inquiry, yet he ſhall come ſhort of what he promiſed himſelf, and muſt at laſt acquieſce in the Soveraignty and Dominion of God, whoſe works are unſearchable, and whoſe Judgements paſt finding out: therefore we muſt ſuppreſſe all raſh cenſures of thoſe things the reaſons whereof we are not able to attain unto, and with calmneſſe and tranquility of ſpirit, labour to enjoy preſent comforts, rather than to buſie our ſelves with curious and fruitleſſe inquiries.

to ſee the buſineſſe that is done on the earth] That is, to diſcover and get a clear, and diſtinct ſatisfying accompt of all the works of Gods providence in the world, to comprehend the reaſons of the admiminiſtration and Government thereof, to have a rational view of the compages and whole frame of humane affaires, to reconcile all the ſeeming abſurdities and incongruities which appear in them, to look exactly into the Temperament and Compoſition of ſo many infinite and contrary events, unto the making up of one moſt exquiſite and beautiful work, for there is that neither day nor night ſeeth ſleep with his eyes] As Chap. 2.23. This he ſpeaketh of his inceſſant ſtudy, in denying himſelf neceſſary refreſhments, out of the intentneſs of his mind in this inquiry, as ſtrong and fixed thoughts will keep away ſleep from our eyes, Pſal. 127. 2. Eccleſ.5 12.

a man cannot find out the work that is done under the Sun) Cannot perfectly underſtand, or ſearch into the counſel of God in the government of humane affaires, his ſecret Judgements, his admirable contrivances, his various wiſdome, Job 11. 7, 8, 9. Pſal 36. 6. & 92. 5. a man can neither by labour, nor by wiſdom, (the Two great Engines and Inſtruments of diſcovery,) attain unto it. He doth not hereby diſcourage us from ſearching into the works of God, which elſewhere we are directed to obſerve, Pſal. 111.2. & 104. 24. & 105. 5. & 206 13. Iſa.5. 12. But onely teacheth us after all, to adore the depths of his wiſdome, to reſt ſatisfied that whatever he doth, how contrary ſoever it appear unto human reaſon, is righteouſly, holily, and wiſely done. Secret and wonderful his works may be, but they are never unjuſt: and therefore when we cannot underſtand them, we muſt admire and adore them, Job 9.2.—14. & 40. 2, 3. Rom. 11 33.—36.

CHAP. IX.

IN the end of the former Chapter, the Wiſe man obſerved the ſecret and hidden courſe of Gods providence, and in this, proceedeth in the ſame argument, taking notice of a confuſed adminiſtration of the world in the the common Events which do equally befall both the good and the bad, even as death at the laſt happeneth to them all alike, verſe 1, 2, 3. Whereupon he reſumeth his former remedy againſt this Vexation, to wit, that we ſhould comfortably enjoy life, and the good things thereof, while we have time to do it, and not defer it till it be too late, becauſe when death comes, it deprives us of all the comforts and delights which this preſent life doth afford unto us: upon which occaſion he praiſeth life before death, becauſe therein we have the liberty of enjoying all good things under the Sun, the ſenſe of all which, Death doth bereave us of, verſe 4, 5, 6. And therefore ſince the dayes of our life are but Vanity, we ought with much cheerfulnes and intention of mind to enjoy all the ſweet contentments which life doth afford us, yet ſo, as not to leave the duties of our Calling undone, this being all the portion which we can have in this life of all our labours, verſe 7, 8, 9, 10. After which he falleth into the contemplation of another wonderful providence of God, whereby events ſeem to befall men rather by chance, than by reaſon and counſell, and contrary to thoſe previous diſpoſitions by which we are led to expect far different effects from thoſe which do come to paſſe, verſe 11. The reaſon whereof in part he ſubjoyns, namely, that invincible ignorance which is in all men of the proper ſeaſons wherein actions are to be done, or elſe diſability to foreſee and prevent the evils which are coming towards them, and do ſuddenly ſurprize them, verſe 12 Laſtly, leſt he ſhould ſeem to dictate unto us a ſupine neglect of all good means towards our deſired Ends, in regard that things ſeem to be governed rather by chance, than by counſel, He ſheweth the excellent uſe of godly wiſdom to deliver us out of ſuch dangers, by an example of One poor, but wiſe man, who being in a little City meanly man'd and defended, did by his wiſdom deliver it from the power and military aſſaults of a mighty King which came againſt it. Yet ſhewing withall a very great Vanity amongſt men in neglecting ſo wiſe a man becauſe of his poverty, verſe 13, 14, 15, 16. whence he concludeth, by ſhewing the excellency of wiſdom, that ſilent wiſdom is better than clamorous and buſtling power, and than all inſtruments of war. And withall, that as one wiſe man may avert much danger, ſo one wicked man may deſtroy much good, verſe 17, 18.

Verſe 1. ALl this I conſidered in mine heart] I gave all this in my heart. I laid it up in mine heart. It noteth ſpecial ſtudy and attention thereunto, Luke 2. 51. & 21. 14.

even to declare all this] To prove, examine, perfectly to underſtand, and cleerly to manifeſt all this. The word ſignifies to purifie and purge, becauſe when a thing is ſoyled and defaced, it is the more difficultly known, 2 Cor. 3. 16, 17, 18.

That the Righteous, and the wiſe, and their works, are in the hand of God] That the perſons and works of the beſt and moſt prudent men are not in their own power or diſpoſal, but are guided by a Divine providence, and by a ſecret, inviſible, and unpreventable direction from above, by him who worketh all things, by the counſel of his own Will: To be in the hand of God, noteth. 1 Subjection to his power Joh.3.35. Matth 28. 18. Joh.5. 22. 2. Direction and guidance by his providence, Act. 4. 28. Jer. 10. 23. Prov.16.9. & 20. 24. Exod 34. 24. 3 Ruling by his powerful though ſometimes ſecret and inviſible Government. So the hand of the King, notes the command or order given by the King, 1 Chron. 25. 3. 4. Cuſtody and protection from evill by his care Eſter 2. 3. Iſa. 62. 3. Joh 10 28, 29 Our works are tranſient things, and as they come from us, ſeem to vaniſh away, and to be no more, they are quickly out of our hands: but they are alwayes in Gods hands, and written in his book, he reſerveth them unto the time of Retribution, and keepeth an exact Record and Regiſter of them: So that no one of them ſhall be unrewarded, Heb. 6. 10. Our perſons, our times, our imployments are in the hand of God, men cannot do to us, or diſpoſe of us as they will. Joh 19. 10, 11. neither can we diſpoſe of our ſelves as we pleaſe: but he who is wiſeſt, and knowes what is beſt for us, and what uſes we are fitteſt for, doth as it pleaſeth him, order both our perſons, our times, our places, our callings, our work, our wages, as may be moſt for the glory of his Name, whoſe we are, and whom it is our happineſſe to ſerve, in whatſoever ſtation he ſhall be pleaſed to place us, 2 Sam, 15. 25, 26.

no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them] The words will admit of ſuch a reading as this; The Righteous, and the wiſe, and their works are in the hand of God, alſo love and hatred, to vvit, are in the hand of God. He loveth whom he will, he hateth whom he will, Rom. 9. 11, 12, 13 15, 16. No man knoweth any thing that is before him: no man can diſcover the counſel or the love and hatred of God by any outward things which he looketh on, the ſame things equally happning to the good and to the bad, Chap. 8. 14. Matth. 5. 45. Or, no man can know whether the things which he loveth, or the things which he hateth, ſhall befall him, though he guide his works with never ſo much rectitude and prudence; events depending on the providence of God, and not on the counſel of man, Rom. 9. 16. Jer. 9. 23, 24. Iſa. 45. 9. Jam. 4. 13, 14, 15.

V. 2. All things come alike unto all: and there is one event, &c.] Some would have theſe vvords, and ſo forvvard to verſe 13. to be the perverſe judgement of the fleſh, and the voyce of Atheiſts and Epicures upon the doctrine of providence before obſerved: But vve muſt remember, that Solomon ſpeaketh only of outvvard things, and the different adminiſtration of them: and of the remedies of vanity and vexation, in regard of our condition here under the Sun, reſtraining and limiting all the confuſed events of vvorldly things by the holy hand and vviſe providence of God; And all the precepts vvhich might othervviſe ſeem to ſavour of Senſuality and Epicuriſme by the fear of God, and honeſt labour in our vocations: vvhich things being premiſed, all that is here ſet down, doth well conſiſt with the will of God, and the ſcope of Solomon in this book, which is to ſet down ſuch rules de Tranquilitate animi, as may make a man comfortably to digeſt the vanities of this life, and ſweetly to paſſe over the time of his pilgrimage here.

All things come alike to All] Omnia ſicut omnibus: So Symmachus, ἄπαντα ὅμοια ἴσα πᾶσι, All alike unto All. This is the reaſon why we cannot judge of love or hatred by outward things: for albeit good things are promiſed unto good men, and evill things threatned unto evil men; yet God doth ſo proceed in the execution of theſe promiſes and threatnings, as that faith onely can diſcover the difference; all things outwardly, and to the eye of ſenſe appearing alike to all: As if the Lord had ſubjected all things to the domination of Fortune, rather than of Juſtice; and that the events of the world, were all rather caſual and contingent, than either predetermined by the counſel, or governed by the providence of God.

one event to the righteous and to the wicked, &c.] Moſes dyes in the wilderneſſe, as well as thoſe that murmured. Joſiah in the wars as well as Ahab. Is Abraham rich? ſo is Nabal: Is Solomon wiſe? ſo is Achitophel: Is Joſeph honoured by Pharaoh? ſo is Doeg by Saul. And uſually, as to outward things, the advantage is on the ſide of the worſt men, Pſal. 73. 12, 13. Mal. 3. 15.

to the righteous and the wicked] In regard of their ſpiritual ſtate and condition towards God. Not that any man is perfectly righteous in this life, Chap. 7 20. but inchoatly by the firſt fruits of the Spirit. Comparatively, in oppoſition to the wicked. Evangelically, by ſincere diſpoſitions of heart, and by the ordinary prevalency and dominion of grace.

to the clean and unclean] Between whom great difference was to be made, Ezek. 22. 26.

to him that ſacrificeth, and him that ſacrificeth not] That carefully obſerveth, or prophanely neglecteth the worſhip of God; as we ſee in the examples of Jeroboam and Jehu.

as is the good, ſo is the ſinner] The doubling of the prefix Caph, noteth an equal compariſon, and abſolute ſimilitude between the things compared, Geneſ. 18, 25. & 44, 18. Iſa. 24. 2. 1 Reg 22. 4 and he that ſweareth] Namely, falſely or raſhly, without truth, or judgement, or righteouſneſſe.

as he that feareth an oath] The character of a godly man, who doth ſo reverence the great Name of God, Deut. 28. 58. that by the fear thereof, he is kept from ſwearing raſhly by it, and when he is called to ſwear, doth it with an awful regard towards that glorious and fearful Name.

V. 3. This is an evil amongſt all things that are done, &c.] When I conſidered the courſe of providence, I found this to be one of the moſt grievous things which hapneth under the Sun, That all things, the ſame equall events, both in life and in death, do happen not only to the juſt and the unjuſt, but even to the maddeſt and moſt deſperate of ſinners, who all their life long do give up themſelves unto all exceſſe of wickedneſſe.

This is an evill among all things] It is not evill in regard of God, who doth all in a moſt wiſe and holy manner: but evil, that is, grievous and troubleſome unto man to behold, a great temptation, unto him to conſider, that juſt and wiſe men ſhould be expoſed to the ſelf-ſame miſeries, with fools and ungodly.

an evil amongſt all things] Or, above all other evils: So ſome render it, hoc peſſimum, this is the worſt of evils. As the Superlative is often expreſſed by an Adjective, governing an Ablative caſe with the Prepoſition ב: Examples whereof, the Learned give in, 1 Sam. 17. 12. Prov. 30. 30. Cant. 1. 8. Luke 1. 28. Jer. 49. 15.

yea alſo the heart of the ſons of men is full of evil, &c] Yea alſo; That upon occaſion hereof, when men ſee that it is all one, whether men be good or bad, as to any outward difference in things here below; they judge it vain to ſerve the Lord, they deſpiſe all threats, they undervalue all promiſes, they let looſe the rains, and run headlong unto all kind of wickedneſſe and madneſſe, all ſort of furious headſtrong and deſperate exceſs, with boldneſſe and preſumption. See Chap. 8. 11.

and after that they go to the dead] After a life ſpent in madneſſe and ſenſuality, then they dye. Or, Their latter end is to go to the dead: τελευταῖα εἰς νεκρούς; ſo Symmachus. Others, After that, [i.) Following their own heart; running after their own luſts, they do at laſt fall into the pit. The end of all their madneſſe is death. Rom. 6. 21.

V. 4. For to him that is joyned to all the living, there is hope] In the written Text it is, Who ſhall be choſen? but the Maſoreths direct the reading to be, inſtead of choſen, joyned, by a tranſpoſition of the Original letters. This correction ſome Learned men have conceived unneceſſary. Some rendering it thus, For what or which ſhall be choſen? Thereby meaning, how difficult it is to reſolve, vvhich ſtate or condition to chooſe, that of the living or of the dead. Yet quickly paſſing a judgement on the ſide of the living, in regard of the hope a man may have, while he lives, of bettering his condition. Others annexing theſe words unto the laſt of the former verſe, thus, After all mens madneſſe, their end is to dye: Who ſhall be choſen out, or exempted from that common condition? Since thefore all men, without any choyce or exemption, muſt dye, moſt miſerable is the condition of thoſe mad men, whoſe hearts are full of wickedneſſe, even till death overtake them: For while men live there is ſome ground of hope, but the mightieſt of ſinners, when once dead are paſt hope, and in a worſe condition than the meaneſt men who are yet alive. Others retaining the marginal reading, render it thus by an interogation, For who will be joyned, to wit, with the dead? Who will chooſe a dead man for his companion, ſince that is, of all, the moſt hopeleſſe condition? But this is a forced ſenſe; herein therefore Interpreters do moſt agree. As for him that is joyned to, or is a companion of the living, He hath hope, While life remains, what evils ever befall a man, he is in hope to break through, and to mend his condition; ſome good things however he doth yet enjoy: But, as to the good things of this world, after death there is no hope. Symmachus, whom the vulgar followeth, rendreth it thus, τίς γὰρ εἰς ἀεὶ διαλείψει ζῶν; Who ſhall alwayes continue alive? Unto ſuch a man there would be hope. Pagnin and Montanus keep the reading in the Text, and render it thus, Whoſoever is choſen unto: or amongſt the living unto him there is hope. The Septuagint renders it differently from all ὅτι τίς ὃς κοινωνεῖ πρὸς πάντας τοὺς ζῶντας; Who is there that communicateth with or towards all the living? They ſeem to follow, not the written Text, but the reading; and ſo by communicating, mean, joyning in fellowſhip with the living: who is there that ſhall have the ſociety & communion of all the living? Surely none. According to the ſenſe of Symmachus, & Hierom: Marinus Brixianus offereth two other ſenſes; 1 By reading the word actively, with a different punctation, thus, Whoſoever chooſeth any thing while he is yet alive, he hath hope to compaſs and to effect his deſire. 2. By keeping to the written Text, in the paſſive ſenſe, thus, Whoſoever ſhall be choſen unto any life, or condition of life, he may therein have hope; which maketh a clear and a good ſenſe. The Adjective which we render, Living, being uſually taken for the Subſtantive or abſtract, to wit, for life; as Gen. 2 7. Pſal. 21. 4. Prov. 18. 21. Pſal. 63. 3. I take it, the expreſſion we find Iſa. 4. 3. may give light unto this place. Every one that is written among the living: To be choſen among the living, here; ſeems to be the ſame, with being written amongſt the living, there. It is an alluſion unto Cities, wherein there is a Matricula or Record kept of ſuch as were Free-men, whereunto the Scripture ſeemeth to allude, Pſal. 87. 6. Ezek 13. 9. Heb. 12. 23. Jer. 17. 13. Luke 10. 20. Pſal. 4. 3. For as the Elect are ſaid to be written in the Book of life, Dan. 12. 1. Pſal. 69. 28. Rev. 17. 8. & 21. 27. & 22. 19. ſo the living may be ſaid to be elected unto life; as all ſuch Enrolements in the Records of a City, do follow upon a preceding choice of the perſons ſo enrolled for a living Dog is better than a dead Lyon] A proverbial ſpeech, whereby is meant, that the baſeſt and moſt contemptible perſon while he lives, is in a better and more hopeful condition than the moſt honourable, vvhen he is laid in the duſt. The Scripture uſeth the metaphor of a Dog, to denote the vileſt and moſt abject perſons, 2 Reg. 8. 13. Matth. 15. 16. Revel. 22. 15. Phil. 3. 2. as on the other ſide; a Lyon is the moſt noble of beaſts, Prov. 30. 30. yet a dead Lyon is expoſed to the ſcorn of the weakeſt and moſt fearful creatures; according to the Greek Epigram; ϗ ἄπνοι νεκρȣ̃ σῶμα λέοντος ἐφυβρίζȣσι λαγωοί. The loweſt expreſſion of a vile thing, which the Scripture uſeth is this, A dead Dog, 1 Sam. 24 14. 2 Sam. 9. 8.

V. 5. For the living know that they ſhall dye] By this knowledge they gain much, if they rightly improve it: For, 1. Hereby they are perſwaded to repent, and to fit themſelves to meet vvith the king of terrours. 2. Hereby they are ſet ſeriouſly to conſider, hovv this unavoydable evil may be ſvveetened, and ſanctified unto them, that they may comfortably deſire to depart and to be vvith Chriſt, vvhich is beſt of all, 2 Cor. 5. 4. Phil. 1. 20. 3. Hereby they are excited unto duty vvith more vigor, vvhen they look on this as the day of grace, as the time of light, vvherein onely they can vvork, Joh. 9. 4. Iſa. 38. 18, 19. Pſal. 118. 17. Job. 14 14. Pſal. 39. 1. 4. & 90. 12. But 4. and vvhich ſeems moſt pertinent unto this place, knovving that they ſhall dye and that the preſent comforts of this vvorld, are for the uſe of the living onely, and not of the dead: therefore they ſet themſelves comfortably to enjoy the good bleſſings of God here, vvhile they have time to enjoy them, and by a cheerful and thankful enjoyment of preſent mercies, to fit themſelves for a happy diſſolution. For godlineſſe teacheth us, both quietly to enjoy the vvorld, and vvillingly to leave it vvhen God calls.

but the dead know not any thing] This is not ſpoken abſolutely, for the ſpirits of juſt men are made perfect, and are vvith Chriſt; but according to the ſubject matter in the context, They knovv nothing of the things of the vvorld, or any outvvard comforts and bleſſings here belovv under the Sun, they can no longer be delighted vvith the knovvledge of fruition of earthly things, Job 14. 21. Iſa 63. 16.

neither have they any more reward] He ſpeaketh not of the revvard of a holy life, for ſo the dead have a revvard, becauſe their vvorks do follovv them, Rev. 14. 13. but he ſpeaketh of the comfortable uſe of outvvard bleſſings; as the onely revvard vvhich vvorldly things can afford for all their labour; as it is more plainly expounded in the next verſe, and Chapter 3. 12. & 5. 18, 19. & 8. 15.

for the memory of them is forgotten] They are vvholly removed from all humane and vvorldly converſation vvith men, their houſe, their families, their friends knovv them no more. So farre they are from enjoying and knovving outvvard things, that the living do by degrees forget them, Iſa. 26. 14. Job 10. 8, 9. 10.

V. 6. Alſo their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now periſhed] He ſpeaketh in relation to outward things; living men meet here with objects of all ſorts, ſome lovely, ſome hateful: ſome things that they pity, ſome that they envy. But when they are dead, they have no knowledge left of any ſuch things, and conſequently no affections at all towards them. And becauſe it were endleſs to recount particulars, therefore he concludeth in general, That they have not any more a portion for ever in any thing under the ſun] They have not the poſſeſſion, the fruition, ſo much as the contemplation of any worldly things; They carry away nothing with them, their glory, their contents do not deſcend after them. A covetous man doth no more dote upon wealth, nor an ambitious man upon honour, nor a ſenſual voluptuous man upon pleaſure, all their thoughts, deſires, emulations periſh; therefore if ever we will enjoy the good bleſſings of God; it muſt be while we live, becauſe there is no knowledge nor wiſdom in the grave whither we go, Pſal. 49. 17. Luke 12. 20. Job 3. 17, 18, 19. & 7 7.—10.

V. 7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart] In aſmuch as the dead neither know, nor enjoy any of theſe worldly bleſſings; and in as much as God gives them to his ſervants in love, and as comfortable refreſhments unto them in the dayes of their vanity: Therefore he exhorteth unto a cheerful fruition of them, while we have time and liberty ſo to do, that ſo the many other ſorrows & bitterneſſes which they ſhall meet with in this life, may be mitigated and ſweetened unto them. He ſpeaketh not (as ſome conceive) of ſenſual, epicurean, and bruitiſh exceſſe, but of an honeſt, decent, and cheerful enjoyment of bleſſings, with thankfulneſs, and in the fear of God.

Go thy way] It is uſed adverbially, as much as Age igitur, eia Agedum, by way of adhortation, or encouragement; as Gen. 19. 32. Prov. 1. 11. Eccleſ. 2. 1. Iſa 1. 18. & 55. 11. Since in death thou canſt have no love, nor ſenſe of any outward bleſſings, therefore hearken to my counſel, make uſe of thy time, and enjoy mercies while thou mayeſt.

eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a good (i.) a merry heart] As a ſad heart is called an evil heart, Neh 2. 2. 1 Reg. 21. 7. Ruth 3. 7. Eccleſ. 7. 3. Enjoy the fruit of thine own labours: as Chap 3. 22. When he ſaith, Thy bread, wine, &c. he ſheweth, that our comforts and delights muſt be bounded within our own labors and poſſeſſions; though ſtollen waters, and bread of deceit may be ſweet, yet it hath gravel and bitterneſſe in it at the laſt, Prov. 9. 17, 18. 1 Theſ. 3. 12. And alſo, that our delights muſt be proportioned to the decency of our condition; we muſt eat, panem ſtatuti, our proper portion, and dimenſum, and not either luxuriouſly exceed, or ſordidly live beneath our own eſtate and condition, Prov. 30. 8.

for God now accepteth thy works] It is pleaſing unto God, that when thou haſt, in the fear of his Name, and in obedience to his Ordinance, laboured, and by his bleſſing, gotten thee thine appointed portion, then thou ſhouldeſt, after an honeſt, cheerful decent and liberal manner, without further anxiety, or ſollicitouſneſſe enjoy the ſame. This is the principal boundary of our outward pleaſures and delights, ſtill to keep our ſelves within ſuch rules of piety and moderation, as that our wayes may be pleaſing unto God. And this ſhewes us the true way to find ſweetneſſe in the creature, and to feel joy in the fruition thereof, namely, when our perſons and our wayes are pleaſing unto God; for piety doth not exclude, but only moderate earthly delights, and ſo moderate them, that though they be not ſo exceſſive as the luxourious and ſenſual pleaſures of fooliſh Epicures, yet they are far more pure, ſweet, and ſatisfactory; as having no guilt, no gall, no curſe, nor inward ſorrow and terrors attending on them, Nehem. 8, 10.

V. 8. Let thy garments be alwayes white] Food and rayment are the ſubſtantials of outward bleſſings, 1 Tim. 6. 8. Having directed unto cheerfulneſs in the one, he here directs unto decency and comelineſs in the other. Whiteneſſe was anciently an expreſſion of things pleaſing and delightful. Alboſque dies boraſque Serenas in Silius Italicus. Candidus & felix proximus annus erit, in Ovid. So the ſtone of abſolution, is called a white ſtone, Rev. 2. 17. the Aſſes on which perſons of honour did ride, were white Aſſes, Judg. 5. 10. In like manner they did uſe in the Eaſtern Countries to uſe white garments, as expreſſions of dignity and honour, Eſter 8. 15. Therefore our Saviour ſhewing his glory to Peter, and James, and John, in the mount, had his garments white as light, Matth. 12. 2. And the glory of the Saints in heaven is expreſſed by white Robes, Rev. 3. 4, 5, 18. & 6. 11. & 19. 8. Here it is uſed as a Symbole of joy and cheerfulneſſe; as on the other ſide, Blackneſſe is the colour of grief and ſorrow, Jer. 14. 2. They were wont to uſe white garments at feaſts and joyful ſolemnities: when he ſaith, let them be alwayes white, it is to be underſtood not abſolutely, as if they were never to mourn, Chap. 7. 2. this was the ſin of the rich Glutton, Luke 16. 19. but with reſtriction to the rules of ſeaſonableneſſe and decency, Prov 5 19.

And let thine head lack no oyntment] This likewiſe was an expreſſion of joy uſed in feaſts, Luke 7 46. Joh. 12. 3. and in triumphal ſolemnities, whereunto the Apoſtle ſeemeth to allude, 2 Cor. 2. 14, 15, 16. and in the like occaſions of rejoycing, Amos 6. 6. Prov. 27. 9. As in times of humiliation and ſorrow they were wont not to anoint themſelves, Dan. 10. 3. The meaning is, that we ſhould lead our lives with as much freeneſſe, cheerfulneſſe, and ſweet delight, in the liberal uſe of the good bleſſings of God, as the quality of our degree, the decency of our condition, the rules of Religious wiſdom, and the fear of God do allow us, not ſordidly or frowardly denying our ſelves the benefit of thoſe good things which the bounty of God hath beſtowed upon us, with the wife whom thou loveſt] Therefore he ſpeaketh not in the perſon of an Epicure, to whom ſtollen waters are ſweet; Prov. 9. 17. but of a lawful and chaſte love; as Prov. 5. 15.——19.

V. 9. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou loveſt] See Life, or enjoy life. So Symmachus, ἀπόλαυσον ζωῆς; as 1 Pet 3. 10. Eccleſ. 2. 1, 24.

whom thou loveſt] This is the character of a wife, and the duty of the husband, that which makes their communion comfortable, Ezek. 24. 16, 16. 18, Epheſ. 5. 25, 28, 29. therefore the husband is called the friend of his wife, Jer. 3. 20. There is a ſpecial freeneſſe of delight and liberty of love which is allowed in this relation, though ſtill within the bounds of honour and ſobriety, Prov. 5. 19. Gen. 26 8. It noteth alſo the difference between conjugal and adulterous love, that is, a love, wherein a man may live joyfully, or may ſweetly enjoy his life with comfort; whereas the pleaſures of the other lead unto death, Pro. 2. 18. & 5. 3—11, & 6. 26, 32, 33. & 7, 23.

all the dayes of the life of thy vanity] As Chap. 6. 12. This is repeated again, to mind us in the midſt of all our earthly contentments, that they are periſhing and Temporary things. This living joyfully All our dayes, is to be underſtood as the Alwayes, in the former verſe, with reſtriction to the duties of piety and humilliation, 1 Cor. 7. 5. and alſo it intimateth the duty of cohabitation, that they ſhould not depart one from the other, 1 Cor. 7. 10.

which he hath given thee] That may referre either to the wife, which elſewhere he tells us, is the gift of God, Prov. 19. 14. or to the dayes of the life of our vanity, which alſo are the gift of God, Job 10. 12. Act 17. 25. Pſal. 31. 15.

this is thy portion in this life] As Chap. 2. 24. & 3. 13. & 5. 18, 19 & 8. 15. when thou dyeſt, thou ſhalt carry none of theſe comforts away with thee; in the next world there is no enjoyment of theſe kind of bleſſings, Pſal. 49. 17. Matth. 22. 30.

V. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do it with thy might] Having inſtanced in the principal outward comforts of life, food, rayment, marriage, he concludeth with a general precept, that in all things elſe wherein the Tranquility and comfort of life did conſiſt, they ſhould freely and cheerfully make uſe of them, before they go into their graves, where, as they ſhall have none of theſe outward materials to work upon, ſo neither, if they had them, ſhould they have any wiſdom or skill to make uſe of them, or to reap delight from them.

Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do] Whatſoever is within thy power, and thy abilities can reach unto, whatever works in thy Calling do belong unto thee, or whatſoever ſtate and condition the providence of God ſhall put thee in, Gen. 32. 13. Lev. 5. 7. & 12. 8. Num. 6 21. Judg 9. 33. Whatſoever juſt occaſion of honeſt cheerfulneſſe doth offer it ſelf unto thee, embrace it.

do it with thy might] Vigorouſly, induſtriouſly, inſtantly, do not ſlack time, nor defer it till it be too late, Rom. 12. 11. 2 Theſ. 3. 8. Tit. 3. 8, 14.

for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt] In this life thou haſt opportunities of doing good, of delighting thy ſelf in the ſtudies of knowledge and wiſdom, of improving thy ſtrength and invention to pleaſure thy ſelf and others, Therefore work while it is day, and while thou haſt yet an opportunity, Joh. 9. 4. & 12. 35. Gal. 6. 10. while there is ſtrength in your hand, while there is wiſdom in your head, while the vigour of your faculties laſt: for in the Grave, or in the ſtate of death, whither thou art every moment haſtening, there is no place for any of theſe things, that is not ſeculum operis, but mercedis. If thou wilt be rewarded then, thou muſt work now. Carpe diem, quàm minimùm credulus poſtero. Jam te premet nox. Though this be applyable unto all duties of piety, and charity, yet the ſcope of the place aymes principally at the enjoyment of the comforts and commodities of this preſent life, which we are cheerfully, while they are put into our hands, to enjoy, and not put them off till death, when we ſhall have neither skill nor ſtrength to uſe them. Here alſo we may obſerve what manner of delights he alloweth them, namely, ſuch as ariſe from honeſt labours, and are guided and moderated by art, knovvledge, and vviſdom. Our delights muſt not be ſenſual, but rational and induſtrious.

V. 11. I returned and ſaw under the Sun, that the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battell to the ſtrong, &c.] Theſe vvords ſome make to be the obſervation of another Vanity under the Sun, to wit; That Events and Succeſſes do ſometimes fall out quite otherwiſe then the preparation or probability of ſecond cauſes do ſeem to promiſe: That things are ſo done uſually in the world, as that no reaſon can at all be given of them. Others make them a kind of corrective to the former precept; of living joyfully in the uſe of all outward bleſſings; Though it were to be wiſhed that man could thus eavenly and comfortably paſſe over his dayes, yet when I further conſidered, I found, That no man can ever enjoy a ſtable and conſtant Delight in this world, in regard that future events do oftentimes quite vary from thoſe principles and preparations which went before them. The words ſeem to have relation both to the general ſcope of the Chapter before, Touching the powerful and unſearchable providence of God, Chap. 8. 16, 17. & 9. 1, 2. and alſo to the words immediately preceding: for whereas he had adviſed, That whatever our hand findeth to do, we ſhould do it with our might: Leſt any man ſhould thereupon preſume, that things muſt needs fall out according to thoſe abilities which he bringeth unto the effecting of them, He here directeth us to look up in all our works, above ſecond cauſes, not to truſt in our own gifts, not to attribute any thing to our own ſtrength, to remember, that it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God who ſheweth mercy, Rom 9. 16. and accordingly to implore his aſſiſtance and bleſſing in all our labours, who worketh all our works for us, Iſa. 26. 12. Pſal. 127. 1, 2. Deut. 8. 17, 18. Prov. 10. 22. Jer. 9. 23. And having done our duty, and uſed ſuch good means as God affordeth, then quietly to refer the ſucceſſe unto God, in whoſe hand are all the wayes of the children of men, and upon whoſe good pleaſure do all the iſſues of things depend.

I returned and To ſee] The Infinitive Mood is put for the Indicative; as Jer. 14. 5. Zach. 12. 10.

I ſaw under the Sun] I conſidered the things which are done in this Life amongſt men, and found by my obſervation, That the race is not to the ſwift] That ſwiftneſſe doth not ever avail a man to win the prize, or to eſcape danger, 2 Sam. 2. 18, 23. Jer. 46. 5, 6. Amos 2. 14, 15, 16.

nor the battell to the ſtrong] That the ſtrength of the mighty doth not alwayes avail them either to fight or conquer, Judg. 7. 7. 1 Sam. 14. 6. 2 Chron. 14. 9.——12. Pſal. 33. 17, 18.

nor yet bread to the wiſe] Livelihood and ſubſiſtence to men whoſe wiſdom ſhould commend them to honour and great place, Chap. 10. 6, 7. Pſal. 127. 2. David was put to deſire ſupplyes from Nabal; and Chriſt, in whom were all the treaſures of wiſdom, was miniſtred unto, Luke 8. 2. Matth 8. 20. 2 Cor. 21. 26, 27.

nor riches to men of underſtanding] We read of rich fools, 1 Sam. 25. 2, 3, 25. Luke 12. 16, 20. and of poor wiſe men here, verſe 15.

nor yet favour to men of skill] Joſeph caſt into priſon, Daniel in the Lyons den, David hated of Saul.

But time and chance happeneth to them all] Their Endeavours do arrive at ſuch a ſucceſſe as the counſel of God had preordained, which is wholly hidden from our eyes, and therefore ſeem to fall out many times rather at adventure, and caſually than according to any regular means that have been uſed in order unto them. Whereby we learn, that Divine providence hath a wiſe and holy hand in ordering the moſt caſual and fortuitous Events, to the execution of his righteous counſels, 1 Reg. 22. 34. Eſter 6. 1.——11. 1 Sam. 6. 7.——12. 2 Reg. 3. 22.——24. He doth not hereby diſhearten us from the uſe of means, but direct us in the uſe of them, not to ſacrifice to our own net, nor to glory in our own wiſdom, but to wait upon the bleſſing and providence of God, to give him the praiſe of our ſucceſſes, & quietly to bear vvhat ever miſcarriages he hath ordered to befal us, 1 Cor. 1. 31. Ja. 4. 13.——16 2 Sa. 15. 25, 26.

V. 12. for man alſo knoweth not his time] Events are then ſaid to be caſual, when no previous knowledge or counſel hath made way unto them. Therefore to prove that even able, vviſe, and skilful men are ſubject in common vvith others unto Time and chance, he here addeth, That man knoweth not his Time] καιρὸν αὐτȣ͂, ſo the Septuagint: εὐκαιρίαν αὐτȣ͂, ſo Symmachus: His proper ſeaſon and opportunity of vvorking. But by the ſimilitudes here uſed to illuſtrate this ignorance, It ſhould ſeem, that His Time, noteth the Time of evil and calamity, vvhich many times befalls a man vvhen he little dreams of it. This is called his day, or his hour, Pſal. 37. 13. Joh 16. 4. & 13. 1. Calamity comes as Thief in the night, unſeen, unexpected, Matth 24. 50. 1 Theſſ. 5. 3. Luke 12. 20. Or as a ſnare vvhich a man thinks not of, Luke 21. 35.

As the fiſhes that are taken in an evil net, [evil and exitious unto them,] and as the birds that are caught in a ſnare, ſo are the ſons of men ſnared in an evil time. when it falleth ſuddenly upon them] Many times vvhen vve think things go beſt vvith us, as the fiſh and the bird go vvith much hope and promiſe of good to themſelves, unto the bait and ſnare: ſo men fall into evil by thoſe very meanes by which they promiſed much good unto themſelves, Eſter 5. 12. Pſal. 69. 22. 2 Sam. 13. 28. Luke 12. 19, 20. He intimateth likevviſe, that as the wiſdom of man can eaſily deceive the ſimple birds; ſo the providence and power of God can be too hard for all the wiſdom of men, and cenſure them in their own counſels, Job 5. 12, 13, 14. Prov. 11. 5, 6, He can ſuddenly infatuate them, Iſa. 19. 11.—15. or ſuddenly ſtart up ſome unexpected circumſtance, which ſhall vary the nature of the whole buſineſs, though otherwiſe never ſo wiſely contrived, 1 Sa. 23. 27, 28 Job 22. 10. Pſa. 64. 7.

V. 13, 14, 15, 16. This wiſdom have I alſo ſeen under the Sun, and it ſeemed great unto me: There was a little City, &c.] Theſe words may be underſtood either as the Obſervation of another Vanity, namely, the diſreſpect which is ſhewed unto wiſdom when it is over-clouded with poverty, by the example or parable of a little City, delivered from a great King, by a poor deſpiſed man: or elſe in Relation to the words next preceding, thus; Though it be true, that ſometimes Events fall out contrary to the ſecond cauſes, ſo that even wiſe men are diſappointed in their works of thoſe ends which regularly ſhould have enſued upon them; yet wiſdom ought not therefore to be deſpiſed no not in the meaneſt perſons; for as ſometimes God doth deny ſucceſſe to the moſt proper and probable cauſes, ſo doth he at other times give great deliverance by unknown and unthought on means. The ſcope is to ſhew the excellent uſe of wiſdom, and how highly it is to be valued, though it be as a treaſure in an earthen veſſel, 2 Cor. 4. 5. though brought unto us by mean hands: as David bleſſed God for the wiſe counſel of Abigail, 1 Sam. 25. 32, 44. and Naaman rejected not the advice of a little maid, 2 Reg. 5. 2, 3, 4. wiſdom in but a woman, ſaved a city from deſtruction, 2 Sam. 20. 16.——22.

It ſeemed great unto me] However the wiſdom of the poor man vvas undervalued by others, yet it ſeemed very great unto me; ſo much the greater, by how much fevver helps and means he had to attain unto it.

There was a little City, and few men within it] Here in a parable, he ſheweth the excellency of wiſdom, by the greatneſſe of the danger from which it delivereth; ſet forth by a little City, with fevv men, and vveak defence, aſſaulted by a great King, with a numerous army, and ſtrong bulwarks: ſo that the diſadvantage vvas every vvay on the City ſide.

now there was found in it a poor wiſe man] He found in it: verbs active of the third perſon are uſed ſometimes paſſively, Iſa. 9. 6. Hoſ. 10. 2. God many times maketh one vviſe and holy man a means of delivering a vvhole people, Prov. 11. 11. Gen. 50. 20. 1 Reg. 2. 12. 1 Sam. 17. 8, 9, 51, 52. Deut. 32. 30.

And he by his wiſdom delivered the city] As one Archimedes at Syracuſe, by his art did more towards the defence of the city, than all the reſt that were in it; ἓν σοφὸν βȣ́λευμα πολλὰς χεῖρας νικᾷ.

yet no man remembred that poor man] This deliverance was vvrought by a poor man vvhom no man made any accompt of, nor expected any ſuch good from, being an obſcure unknown perſon: and when he had wrought it, no man looked after him, to return him any thanks for it, 2 Cor. 4. 7.

Then ſaid I, wiſdom is better than ſtrength] As Chap. 7. 19. Prov. 21. 22. & 24. 3, 4, 5. Hereby we are taught to conſider the goodneſſe of things in compariſon one to another, and to prefer that which is moſt excellent 1 Cor. 12. 31. & 7. 38. 1 Sam. 15. 22.

V. 17. The words of wiſe men are heard in quiet, more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools] Are heard, that is, ought to be heard. As a ſon honoureth his father, Mal. 1. 6. that is, he ought to honour him.

are heard in quiet] That is, either are to be delivered with ſubmiſſion and meekneſſe, Prov.25. 15. 1 Reg. 12.7. Or, Are to be heard with a tractable and calm ſpirit, without pride or contradiction, Job 29. 21,22. Jam 1. 21. A wiſe man ſpeaking, though without clamour, contention, or oſtentation, doth by his weighty and ſeaſonable advice, more calm the ſpirits of his hearers, and by his ſober and ſerious counſel, more powerfully prevail with them, than all the angry and paſſionate words of ſuch as have more power, but no skill to manage it:

Ille regit dictis animos & pectora mulcet.

V. 18. Wiſdom is better than weapons of war: but one ſinner deſtroyeth much good.] Wiſdom is not only better than ſtrength, but than ſtrength armed and ſeconded with military proviſions: the poor mans wiſdom did not only deliver the City from the great King and his numerous Army, but from his bulwarks and fortifications which he had raiſed againſt it.

but one ſinner deſtroyeth much good] By the oppoſition between a ſinner and a wiſe man, It is evident, that Solomons Wiſe man here, is alſo a godly man: otherwiſe God uſeth to infatuate and defeat the counſels of worldly wiſdom, 2 Sam. 15. 31. Iſa. 19. 11.---14. Iſa 29 14. & 44.25. 1 Cor. 1. 19.

one ſinner] Some render it, Qui in uno peccat. He that in war through folly and inadvertency committeth one Errour, may deſtroy a whole army: for they ſay, In bello non licet bis peccare. That one Errour of Abſalom in preferring the counſel of Huſhai before Achitophels, did undo his whole enterprize. But it is rather to be underſtood in oppoſition to the one poor wiſe man, verſe 15. one wicked man like Achan will endanger the Camp, Joſh. 7. 1.---5. 1 Cor. 5. 6. as one Leak in a ſhip, one ſpark in a barrel of Gunpowder will ſuddenly undo all. One fool can throw a jewel into the Sea, which a thouſand wiſe men cannot get up again: πολλακὶ ϗ ξύμπασα πόλις κακȣ͂ ἀνδρὸς ἐπαυρεῖ. Grex totus in agris unius Scabie cadit.

CHAP. X.

IN the latter end of the former Chapter, he ſhewed the excellent uſe of Godly wiſdom in order unto tranquility, both private and publick, and the miſchief which one fool might do in deſtroying much good: which laſt clauſe in that chapter, he proceedeth in the beginning of this, to demonſtrate by three inſtances, ſhewing firſt how folly deſtroyes a good name, which he illuſtrateth by an excellent ſimilitude, verſe 1 Secondly, how it ſpoyls a mans actions and undertakings, which by wiſdom might be dexterouſly managed, vere 2. Thirdly, How it defaceth a mans whole behaviour, and converſation, verſe 3.

Then he proceedeth to ſhew the excellent uſe of true wiſdom, in relation to our behaviour towards Princes, and Perſons in authority, whereby, through prudent Caution, meekneſſe, and gracious deportment, a man may reſtrain in himſelf, all thoughts, ſpeeches, or attempts tending unto rebellion, and may allay and pacifie the diſpleaſure which had been conceived againſt him, in the mind of the Ruler; whereas folly tranſporting a man into any diſloyal reſolutions, doth but ruine himſelf and end in fruitleſſe and weary labour. Concerning thoſe kind of diſloyal Affections, He ſheweth, Firſt, The Riſe and occaſion of them, which may be double. Firſt, Undutiful and Revengeful paſſions, upon any private diſpleaſure, of the Ruler againſt us in our own particular perſons, verſe 4. Secondly, Envy or Indignation growing out of Errours in Government; when a man obſerves fooliſh and unworthy perſons to be advanced, and thoſe more Honourable and deſerving to be depreſſed and diſcountenanced, verſe 5,6,7.

Secondly, he ſheweth the great danger of Diſloyalty, and that 1. In regard of actions and attempts, which uſually prove pernicious to their Authours, and this illuſtrated by many lively ſimilitudes, verſe 8,9.10,11.

2. In regard of rebellious and fooliſh ſpeeches, contrary unto that gracious circumſpection and decorum which wiſdom would teach a man to obſerve, in the which through the heat of paſſion, a man uſually proceedeth on from bad to worſe, verſe 12, 13,14. Concerning which he ſheweth, 1. The miſchief which they bring, verſe 12. 2. The vanity and fruitleſneſſe of them to the perſon that utters them, verſe 15. 3. The root of them, ignorance of civil affairs, and want of skill to converſe with men, verſe 15. 4. The nature of them, they begin in folly, they end in madneſſe, they proceed in babling, and multiplicity of words, concerning things which a man cannot foreſee or know any thing of them, ver. 13,14.

3. In regard of inward Thoughts and Affections; concerning which he ſheweth how little ſecurity a man can promiſe himſelf even in his moſt ſecret and inmoſt projections of diſloyalty, in as much as God hath inviſible and unexpected means to bring it all to light, verſe 20.

And becauſe Princes might haply hereupon think themſelves free from all tye or duty towards their people, becauſe they ſhould be free from all danger and rebellion from them: He doth therefore further ſhew the neceſſary dependance which prince and people mutually have in regard of Weal and Woe. Thereby deterring Princes from Tyranny and miſgovernment: (whereby they utterly ſubvert the end of Gods ordinance, which was for the peace and proſperity of the people) And alſo directing them unto the right means of Government, and proper vertues requiſite thereunto; which are, 1. Wiſdom and maturity of judgement, that he be not a child, verſe 16. 2. Nobleneſſe of mind, not only in regard of blood, but chiefly in vertuous endowments, raiſing the ſoul above all ſordid and baſe deſigns. 3. Temperance and ſobriety, eating and drinking to ſtrengthen unto duty, not to diſable or indiſpoſe unto it, nor to incroach upon it, verſe 16,17. 4. Diligent Attendance, and ſuperinſpection over the houſe of the Commonwealth, that there may be no ruptures in it, but that all be ſound, and in good repair, ver. 18. 5. Moderation in delights, not to feaſt for laughter, nor ſpend the life in mirth and drinking, becauſe exceſſe in theſe will require a proportionable increaſe in money and treaſures to maintain them, whence will neceſſarily ariſe oppreſſions and extortions upon the people, verſe 19.

Verſe 1. D*Ead flyes cauſe the oyntment of the Apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour: ſo doth a little folly*, &c.] In theſe words the wiſe man doth by an elegant ſimilitude or proverbial ſpeech, illuſtrate what he had laſt ſpoken, namely, That one ſinner deſtroyeth much good, as one dead flye doth corrupt and marre a whole veſſel of moſt precious oyntment, which in thoſe Countries was had in great accompt, 2 Reg. 20. 13. It is here applyed unto a mans good name, which is compared unto ſweet oyntment, Eccleſ. 7. 1. Cant. 1. 3. and as a flye, though but a little creature, can taint and corrupt much precious perfume, ſo a little mixture of folly and indiſcretion will ſtain and blemiſh the Reputation of a man, otherwiſe very wiſe and honourable. And this ſo much the rather, becauſe of the malignity and ingratitude of men, who do more haſtily cenſure one errour, than value many graces, and with whom one ſmall miſcarriage doth blot out the memory of all other deſervings: as one little cloud doth ſerve to overſhadow the whole body of the Sun. Therefore it concerneth us to walk ſo much the more unblameably, that we may not by the leaſt overſight or folly blemiſh our profeſſion, or cauſe it to ſtink in the noſtrils of others, Gen. 34 30. Phil. 2. 15. 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2 Cor. 6 3. 1 Pet. 2. 15. much leſſe by our leaven ſowre the whole maſſe, and derive infection upon many others, 1 Cor. 5. 6. Gal. 5. 9.

Dead flyes] Flyes of death, the Genitive Caſe is in the place of an adjective, Pſal. 2. 9. & 31. 3. Rom. 7. 24. Phil. 3. 21. Judg. 7. 13. 2 Theſ. 2. 3. 2 Pet. 2. 1. This may be taken either actively, flyes which cauſe death, as the plague of the Locuſts is called death, Exod. 10. 17. poyſonous flyes which do render ſweet oyntment deadly and mortiferous, as inſtruments of death, Pſal. 7. 14. (i.) which do cauſe death: Or elſe, paſſively, flyes which are dead, and by their putrefaction do taint the oyntment in the which they are drowned.

Dead flyes doth cauſe] The noun is plural, and the verb ſingular, which may properly thus be rendred, Any one of dead flyes doth cauſe the oyntment to ſtink; as Exod. 31. 14. Rom. 1. 20. Thereby intimating the great miſchief and damage which may ariſe from very ſmall cauſes.

cauſe to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour] Heb. maketh to ſtink; exhaleth or belcheth forth; thereby noting a continual Emanation of unſavourineſſe, ſo that the ſtink doth never ceaſe or give over. When two verbs of the ſame tenſe come thus together, Grammarians tell us, that the former hath an adverbial ſignification, as Jer. 13. 18. Humble your ſelves, ſit down, (i.) ſit humbly down. Hoſ. 9. 9. They have made deep they have corrupted, (i.) They have deeply corrupted. Rom. 10. 20. Eſay is bold and ſaith, (i.) ſpeaketh boldly. So here, fœtere facit, eructat, (i.) fœtidè eructat. Which is well rendred in our verſion, cauſeth to ſend forth a ſtink.

ſo doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wiſdom and honour] The note of ſimilitude is wanting, as in many other places, both in the πρότασις, and in the ἀπόδοσις, as Prov. 11. 22. Jer. 17. 11. Pſal. 125. 2.

ſo doth a little folly] Here is an Ellipſis of the verb, which is to be repeated out of the former member, namely, It cauſeth to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour; as Gen. 1. 29, 30. The more eminent any perſon is for wiſdom and honour, the more circumſpect ought he to be in his converſation, becauſe a little folly and overſight will much diminiſh his reputation; as ſpots are ſooneſt obſerved in the whiteſt and fineſt garments, and envie like worms and moths doth uſually feed on the pureſt cloath, Neh. 6. 11. Hierom and the vulgar read the words to another ſenſe, Precioſior eſt ſapientiâ & gloriâ, parva, ad tempus, ſtultitia. That ſometimes a little folly is more precious than wiſdom and honour, 1 Sam. 21. 13. But this, beſides the grammatical incongruity, holdeth no proportion to the former part of the verſe, whereunto it anſwereth, and therefore is neglected by the beſt Interpreters.

V. 2. A wiſe mans heart is at his right hand, but a fooles heart at his left] A like kind of proverbial form we had, Chap. 2. 14. The right hand is uſually the moſt expedite and ready for action, doth its work more ſurely, more ſpeedily, more decently, therefore the right hand is the deareſt of the two, Matth 5. 29,30. and it is noted as a thing ſtrange and unuſual when men have been left-handed, or able to uſe both hands alike, Judg. 3. 21. & 20. 16. 1 Chron. 12. 2. So the meaning is, A wiſe mans heart is ready and prepared unto every good work, he doth things with judgement and counſel;he doth with mature advice and deliberation ſo weigh his actions; the circumſtances, conſequences, probabilties, and events of them, as that he may not afterwards repent of his behaviour therein. He worketh by the guidance of his heart, Prov. 15. 22. Luke 14.28.---30. But a fool is left-handed in his works, doth all his buſineſſe bunglingly, prepoſterouſly, inconſiderately, either, when he adviſeth about buſineſſe, his hand is abſent, and doth not execute it; or when he worketh and goeth about it, his heart is abſent, and doth not direct it. A wiſe man hath the command of his heart, knowes how to uſe it ſeaſonably, opportunely, and in conformity to times, places, perſons, ſo that his undertakings may be ſucceſſeful and proſperous: whereas a fool is tranſported with paſſion, amazed at difficulties, perplexed with uncertainties, at his wits end, and knowes not which way to take, or what to reſolve, goes about his buſineſſe as awkwardly and undecently, as a man would do whoſe right hand were tyed behind him, and had onely his left hand to help him, Prov. 2. 10.—15. & 4. 26. & 13. 16. & 16. 22, 23. Examples of this wiſdom we have in Jacob, Gen. 32, Joſeph, Gen. 41. David, 1 Sam. 16. 18. Abigail, 1 Sam. 25. Jethro, Exod. 18. 19. the woman of Abel, 2 Sam. 20. Paul, Act. 23. 6. and of the contrary folly, Num. 14. 40. —45. 1 Reg. 12. 8. Iſa. 19. 11.—17.

V. 3. yea alſo when he that is a fool walketh by the way, his wiſdom faileth him, &c.] Not onely in his private actions and undertakings but in his open converſation amongſt men, in his motions, geſtures, behaviour, gate, countenance, uſual deportment; he is deſtitute of prudence and common diſcretion, and bewrayeth the folly of his heart, by the affected fondneſſe of his converſation.

and he ſaith to every one, that he is a fool] The Septuagint render it, ἃ λογιεῖται πάντα ἀφροσύνη ἐστι, whatſoever he thinketh on is folly. Symmachus in Hierom. He ſuſpecteth of all men that they are fooles. Whereunto the vulgar anſwereth, Cum ipſe inſipiens ſit, omnes ſtultos æſtimat, being a fool himſelf, he accompteth all other men fools: as to him that hath the Jaundies, every thing ſeemeth yellow; and to him that hath a diſtempered palate, every ſweet thing taſteth bitter; to him that hath a vertigenous brain, every fixed thing ſeemeth to turn round: ſo to a man made up of pride and folly, other men much wiſer than himſelf do appear fools. The Chaldee rendreth it, All men ſay that he is a fool: But the moſt emphatical is as we read it, He ſaith to All men, That he is a fool: He doth ſo palpably diſcover, and, as it were, proclaim his own folly, by his geſtures and behaviour, as if he would himſelf tell them that he is a fool! Prov. 6. 13. & 12. 23. & 13. 16. and 18. 2. Jude verſe 13.

V. 4. If the ſpirit of the Ruler riſe up againſt thee, leave not thy place] Here he ſhevveth the excellent uſe of vviſdom in ordering our converſation towards Superiours, teaching us to bridle all diſloyal paſſions, to reſtrain all unlawful attempts, to keep our ſelves in the ſame, even and unmoved temper, whatever provocations we meet with to the contrary.

If the ſpirit of the Ruler) The Chaldee hereby underſtandeth the power and dominion of any ruling luſt, by which a man ſhould not ſuffer himſelf to be ſhaken from his ſtedfaſtneſſe, nor removed out of his place, or from his duty. But this is inconſonant with the ſeries of this Chapter, which is much taken up in the Errours of Government, and the inconvenient paſſions which thoſe Errors may produce in the minds of the people. Others underſtand it of the ſpirit of Rule and Government, as we often read of the ſpirit of Judgement, of prophecy, of Revelation, of wiſdom, of knowledge; ſo the skill of Governing, is called the Spirit of God. 1 Sam. 10. 10, 11. & 11. 6. & 16. 14. Iſa. 11. 1. 2. And they underſtand it thus, If the Lord advance thee unto high place of power and Governments, Leave not thy place, continue humble and lowly ſtill, forget not thy duty towards thy brethren; as Deut. 17. 15.—20. But the latter clauſe of this verſe plainly leads us to another ſenſe; If the ſpirit, that is, the vvrath and diſpleaſure of the Ruler riſe up againſt thee; ſo paſſion is ſometimes called, Chap. 7. 9. Prov. 25. 28. Judg. 9. 23. 2 Chron. 21. 16. And it ſeems to denote high diſpleaſure, like that of Saul, of whom it is ſaid, That he breathed out threats againſt the Church, Act. 9. 1. His rage was as a Terrible Blaſt of a ſtorm againſt a wall, Iſa. 25. 4. and this is further intimated in the phraſe of Aſcending or riſing up, as a grievous Tempeſt, or as a flame of fire, 2 Sam. 11. 20. Ezek. 24. 8. Pſal. 78. 21. If the high diſpleaſure of the Ruler be, though unjuſtly and injuriouſly; lifted up againſt thee, as Potiphars againſt Joſeph, Sauls againſt David, Labans againſt Jacob, Pauls againſt the Church of Chriſt; leave not thy place] Contain thy ſelf within the bounds of thine own calling and condition, do not either through fear and deſpair, withdraw thy ſelf from thy duty, nor through inſolence, and impatience, riſe up in diſloyalty againſt him, whoſe ſpirit is riſen againſt thee; keep ſtill in the rank of a ſubject, and behave thy ſelf with that lowlineſſe and ſubmiſſion which becometh a ſubject. He ſpeaketh not againſt a prudent withdrawing from a ſtorm, and hiding a mans ſelf, as Jacob fled from Eſau, and David from Saul, and Elias from Jezabel, and Chriſt from Herod, Matth. 10. 23. but of diſloyal and rebellious defection, going out of his ſight, ch. 8. 3. as Iſrael to their tents, 1 Reg. 12. 16. He requireth us for conſcience towards God, to ſuffer wrongfully, and to be ſubject even to thoſe that are froward, and injurious, 1 Pet. 2. 18, 19. Not to violate our allegiance, nor to attempt any conſpiracy againſt them, but onely in our ſufferings, to make our prayers and complaints known unto God, who is a Judge between them and us, and is able to vindicate our innocency, and to deliver us out of their hands. Every man muſt keep his ſtation, as ſouldiers in an Army are to ſtay in their own rank, 1 Cor. 7. 20, 21. A man cannot expect to have Gods bleſſing any where, but in his own place. His promiſes and protection are annexed unto our duty, Pſal. 91. 11. 2 Chron. 15. 2. This was the ſin of the ten tribes againſt the houſe of David, Hoſ. 8. 4. and of Abſalom and Sheba againſt David himſelf, 2 Sam. 15. 10. & 20. 1.

for yeilding pacifieth great offences] This is a reaſon ab utili, to perſwade unto the duty. For whereas a man might haply conceive, that the wrath of a King is implacable, and their loſt love unreconcileable again, and that therefore their caſe being deſperate, a man were as good give over duty, as periſh under it: He ſheweth, that by ſubmiſſion and lenity of ſpirit, a man may not onely recover the favour, but prevent and preſerve his Prince from many offences. Some render the words vir ſanans, an healer, pacifieth great offences, and ſo the Septuagint, ὅτι ἴαμα καταπαύσει ἁμαρτίας μεγάλας: He that by modeſt and gentle behaviour, ſeeketh to heal the wound and breach between him and his Soveraign, ſhall pacifie great offences. Or, as a man in a courſe of phyſick, will abſtain from thoſe things which are hurtful unto him: ſo a wiſe man will leave off all thoſe ſins, whereby the anger of the Ruler may be ſtirred up againſt him. Wiſdom is of an healing nature, Prov. 12. 18. & 16. 24. as we ſee in the carriage of Abigal to David, 1 Sam 25. and of the woman of Abel to Joab, 2 Sam. 20. others rendring it by mollities or remiſſio, yielding, or fainting, give a double ſenſe of it; Firſt, That a mans yielding to temptations and paſſions of diſloyalty, doth cauſe many offences to reſt on him, doth bring with it many other ſins, through fainting in the day of adverſity, Prov. 24. 10. Secondly, that yeilding, for a while, unto the tempeſt, doth break the force of it, and cauſe the heart of a man to relent and to melt towards thoſe, who do with calmneſſe and humility endeavour to divert it, Prov. 15. 1. & 25. 15. As a tempeſt which breaketh ſtrong Oaks that reſiſt it, doth no hurt unto the weak corn which yields unto it. Or as wooll or mud, doth more abate the force of a Canon bullet, than walls of ſtone that ſtand ſtubbornly againſt it. See Judg. 8. 1, 2, 3. Gen. 32. 13.——20. & 33. 4. 1 Sam 24. 16.—19. & 25. 32, 33.

V. 5, 6. There is an evil which I have ſeen under the Sun, as an errour which proceedeth from the ruler, &c] Here is intimated, another cauſe of defection and rebellion againſt Princes, namely miſgovernment, when through their error and inadvertency, unworthy perſons are exalted, and men of eminency and deſert depreſſed.

There is an evil] Another evil, or a common evil; an evil under the Sun, in humane affaires.

as an errour] Which is indeed an errour: It is here Caph veritatis, not a note of compariſon, or ſimilitude, but of truth; as Judg. 13. 23. Neh. 7. 2. Hoſ 4. 4. & 5. 10. Luke 22. 44. By errour, is noted a fault committed ignorantly and through inadvertency; as Levit 4. 2. Numb. 15. 24. Whereby we are taught to put the faireſt conſtruction upon the faults of Superiours, in the caſe of miſgovernment; it being ſo eaſie a thing for them, who muſt ſee much with other mens eyes, and cannot poſſibly have a clear knowledge of the worth of all perſons whom they advance, but may eaſily be carried into miſtakes, by the flatteries, or plauſible pretences of thoſe that ſerve them, to be deceived in their opinions, of the fitneſſe of perſons for thoſe places of truſt, wherein they do employ them.

Folly is ſet in great dignity; and the rich ſit in low place] Fools are very highly advanced; The abſtract for the concrete, to denote men extreamly fooliſh and wicked; as Pſal. 5. 9. 1 Cor. 2. 14. Phil. 3. 2. Cant. 5. 16. This is matter of much grief and trouble to good men, when power is put into the hands of men, as Vice-gerents for God, who yet will uſe it all againſt him; When the great intereſts of States and Churches, ſhall be intruſted in the hands of thoſe, who have neither skill nor hearts to promote the good of them, Pſal. 12. 8. Prov. 28. 28. & 29. 2. Eſth. 3. 1.—15. This the Lord is often pleaſed, in his providence, to permit, ſometimes for the puniſhment of a wicked people, Job 34. 30. Iſa. 19. 4. Hoſ. 13. 11. Zach. 11. 6. Prov. 28. 2. Judg. 9. 23, 24. and ſometimes for the trial of his faithful ſervants, and ~~to~~ ſtirre up in them earneſt prayer for thoſe who are in authority, that according to their duty they may be friends to thoſe that are pure of heart, 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2. Prov. 22. 11. Pſal. 101. 6, 7, 8. And ſometimes to ſhevv the greatneſſe of his povver in deſtroying tyrants, Exod. 9. 16.

and the rich ſit in low place] This is to be underſtood in oppoſition to the former; and ſo by rich is meant, men of noble endovvments for vviſdom and goodneſſe, Pſal. 45. 12. To ſit in lovv place, or in an abject and deſpiſed condition, is noted here as a poſture of mourning and great ſorrovv; as Jer. 13. 18. Humble your ſelves, or make your ſelves lovv, ſit. So Iſai. 47. 1. Ezek. 26. 16.

V. 7. I have ſeen ſervants upon horſes, and Princes walking as ſervants upon the earth] By ſervants, he meaneth men of a lovv and baſe condition, fitter to be the tail than the head, Gen. 9. 27. Lam. 5. 8. vvhich is a thing extremely prepoſterous and abſurd when ſervants do bear rule, men of ſlaviſh condition are advanced above thoſe that are free, noble, and pious, Prov. 19. 10. & 30, 21, 22. Deut. 28. 43, 44.

upon horſes] This is a note of honour and dignity, Eſth. 6. 8. 9. Jer. 17. 25. Ezek. 23. 23. Hereby he meaneth, That abject and vile perſons, who ought to be under government, were exalted unto the throne, and unto places of truſt and honour. Such an one was Athenion in Greece, who of a poor and mean perſon, grew up to be a proud and potent tyrant; laid aſide wiſe Counſellors, ſpoyled Temples and Cities, waſted men of their eſtates; and filled pits with treaſure; as Athenæus, lib. 5. reporteth: And the like, Zenophon relateth, lib 2. Hellenicon.

and Princes walking as ſervants upon the earth] As David ſeemeth to have walked when he fled from Abſolom, 2 Sam. 15. 30.

V. 8, 9. He that diggeth a pit ſhall fall into it, and who ſo breaketh an hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him. Whoſo removeth ſtones, ſhall be hurt therewith: and he that cleaveth wood, ſhall be endangered thereby] Theſe are four proverbial ſimilitudes, tending all to one end, viz. to ſhew, that evil uſually returneth on the heads of thoſe who were authours of it; ἡ δὲ κακὴ βουλὴ τῷ βουλεύσαντι κακίστη: Pſal. 7. 15, 16. & 9. 15, 16. Job 5. 13. Prov. 11. 5, 6. & 26, 27. Eſth. 7. 10. 2 Sam. 17. 23. Exod. 14. 28. & 18. 11. Obad. ver. 15. Iſa. 33. 1. Judg. 1. 6, 7. Quod quiſque alieno excogitavit, ſupplicio excipit ſuo. He that made the fetters for another, doth many times wear them himſelf.

The application of the general, in the preſent caſe, is, Firſt, againſt Princes, who do ſo advance unworthy men, and depreſs the well deſerving; ſuch diſorders in government do, many times, redovvn unto their own ſufferings, & while they oppreſſe the people, they do ſupplant their ovvn thrones, Prov. 16. 12. & 25. 5. 2 Reg. 8. 8, 15. Secondly, againſt ſuch as attempt to alter the long eſtabliſhed, and wholeſome conſtitutions of nations and people, and do raſhly overturn the foundations of lavvs and cuſtomes; ſuch changes are uſually mortiferous to the undertakers of them, Prov. 22. 28. & 24. 21, 22. Thirdly, againſt the undutiful and rebellious carriages of people, towards their Princes and Rulers, which commonly are pernicious unto the authors thereof, as we find in the examples of Abſolom, Sheba, & others, 2 Sam 18. 14. 2 Sam 20. 22. 2 Chron. 23. 15. & 25. 3. & 33. 24, 25. Eſth. 2. 21, 22, 23.

he that diggeth a pit ſhall fall into it] It is a ſimilitude drawne from Huntſmen, who dig pits, and then cover them over again, as if they were firm ground, by which means the beaſts paſſing on them, fall in and are taken. Many times in the digging of ſuch a pit, the earth falls on the head of him that openeth it. It is uſed metaphorically, for an attempting of evil to enſnare another man, Job 6. 27. in the which ſnare many times a man is taken himſelf, Pſal. 10. 2. & 9. 15. Prov. 5. 22. Dan. 6. 24.

and who ſo breaketh an hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him] Serpents and adders uſe to harbour in old walls and hedges, ſo that without much caution, he that raſhly removeth them, is in danger of being ſtung by them, Act. 28. 5. Now as hedges do incloſe grounds, and diſtinguiſh the property of one man from another; ſo the Lord hath ſet an hedge about his own ordinance of Magiſtracy, which he will not have violated by any diſloyal attempts, as the phraſe is uſed in another caſe, Job 1. 10. Ezr. 9. 9. And all trayterous attempts againſt the ordinance of God, is a breaking of that mound, and an incroaching upon that authority, which ſeldom eſcapeth ſome miſchief or other, which the contrivers thereof did not foreſee, nor were wiſe enough to prevent. It is a dangerous thing to confound rule and ſubjection, and to break down the partition wall between the one and the other. They who are impatient of rule over them, have ruine very near them.

Who ſo removeth ſtones ſhall be hurt therewith] He that goeth about to demoliſh a building, and to pull the great ſtones out of the walls thereof, διαπονηθήσεται; ſhall be put to pain and labour thereby. So the Septuagint σπασθήσεται; ſhall be broken and torne thereby. So Aquila, κακωθήσεται; ſhall be hurt, and ſuffer evil thereby: So Symmachus. So dangerous is the attempt of thoſe, who go about to unjoynt, and diſſolve the ligaments of government. And like expreſſions we find, Zach. 12. 13. Mat. 21. 44.

and he that cleaveth wood ſhall be endangered thereby] Or, heated thereby; the Chaldee, ſhall be burnt thereby: Shall not do it without danger, if his Tools be blunt, as it followeth in the next verſe. We find mention of danger in this imployment, Deut. 19. 5. 2 Reg. 6. 4, 5. So all theſe four proverbial ſimilitudes, tend to one and the ſame end.

V. 10. If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then muſt be put to more ſtrength: but wiſdom is profitable to direct] This ſeems to relate to the words next immediately before it. He that cleaveth wood, if the iron be blunt, ſhall be endangered and overheated thereby, as being every ſtroke neceſſitated to put to more ſtrength, and all in vain, till wiſdom, by whetting the weapon do get the better of the wood. Nay, the more ſtrength is uſed, when the iron is too blunt to enter, the more danger there is of its recoyling upon him that uſeth it: So in the preſent caſe, the more violent and froward the paſsions of men are againſt Governours, the more danger do they create unto themſelves. Princes being like ſtrong Oaks, that are not eaſily wrought upon by oppoſition: But wiſe, mild, and gentle behaviour may break their diſpleaſure: as wiſdom directing a man to whet his iron, will with leſſe labour cleave the ſtrongeſt timber. Like hereunto was that of Eſop to Solon, that we ſhould ſpeak unto Princes ὡς ἥκιστα ἢ ἥδιστα; either very little, or that which may ſweeten and pleaſe them.

then muſt he put to more ſtrength] Or, then it will overcome the ſtrength of him that cutteth. Some underſtand it of an Army; it will exerciſe and weary the whole ſtrength of an Army, to cleave wood with it. Or, in war, though the arms be blunt, ſo that ſtrength can do little good, yet wiſdom may ſupply that defect, and get the victory; as Chap. 9. 15, 16.

but wiſdom is profitable to direct] Or, the excellency of direction is wiſdom. The Infinitive Mood for the Noun, as Mercer hath obſerved; as 2 Reg. 19. 27. Pſal. 101. 3. The direction which wiſdome gives, is more profitable than ſtrength; it guideth a mans actions without ſo much toyle and labour, unto a better end. It is of all other, the moſt excellent Moderator and director of the actions of life; becauſe without it, all other means are bootleſſe and full of hazard: without it labour is dangerous; there is wiſdom requiſite in the moſt ordinary and meaneſt works, in digging, in bearing burdens, in cleaving and hewing of wood; as we read of a Porter, whom a Philoſopher took and bred unto learning, becauſe he obſerved a natural wiſdom and dexterity, in his ordering of his burden for the more eaſie carriage; 1 Reg. 5. 6. Iſa. 28. 24, 25, 26. Without it ſtrength of body is uſeleſſe; a blunt Axe will tire out the arm of the ſtrongeſt man, if he have not wiſdom to whet it. Art and cunning can move bodies, and apply Engines, which exceed all the ſtrength of the body alone, to ſtirre or ſtand under. As we find what huge ſtones were placed in the Temple, in our Saviours time, Luke 21. 5. Joſephus ſaith of them, that they were twelve cubits, one way, and eight another. 3. Without it, eloquence is to no purpoſe, for unleſſe a man have wiſdome to charm a Serpent before he bite, all a mans eloquence afterward will not be able to heal him.

V. 11. Surely a Serpent will bite without enchantment, and a babler is no better] Or, If the Serpent bite without being charmed, or before he be charmed there is then no profit to him that is a maſter of his tongue, or an eloquent man. A mans eloquence will do him no good, after the Serpent hath bitten him; except he do wiſely charm him, before the danger be come. The meaning is, that a man ſhould by meekneſſe of wiſdome, as by a charm, allay the diſpleaſure of the Ruler againſt him, before it break forth, and be too late to pacifie him. Or, according to the ſcope of our verſion, A wiſe man ſhould, by meekneſſe and diſcretion, charm his own bitter tongue, and ſpirit of detraction, whereby he is apt to curſe and revile the Ruler of the people. Such a vain babler, whoſe lawleſſe tongue is ever finding fault with government, and ſpeaking evil of dignities, is no better than an uncharmed Serpent, Pſal. 58. 4, 5. Rom. 3. 13. Or, As a Serpent bites moſt dangerouſly, which bites without hiſsing, doth not give warning of the harm, that a man might flye from it; ſo of all enemies, a ſecret detractor is the worſt.

The ſcope is, 1. To compare the ſpirit of diſloyalty and murmuring in the people againſt their Rulers, (ſo often forbidden, Exod. 22. 28. Act. 23. 4. Jude verſe 12. 1 Pet. 2. 23.) unto the biting of a Serpent, every rebellious and trayterous ſpeech againſt thoſe who are over us by Gods ordinance and in his ſtead, is full of deadly poyſon, Ezek 2. 6. a ſin which the querulous diſpoſition of people is very apt to tranſport them into, Exod. 15. 24. & 16. 2. & 17. 2. Numb. 14. 2.

2. To compare the vviſe and humble behaviour of men tovvards their offended Governours, unto an inchantment, vvhereby that ſerpentine ſpirit of detraction is allayed, as an adder is kept from biting by a charm. In the Original it is, If the Serpent bite, &c. We take the conditional conjunction for a Confirmation or Aſſeveration of a truth, as vve likevviſe render it in other places, Pſal. 139. 19. Prov. 3. 34. & 23. 18.

V. 12. The words of a wiſe mans mouth are Gracious: But the lips of a fool will ſwallow up himſelf.] He here ſheweth, How the words of wiſe men are not onely as a charm to prevent the biteing of an enemy, but do further conciliate favour and grace.

are Gracious] Heb Grace. They are ſo comely and graceful in themſelves, that they miniſter grace to others, Epheſ. 4. 29. Col. 4. 6. and obtain grace and reſpect from them. As Abigail did not onely appeaſe the wrath of David, but did greatly draw his heart and love towards her, by her wiſe and gracious words, Prov. 10. 32. & 15. 1, 2, 4, 26. & 16. 23, 24.

But the lips of a fool will ſwallow up himſelf] Or, will deſtroy and drown him. καταποντιοῦσιν αὐτόν; ſo the 70. the noun is plural, and the verb ſingular, which may be emphatical, to note that every one of his words do deſtroy: or do ſuddenly ruine, as a whale, or a grave, doth preſently devour that which it ſwallowes. A fooliſh man by froward and diſloyal ſpeeches, layes ſnares againſt his own life, provokes ſo much wrath and diſpleaſure, as thereby utterly to undo, and, as it were, eat up himſelf, Prov. 19. 28. Prov. 12. 13. Rom. 3. 13.

V. 13. The beginning of the words of his mouth is fooliſhneſſe, and the end of his talke is deſperate madneſſe.] Hereby we underſtand the emphaſis of the former verſe, where a plural noun was joyned to a ſingular verb, noting, that every one of his words, from the beginning to the end, tendeth unto ruine. The more he ſpeaks, the more folly he diſcovers, and goes on from evil unto worſe, according as his rage or diſtemper of mind doth further and further tranſport him. Corruption in the heart when it breakes forth, is like a breach in the Sea, which begins in a narrow paſſage, till it eat through and caſt down all the banks, 2 Tim. 3. 13. as the Phariſees and other Jewes in their diſcourſes with Chriſt, did commonly begin with arguments, (ſuch as they were) and ended with ſtones, John 8. 33, 48, 59. and 10. 24, 31. Acts 6. 9. & 7. 54, 57. & 19. 28, 34. firſt they deal fooliſhly, and then they lift up their horne, Pſalm 75. 4, 5. from reproaches they go on to oathes and madneſſe, Pſalm 102. 8. Acts 22. 22, 23. Prov. 21. 24. 2 Sam. 16. 13. Prov. 26. 18. & 15. 28. Thus a furious man aboundeth in tranſgreſſion, Prov. 29. 22.

V. 14. A foole alſo is full of words: A man cannot tell what ſhall be: and what ſhall be after him who can tell him?] Beſides the madneſſe and folly of ſuch a mans diſcourſes, they are alſo many and endleſſe. A wiſe man is contented with words enough to expreſſe his minde, he ſpeaks alwayes pertinently ſuch things as may bring glory to God, and miniſter grace to the Hearers. He ſpeaketh with choyce and election, and therefore in meaſure and moderation. As the Orator gives this for the reaſon why Learned men do not make ſo long and tedious Orations as others of weaker parts, quia doctis eſt electio & modus; They chooſe a few things out of many, and weigh their words before they utter them. Whereas fooles pour out all that offers it ſelfe; verbis humidis & lapſantibus, in ore non in pectore natis defluunt; as he ſaid, Prov. 15. 28. & 29. 11 & 10. 19. Eccleſ. 5. 7. nature hath given a man but one tongue, and that well fenced in; but two ears, to teach us to be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak, Jam. 1. 19.

a fool multiplyeth words] Uſeth many boaſting diſcourſes, vainly reporteth his own undertakings and purpoſes, brags what he will do, and what he ſhall have, as if all events were in his own power: whereas no man, much leſſe a fool, can either tell himſelf, or underſtand by any other man, what ſhall be after him. There ſeemeth to be an emphaſis in the word, After him, He boaſteth what he will do, whither he will go, what ſucceſſe he ſhall have, the next moneth, or the next year. when haply the next moneth or year may be after him, he may be cut off before it come, Pſalm 49. 11, 18. Luke 12. 19, 20. Jam. 4. 13—16. Eccleſ. 3. 22. & 6. 12.

The words may haply be a Mimeſis, ſetting forth the humor of ſuch a garrulous perſon, who ſaith, A man cannot tell what ſhall be after him; and then ſaith it over again, what ſhall be after him who can tell him? therefore let us indulge to our genius, eat and drink, and enjoy our pleaſures while we have time to enjoy them. The former ſenſe ſeemeth righteſt.

V. 15. The labour of the fool wearieth every one of them, becauſe he knoweth not how to go to the City.] Having ſhewed the many attempts of fooliſh men, both in deeds and words, He here diſcovereth the vanity and fruitleſneſſe of them all, All his boaſting projects and undertakings prove but labour in vain. As the Sodomites being ſmitten with blindneſſe, wearied themſelves to find out the door, which they could not get to, Gen. 19. 11. He tyreth and wearieth out himſelf in matters which are moſt eaſie, and yet cannot overcome them: for even children can find out the way into a City when they are neer unto it. Or, though he have not wit enough to keep a high rode, yet he will be wearying of himſelf in abſtruſer things, which are as difficult as to foreſee future and contingent events, as in the former verſe.

The ſenſe ſeemeth to be much like that, verſe 10. as there the fool puts to all his ſtrength to cleave knotty wood with blunt tooles, and all in vain; whereas a little wiſdom to whet his Iron, would make his work both more eaſie, and more effectual: ſo here the fool, like an ignorant Traveller that hath miſſed his way, goes up and down to little purpoſe, till he quite weary himſelf, and yet can never find the way into the City for want of skill, or a guide to direct him, which otherwiſe would have been moſt eaſily and ſpeedily done. Where wiſdom is wanting to direct our actions, labour will be endleſſe, we ſhall ſooner weary our ſelves, than effect any thing by blind endeavours. If we underſtand the words in a civil ſenſe conſonantly to the other paſſages of the Chapter before, then thoſe words, [becauſe he knoweth not to go into the City] do ſignifie the ignorance of ſuch a man to converſe with men, or to behave himſelf wiſely in civil or political relations: Whereas true wiſdom is to underſtand our way, and to make ſtrait paths for our feet to walk in, and to have the light ſhine on our wayes, whatever relation we ſtand in, or whatever imployment we are called unto, Prov. 14. 8. Heb. 12. 13. Pſal. 5. 8.

V. 16. Wo to thee, O Land, when thy King is a child, and thy Princes eat in the morning.] The Wiſe man is not onely careful to keep Subjects from rebellion and diſloyalty, (which was the matter of the greateſt part of the Chapter before,) but alſo to mind Princes of their duty, that they be not wilful, ſenſual, tyrannous, but that they manage their office with nobleneſſe of ſpirit, with temperance, and induſtry, and that by a moſt weighty argument, becauſe they cannot be good or bad to themſelves alone, multitudes are concerned in it, and the weal or wo of whole Nations doth depend upon it. A wicked Prince is a great argument of Divine diſpleaſure againſt a whole people, 1 Sam. 8. 6—18. Iſa. 19. 4. Job 34. 30. Prov. 28. 2. And a good Prince an argument of his love, and that he intendeth to bleſſe ſuch a Nation, 1 Reg. 10. 9.

when thy King is a child] He meaneth not ſo much in age; for many have in their tender years, by the fear of God, and the help of prudent Counſellours, governed their people aright, and ſome of them much better than afterwards, 1 Reg. 3. 7—12. compared with 1 Reg. 11. 4. 2 Chron. 24. 2, 3, 17. 2 Chron. 25. 1, 2, 14, 27. & 26. 3, 4, 5, 16. But in underſtanding, in experience, in manners, when a man childiſhly ſuffereth the affairs of a Kingdom to be turned upſide down, and to be broken to pieces by his careleſneſſe, and through want of prudence and skill to diſcern between right and wrong, Epheſ. 4. 14. Heb. 5. 13. Iſa. 3. 4. 1 Cor. 14. 20. Such a child was Rehoboam in the ſtrength of his age, A child of one and fourty years old, 1 Reg. 14. 21. 2 Chron. 13. 7. when a man is, 1. Ignorant or forgetful of his duty.

2. Changeable and eaſily turned out of it with every perſwaſion.

3. Paſſionate, eaſily angry, and fearful, and accordingly alterable upon ſuch ſudden impreſſions.

4. Senſual, and given unto vain delights.

5. Craving and covetous, and ſo eaſily turned aſide by gifts.

6. Vain and ſubject to be flattered by thoſe that know how to make a prey of him.

Theſe and ſuch like impotencies, argue childiſhneſſe in one that Governs. The Wiſe man inſtanceth in one principal of theſe, viz. Senſuality, in the next words.

And thy Princes eat in the morning] Though the King be a child, yet if he have prudent and vigilant Counſellours, their care may recompence and ſupply his defects, but where they likewiſe be as bad as he, Prov. 29. 12 where all other miniſters of State follow onely their private gain and pleaſure, without any regard unto publick welfare; no wonder if ſuch a Nation have a woe hang over it.

eat in the morning] Are riotous, luxurious, ſpend their whole time in ſleep, and exceſſe; Riſe not up unto ſervice, but unto delights, conſecrate the flowre and beſt of their time (which ſhould have been given to God, and to the publick) to their own vanity and riot, Jer. 21. 12. Iſa. 5. 11, 12. Hoſ. 7. 3, 4, 5, 6. Act. 2. 15. Prov. 31. 4. This is matter of patience unto the afflicted people, when they conſider, that God doth thus reprove Kings for their ſake, Pſal. 105. 14.

V. 17. Bleſſed art thou, O Land, when thy King is the ſon of nobles; and thy Princes eat in due ſeaſon, for ſtrength and not for drunkenneſſe.] The ſon of nobles, That is, men trained up, inſtructed, and ſhaped with principles of true Nobility, wiſdom, and holineſſe. As a ſon of death, of perdition, of wrath, is one devoted thereunto: ſo a ſon of nobles, is one nobly ſeaſoned with principles of honour and government. As ſons of God, Gen. 6. 2. men bred in the Church of God, and under a godly Education; ſons of the Prophets: ſons of Phyſitians, men bred in ſuch profeſſions.

of nobles] From a word which ſignifieth whiteneſſe, either becauſe perſons of honour did uſe to wear white raiments, Eſth. 8. 15. Rev 3. 4. ſit in white thrones, Rev. 20. 11. ride on white aſſes, Judg. 5. 10. or to denote the purity of manners which ſhould be in Rulers, that they might be examples of all integrity unto others, Rev. 19. 8. By ſons of nobles, then, he doth not underſtand men barely borne of noble Parents, and who have noble blood in their veins, (ſuch an one likely might the child be of whom he ſpake in the former verſe) but as there he meant a child not in years, but in manners and qualities: (as the words Presbyter, Elder, Ancient, in the Scripture uſe, do not ſo much ſignifie age, as wiſdom, and authority,) ſo here he meaneth one noble as well in vertue, as in blood and birth. This is the true nobility, when piety, wiſdom, righteouſneſſe, courage, and the fear of God, do adorn the royal blood, and render perſons truly illuſtrious, and not dark and obſcure creatures, as mean perſons are, Prov. 22. 29. Deut. 1. 13. Exod. 18. 21. nobility of blood, without nobility of verture and holineſſe, addeth nothing to a Governour at all, Pſal. 16. 3. & 47. 9. & 87. 3, 4, 5, 6. & 110. 3. Act. 17. 11.

and thy Princes eat in due ſeaſon] In the time of eating, after they have ſpent their ſtrength in duty: As to every thing there is a fit time, Eccleſ. 3. 1. ſo to this particular of eating and drinking, Pſal. 145. 15. Matth. 24. 45. Labour and ſervice ſhould go before eating, Luke 12. 35, 37. & 17. 7, 8, 9. Abrahams ſervant would not eat till he had done his buſineſſe, Gen. 24. 33. and our Saviour preferred his Fathers work before his own Refection, John 4. 31, 32. Sometimes even wicked men have been ſo intent on their wickedneſſe, as to deny liberty of eating, drinking, and other refreſhments, to themſelves, till their deſigns were to be accompliſhed, Act. 23. 12. Prov. 4. 16. and ſo we find Magiſtrates ſo ſerious in duty, as to forbear eating, and to forbid it even ſometimes when it was neceſſary, Ezra 10. 6. 1 Sam. 14. 23. Temperance is in no calling more requiſite, than in the Calling of a Magiſtrate, Prov. 31. 4. Multitude of buſineſſes, and thoſe of greateſt importment, and ſuch as do often require immediate conſultation and diſpatch (and ſuch are many times the affairs of State) will not allow liberty of eating and drinking, all delights muſt be laid aſide to attend them, Exod. 12. 34 39. It was wickedly done by the King and Haman to ſit down to drink when the City was in perplexity, Eſthr. 3. 15. to let publick ſafety lie ſtill, while private luxury was ſerved.

for ſtrength and not for drunkenneſſe] The end of eating, is to repair that ſtrength which had been weakened in duty, and ſo to enable unto the attendance upon duty again. It ought not to be the end of our living but onely a neceſſary means unto life, and unto the ſervices thereof.

And therefore Gluttony and Drunkenneſſe are to be avoided, as by all men becauſe of many other evils which are in them; ſo in ſpecial manner by Princes and Rulers, becauſe they do totally indiſpoſe for ſuch weighty affairs as are to be managed by wiſdom and counſel, Iſa. 28. 1. Hoſ. 4. 11. & 7. 5.

V. 18. By much ſlothfulneſſe the building decayeth: and through idleneſſe of the hands, the houſe droppeth thorow.] This is a proverbial form of ſpeech, and appliable unto all kind of buſineſſes, ſhewing the danger of idleneſſe and procraſtination in them. And it is here uſed as an illuſtration of what he had ſaid verſe 16. to ſet forth the miſery of a land under childiſh and careleſſe Government, by a Compariſon drawn from the leſſer to the greater, from an houſe to a State; for as an houſe being expoſed to wind and weather, will in time drop thorow, and ſo endanger the rotting of the timber, and the ruine of the whole, if the owner thereof do not, by timely repaires, prevent ſuch a miſchie: ſo the Common-wealth, being expoſed to various dangers, from the ſubtlty and hoſtility of enemies abroad, and from the rebellion, ſedition, and various diſcontents of ill-affected people within it ſelf, will be continually in danger of diſſolution, if Governours, who ſhould be the Healers, Repairers and Builders thereof, be not exceeding vigilant upon its preſervation and ſafety: which if he be, he will have little time left for luxury and intemperance.

Here then, 1. A State or Kingdom, is compared to an Houſe, as ſometimes the Church is, 1 Cor. 3 9 Epheſ. 2. 21 & 3. 15 Heb. 3. 2—6. 1 Tim. 3. 15. nothing more uſual, than to call the Kingdom of Iſrael, The Houſe of Iſrael, the Houſe of Jacob, &c. Iſa. 2. 6. & 5. 7. Luke 1. 33. Obad verſe 18.

2. Princes are compared unto the Maſters of the Family, and to thoſe unto whom it belongeth to Heal and Repair the ruines and breaches in that great building, Iſa 3. 7 Job 34 17. Iſa. 58. 12. & 61. 4. As elſewhere to foundations, Pſal. 82. 5. Βασιλεύς quaſi Βάσις τοῦ λαοῦ, to Coverings Ezek. 28. 16. to Barrs, which keep a houſe from being broken open Hoſ. 11. 6. to the Coignes, or Corners in a building, which keep the Compages of a ſtructure together, Iſa. 19 13.

3. Miſgovernment is compared unto careleſneſſe in an Houſe-keeper, or Steward, that doth not in time prevent thoſe ruines in an houſe, which a few breaches uncured, will quickly draw after them. Which to ſhew the greatneſſe of it, is called in the duall number, double ſlothfulneſſe or the ſlothfulneſſe of both hands: and ſo the 70 ἐν ὀκνηρίαις, by ſlothfulneſſes. The building decayeth, is vitiated weakened, disjoynted, ſinketh, inclineth; the 70 ταπεινωθήσεται, is brought low: a proper expreſſion, being ſpoken of the roof of the houſe: and ſo the word is rendred, Pſal. 106. 43. Job 24. 24. And through idleneſſe of the hands, ſo the 70. ἀργίᾳ χειρῶν; the word is, through the humility, abjection demiſſion, hanging down of the hands, that do not put themſelves forth, nor lift themſelves up unto labour; as Heb. 12. 12. Exod. 17. 12 The like expreſſions whereunto we have, Pſal. 76. 5. & 74. 11. Prov. 6. 10. & 19. 24. & 26. 15. Prov. 10. 4.

the houſe droppeth thorow [Which firſt cauſeth the walls and timber to rot and ſo tendeth unto ruine; and ſecondly cauſeth a mans habitation to be irkſom and uncomfortabe unto him, Prov. 19 13. & 27. 15.

V. 19. A feaſt is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money anſwereth all things.] Theſe words, if taken abſolutely and alone, are to ſhew the dominion of money in humane affaires above all other things; other common things, even the beſt of them, Bread and Wine, (whereby the Scripture uſeth to expreſſe moſt outward contents) have a definite and limited uſe, proper to themſelves, diſtinct from others. They tend to make men laugh and be merry, but money is the meaſure of all things; It will feed, and cloath, and harbour, and purchaſe, and extend as a civil Inſtrument unto all ſecular proviſions. But they ſeem rather to bear Relation to what went before; ſlothful men intend not the ſupportance of their houſes, families, or eſtates, but they ſpend their whole time in feaſting and luxury, and all that, not out of any ſtore which by their provident labours they had laid up, but by the conſtant expence of treaſure, and emptying of their baggs, whereby at laſt their houſes, families, eſtates, are wholly brought to ruine. Some joyne the words unto the former; thus; Through idleneſſe of the hands of thoſe men, the houſe droppeth thorow, who make feaſts for laughter, and prepare wine to make their life merry, and whoſe money doth readily anſwer all theſe, greedy luſts and deſires of theirs, and doth bring in ſupplyes and fuel unto them. So this verſe looketh back to verſe 16. ſhewing the Cauſe of the Woe there pronounced againſt a Land whoſe Princes were luxurious, and by whoſe ſlothfulneſſe in regard of publick ſervice, the Houſe of the State was ready to decay and drop thorow; for by riot and exceſſe, which cannot be maintained without vaſt proportion of treaſure to anſwer all the exigences of them, ſuch Princes are conſtrained to cruſh and oppreſſe the poor people, and to ſqueeze them with heavie exactions, Jer. 22. 13—19. which is unto the hearts of the people as a continual dropping in a ruinous houſe, cauſeth them either through ſadneſſe of ſpirit to fall and deſpond, and ſo to become an abject and low condition'd Nation, Ezek. 17. 13, 14. 2 Reg. 15. 20. or elſe ſtirreth them unto more reſolute practices, to ſhake off the yoke which they are not willing nor able any longer to bear, 1 Reg. 12. 14, 15, 16.

They make a feaſt for laughter] So facere panem, vitulum, agnum, are expreſſions uſed for dreſſing of ſuch things towards a feaſt or entertainment, Dan. 5. 1. Gen. 18. 7, 8. 2 Sam. 12. 4.

and wine maketh merry] Lætificat vitam, maketh a mans life merry, as elſewhere Lætificat Cor, giveth him a merry heart, Pſal. 104. 15.

But money anſwereth all things] LXX. ἐπακούσεται τὰ πάντα. Whereunto agreeth the Vulgar, pecuniæ obediunt omnia, Money can command all things, to wit, which are meaſurable thereby. It being the Inſtrument and element of Commerce, as the Philoſopher calleth it. Symmachus, εὐχρηστεύσει εἰς ἅπαντα. Is profitable for all things, which may be bought therewith: or Exaudit omnia, It heareth the deſires of men, when men deſire ſuch things as they outwardly want; If they have money, that ordinarily can anſwer this deſire, and procure thoſe things for them: a like expreſſion we finde Hoſ. 2. 21, 22.

V. 20. Curſe not the King, no not in thy thought: and curſe not the Rich in thy bed-chamber: for a bird of the aire ſhall carry the voice, and that which hath wings ſhall tell the matter.] Becauſe, by occaſion of ſuch ſins of miſgovernment in evil Princes, men might be very apt, through impatiency of ſpirit, to breake forth into diſloyal thoughts and affection towards them, however they might haply be by fear of danger reſtrained from ſeditious ſpeeches, or rebellious practices: He therefore concludeth this whole Argument with a ſtrict prohibition of all hard and undutiful thoughts and riſings of heart againſt Rulers, notwithſtanding their Errours in Government, and Corruptions in living, not ſo much as ſecretly in their hearts to wrong them, both for conſcience ſake, and for feare of wrath, as the Apoſtle likewiſe directeth, Rom. 13. 5.

Even in thy thought, or in thy conſcience curſe not the King] Entertain not any light, vain, contemptuous, or diſhonourable thoughts of him, do not wiſh any evil to his perſon, crown, or Government, not ſo much as in thy in[illegible]ſt and moſt ſecret retirements, Exod 22 28. 2 Pet. 2. 10. Pſ[illegible] 62. 4. 1 Sam. 10. 27. 2 Sam. 19. 21 1 Reg. 2. 8. Iſa. 8. 21.

The ſecond clauſe, neither curſe the Rich, is [illegible] re-enforcing of the ſame precept again, meaning by the Rich, the Governour, Iſa. 53. 9. In the chambers of thy bed, or, in thy moſt ſecret retirement.

And leſt a man ſhould preſume ſo to do, as conceiving thoughts to be free, and far enough out of the ſight of the Governour to obſerve or avenge, He addeth the great danger like to enſue, by meanes, which they could not ſo much as imagine, or ſuſpect:

[for a bird of the aire ſhall carry the voice, and that which hath wings ſhall tell the matter] As if he had ſaid, Thy thoughts and ſecret curſes are heard in Heaven, by him who will certainly puniſh them, however ſecret they are kept from men. And the Lord can eaſily finde out wayes, even by brute Creatures, to bring them to light: as he did rebuke the madneſſe of Balaam by his aſſe, 2 Pet. 2. 16. and puniſh the pride of Pharaoh, and Herod by frogs, lice, and worms, Exod 8 6. 17. Act. 12. 23. We read how a flight of Cranes did diſcover the murther done upon the Poet Ibycus; and how Beſſus, who had ſlain his father, overthrew a neſt of ſwallowes chattering, becauſe, ſaith he, they accuſe me for killing my father. As our Saviour ſaith in another caſe, If theſe ſhould hold their peace, the very ſtones would cry out, Luke 19. 40. So the Lord can by even dead and inanimate Creatures, diſcover wickedneſſe. The Earth it ſelf which drank blood in, ſhall diſcloſe and reveal it, Gen. 4. 11. Iſa. 26. 21. Habac. 2. 11. The Chaldee by birds of the aire, underſtand the Angels of heaven, who like winged Eagles ſhall make report of ſecret wickedneſſe. Others underſtand it of fame, which is a ſwift, and as it were a winged Meſſenger; alluding unto that which is ſaid of Princes, πολλοὶ βασιλέων ὀφθαλμοὶ ϗ πολλὰ, ὦτα. That Princes have many eyes, and many Eares, and long Armes, that can ſee, and hear, and puniſh offences at a greater diſtance.

CHAP. XI.

IN the former Chapter he ſhewed the excellent uſe of true wiſdom, as a means of Tranquillity of minde, and remedy againſt the Vanity of outward things, in ordering our behaviour aright towards Superiours for prevention of thoſe dangers which their diſpleaſure may ſubject us unto. In this Chapter he further diſcovereth the uſe thereof unto the ſame End of comfortable living, in ordering of our behaviour towards Inferiours, thoſe eſpecially that are in want.

Concerning which we have, Firſt, the precept it ſelf, concerning ſubſtantial and uſeful charity, verſe 1. with an effectual reaſon thereof, both drawn from a metaphor of ſowing and reaping ſeed, verſe 1.

Secondly, the manner and meaſure of this our charity, which is to abound towards all that are in want, and that enforced by a reaſon drawn from the uncertainty of future Events; now thou art able; hereafter thou mayſt be diſabled, therefore do good while thou haſt meanes ſo to do, and thereby provide friends to thy ſelfe againſt any evils which thou alſo mayſt fall into, verſe 2.

Thirdly, Both thoſe are illuſtrated by many ſimilitudes, in the which he doth by way of prolepſis prevent ſuch objections as the covetous hearts of men are apt to make againſt this duty.

1. A man is apt to ſay, That he is neereſt to himſelfe, and muſt look after his own ſupplyes, and leave others to look after theirs.

To which he anſwereth, That as Clouds are not filled with waters to keep them to themſelves, but to empty them upon the Earth: ſo Gods bleſſings are not depoſited to men onely for their own good, but as Stewards they are to diſpence out of them unto others, verſe 3.

2. It may be objected, If I muſt relieve ſeven and eight; take notice of the wants of many, It will be ſeven to one if much of this bounty will not be caſt away upon unworthy and ungrateful perſons, who will make no return either unto God or man for it.

To this he anſwereth, That as it is all one to the maſter of a tree, whether it fall North or South, for either way it falls to the owners uſe and benefit: ſo that good which is done to any man in want, out of a deſire thereby to honour God, and to help our neighbour, ſhall prove beneficial unto him that ſo doth it, whatever the perſon be unto whom it is done, verſe 3.

3. It may be objected, That it is not yet a ſeaſon to be thus bountiful, there are many Impediments and diſcouragements thereunto, This charge, this loſſe, that affliction or danger, or expence lies upon me; when I am gotten over theſe, it will then be a fitter time to think on the wants of others, when I am ſecured againſt mine own.

To this he anſwers by another ſimilitude drawn from husbandry; He that will not ſow his ſeed leſt the wind ſhould blow it away, nor reap his corn, leſt the Clouds ſhould rain and wet it, ſhall never want exceptions againſt that which yet is neceſſary to be done. Therefore our duty is, to embrace the preſent opportunity, and leave the ſucceſſe for the future unto Gods bleſſing.

If we could certainly foreſee better weather, and more ſeaſonable accommodations, for our buſineſſes to morrow than to day, we might haply pretend ſome reaſon for delay of duty. But that is in Gods hand alone, as unknown unto us, as the way of the wind, or of the ſoules coming into the body, or the growing of the bones of an Embryo in the womb. Therefore it is our duty to do good at preſent while we have opportunity, and to commit the ſucceſſe of all for the future unto God, verſe 4. 5. Whereupon he repeateth the Exhortation in the ſame metaphor, ſow thy ſeed, ſcatter thy charity in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, in youth, in age, at all times, on all occaſions, ſince thou knoweſt not which will be moſt ſucceſſeful, ver. 6.

And now having thus largely ſet down various precepts for making the life of a man comfortable, and his mind quiet amidſt all the vanities of the world, He proceedeth to inſtruct him how he may provide for death, and judgement, and ſo ſecure happineſſe in another world too: for a man might be apt to ſay, when I am thus throughly fitted by theſe many precepts unto a ſecure and comfortable manner of living, having the favour of great men, the bleſſing of poor men, peace within, and plenty without, when by godly wiſdom, vexation of mind, and the vanity and diſquietneſſe thereupon of all outward things is healed, and removed; It cannot then but be a very pleaſant thing to live, to ſee the light of the Sun, and to enjoy thoſe contents which by theſe means we have arrived at, verſe 7. To this the Wiſe man anſwereth, That albeit by theſe means life is much ſweetned, and the vanity thereof is much abated, yet it is never throughly removed: But when all is done which can be done to render our condition here comfortable, yet All that cometh, both life, and the ſupplyes thereof, are ſtill Vanity, and will paſſe away, and the dayes of darkneſſe which follow, will be abundantly more than the dayes of light which went before. And that therefore we ought, by the timely remembrance of them both, to moderate our delights in things preſent, and to prepare our ſelves to lift up our heads with comfort in the judgement to come; verſe 8.

And becauſe of all others, young men, whoſe blood is freſh, and ſpirits active, are moſt apt to ſurfeit on preſent pleaſures, and to put far from them the evil day, ſlighting ſuch admonitions as theſe; therefore the VViſe man, who had had himſelf as full a gale of youthful pleaſures, as ever any other man, and had found the vanity of them all, doth by an irony, deride the folly, and by a ſolemn citation unto the Tribunal of God, awaken the conſcience of ſuch a voluptuous Epicure, verſe 9. perſwading him by the aſſurance of a future judgement, wherein he muſt be called to a ſtrict account for all the vanities and miſcarriages of his youth: and by the flitting condition of that age wherein he doth ſo glut, upon them, to remove far from himſelf thoſe ſinful exceſſes, which would fill his heart with ſorrow, and his fleſh with ſin.

Verſe 1. C*Aſt thy bread upon the waters: for thou ſhalt find it after many dayes*] This is a proverbial form of ſpeech, drawn from the manner of husbandmen, who ſow their land in expectation of a plentiful harveſt, after many dayes. VVhereby the VViſe man, in purſuance of his principal argument, touching tranquillity and comfort of life, doth perſwade unto liberality towards the poor, that their mouthes and bowels may bleſſe us. Some make it an alluſion to Merchants, who ſend their eſtates in ſhips upon the Sea, expecting in time a return with much gain, called the Harveſt of the River, Iſa. 23. 3. if the Prophet do not rather there allude to the plenty of Egypt, by the overflowing of the River, whereunto poſſibly the VViſe man may likewiſe allude in this place. Others, more generally, underſtand it of giving alms to the poor, where all we do, may ſeem to be caſt away, as if it were thrown into the Sea. Though thou think, what is ſo given, is all loſt, becauſe given to thoſe, who can never recompence thee; yet do thou lend in that manner, looking for nothing again, Luk, 6. 35. being aſſured, that what is thus given to the poor, is lent unto the Lord, Prov. 19. 17. who will in his time, certainly repay it with advantage unto thee. But I rather take it to be an alluſion unto ſeed, which is ſowed on very fertil ground, which is neer a river, or is made fat by the overflowing of a river, Numb. 24. 7. Iſa. 32. 20. So they uſed in Egypt to make their land fertil, by drawing the water when the river flowed over, by art unto it, Deut. 11. 10, 11. Therefore amongſt other plagues, which the Lord threatneth Egypt withal, this is one, That their Rivers ſhould be dried up; and that which was ſowed by them, ſhould wither, Iſa. 19. 5, 6, 7. and ſo we read of the ſeed of Sihor, Iſa. 23. 3. which was a River in Egypt, Joſh. 13. 3. Jer. 2. 18. By caſting the bread upon the waters, we underſtand, by or neer the waters; as Pſal. 1. 3. Gen. 41. 1. becauſe thoſe places are the moſt fertil. When he ſaith, thy bread, he thereby teacheth us, that our charity muſt be out of our own eſtate, and according to that condition wherewith God hath bleſſed us, Eph. 4. 28.

for thou ſhalt find it after many dayes] The ſeed which a man ſowes ſeemeth to die and periſh, but the husbandman waiteth patiently for many dayes together, and at laſt he reapeth a plentiful harveſt, Jam. 5. 7. as Iſaac did, Gen. 26. 12. Mark 4. 8. And in like manner, that which is ſowed in the bellies and backs of the poor, will be repayed, as the ſeed is in harveſt, manifold into the boſoms of righteous men, Prov. 19. 17. 2 Cor. 9. 6 — 10. Deut. 15. 10. Matth. 19. 22. Pſal. 112. 9.

V. 2. Give a portion to ſeven, and alſo to eight: for thou knoweſt not what evil ſhall be upon the earth] By waters, is ſometimes in the Scripture meant, multitudes of people; as Iſa. 8. 7. & 17. 12. Revel. 17. 15. and the Wiſe man here biding us to caſt our bread on the waters, doth in this verſe explain what he meant thereby, namely, that we ſhould diſperſe our good works, and almſdeeds unto many, that we ſhould be large-hearted, and open-handed unto the poor.

Give a portion] He alludeth unto the manner of their feaſts and entertainments in old times, when they did uſe to diſtribute portions to their gueſts, and to ſend to the poor, 2 Sam. 6. 19. 1 Sam. 1. 4, 5. Gen. 43. 34. Eſth. 9. 22. Nehem. 8. 10, 12. Iſa. 58. 7. Whereunto our Saviour haply alludeth, when he ſaith that Mary had choſen ἀγαθὴν μερίδα; A good part or portion, Luk. 10. 42. Which cuſtom of diſtributing equal portions to the gueſts, we find in Homer and Plutarch, to have been obſerved likewiſe among the Grecians; as alſo the cuſtom of ſending portions from the Tables of greater perſons, to thoſe that were abſent. Vide Stuck. Antiq. Conviv. lib. 3. cap. 3.

to ſeven and alſo to eight] That is, to many : a definite number, for an indefinite, 1 Sam. 2. 5. Job 5. 19. Mic. 5. 5. So hereby is noted, large and cheerful liberality to all in want, according to our abilities. VVe may not think we have done our duty, when we have been charitable to one or two perſons ; but we muſt diſperſe our bounty, as ſeed that is ſown ; and do good unto all men, according to their need and to our condition, cheerfully and inceſſantly. The neceſſity of a man may require it, when his perſon doth not deſerve it, Luke 6. 30. 2 Cor. 9. 5 —— 10. Gal. 6. 10. Iſa. 23. 18. Prov. 31. 20.

for thou knoweſt not what evil ſhall be upon the earth] Embrace the preſent opportunity of doing good, thou canſt nor foreſee how ſoon thou mayeſt be deprived of it, ſince thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth, Jam. 4. 14 Prov. 27. 1. & 3. 27, 28. Luk. 12. 20. Haply thou mayeſt die, and leave thy wealth to thoſe, who will ſhut up their bowels againſt the poor ; however, what they do ſhall not be put on thy account. Thou art a ſteward of thy eſtate, no longer than for thine own life ; and therefore be thine own Executor, and conſider the wants of the poor are preſent, therefore let not thy bounty be onely future. Haply God may diſable thee another time, from doing that good which now he puts into thy hand. It is wiſdom to do Gods work in Gods time. Haply thou thy ſelf mayeſt fall into want, and ſtand in need of help from others ; therefore make thee friends of Mammon before-hand, Luk. 16. 9. Pſal. 37. 26. & 41. 1, 2, 3. 1 Tim. 6. 18, 19.

V. 3. If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themſelves upon the earth : and if the tree fall towards the South, or towards the North, in the place where the tree falleth there it ſhall be] He urgeth the duty of charity and bounty, by elegant ſimilitudes. Clouds that are full of moiſture, do not keep it to themſelves, but ſhed it forth in ſhowres on the earth, and on all kind of corn, and herbs for the benefit of many ; whence they are called the bottles of heaven, Job 38. 37. and the chambers of the Lord, Pſal. 104. 13. from whence he poureth down rain according to the vapour thereof, Job 36. 27. 28. ſo ſhould rich men, Prov. 11. 25. whom the Lord hath filled with his bleſſings, as the Scripture uſeth to expreſſe it, Deut. 33. 23. Job 22. 18. Prov. 5. 10. Deut. 6. 11. Prov. 30. 9. Phil. 4. 12, 18. not keep Gods bleſſings to themſelves, but pour them forth upon thoſe that are empty.

and if the tree fall, &c.] This ſome apply unto death, as if we were thereby warned to do good while we may, becauſe death will at laſt cut us down, and deprive us of any further opportunity, Eccleſ. 9. 10. Joh. 9. 4 and as death leaves us, judgement will finde us. But it ſeemeth rather to denote the benefit of charity unto the authours thereof, that whereſoever their bounty and mercy is placed, there it will be found again to their comfort ; they ſhall not go without their reward, as the tree on which ſide ever it falls, it will there be found, when the owner thereof inquireth after it.

V. 4. He that obſerveth the wind, ſhall not ſow, and he that regardeth the clouds ſhall not reap] By theſe ſimilitudes, he preventeth all thoſe pretences and objections, which carnal hearts are apt to make againſt the preſent ſeaſon of doing good, and are apt thereby, to defer and put it off to ſome fitter time, when they ſhall be more able, or when they ſhal have found out more fitting objects on which to place their bounty. VVe are very apt to frame excuſes againſt preſent duty, Hag. 1. 2. Act. 24. 25. Prov. 3. 27, 28. Here therefore the VViſe man removeth theſe pretences ; He that will by every wind be deterred from ſowing his ſeed, leſt it ſhould be blown away ; and by every cloud from reaping his corn, leſt the weather ſhould be unſeaſonable, ſhall never do his buſineſſe ; becauſe there will never be wanting ſome diſcouragement or other : ſo he that is ever framing carnal objections againſt doing good, ſhall over-ſlip the ſeaſon, and never do his duty, nor receive his reward. VVe are to take notice of the preſent call of God unto any good work, and the preſent opportunity he puts into our hands, and not delay ſervice upon the fear of future contingents, which are not in our power, Matth. 6. 34.

V. 5. As thou knoweſt not what is the way of the Spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child : even ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God who maketh all] By our ignorance of the works of Gods providence, he warneth us to be diligent in embracing every preſent opportunity of doing good, and not to defer or delay duty, till haply the Lord will put us out of all capacity to do it. This ignorance he proveth a minore, If we know not things more ordinary and familiar unto us, which happen every day, as the way of the ſpirit.] Symmachus rendreth it, of the wind, which way it comes and goes, how it riſeth and ſlackneth, Joh. 3. 8. Or how the ſoul comes into the body, and quickneth it ; ſo the Septuagint, ὁδὸς τοῦ πνεύματος ; Or, how the bones do grow ; How the ſeveral parts of the body, skin, fleſh, ſinews, bones, ſome hard, ſome ſoft, are all ſhaped out of the ſame ſeed, Pſal. 139. 13 — 16. Job 10. 10 —— 13. Much leſſe are we able to foreſee the works of Gods providence, which are far off and exceeding deep, Chap. 7. 24. Therefore ſince we know not what ſhall be to morrow, how God may diſpoſe of our life, or our eſtate, how long he may continue unto us opportunities of doing good, we ought not to defer or put off duty from time to time, but while we have a preſent ſeaſon, to embrace it, Chap. 9. 10. Gal. 6. 10.

V. 6. In the morning ſow thy ſeed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand : for thou knoweſt not whether ſhall proſper, either this or that, or whether they both ſhall be alike good] He inferreth from the former doctrine, of the uncertainty of future events, an hortatory concluſion, to be doing good on all occaſions, and to be aſſiduous and diligent in the work which God hath ſet us to do, whether all our labour take effect or no. The Lord being ſometimes pleaſed to fruſtrate mens endeavours, and to defer the ſucceſſe they expected from them ; Firſt, to try them whether they would perſevere in their calling : and continue therein with God, though they had not alwayes alike incouragement. 2. To teach them, that ſucceſſes depend not upon the labours of man but upon the will and free bleſſing of God. And he perſiſteth in his former metaphor of ſowing ſeed ; meaning thereby, Firſt, in particular works of charity and mercy to the poor ; as verſe 1 —— 4. 2 Cor. 9. 6. Pſal. 112. 9. Secondly, In general, works of mercy and righteouſneſs in our general or particular callings, Prov. 11. 18. Hoſ. 12. 10. Thereby teaching us, that works of mercy and righteouſneſſe do not periſh, but will bring forth an harveſt of comfort, and great reward unto thoſe that abound in them, Gal. 6. 8.

ſow thy ſeed] Do thine own work, intend thine own calling, immix not thy ſelf in things which belong not unto thee, 2 Theſſ. 3. 10. 1 Theſſ. 4. 11. Be liberal of thine own eſtate, Epheſ. 4. 28.

In the morning ſow —— and in the evening withhold not thine hand, or let not thine hand reſt and give over.] Begin betimes, and be not weary of well-doing, but continue unto the end ; be alwayes doing of good, morning and evening, the whole day from one end of it to the other, Gen. 1. 5. Dan. 8. 14. Pſal. 104. 22, 23. So Solomon bids us, be in the fear of the Lord all the day long, Prov. 23. 17. It is to be underſtood of the morning and evening of a mans life, which ſhould be wholly conſecrated to God, Lam. 3. 27. Eccl. 12. 1. Pſal. 92. 14 Matth. 10. 22. or of the morning and evening of a mans proſperity ; as ſoon as ever God giveth thee an eſtate, begin to do good with it, and be not weary of ſo doing, but continue to the end. God requires our charity to be ſet about on the firſt day of the week, 1 Cor. 16. 2. Gal. 6. 9, 10. The night is ſhut out of the time of working, or of duty, therefore while it is day, while we have life and opportunity, we muſt ply our duties, Eccl. 9. 10. Joh. 9. 4.

for thou knoweſt not whether ſhall proſper, or whether will be moſt right, or congruous, the one or the other, &c.] Thou mayeſt juſtly expect a bleſſing upon all, however, though the ſucceſſe, as to men, be not alwayes proſperous ; ſometimes thy bounty is miſplaced upon thoſe that abuſe it, or return evil for good, yet with God, conſtancy in well-doing will not miſs of its reward ; and by this largeneſſe of heart, thou mayeſt unawares entertain Angels, and bring extraordinary bleſſings upon thy family, Matth. 10. 41, 42. Heb. 13. 2. 1 Reg. 17. 13 —— 16.

V. 7. Truly the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun] By light, and beholding the Sun, we are to underſtand the time of this preſent life, as is evident by what follows in the next verſe ; ſo Job 3. 20. & 33. 30. and withal, we may take in thoſe pleaſures and comforts thereof, which ſerve to render it more ſweet and contentful. Some make it to be a tacit objection, againſt that continual labour which he before preſcribed. Since life is ſhort, we ought to uſe all the wayes we can to render it pleaſant, and not weary out our time and ſtrength in continual toyl and labour ; it is much more ſweet, to enjoy the light and pleaſures of life while we may, 1 Cor. 15. 32. whereunto they make the vvords of the next verſe to be an anſvver ; That vvhen death comes, the good vve have done vvill remain vvith us, but all our pleaſures and delights vvill vaniſh into nothing. It may ſeem to relate unto the former verſe as well as to that which follows ; ſow your ſeed in the morning, and in the evening, ſo long as you have the light of the Sun to guide you ; for this is the chief comfort and ſweetneſſe of life, to be doing good while we have time and opportunity, becauſe the dayes of death and darkneſſe are coming, wherein we cannot work.

But it ſeemeth rather to be a Tranſition unto a new matter. In the former parts of this book, the Wiſe man had ſet forth the vanity of all outward things, and had preſcribed many gracious and excellent means to remedy the ſame, and to frame the heart of man unto Tranquillity and peace. But now when by theſe precepts the life of man here is rendred as full of comfort, and quietneſſe, as an earthly condition is capable of, yet though his life be never ſo ſweet, there are great evils coming, which will require much meditation and preparation of heart to fit a man for them : and there is a far longer condition for the future, which wil abide us after this life is gone ; neceſſary therefore it is unto the compleating of that happineſſe whereinto he had all this while inquired, to ſecure not onely the comforts of this life, but the aſſurance of a better, which is the buſineſſe of Solomon in the remaining part of this Book, by a timely meditation of death and judgement, and by the fear of God, and keeping his Commandments in our youth, to arm us againſt the terror of future evils, and to fit us for that happineſſe, which is the whole of man, and which will be throughly proportionable to his largeſt deſires. And ſo the meaning is this, It is true indeed, to enjoy the light of the ſun, and the comforts of this preſent life, is a very ſweet thing: Senſually ſweet unto thoſe, who are voluptuous; Solidly and ſubſtantially ſweet unto thoſe, who by all the foregoing precepts, have gotten wiſdom to cure the vanity and vexation of ſpirit, which otherwiſe outward things are apt to produce; yet both the one and the other, muſt remember, that though life be ſweet under the Sun, yet it is not long, much leſs, perpetual dayes of darkneſſe are to come, therefore unto compleat happineſſe there is yet more to be done, and ſuch an eſtate to be ſecured, as may bear full proportion to the capacities of an immortal ſoul, and may make up the Whole of man.

Light is ſweet] Sweetneſſe here is that, properly, which is the object of our taſte, Judges 14. 18, Prov, 24, 13. but it is uſual in the Scripture to attribute that which is proper unto one ſenſe, to another; as to ſee thunder, Exodus 20. 18. to ſee the ſmell of a field, Gen. 27. 27. It is a broken and conciſe ſentence, unto which ſomething is to be added or underſtood, it is indeed ſweet to ſee the Sun; life is pleaſant, but yet it is vanity, and will end in death; by the meditation whereof, we are to abate our inordinate love of the profits and pleaſures of ſo vaniſhing a condition.

V. 8. But if a man live many years, and rejoyce in them all, yet let him remember the dayes of darkneſſe, for they ſhall be many. All that cometh is Vanity] Though it be a ſweet thing to enjoy life, and the comforts thereof, and though a man ſhould live long, and all that long life, ſhould have his full of worldly delights, yet the ſerious meditation of death, and the long abode we ſhall after all thoſe pleaſures have in the houſe of darkneſs, will ſufficiently demonſtrate the vanity of temporal life, how long, or how proſperous ſoever it have been; ſuch a life we finde deſcribed, Job 21. 7——13. By dayes of darkneſſe, are underſtood in oppoſition to light; and the ſeeing of the ſun, in the former verſe, that ſpace of time wherein men ſhall lye in the duſt, Pſal, 88. 12, 13. Pſal. 143. 3. Eccleſ. 6. 4. Job 10. 21.

for they ſhall be many] This ſome apply to the firſt words of the verſe, though the days of life be many, yet let a man remember the dayes of darkneſſe, and that will make him judge all things which happen in this world to be but vanity: we may likewiſe read the words thus; If a man live many years, let him rejoyce in them all, he is not debarred the comforts and contents of them, but let him withal temper and moderate the joyes of life, with the meditation of death, and know that every thing which hapneth, that every man which cometh into the world is vanity.

V. 9. Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, and let thine heart cheer thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walk in the wayes of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes: But know thou, that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgment.] Since all that cometh is vanity, as well youth as age, both which he ſheweth here and in the next Chapter: And ſince the dayes of life and jollity here, how long ſoever, are very ſhort and inconſiderable, in compariſon of the dayes of darkneſſe which follow after them, he therefore perſwaded thoſe who are moſt ſubject to be tranſported with the pleaſures of life, to remember death and judgement, and thereby to reſtrain their inordinate deſires. A young Epicure, who is ſcornful and impatient of ſuch cooling and chill doctrines as thoſe of death and judgement, might be apt to ſay; if the dayes of darkneſſe be ſo many, let us not make them more than they are by denying our ſelves the pleaſures of light, but let us freely indulge to our ſelves all our delights, and live to the length of our deſires, 1 Cor. 15. 32. whereunto Solomon anſwereth in theſe words, 1. By way of Conceſſion, 2. By way of ſad and ſevere præmonition. The Conceſſion ſome would have to be real and ſerious, as if he had ſaid, I would not diſcourage thee from the uſe of lawfull pleaſures, nor debar thee ſuch contents as the flower of thine age do call for: onely I would have thee carefull not to exceed the bounds of temperance and moderation, but by the vanity of things preſent, and certainty of future judgment, to compoſe thy mind to ſobriety in enjoying, and to a readineſſe to depart from theſe vain delights, as Gal. 5. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 16. enjoy pleaſures, but be not drowned in them; uſe honeſt delights, but be not a ſlave unto them: Thou ſeeſt that all here is Vanity, that the faſhion of this world, the power, wealth, honour, pleaſures, ſtrength, health, beauties thereof, all vaniſh and paſſe away, and that all of us muſt be brought before Gods tribunall; and all our actions undergo a ſevere tryal: therefore let it be thy chiefeſt care to provide for that accompt. But the place is much more emphaticall, if we underſtand the Conceſſion Ironically; as 1 Reg. 18. 27. & 22. 15. Ezek. 28. 3 4. Matth. 26. 45. Since thou art wilful and ſcornful, take thy courſe Rejoyce in thy youth, or, becauſe thou art young, ſtrong, healthful and thy bones full of marrow, Job 21. 23. 24.

And let thine heart cheer thee] Symmachus, ἐν ἀγαθῷ ἔστω, Let it be wholly in good, or in delights.

and walk in the wayes of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes] Do what thou pleaſeſt let thy wanton and wandring eye enflame the luſts of thy heart, and let thy ſenſuall heart give law to thy whole man, deny not thy ſelf any thing which heart can wiſh, or eye look on, Numb. 15. 39. 1 John 2. 16. 2 Pet. 2. 14. & 3. 2. Ezekiel 23. 16, Joſhua 7. 21. Jerem. 18. 12. Pſalm 81. 12. Job 21. 7. Thus ſharply doth the Lord deride the pride and folly of young men in their career of Luſt and Vanity, and as it were give them over to their own hearts deſires, Prov. 1. 24——28. Rom. 1. 28.

But know thou] Though thou endeavour to blind thine own eyes with ſenſual delights, to ſmoother thy conſcience, and to baffle thoſe principles of fear and reſtraint which God hath planted in thee; Though thou wouldſt not ſee yet thou ſhalt ſee and know to thy coſt, Iſaiah 26. 11. 1 Reg. 22. 25. 2 Pet. 3. 5.

that for all theſe things] For all the ſins, vanities, and exceſſes of thy youth, for all thoſe things which are now ſo grateful to thy ſenſes, though they pleaſe thine eye, they will gnaw and ſting thy conſcience, Job 13. 26. Pſal. 25. 7. God, whoſe Word and fear thou now deſpiſeſt, from whoſe eye thou canſt not hide thy ſins, from whoſe Tribunall thou canſt not withdraw thy conſcience; will bring thee] Perforce whether thou wilt or no, when thou ſhalt in vain call to Mountains and Rocks to hide thee, Rev 6. 16. Luke 23. 30.

into judgement] The judgement of the great day, Jude verſe 6. called the Terrour of the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 10. Acts 17. 30. the conſideration whereof ſhould abate the heat of luſt, and cauſe the heart of young men to tremble at the wrath to come.

V. 10. Therefore remove ſorrow from thine heart, and put away evil from thy fleſh; for childhood and youth are vanity] This is not to be underſtood Ironically, as the former words of the verſe foregoing, nor in that ſenſe; but ſeriouſly, as a ſeaſonable precept unto young men, who are of all other men, by reaſon of the heat of their blood, ſubject unto paſſions and unto pleaſures; the one ſeated in the heart, the other in the fleſh; from both which, he doth here forewarn them.

Remove ſorrow, or anger and indignation from thine heart] If we read it ſorrow, then hereby is meant all thoſe ſinful pleaſures which though the deceitful heart look on as matter of joy, yet will certainly fill the heart with ſorrow at the laſt Prov. 14. 13. If Anger, or Indignation then the meaning is, that he ſhould reſtrain all Inordinate paſſions and perturbation of mind, eſpecially take heed of ſwelling or ſtorming at the will and wayes of God, or at any ſerious advice minding him thereof, James 1. 19. Job 6. 24.

and put away evil, ſinful luſts, from thy fleſh] From thy bodily members, Romans 6. 13. 1 Cor. 6. 15. 2 Cor. 7. 1. 1 Peter 2. 11. 2 Timothy 2. 22. and ſo ſome underſtand the word fleſh, in the ſenſe as it is uſed, Ezek. 16 26. & 23. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 10. Jude verſe 23.

for childhood and youth are vanity] The reaſon of this advice, drawn from the vaniſhing condition of youth and the pleaſures thereof: Youth is but as the Aurora of early morning of a day quickly gone, from thence to noon and from noon to night, therefore care ſhould be uſed to ſpend it in ſuch a manner, as that we may have an abiding fruit, and pleaſure which will not vaniſh with the yeares which were conſumed in the purſuance of it.

CHAP. XII.

IN this Chapter, the Wiſe man proceedeth to demonſtrate the Vanity of youth and old age, which both quickly run into death, and then concludeth the whole Book.

He had before by an Emphatical Ironie, deterred young men from thoſe inordinate paſſions, and ſenſual pleaſures, which that ſlippery age is moſt ſubject unto, and that by the Conſideration of that dreadful accompt which in the laſt Judgement God will require of them. And becauſe that age of all other is moſt apt to put the evill day far from them, and to look on death and Judgement as at a great diſtance (as evil men uſe to do, Ezek. 12. 27. 2 Pet. 3. 3, 4. Amos 6. 3, 5. therefore he doth by a prolepſis prevent that ſhift; Young men might be apt to ſay, the things you preſſe us unto are good, but we ſhall have time enough before Judgement come, to think of them, old age will be a fit ſeaſon to draw off from the world, and to draw nigh to God. Solomon here perſwades from ſo dangerous a reſolution, ſhewing the neceſſity of ſeeking and ſerving God in our youth, in regard old age will be very unfit to begin ſo great a work in.

Whereupon he ſheweth, 1. The Vanity of old age, ſetting it forth by a large and an elegant Allegory, and by other expreſſions, verſe 2——6.

2. He preſſeth the ſame duty by another argument, from the approach of death, which taketh away all meanes of repentance and converſion, verſe 7. And having thus by an Induction of many particulars ſhewed the Vanity both of the Creatures here below, and of the Condition of man under the Sun, who, were they never ſo excellent, could not long enjoy them; He doth conclude the whole book, 1. With reſuming his firſt concluſion, verſe 8. 2. By vindicating the truth of his doctrine therein, and in other his Writings, by arguments; 1. From the Pen-man of them, His Piety, he was a penitent Convert; His wiſdom: His fidelity in teaching the people: His diligence, in ſeeking out choyce matters to teach them: His ſucceſs in compoſing many excellent and profitable Sentences for their furtherance in piety, vertue, and prudence, verſe 9.

2. From the Quality of the doctrine which he taught, which he commendeth, 1. Abſolutely, and for it ſelf, in regard, 1. Of the pleaſantneſſe. 2. The uprightneſſe. 3. The truth of it, verſe 10. The Efficacy of it, ſet forth by two ſimilitudes of goades, and of nailes. 5. The Authority of it, 1. In regard of the office of thoſe who diſpence it, they are Maſters of the Aſſemblies. 2. In regard of the great Shepherd of the ſheep, by whoſe Spirit it was revealed, verſe 11.

2. He commendeth it Comparatively, from the Vanity of all other ſtudies and learning without this; All other Books are made without end or number, and read without ſatisfaction or content; by theſe a man may be admoniſhed; by others he can be onely wearied, verſe, 12.

And having thus demonſtrated the Doctrine he had in this book delivered, he cloſeth the whole with a moſt grave and ſolemn concluſion, containing 1. A ſummary abridgment of the meanes of perfect Happineſs and Tranquillity of mind, in two words, fear and obedience, fear of God in the heart, as the root; Obedience of his Will in the life, as the fruit of that holy fear, verſe 13.

2. A ſtrong motive thereunto drawn from the future Judgement, upon which and that finall ſentence of Abſolution or Condemnation then to be pronounced, the everlaſting Happineſs or miſery of man ſtandeth; verſe 14. He will bring every work to Judgement, therefore keep his commandements: he will bring every ſecret thing to judgement, therefore fear him, and ſanctifie him in your hearts.

Verſe 1. R*emember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, while the evill daies come not nor the yeares draw nigh when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no plaſure in them*] Remember] We are naturally apt to forget God, and not to retain him in our knowledge but to live, as it were, without him, Pſalm 10. 4, 5. Epheſ. 2. 12. and this moſt of all, when earthly and ſenſuall objects draw the heart with a ſtronger attraction; therefore the Wiſe man, having diſſwaded young men from youthfull luſts, doth here exhort them as a neceſſary meanes thereunto, to remember their Creator, To ſet the Lord alwayes before their eyes, Pſalm 16. 8. to be in his fear all the day long, Proverbs 23. 17. To compoſe themſelves unto his ſervice, to keep in memory, to hold faſt, to ponder, and ſtir up the thoughts of him, and deſires towards him in their hearts, 1 Cor. 15. 2. Titus 1. 9. Proverbs 4. 4. Luke 8. 15. Deuter. 11. 18. Pſalm 119. 11. Luke 2. 51. This Remembrance imports love, deſire, obedience, Verba notitiæ connotant affectus, Pſal. 119. 55. Iſa. 26. 8. 9.

We find Two Pſalms amongſt Davids, with this Inſcription, To bring to Remembrance, ſo carefull was he not to forget the dealings of God with him. Pſal. 38. 1. Pſal. 70, 1. for this purpoſe were Sacraments inſtituted, Exodus. 12. 42. 1. Corinth. 11. 24. Feaſtivals ordained to keep alive the memory of mercies, Eſther 9. 27, 28. Stones and monuments erected for the remembring of Gods goodneſs, Joſhua 4. 6, 7. the Law written on door-poſts, fringes, frontlets to keep ever in mind, Deut, 6. 7, 8 9. for this purpoſe God hath appointed his ordinances, and given his Spirit to his Church, to put them in remembrance, 2 Peter 1. 12. 1 Tim. 4. 6. John 14. 26.

thy Creator] This word includeth many reaſons, why God ought to be remembred and ſerved by us.

1. He made us and not we our ſelves, and we owe our ſervice to him from whom we receive our Being, Pſalm 100. 2. 3. Remember he made all things for himſelf, we are of him, therefore we muſt live to him, Prov. 16. 4. Iſa. 43. 21. Rom. 11. 36. & 14. 7, 8.

2. He made us after his own image, to know him, and to have ſpecial intereſt in him, and acquaintance with him; and being made like him, we are the more obliged unto his ſervice, Eph 4. 23, 24.

3. By that power which created us, we are continually preſerved; if he withdraw it, we preſently periſh In him we live and move and have our being. The more vigour and ſtrength we have, the more ſenſible we ſhould be of that divine ſupportance, which continueth it unto us, Acts 17. 27——30. Pſalm 104. 28 29.

4. He who hath power to create, hath power to deſtroy; and he will ſhew the ſame almighty power, in deſtroying thoſe, who live not ſuitable to the ends of their Creation, 1 Sam. 2 6, 8. 2 Theſ. 1. 9. This creating power of God, ſhould teach us to fear him, Jer. 5. 22.

in the dayes of thy youth] The choiceſt time of thy life, Lam. 3. 27. Proverbs 22. 6. 2 Chron. 34. 1, 2, 3. 2 Timothy 3. 15 Pſalm 119. 9. therefore God required, that the firſt ripe fruits ſhould be dedicated unto him, Exodus 23. 19. and the firſt born his Exodus 22. 29. And his ſacrafices he would have to be young, Exodus 12. 5. & 29. 1. Lev. 4. 3. We enjoy mercies in our youth, therefore we ſhould do duty in our youth; we expect eternall life from God therefore we ſhould not withdraw any part of our temporal life from him. He requireth to be ſerved with all our ſtrength, therefore we may not put him off till our ſtrength is gone.

before the evill dayes come, &c.] If thou wilt have God to pity and help thee in thy evill dayes, thou muſt ſerve him in thy good dayes. The dayes of old age are called evil dayes, ætas mala, in Plautus; becauſe they bring many pains and troubles along with them: vitæ hyems, the Winter of our life as Solon called it, nam res plurimas peſſimas cum advenit affert. As the dayes of youth are called, ætas bona, in Cicero and ætas optima in Seneca: Becauſe then nature is ſtrong and vigorous, and doth moſt fully enjoy it ſelf. Thine old age will bring evils enough of its own, Do not thou bring upon it the bitterneſs and burden of all thy youthful follies; repentance is a hard work, when thy ſinnes are fewer, and thy ſtrength greater: When infirmities bend thy back, do not keep thine iniquities to break it. Since the dayes of old age will be evill dayes, Lay up as many graces as thou canſt to ſweeten it, as many comforts as thou canſt to ſtrengthen thine heart againſt the evils of it. Gather, in Summer, againſt ſuch a Winter as this, Prov. 10. 5. That old age may not be to thee an evil age, but as it was to Abraham, a good old age. Gen 25. 8.

And the years wherein thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them] This ſeems to be added, as an aggravation of the evill of thoſe evill dayes, that if they be lengthened into years, yet all that while a man can finde no matter of pleaſure or content, whole years together ſhall be full of wearineſs and ſorrow. So Job complains of the length of his miſery, that he poſſeſſed moneths of vanity, Job 7. 3. and Ezekiah, Iſaiah. 38. 12, 13, 15. The very ſtrength of the years of an old man, is all labour and ſorrow, Pſalm 90. 10.

V. 2. While the Sun, or the light, or the Moon, or the ſtars be not darkned; nor the clouds return after the rain] Theſe words may be underſtood either Literally, or Allegorically, as thoſe that follow. Literally, the meaing is, That unto old men, by reaſon of the decay of their ſenſes, even the lighteſt bodies ſeem to be darkned; they look upon the Sunne, at noone through the clouds and ſcales which are over their own eyes. And whereas it is a pleaſant thing to behold the Sunne, Chapter 11. 7. this ſhall miniſter no delight at all unto them: Light is little worth unto a man that is in miſery, Job 3. 20, 23. Allegorically, It is by ſome underſtood ſo, as that the Sunne, Moon, Starrs, Light, may referre unto ſome parts in man, ſignified thereby; (as the other parts of the Allegory enſuing do) and thus: Firſt, the Chaldee Paraphraſe referreth it unto the face, and eyes; Before the glory and beauty of thy face be changed, and the light of thine eyes be darkned, and the comlineſs of thy cheeks be abated, and the Apples of thine eyes, the Starrs of thy countenance, be extinguiſhed; and thine eye-lids drop down tears, as Clouds after rain. Secondly, others underſtand it of the weakning of the inward vigor of the ſoul, and rational faculties; Underſtanding, Perſpicacy, Memory, Judgement, Phancy; all which in the nature of man, anſwer to the celeſtial Lights. Others, by Sunne. Moon, Starrs, and Light, underſtand the various ſorts and degrees of proſperity and joy, which men meet with in their younger years: and ſo the ſenſe to be, Remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, before thoſe evil dayes come, wherein all thy light ſhall be turned into darkneſs all thy proſperity into ſorrow, before greater and leſſer comforts do all fail thee, and thy dayes and nights be full of trouble and darkneſs, one calamaty (like ſtormes of the winter) coming upon the neck of another. Proſperity is uſually in Scripture compared unto the Sunne, and to light, Judg. 5. 31. 2 Sam. 23. 4. and in greater proſperity, than uſual, the light of the Moon is ſaid to be as the light of the Sunne, and the light of the Sunne ſeven fold, Iſaiah 30. 26. & 60. 20. And on the other ſide, when great afflictions, ſuch as ſwallow up all former joy and contentments, come upon a man; the Scripture expreſseth it by the obſcurity, blackneſs, and falling of the Sunne, Moon and Starrs, Iſaiah 13. 9, 10, 11. Iſaiah 24, 20——23 & 34. 4, 3. Jerem. 4. 23, 24. & 15. 9. Ezek. 32. 7, 8. Joel 2. 10. & 3. 15. Amos 8. 9 Matth. 24. 29, And this ſenſe ſeemeth moſt genuine, as expreſſing the reaſon, why the dayes of old age are evill dayes, and years wherein a man hath no pleaſure, becauſe, both day and night, the life of ſuch a man is full of darkneſs ond trouble. Therefore mention is made of Sun, and of Moon and Starrs, to note the inceſſant pains, aches troubles, weakneſs which this age is afflicted with, Job 7. 4, 13, 14, 18, 19. Pſalm 32. 4.

nor the clouds return after rain] This likewiſe may be underſtood generally of the troubles of old age; in the former ſenſe, to note the continual returns of them day nd night. A proverbial ſpeech, expreſſing the conſtant ſucceſſion of one grief, pain, diſeaſe, calamity, after another; as when the Wether is ſet into rain, one cloud is no ſooner blown over, but another ſucceeds and brings more rain: Velut unda ſupervenit undæ. Others underſtand it of the Catarrhs, and defluxions, which by reaſon of natural weakneſſe, and want of heat to concoct them, do ſtill aſcend from the ſtomack to the head, and from thence fall down upon the breaſt and lungs; ſo that the head is ever rainie, never ſerene.

The former ſenſe ſeems moſt pertinent, becauſe in this verſe, is a generall deſcription of the miſeries of old age, the particular ſpecification whereof followes in the reſt. For as Uſurers, before the whoſe debt is paid, ſo fetch away ſome good parts of it for the loan: ſo before the debt of death be paid by the whole body, Old age doth, by little and little, take away ſometimes one Sence, ſometimes another, this yeare one Limb, the next another; and cauſeth a man, as it were, to dye daily. No Sunne can diſpell the clouds and ſorrows of old age, but Chriſt, who is the Sunne of Righteouſneſſe, and the bright morning Star, Mal. 4. 2. Proverbs 4. 18 Revel. 22. 16.

V. 3. In the day when the keepers of the houſe ſhall tremble, and the ſtrong men ſhall bow themſelves, and the grinders ceaſe, becauſe they are few, and thoſe that look out of the windowes ſhall be darkned] The body is here compared to an Houſe, or Caſtle, ſo elſewhere called, Job 4. 19. 2 Cor. 5. 1. which hath Watch-men and Keepers; to preſerve it from being broken open. By theſe, ſome underſtand the outward Sences, which obſerve any danger approaching, and give timely notice of it to have it prevented. Others, the inward faculties of the Memory, Wiſdom, Providence, which take ſpecial care of the common ſafety. Others and the moſt, The Hands and Armes, which are the principal inſtruments, which the body uſeth in repelling any evill from it. Others, underſtand the Ribs, whereby the vitall parts are fenced and hedged in, that danger may not eaſily come neer them: As the expreſſion is, Job 10. 11. Though the Verb, Tremble, ſeem to carry the ſenſe chiefly unto the Hands and Arms, which are more ſubject unto palſies, and ſhakings; yet it is not amiſs to take in many of the other; The Head, the ſeat of the Sences, as the Watch-man; the Arms, as the Souldiers in the Caſtle; the Ribs, as the walls or works which ſerve to defend it: All which are much ſhaken and weakned in old age.

and the ſtrong men ſhall bow themſelves] The Leggs and Thighs, which were wont to carry the body upright, ſhall now falter, and ſhrink under their weight, and buckle for feebleneſſe, Iſa. 35. 3. Or, the Back, which is the ſtrongeſt part of the body for bearing burdens, ſhall bow and ſtoop under its own weight. Symmachus rendreth it, διαφθαρῶσιν, ſhall periſh, or be corrupted; the Septuagint, διαστραφῶσιν, ſhall be preverted, ſhall, as it were, trip up and ſupplant one the other with crooked and unſteady motion, The old Wife in the Comedian, excuſed her ſlow and faltering pace, becauſe ſhe carried a very heavy burden, the weight of ſeventy four yeares. Caietan underſtandeth it literally, when the ſtrongeſt men that are do fail, and ſtoop through weakneſſe.

and the grinders ceaſe becauſe they are few] Dentes molares, the great jaw-teeth, Wherewith we grind our meat, ſhall ceaſe and be unable to work, becauſe they are diminiſhed and made few, or becauſe they do diminiſh their grinding, being ſluggiſh and dull, both for want of ſtrength in themſelves, and of appetite in the ſtomack.

and thoſe that looke out of the windowes ſhall be darkened] The Vulgar, per foramina, through the holes; as Zach. 14. 12. It is elſewhere rendred, Windowes, 2 Reg. 7. 19. Iſaiah 60. 8. Gen. 8. 2. So it is underſtood of the dimneſſe of the eyes in old men, Gen. 27. 1. & 48. 10. Solomon Glaſſius in his Rhetorica Sacra, by Windows underſtandeth Spectacles, which for weakneſſe of ſight, aged men are neceſſitated to uſe: Caietan applieth it to all the ſenſes; and by foramina underſtandeth the holes of the ears, Noſe, Mouth, a wel as of the eyes. All theſe for want of vital ſpirits, being blunted and dulled in their exerciſe. But the words, [looking out] and [darkned] plainly limit the meaning unto the ſight onely, which through the want of ſpirits, drineſſe, and ineptitude of the Organes, hardneſſe of the membranes, defluxion of humours, and other inconveniencies, is much weakned in aged men. So that it is noted as a ſtrange thing in Moſes, that when he was a hundred and twenty years old, his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated, Deut. 34. 7. and the like we read of Caleb, Joſh. 14. 10, 11.

By theſe infirmities, we ſhould be taught, in our younger years, to provide, and lay in comforts againſt them, and not to truſt in the ſtrength of our own Armes, which are ſo eaſily broken, but to make the Lord our Arme, and his Right hand our keeper, whoſe Armes are everlaſting, Iſaiah 33. 2. Deuter. 33. 27. Pſalm 121. 5. Not to reſt upon our own bottom, nor ſtay onely upon our own ſtrength, by which no man ſhall be eſtabliſhed, 1 Samuel 2. 9. but to make the Lord our ſtay and ſupport, in whom there is everlaſting ſtrength; He is eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, he giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength, Pſal 18. 18. Iſa. 26 4. & 40. 29. & 41. 10. Pſal. 145. 14.

V. 4. And the doors ſhall be ſhut in the ſtreets, when the ſound of the grinding is low, and he ſhall riſe up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of muſick ſhall be brought low] Various interpretations are given of theſe particulars. Some underſtand the firſt clauſe, literally, The doors of the houſe, by which he was wont to go into the ſtreets, to viſit his friend, to walk up and down about his buſineſſe; ſhall be now ſhut up; He ſhall, by reaſon of his many infirmities, keep within doors, and abſtain from all publique meetings, wherein, in his younger years, he was wont greatly to delight. Others, refer it allegorically to the Body, here compared to an Houſe, the doors whereof towards the ſtreet, are, in old age, ſhut up, and made uſeleſſe. VVhereby many things are underſtood. Firſt, The two Lips, which are the doors of the mouth outwardly, Pſalm 141. 3. The word is in the duall number. Or, The Mouth, which is the door of the heart: This may be applyed both unto eating, and unto ſpeech, unto the æſophagus, and the arteria, the paſſages for the meat to go down to the ſtomak, and for the breath to go to the lungs, called fiſtula cibaria, and fiſtula ſpiritualis. Theſe pipes are haply here compared unto the ſtreet, or paſſage down into ſeverall parts within the body. which have doors or covers, that open one way, and ſhut another way when we eat and drink, that our food may go right to the ſtomack, and not awry to the lungs. Theſe doors in old age, are, through weakneſs, ſhut up, and as it were off from their hinges, do not ſo pliantly and readily, do their proper office, as they were wont to do. Whence difficulty of ſwallowing, and difficulty of ſpeaking; unto which two, moſt of the interpretations of this place, may be referred. Some by the two doors, underſtand the eye-lids, when they are weak, and hang down over the eyes. Others, All the ſenſes, which are the outward doors, by which objects enter, and are admitted to the ſoul, All which, in old age, are ſo weakned, and unuſeful, that they do very little ſervice.

The next clauſe, ſeems moſt to favour that ſenſe, which by doors, underſtands the paſſages of the meat, down into the ſtomach, and of the voice from the lungs, unto both which uſes, the teeth are greatly ſubſervient.

when the ſound of the grinding is low] This ſome apply unto hearing, when that grows weak. Others, unto the Concoction of the ſtomach, when that is decayed: but the moſt probable interpretation is that which applies to the teeth, which being few and weak, cannot readily cruſh and break harder meats, and ſo make a leſſer ſound in eating, than young men do; frangendus miſero gingiva panis inermi. When the teeth are gone, the lips are compreſſed the mouth falls down, the organs of feeding and ſpeaking are much diſabled. They who take the former clauſes literally, joyn the ſenſes thus together. Old men ſtay within doors, and walk little abroad becauſe the weakneſſe of their appetite and digeſtion doth cauſe them to eat little, whereby their ſtrength is much abated, neither do they for this reaſon care to go to feaſts, or merry meetings, al deſires and delights being in them wholly decayed and broken.

and he ſhall riſe up at the voice of the bird] At the chirping or ſinging of any little bird.] An expreſſion of the little ſleep which old men have, by reaſon of the coldneſſe of their ſtomack, and difficulty of Concoction, ſending up fewer vapours to the brain, or leſſe benigne ſo that they are eaſily awakned with every little noiſe. It may alſo be underſtood of his wearineſſe to lye long in his bed, by reaſon of leanneſſe and aches, ſo that he is willing to riſe as early as the birds leave their neſts.

and all the daughters of muſick ſhall be brought low] By daughters of muſick, we may underſtand, 1. Some organs of the body tending unto muſick, either to ſing our ſelves, as the arteriæ for ſpeaking, thoſe fibræ vocales which are bended and inflected in ſinging, or the ear which judgeth of ſounds, as the palate of meats, when we hear others ſing; or ſecondly. All kind of muſical conſort and harmony, Vocall or Inſtrumental, which young men greatly delight in, as Solomon did. Eccleſ 2. 8. but to old men are little delightful, they can neither ſing themſelves, nor are greatly pleaſed with the muſick of others, 2 Samuel 19. 34, 35. By theſe defects we are inſtructed in the dayes of our youth, to open all the doors of our heart to let Chriſt in, that in old age he may be with us, and when our appetite faileth us, he may ſup with us, Revel. 3. 20, and when our ſleep faileth us, he may give us reſt; and when all other delights are worn out, a good conſcience may be a continual feaſt, 15. 15. and may give ſongs in the night, Job 35. 10. Eph. 5. 19.

V. 5. Alſo when they ſhall be afraid of that which is High, and fears ſhall be in the way, and the Almond tree ſhall flouriſh, and the graſhopper ſhall be a burden, and deſire ſhall fail; becauſe man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the ſtreets.] Theſe are further degrees of the infirmities of old age when it growes now more decrepit, and neer unto the grave.

Alſo when they ſhall be afraid of that which is High] Either to goe up to any high place, for fear of wearineſſe or want of breath or giddineſſe of brain, or diſability to hold out, or danger of falling from it; or leſt any thing that is over them ſhould fall down upon them and hurt them, and fears ſhall be in the way] They ſhall go ſlowly and timerouſly, leſt they ſtumble at every ſtone or little bunch that is before them, leſt they be thruſt, and bruized by any that paſs by them, leaſt wearineſſe, ſickneſſe, or ſome other infirmity come upon them, and hinder them in their journey, leſt any thing run againſt them, and caſt them down; no way is ſo ſmooth and eaſie, wherein there will not be ſomething to affright them.

and the Almond tree ſhall flouriſh) This ſome take literally, when the Almond flouriſheth, in the beginninh of the ſpring, when the graſhopper is fat in the middle of the Summer, then ſhall the deſires and delights (which in thoſe ſeaſons yong men were wont to take) fail them, they ſhall find no pleaſure in the moſt beautifull ſeaſons of the year. And ſo they make the ſpring to be deſcribed by the flowring of the Almond tree, which doth firſt bring forth bloſſomes Jer. 1.11. and the Summer, by the fatneſſe of the graſhopper, which then is moſt buſie. Others underſtand it of Averſation of ſenſual deſires, and from pleaſant fruits; as we find in Vatablus and Caietan, Omnis Cibus ſuavis reprobabitur: flocci faciet coitum ob multam debilitatem. But he ſeemeth to to carry on the Allegory, and to compare the ſpeed which old age makes to overtake a man, unto the Almond tree, which thruſts out her bloſſomes before any other tree. And as the flowers of the Almond are evident fore-runners of approaching Summer, ſo is old age of death. The moſt agreed ſenſe is of gray haires, which are here compared to the white flowers of an Almond tree, and are called flores Cæmiterii. So λευκανθὲς κάρα, in Sophocles, a white hoary head.

and the graſhopper ſhall be a burthen] The lighteſt hopp of ſo little a creature ſhall be burthenſome to him, he is impatient of any the ſmalleſt weight Allegoritally may be underſtood, either the bowing down of his back, and the ſticking out of the vertebra and bones thereof, which ſhall be a heavy weight unto him. Or, the legs which in a young man were as nimble as the legs of a graſhopper, ſhall now be heavy and ſwell'd with gowts and evil humours, ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe. The former ſenſe is moſt generall.

and deſire ſhall fail] The deſires of meat, drink, marriage, other pleaſures, whatever is delightful to the eyes, ears, palate, other ſenſes, ſhall all fail: A man ſhall abhor thoſe things which in youth his nature greatly inclined unto. Symmachus rendreth it, διαλυθῇ, ſhall be diſſolved, ſo ſome underſtand it of the mutual confederation between the ſoul and the body which will be looſned and broken. The Septuagint read it, διασκεδασθῇ ἡ κάππαρις; which word the Vulgar Latine retaineth, being a ſhrub, whoſe fruit, Gallen ſaith, is good for a weak appetite; and Avicen, ad irritandam Venerem; conſonant whereunto is the Chaldee Paraphraſe. Athenæus numbreth Capparis amongſt other hot and Salacious herbs.

Becauſe man goeth to his long home] Ad Domum Mundi ſui, hic enim mundus non eſt ſuus. So Caietan wittily, though impertinently, Domus Seculi, The long home is the Grave, whence men are never more to return into this world It is called a mans own and proper houſe, Iſa.14.18. They promiſe themſelves houſes for ever here, Pſalm 49 12 but they have no abiding home but in the grave, Job 7. 10. The body is Domus pernoctationis, but the Grave Domus æternitatis.

and the mourners go about the ſtreets.] Accompany the Herſe unto the grave, Jer.9. 17 Or his friends that viſit him, go from him mourning, and expecting his funeral. So we read of wailing in all ſtreets, Amos 5. 16. Thoſe hired mourners who with muſick were wont to praiſe the party deceaſed, (whereunto alludeth the Evangeliſt, Matth 9.23.) we read of in Varro, lib.6.de lingua latin. vid Scalig. ib.

Now from theſe infirmities we may be inſtructed to take care, that amidſt our own fears we may be guarded by Angels, and led in our way, and upheld by the Lords right hand: who hath promiſed to give his Angels a charge to keep us in our wayes, and to make his way plain before our eyes, that we may have plain paths for our feet to walk in, and every high thing may be taken down, Pſalm 34. 7. Gen. 48. 16. Pſalm 91. 11. Pſalm 37, 24. Prov.15. 19. Pſalm 27. 11. Pſalm 5. 8. Heb. 12. 13. Iſa. 40. 4. Luke 3.4,5, 6. 2 Cor. 10.5. to be trees of righteouſneſſe, and then we ſhall bring forth fruit and flouriſh in old age, Pſalm 92. 12, 13, 14. When we can bear no burthen our ſelves If the Lord be ours, we may caſt all our burthens on him who careth for us, and will ſuſtain us, Pſalm 55. 22 And when all other deſires fail, Let us labour to be in ſuch a preparation for death, as that we may ſay with Old Simeon, Lord now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace; and with Paul, I deſire to depart and to be with Chriſt which is beſt of all, Phil. 1.23 And ſince the grave is our longeſt home, let our greateſt care be to have that a Houſe of reſt and of Hope unto us, Chriſt by his lying in it hath ſweetned it unto believers. Laſtly, Let us ſo live, as that we may dye without fear, and they who bewail us, may not mourn as they who have no hope, 1 Theſ. 4.13.

V. 6. Or ever the ſilver Cord be looſed, or the golden bowle be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the Ciſtern. Some underſtand this verſe literally, 1. Of the ornaments, 2. Of the more needful inſtruments of life, whether they be more obvious and eaſie to come by, as to draw water out of a Fountain with a pitcher; or more remote, which are not gotten without labour and coſt, as the drawing of water out of a deep well with a wheel and chain. And ſo the meaning runs thus, Remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, before God ſtrip thee of thine ornaments wherein thou now rejoyceſt, Thy plate, chaines, rings, jewels, bracelets, which will then be too heavy for thee to wear, nec ſufferre potes majoris pondera gemmæ: 2. Before he ſpoyl thee of the other helps and Commodities of life and make both thine extraordinary ornaments and thine ordinarie utenſils all uſeleſſe unto thee: or happly, in this ſenſe, the former clauſe may relate unto rich men, Let not thy ſilver and gold bewitch thee: the latter unto meaner men, Let not thy pitcher and thy wheel take of thee from minding the things of another and a better life. Others carry on the Allegory, making theſe things figuratiue and elegant expreſſions of death, and of thoſe evils which immediatly forego it, to wit, the diſſolution of theſe parts which are moſt vital: for death, as in the ſtorming or battering of a Garriſon, doth firſt break and weaken the outworks, the bodily limbs, and outward ſenſes, and after that ſets upon the inworks, and the Vitals. He here compareth Life unto a Fountain, or Well, out of which men draw water with a Cord, a bowle, or bucket, a pitcher and a wheel. And as when theſe are broken we can draw water no more, ſo when the vital parts are decayed, there is no hope longer to draw life into the body which is the Ciſtern. This Life he compares, for the pretiouſneſſe of it, unto ſilver and gold for the weakneſſe and fragility of it unto a pitcher, and for the inſtability and unſettledneſſe of it, unto a wheel.

Now beſides this general proportion between life and theſe things as the figures of it, Interpreters do make the particulars here mentioned to anſwer unto ſome particulars in the Vital parts of the body.

1. By the ſilver Cord, they underſtand the marrow or pith of the back, continued from the brain as it were in a cord or ſtring unto the bottom of the back-bone, and for the white colour of it, compared unto ſilver. It may alſo be applyed unto all the other Sinews and Ligaments of the body, which from the head, as the Fountain, conveigh ſenſe and motion upon the other parts. Hereby alſo may not unfitly be underſtood to the chain and ſweet harmony of the Elements and humours in the body, which being preſerved in its due proportion, the body doth receive life from the Soul which is the Spring thereof, but being once diſſolved, life preſently faileth.

2. By the Golden bowle, they underſtand the Meninx or skin wherein the brain and vital powers thereof are contained as in a bowle. Others underſtand the blood which is in the heart, as in the precious Fountain of life. Schindler rendreth it, Scaturigo Auri or aurea, and would have us thereby to underſtand the Law of God, which is compared unto Gold: but the word is elſewhere uſed to ſignifie a veſſel, Zach.4.2,3.

4. By the fountain, vve may underſtand thoſe principal parts from vvhence Vital ſupplies are dravvn into the body, as from the Head, Senſe and motion; from the Heart, ſpirits, and heat, from the Liver, blood

4. By the pitcher, and the wheel, thoſe inſtrumental and ſubſervient parts, vvhich from theſe conveigh thoſe ſupplies into the ſeveral veſſels of the body, as into a Ciſtern, as the veins, blood from the Liver, the arteries ſpirits from the heart, the Sinewes motion and ſence from the brain. By all vvhich vve ſhould learn to dravv vvater of life out of the well of ſalvation, that out of our belly may flovv rivers of living vvater, through the continual ſupplies of the Spirit of grace, that all our ſprings may be in Chriſt, and our life hidden vvith him in God, Iſa 14.3.& 66.11, 12. Zach. 13.1. John 4.14.and 7.38,39.

In the ſecond Chapter Solomon had ſhevved us, The many choyce varieties of pleaſure, riches, and other excellent outvvard bleſſings, in vvhich he had ſought for contentment: and in this Chapter he hath in a moſt elegant Allegory ſhevved us hovv quickly old age doth break them all, and take avvay the comfort of them.

V. 7. Then ſhall the duſt return to the earth, as it was: and the ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it.] The duſt, that is, The body, to ſhevv the Original of it, Gen. 2.7. The weakneſſe of it, duſt is the vveakeſt part of earth, Pſalm 103. 14 The baſeneſſe and vileneſſe of it, Job 4. 19. Phil 3.21. Gen. 18. 17. Job 30. 19 Our Original from the duſt, Our return unto the duſt, ſhould humble us, and make us vile in our ovvn eyes annd ſhould vvarn us to make haſt to ſecure a better life before this be ended, and not to put off the endeavours tovvards it unto old age, vvhich haply vve may never attain unto, and if vve do, vvill bring it ſelf vvork enough for us to do. Death is ſvvift, and uncertain: Sinne the longer lived in, doth the more harden: Repentance is not in our call or command vvhen vve pleaſe: and it is a vvork of the vvhole man, and the vvhole life: The vvork deferred vvill be greater, the time to do it in vvill be ſhorter, the ſtrength to do it by vvill be leſſe, bodily infirmities vvill diſable ſpirituall actions. God vvill have leſſe honour and ſervice from us, and vve ſhall have more ſorrovv, and leſſe comfort. Therefore remember thy Creator, before the duſt return to the Earth vvhence it came.

And the ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it.] The Soul is called a Spirit, to note the Immaterial ſubſtance of it, and its original, It came from him who is the Father of ſpirits, Heb. 12. 9 Gen. 2. 7.

ginall

ſhall return unto God that gave it] Ut ſtet Judicii ante Deum ? That it may appear before his Tribunal to be judged: as the Chaldee well paraphraſeth the place. As certainly as the body goeth unto the duſt; ſo certainly the Soul returneth unto God to be judged. The godly are tranſlated into Paradice, into Abrahams boſome, into the condition of juſt men made perfect, Luke 16. 22. and 23. 43. Hebrewes 12. 23. The wicked into the priſon of diſobedient ſpirits, reſerved there in Hell unto the judgement of the great day, Luke 16. 23. 1 Pet. 3. 19.

V. 8. Vanity of Vanities ſaith the Preacher, All is Vanity] As Mathematicians having made their denomination, doe then reſume their principal concluſion with a quod erat demonſtrandum : ſo here the VViſe man having made a large and diſtinct demonſtration, That the Happineſs of man doth not ſtand in Any, or in All the Contents which the world can afford, both in regard of their diſproportion unto him. and their diſcontinuance with him, He doth hereby conclude his diſcourſe, 1. VVith a confident affirming what he had in the beginning undertaken to prove.

2. VVith a ſtrong and ſolid Vindication thereof from any Cavills, which might yet ariſe in the minds of men againſt it.

3. VVith a Poſitive Concluſion containing the ſumme of the whole Booke, and the right means unto true Happineſſe indeed.

V 9. And moreover, becauſe the Preacher was wiſe, he ſtill taught the people Knowledge: yea, he gave good heed, and ſought out, and ſet in order many Proverbs. V. 10. The Preacher ſought to find out acceptable words; and that which was written was upright, even words of truth.] Here Solomon commendeth the Doctrine taught in this book:

1. Becauſe it was the Doctrine of a penitent Convert: for repentance is an excellent means to diſcern and acknowledge ſpirituall truth, 2 Tim. 2. 25. Jams 1. 21.

2. Becauſe he was indued with wiſedome from God, ſo that they came and ſent from remote Countreyes to heare him, 1 Reg. 4. 30. 31.

3. He uſed this wiſedome aright, he did not hide his Talent in a Napkin, but being taught of God himſelfe; he alſo Taught the People; and being converted himſelfe, he ſought to convert others, and hereby ſhewed himſelfe to be wiſe, and a Penitent indeed, Pſalm 51. 12, 13. John 4. 28, 29. John 1. 41, 45. Luke 2. 17. and 24. 33, 34, 35. Proverbs 11. 30.

4. Becauſe, he was exceeding conſiderate in the Doctrine, he taught, he gave good heed unto it, and weighed it in the ballance of VViſedome. He was exceeding diligent to learne of others, and to ſtudy himſelfe. He was very perſpicacious and judicious, to ſelect choyce matter to teach the people, 1 Peter 1. 10.

5. Becauſe he had been exceeding ſucceſſefull in that diſquiſition, and had compoſed many excellent and wiſe Parables, for inſtruction in Piety, Vertue, and Prudence, 1 Reg. 4. 32.

Whereupon he doth, ſixthly, commend the Doctrine he taught from the nature and quality of it, 1. They were Verba deſiderii, pleaſant, delightful, acceptable words, ſuch as would be worthy of all entertainment, and miniſter ſolid comfort and refreſhment to the hearers, Pſalm, 19 10. 1 Tim. 1. 13

2. They were Verba Rectitudinis, equal and right words, not looſe, fabulous, amorous, impertinent, which ſhould ſatisfie the itch of the ear, or tickle onely a wanton fancy; but they were profitable and wholeſome words, he did ſo ſeek to pleaſe men, as that it might be unto edification and for their profit, 1 Cor. 10 33. 2 Tim. 3. 16. words written to make men ſound and upright, Proverbs 8. 8. to make their paths direct and ſtraight, without falſeneſs or hypocriſie.

3. They were Verba veritatis, words of truth and infallible certainty, which would not deceive or miſguide thoſe that ſhould yield up themſelves to the direction of them, Pſalm 19. 9 Joh. 17. 17 A truth which is ſanctifying and ſaving, Epheſ. 1. 13. and in theſe reſpects moſt worthy of our attention and belief. Many other books Solomon wrote, beſides thoſe which we now have mentioned, 1 Reg. 4. 32, 33. 2 Chron. 35 4. See Ioſephus Antiquit. lib. 8. cap. 2. Pineda de Rebus Solomonis, lib. 3. Sixtus Senenſis Biblioth, lib. 2.

V. 11. The words of the wiſe are as goads, and as nails, faſtned by the Maſters of Aſſemblies, which are given from one ſhepherd.] Before, he ſhewed the Internal Quality of the Doctrine taught in the Church; here, he ſheweth the uſe of vertue, Efficacy and Authoritie thereof, and that by two excellent Similitudes.

Firſt, Of Goads, ſententious and conciſe parables and wiſe ſayings, have a notable acumen in them to ſtir up the heart unto attention and to urge our ſluggiſh affections forward unto obedience; as the Goad quickens the Ox unto labour. This is the nature of ſound and ſpiritual doctrine, it ſearcheth, pricketh, and exſtimulateth the hearers of it unto dutie, doth not flatter any in their ſins, or ſecuritie, but rouzeth them up, and awakneth them, Pſalm 45. 5. Iſa. 49. 2. Acts 2. 37. Heb. 4. 12. Shamgar with an Ox Goad ſlew ſix hundred Philiſtines, Iudg. 3. 31. Such is the power of the word to mortifie our luſts and corruptions.

Secondly, Of nails or ſtakes, by which we are faſtned and confirmed in our duties; a metaphor either from Smiths and Carpenters, who faſten their works together with nails; or from Shepherds, who faſten their hurdles and ſheep-pens together with ſtakes fixed in the ground, as likewiſe Tents were wont with cords, and pins or ſtakes to be pitched, Iſaiah 33. 20. and 54. 2. Iſaiah 22, 23. elſewhere the word is compared unto an Hammer, whereby theſe nails are thus faſtned, Ier. 23 29.

faſtned by the maſters of Aſſemblies] Or planted and fixed; ſo the Apoſtle compareth preaching unto planting, 1 Cor. 3. 6. and the Word is called λόγος ἔμφυτος, an implanted, or ingrafted word, Iames 1. 21. Some read the words thus, The words of the wiſe are as goads, and as nails faſtned, They are the maſters of Collections, or the choyceſt and moſt principal Collections, unto which no other writing is to be compared, unto which all other learning is to be an handmaid, waite upon it, and to be ſubſervient unto it: and thus they are a further commendation of the Scripure from the excellency and preeminency of them above all other writings. Others thus; As goads, and as nails fixed, quibus fiunt Coagmentationes or Collectiones, ſo that the nailes are the maſters of the Collections, according to the former ſenſe; They who forſake the VVord, have ſcattered, broken, disjoynted diſcompoſed minds and affections: But the word is of a knitting and uniting vertue, Epheſ. 4. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Col. 2. 19. Others by this expreſſion, underſtand thoſe who did collect the Doctrine of the holy men of God, and compoſe them in brief Summaries for the uſe of the Church: ſuch as were the ſervant of Hezekiah, Prov. 25. 1. like unto that Colledge of wiſe and learned men, whom Iuſtinian the Emperour imployed in gathering into one Body or Pandect the Abridgement of the civil Lawes, and likewiſe, thoſe Doctours, and Paſtours of the Church, whoſe work it is to faſten theſe nails in the hearts of the people by their Miniſtry; as Peter did in theirs to whom he preached, Acts 2 37. Theſe are all very ſound and mutual. conſiſtent ſenſes, which for ſubſtance agree in one end, to ſhew the efficacy of the word. The authority whereof is confirmed by the next clauſe, which are given from one Shepherd] Though the Collectors, Expounders, and publiſhers of the word be many, ſome Prophets, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtours and Teachers; yet the word it ſelf hath its original from One principal ſhepherd, the great Shepherd of the ſheep, and Maſter of the houſe; He by his Spirit inſpired it, and by the ſame Spirit aſſiſteth his Miniſters in the diſpenſation of it; It is he that ſpeaketh in them and by them, ſo long as they keep to their Commiſſion, and deliver nothing to the people but the counſel of God, and that which they have firſt received. Chriſt is here, as elſewhere, called a Shepherd, in purſuance of the metaphor of goads and ſtakes, whereby herdſmen drive their oxen, and ſhepherds pitch their caules, Iohn 10. 11. Heb. 13. 20. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Hereby then is noted, the Divine Authority of the holy Scriptures delivered by inſpiration unto the Pen-men thereof for the uſe of the Church. The Spirit of Chriſt being in thoſe that wrote them, 1 Pet. 1. 11. 2 Pet. 1. 21. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 2 Cor. 13. 3. Heb. 1. 1, 2. & 2, 3. 4. & 12. 25. And alſo the duty of Paſtours, to deliver nothing to the ſheep of Chriſt, but that which is his, and which cometh from himſelf, Ier. 23. 22. Iſa, 21. 10. 1 Reg. 22. 14. Ezek. 2. 7. Acts 5. 20 and 20 27. 1 Cor. 11. 23. Ezek 3. 4. 1 Pet. 4. 11. 1 Iohn 1. 1.

V. 12. And further, by theſe my ſonne, be admoniſhed: of making many bookes there is no end, and much ſtudy is a wearineſs of the fleſh.] And further, The Learned do by this word, joyn this verſe unto the three former, as an inference from them. And ſome render it thus, Quod reliquium eſt, that which remains, as the reſult of all this inquiry is this; That ſince the Preacher was wiſe and faithful, to ſeek out ſuch acceptable words, words of truth, conſonant to the doctrine of other wiſe men, effectual, as goads and nails, delivered from the great and chief ſhepherd of the flock: That I ſay, which hereupon remaines is this; That thou my ſonne, be admoniſhed by theſe words. Others begin the ninth Verſe thus, And rather, becauſe the Preacher was wiſe &c. and then here repeat it, And rather, I ſay, by theſe be admoniſhed, rather by theſe Doctrines of mine, than by any other humane and vain writings. Amplius, his cave quaras, ſo Vatablus: and quod plus eſt iſtis, cave ab iſto; ſo Cajetan. What ever others ſay, if they ſpeak not according unto theſe words, there is no wiſedome in them, and therefore no heed to be given unto them, Iſaiah 8. 20. Theſe are the moſt excellent monitors thou canſt have; from theſe thou mayeſt moſt richly be informed, and warned how to live, Pſalm 19. 11.

of making many bookes there is no end, &c.] An Argument to enforce the Exhortation, from the fruitleſneſſe and vanity of other ſtudies.

Firſt, There is no End of writing them; while one refutes what another wrote, another vindicates what his adverſary diſliked. If happineſſe were to be ſought for in humane writings; The Volums are ſo infinite, the opinions ſo endleſſe and various, that it would be impoſſible for any man to finde it out of them; when a man had with much curioſity and continuall reading wearied himſelf, and pined his fleſh away, he would finde it all an unprofitable, and an impertinent labour, wearineſſe to the body, without any ſatisfaction to the minde. Therefore let theſe words, ſo few, and yet ſo full be thy counſellous: He that will not be admoniſhed by thoſe, ſhall never be ſatisfied with any others: He that refuſeth the wheat, will be choaked with the chaff. Well may we ſay unto this one Shepherd, as Peter did, Lord, to whom ſhall we goe? thou haſt the words of eternal life, John 6. 68. Theſe onely are the Writings which make us wiſe unto ſalvation, and doe furniſh us throughly unto all good workes, 2 Timothy, 3. 15, 17. Others, are uſefull, in their Order: Theſe onely are the Rule of Faith and Life.

V. 13. Let us hear the concluſion of the whole matter; Fear God, and keep his Commandements: for this is the whole dutie of a man] Or, The whole End of the matter; or, the Summe and ſubſtance of the whole matter is heard; The diſcourſe of mans happineſſe, which in this Book I have undertaken, is at an end, no more need be ſaid of it; The ſumme of all is comprized in theſe two words, Fear God, Keep his Commandements; this is all man needs, to lead an happy life.

Let us hear the concluſion of the whole matter] This is an Exordium to ſtirre up attention; I will in two words give you an Abridgement of all that can be ſaid; therefore take ſpeciall heed to remember them. The Verſe begins with a great Letter in the Original]), which is as Buxtorf, in his Tiberias notes, to excite the more heed and attention, the whole ſumme of the duty of man, being contained in this ſhort ſaying, wherein he obſerveth the right order; for firſt, he begins with the internall root of all obedience and worſhip, which is, a filiall, reverend, awfull, and loving fear of God and his goodneſſe in the heart, Hoſea, 3 5. Proverbs 1. 7. Secondly, He proceedeth unto the fruit which groweth out of this root of filial fear and love, ſhed abroad in the heart, which is an equall, uniform, conſtant, univerſall obſerving of his Commandements; of all of them without partiality; of all of them, as his, in obedience to his authority, in acknowledgement of His Holineſſe in them, and of his Dominion and Soveraignty over us: Keep his Commandements out of fear to diſpleaſe him; out of conſcience to approve your ſelves unto him, out of care to bring glory to his Name, to teſtifie your thankfulneſſe for his mercies, and your conformitie to his Will.

Thus to fear God, and to keep his Commandements, is the whole of man; About this ſhould he ſpend all the ſtrength of his thoughts and cares; This is the ſumme of all, which man can, after all his writing, reading, ſtudying inquiring, in order unto happyneſs attain unto; This is the whole happineſſe of man, or, all the means which man can uſe to come unto happineſſe at the laſt: This is the baſis, and bottome of all that perfection which man is capable of; It is the whole dutie of man, and the duty of all men that will be happy, Iob 28. 28.

This, neceſſarily, takes in the Doctrine of Faith in Chriſt, becauſe without him we can doe nothing, by Faith in him the heart is purified to fear and love God; and by that fear and, love it is inclined to obey his Commandements, 1 Iohn 3 5. Iohn 14. 22.

V. 14. For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evill] This is a ſtrong motive unto fear and obedience; If the Excellency of the Doctrine doe not perſwade, let the Terrour of Gods judgement drive unto dutie, Becauſe he hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world in righteouſneſſe, Acts 17. 31. 2 Corinthians, 5. 9, 10. Romans 2. 16. and 14. 10.

with every ſecret thing] It is the day of the Revelation of Gods righteous judgement. Hypocriſie ſhall be diſcloſed, ſincerity ſhall be rewarded, becauſe nothing is hidden from him, Hebrewes 4. 13. All other things are vain, but it is not vain to fear the Lord. They that doe good, their works will follow them into Heaven; and they that doe evil, their works will hunt and purſue them into Hell.

ANNOTATIONS
On the SONG of SOLOMON.

The Argument.

IT will not be needfull to ſay much concerning this Book by way of Preface, becauſe ſuch things as are uſually delivered ſo, will be very proper for the explication of the firſt verſe of it, which is a compendious Preface to all the reſt, and contains under it not onely the Nature and Author of it, but alſo the matter, time, occaſion, end, and many other circumſtances, which are the common buſineſs of an Argument. All that needs of Introduction here, will be rather for the Annotations ſake, than for any thing elſe; and to vindicate them from raſh and harder cenſures, which they are apt to meet with. It is not unknown to the learned, what the obſcuritie and darkneſs of this Book hath ever been accounted, and what great varietie of Interpreters, and Interpretations have endeavoured to clear it, but with ſo ill ſucceſs, many times, that they have rather increaſed, than removed the Cloud: whileſt among ſo many hundreds of them, very few have done any thing leſs than what they pretended, and of all theſe ancient and later Volumes, and Libraries of Commentators, we find a very ſmall number that are anſwerable either to their own undertakings, or the Readers hopes. The reaſon whereof it is more eaſie to diſcover, than to remedy, nor can we expect a perfect redreſs untill we ſhall ſee face to face, and all theſe, and all other vails ſhall be removed. It is agreed on all hands, that the Book is an entire Allegory, full of profound myſteries, and ſecrets, for which cauſe the Jewes interdicted the reading of it, as of the firſt Chapter of Geneſis, and ſome part of Ezekiel, until the age of thirtie years, (which was their Sacerdotall age) when reaſon ſhould be grown riper, and the affections compoſed, and raiſed for ſo Divine a Contemplation: For ſuch they eſteemed it generally, though both among them, as well as other Readers, there were ſome that had lower conceptions of it, and received it as an hot carnal pamphlet, formed by ſome looſe Apollo or Cupid, rather than the holy inſpiration of the true God. But this blaſphemie hath periſhed with the fathers of it, and it is not now ſo much the dignity of this ſacred Monument is queſtioned, as the ſenſe of it; about which infinite digladiations and contentions have exerciſed all Ages of the Church, and whileſt every one pleads ſtrongly for his own Diana, it is become an harder work to underſtand, becauſe of ſo many diverſities of underſtandings. Yet it hath pleaſed God in ſo great confuſion to preſerve the main thing happily inviolable, and ſo far to ſubdue the reaſonings of luxuriant wits, as whatſoever Interpretation they have more ſpecially advanced, yet that few or none of them have refuſed that which you ſhall find imbraced and improved here. It is very eaſie for all men to erre even in plain things of this nature, how much more in Parables and riddles? Where no Interpretation can be ſo ſincere and indemnified as to pleaſe all conjectures, or to ſatisfie the various intereſts and ſpirits that inquire into them: But in ſo Catholick a conſent and harmonie as hath born witneſs to this way, though in ſome particulars and ſingle clauſes it may be the Fate of the moſt perſpicacious to be ſurpriſed, yet in that which is ſo univerſally and ſolemnly accepted, as it will ſeem a wilful errour to depart from it, and to chooſe ſolitary, and dangerous by-paths, where the open Road is ſo free and ſafe, ſo what can be expected in ſuch ſingularitie but many abſurdities, and implications, and violences offered to the Word and Truth? And ſo ſhall he that conſiders find it to have hapned not only to thoſe of the Church of Rome, who have doted upon ſuch inventions, but alſo to many of the reformed Churches, who have forſaken all guides, but their own phancie and intereſt in this work. And indeed how could it prove otherwiſe? For when men are grown proud diſdainers of others, and propoſe to themſelves a ſeparate Notion, which they reſolve to defend, what bold improbable, inſolent things will they not obtrude, and inſtead of an humble ſubmiſſion and reſpect to the Text, will raviſh it, and by an audacious force, compel and wreſt it to comply with them? This fault as I ſaid, we may lament in many of great parts, otherwiſe, among us, that were tranſported with ſtrange abſtruſe applications of this Scripture, and have preſumed to determine all things in it ſo and ſo, as if they had been of the Divine Counſel, and knew all his ſecrets, by reaſon of which preſumption, we may ſadly fear that it pleaſed God to give them up many times to themſelves, and permit them to produce ſuch opinions as are both ridiculous, and impious. I know there may be a falſe and unlawful reverence paid even to holy things, and that, that is negligence often, and ſuperſtition, which we call humilitie: I know God alloweth the learned a gracious liberty, and in difficult things, to abound in their owne ſenſe is not alwaies to violate or pervert the faith: but yet againe, he that undertakes ſuch operations, muſt be ſure to walk circumſpectly, to bring as well ſubmiſſe, as pure and holy ſpeculations, and not to ſeek unuſuall and rare, but ſolid and mature interpretations. He muſt remember that Allegories are not to be ſtrained too much, that ſimilitudes anſwer not in all lines, but in the cheifeſt; that many deep things concerning the Church lye hid in this Scripture, and in the Prophets, which are not yet fulfilled, nor diſcovered and that what remaines for the laſt times to be accompliſht, is yet as full of darkneſſe as wonder; known to God only, and untill he ſhall pleaſe to detenebrate it, unſearchable. He muſt remember laſtly, that one part of his duty is as great as another, that it concernes him to be wiſe unto ſobriety, as well as to be wiſe; to open doubtfull and intricate Scriptures with modeſty and moderation; that is according to the Analogy of Faith, the general peace and unity of the Church, and thoſe Chriſtian Canons of charity, piety, loyalty, and prudence, which tend not to ſubverſion, but to edifying: All which none are ſo likely to obſerve as they who moſt ſuſpect themſelves, and proceed in that beautifull tract, which the feet of the Prophets have both inlightned, and made ſmooth; which in this buſineſſe under our hands, is to look upon it, as generally it is acknowledged, that is, not as an hiſtory, or prophecy (as ſome conceive it) but as a divine Parable, wherein naturall and viſible things allegorize things ſupernaturall, and under the figures of Solomon and his Love, is ſhadowed the true Prince of peace, and his rich affections to his Church and people. And this is that genuine and ſpirituall explication, which as it is like Davids Tower defended with the ſhields of the mighty, ſo it is moſt full of heavenly and divine benefit, and moſt inſtrumentall inſtrumental to that great end, for which the Sciptures were given, and which every Chriſtian ſhould contend for, the improvment of his faith and manners. We reject not, we diſeſteem not the ſound & wholſom form that others have uſed; their alluſions, their collations of words and actions we diſpraiſe not: It is not denied, but this book may prophetically comprehend in little, all thoſe numerous occurrences and tranſactions which divine providence hath diſpenſed, or ſhal, in the Church ſince the firſt breath of that diſtreſſed Virgin, to the very laſt: But we ſay that theſe things are very hard to be divided, and to be determined harder; ſometimes they may light upon the truth, and as often miſſe her; and then that one hallucination, one deceit is not expiable by many probabilities. And therefore that explication is more excellent which abſolutely avoids all theſe rocks, and ſteering in the full and open channell daſheth upon none of theſe ſhelves, or quick ſands; but paſſeth on in a quiet and eaſy contemplation; comparing ſpirituall things with ſpirituall, and inſtead of Hiſtorical and civil affairs, holding forth moral and religious, carries up the ſoul at laſt to thoſe kiſſes and delights which the inflamed Amoriſt deſires here, and ſhall eternally enjoy in her Beloved hereafter: wherein as we have departed from thoſe curioſities mentioned, ſo likewiſe from the groſſer vanities of the Ieſuites, and Roman Paraſites, of whom not a few have laborioſly trifled in this ſubject, and by conſtraining all that is ſaid of the myſtical Spouſe here, to the Virgin Mary, have undone a great deal of learning by an extream ingredient of ſuperſtition; who will not ſay of her that loveth Chriſt, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith of Ieruſalem, Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth when I forget thee? for all the generations of men ſhall call her bleſſed? but yet there is no reaſon that we ſhould rob Peter to pay Paul; or ſay either ſo much of her, or ſo honourably as that of Ieruſalem, whereof ſhe is but a part: Let her be the mother of Chriſt, and of God; yet ſhe is not his wife married to him ſo inſeparably, as to become one fleſh, nor ſo beloved by him as his own body, that is, Himſelf, his Church. And yet to ſee how vehement and paſſionate ſome of them are to exalt her higher than thus, and how they move every ſtone to fit all that is ſaid here to her praiſes, is not more their vexation, than his that reads them: whileſt to this purpoſe we find them not onely changing and altering the very fountains, not onely relinquiſhing our tranſlations, even there wherein they confeſt them more neer to the Original, than their own; (which is a ſtrange impudence for men to ſay, Textus ſic habet, and ſic habemus in Originibus, and yet promote their own corrupt verſion before that which they yield purer (but alſo vilifying and depreſſing thoſe ancient and happy punctations of that Language, which when they conſiſt not with their honour and intereſt, they call Maſorethica figmenta, and will not endure them: So unreaſonable do men grow, when they once decree to love themſelves only; and as among us, it is worthy obſervation, that ſome men who condemn nothing more devoutly than learning and eloquence, do not yet uſe to dabble in any portion of holy Writ ſo much, as in this of the Canticles, and the like, which challenge the greateſt abilities of all ſorts to undertake them, being filled with all ſublime and Philoſophicall notions: So among them, it is a ſmall thing to deſpiſe that which they cannot deny to be moſt precious, and in favour of their own imaginations to become injurious both to Truth and Charity: But let us ſay, Father forgive them, though we cannot adde that Apology, and mitigation, for they know not what they do; Acute and wiſe they are, but while they think ſo of themſelves, who are neerer to blindneſs? For our parts, let us caſt aſide partialities, and with equal and unbyaſſed ſpirits, let us approach both to write and read upon this Scripture. It is an high mountain; the hill of viſions, let us put off our ſhoes, and aſcend with fear: It is a little volume, but the explanation of it is Arduum opus and who is ſufficient for it? O Lord be thou our great illumination, waſh your eyes, and make them like thoſe of the Dove, chaſt, and clear, and humble, and heavenly; that in thy light we may ſee light, and may unfold and unriddle this holy labyrinth in the ſame ſpirit, whereby it was written; for elſe we ſhall get no good by it, but he that is ignorant, will be ignorant ſtill. For my part, I ſhall conclude and remonſtrate mine own adventure, as he doth that continues and perfects the Commentaries of good Bernard. In ignem velut prudens & conſcius manum mitto, vel per alta maris diſcrimina, Cymbæ fragili me committo, in eo ſolum fidens, qui bonus & miſericors, de ipſo loquentibus, pro ipſo laborantibus, dicit, Adſum. Amen.

CHAP. I.

AFter the inſcription, we finde in this Chapter the Spouſe firſt breathing out ſighes and wiſhes of love in the abſence of Chriſt: admiring and rejoycing in his ſweetneſs, power, riches and gracious proviſions for her, confeſſing and yet vindicating her own defects and deformities; and repulſing the envious and uncharitable cenſures and rumours that were given out both concerning her ſelf, and her beloved; of whom ſhe begs to be counſelled and directed, and he granteth her deſire: inlargeth his promiſes to her, and interchangeth mutual prayſes and congratulations with her.

V. 1. The ſong of ſongs] This part of the title breifly ſets out many of thoſe circumſtances were mentioned, and promiſed in the Argument; As 1 The quality or nature of the Book, A Song; which ſpeaketh the difference of it from other parts of the Bible, that were of another compoſition, yea even from the Pſalms themſelves, as may be ſeen in thoſe that obſerve the criticall notions of an Hymn, a Pſalme, and a Song; which lye not in the quantity ſo much, or meaſures and meter, (which is generally conceived the holy men of God, that were immediately inſpired to this work, obſerved exactly, though the lawes and rules of their poetry be unknowne to us) as in the uſe, and occaſion and matter; in all which this ſong is acknowledged to differ from other Pſalms and ſpiritual Odes in holy Scripture; being called an Epithalamium. a marriage ſong, it being their cuſtome to celebrate their nuptial feaſts and mirth with ſuch ceremonies. Which practiſe it ſeems that God did not diſallow, but commanded rather, and therefore it cannot be unlawful for his ſervants to take up the like holy imployment, when they ſhall be called by the like reaſons to it; when the heart is ioyfull and merry, to ſing with grace to his praiſe, who makes it ſo; for it is his work to give new ſongs to us, and to put gladneſſe into the ſoul. 2 The end or deſigne of it, which is to raiſe the ſoule, and infuſe comfort, to which nothing prevailes more than divine Songs: The power of prophane and ſenſual verſe is ſo ſtrong, that they phanſied Orpheus of old to draw the woods and rocks and rivers, and make them follow him in dances; and from thence grew the terms of incantations and excantations among the Magicians: much more vertue is there in a pure cœleſtial Poem, which is filled with the raptures of divine love, and prompted, not by a fabulous or wanton Muſe, but by the Spirit of grace, and love, and joy. If any thing be able to warm and fire the ſoul, this will; if any thing can ſweeten and conciliate the harder things of an holy life, this will; and for this it was, that Saint Hierom tells us his ſudans Meſſor and Arator ſtivam tenens, his Plowmen, and Gardners, and Reapers and Spinners did among their labours mix continual Hallelujahs to deceive and eaſe their pains: and ſweet Auguſtine in the ninth Book of his Confeſſions, hath æternized this for one, Quantum flevi in Hymnis & Canticis tuis, &c. The ſacred Hymns and Songs, that were uſed in the ſervice of God, did through his ears pierce his ſoul, and Truth conveyed in ſuch Muſick did melt and tranſport his heart, which was enflamed thereby, and the cold embers of love and devotion brake out in happy ſighs and tears; Et bene mihi erat cum eis, as he adds there; it was never better with him: nor is it ever with any pious ſoul, than when thus affected: And a ſpecial bleſſing it is, that ſuch cordials are made ready for us; which we ſhould and may at all ſeaſons exerciſe, ſo preventing thoſe worſer potions of carnal pleaſure, which are but delightful poyſons too often, and in ſtead of comforting deſtroy the patient. 3. The dignitie or excellencie of it, it is the Song κατ' ἐξοχὴν, and the Song of ſongs; that is moſt noble, and tranſcending all others. As a ſervant of ſervants is the vileſt ſlave, and the deepeſt curſe of villanage, Gen. 9. 25. And vanitie of vanities, the meereſt and onely vanity; ſo Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and Holy of Holies, expreſſe the higheſt and moſt incomparable worth, and the bliſſes of heaven being eternal and infinite, are in ſecula ſeculorum, to ages of ages, and the chiefeſt of ſongs, the ſong of ſongs. And ſo this is, whether we compare it with the ſongs of others, either before Solomons age, or his contemporaries, ſuch as Ethan, and Heman, and Aſaph, &c. who were famous, but ſhort of him, and of his parts, 1 King. 4. 31 or elſe with his own other ſongs and writings which were many thouſands, verſe 32. of that laſt Scripture; but yet not equal to this; for (as they ſay of Origens Commentaries on this Book, ſo we may of Solomon himſelf) in other things he outwent all other men, but in this himſelf; which is ſignified by this διπλασιασμὸς τῶν ὀνομάτων, this ingemination, this duplication of the title, The ſong of ſongs. Now this excellency, and ſuperlativeneſſe is referred variouſly. 1. Some aſcribe it to the antiquity of the ſong, as if none ſo honourable for age, as it is: but holy Scripture is evident againſt this opinion, for we finde very many had got the ſeniority of it, as Davids, Deborahs, Moſes's,) and as ſome think) Jobs, moſt of whoſe hiſtory is reputed to be verſe, and tranſlated (according to their judgements) out of the Arabick (which was the Originall they ſay) by Moſes; but long before them, and before the flood it ſelf, we find Jubal, the father of Muſick, and by good conſequence of ſongs alſo, Geneſ. 4. 21. It is more ancient than Helicon or Pernaſſus can boaſt, but yet all thoſe go before it, and it may be more in the Bible. 2. Others aſcribe this excellency to the Pen-man, or immediate Author of it, which I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of further in the next Annotations. 3. It is referred to the expreſſion, ſtyle, order and method, which is moſt high and accurate, there being no ſyllable or punctilio of it, but hath a great treaſure in the bottom; and the whole threed of it as fine and precious, as that of ſcarlet, which is mentioned, Chapter 4. 3. An humble Chriſtian ought always to be fully perſwaded, that no word is vainly or raſhly inſerted into that volume, which the ſupreme wiſdom dictated; and though many things be obſcure and profound, yet nothing is ſuperfluous. Chiefly not in this Book, where though much is dark and difficult, (as it muſt needs be, where ſo many unuſuall words are found, which are not met with any where elſe in holy Writ; as ſhall be noted upon occaſion as we paſſe along) and though ſome diſorders and incoherences may appear, yet are theſe no blemiſhes, or diſpraiſes to it, but rather great additions to the beauty and perfection thereof For learned men know, that the Spirit of God uſeth no ſtrict and topicall order, but paſſes freely and ſuddenly from this matter to that, chiefly in prophecies, and viſions; and they knew as well, that this, being a work of higheſt love and joy, it can be no blame to it, that it is now and then abrupt and paſſionate; or uſeth ſuch metaphors and language, which though they expreſſe things ἐν σκότῳ καὶ νυκτὶ, under ſome night and darkneſſe, yet when underſtood and opend are moſt proper, and elegant, and thoſe ſhadowings increaſe the ſplendour and price of the whole piece For this being as Gr. Nazianzen, and others call it, νυμφικὸν δρᾶμα, a Genial, or Nuptiall Comedie; or Æglogue (which it is thought gave occaſion to Theocritus, and others among the Heathen to imitate it) it could be expreſſed no way more happily, than in ſuch ſimilitudes as were proper to ſuch perſons, and ſuch ſubjects; where, though all things are not alike ſignificant: yet, as St. Auguſtine ſpeaks in this caſe, propter illa quæ aliquid ſignificant, etiam illa quæ nihil ſignificant, afferuntur. 4. Notwithſtanding all the pretended darkneſſe, there be ſome that prefer this ſong above all others, for the very ſplendour and evidence ſhining ſo clear and bright, even through all its clouds, that the dimmeſt eye may read Chriſt in it, above a thouſand years before his birth; whom it doth not ſo much foretell as ſhow, and, as John the Baptiſt point out, and at once both promiſeth and beſtowes him: And not him onely, but likewiſe his glory and benefits and treaſures diſpenced to the Church; and her duty and office, and affections to be returned towards him: All which, though not fully and at large, (that could not be done in ſo ſhort a volume, nor would the world contain all the Narration of it) yet in chief heads and figures, are ſweetly and vitally deciphered: ſo that he that runs may read; and as at ancient weddings, the cuſtome was to take away the veil from the Bride, in ſigne ſhe was leaving that recluſe and hidden life of a Maid, ſo here is the veil either eaſily removed, or elſe ſo thin and tranſparent, that we may diſcover the intire and inward ſenſe and ſubſtance, as plain as the barks and ſhell; eſpecially directed by that wiſe Dædalus; who leads into all truth, and cæca regit veſtigia filo. And therefore it is, that ſome have liſted this Book, not among the Prophets, but thoſe they call ἁγιόγραφοι, Scriptures that conduce to holy inſtruction and converſation; though indeed it deſerves to be called a Prophecie, as that office is not onely to reprove and threaten, but to behold things to come as preſent, and to ſpeak of future events, which exceed natural knowledge, either expreſſely, or in figures. A prerogative, in which Solomon ſurpaſſed all that goodly fellowſhip, being enlightned with a greater and habituall meaſure of ſupernatural knowledge, than, ſome think, Adam himſelf received; and therefore the Acts and emanations of it, ſuch as this ſong, muſt needs excell all beſides in divine light and wiſdom. Which neverthe leſſe is ſo incompaſſed with darkneſſe, that we cannot but tremble at the very conſideration, as moſt interpreters have acknowledged they did, when they attempted it, and confeſſed their explications to be gueſſes and accommodations, and approaches to truth, rather than the truth it ſelf It is heavenly bread (ſaith Bernerd) but only God who is Maſter of the Feaſt can divide and break it: it is ſweet and delicate as its own Roſe and Lily, but yet beſet with thorns and brambles, and as a great thick wood ſhadowed almoſt and impervious; by reaſon whereof ſome of great account, both among Proteſtants and Papiſts, have placed it in the ſame degree, and ſphere with the Revelation of John, which hath as many myſteries in it, as words, and under every ſentence lye manifold interpretations and alluſions. Nay more; they ſay, that this is more occult and difficult, than that is, For in the Apocalyps the Sunne breaketh out ſometimes; though it be generally overcaſt, yet it is not without ſome eruptions and glimmerings of light, which ſerve to irradiate the darker parts; but here all is night, Nox ſe in noctem abdidit, and no bright intervals, no ſparkles that may direct and help us. 5. There be yet another ſort that attribute this excellency to the purity and holineſſe of it, which notwithſtanding the unhallowed reproaches of Theodorus, of Mopſveſta and others, is ſo ſtainleſſe and immaculate, that nothing elſe breaths in it, but chaſtity and Saint-like devotion. That crimination and exceptions againſt the kiſſes and oyntments and other affectionate ſpeeches of it, are ſo far from blemiſhing or polluting it, that they beautifie and enoble it; for if theſe had been away, how had it remained an Epithalamion? how had thoſe dear extaſies and ſympathies been expreſſed? how had the language been ſutable and congenerous to the matter? which none can read with danger of infection, but ſuch as bring the plague along with them; then indeed as the Epigrammatiſt ſayes of his ill reader, incipit eſſe ſuus, that which is holy and innocent in it ſelf, may be by filthy hands defiled; and therefore let no man cenſure the wiſdom of God; but purifie himſelf, and ſo he may make ſafe addreſſes hither, but for the reſt procul eſte profani, what have you to do with theſe pearls? they are not for ſwine. 6. There is the laſt and the moſt rationall opinion which relates this excellency to the ſubject and matter of the book; which is the ſublimeſt and moſt divine, that was ever handled from the firſt cradle of the world; the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, Epheſ. 3. 8. that myſtery which was hid from ages and generations, as to the common part of them, and revealed as a peculiar honour to ſome choſen perſons, that were made worthy to receive it; to ſupport their obſequious faith, and by ſuch preguſtations of a Meſſiah, to prepare them for a larger fruition of the Churches glory: This is that which principally exalts this Scripture, that it is wholly Evangelicall, and whereas others are interwoven with goats hair, and skins, this is all gold and jewels: nothing of temporal or worldly mixture in it, as in others, but the whole piece is ſpiritual, and though but ſhort and little, yet comprehenſive of all the rarities of the goſpel. Therefore they that conſider Solomon, as another Ariſtotle, writing his Ethicks; and natural phyloſophy in the Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes, do here behold him carried up to Metaphyſical contemplations, whereof Chriſt is the adequate and ſupream object; and all his terms and figures tranſlated from nature and the world, are but manuductions and perſpectives to grace and Heaven: whither he leads us by ſuch things as are moſt beloved by us; and becauſe we are yet in the body, temperates his language, and allurements to our deſires, and capacity. As for that which is objected againſt the ſanctity, and authority of this book, that the name of God is not mentioned at all in it; the ſame might alſo be darted at the book of Eſther; but it is a blunt arrow, and wounds neither of them. For that may be the word of God, where God is not pleaſed to pronounce his own Title: and further, though no glorious and ſolemn name of God be here expreſſed, yet names of grace and favour are; the Lord is pleaſed to lay aſide his Majeſty and brightneſſe here, which might produce terrours and aſtoniſhment, and being to hold a gracious and peaceable parley with his Church, puts on ſuch names, as may beſt agree with love and familiarity; ſo Bernard rarely. Amor loquitur qui Dominum neſcit, carmen amoris eſt, nec aliis hæc quam amatoriis fulciri opportuit.

which is Solomons] This attribution of it to Solomon is another reaſon of its great excellency, for he was wiſe, and pious too, once even to admiration; 1 King. 3. 12. & 4. 29. 31. & 10. 24 And this was the fruit (as the wiſeſt judge) of his beſt condition; before his ſoul was debaſed, and ſullyed with the follies of his old age; quickly after his marriage of Pharaohs daughter, to whom he may be granted to allude in this Book, but his true Aims went higher. Some tranſlation read, of Solomon, others to Solomon;

but our Engliſh compriʒeth both, and both in the other languages ſignifie poſſeſſion, or propriety; As τῷ Δαβὶδ in the Septuagint ſignifies not datively, but of David. Yet it is no inconvenience if we receive it, as ſome contend, in the Dative; I mean, if we look to Chriſt, who is the true Solomon, and more glorious than he was in all his glory, Matth. 12. 42. being the wiſdom of God, and the power of God, and the prince of peace, Iſaiah 9 6. 1 Cor. 1. 24. unto whom the Scripture was directed and conſecrated: and this in that holy language what ſome render, unto, by others is done, into, concerning, or touching; as Pſalm 45. 1. Touching the king, is Regi, To the King in the Vulgar Latine; and the like, in many other teſtimonies. And ſo this Song of ſongs is Chriſts, that is, concerning Chriſt, Solomon is the Inſtrument, but Chriſt the Author, and Solomon the ſhel, and rinde, but Chriſt the juice and marrow: It is not to be neglected, that Solomon changeth his inſcriptions in all his books, and here aſſumes the ſimpleſt and moſt humble of all the reſt, knowing the matter here would countenance and bear out it ſelf, and that neſcit amans ſe eſſe Regem; being now poſſeſſed with that love he was about to celebrate, it was time for him to leave off names of Majeſty and terrours, to renounce titles, and bid farewel to the world, having to deal with that which was exceeding much better.

V; 2. Let him kiſſe me] In this Drama, or Dialogue it is conſented on all hands, that theſe firſt words are ſpoken by the Church; who is the wife of the Lamb in contract, Revel. 21. 9. who ſaw Chriſt, to whom ſhe is to be preſented in perfect glory hereafter, afar off; and here deſireth neerer union and fellowſhip with him. The Hebrew Doctors, with the Chaldee Paraphraſe, would have Moſes and his law and righteouſneſs underſtood in him; but we know that there is none in the earth or in Heaven to be ſought and loved ſo as our Lord, who anſwereth and fils up the name of Solomon better than any of his ſervants, though never ſo faithful in his houſe, as Moſes was. By Me, it is more diſputed who is intended. One will have it to be the Queen of Sheba, who came to viſit Solomon from a far countrey, and by whom (as the tradition of the Abiſſines goes) ſhe was got with childe for her civility, from which childe they derive Preſter-John. who to this day writes himſelf the ſon of Solomon; the Jews, they will have it to be their ſynagogue: ſome Chriſtians, the humane nature by incarnation, or by his reſurrection at leaſt. The ſublimated Papiſt wiredrawes all to the bleſſed Virgin, and it is excellent ſport to read their diſtortions and bendings of wit and learning to effect it. But certum eſt, and de fide eſt, that no particular perſon or creature is to be underſtood, but the whole Catholique Church of Chriſt, (and under her wings every ſingle and individuall believer) from Adam and Abel to the laſt period of time, for whoſe ſake the ſon of God was made man, to ſanctifie, and redeem her, and make her a glorious Church; And ſo the humane nature of Chriſt is not the Spouſe, but the Bridegroom; which Chriſt is not as God only, but as Man too; and whoſe love and fruition the Church here petitions for, for theſe are not Imperatives, but wiſhes.

With the kiſſes of his mouth] The comforts and graces of the Spirit of God, are his ſymbolicall kiſſes and greetings, being ſeals and aſſurances of love, and the happy preface to that full enjoyment in the world to come; And when Chriſt vouchſafeth to breath thus upon us, to put wiſdom and grace into the ſoul, to ſpeak peace and ſalvation to a poor ſinner, whereby he is relieved from the terrours of the Law, and the wrath which it threatneth, it is a greater happineſs, than to enjoy the glory of all the kingdoms of the world: As he in Xenophon, when Cyrus had given him a cup of gold, and a kiſs to another, diſdained his own gain, and ſaid that kiſs was richer than his traſure, Oh! theſe are ſweet and unvaluable! being the ſoft earneſts and fruits of the Spirit of comfort, which like balm, heale the wounds and bruiſes of the Law, and make ample reparation, as the dandlings and huggings of an indulgent Mother do, for the ſharpneſs and bitterneſs of any rod: Let our ſoules labour to feel, and aſpire after theſe, whoſe priviledge it is, not onely to ſeek, but to obtain them; The Angels have great pleaſure in beholding theſe things, how much more is it to receive them; It was much for Moſes to behold his black parts, and thoſe Favorite-Diſciples to ſee their Maſter transfigured; It was much for that penitent to wipe his feet, and kiſſe them: but this is far more, to be admitted to ſuch an honour, to enjoy the kiſſes of his mouth. And ſhe ſeemeth to be wrought vehemently upon by it, for as one carried out of her ſelf, and hurried away by irreſiſtible love, ſhe names him not whom ſhe ſeeks, but as Magdalen at his grave, If thou haſt taken him away, John 20 15. without naming what Him; as imagining, being ful of Him her ſelf, all hearts beſides ſhould think of nothing elſe, but that which poſſeſſed hers. So the Church here, Let him kiſs me, you know whom I mean, All of you; It is not Moſes, nor any of his other Meſſengers, they are not able to ſatisfie my longings, but it is Chriſt himſelf, for his kiſſes alone work reconciliation and Peace and good will and everlaſting Joy. The fruit of his lips is peace, Iſa. 57. 19. let him give me ten thouſand kiſſes, whoſe very fruition makes us deſire him the more, and whereas all other pleaſures ſowre and wither by uſing, thoſe of his Spirit become more freſh and delightful.

for] There is great cauſe for ſpiritual love to Chriſt, and vehement breathings after him. There is ſtrong invitation, and worth in Him to draw and allure the ſoul; and that Heart is far worſe than Iron, whom this loadſtone cannot attract.

thy loves] The Vulgar Latine reads Ubera, thy breaſts and for that cauſe apply theſe words to Chriſt, it being as incongruous (as one of them pleads) that he ſhould have breaſts, as that ſhe ſhould be ſaid to have a beard; but by his favour, do not we read of the breaſts of Kings, Eſay 60. 16. if it ought to be ſo tranſlated, which they themſelves know, ought not, and ſo have ſome great ones of them acknowledged, and with us, by breaſts underſtand the Goſpel-Ordinances of Chriſt, which exceed the rites and ſervices of the Tabernacle, vvhereof wine was a part. Indeed wine is of a cheering vertue, even to the heart, Pſal. 104 15. but there's a good in the Ordinances beyond this; and if the love of God be manifeſted in them let the ſpirit be never ſo ſick and drooping, it wil not onely revive, but raviſh it, and make a man forget his bitterneſſe, beyond all earthly comforts whatſoever, and to ſay with St. Peter, Bonum eſt eſſe hic: Here wil I abide and dwell for ever. It is true, that if the ſoul ſee not the face of God, enjoy no ſpiritual communion with his God in ordinances, there is no ſweetneſs in them, but they are as dregs, ſowre and unpleaſant and they are as froth, vain and empty, ſo that they do but increaſe a mans bitterneſſe, and overwhelme him the more, Pſalm 73. 7, but where the love of God is manifeſted in them, and there is an immediate concurrence of of Gods ſpirit with ours, cloſing and twining together, there they are wine upon the lees, and as a feaſt of fat things, Iſaiah 25, 6. Or elſe the compaſſions and kindneſſe of Chriſt (for the Breaſts are tender and neighbours to the heart) ſet forth in the acts of adoption, redemption, ſanctification, &c.

are better than wine] Exceed all pleaſure; whatſoever is moſt reviving and reſtorative, ſo that they deſpiſe and neglect all afflictions, as men full of wine feel no hurt for the preſent, and are more ready to rejoyce and ſing, than to be dejected, and they undervalue all other delights, there being a more true and abundant ſweetneſſe in Communion with God, than in any other, even the choyceſt of the world. This is the Pſalmiſts opinion, Pſalm 4. 6. let them take the corne and wine and the oyl, but let me enjoy better pleaſures, let me live a life of Communion with God, and I can be content, not onely to be deprived of, but to forſake all others.

V. 3. Becauſe of the ſavour] It is read alſo, For the odour, or, For thy odour, or ſmell, which is expounded of the good ſavour of the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 2. 14. Whatſoever may lead us to him. For vertue goes like a ſweet ſmell, or ſavour out of Chriſt ſtill to heal all men, as it did, Luke 6. 19. And the breath of his Miniſters that are inſpired by him, conveys it. As the Panther is followed by his breath, and betrayes himſelf; ſo does Chriſt. His ſpeech telleth who he is, for never man ſpake as he did, and the Eagels that are generous, will finde him out by it; they whoſe ſenſes are exerciſed, will diſcerne and delight in it.

Of thy good oyntments] Or, beſt oyntments, as David ſaid of that ſword, There is none to it, ſo is there no Unction like that of the Son of David. The high Prieſt was to be anointed with all the moſt excellent and precious ſpices, Exod. 30. 23. which were not ſo coſtly and rich in their nature (though yet that made them worthy to be kept as a chief treaſure, 2 King. 20. 13.) as they were in their uſe and ſignification; for they were to be poured on Aarons head, and from thence to drop as low as the ſkert of his garments: and they emblematize the better unction of Chriſt, who was anointed above his fellows, Heb. 1. 9. and thereby authorized and conſigned to that great office of anointing all his members, Iſaiah 6. 11. who become in him alſo a good odour, 2 Corinth. 2 15. and by their preaching, prayers, and good life, ttransfuſe comforts and ſweetneſſe to the whole Church, ſo that their good name is ſpread abroad, as his was, and preſerves (as imbalming does) both themſelves and others, Eccleſ 7. 2.

Thy name is an oyntment] Or, Thou art an oyntment, for name is oft put for perſon, and ſo Chriſt was oyntment to himſelf, His Godhead anointed his manhood, and therefore he was called, the Meſſiah, Daniel 9. 26. where the Septuagint read χρίσμα, as the Targum for oyl, give us Chriſtus, Eſay 10. 27. who anſwereth all the properties of the moſt precious oyntment peace, mercy, charity, health, joy, ſtrength and all thoſe offices and dignities (of King, Prieſt, and Prophet) that were capable of unction. They ſay, that at the birth of Chriſt, a ſuddain fountain of oyl ſprung up in Rome, and flowed out for a whole day together. This was an Indication that Chriſt was born, who at once both ſprung out of the earth, as man; and as God, came down from heaven.

poured out] This word may denote emptying, for the very ſame, ἐκκενωθὲν is uſed by the Septuagint here, that St. Paul uſeth in that ſenſe, Phil. 1. 27. And thus Chriſt was poured out for us, that we might be full. But it ſignifies plenty and abundance alſo, running over, and never ſtopping, as the widows oyl did, to the laſt ends of the world. His graces are like the eternal ſprings of the earth that cannot dry up, but are and ſhall be diffuſed by his ſpirit, and by his Goſpel, untill his whole houſe be filled with them. And whoſe incorporable ſweetneſſe and benefits are not underſtood but in the effuſion, that is, in the Communication of them. Scire tuum nihil eſt, &c.

therefore] The root of our love, is his, ſhed abroad in our hearts; for then that ground which vvas dry and barren in it ſelf, is made rich and fruitful; and then we being anointed by him, have our eyes opened, to know and deſire him, 1 John 4 19. which before we cannot, 1 John 2. 20. our love is no blind, precipitate paſſion, but guided by reaſon and election.

do the virgins] The pronube, that are called companions of the Bride, Pſal. 45. and here Friends; that is particular Churches, which ſhould be as virgins, chaſte, and meek, and pure, both in heart and converſation, 2 Cor. 11 2. And who are called and choſen of God to be ſo, and who are waſhed and cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt, from every ſpot and impurity.

love thee] Or ſigh after thee for love, which is to love moſt tenderly, as mothers do. It is the nature of faith to beget love to him in whom we believe, in which noble act ſhe exceeds the dull rules of nature and Philoſophy; which allow no love but to that which is known, and beheld, Videt hanc, viſamque cupit. But having not ſeen Chriſt; his love conſtraineth us to love him, and faith ſtrengtheneth this love, 1 Peter 2. 8. ſtrengthens it ſo as to make us new creatures; for ſo we finde by comparing, Gal. 5. 6. with 6. 15.

V. 4. Draw me] Not onely kiſſe, that is, call and invite, but command, and work effectually, not onely by diſcovering the glory ſweetneſſe and ſpiritual excellencies that are in thy ſelf, and thy adminiſtrations; which is but morall frution, which is found in any attractive object, but alſo by inclining my heart to follow thee; which indeed is the right drawing of the heart, by a kinde of ſweet compulſion, even conſtrainig it to follow: ſo did the mantle of Elijah, caſt upon Eliſha, infuſe a readineſſe and free propenſion to obey him. Elſe I move not: Not onely come down to me, and dwell in me, but alſo lift me up, that where thou art, I may be alſo, according to thy pomiſe, John 12. 32. and according to mine own neceſſity, who without thee can do nothing, John 6. 44 The firſt wil teſtify thy goodneſſe, and this will declare thy power; that thou art ſtronger than the powers of darkneſſe, and able not onely to open the heart, and offer ſalvation to it, but alſo to convert it and tranſlate it to thy kingdom, that ſo it may paſſe from death to life. Which power as it is the demonſtration of goodneſſe, for God declareth his power in ſhewing mercy; ſo goodneſſe the companion and co worker with power; The bands wherewith God draweth, being cords of a man, Hoſ. 11. 4. Congruous and agreeable to our liberty and nature; not violent and coactive Crede & venis, ama & traberis; Ne arbitreris iſtam aſperam moleſtamque violentiam, dulcis eſt, ſuavis eſt, ipſa ſuavitas te trabit. S. Aug.

we will run] I and mine; All my members which are one with me, and indeed my ſelf. The Church is large and tender in her charity, to every part; Her love is like his name, poured out, not reſtrained: and where it once begins to flovv, it runs apace: She knows her duty to follow the Lamb, Revel. 14. 4. and ſhe wil not loytor in it, but do it cheerfully, that ſhe may obtain. He is worthy, for vvhoſe ſake vve ſhould caſt avvay our nets, and forſake all, vvhich is but loſſe and dung compared to him: And he is povverfull to enlarge and eſtabliſh them that do run, to make them willing and ſtrong, ſo that they ſhall not be vveary, Pſalm 119. 37. There be many that follow Chriſt, but languidly and afar off, as Peter, Luke 22. 54 but they that will finde him muſt run, as the ſame Apoſtle did aftervvards to his grave; it is but a lazy excuſe to pretend vveakneſſe vvhere he aſſiſts, or to complain of bondage, vvhen the Son hath made us free. Then though dravvn by him, yet we may run unto him; Ageris & agis; & tunc benè agis, ſi a bono agaris, Spiritus enim Dei qui te agit, agentibus adjutor eſt. Grace deſtroyes not nature, but perfects her by ſupernatural reliefs: Trabit quodammodo invitum, ut faciat voluntarium: trabit torpentem, ut reddat currentem. And ſo Pſalm 110. 3. The day of Chriſts povver makes vvilling, or vvillingneſſe, as if there vvere then nothing elſe to be found in the heart. for after thee] To run after, in the Idiom is to cleave unto Chriſt, and ſo its an Act of Faith; or to deny our ſelves and to obſerve him, not ſtep before him, as Peter, Mat. 10. 23. ſo, is an act of obedience and mortification; or to hold on, and not apoſtate; ſo its the grace of perſeverance: All this is required from us, and there is comfort and encouragement enough in him we run unto, to confirm us, and make us get away with ſpeed, though we have a croſſe on our ſhoulders. For ſo did he, who ſhould be our example, as well as our captain. Heb. 12. 1, 2. I cannot omit here the corruption of the Vulgar Latine in this place, which redundates with another, in odorem unguentorum tuorum, as in the third verſe. An excreſcency which is not, as themſelves acknowledge, to be found either in the Hebrew, or Syriack. But got firſt, by negligence, into ſome copies of the LXX and from them caſt into theirs: and now they have it, they will not part with it, but plead for it, that it is Aliquanto perſpicuitatis adjumento, nullo veritatis diſpendio. But let Baal plead for himſelf, it will be in vain; He that teareth away, or patcheth here is curſed alike.

the king] Or, The King himſelf, God the Father who prepares the wedding, or Chriſt himſelf, who is the onely King, 1 Tim. 1. 17. And here is an anſwer to that cavil of ſome againſt the Authentickneſſe and dignity of this Scripture, that no mention, no memoriall of God in it: Who is the King, but God? Who is not ever expreſſed by his own Name, but ſometimes by Title, and circumlocution, which is all one. Had it been ſaid, God, or the Lord God, it had been the ſame thing; Dixiſſet clarius; non dixiſſet aliud hath brought me] Some, bring me O King, others, He hath made me to enter, both are to the ſame intention; and confeſſe that God onely leads to grace and glory actually, and alſo gives us right and title to heavenly places, which we ſhall poſſeſs as certainly one day as Chriſt himſelf does, who is ſet down at the right hand of the Father. Epheſ. 2. 6. and hath purchaſed that inheritance for us.

into his Chambers] Great variety is uſed here, cellers of vvine, treaſures, ſtores, Bed-chambers, cloſets, &c. They all ſignifie ſpeciall intimacy, and kindneſs betvvixt Chriſt and thoſe that fear him, He vvill ſhovv them his ſecret, Pſalm 25. 14. vvill not admit them onely as common gueſts into his palace and out-courts, that is, natural priviledges and comforts; but into his receſſes, his holy of holies, vvhere he vvill ſhovv them depths buried in the bottom of the Sea, and diſcover thoſe Arcana Imperii, His Scriptures, his great vvorks, his judgements, his Sacraments, his conſolations, his glory, vvhich are lockt up from Common eyes, vvhich are not admitted to ſuch familiar approaches and intimacies, as his favorites are, Matth. 11. 35. for nothing is too dear or pretious for them that love him, all the treaſures of wiſdom are theirs, and they ſhal be kept as treaſures, and jewels ſecured and protected from the evil due to ſin, and from the indignation of the Lord, Eſay 26. 20.

we will be glad and rejoyce in thee] Or, becauſe of thee; No cauſe to rejoyce in any but Chriſt, who is both the object and rule of all ſpirituall, and natural joy; of all both inward and outward gladneſs. The ancient ſalutations of Chriſtians in their letters was Gaudium in Domino, from the Apoſtles precept, Phil. 3. 1. This joy breeds from love, as from its root, and where the one is ſhed abroad the other trickles after it, God intertains their ſoules that love him with rare unſeen banquets, in his chambers; which very honour ſhould work gladneſſe, being the delight of Angels, but the effect of it is righteouſneſs and joy, and peace, Romans 14. 17.

we will remember] Love is mindful, as a faithful treaſurer will reherſe and record benefits, that the kindneſs of the Lord may be had in everlaſting remembrance.

thy love's more than wine] Here again the Vulgar Latine retains breſts, againſt all other tranſlations; ſo obſtinate and pertinatious is ſelfe-love, and though many of them (with their Trent Anathema) have defined them curſed, that alter or vary in the leaſt from their corrupt Bibles, yet they make it nothing, to disfigure, and maime the ſacred Fountains continually.

more than wine] This more may be referred either to loves, and ſo teacheth the excellency of divine oblectations; which are better, than any of the world, whereof Wine being chiefeſt, ſtands for all: or elſe it may be referred to rememember, and then it both ſhows how inclinable we are by nature to her delights, ſticking in them, and taking pleaſure to mention them; und likewiſe how ſtrangely we are changed by the Spirit of God, which breaks us off from all former pleaſures, and ingageth all our affections upon worthier objects.

the upright love thee] Or, uprightneſſe, which is the ſame, for 'tis uſual to put the abſtract for the concrete; Thir clauſe ſeems to be independent, but if weighed ſeriouſly, the connexion is plain, for it is the fruit of ſanctified memory, to increaſe and ſtrengthen love; The more we minde God by contemplation, the more do we admire, and ſeek him. No wonder if the wicked in whoſe thoughts he is not, deſire him not; but whatſoever they judge of Chriſt, who are blind and ſenſleſſe, they that are upright (thoſe holy Virgin ſouls ſpoken of above) will love him; And for the reſt, their envy, is the greateſt praiſe: ſo that if we deſire to love Chriſt, we ſhould firſt labour to get pure and upright hearts. As our bodies are upright, ſo our ſoules ſhould be, that we may ſee God. It is monſtrous ſhame, to carry a crooked ſoul, in an erect body; the ſoul of a beaſt in a divine body: ſuch can never love Chriſt, nor any but the upright. Flexuoſa itinera non te ſequuntur, ſolus ad te poteſt juſtitiæ trames pervenire. How canſt thou love me, when thy heart is not with me, Judg. 16. 15.

V. 5. I am black] The Church directs her ſpeech here to others, that were about her, and behold her, preventing their cenſures and diſcouragements by her own humility, and confeſſion; True, I am, or I may be, or I yield I am black; as an Egyptian is (for ſo tis alluded) as Solomons wife who deſcended from that black people; Black in my Original, black by reaſon of contracted fowlneſſe and ſpots; for every ſin, increaſeth our native blackneſſe; and black by reaſon of my great aſſlictions, which make me blacker than a coal. Lam, 4. 8. And black becauſe of the hurt of my people, Jeremiah. 8. 21. For this you may wonder, that I ſhould preſume to beg his kiſſe, and love; for this you may wonder at him for chooſing me, as they blamed Moſes for his Ethiopian wife, Numbers 12. 1. But yet there is more reaſon than you are able to behold, for though black, yet not ugly; not loathſome.

but comely] Some adde, I am; or yet I am, adverſatively to her blackneſſe; I am black by nature but fair by grace, black without, but within all glorious and comely: I am black in my ſelf, and in my ſufferings as my beloved was whoſe viſage was marred and diſſigured more, than any mans, Eſay 52. 14. But yet beautifull in him, who was fairer than the ſons of Men, and hath put his comelineſſe and beauty upon me. I am black in ſome blaſted and dead parts, apoſtates and Hypocrites, but in my true and living members I am comely and beautiful: For as there may be a decency, where there is no perfection; a deſireableneſſe, and lovelineſſe, even where ſome ſpots: ſo there may be a true Church, ful of order and decency, though not perfect and wholly beautifull, and ſo may the ſoul, in a great meaſure of ignorance and weakneſſe, be yet amiable and pretious through Chriſt, in a great night of perſecution and miſery, but yet comely and glorious in hope, and patience; ſo as to glory in them, account that happy darkneſſe here, greateſt joy, and honour. God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſaving in the croſs of Chriſt, Gal. 6. 14.

O ye daughters of Jeruſalem] By theſe ſome underſtand the Angels, others the perſecuting Jews, but they beſt of all, who beſtow this honourable title on the particular Churches, and Elect; who may be called daughters of that Jeruſalem which is the Mother of us all, Gal. 4. 26. As the leſſer towns and villages of Judea were ſo called in reſpect of the Metropolitan city: upon them the Church calleth, and defends her cauſe before them, that they may not be ſcandalized, nor diſcouraged by her infirmities, or ſufferings.

as the Tents of Kedar] Theſe two ſimilitudes are to be applyed disjunctively, and in their ſeveral reſpects; This firſt to her blackneſs, which ſhe compares to the Tents of Kedar, who was the ſon Iſhmael, Gen. 25. 13. That is either to the tents themſelves, which were poor and courſe like a kind of black hair-cloth, and were their only habitations; or elſe to the people and dwellers in thoſe tents, who were black-moores. vid. Pſalm 120. 5.

as the Curtains of Solomon] This partition reſpects her comlineſs, which is reſembled to thoſe goodly hangings, and ornaments of Solomons Court, which no queſtion were anſwerable to the reſt of his riches, and magnificence.

V. 6. Look not upon me] Or do not conſider me, that is not with an evill eye, ſo as to cenſure me, or to contemn and deſpiſe me: nor with an offended, angry eye; ſo as to increaſe my blackneſs: Nor with a deſpairing, uncomfortable eye, ſo as to be diſmayed or aſtoniſhed for my ſake; nor with a partial eye, ſo as to behold my weakneſs only; as the eye of the vulture ſpies out the carrion, and filthineſs, that is caſt forth: ſo ſome faſten their eyes upon the corruptions, and failings of their brethren, but paſs over their graces.

Becauſe I am black] The word is changed that was uſed in the laſt verſe, and is a diminutive of it; blackeſt, or ſomething black; The ſpots of the Church are not ſo great, as ſome would make them, nor are her afflictions ſo great, and dark as they ſeem: for they are but like afflictions, As S. Auguſt. Obſerves from 2 Cor. 6. 9. 10. Tribulationes noſtræ habent quaſi.

becauſe the ſun] Nothing can be ſo fitly underſtood here, as the ſchorching heat of peſecution, which burns and tans, when it ariſeth, Matth. 13. 6. 21. For Afflictions come not out of the duſt, but like the fiery beams of the Sun are ſhot upon us from above: they are the arrows of the Almighty, and there is no evil in the City, which he hath not done.

hath looked upon me] Ambroſe hath a good reading, though ſingular, and contrary both to all others, and to the Text it ſelf: He turns it, hath not looked upon me, and explains himſelf thus, Ideo fuſca ſum, quia ſol juſtitiæ me reliquit, &c. How can I chooſe but ſit in darkneſs and look black, that am forſaken by him who is my only light, yet deſpiſe me not, for he that hath hid himſelf, will return; he that inlighteneth all men, will enlighten me, and not abſent himſelf for ever; this is a comfortable note, but the Text bears it not, where we find no Adverb, but a complaint that he hath; rather than hath not. There be others that read thus, becauſe I have looked upon the ſun; that is, ſay they, have worſhpped it (as the Heathens uſed) and other falſe Gods, therefore I am black. But the beſt ſenſes are either theirs, who refer the word to the providence of God, obſerving and ſearching out her wayes, or elſe to the juſtice of God, puniſhing and ſcorching her for the evil of them, and rewarding one blackneſs with another. Where, yet, the mitigation and gentleneſs of the praiſe is to be obſerved, which is, that Affliction doth not continue or abide, but only looketh upon the Church; it may diſcolour her for a while, but it will off, and away again. It is by accident that the Church is black, and but for a ſhort ſeaſon; her proper and conſtant complexion will be beauty for aſhes.

my mothers children] My own luſts, which are born with me, and deſcended from the ſame womb: or rather, the men of the world ſprung of the ſame common ſtock, and diſpleaſed at my happineſs, at my profeſſion and calling from them, whether Jews, or any elſe: but they beſt, by mothers children, underſtand Hereticks, and ſchiſmatical Brethren, wicked, lying Prophets and Paſtors, who are children of the ſame mother, but not of the ſame father, and who are as apt as any, nay more apt than any when degenerated, to become the moſt bitter and implacable enemies, Pſalm 69. 9. And none ſo dangerous becauſe they come in ſheeps cloathing and diſguiſed under vizards of love and holineſs, privily bring into bondage, Gal. 2. 4. But their end ſhal be, not according to their appearance, but their works, 2 Cor. 11. 12, 13, 14, 15.

were angry with me] Fought againſt me, or railed at me: It frets the wicked to ſee Sion proſper, Tobiah, and ſuch as he, are galled to ſee her ruines built up, and her waſte places repaired, Nehemiah. 6. 1.

they made me the keeper of the vineyards] The fruit of their anger, which either compelled her to baſe and unworthy ſervitude (as the phraſe imports, 2 Kings 25. 12.) So the Phariſees laid heavy burdens, Matth, 23. 4. And the Dogmatizing Chriſtians no leſs, Acts 15. 1. 10. Galat. 6. 12. 13. Coloſ. 2. 20. 22. Or elſe inticed and ſeduced her to joyn with them in their falſe worſhip and religion.

but mine own vineyard] Or which is mine; committed to me by God, and which ſhould be mine by an eſpecial care, to diſcharge that duty which God hath laid upon us, to overſee the flock, and to bring forth fruit, that the Maſter of it may receive ſome benefit from his vineyard.

have I not kept] They that purſue the hiſtorical ſenſe, Conclude that hence Solomon deeply repented his great folly in not keeping to his own vine; but that which is ſpiritual here ſheweth, that in times of perſecution, and cloudy dayes, the Church is broken, and ſcattered ſo, that ſhe cannot ſerve God ἐλευθέρως ϗ ἀπλῶς, ſo freely and comfortably as ſhe deſireth: In the beſt times ſhe may fail in her duty, and cannot do all ſhe ought and would: but in dayes of trouble her ſolemn dayes are forgotten, and her gates mourn Lam. 2. 6 So that the vineyard growes wilde, which is a ſad cauſe of Complaint.

V. 7. Tell me] This is the third addreſſe of the Church to Chriſt: vvherein, finding her ovvn vveakneſſe, ſhe gets her ſelf to him for ſtrength and direction. Senſe of our ovvn inſufficiency ſhould not deter us from Chriſt, but rather incite us to ſeek him more diligently, vvho is able to teach, and make perfect.

O thou whom my ſoul loveth] Learn here hovv to dravv nigh to Chriſt, and vvhat attributes of affection and reverence to beſtovv upon him, vvho is the love of our ſoules, and their life; and vvho can be expreſſed no better, than by ſuch pathetical compellations.

where thou feedeſt] Or Hovv; 'Tis not eaſie to finde vvhere Chriſt is, nor is he to be found in all vvayes, nor at all times. Many ſhall ſay here is Chriſt, and there, Mark 13. 22, 21. Yet it is our duty to enquire for him, and to get under his protection and government vvho vvill not ſuffer thee to lack any thing. For feeding includes the vvhole adminiſtration and office of a good ſhepherd: All vvhich vve ſhould deſire to learn, that vve may abide under it and live.

where thou makeſt thy flocks to reſt] There is a Reſt for the people of God, ſcorched vvith afflictions; vvhich Reſt onely Chriſt giveth, and maketh them to lye dovvn in good paſtures, Iſaiah 43. 13.

At noon] Much adoe about this vvord, eſpecially among the pontificall Commentators, who cannot agree about it; but it is unanimouſly conſented among our Divines, that it imports the height and rage of perſecution, which is the ſcalding heat of the day, and from which onely Chriſt can ſhelter us, and give peace and repoſe when all is on fire about us. Iſaiah 49. 10. There is one conceit of thoſe old Heretickes the Donatiſts, that cannot be pretermitted, who from this place, fantaſtically underſtood, concluded that there was no Church but that wherein they lived in Africk; Eccleſiam ad ſolam meridionalem plugam, quam ipſi incolebant, pertinere dicebant. But the place is clearly againſt them, rather than for them, or any ſuch ſeperations, if well obſerved.

For why ſhould I be as one that turneth aſide] Or, leſt I ſhould be as one that wandreth, or as one that extendeth, or ſtretcheth out the Tent; going aſide to falſe Teachers, and ſtrangers who are ſo dangerous: or, as one that covereth himſelf: which was done either out of ſhame Ezek 24. 17. or elſe unto ſhame, out of luſtful wantonneſs, as Tamar was covered Gen. 38. 14. So ſhe both checketh her ſelf, as every watchful ſoul ſhould do, looking about her, that nothing pervert her from the truth; and recalling her ſelf if ſhe have ſtragled after the voice of ſtrangers, John 10. 4. 5. And likewiſe ſhe urgeth God with the worth of his own glory, and her ſalvation, which are highly concerned in her.

By the flocks of thy companions] Or Herds, which are the falſe Aſſemblies, or corrupt congregrations who pretended to be companions; but are ſeducers, ſaying, I am Chriſt. Matth. 24. 24. but are not, nor the fellows of Chriſt, as he is pleaſed to call the true Prophets, Zech. 13. 7. Yet, theſe falſe Guides have many followers as waſpes have combes, but no honey, many flocks, ſeveral diviſions and ſub-diviſions of them, which we ſhould avoid, and follow that one ſhepherd, Ezek. 37. 24. whoſe flock is but one, and without ſchiſme; and upon whoſe Mountains we ſhould all abide, Iſaiah, 65. 8.

V. 8. If thou know not] Or, ſeeing that, or foraſmuch as thou knoweſt not, This is the reply of Chriſt, full of grace and truth, rich in comfort and inſtruction: Some obſerve a pleonaſme, a redundance in the Hebr. If thou knoweſt not to thy ſelf, but I conceive it may be rendered very properly, Of thy ſelf: and ſo, we are all ignorant till taught of God..

O thou faireſt among women] She was black, but now is made fairer than all other women, and none is like her in beauty, who diſpraiſed her ſelf. So doth Chriſt recompence humility, and when we moſt abaſe our ſelves, he will exalt us. The Church was loved when black, but the end was that ſhe might be fair. Nor was it blackneſſe that took him, but his own delight to make her comely. Amata eſt fœda, ne remaneret fœda, &c.

go thy way forth] Get thee out, and ariſe, Seek, and inquire which is the way. To ſit ſtill is not the way to find Chriſt; to cry Lord, Lord. is not all; We muſt go out, put forth our ſelves, indeavour and do ſomething; depart from Babylon, and put our ſelves into the boſome of the true Church.

by the footſteps of the flock] Or after, In the footſteps of that flock; that flock which is mine, follow them, obſerve the prints and traces of their feet; their faith and works; imitate them, and do thoſe works which they have done before. who were ſet for an example, Heb. 13. 7. He is in the greateſt danger of erring, who deſpiſeth ſuch guides; that will travel alone. We ſhould walk in the ſteps of Abraham, Rom. 4. 12. and follow Paul (as he followed Chriſt) and then we ſhall not miſſe our journey, nor the end of it, 2 Cor. 12. 18.

and feed thy kids] Theſe are the young and tender chriſtians, the babes, the lambs concredited to Peter, who are like the Lamb of God, meek and innocent; and from Wolves and Bears turned into quiet and humble flocks, Eſay 11 6.

Beſides the tents] Or above, aloof from their folds and paſtures, who are other ſhepherds (as ſome read) than I have appointed. Take heed of ſuch, for they are not ſhepherds but Butchers. But better, by the tents of the ſhepherds, underſtand thoſe good ſhepherds which of old led the flock, ſuch as Moſes and Aaron, Pſal. 77. 21. & 78. 70, 71. Such as David and Solomon, whom we are to follow, and thoſe that ſucceed them. For their lips ſhall preſerve knowledge.

V. 9. I have compared thee] Or likened, or made thee like; by the vertue of the word and Spirit of Chriſt we are transformed, and being without any thing praiſe-worthy before, are changed from glory to glory. Theſe praiſes are proper for this Song, it being the end of them to magniſie the married perſons; and therefore they obſerve, that to praiſe, and to give in marriage, are ſignified by the ſame word, Pſal. 78. 63.

O my love] Friend, companion, next to me, or whatever elſe that can expreſſe kindneſſe and love, is compaſſed in this word, which is repeated nine times in this Book, and denotes both the affluence and profuſion of his love, and their happineſſe whom he loveth, who are his friends and next to him, if they keep his commandments, Luke 22. 30. Joh. 17. 21.

To a company of horſes] The horſe is a goodly creature, and well mannaged the greateſt Emblem of ſtrength and order. The Angels and Miniſters of God are called his chariots and horſemen, by whom God treadeth down his enemies, and goeth forth in power, Zach. 10. 3. Hab. 3. 15. And as the Devil hurries men headlong to hell by his wicked Agents, ſo doth God by his true and powerful Ordinances carry up to life and glory.

In Pharaohs chariots] Some read over, and apply it to that overthrow of Pharaoh and his chariots at the red-ſea. The truth is, the place is knotty, and therefore wiſely paſſed over by moſt of our Engliſh Annotators. But methinks none come neerer to the life than our Engliſh Seneca, who vigorouſly (as he uſeth) gives it to this purpoſe, viz. As the horſes of Egypt, which were the moſt generous of all the Eaſt, nay, as the choyceſt of thoſe either for ſhape, or ſtrength, or ſpeed; ſuch as were for the Kings own uſe exceeded all other: So far in his eſtimation did the Church exceed all others, or at leaſt ſo far would he make her to exceed. For ſo it is conceived to be a ſilent promiſe of victory, and triumph over her enemies.

V. 10. Thy cheeks are comely] Or, how comely are thy cheeks! that is, thy outward profeſſion, and countenance, which is beautiful and glorious, by keeping due order and decency in the ſervice of God. The whole face of the Church ſhould be thus adorned.

with rowes (of jewels is added] The word is but one, and yeilds many ſignifications. Curles, Turtles, or Jewels that had the pictures of doves upon them: but all aim at the better adorning of the minde, which is preſcribed, 1 Pet. 3. 3, 4.

Thy neck with chains, (of gold, is ſupplied)] The word for chains is onely in this place, and is therefore obſcure: but it is conſented by moſt that it ſignifies neck-laces, or chains, ſuch as they uſed to put about the neck; and myſtically preſents the Law and Ordinances of God, which gives beauty to every obedient neck that bows unto them. A yoke and chains they are, but of gold; ſo far from deſtroying chriſtian liberty, that they perfect it, nor is any under an heavier thraldom, than thoſe that break and caſt off theſe bands, Pſal. 2. 5.

V. 11. We will make thee] The holy Trinity (whoſe operations, ad extra, are undivided) are ingaged to preſerve the Church glorious, not onely by relation, but promiſe; ſhe is not able to trim and beautifie her ſelf, being poor, and naked, and miſerable: in him is the original of all her Ornaments, and his bounty dreſſeth us, hides our deformities, and ſupplies our poverty.

Borders of gold with ſtuds of ſilver] The word for borders is rendred Rowes, or lines; figures, and pictures; pendants: And the other, for ſtuds, ſpecks, drops, marks. All expreſſe great wealth and glory, the preciousneſſe and variety of ſpiritual adminiſtrations; which were but as iron under the Law, but now are gold, 2 Cor. 7. 11. and one of them inamells, and ſets off another.

V. 12. While the King] The Church returns the fruits of Chriſts love and bounty, who is the King here mentioned.

ſitteth at his table] Or, is ſet down, as on his royal bed, (as the cuſtom was) or throne, injoying himſelf in bleſſed peace amidſt his Angels and Saints, who ſtand in a circle, or ring about him; or at his holy table in the Sacrament, where he vouchſafeſt to feaſt with his Church. 1 Cor. 10 21. or in the publick Aſſemblies of his people (for ſo the word ſignifies, and is rendred by the Latine Corona) where the preſence of Chriſt in his word, doth by a rare virtue ratifie and draw forth their faith and obedience.

My ſpikenard ſendeth forth the ſmell thereof] The Church hath her good odours and ointments, which both purifie and perfume her, and which cannot lie hid, eſpecially when ſhe draws nigh to the Table of the Lord, but will breath out both in the holy iſſues of prayer, and praiſe upwards, and likewiſe in gracious ſtreams of charity and mercy towards all that are about her; that ſo both the power of his grace may be made known, who worketh mightily where he acteth; and likewiſe our light ſhining forth before men, may teach them alſo to magnifie his Name, whoſe influences are ſo ſweet and gracious. Beſides, the neerer any thing comes unto that which it deſires and ſeekes after, the more urgent and impatient it is, and the more abundantly doth it put forth it ſelf; if ever Grace be fragrant and active it is then, when Chriſt meets his people in thoſe holy Repaſts and Banquets of his word and Sacraments: Other times are a kind of Winter, or Autumn unto her; but this is her Spring and Summer.

V. 13. A bundle of myrrhe]. Or, a bag of myrrhe; That is of that precious gum which dropped from the Myrrhe-tree, which is bitter to the taſte, but ſmells fragrantly. They uſed to wear it in little bags, or purſes (as our women do musk, and civet) about their necks; as may be collected from Eſay 3. 19. where for chaines, ſome read ſweet balls; and the word for Tablets, verſe 20. ſignifies, Houſes of the ſoul, that is, little boxes (ſuch as ours of ivory, or the like) full of holes and ſmall paſſages, out of which the ſoul, or breath of the incloſed was tranſpired. Such as theſe perfumed bags, or bundles, is Chriſt to the devout ſoul; redolent and delightful, as the choiceſt myrrhe, which was offered to him at his birth, with which he was imbalmed at his death and all his garments ſmell deliciouſly of it (Pſalm 45. 8,) ever ſince.

is my welbeloved unto me] This is the language of faith, which is a glutinous, monopolizing grace, whereby the ſoul doth (as Thomas) ἰδιοποιεῖσθαι, take poſſeſſion of Chriſt, and by a cloſe application make him wholly, and ſolely hers, binding him up as in a bundle for her ſelf, and living upon him; eſpecially when diſmayed with the terrors of that ſealed bag of her tranſgreſſions, Job 14. 17.

he ſhall lie all night] Or lodge, and abide, or which lyeth all night. They are all one, and teach us our duty, to detain and keep Chriſt conſtantly, that he depart not; chiefly in the night, in the time of darkneſſe, ſad fears and temptations, diſgraces and perſecutions. Theſe ſhould not ſeparate us from Chriſt, but make us take ſurer hold of him by faith, and be moſt careful to injoy him when others are moſt apt to loſe him, Eſay 26. 8, 9.

betwixt my breaſts] This is the fitteſt place for Chriſt, from whence wickedneſſe drives him: for he requires the heart, to dwell there by faith, Epheſ. 3. 17. It is his throne and temple, and we ſhould prepare it for him; and that we may receive this pureſt Beloved, put away all our adulteries from betwixt our breaſts. Hoſ. 2. 2. whereof as he is moſt worthy, ſo will it be moſt happy for us; who not onely expreſſe our own tender reſpect to him, by laying him kindly in that lodging which he moſt eſteems, but alſo by that means become moſt capable of deriving comfort and joy from him. It is obſerved, that whereas in all other creatures the paps or dugs are below the belly, in women alone wiſe nature hath placed them above upon the breaſts, in the ſight, between their arms and nigh their lips; that ſo as they have a better convenience of imbracing and cheriſhing their tender infants, ſo likewiſe their babes may delight and comfort them with their pretty looks and kiſſes: Thus doth the ſoul both teſtifie her love and loyalty to Chriſt, by giving him the part he deſireth, and likewiſe receives more benefit and grace from him: For Chriſt lodged in the heart both humbles and revives it, and as a bundle of myrrhe is both ſweet and bitter at once, ſo doth he preſerve in our hearts both joy and trembling together. If our hearts fail us, ſmell at this ſweet bundle, and it will tranſmit life and comfort: If they ſwell too high, and are grown proud taſte and chew the bitter plant of his death and paſſion, it will ſubdue and break the impoſthume. There be many excellent properties of myrrhe recited by Dioſcorides, and others, but far ſhort of this matchleſſe Drug, which healeth all our diſeaſes; and is both in adverſity, and proſperity wholeſome, if applied as it ſhould be. Hac me erigit in adverſis, in proſperis reprimit & inter læta triſtiaque vitæ præſentis, viâ regiâ incedenti, tutum præbet utrobique ducatum, hinc inde mala imminentia propulſando.

V. 14. My beloved is unto me] Not onely was, and hath been, but is for ever. The vertue of that redemption which was wrought by Chriſt, dieth not, but is everlaſting, and floweth down to all Ages of the Church that ever ſhall be. Yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever. Tam recens mihi nunc Chriſtus eſt, ac ſi hac horâ fudiſſet ſanguinem.

as a cluſter of Camphire] Or as a bunch, or as berries of Cypreſſe. Interpreters are much vexed about this word, and cannot agree what it ſhould be: It is a moſt pitiful inſolency that rude, unlearned men ſhould preſume to expound the difficulties of this Book, when as even thoſe that have been known accompliſhed with all the ornaments of wiſdom and letters, have confeſſed themſelves puzled in it: It is not neceſſary, nor profitable, I fear, to complain here againſt their boldneſſe, and as little neceſſary to diſcuſſe, or rehearſe the ſeveral opinions concerning this Scripture. In which all meet in this, that whatever name belongs to it, it was a ſhrub, or plant of rare worth and operation; whoſe fruit grew in great cluſters, that were both beautiful, Aromatick, and medicinal; and whereof it was ſo free and bountiful, that it bare them ſeveral times in one year. For which cauſe ſome conceive it to be a kind of vine; but that is uncertain; unleſſe they mean by vine, that ſpiritual one, which groweth John 15. 1. and on which grow full cluſters of grapes, that is, abundance and plenty of all ſaving mercy and grace, and love, and of all true joy and comfort; which he himſelfe preſſed for us, when he trod the wine-preſſe alone, and under whoſe droppings alone, we enjoy plenty and peace.

in the vineyards of Engaddi] Or Engadda, was a city of Judahs portion, not far from the dead ſea; and was called alſo Hazazon-Tamar (or the city of Palms) Gen. 14. 7. They that have delighted in tranſlating Hebrew names (in which many have ſhown more wit oftentimes, than learning) will have Engeddi to ſignifie the fountain (or becauſe one word ſignifieth both, the Eye) of inciſion, or tentations; And to make up the conceit, that here grew thoſe odoriferous cluſters of Camphire, and thoſe Myrrhe trees; that is, here hath the Lord appointed, even in the very place of greateſt tentations and inciſions the greateſt remedies againſt them; and where the croſſe is, there is the Cordial and Antidote againſt it: that as the Pſalmiſt ſayes, In the midſt of the ſorrows of our hearts, his comforts might delight us, and as affliction aboundeth ſo might grace abound alſo, Pſal. 94. 19. and 2 Cor. 1. 5. Others there be that not without ſome probability, have conjectured, that theſe Cypreſſe trees here mentioned, might be the Balm-trees, which it is ſaid, the Queen of Sheba brought firſt into Judea, and preſented as a wonderful rarity unto Solomon, who planted them in this part of the land, which was the happieſt of the whole countrey, famous for Rivers and Gardens, and where they proſpered even to wonder, while God bleſſed the land, but now are not degenerated onely, but with the inhabitants rooted out and periſhed: S. Jerom ſaith, there were ſome of them ſeen in his time; and Pliny deſcribes the manner of their plantation and culture: but we may fear they were both miſtaken. The indoles or nature of them was ſingular, and not without a myſtery; which was, that the precious liquor or moyſture did never ſweat or flow from them, until they were either beaten, or gently cut (for there was an Art in it) and then they would tremble, as if ſenſible of the injury, and ſeem to weep, or bleed. But the Balm which trickled from them, was not in its beſt market, comparable to that which diſtilled from our bleſſed Saviour; Golgotha was a richer ſoil than Engaddi; and the croſſe poured forth a more ſoveraign Electuary than all her vineyards; whoſe vertue not onely cleanſeth and purifies, and healeth our ſick and filthy ſouls, but pacifieth our offended Father, and is an odour of life and reconciliation.

V. 15. Behold thou art fair my love] Or my Companion neereſt and deareſt to me: in theſe ſoft and gracious words Chriſt congratulateth his Church, and declares his ſweet goodneſſe and clemency in accepting and encouraging thoſe graces which himſelf giveth: They are but weak and imperfect, yet he praiſeth and cheriſheth them; and by praiſing he perfects his own work: For Locutio verbi infuſio doni, to call her fair, is to make her ſo; to own her for his love, is both to infuſe ſomething that may be loved in her, and that may excite her to love him the more; For whom God loveth, he maketh fair and like himſelf; drawing nigh them, and reflecting comlineſſe and beauty upon them, which are the participation and effect of his love and holineſſe; that is, of his beauty; contrary to the manner of men, among whom beauty raiſeth and perſwadeth love; but divine love is the cauſe of divine beauty, and rejoyceth in its own work.

Behold thou art fair] This duplication (as well as the ecce) is full of attention and admiration; and no leſſe abounding with comfort, and love. The beauty of the ſoul is the holineſſe of it, being the image of God himſelf, and the conſecration of the whole man: Virtus magnum decus eſt, & ſuum corpus conſecrat, as the Heathen like a Chriſtian, who yet knew not wherein this beauty conſiſteth; which is not ſo much in any thing inherent in us, as in that which is imputed to us; both which make a double beauty, and adorn ſo, that former blackneſſe is not remembred, but we are greatly deſired by the King who loveth us, and whom we are to worſhip, Pſalm 45. 10, 11.

thou haſt doves eyes] The ſpecial part choſen for praiſe, is the eye, which ſhould be (not proud, luſtful, envious, wanton, &c. but) like thoſe of the dove that is, meek, humble, pure, peaceable, chaſte, fixed upon God, and by an holy intention waiting on him for life and devotion: Cupids in the eye are not ſo glorious, as doves; they make us like him who deſcended in the ſhape of a Dove, and dearer to him than the apple of his own eye: ſo that they which hurt us, and have evil eyes at us, ſhall have theirs plucked out, whilſt ours ſhall be his ſacrifice and his delight. It is ſaid that the Aſſyrians durſt not touch, much leſſe kill or eat a white dove, becauſe they ſaid, Semiramis one of their Queens was changed into one at her death: How much more will Chriſt hide his doves, and ſhelter them from harmes!

V. 16. Behold thou art fair my beloved] This is the Churches return, wherein ſhe modeſtly gives back to Chriſt his own praiſes, who is much more to be admired: Her beauty is but the reflection and image of his; hers is but the ſtream, the drops, he hath an Ocean from which hers is derived: and therefore (ſaith ſhe) No wonder if I be, ſeeing thou art, from all mine is for thee: and if any thing deſerve to be called ſo in me, it is thy gift made it ſo: ſo grateful is faith, and ſo quick-ſighted too; beholding excellency in Chriſt whom the world deſpiſeth, and deſiring to behold that as the onely thing ſhe can ſeek after all the dayes of her life, Pſal. 27. 4.

yea pleaſant] Not onely fair, but more than that, for this is a kind of elegant correction, and raiſeth the ſenſe; implying a real and conſtant ſweetneſſe and amiableneſſe in Chriſt; who hath the truth and eſſence of Beauty, whereas earthly things have it onely in eſtimation, and for a ſhort time: Semper talis es, & omnino id quod es. All that is fair is not pleaſant; there muſt be ſomething ſuperadded to make it ſo, and to conciliate the mind of it: All which is fully in Chriſt, who is the brightneſſe of his Fathers glory, and for whoſe ſake all his ſervice and worſhip is not grievous and intollerable; but eaſie and pleaſant. How amiable are thy Courts and thy Tabernacles? Pſal. 84. 1, 2.

alſo our bed is green] Some copies of the LXX groſſely miſtake here, which read πρὸς κλίνην, as if πρὸς were a prepoſition, whereas it is a uſual conjunction, and as much as πρόσετι, Furthermore, or beſides: but this knot is not ſo hard as the other, what is meant by bed here. One ſayes the Virgins womb, another the Humane nature, another the Grave of Chriſt; others the the Scriptures, in which the unquiet brains of men, toſſed with ſeveral opinions, reſt as in a bed: others ſay, a good conſcience is this flowry-bed; others, faith working by love, and an holy life, whoſe ſtrength is alwayes green, and fruitful. The high-flown Contemplators of the Roman Church build their idle Abbeys, and Monaſteries upon this word, but this phancy is too green and cannot indure. Some of our own eminent Divines conceive that the Ordinances of Chriſt are this Bed, wherein the Lord and the Church do ſhew forth, by a reciprocal Action, their loves one to another: wherein they imbrace, and give mutual returns of grace, and duty one to another; which dear interchanges are reſembled to kiſſes, and are ſaid to be alwayes green, and flouriſhing, becauſe they increaſe by this communion, and wither not, until they bring the ſoul to a perfect communion of the viſion and fruition of God for ever, when a man ſhall ſee him as he is, and ſhall be ever with the Lord: which indeed, is the principal and palmary argument of this whole Book, whoſe maine ſcope and ſtream runs fully upon this increaſing and perfecting of communion with Chriſt; and the ardent ſoul ſtrives mightily after this one thing, as if ſhe could never get near enough to Chriſt, nor Chriſt were never near enough to her: An heavenly and Angelical temper, to purſue and hunt after Chriſt, and the moſt intimate fellowſhip with him, as the higheſt of all priviledges. I think the moſt ſolid explication is beſides the Metaphor to find another Trope here, by which Bed is put for the fruit or iſſue of the bed, as is uſed many times; and is called green, not by reaſon of the colour but the fertility, or growth; which was ſo wonderful upon the heavenly conjunction of Chriſt and his Church, that the number of Believers increaſed miraculouſly; ſo that we read of three thouſand, and five thouſand converted and baptized at one time; which was not the bleſſing of her youth onely, but of her old age; for that alſo is green and flouriſhing to this day; eſpecially if we will believe the Roman Account and Regiſters, who boaſt of above two hundred thouſand Ethiopians reduced in one year, by the Jeſuits to their Church: It was a large harveſt if it were ſo; but yet no more than the Lord of the harveſt can gather when he pleaſeth, nor than he hath promiſed to gather, when he will be praiſed among much people.

V. 17. The beams of our houſe] The laſt words and theſe ſeem to be a ſymphony, or chorus both of Chriſt and the Church, wherein they conſent together, and with united delight, extol the Fabrick, and parts of the Church, which is the houſe of God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. whereof the holy Scriptures held forth by the Prophets and Apoſtles are as the beams, principal and ſtrong pieces; and thoſe beams are like cedars, which are the moſt excellent of trees for height, ſtrength, ſweetneſſe, continuance, and all other noble properties. It is written by Pliny and others, that the Temple of Diana at Epheſus (which was four hundred years before it was finiſht) had doors and gates of cedar, which looked then as freſh and beautiful, as if but newly made. This is nothing to the ſtability and glory of the Church, which ſhall never rot ſo, as to become ſubject to utter corruption, but her members ſhall flouriſh, and indure as the cedar, Pſal. 92. 13. Numb. 24. 5, 6, All poyſonous and corrupt humours ſhall be purged out, and ſhe ſhall be as a rock that cannot be ſhaken for ever.

and our rafters of firre] The word for rafters may expreſſe galleries, or walks, or cloyſters, or roofs, as the Vulgar Latine: It ſignifies alſo guttars, or watering troughs, uſed by the Eaſtern ſhepherds, Gen. 30. 38. But the other word which we Engliſh fir, (being not found elſewhere) is more difficult and tranſlations differ about it. Tremel. and Jun. have gone the ſecureſt way, who turn the Hebrew word into Latine, and read their ברות Brutos, which is not much unlike; and ſo do Symmachus and Aquila in the Greek: If it be that tree which ſome Expoſitors ſtrive for, out of Dioſcordies and Pliny, it is an utter ſtranger to the Weſtern world, but of admirable worth, both for beauty and odour: Which odour they tell us, increaſeth by burning, and therefore they uſed it as they did incenſe, in Sacrifices. Let the literal figure and name of it be what it will, it ſtands here a worthy Hieroglyphick of ſpiritual myſteries, which are of greater pleaſure than galleries built of moſt coſtly and odoriferous wood; and that pleaſure is made more and greater when kindled and warmed by the flames of holy zeal and love.

CHAP. II.

THis Chapter is begun with a ſhort character and deſcription of Chriſt by himſelf, to which he annexeth ſuch another of the Church; who inflamed by his praiſes and love, diffuſeth her gratitude into an ample Panegyrick, and an exhortation to the particular Churches, both to know and pleaſe him: whoſe care and mindfulneſſe of her, and her ſecurity from enemies, quickneth her again to freer profeſſions of her Faith and Hope.

Verſe 1. I Am the roſe] Or the flower, or bud of the roſe, which is the Prince of flowers, both for beauty and ſcent, and moſt fitly repreſenteth Chriſt, whoſe words theſe are, (not the Churches as ſome have thought) and in compariſon of whom nothing ſhould be ſweet or delightful to us; for he is the glory and ornament of his Church, whoſe beauty and ſweetneſſe ſhall never fade. He is deſpiſed and trod upon by the wilde beaſts of the world, but the Saints honour him, and wear him in their hearts, and deck their ſouls with his graces and benefits, as with chaplets of immortal roſes.

of Sharon] The vulgar Latine read, Of the field, which errour they cannot excuſe, for Sharon is memorable not onely here, but in other Texts; and being a rich and pleaſant Campaigne, or open Countrey, running under Lebanon, not far from Nazareth Joppe, may ſeem to inſinuate both the place of Chriſts common reſidence in the dayes of his fleſh, and that where S. Peter laid ſome of the firſt ſtones of the Churches building; but eſpecially repreſents the Church, and her glory, whereof Sharon is a goodly and frequent Type, Eſay 35. 1, 2.

and the lilly] Or violet; Indeed the names of flowers in Scripture are not proper ſo much as promiſcuous, and one of them is common to many ſorts, but this here being derived from שש, which ſignifies ſix, is moſt properly conſtrued a lilly, which opens into ſix leaves, and is the nobleſt and chiefeſt of flowers next the roſe, ſurpaſſing in her native gallantry all Solomons bravery, Matth 6. 29. and repreſenting Chriſt in purity, humility, and ſweetneſſe.

of the valleys] Or torrents, which run among the valleys and bottoms; making them fat and fruitful; ſo that as the great Secretary of Nature ſpeaks of the Lilly, Una radix quinquagenos ſæpe bulbos emittit; ſo the God of nature delights in the humble, regards their low eſtate to bleſſe it, and give more grace, that they may (like the wealthy valleys) rejoyce and ſing, when they are covered over with corn, Pſal. 64. 13. Many great cities of the world have received their names from flowers, as Shuſhan in Perſia, Florence in Italy, &c. But the city of God deſerves to be called ſo, being his Sharon and Carmel, in which the true Roſe and Lilly flouriſh, and no where elſe; nay being his Eden and Paradiſe, wherein the ſecond Adam will give the tree of Life and Knowledge to all that be poor in ſpirit, that is to the meek and humble, for them will he teach his way, Pſal. 25. 9.

V. 2. As the lilly among thorns] He proceeds to the character of his Church, which he calls a lilly too, but (which is very ſtrange for that flower) among thorns: She is fair and white as he is, but yet among thorns; that is ſurrounded, and galled with many ſharp and cruel thorns, even as her Beloved who was crowned with them: Ever ſince the curſe for Adams ſin, the earth hath been full of thorns, ſo that we are beſet with them on every ſide: Our ſins are thorns, ſo are temptations unto ſin, 2 Cor. 12. 7. and ſo are puniſhments and afflictions for ſin; tribulations come from tribuli; and ſo are wicked men, Numb 33. 55. and wicked actions, as blaſphemies, detractions, hereſies, ſchiſmes, &c. which wound and tear the Church and are worſe than the ſharpeſt ſtings or thorns. So Noah in the midſt of the corrupt world, and Lot among the Sodomites, lived as in a thorny hedge, Mich. 7. 4. where wicked men folded themſelves, and conſpired together to vex and lacerate the poor Lillies, Nah 1. 10. but God preſerved them, and kept them both ſafe and beautiful, in ſuch dangerous mixture, even when they did neither toil nor ſpin, that is, when they did not many times ſo much as dream of it, Matth. 6. 28. Yet theſe thorns have their benefit too, as well as Injury; for they exerciſe and inſtruct thoſe that are pricked with them, as the Cananites did Iſrael, and by them God doth not onely humble his people as he did Paul, but likewiſe direct them, and make them know him, as Gideon did, Judg. 8. 16.

ſo is my love among the daughters] Or from the daughters, as if the meaning were, that the Church groweth up as ſome flowers do, from thorns; referring it to her ſtock and extraction, which is, ſpinoſa progenies, from a wilde and thorny root, as Paul was changed from a bramble into a Lilly; Velut in ſpinis mollis roſa ſurgit acutis, nil quod lædit habens, matremque obſcurat honore. But the received Tranſlation is better, which compareth the Church of Chriſt to other Congregations, and preferreth her in dignity and glory above them all. Sicut lenta ſolent inter viburna cupreſſus. It is obſerved by Rupertus and others, that the word Daughters when abſolute and ſolitary, hath ſeldome a good ſenſe, ferè nunquam ſignificationem bonam habent filiæ, cum abſolutè dicuntur; like women that loſe their good name, not onely by keeping ill-company, but by keeping none. My Author inſtanceth in Gen. 49. 22. where for the Engliſh Branches, the margin after the Hebrew, have Daughters; but there are clearer teſtimonies, for we find Babylon and Tyre to have their daughters, Pſal. 45. 12. & 137. 8. but wretched and miſerable ones, which as they have the nature of thorns, ſo ſhall they have the doome and ſentence, 2 Sam. 23. 6, 7. For as they are exceeded by the Church in beauty, ſo ſhall they be at laſt in power; they out grow and diſtreſſe her for the preſent, but that flouriſhing is but like the crackling of thorns under the pot, which the fire of the Lords jealouſie ſhall conſume like dry ſtubble, Eſay 27. 4. And then ſhall Sion be redeemed from all her troubles, and as it was her praiſe to be a Lilly among thorns here, to be pure, and ſweet, and innocent among weeds, and thorns; ſo ſhall it be her happineſſe to be tranſplanted then, and to flouriſh there, where no pricking briar, nor grieving thorn ſhall be to the houſe of Iſrael any more, Ezek. 28. 24.

V. 3. As the Apple tree among the trees of the wood, &c.] The Church ſeems to be ſtrongly moved here, and before her Beloved hath well ended his ſpeech, breaks out into an affectionate Elogy of him, which ſhe is not able to expreſſe, but conquered with her own paſſion, ſhe ſits down and breathes for comfort. For Apple-tree ſome read Pomecytrone, and for wood, the forreſt, or grove; All which expreſſe the ſame purpoſe, and lift up the glory and dignity of Chriſt, who, as much as a fruitful and well-grown apple-tree, that is laden and all moſt oppreſt with its own delicate fruit, exceedeth the barren trees of the wild deſert (which have either no fruit, or elſe ſowre and unwholſome, fitter for ſwine than men, and ſo to be cut down rather, than preſerved) and as much as the choyceſt apples ſurpaſſe acorns, or crabs, or men that feed on them are more noble than hogs and beaſts that devour the other; ſo much and infinitely more doth he tranſcend the chiefeſt of the ſons, or the young men. They are wilde and empty plants, till implanted into him, and bring forth the grapes of Sodom, unleſſe they become his branches, Joh. 15. 2. None of the Angels are like him, who are goodly Cedars, much leſſe the degenerated ſons of Adam, who are but ſhrubs, and rotten trunks, compared to him, whoſe fruits are not onely ſweet and aromatical, as the Apple-tree (which in the Hebrew hath a root that ſignifies expiration, or breathing ſweetly) but likewiſe various, and manifold, and all thoſe vital and nutritive; for he is the tree of life, and all is deadly that ſprings not from him

I ſate down under his ſhadow with great delight] Or I have delighted and ſate down, or I earneſtly deſire, or have deſired to ſit down. As weary travellers ſeek cool arbours, and defences from the heat, and delight in them, ſo doth the weary ſoul ſeek after Chriſt, whoſe Name is the ſhadow of a great Rock, Eſay 4. 6. and 25 4 &c. Not a ſhadow, as that ſignifies vanity and emptineſſe, ſo as Ægypt, Eſay 30. 2. and Heſbon are, Jerem. 48. 45. which mock and delude thoſe that ſeek for ſhelter under them. But a ſhadow as good Princes are, Lam. 4 20. Nay better than they; a broad, indefective, continual ſhadow, under which if we put our ſelves, by faith (which is a kind of dark ſhadow too) and hope, (for ſitting is the poſture of attendance, as well as eaſe) we ſhall be ſecured from the flames of Divine diſpleaſure, from the curſes of the Law, and from all afflictions and judgements. The phraſe of ſhadowing may ſeem to allude alſo to that cuſtome both of the Jewes and other Nations, who were uſed at their Marriages to ſpread a robe, like a ſhadow, over the Bride, Ruth 3. 9. Ezek. 16. 8, which ſignified, that ſhe was not received into the Family, and protection of her husband. Thoſe phancies of the Papiſts and others concerning the Apple, and the Apple-tree, (which they will have to anſwer the fruit which the firſt Adam was forbidden, and the croſſe which was the tree of the ſecond Adam) are ſcarſe worthy to be mentioned; yet their Interpreters are much in ſuch trifles, and if they were onely trifles it were more pardonable; for many times they ſtretch as wide as blaſphemy, derogating from the honour and efficacy of his merrits, and applying that to Accidents, and Inſtruments, which is due onely to the Saviour of the world. Such is that Anthem of theirs, Crux fidelis inter omnes, Arbor una nobilis, Nula ſylva talem proſert Fronde, flore, germine, &c. with many others of a worſer genius, which carry a thin ſhadow of piety and zeal, but no more; For Chriſt is onely the refreſhing and comforting ſhadow of his Church; and oh! if the ſhadow of Peter, which was but his ſhadows ſhadow, had ſuch an admirable vertue, how much more will his own, which hath both ſhade and fruit?

and his fruit was ſweet to my taſte] Or to my palate, or throat, the organs of that ſenſe being put for the faculty. This pleaſant fruit is the pardon of ſin, juſtification, joy, peace, and other divine graces and conſolations, which grow like golden apples on Chriſt their Tree, and increaſe by the very gathering: The more we pluck and taſte of them, the more we may, Unoque avulſo non deficit alter Aureus; and there is nothing ſo ſweet, could we get enough of them, could we thruſt our hands (as Thomas did) into his ſide, and wounds, through which his bowels and his heart lie naked to the eye of faith, and flow out, as they do in his Word and Sacraments to every worthy Receiver. They have a Monkiſh Tradition of Bonaventure (their Seraphical Doctor) that being asked by Aquinas from what books and helps he derived ſuch holy and divine expreſſions, and contemplations, he pointed to a crucifix, and ſaid, Iſte eſt liber, &c. That is the book which teacheth and prompts all things that I write; Caſt at the feet of that Image, my ſoul receiveth greater light from heaven, than from all ſtudy and diſputation. A good uſe may be made of this ſuperſtitious fixion; If we aſcribe that to him that was crucified, which they do to the picture: Look upon him, taſte and ſee how gracious he is, and no Manna will be ſo delightful; for his very word is ſweeter than honey, Pſal. 19. 13. and every branch that is in him, ſhall bring forth fruit like him; fruit unto righteouſneſſe, and the end everlaſting life, Rom 6. 22 For which cauſe the Saints whoſe ſenſes are acute: and exerciſed, have not onely loathed other pleaſures, compared to him, but alſo have prayed earneſtly, that they might diſdain them and find them taſteleſſe, that he might be ſo much the ſweeter. Obſecro (ſayes S. Auguſtine) omnia mihi exareſcant, ut tu ſolus dulcis ſias.

V. 4. He brought me to the banquetting houſe] Or houſe of wine, or treaſures; By which ſome underſtand the Scriptures, others the publick Aſſemblies, and Ordinances unto which Chriſt like a liberal houſe-keeper invites, and even compels, when we deſerve rather dungeons, and houſes of bondage, and whoſe conduits and channels run with the beſt wine, that is, with pureſt joy and comforts, by which the heart is revived and made merry, and ſo tranſported, that as if, made drunk with wine, they were derided by thoſe that beheld them, Act. 2. It was the cuſtom of old for the husband to lead his wife into his houſe, and there deliver up the keyes to her, as one called into fellowſhip both of power and care; To this cuſtome ſome conceive Chriſt alludeth, Matth. 16. 19. and Revel 1. 18. But chiefly the Spouſe in this place, wherein ſhe glories how her Beloved delivered to her the unſearchable riches of the Goſpel, and gave power in the manifold offices and adminiſtrations of it to diſpenſe them, Epheſ. 3. 8. 2 Cor. 12. 7.

and his banner over me was love] The vulgar Latine differs here from all, even from the LXX. whom they uſe to follow in the worſt, and read, Ordinavit in me charitatem; the errour whereof her confidents ſeeing, have no other way of refuge, but either to acknowledge our Verſion more proper and faithful, as the modeſter part of them do, or elſe to reduce theirs to our ſenſe; making ordinavit an expreſſion of war, in which order is moſt requiſite, which can neither be attained nor preſerved better, than by banners: And ſo, ordinavit (ſaith a Banner-bearer among them) is as much as vexillavit, and that as vexillum eſt, and ſo at laſt they come under our banners, and meet with us. The uſe of Banners is notorious, both in the March, in the Battel, and the Triumph; in all which they are reſpectively, either directions, or incouragements, or Trophees: And ſo is Chriſt himſelf the Enſigne of his Church, Eſay 11. 10. to gather, to conduct, to animate, to glorifie them, and to lift up his ſtandard againſt their enemies; that is, to chaſe them and put them to flight, Eſay 59. 19. In which Enſigne the Motto, or Deviſe, is nothing elſe, but Love. The Generalls of the world carry Eagles, and Lions in their Colours; but Love is the Standard-royal of Chriſt; by which he prevails, and conquers more than Conſtantine is ſaid to have done with that of his, which if it were really ſo, as is related, yet was but a flag or piece of this. For love is that which not onely ſubdues and vanquiſheth all hearts, whoſe ſtrong charges can no more be reſiſted than a well marſhaled Army preſſing on, and fighting in order; but alſo that by a wonderful influence, both glorifies and preſerves all them that are overcome by it. It is neither loſſe nor diſhonour to be vanquiſht in this field; for he that is our Conquerour will ſave us, and teach us how to be more than conquerers, if we will not forſake his Colours, but follow him like tall and faithful ſouldiers, directing all our ſervices to him and to his praiſe, as we ingaged our ſelves (or ſhould at leaſt) in our Baptiſme to do.

V. 5. Stay me with flagons] Or ointments, or flowers, it is a general word for all delights, which the Church here calleth either upon Chriſt, or his Miniſters to bring her ſpeedily, in the cordial promiſes and refocillations of the Goſpel, which may ſupport and comfort her in his abſence. The ſtrength of our hearts is Chriſt, who upholds them as a ruinated building by his Spirit. His Miniſters are in their order pillars alſo, and ſo they are ſtewards of his wine-ſellers, appointed to miniſter in due ſeaſon, to them that are weary; and that not ſparingly in cups, or little veſſels but in the largeſt ſort, that conſolation may abound. They are reproved in the Prophet, that drink wine in bowles, Amos 6. 6. but God hath promiſed his Church to make her glad with a whole river which ſhall repleniſh and fill her thirſts: and as the pots of the Temple were more both rich and capacious, ſo are theſe large, and ſweet, and precious, and yet free and without price, Iſa. 55. 1.

comfort me with apples] Or ſtrew me with them, or under me to keep me up from ſinking, and to refreſh my ſpirits which languiſh; for apples are fragrant and revive by their odour, eſpecially thoſe which grow on that tree, verſe 2.

for I am ſick of love] Or wounded, nay ſlain (as ſome) with love. Paſſionate lovers are ſubject to a λειποθυμία, to many languiſhments and defections, and exanimations, which cannot be cured, until the deſire that is deferred, be fulfilled. And as all affections are apt to overcome and inthrall, if they be vehement; as we read of Jacob, who fainted at the news of Joſephs life and honour; the Queen of Sheba aſtoniſht at Solomons majeſty; the devout women filled with fear and great joy at the Reſurrection; that Roman Lady who fell down dead at the ſight of her two ſons, who were reported to be ſlain at a great battel; and a Viſcount of our own Nation, in the time of Hen. 8. who for very joy that his life was pardoned, loſt it; periſhing by the means of his preſervation; I ſay, as it falls out thus in other paſſions, ſo eſpecially in love which is the ſupreme, and moſt victorious of all. Amnon conſumes under it, 2 Sam. 13. though his was a baſe and helliſh fire-brand; how much more muſt they that are inflamed from heaven, and filled with the love of God! This is, Amor vulnerans, and ligans, and languens; by the ſweet vehemency and inſatiability of it; makes the heart to burn, and weep, and groan, and ſigh; to forget all, and drive all away but him, on whom alone ſhe fixeth and would reſt, but cannot reſt until ſhe injoy him in glory. Till then ſhe is ſick, and weary, and lives not in her ſelf, but in him, in whom her life is hid; and ſhe cannot ſubſiſt nor live without his preſence and communion. It was one of Platos definitions of love, that it is an Ardour, a Flame of a ſoul dead in its own body, and living in another: which ſtrange angelical ſtate, none can expreſſe but they that have felt it; Soli datum eſt noſſe, cui ſoli datur experiri; and hardly they; for S. Paul whoſe heart was wounded by it, could not well declare how it was with him, 2 Cor. 12. 2. But they are happy beyond expreſſion that are transfixed and hurt thus; for theſe wounds are better, than that which we thought health before, which was the greater ſickneſſe. And therefore that is excellent counſel of his, Nudemus membra noſtra bono vulneri, &c.

V. 6. His

V. 6. His left hand is under my head] Or let his left hand be &c. Sin is a ſtrong diſeaſe, which diſtempers both the head and the heart, Eſay 1 5. Nor can any applications by other means eaſe us, untill Chriſt come in, and give ſtrength, and that with both his hands too, with faſt and cloſe embraces, which are moſt tender and ardent. Some would have us to underſtand this left hand, of temporall bleſſings, which are called ſo, Prov. 3.16. and which ſhould not depreſſe the head but rather lift up to higher bleſſings. Others ſay, it is an alluſion to their Conjugal and Menſall beds on which the gueſts were ſo beſtowed, that the firſt laid his left hand under the head of him that was next, and put him ſo in his boſome, that with his other hand he might alſo, if he pleaſed, embrace him; which was a poſture and ſigne of the greateſt love; which the ſicke fainting ſpouſe here either glories in, or elſe beggeth; (for the Hebrewes vvanting Optatives ſupply them vvith other Moods) vvhich are as ſignificant.

and his right hand doth imbrace me] Or ſhall, which is the language of Faith, and reſolution, as well as of deſire, or thankfulneſſe. The right hand of Chriſt is the Goſpel in the power of it, by which he cheriſheth and feedeth his Church, Epheſ. 5. 29. and rejoyceth in her, as the Bridegroom in his Bride. Eſay 65. 5. Of this love, imbraces are as natural a conſequent, as Aſcenſion is of fire; And therefore the Latine Grammarians have conceited that their Verb Amo, is formed from an old Latine prepoſition Am, which is the ſame that circum; becauſe in circumductu brachiorum ſeu amplexu ſit amoris ſignificatio naturalis: But for theſe his imbraces ſpoken of here, they are teſtimonies both of love and power; not ſo much witneſſing the kindneſſe, as the might of Chriſt, who is able to preſerve ſuch lame creeples as we are from falling, and likewiſe to lift us up again, when faln never ſo low, and to reſtore us to a better ſtrength again, which onely (if any be) is the reaſon, that his people ſhall not be finally and utterly caſt down, for the Lord (upholdeth them as is Pſalm 37. 24. which is the upholding Pſalm!) Nay, the Lord) incircleth and imbraceth them with his hand, with his right hand. O pray then, pray and cry unto thy ſtrength; wo is me, I ſink, I periſh; O my beloved, help me. My head ſinks, O put thy left hand, ſofter than pillows of Roſes, firmer than pillars of Marble, under it; my heart faileth and dieth, O let thy right hand imbrace me. On thee alone I caſt all my care, all my hope: Oh! do thou, who onely canſt under-bear me and eſtabliſh me, with thy free and Almighty Spirit. Fœlix anima quæ in Chriſti recumbit pectore & inter verbi brachia requieſcit. Bern.

V. 7. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jeruſalem] As ſhe reſteth in the Armes of Chriſt, ſhe chargeth all that profeſs any friendſhip or communion with her, not to diſturb or interrupt either his or her peace. The LXX. read, I have adjured, but the Preſent-tenſe is as ſignificant to us, which the Hebrew wanting adopt another: The charge is very ſolemn, and vehement, ſhewing both her duty to Chriſt, and her authority over her own members and parts. For the daughters of Jeruſalem are nothing elſe but her ſelf in her diſtinct parts and branches. Illa ipſa Eccleſia in ſingulis conſtituta. And none of theſe ought to diſquiet or diſpleaſe him in any peril, but in all religious duties to keep ſuch a diſpoſition, as may preſerve communion inwardly with Chriſt, elſe they worſhip him in vain. True Religion conſiſting not in outward ſhowes and janglings, holding of nice points and opinions; diſputing againſt the practice and cuſtomes of the Church in external forms of worſhip, &c. but in a right managing of the inward man, and an approving of that in Gods preſence ſo, as not to be guilty of any thing that may break communion with him, and cauſe him to depart.

by the roes and by the hinds of the field] Some with the roes: others, by the ranks or ſtations, or forces of the field. Tremel. and Jun. uſe a ſupplement which Piſcator himſelf (which is ſtrange) calls a bold addition, and rather prefers the old Verſion before it. By Roes and Hindes ſome underſtand the Angels of God, which are quicker and ſwifter than thoſe nimble creatures in fulfilling the commands of God, and which obſerve as they fly to and fro, all our actions; being quick ſighted as Roes whom the Greeks call, Δορκάδες from δέρκειν, to ſee. Others ſay, they figure the nations yet unconverted, who are wilde and untamed as Roes and Hindes; but yet ſhould not be ſcandalized, nor diſcouraged from Chriſt, by our wicked provocations, of whom we ſhould rather walk worthy unto all pleaſing, Colloſſ. 1. 10. But me thinks, the uſual and plaineſt gloſſe is the beſt; which reſpecting the nature of this ſong, which is a kinde of Bucolick, or Paſtorall Æglogue (as hath been ſaid) expoundeth theſe Roes and Hindes (which are the delights of ſhepherds) of things moſt dear and precious: The Wiſe man ſaith, Prov 5. 19. that the Hinde is pleaſant, and the Roe loving, and ſo they are eſpecially to be among themſelves, leaping and playing together; And thus the ſenſe appears brightly, I charge you, O all ye daughters, by that which is moſt dear and amiable in your eyes: As ever you loved any thing that is lovely or prety, or deſire it may not periſh, that ye take heed what ye do; for elſe theſe irrational creatures will riſe up witneſſes againſt you, Deut. 30. 19. and then had you their feet, and ſwiftneſſe, you cannot out-fly his vengeance when he is incenſed: So it is a charge, a prohibition upon their uttermoſt perill Gen. 21. 23.

That ye ſtirre not up, nor awake my love] The word for love is an Abſtract, which becauſe it is a Feminine, the vulgar Latine make the Concrete of it ſo too, and read Dilectam, as if theſe were the words of Chriſt; but we receive them as the Churches Language, whoſe love Chriſt is; that is, not ſo much beloved, as all Love it ſelf; the very eſſence of love (as the Syryack very happily reads it.) Another Oratour could ſay of Cicero, that he was not ſo much Eloquentis nomen, quàm ipſius eloquentiæ: we may better ſay of Chriſt He is nothing elſe but Love, nor ſhould any thing be loved by us, but as it either conveyes love from him, or elſe drawes up our affections unto him; which happy frame and liberty of the ſoul we ſhould labour to obtain, that we may ſay with that great Martyr, ὁ ἔρως ἐμὸς ἐϛαύρωται. VVhereof nothing can be a ſurer indication or evidence; than our carefulneſſe to pleaſe him, and to win others to the like obedience; and our deſires, that the communion we have with Chriſt may never decay, but that our hearts may be alwayes in ſuch a frame as never to diſquiet him again, that he may never be provoked to depart from us, or to withdravv himſelf any more: that ſo neither they nor vve may grieve his Spirit, or diſturb and diſquiet either our ovvn peace, or his love by any unruly or offenſive converſation. For if we provoke the Lord, he will conſume us, 1 Cor. 10. 22.

till he pleaſe] That is never, for wickedneſſe can never pleaſe him; nor diſtruſt and unſeaſonable importunities. In acts of Faith we muſt not be too haſty, but let God have his owne time, which is beſt; and wait till he awake to redeem us. He was angry at his Diſciples, for awaking him in the ſtorme; Marke 4. 40. not becauſe he was unwilling to ſave, but becauſe they were fearfull; for want of Faith in them, not of goodneſſe in himſelf.

V. 8, The voyce of my beloved! Behold, he cometh!] Or it is the voyce, as ſome make it out: for it is an abrupt, ſudden expreſſion, as of one haſtily awakened or ſtartled from her ſleep, and ſcarce come to her ſelf. Yet ſhe knowes his voyce, and can diſtinguiſh his Accents, from a ſtrangers, John 10. 3, 4. Her ſenſes were ſick and drowſie, but not dead, nor ſtupid; ſhe both hears and ſees his firſt approaches, whoſe voyce like the Baptiſts, runs before him to prepare his way, and then he comes and enters, and dwels, and beſtows larger communications, and further degrees of grace and comfort.

leaping upon the Mountaines, skipping upon the Hills] This phraſe ſpeakes both alacrity and ſtrength; when the time of deliverance is come, Chriſt makes haſte, and rejoyceth to ſave: and no Mountaines nor Hills, either of ſinne or miſery can ſtop him: Our tranſgreſsions are great Mountaines, but he levells and brings them down, even the higheſt imaginations of them, 2 Corinthians, 10. 4. Our enemies are great hills, Zachary 4.7. but he threſheth them, and beats them ſmall, Eſay 41. 15.

V. 9. My beloved is like a Roe, or a young Hart] All the excellent properties of theſe creatures are more eminently in him, that made them, And as he was figured by the Goat in the Law, ſo he is now a Lambe, and a Roe, and an Hart, in all meekneſſe, goodneſſe, and readineſſe to help and ſave.

behold he ſtandeth behind our wall] Now Chriſt is come, whoſe motions are ſpeedy and imperceptible; His voyce and his preſence go together, though his preſence is not alwayes equal, or clear alike, but appears gradually, and a full open viſion is to be hereafter, 1 Cor. 13 12. there we ſhall ſee him face to face, but here we ſee him as behind a wall, darkly and in part. This wall is conceived to be the humane nature of Chriſt, which was a ſcreen or wall to his God-head: Others ſay it was the legall ordinances, under which he was ſhadowed, and which he removed giving more light, Eph. 2. 14. It is a fine conceit of theirs who will have the Sacraments, or the Elements in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to be underſtood here, in which they ſay Chriſt is ſub ſpeciebus, as behind a wall. But that which is moſt real and ſatiſfactory applies it to the patience and long-ſuffering of Chriſt, who waiteth at the walls of our hearts (as we finde the word uſed in the margin of Jerem. 4. 19.) that is, at our outward ſenſes and reaſonings, and there knocks and ſummons us to admit him, and ſometimes ſcales them and breaks in forcibly.

he looketh forth at the window] Or in at the window; This is not civil, nor comely among men to ſpie, and peep in at the windows; but Chriſt may, and will; He is our Shepherd, our Lord; and a narrow, attentive obſervation of our inward and moſt ſecret actions is the prerogative of his Scepter and Providence. Thus Wiſdom is ſaid to do, Prov. 7. 6. and he is that Wiſdom; therefore we ought to watch over our ſelves, and not upon preſumption of his abſence take any liberty to do wickedly. Time oculos capreæ, time ſcrutinium Iudicis, &c.

ſhewing himſelf through the latteſſe] Or caſements, or nets, as the LXX. Through theſe he ſheweth himſelf, or flouriſheth (as our margins more cloſe to the fountain) and bloſſometh, and ſhineth forth. The words are hard, eſpecially the former, which is uſed in no other place; and ſo is the ſenſe too, which by ſome, is not unfitly applyed to thoſe gracious openings and borings of the heart, by which Chriſt conveyeth his graces, and offers himſelf to the ſoul, to her unſpeakable joy and comfort: As ſweet plants or flowers grow under windows, and ſend in their odour, and branches at the caſements. Others, will have it meant of temptations, which are nets and ſnares, of which all the world is full, and from which onely Chriſt, can deliver us, by ſhining into the heart, and ſanctifying the eyes and other ſenſes, that ſo where death is uſed to aſcend, Jer. 9. 21. there life may enter: But if we conſider it onely as exegetical to the former ſentence, that explication will be proper enough, and more familiar. Beſides all theſe, I find the conception of a late Father to be ingenious that by this wall and window, and latice is repreſented the imperfect communion which the Saints have with God here on earth, as perſons that love one another but muſt not come together: they manifeſt their love at a diſtance, ſpeak one to another; but there is a wall between them, look one upon another, but through a window ſhew themſelves each to other, but through a lattice: what is meant by all this? I conceive two things: Firſt, corruptions, and they are a wall of ſeparation; ſo that as long as they remain, and that ungodlyneſſe of a mans Nature, but in any degree unpurged, ſo long there is a wall between Chriſt and the Church, which hinders perfect communion: they do draw near, but Chriſt, ſtill my beloved, is behind the wall; a nearer communion is deſired and to be attained. Secondly, a wall of Ordinances, for it is ſpoken chiefly, no doubt, of the Ordinances of the Church of the Jews, called a wall or partition, Epheſ. 2. 14. there Chriſt did manifeſt himſelf but darkly? they had a weak manifeſtation, and a dark communion with him: And this is true alſo in ſome meaſure of the Ordinances of the Goſpel: for though it be clearer and nearer communion than theirs under the Law, Heb. 12. 22, 23. Yet tis not ſo near as face to face ſhall be, which ſhall be in glory, when the ungodlyneſſe of our Nature is perfectly removed, and this corruptible hath put on incorruption; and then this diſtance ſhall be removed, and we ſhall imbrace him immediately, for he will ſtand behind the wall of corruption, and look through the windowes of Ordinances no more.

V. 10. My beloved ſpake, and ſaid unto me, Riſe up my love, my fair one] The vulgar Latine admit divers words here (as En. propera, columba mea) which have no baſis in the Originals; but yet may have a good uſe and ſignificancy where Chriſt ſtrongly moveth and perſwadeth his Church to a ſweet communion with himſelf, by a ſpeedy and watchful ariſing from ſinne and ſecurity. To lie down and ſtretch out ſelves in wicked pleaſures and vanity befits not chriſtians; nor can any ſoul be ſo ingrateful as to do it, that is ſenſible of theſe gracious invitations.

and come away] There is a Pleonaſme in the Hebrew (which is uſual in that Language) affixt to both the Verbs, but omitted in the Engliſh; Riſe to thy ſelf, come away to thy ſelf; which import that our coming away is for our own benefit, and ſhould be another Argument to excite us with all diligence and earneſtneſs to draw near to Chriſt, and preſs on to Heaven, both in affection and converſation, to leave our countrey as Abraham did, and flee as Lot did for our lives out of Sodom, not looking back, leſt we periſh. It is good to draw near to God, Pſalm 73. 27, 28. who when we ariſe, will accompany and go along with us, that we may make better diſpatch, and be diſcouraged in nothing, having him with us, both our captain and companion. So it is noted of Cæſar; that he never ſaid Ite to his ſouldiers, but Venite; required no more from them than he would partake in with them, Monſtrat tolerare labores, non jubet.

V. 11. For loe the winter is paſt] This winter may be underſtood, either of the Law which was cold darkneſs and auſterity, compared to Chriſt and his light; wherein that Spirit of Grace that was in a manner bound up and darkned before, was manifeſted with greater freedom and glory: or elſe of the troubles of the world which eſtrange us, and ſet us at diſtance from Chriſt by reaſon of our weakneſſe, as it was with the Apoſtles at the paſſion, when they fled from their Lord, but they ſhall not endure alwayes, no more than winter does, nor ſhall the expectation of the poor periſh for ever, Pſal. 9. 18. & 125. 3.

the rain is over and gone] Or the ſtorms, for the Hebrew word ſignifies a great rain, which are uſual in winter, theſe God ſhowreth down upon the wicked as he did on the old world, and Sodom, Ezek. 38. 22. and ſometimes his own people are beaten with them; but they ſhall not continue upon them: There is a bow in the cloud, ſo that it ſhall not overwhelm her; his Ark ſhall get above the waters, and be preſerved from the wind and tempeſt, Eſay, 32. 2.

V. 12. The flowers appear on the earth] Or flouriſhing things, ſuch as flowers are, and which as thoſe that follow, are naturall ſymptoms and concomitants of the Spring, which is here deſcribed to as high an elegance, as any of the chiefeſt Poets did ever fancy. The ſenſe is, that Chriſt not onely removeth evil things, but diſpenſeth all that is good, which is figured by the pleaſures and ſweetneſs of the Spring. He was born in Nazareth, which ſignifieth flowers, and he ſoweth and planteth ſeeds of grace in the hearts of his people, which in due time will ſhoot up and produce both flowers and fruits: But till then, they are as barren as the ground that was curſed for their ſakes, and as the earth in winter; they bear nothing but weeds and brambles, untill the dew of his grace bleſs them, and make them flouriſh, (Hoſ. 14. 5.) as the Spring.

The time of the ſinging (of birds, is added) is come] Or of pruning, or cutting, as the vulgar Latine and others. This is expounded of the voyce of Gods Miniſters, whoſe muſick is ſweeter than that of the Nightingall, Ezek. 33. 32. and makes their tongues in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel like the tongues of Angels, with whom they are appointed collegues and partakers in that office. And it may be applied to every particular Chriſtian, who ſhould be wiſe to know the times of ſinging: In winter the birds chirp not, nor ſing ſo melodiouſly as in the Spring and Summer: They ſhould be our School-maſters, and teach dull blockiſh men to be ſenſible of Gods wayes; to know his judgements, as the Stork and Crane, and Swallow do their times, Jer. 8. 7. and to warble his prayſes when he enlighteneth and giveth joy, Eſay 24. 14, 15, 16. For there is a time of ſinging.

and the voice of the Turtle is heard in our land] This Turtle is the Emblem of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the Church, and of every penitent ſinner: A bird much beloved by God, for he choſe it for a part of his ſervice under the Law; but not ſo much as that which it ſignified; which was a mourning and contrite heart: whoſe groanings, though many and grievous, yet are muſicke in his eares, and ſweet evidences both of his Spirit abiding in us, and of the worke of Grace, like a new and lively Spring, begun by it.

V. 13. The Fig-tree putteth forth her green Figs] Or, hath ſweetned her unripe Figs; which was another token of Summer drawing nigh, Math. 24. 32. For the Fig-tree hath no flowers, but inſtead of them ſhoots out green knots or buds, which our Saviour miſſing, curſed the Tree, Matthew 21. 19. Let us take heed leſt we deſerve the like angry doome; leſt God deſire the firſt ripe fruit from us, and we have none for him; Mich. 7. 1. It ſhould be no diſcouragement, that our good workes are like the imperfect Figges of the Spring; if they have ſubſtance and life, he will accept of them, though they want mature beauty and ſweetneſſe.

and the Vines with the tender Grape give a good ſmell] Theſe are the earneſts and inchoations of perfect happineſſe, as the dream of them was a preſage of his reſtitution to his office unto Pharaohs Butler, Geneſis 40. 9. which every branch that liveth in the true Vine will being forth, and the fruit whereof they ſhall receive again, and drink new with him in the Kidgdome of his Father.

Ariſe my love, my fair one, and come away] Chriſt redoubles his call, knocks and knocks again, untill we open; ſo teſtifying, firſt, his own great love by theſe importunate iterations. 2. Our duty and concernment in it, which is ever to be ariſing and getting forward: Ille qui verè ſurgit, nunquam deerit ſemper ſurgere. And laſtly, accuſeth our dulneſſe and unwillingneſſe to hear his voyce.

V. 14. O my Dove that art in the clefts of the rock] Chriſt continues his invitation to his Church, which is a Dove in ſimplicity, pureneſſe, meekneſſe, fruitfulneſſe, faithfulneſſe, and all holy graces and properties; but yet a Dove hid in a rock; that is, ſay ſome in the the eternal decrees of God, others in the wounds of Chriſt, who is the ſpiritual Rock that was opened for us, 1 Cor. 10. 4. And others beſt of all, in the gracious protections, and ſure mercies of God, who is her hiding place and rock of defence, to whoſe holes ſhe fleeth, (Jer. 48. 28.) in times of danger and perſecution.

in the ſecret places of the ſtairs] Or in craggy places of ſteep precipate rocks, or towers, as it is in the margin, Ezek. 38. 20. God hath ſecure trenches and fortifications to defend his doves in, when hunted and purſued, and as he hid Moſes his friend, Exod. 32. 22. ſo will he hide them, where no enemy ſhall find them, but onely himſelf, to whom they are viſible and conſpicuous in all conditions, though they are not ſo to the world, The Church is like the Moon, not alwayes in the ful, but yet alwayes bright; and when ſhe is dark and obſcured to men, ſhe hath a bright ſide turned to heaven, and ſhineth gloriouſly.

let me ſee thy countenance let me hear thy voice] She is called out of her caves and dens, to appear and look abroad: God forgets not his in perſecution, leaves them not to ſtarve in holes and rocks; but viſits them, and converſeth with them, delighting to ſee their faith, to behold their Aſſemblies, and to hear their praiſes and prayers. Therefore he bids them to call on him ſo often, Pſalm. 5. 3. & 50. 15. being never more troubled, than as that good Emperour is ſaid to be, when his ſervants will aſk him nothing.

for ſweet is thy voice and thy countenance is comely] Nothing ſo ſweet and welcome to Chriſt, as the voyce and countenance of his Saints. Though they but chatter, it is like lovely ſongs to him, though they offer but a mite it is a ſweet oblation, Mic. 3. 4. It is not ſo with the wicked, whoſe very incenſe is dung, and their ſweet canes from a far countrey unſavoury and diſtaſtful. One thing we muſt ever obſerve, that the voice and countenance muſt not be parted but go together; Good works by which (as by the face and countenance) we ſhew our faith, James 2. 18.

muſt alwaies go along with the voice of Prayer and Preaching: This maketh both the voyce and the countenance accepted. Tunc et vox placet, & facies decoratur, quando & opera prædicatio jubet, & rurſum prædicationem bona opera comitantur.

V. 15. Take us the foxes, the little foxes] The words are conſidered by ſome as a promiſe, that they ſhall be taken and deſtroyed, Pſalm. 80. 14. But they ſeem rather a command concerning all the enemies of the Church, either hereticks, and ſchiſmaticks within her pale; or elſe perſecutours, and profeſt Tyrants without: Of whom Chriſt giveth this deſcription, that they are foxes even the leaſt of them; and this may ſhew that they are to be taken, that is, found out, judged, convinced, cenſured, reproved and puniſhed. That Tyrants are foxes is evident in Herod, Luke 13. 22 who was alſo a kind of Heretick, a Sadducee as ſome think, the more to colour his crueltie, and from him ſprung the Herodians, Matth. 22. 16. And that Hereticks are ſo, and Schiſmaticks appears by their fruits, and nature; having not onely the craft of that beaſt, transforming themſelves, 2 Cor. 11. 13. carrying a Fox in their boſome, when they are Lambs outwardly; but alſo the rage and bloody cruelty, where they get power, none being like them: for never did the Church of God ſuffer more from the maddeſt and blindeſt Heathens, than they have done from Heretickes, and Schiſmatickes, that were among them. The Lord complains for Iſrael, that her Prophets were Foxes, Ezekiel, 13. 4. and the complaint is ſo much the juſter, becauſe ſuch Foxes they are, as can never be extirpated. The Wolves, were deſtroyed out of this Land by the wiſedome of a victorious Prince; Oh! that we could ſee the like deliverance from the Foxes.

that ſpoil the Vines] Or that corrupt the Vines; that is, the Churches, Pſalm 80. 14, 15. which they doe either by fraud, or force; either by falſe doctrine, or wicked manners which follow it: either by Hereſies which are the great Foxes, or Schiſmes; which are but little ones at firſt, but like Cubbs will grow into bigge ones; as 'tis obſerved of them, 1 Cor. 11. 18, 19 where Diviſions or Schiſmes in the former verſe become Hereſies in the latter. O the ſad perill of theſe ſubtil Vipers, which over ſpread, if not corrected quickly, like a canker and poyſon, not onely whole houſes, but whole kingdomes! what can be too ſevere, too rigorous a Law againſt them, who like brute beaſts are made to be taken and deſtroyed? 2 Pet. 2. 12. How excellent is that counſell in this caſe, which was wicked in Saul, 1 Sam. 23. 22, 23. I ſhall adde to this, that ſome underſtand theſe little Foxes of ſmall and little ſinnes, which though but little, may devour the ſoul, as well as greater enormities. And ſure, it is not ſo deſperate a ſtate to have the ſoul attempted by Lions and Bears, (greater and more apparant ſinnes,) as to have her eaten up by vermine, by lice and locuſts; the cuſtomes and habits of thoſe ſinnes which are accounted inconſiderable. In like manner, is it alſo as dangerous, for any Church in her ſpiritual affairs, to grow wanton and negligent, ſo as to play with ſmall errours, to tolerate or wink at little abuſes, as if ſhe could reform and correct and extinguiſh them at her pleaſure. The little Foxes that ſeem but deſpicable, able to do little harm, yet grow bigger and bigger every day, and therefore they ſhould be taken and reproved, and not ſuffered to grow on.

For our Vines (have is added) tender Grapes] Or, that our Vines may, or whileſt or untill our Vines bring forth their firſt grapes. Eſpeciall care is to be had of weak Chriſtians, who are but newly entred into the profeſſion of Chriſt, and are apteſt to be ſeduced, whileſt the Foxes (who are obſerved to love young grapes) plot chiefly to practiſe upon them, and ſuch novices as weak ſilly women, 2 Tim. 3. 6. Before I leave this verſe, I muſt needs repeat that note of Bernard concerning the pronoun here, Vs and Our; Poterat dicere (ſayes he) capite mihi, ſed maluit nobis, conſortio delectatus, &c. our welfare is united with his own, and he takes as great care of us, as of himſelf, and of the whole Church together, as well as any particular member.

V. 16. My beloved is mine, and I am his,] Theſe words are either a Prayer of the Churches, for the preſence of Chriſt till ſhe ſhall ſee him in glory, or elſe a profeſſion and remonſtrance in which ſhe glories in her Communion with Chriſt, and wholly devotes and ſurrenders her ſelf to him, who hath the onely intereſt in her, and power over her: They are both very high and magnanimious ſayings, but ſuch as faith uſeth, and love prompteth: which gives away it ſelf, and reſerving no propriety, yet enjoyes more than all, in Chriſt: By faith (as by marriage) two are made one, and there is nothing in either that is not common to both. Chriſt giveth all to her, and what can ſhe deny to ſuch bounty?

he feedeth among the Lillies] This feeding is uſed both actively and paſſively; Firſt Chriſt feedeth his Church by his word, example, graces, ſpirit, merits, &c. which are like flowrie Medowes, abounding with Lillies, Eſaiah 25. 6. And then he is fed by her, that is, he delighteth as much in her duty and ſervice, as in the ſweeteſt flowers and ſpices; Quot Vertutes tot Lilia; every faithfull ſoul is his Garden, and every Grace there is an immarceſſible Lily. Nor is it ſaid that he feedeth on them, but among them; where two or three are gathered, he is in the middeſt; Lillies grow in great plenty, and numbers, and ſuch unity Chriſt loveth; but hateth ſeparations and ſtraglings. Amat ſemper media Jeſus, diverticula reprobat.

V. 17. Untill the day breake] Or breath, or dawn; for at the break of day, there uſeth to be a kinde of ſoft Aire, or breath which the Sunne cauſeth by reſolving the cold vapours of the night: and ſo doth the Son of Righteouſneſs when he ariſeth, till when the Church ſitteth in a kind of darkneſs and night 2 Pet. 1. 19. So that ſhe beggeth or profeſſeth a conſtant protection and proviſion from Chriſt, untill the time of refreſhment ſhall come, when ſhe ſhall enjoy an accompliſht and eternall morning of happyneſſe; but the wicked ſhall rot in their gloomy Dungeon, Pſalm 49. 14.

And the ſhadowes flie away] Or decline, or be removed and vaniſh away; that is, till full and perfect day; for the higher the Sun riſeth, ſhadowes leſſen, untill at noon there be almoſt none at all. And ſo then will all ſhadowes vaniſh, as the ſhadows of the Law fled at his firſt coming, Coloſ. 2. 17. So ſhall all other ſhadowes of ſinne, ignorance, infidelity, affliction, tentations, diſorder, and whatſoever eclipſeth the Church, ſhall be utterly diſperſed. They may darken her for a time, but when the day of the Lord ſhall appear, there ſhall not be ſo much as a mention of them, Jer. 3. 16. Tunc amor ſponſi abſentis vertetur in gaudium & fruitionem præſentis, tunc mutabitur fides in ſpeciem, ſpes in rem, charitas in claritatem, ærumna in gloriam, mors in vitam, corruptio in incorruptionem, luctus in lætitiam.

turn my beloved, and be thou like a Roe, or a young Hart] Come; that is, and viſite me, and have a ſpeciall care of me; and declare that by helping me ſpeedily, as thou uſeſt; for Chriſt puniſheth unwillingly, and when he departs it is with an heavy ſlow pace, but he is ſwift to ſhew mercy; and then returns as the Roe and Hart doth to his accuſtomed place of feeding wherein he delighteth.

upon the mountains of Bether] Some would have it to be Bethel, Gen. 32. but no cauſe for that; they are nearer who think that Bithron to be meant, which was divided from the reſt of Judea, by the River Jordan, 2 Samuel 2. 29. The word is not met with elſewhere, nor any ſuch place in the Map of of the Holy Land; therefore ſome reade it not as a proper name, but the mountains of ſeparation or diviſion, and underſtand the Church by it; which is the mountain of the Lord, upon the top of the mountains, Eſaiah, 2. 2. that is a Catholick and Univerſal conſiſting of many particulars; which too often are worſe divided than onely in place; and therefore as we have alwayes cauſe to beg the preſence of Chriſt in all deſolations, perſecutions, temptations, obſcurities afflictions, &c. ſo moſt eſpecially in times of civil diſſentions, and factions, when the mountains of the Lords houſ are become mountains of Bether, of diviſion; to compact their differences, and make them all of one heart and one mind: which yet cannot be perfectly be done, till he ſhall himſelf divide betwixt the goats and the ſheep, and then all ſhall come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto one perfect man, Eph. 4. 13.

CHAP. III.

THis Chapter intimates the departure of Chriſt occaſioned by the negligence and ſecuritie of the Church; her ſorrow for his abſence, diligent ſcrutiny, and ſearch for him: Her finding of him, her dutifull care towards him, and holy gloriation in his Majeſtie, and Beautie, which ſhe inciteth others to conſider and magnifie.

Verſe 1. BY night on my bed I ſought him] Or in the night; It is night many times with the Church, Eſa. 50 10. and ſo dark, that like that tempeſt, Acts 27. 20. ſhe can ſee neither Sun nor Stars: yet in theſe ſad deſertions, Chriſt is pleaſed to preſerve ſome deſires after him, ſo that the Eclipſe is not totall; and when we are moſt ſecure, he infuſeth memorials of him, and awakens us to ſeek him: ſo that places of reſt and ſleep become unquiet without his preſence.

whom my ſoul loveth] This is a dear Paraphraſis of affection; with which being ſo filled, it is no wonder that ſhe was buſie in ſeeking: Love is a ſollicitous paſſion, and when we eſteem any thing, though it be but a groat, a ſmall thing to others, we will ſweep the houſe and ſeek in all places for it; ſo they ſought for Chriſt in Jeruſalem, Luke 2. 46. they ſought him ſorrowing, with ſad carefull hearts; as all ſhould doe that have loſt him: for ſo the word in the Originall, imports an anxious but yet faithfull inquiſition of him; by prayer, meditation, hearing, and all wayes; for all is but little enough for him, to whom we have firſt given our ſouls in love.

I ſought him, but I found him not] Sought and ſought again, night after night, early and late; for ſo we ought, Jer. 29. 13. and ſo if we be ſenſible of that affliction which his abſence is, we cannot chuſe but do, Hoſ. 2. 15 Pſalm 78. 34, 35. but yet not find him neither; that is, not immediately, as ſoon as we ſeek; for ſometimes Chriſt ſeemeth coy and ſtately, and even when moſt preſent indeed, ſuſpends and keeps off his beams, ſo as if altogether loſt; ſo that he is not perceived, nor injoyed ſo ſweetly as we deſire; eſpecially when we ſeek him diſtruſtfully, or coldly; Then he may be ſought and not found, as at other times he is found of thoſe that ſeek him not.

V. 2. I will riſe now and go about the ſtreets] Or let me riſe now forthwith, and not defer it; for ſo we ſhould ſtir up our ſelves, and not lie ſtill a moment, being to ſeek that which is of ſo much worth and neceſſity to us: and in our ſeeking, pretermit no place likely, or unlikely; ſeek him in the ſtreets, or market places; or corners, publike and open places, where wiſedome preacheth, Proverbs 1. 20. It fares with devout ſouls in their earneſt proſecutions of Chriſt, as it doth with ungodly ambitious, or blood thirſty men in effecting their deſires; they breath nothing but fury and violence; they run about the ſtreets, Pſalm 59 6. and reſt not till they have brought their miſchief about. Oh! is not Chriſt and his heaven worth as ſtrong and as ſedulous indeavours?

and in the broad wayes I will ſeek him whom my ſoul loveth] When our own ſtores of comfort fail us, we ſhould conſult with others; with the Scriptures of God (which like a great ſtreet are exceeding broad) with the lives and examples of the Saints: nay, with the ordinary and looſer ſort of men, to learn how God hath dealt with them; how with the Philoſophers, and with men of the world, who perhaps may tell us ſome news of him.

I ſought him, but I found him not] Still a non inventus is returned; ſhe cannot meet with her beloved in all the ſtreets and aſſemblies of the world, ſo as to ſatisfie her: God deferreth to be gracious, to kindle our deſires the more: As it is ſaid, Fruſtratio rei amatæ, flabellum amoris eſt amanti.

V. 3. The watchmen that go about the City found me] I cannot ſee reaſon why the Angels (as ſome would) ſhould be theſe watchmen, though they are commanded to encamp about us, Pſalm. 91. 11. unleſs in the larger ſenſe of that word we underſtand by Angels, the Magiſtrates or Miniſters rather, who are watchmen alſo, that guard and viſit thoſe that be under them, and ſhall be viſited in great wrath themſelves, if they be not faithful in their duty, Eſa 62.6. They ſhould go about the City and walk the rounds conſtantly, providing both againſt all violence and treachery; and ready to ſuccour and help thoſe they find oppreſſed: Not like thoſe blind guards, Eſa. 56. 16.

to whom I ſaid, ſaw ye him whom my ſoul loveth?] The firſt words are a ſupplement to perfect the ſenſe, which elſe would be abrupt, and obſcure; but now plainly delivers the ſtate and complexion of a true penitent ſoul to the life, raiſed up by grace out of the bed of ſinfull pleaſures, and courſes: For which cauſe the Church of Rome in her Lyturgies, upon the Feaſt of M. Magdalen, that peccatrix mulier (as ſhe is ſtiled) read this part of Scripture, inſtead of an Epiſtle, as deſcribing to the life the nature and condition of a reall convert; whoſe firſt and laſt work is to ſeek for Chriſt, to make this his whole buſineſs, and to deſpiſe none, eſpecially not the publike watch-men of the City of God, that may direct or bring unto him. It is a bold, groundleſs Argument of ſome Papiſts, that would build their Invocation of Saints and Angels upon this Text; nor is it a leſs ungrateful and ſtupid malice of theirs that will not ſee the dignity and office of the Miniſters of Chriſt in it: They are all to be watchmen for us, and therefore to be eſteemed by us; Quam boni vigiles; qui nobis dormientibus, &c. Oh how gracious is the Lord of Hoaſts to provide ſo kindly for our ſecurity, and how wiſe ſhould we be in improving this diſpenſation to our certain and eternal comfort? which cannot be effected better, than by ſeeking and inquiring after Chriſt evermore: For this is not an imployment that ſhould ever end, untill we perfectly injoy him, Nec ſi inventus excuſabimur à quærendo. As to ſeek him is in ſome degree to have him; for none could ſeek him elſe; ſo when we have him, we ſhould ſeek him ſtill. It is a long duty this, and ends not but with our lives: Magnum bonum quærere Deum; primum in donis ultimum in profectibus: non extendit deſiderium, ſed extendit.

V. 4. It was but a little that I paſſed from them] Or, how little was it! All is but little that we do for Chriſt as it is ſaid of Jacob, Gen 29 0. And though he do not vouchſafe to appear preſently in all ſuch means as we uſe to find him, leſt we ſhould aſcribe too much to means; yet it is not long but he will manifeſt himſelf to them that ſeek him with all their heart; as the Spouſe does here, who lingers not, nor ſits down weary and diſcontented, becauſe they give her no good anſwer, but haſts away, and inquire ſome where elſe O amor præceps (ſayes Bern.) vehemens, flagrans impetuoſe qui præter te aliud cogitare non ſidis, faſtidis cætera, &c.

but I found him whom my ſoul loveth] Still ſhe toucheth upon that muſicall ſtring of love, which had taken poſſeſſion of her whole ſoul; which is not deſpiſed at laſt, but rewarded by him: Chriſt is not ſought in vain, Matth 7. 7. Though we find him not in our own beds, in our own wayes, (in commoditate noſtrâ, in voluntate noſtrâ in curioſitate noſtrâ) yet he will be found at laſt He may hold us off, and ſuſpend us as Laban did Jacob, and Joſeph his brethren; but when we are almoſt hopeleſs and ſeem utterly forlorn he will preſent himſelf, and not ſuffer us to be tempted above meaſure; yet a little while, &c. Heb. 10 37.

I held him, and would not let him go] There is a grateful violence, which takes the Kingdome of Heaven; we muſt make uſe of it, to that end, compelling Chriſt to ſtay with us. To this end he keeps ſome diſtance, and hides himſelf to provoke our contentions, and indeavours to keep him. Prius non inveniendus quæritur, ut poſt inventus ſtrictius teneatur. Thus Jacob held him by force, and wraſtled hard for his bleſſing: but when he had obtained, that, ſuffered him to depart: but we ſhould never leave him, no not when he hath bleſſed us, as prizing him more, than any thing that he can beſtow. Nolo benedictionem tuam, ſed te. For if he be ſo good to thoſe that ſeeke him, how much more precious is he, when found and enjoyed.

untill I had brought him into my mothers houſe, and unto, &c.] Houſe and Chambers, or Cellars and Cloſets, are expounded (by ſome) of the darke Types of the Law, and deeper things of the Goſpel, which ſhe deſired to know; and by the mother, ſome will have the Jewiſh Synagogue to be meant, but the Courtiers of Rome, that Church; Quæ eſt iſta parens (ſaith a late Ieſuite) niſi Romana Eccleſia? But according to the channell of our Expoſitors, it is moſt agreeable and pious, to underſtand it either of the Church of God, in her publike Congregations which is the mother of us all, or elſe of the ſanctified heart and conſcience, which is the dwelling of Chriſt, where we ſhould lay him up by faith, and keep him ſafely as a jewel of ineſtimable price.

V. 5. I charge you O ye daughters, &c.] This whole verſe we had before, Chapter 2.7. and as we found Interpreters divided about it there, ſo doe they here again turn it ſeverall wayes: Some put it upon Chriſt, as his adjuration or ſtrict charge, concerning his Church, of whom he taking pity, becauſe of her late temptations and diſtreſſes, he ſolemnly forbids all that have relation to her, that they take heed (as they will anſwer it) of troubling her peace or truth which ſhe had received, by any falſe novelties, of Doctrine, or uncharitable contentions: This application I honour for the moſt reverend Paraphraſts ſake; but yet I ſee no reaſon, why the perſon ſhould be changed any more than the words, wherein as the wants of the Church are renewed; ſo do her affections and reſolutions renew, that neither ſhe, nor any by her means, ſhall provoke her beloved to leave her again as the Lord threatens to doe Iſrael in the wilderneſs, Numb 32. 17.

V. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderneſſe] Or what is this? or what woman is this, neerer to the Hebrew, and to the ſenſe too: which preſents our gracious Lord and Saviour (or as others think, the holy Angels, and Friends of the Bridegroom, who all are a chorus to this Paſtoral) admiring and rejoycing in the ſervice and beauty of the Church, who brought out of a wilderneſs, nay out of a hell of blindneſſe and wickedneſſe, doth mount up and aſcend ſo affectionately, and zealouſly to heaven: The Heathen Nations wondred to ſee the people of Iſrael go up by the way of the wilderneſſe, through ſo many drie, uninhabited, dangerous waſte places, unhurt and ſafe. It was the hand of the Lord which lead them, as his ſheep: but this is more wonderful, to make thoſe very deſerts ſo many gardens, and out of the wild barbarous dark places of the world to cull forth an holy and peculiar flock; This the Apoſtle admires, Rom. 11. 33. and Epheſ. 2 12, 13. and it ſhould be wonderfull in our eyes and we ſhould require his admimiration with ours, no leſſe aſtoniſhed at his deſcentions and aſcentions for us. Eſay 63. 1, Theſe words are referred by the Roman Doctors to the Aſſumption of the Virgin, which is as imaginary as the expoſition; and to the bringing of Pope Sylveſter out of the deſarts and caves of Soracte, where he lay hid, to the chair of Peter by the Emperour Conſtantine; from which time the ſplendor and pomp of that Church increaſed viſibly. But this is as bold and fictitious, as ſome of our fanaticks, who have dreamed the like Images concerning John Hus, Jerom of Prague, Secretary Cecil, &c.

like pillars of ſmoak perfumed with myrrhe and frankincenſe] Or plants, branches and little rods of ſmoak; or like the tall bodies and trunks of the moſt procerous trees (as Palm, or Pines) with large broad heads, by which, and by the ſmoak of the incenſe which aſcended in clouds towards heaven, Pſalm 142. 2. and that wonderfully ſometimes, Judges 13. 19, 10. are figured the ſpiritual ſacrifices and incenſe of our ſoules, which kindled and moved and rarified by the fire of Gods ſpirit, and laid upon Chriſt our altar, aſcends and fumes up (like the rowlings and agglomerations of ſmoak) to the Courts of the Lord, and are more ſweet and welcome than thoſe coſtly evaporations of myrrhe and incenſe, and all powders of the merchants So did Cornelius prayer and alms go up Acts 10. 4. So is the converſation of the Saints in heaven before themſelves, Phil 3. 20. and ſo do charitable communications and beneficiences pleaſe God more than Arabian gums and ſpices, Heb. 13 16. that is when they are cenſed, and offered by that Angel, which miniſtreth at the golden Altar before the Throne, Rev. 8. 3 4.

V. 7. Behold his bed which is Solomons] Or more excellent than Solomons: Here is a rare alluſion and compariſon, wherein (as ſome think) the future glory of heaven which we are exhorted to behold and contemplate by faith, or rather the preſent beauty and ſpiritual riches of the Church, and every member thereof is reſembled to the wealth and ſplendor of Solomons bed; For as it was noted Chap 1. ult. they are the bed of Chriſt, who is the true Solomon, wherein he reſteth in his love, Zeph 3. 17, and in whom they reſt and ſleep in peace, Phil. 4.ult.

threeſcore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Iſrael] Before, this bed was praiſed for the fruitfulneſſe and verdancy of it; and now here, for the ſafety of it, The Church is the bed-chamber of Chriſt, and each faithful heart is his bed, which he guardeth by many ſtrong and watchful Heroes, ſuch are his Angels, Gen. 32. 2. Pſalm 103.20. and his Miniſters Heb. 13. 17. and indeed every individual Chriſtian, who ſhould watch to keep his own heart, Prov. 4 23. but eſpecially by himſelf, who is ſtronger than thouſands, 2 Kings 6. 16. and keepeth our hearts and minds in peace that paſſeth all underſtanding through Chriſt Jeſus, Phil. 4. 7. and hath promiſed, that upon all the glory of it there ſhall be a ſutable defence, Iſaiah 4. 5. God will provide friends for her.

V. 8. They all hold ſwords being expert in war] Or learned, and taught, and ſo able to teach in war. Tis one thing to bear arms, another to handle them, or to have courage to uſe them. The watchmen of the Church ſhould be appointed both wayes, able to teach and willing; furniſhed with all neceſſary ammunition to reſiſt the adverſaries, Titus 1. 9. and valiant for the faith, Jerem. 9. 3. not like the ſword-fiſh which carries a weapon, but no heart; or the children of Ephraim, who being harneſſed and carrying bows, wanted courage, and turned back in the day of battel. And this magnanimity is neceſſary in this regard chiefly, that they have ſo many powerfull enemies to deal with, as it follows.

every man hath his ſword upon his thigh becauſe of fear in the night] Word for word it is, a man his ſword, or the ſword of every man upon his thigh; which note, that readineſſe and promptitude that ſhould be in ſpiritual watchmen as they write of Cæſar, he never laid by his ſword; and as the Heathens painted their Pallas alwaies in her Armes; ſo ſhould the ſervant of Chriſt be alwys accinct, and appointed Cap a pea; but chiefly with his ſword on his thigh; that is not with the ſign of the croſſe or any ſuch thing (as ſome Romaniſts dote) but with prayer and the word of truth, which is a two-edged ſword, Heb. 4. 12. Elſe how will he be able to deliver in terrours of the night? how will thy know and prevent, and reſiſt ſudden dangers which lurk in the dark? Pſalm 91. 5. How will they overcome that envious cruel adverſary, who is moſt buſie while men ſleep? Matth. 13. 25 Nay, how will they, or can they in any ſort be anſwerable to their calling and duty, which is to ſtand in the houſe of the Lord in the night, and keep his family? Pſal. 134. 1. which unleſſe thus provided and ſtrengthned they are more likely to betray, Talis Paſtor non munit gregem (as Greg.) ſed decipit, &c. Oh! how woeful and ſhameful is it to admit ſuch? who being not worthy to read publikely, dare yet teach; and not fit hardly to be common Souldiers, will yet be Captains and Generals: So he complains on, verecundum nobis eſt & dicere pudet, quia ducatum ſibi accipiunt, qui exordium religioſæ militiæ non viderunt.

V. 9. King Solomon made himſelf a chariot of the wood of Lebanon] Or a bed, or Litter, or throne; The genial bed it may be, or the Temple, It is hard to define what, becauſe the word appears onely in this place, and we have no light from any other Text to help us. But the allegory is apt and familiar which preſents the dignity of the Church, which is the workmanſhip of Chriſt himſelf, Epheſ. 2. 10. and, ſo exceedeth the bed or chariot of Solomon in the very Author, for he certainly did not make it himſelf, but cauſeth it to be made by others; If he had, yet a greater than Solomon is here. And as in the efficient, ſo in the materials too, for all that are uſed here, the wood of Lebanon, that is the choiſeſt wood that could be got in nature, and ſilver, gold, purple, &c. are but groſſe and ſenſible illuſtrations of ſpiritual majeſty and glory; by which the Church is made to ſhine, and live more incorruptibly, than buildings of Cedar, 1 Pet. 3. 4 nor in reſpect of outward duration and viſibility as the Church of Rome glories vainly, but of that which is internall and inviſible.

V. 10. He made the pillars thereof of ſilver] It is hard to aſſign the true and proper Antitype of all theſe figures, nor is it unlawful to abound in various, ſo they be ſober and godly, interpretations. Some by pillars would have wiſdom meant, which hath many pillars to that goodly houſe, Prov. 9 1, 2. others all holy virtues of the ſoul, as humility, obedience, patience, &c. others the Miniſters of the Church, which (like that Atlas of the Poets) bear up the new Jeruſalem, and ſhould be not only pillars, Gal. 2. 9. but of ſilver too; that is clear and ſhrill in their ſound (that is their fame) and pure and ſtable in doctrine, and then they will bear up the diſſolved earth, Pſal. 75. 3.

the bottom thereof of gold] Or, the Throne, or chaire, or pillars of it: If the firſt word be received, then it repreſents the word of God, which is the golden bottom or foundation: or elſe faith, which is the firſt ſtone in the ſpiritual building, 2 Pet. 1 5. and more pretious in its tryal than any periſhable gold on earth 1 Pet. 1. 7. but if the other words pleaſe better, then it is a divine metaphor of the covenant of grace which is to the Church the bottom of joy, apprehended by faith, and to God as a ſoft reclinatory, like that of the Mercy-ſeat, where he is ſaid to ſit, Pſalm 80, 2. or the ſweet peace and tranquillity of a calm pacified conſcience, which excelleth al treaſures the covering of it of purple] Or the curtains or hangings, Heb. 3. 7. or the veil of it, as that of the Ark, Exod. 26. 31. which ſignified an holy pure life and converſation, which is ſoft and gentle as ſilk is, but yet muſt be coloured in the purple ſtreams, that is, the bloud of Chriſt, the application and tincture whereof is not only our glory, but our protection, Revel. 7. 14.

the midſt thereof being paved with love] Or the inmoſt parts were ſet with ſparkling gems and ſhining ſtones which typified the pretious flames of love and charity, and like the fiery chariot of Eliah carry us up to heaven: or the two tables of the Law may perhaps be intended, which were written by the finger of God, and laid up in the midſt of the Ark, Exod, 25. 16. 21. The end or completion whereof is love, or the Goſpell, which is the Law of love Mat 22, 37. and like that λιθόςρωτον we find Eſth. 1. 6. is curiouſly adorned with the various treaſures of grace and wiſedome; as floores & pavements are chequered with many coloured marbles. Others conceit that ſome picture or Emblem or hieroglyphick of love as a Dove, Flames, or the like was drawn or covered in ſome inward part of the chariot, as the Urim and Thummim were in the Ephod; Exod. 28. and as the Heathens uſed to have the images of Cupid or Venus in their ſhields, ſo had Solomon that impreſſe to teach love and mutual charity to thoſe that beheld it. It is a manifeſt rape which ſome of the popiſh Authors act upon the words, applying them to the indulgencies and mercinary abſolutions of their Church, nay of the very City of Rome; In which (ſaith a Lapide in Loc.) the Vicar of Chriſt, that is the Pope ſitteth; qui habet plenitudinem poteſtatis Eccleſiaſticæ in omnes Eccleſias & fideles; ac proinde peccatorum omnium remiſſionem, indulgentias, & gratias ampliſſimas concidere poteſt, & concedit, &c. what is this but to dethrone Chriſt, and ſit in his place who onely hath this power, and this grace as being the love of God? 1 John 4. 9. and 16. and who hath ſhed his love abroad into our hearts, that we might be as ſo many Jedidiah's or Solomons, dear and amiable to him; and as ſo many welbottomed buildings to his praiſe whoſe root and ground-work is love.

for the daughters of Jeruſalem] Or by, as if all this had been done by them or at their charge; but for is better; making the end and purpoſe of all this magniſicence and glory the Church of God, for which God hath provided unſpeakable things, and conveyed either a preſent or a future poſſeſſion of them to her, 1 Cor. 3. 21, 22, 23.

V. 11. Go forth O ye daughters of Sion and behold king Solomon] It hath been often ſhown that theſe daughters are the elect and faithfull of the Church which is Sion, Heb, 12. 22. Theſe are exhorted to go forth, to quit and forſake the world, to forſake their Fathers houſe and all that is moſt dear, that they may fill and bleſſe their eyes with the ſight of Chriſt.

with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him] Or as Tremel. which his mother procured for him, 1 Kings 1. 16. from all the other Sonnes of David: Chriſt received many crowns; The wiſe men did no leſſe than lay their crowns at his feet; both in their ſpeech, geſture and offerings. He was crowned with another diadem by the cruell blind Jews, at his Paſſion: His Reſurrection and Aſcenſion exalted him to a third; but the crown meant here is that of his ſpiritual Kingdom and Scepter, by which he ruled over the rebellious hearts of men, and they that refuſe his power ſhall be cruſhed in pieces by it. Pſalm 2. 6, 7. It is our duty to contemplate and behold him crowned thus, to call upon the daughter of Sion, and tell her, behold, thy King cometh, Matth. 21. 5. to adore and fear him, and denying our ſelves to reſt our ſpirits in him, is to put the crown upon his head; is to become Mothers and Brethren and Siſters to him, as it ſaid by himſelf, Matth 12. 50 The Apoſtle ſaith of the Churches that by obeying the form of doctrine which he had delivered, they were a crown to him, Phil. 4. 1, and 1 Theſ. 2. 19. ſo does every conformable and humble Chriſtian beſtow a crown on Chriſt by walking worthy of him, and their ſeveral graces and duites are bright Jewels ſet in it. Quot bona opera facis ex gratiâ Chriſti, tot Chriſti capiti & coronæ roſas innectis.

in the day of his eſpouſals, and the day of the gladneſſe of his heart] when Chriſt took our nature he was eſpouſed and married to it, which was a day of great joy: but the eſpouſals meant here are more genuinly referred either to the covenant of grace which he made with his Church, and ſo was married to her, which is matter of greateſt joy, Eſay 62. 5. or elſe to the particular converſion and regeneration of ſoules by the ſpirit of grace, by which they are eſpouſed to Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 2. And then there is joy in heaven among the bleſſed Angels of God. Luke 15. 10.

CHAP. IV.

THe main part of this Chapter is beſtowed on the praiſes of the Church, whoſe graces are more elegantly deſcribed, than any humane Poetry did ever imitate; the flowers and ornaments of language that are in it, being not applicable to bodily or natural beauty, but to ſpiritual, and ſupernal. After this, Chriſt proceeds to admoniſh and dehort her from unworthy ſociety and communion; which he urgeth by freſh praiſes and vows of love. To which ſhe makes a brief reply by deſiring to be made fit for thoſe praiſes and future affections by the work of his Spirit.

Verſe 1. BEhold thou art fair my love, behold, &c.] This is ſpoken by Chriſt, as that before which is opened, Chap. 1. 15 The repetition may point to us, both the continual goodneſſe of the Lord, and the conſtant care which ſhould be in his Church not to defile her ſelf, but to preſerve ſuch a continual beauty as may be fit to entertain him, and to deſerve his praiſes.

thou haſt doves eyes within thy locks] Or, through thy veil: Of Doves eyes ſomething before in the forementioned place: It may be added, that the Church of Chriſt, both hath eyes; and thoſe eyes are like the eyes of Doves; ſhe is not blind and ignorant, but made light in Chriſt: Her eyes may be ſaid to be her Teachers which are her Seers and her eyes, Numb. 10. 31. but beſides them ſhe is to have her own eyes; light and knowledge in her ſelf, which ſhould direct her and be like the Doves, not onely full of gracious beauty, life, purity, &c. but alſo of modeſty; for that I conceive is meant by her locks, which ſome have applyed to her imperfect ſight, beholding things yet as through a veil; but the Analogie is more proper that refers it to her baſhfulneſſe and modeſty; not daring to lift up her eyes after other lovers, Ezek. 18. 6. but onely to the true God, Eſay 17. 7. and as fearful to throw about her, any bold or wanton looks, prying in things which belong not to her; but refraining all high and procatious looks, fixeth wholly upon God whom out of thoſe humble ambuſhes ſhe ſurprizeth, and delights more than thoſe can that are more inſolent and immodeſt. I paſſe by the odd tranſlation of the vulgar Latin, which differs ſtrangely from all others, and of which the moſt elaborate admirers know not what to make.

thy hair is as a flock of goats] Among the other pieces of humane beauty, the hair is numbred (though no integral) for one, and is indeed no ſmall ornament to the reſt, when it hath all the required complements of colour, thickneſſe, length and order. It is not κάρπος κεφαλῆς (as he calls it) the fruit of the head, but the leavs onely, and yet many have been as ſollicitous about it, as the very head it ſelf and taken more care to adorn it: That was but a ſtoical and magnanimous jeſt of his, that deſired his executioner to be more favourable to this than to his neck; nor are the vain trimmings and powderings of our times, comparable to the profuſeneſs and riot of the former; wherein powders and unctions were but the cheapeſt part of their prodigality, ſome of them uſing the duſt and filings of gold to this purpoſe: As Antonin. Verus for one, who is ſaid, Crinibus ramenta auri aſpergere; &c. This was a madneſſe; and as the hair is a natural Indication either of ſhame or vertue, 1 Cor. 11. 15. So is it a moſt pregnant teſtimony of their folly and idleneſſe, who conſume either their eſtate, or their time (which is moſt pretious) in too much dreſſing and compoſing of it: Dum comuntur & poliuntur Annus eſt, ſo the Heathen complained, but more ſadly the Prophet, who threatens thoſe proud curls and ſnares with ignominious baldneſſe, Eſay 3. 24. which baldneſſe though ridiculous and reproachful to men, as appears by thoſe impious brats, 2 Kings 2. 23. yet is nothing like that inward baldneſſe and nakedneſſe of the ſoul, when ſhe hath no comlineſſe nor ornament left her of holy thoughts and meditation which are her ſpiritual locks, and hair, wherein (like Sampſon) a great part of her ſtrength and life conſiſts, and whereof if ſhe be ſtripped and ſhaven, the ſoul remains a dead, withered trunk and carcaſs. Therefore the Church is praiſed that her hair is fair and curled like the large fleeces of goats, and ſo is minded of her duty to be ſo, ἢ γυμνὸν ϗ ἐψιλωμένον ἐννοιῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔχειν, τὸν νοῦν, as Ciril Alex not to have a bald, glaborous ſoul, but to abound in holy thoughts and contemplations, which will not be (like Abſaloms) our ruine, but our great praiſe, and preſervation.

that appear from mount Gilead] Or that graze upon, or that gliſter, ſhine, and look ſmooth, like the ſleek coates of cattel that are fat and well fed, as thoſe of Gilead, which was hilly, and fit for ſuch flocks, Num. 32. 1. and Jerem. 22. 6. This is no unuſual compariſon among prophane Authours, though ſome prophaner wits have derided it The choyceſt of them they are apter to admire than holy Scripture; uſe it, and it may be, borrow it, and deduce it from them. It cannot then be accuſed of indecorum, or rudeneſſe, but worthily and congruouſly, applied to the Church and the ſoul; Quæ crine vincunt Boetici gregis vellus; ſurpaſs in their devout cogitations and deſires and in their decent profeſſions and ceremonies the faireſt of all the flocks that ſhine upon mount Gilead. That indeed is ſomething violent and forced of the Roman Expoſitors, who would have this Hair, and theſe flocks to mean their religious Orders, and foundations (as they call them) which they wil prove becauſe thoſe holy Fraternities, are 1. Contemned as hair is. 2. Compoſed, and ruled. 3. United as one hair twines within another. 4. Exalted in their devotions, as hair which hath the higheſt part of mans body. 5. Inſenſible, by their ſtrict penances and mortification, as hair feels not the ſizzars nor razor; but chiefly, becauſe forſooth Elijah (whom they make their firſt Inſtitutor) was a Tiſhbite of the inhabitants of Gilead, 1 King. 17. 1. Theſe are difficiles Nugæ, and 'tis loſt labour to ſay much of them.

V. 2. Thy teeth are like a flock of ſheep that are even ſhorne] Sheep is an addition here, but expreſſed Chap. 6. 6 and for even ſhorne, ſome Bibles have, in good order, which is but the explication of the other. Theſe teeth are deſcyphered of the Paſtors and Teachers of the Church, which ſhould be qualified with all the excellent properties both of good teeth, and of good flocks of ſheep as they are here deſcribed. It would exceed the meaſure of an Annotation to collect all the proportions and reſemblances that holy men have diſcovered here. The learned may finde them at large in the Latine Commentators, and in none more fully than in Cornel. a lapide in loc. who out of Bernard and others, is very accurate and ſatisfactory. I ſhall omit all others, and briefly paſs thorow thoſe onely which the Spirit of God hath thought worthy to be mentioned. Whereof the firſt is, that they are as teeth. 1. To prepare and divide the word aright, as teeth do the food for the ſtomach, that ſo the deep and harder things of Religion may be received the better, & more eaſily ſwallowed, and digeſted. 2. To defend, and arm againſt enemies, that is to confute and reprove them ſharply, Tit. 1. 13. that they may feel themſelves galled and bitten by that mordax verum which will ſpare no vice, nor errour: As they muſt be Nurſes to feed and cheriſh the weak ones, præmanſum cibum in os indere, 1 Theſ. 2. 7. Eſay 28. 9. ſo likewiſe to protect and ſave them who are not able to keep themſelves. The ſecond metaphor is, that they are like flocks of ſheep. Their teeth ſhould not be the teeth of Lions, and mad-dogs, to devour and infect one another, Gal. 5. 15. Some have been diſcommended for little teeth, as Auguſtus in Sueton, &c. but it is a juſter cauſe of diſpraiſe to have the goring tuſhes of a wild boar, or a Tyger Next, theſe teeth are ſaid to be even ſhorne there ſhould be an order in them; and they ſhould be unloaded, and deveſted of all temporal cares and incumbrances; They ſhould do the work of the Lord with one ear, and with one ſhoulder; not ſhouldering, or juſtling one another for places and preferments, but honouring one another; and that they may be fit to do this work the better, they ſhould Onera mundi & carnis deponere be content to loſe even that which is their own Fleece and property.

which come up from the waſhing] It was Judahs bleſſing to have his teeth, white as milk, or with milk, Gen 49. 12. nay whiter than milk, as the vulgar Latine reads it, So will it be the happineſs of the Church, when as well the teeth of thoſe that bring glad tidings, as their feet are beautifull, Oh what ſad miſchief have ſome men done with their Canini dentes: running and grinning about the city (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) and the land; and with their rotten, bloody, poyſonous doctrines have dilaniated and torn all in pieces. A good and faithful Miniſter ſhould be as white and innocent in his reproofs, as thoſe that newly come up from waſhing, and are purged not onely from all filthineſs and pollution, but from all bloodthirſtineſs and ferocity.

whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them] This laſt clauſe as well as the former, ſhews that the virtue of the metaphor reſpects not the teeth ſo much (though that alſo in its degree) as the ſheep: True, every tooth hath a mate or fellow to it in moſt creatures, where nature hath not miſcarried nor been injured; but the teeth cannot be ſaid either to be fruitful or barren; nor have ſheep that geminal quality, whoſe teeth grow below onely, and not above: But they are fruitful, and many times bring forth twins, and ſo ſhould both the Paſtours of the Church, and all other Chriſtians: They ſhould increaſe both in contemplative and in practical duties; they ſhould abound in all holy exerciſes of charity both toward God and man and be faithful guides to others, both by their life and doctrine. That ſo there may be no abortions, no miſcarriages in the Church; nor that none of her ſons may be ſnatched out of her hands by any power of wickedneſſe; For ſo ſome read, for barren, abortive or robbed of their young; which may be either by miſchance theſt, death, &c. From all which Chriſt will preſerve his flock, that ſo the Goſpel may be a full bleſſing to all, that there may be no want in any thing, being inriched by Chriſt in every gift, and coming behind in none, 1 Cor. 1. 5.

V. 3. Thy lips are like a thred of ſcarlet] Or a ribbon, or twiſted line that is both ſoft and fine for the matter, and alſo freſh and lively for the colour; like ſcarlet that is twice died and cannot be ſtained: Theſe are the full praiſes of the next part, which he ſeems to commend in order, the lips; and which ſome again would have to ſignifie the Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church, as the former; who when they deliver the truth of Chriſt, ſhould do it as exactly as ſcarlet is ſpun, and dipped twice over. Their ſpeech ſhould not ſwell with vain and empty words, nor yet be looſe and negligent; but twiſted and prepared with much care and purity, as the richeſt ſcarlet; nor ſhould the matter of it be their own phancies or inventions, ſet off with humane teſtimony, and authority, but coloured in the blood of Chriſt, with which all their doctrines and communications ſhould be ſprinkled, that ſo our lips may be like his, in which was no guile, Malach. 2. 6. and our language like that which the Lord promiſeth, and loveth, Zeph. 3. 9. without which it cannot be the word of life, but thus qualified will be, and more certainly aſſure ſalvation, than that which was the ſymboll of Rahabs preſervation, Joſhua 2. 18. Others will have it to allude to thoſe acts of faith and devotion, which are both tendred and accepted through the precious blood of Chriſt, and are filthy raggs untill they receive that tincture, So are our prayers, our confeſſions of ſinne, our acknowledgements of mercy, our profeſſions of faith, all which proceed from the heart, and are expreſſed by the lip, but dignified by the ſcarlet of his blood, who laid down his life to perfect all our wants.

and his ſpeech is comely]. Or gracefull and ſweet, as all the communication of a Chriſtian ſhould be, Epheſ. 4. 29. and Coloſ. 4. 6. How comely are the praiſes of God in our mouthes, Pſal. 147. 1 Such as Napthali's are ſaid to be, words of beauty, Gen 49. 21. Of which tribe it is obſerved that Barak was, who ſang to the Lord, Judg. 5. and to whom, it is conceived by ſome, old Jacob did then ſeem to look in that bleſſing.

thy temples are like a piece of pomegranate within thy locks] Or thy cheeks are like the flower, or the bark of little pomegranates. Or like pieces of pomegranates, which when they are divided and cut, have great bluſhing grains, and ſpecks within them, which bluſhing ſeems to be for being diſcovered: The alluſion is excellent, which is anſwered in the modeſty and humility of the Church of Chriſt, which though Ariſtotle and the Heathens (who were animalia gloria) eſteemed not vertues, yet are in the eye of God of high account, and when they betray themſelves by a baſhful look or bluſh, do not argue fear, or guilt, but the higheſt goodneſſe; being indeed the effect of many graces multiplied, and working together; as joy, hope, charity, patience, humility, chaſtity, &c. which ſhine in all, but in women eſpecially more bright, and amiable, than any beauty, either of art or nature: and are not onely their ornament but their defence too, being thus guarded and protected: So many of the Ancients on this Scripture, and Tertullian for all. In his book de Veland. virginib. Cap. 15. 16. Indue armaturam pudoris circunduc velum verecundia, &c. Others underſtand the holy Martyrs here, who make open and couragious profeſſions of Faith, even untill they are broken in pieces and cut in ſunder for them, but in thoſe ſufferings look moſt glorious and lovely; every vertue becoming then moſt reſplendent, as the ſeveral grapes of the pomegranate when it is divided: So it was in that happy Virgin, of whom Saint Ambroſe writes often, but chifly in Exhort. ad Virg. where he ſayes of her, that as ſoon as ſhe heard of her appointed torments, being alwayes veyled (as the uſe of Chriſtian maids was) before, then, Vultum aperuit, ſoli invelata atque intella Martyrio, & volens injuria occurit, vultum efferens, ut ibi martyrii fieret ſacrificium, ubi ſolet eſſe tentamentum pudoris: Gaudebat enim diſpendio pulchritudinis periculum integritatis auferri; ſed illi potuerunt quidem vultum ejus vulnerum vibicibus exarare, faciem tamen virtutis ejus & gratiam decoris interni nequaquam exarare potuerunt.

V. 4. Thy neck is like the Tower of David] It may be the whole city of David is here meant, which he took from the Jebuſites, 2 Sam. 5. 9. whereof a part is onely named for the whole. This, as Adrichom and others relate, was a moſt ſtrong and well fortified place, but nothing either ſo goodly or ſo ſtrong as that which it prefigureth here; which is clearly agreed to be faith, and the fruit thereof, conſtancy and reſolution in the defending of it: For faith not onely like the neck, knits the head and the body together, but alſo upholds and exalts the ſoule; ſo that ſhe will neither bow to the ſlaviſh yoke of ſinne and hell, nor yet be broken when preſſed low with ſore and heavy perſecutions: but yet, yeildeth quietly to the yoke of Chriſt, and is not ſtiffnecked.

builded for an armory, whereon there hang a thouſand bucklers] An Armory, which was either a place for exerciſe of military diſcipline, or elſe for keeping all weapons of war: The vulgar Latine reads it, Bulwarks, or battlements; and indeed, the original word is ſo hard, that the L X X. and others leave it untranſlated, as the proper name of ſome place, ſome little hill or other where this Tower was built. Let the word be either this, or that, the ſenſe is evident; which ſets forth the large and various exerciſes and trialls of faith, in which every grace hath a part, and in which alwayes our faith is victorious; for her ſhield will prevail againſt all the ſhields of the earth, whoſe weapons when formed againſt her, ſhall never proſper, but either be broken in pieces or elſe taken and hung up as tropheees of her conqueſts, as thoſe were, 2 Sam. 8. 7. and Ezek 27. 10.

all ſhields of mighty men] Our Engliſh word ſhields. is very like the Hebrew, and ſeems as many others even in this book, to be derived thence. It is tranſlated alſo darts, ſpears, quivers of arrows; The whole armour and artillery of God, as indeed the vulgar Latine renders it in the very ſame words (Omnis armatura) which are uſed by the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 6. 11. which whoſoever puts on, ſhall be able to ſtand in the evil day, as mighty men of valour do, and none but they.

V. 5. Thy two breaſts are like two young Roes that are twins] Theſe breſts are variouſly opened. Some call the two Teſtaments, others the two Sacraments, duo ubera Eccleſia, the two breaſts. Others ſay, the heart is meant by the breſts (as before) which God faſhioneth as he pleaſeth, Ezek. 16. 7. having all hearts in his hand; and ſhould be equal, and uniform, full of the holy milk of joy and holineſſe, and peace; wherewith ſhe not onely aboundeth in her ſelf, but is able alſo to adminiſter the like to others. Others will have this figure as the former, to ſignifie the Miniſters and Paſtors of the Churches, which ſhould be (as Paul was) both the Fathers and Mothers thereof, 1 Cor. 3. 1. Gal. 4 19. not onely to beget, but to feed, and nouriſh them; yet with no other but theſe two breſts of holy Scripture, and the ſincere milk thereof, which are as the twins of Kids, or Roes, both for the purity of their nouriſhment, and for the agreement; the one being conſonant to the other, not only in the matter of them, but the very forme and method alſo, as the learned obſerve.

which feed among the lilies] It is the honour of the Miniſters and ſervants of Chriſt to be dignified with the ſame titles and praiſes that are given to Chriſt himſelf; and it ſhould be their duty to be conformable to him; to be (as he is) a Roe, or Hinde; leaping and running ſwiftly to help all his, when they ſeek unto them; and to feed among the lilies as he does, in the untainted and pure paſtures of life, not among filthy and poyſonous weeds; that ſo, that milk which floweth from them may be ſincere and healthful. Dulcedinem bonitatis quam impendunt aliis, ipſi deſuper ſugant,

V. 6 Untill the day break, &c.] The Church before waited for Chriſt, which attendance was expreſſed in the ſame words, that Chriſt is pleaſed to take up here; Chapter 2. 7. ſhewing that we cannot out-vie him in love and goodneſſe, who profeſſeth that he waiteth to be gracious, and will not forſake his people until that appointed time ſhall be filled and run up, when he will deliver them to his Father in glory.

I will get me to the mountains of myrrhe, and to the hill of frankincenſe] That is, as ſome will, I will take thee to thoſe bitter places where I at once ſuffered, and ſatisfied my Father as with the moſt gratefull ſacrifice or incenſe by my death (for ſo Mount Calvary was both an hill of myrrhe, and alſo of frankincenſe) and therein the conſideration of my death, and oblation for thee will I delight and refreſh thee. Others ſay, it is a promiſe of the preſence of Chriſt with his Church unto the end of the world; upon which he powreth the perpetuall graces and conſolations of his ſpirit now in his abſence, and will return again to gather all unto himſelf, when the marriage of the Lamb ſhall be; and then we ſhall be ever with the Lord. 1 Theſ. 4. 17. In the mean whiſe the Church (which is the mountain of the Lord) is called a hill both of myrrhe and frankincenſe, for ſhe hath as well bitter things as ſweet: But then ſhe ſhall be onely a hill of frankincenſe, when her whole buſineſſe ſhall be to ſing Hallelujahs to the Lamb for evermore.

V. 7. Thou art all fair my love] Having paſſed over each ſingle part with admiration, Chriſt doth here conclude with a generall praiſe of the whole piece, advancing his own work of juſtification and ſanctification, as a perfect compleat archievement: To be accepted in him is to have all ſpots covered; Regeneration is an entire work of the whole man, and renders him all fair. The Heathen man ſayes well, Non eſt formoſa mulier cujus crus laudatur, aut brachium, ſed illa cujus univerſa facies admirationem ſingulis partibus abſtulit. It is more true of the Church and of the ſoul, which waſhed in Chriſt are all fair in each part, and receive the image of God, which is perfect beauty, and gives line for line. If that concluſion of the Heathens be true, there is ſcarce any daughter of Eve can be called beautifull; becauſe very few that are not peccant in ſome minnum, ſome circle of beauty or other: But it is no more than is due to the Church of Chriſt, which is inammaculate, and perfect through faith, as he himſelf is.

there is no ſpot in thee] This is no tautologie, but an exegeſis, a greater confirmation, which wipes off all exceptions, againſt the former praiſe by this negation; All ſignifie ſometimes almoſt all, John 13 10. but when to that is added, this inlargement, this explication it becomes unlimited and univerſal. Thou art all fair indeed, for thou haſt no ſpot; that is, no ſuch ſpots as the wicked have, Deut. 32. 5. no ſuch ſpots as the Leopards have; which cannot be waſhed away by any purification; no ſuch ſpots as to be looked on ſeverely by me, whoſe love will cover them all, ſo that no iniquity ſhall be ſeen in thee, Numb. 23. 21. The pureſt Churches and ſouls that are militant have ſome ſcars and ſtains remaining, but not ſo as utterly to deface or to diſeſſence them. They ſtill remain his ſpouſe, and love, though they come ſhort of exact beauty in all things: ſome neceſſary and inevitable failings detract not from their beauty, nor from his affections; who ſtill beholds them not as they are actually in themſelves at preſent, but as renewed by the waſhing of water, and the word of life; and as predeſtinated to ſuch an higher ſtate of integrity as ſhall make them glorious indeed, without ſpot or wrinkle; ἄμωμος, is the Apoſtles word, Ephel. 5. 26. which alludeth to the pure ſacrifices of the Law, in which even Momus himſelf could find no errour.

V. 8. Come with me from Lebanon my ſpouſe] Or thou ſhalt come; as it a promiſe, rather than a command. The vulgar Latin leaves out, with me, as an addition of the Maſoreths not to be admitted; why? becauſe againſt the ancient readings: wherein? why, becauſe it agrees not with theirs, to which all muſt bow and ſtrike ſaile, even the very Hebrew it ſelf, which is confeſſed by the chiefeſt of their own to be on our ſide; more than on theirs. But let us pardon their Grammer, ſince they agree with us in ſenſe and matter; expounding the words (as we do generally) to be either an earneſt invitation and call of Chriſts, ſuch as Pſalm 45. 10, 11. or elſe a gracious and faithfull promiſe of his to invite and call away his Church, who is honoured with a new title here, never given to her before, untill ſhe was reputed and made ſo perfectly faire and lovely, which ſhe cannot deſerve better, than by following him, who is ever better to her than her hopes and prayers.

with me from Lebanon] This iteration daſheth all fears and temptations of loſing by coming to Chriſt; with me, with me who am better than Lebanon (though large and cloathed with the goodlieſt Cedars, Deut. 3. 25.) and who will ſuffer none to periſh, that caſt themſelves upon me: but if they ſtay in Lebanon, they are ſure to periſh, for that is a place of thieves and murderers: Euſebius and others tell us, that on the top of Lebanon was a Temple dedicated to Venus, which they call impudicitiæ cloacam; and ſo indeed are all places of Idolatry, ſinks and privies of all lewdneſſe and abomination; which the faire ſpouſe of Chriſt ſhould loath, and flye from them unto the example and recompence of all holineſſe.

look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon] The vulgar Latine reads, thou ſhalt be crowned; others, thou ſhalt be praiſed; others thou ſhalt be directed, or go on aright, from the top of Amana; or (as the LXX.) from the beginning of faith, or from the top of truth, or from the original of ſouls; for there is all this variety, and more in Tranſlations: Amana is ſaid to be a Syrian hill, under which a River ran of the ſame name, which is called Abana or Amana in the margin of 2 Kings 5. 12. Shenir and Hermon are ſaid to be the ſame, Deut. 3.9, or at leaſt but two tops of the ſame hill, whoſe ſharpneſſe gave them the title of Trachones, after which the whole Country was called Trachonitis: The Geographers tell us of three Hermons, but this was the chiefeſt, being (as the reſt of theſe places mentioned) on the further ſide of Jordan, and all which were ſo ſcituated in reſpect of Paleſtine, that they anſwered the four points or ſides of the world. Libanus lay at the North, Amana at the Weſt, Hermon at the Eaſt, and Shanir at the South; not without a great myſterie, which was foretold by the Prophet, Eſay 43. 5. accompliſhed in part by the converſions of the Nations, Acts 2. and ſhall be perfected when they ſhall come from the Eaſt and Weſt, and ſhall ſit down from all parts and regions, with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, in the ſame kingdom of the Father, Matth 8.11. and thoſe too, not onely of the pooreſt and the vileſt of the earth (though they ſhall not be ſhut out) but likewiſe of the very beſt and higheſt; for ſo is that terme, from the tops applyed; as meaning, the very vertices, the chief and nobleſt of thoſe places, which excelled in power, or wealth, or wiſdom; For Chriſt will bring in the Kings of the earth to bow unto him, and will reconcile his Church and truth ſo unto them, that they ſhall become Nurſes and Shepherds of it; which is a bleſſing that hath a great inſcription upon it, and ſhould not be deſpiſed, but ſought for earneſtly by all that wiſh well to Sion; For what greater hope can ſhe have than in ſuch proſelytes, and how prepoſterous is it to diſcourage or provoke them, who may either ſo much hinder, or promote her happineſſe?

from the lions dens, and from the mountains of leopards] That is, from the Cities and Temples of Idolaters, who are wild and ſavage as lyons, and from thine own brutiſh luſts and abominations which are as hardly got away from the ſoul as ſpots from Leopards. Thoſe mountains of Prey, and theſe Lyons the poor Pſalmiſt complains of often, Pſalm 57. 4 and 76. 4. and oh! how gracious is God to deliver us from them; and to turn them that are ſo by nature into gentle creatures, which are the rarer metamorphoſes of the Goſpel, ſo that the Lamb and the Kid ſhal dwel ſafey with theſe Lyons and Leopards, Eſay 11. 6. for that is one ſpecial promiſe and bleſſing of it, to convert and ſoften the moſt inraged and deſperate adverſaries, and make them (as Paul was) as zealous to preſerve, as to deſtroy before. So Tertullian & the ancients record it of their times, Senſim evanuit feritas indies, exulavit immanitas. &c. As the Goſpel was admitted and got footing, ſo did all cruelty and barbariſm by degrees vaniſh, and when men began to follow the Lamb, they ceaſed to be (as before) Wolves and Tygers. If it be true of all liberal and ingenuous Arts, much more is it of the Goſpel, Emollit mores nec ſinit eſſe feros.

V. 9. Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my ſiſter, my ſpouſe] Or haſt wounded, or taken away my heart; The LXX. have an excellent word ἐκαρδίωσας, thou haſt excordiated, or unhearted me; which is language of great paſſion, as of one ſtruck through as with a dart of fire, and burning hotly in love, whoſe ſtrange force it is to tranſvulnerate and ſtupifie the very ſoule, ſo as no ſenſe nor reaſon is left; Amare & ſapere vix Diis conceſſum eſt Never was love like unto the love of Chriſt; which made him even ſenſleſſe (let it be no rudeneſſe to ſay ſo) and mindleſſe of himſelf, when he emptied himſelf of all his glory, and deſpiſed all pain and ſhame for our ſakes: The wound of love towards us which he had from eternity in himſelf, made him neglect all the wounds and reproaches of the croſſe. So Bernard ſweetly, Quia zelo amoris tui vulneraſti me, lanceâ quoquè militis vulneratus ſum. Are not we bound thus to love him, even to doating and madneſſe, untill like Mary Magdalen we rage with love; and with S. Paul be carried beſide our ſelves, and become fools for Chriſts ſakes, 1 Corinth. 4. 10, 11, 12, 13. The compellations which are given to the Church, ſhould conſtrain her to do thus, whoſe ſiſter ſhe is called by reaſon of his Incarnation, and his ſpouſe by Adoption; both high titles of honour, and the priviledge is ineſtimable that he is not aſhamed to call her ſo, Heb. 2. 11.

thou haſt raviſhed my heart with one of thine eyes] Or with one glance of them, as Jun inlargeth. The reiteration here expreſſeth the violence of his paſſion, and the eye was the cauſe of it. Which eye is either the eye of faith which ſees things inviſible, and, as Stephen did, pierceth the very heavens for Chriſt; or elſe the eye of loyal and humble love, which is ſingle and modeſt, looking only at Chriſt, and at nothing elſe but for his ſake, Matth. 6. 22. It is conceived by ſome to be a phraſe that relates to the cuſtom of thoſe chaſt and ſober matrons and virgins who neglected their beauty, and inſtead of going naked, and ſhameleſſe as ours do, covered and hid their faces and eyes, ſo when they went abroad, that no more was left unveyled, but what might onely ſerve to ſhow the way, as they walked. St. Jerom. Celantes faciem vix uno oculo qui viæ neceſſarius eſt, egrediuntur. And Tertullian, Judicabunt nos Arabicæ fœminæ ethnicæ, quæ non caput, ſed & faciem quoque ita totam tegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contentæ ſint dimidia frui luce potius, quam totam faciem proſtituere. Others apply it to the dutiful approaches and viſits of the humble ſoule unto Chriſt whereby ſhe draws neer to him, and as one deſirous to behold, yet afraid to preſume, does but glance or peep modeſtly upon him, which is received as a ſpeciall teſtimony of her love to him, and ſo becomes a great means of further indearment, and obligation; for ſo does love increaſe and get ſtrength, which elſe will decay, and Chriſt is not onely pleaſed, but engaged more by every reſpective application of the good heart unto him; Every new act of ſpiritual communion and obedience, brings us nigher to God, and both indeares the ſoul more to him, and him to his people.

with one chain of thy neck] Or with one haire, or treſs, or lock of thy neck; This chain doth aptly follow, and ever ſhould go along with the eye; every true Chriſtian ſhould have both; not only faith to ſee, and to apply Chriſt, but alſo obedience (which is a chain upon our necks) to obey him, and yeild our ſelves to his yoak.

V. 10. How faire is thy love my ſiſter, my ſpouſe, how much better is thy love than wine] For love the vulgar retain breſts ſtill as before, Chapter 1. 2. whereas the Church extolleth the excellencies of Chriſt, ſo doth he in the very ſame expreſſions require and magnifie her. We ſhall be no loſers by our kindneſſe to Chriſt; if any honour him he will honour them more: which honour is teſtified by loving him, more than by all external offerings, whereof wine was a part; and which love is more accepted and eſteemed by him than the pureſt wine and oyl, who will have mercy and not ſacrifice, Hoſ. 6. 6. and hath promiſed not to forget our labour of love 1 Theſ. 1. 3.

and the ſmel of thine oyntments than all ſpices] The LXX. read of thy garments, but they go alone, and turn it which way you can deviſe, no ſuch ſyllable in the original. By oyntments it is uſuall, in this book, to allegorize holy gifts and graces, which are the ſpiritual unction, 1 John 2. 20. 27. and when actuated and diffuſed, diſperſe and increaſe their ſweetneſſe. The conſcionable and faithfull diſpenſations of the word of life in the Miniſters is this unction and odour too, 2 Cor. 1. 21. and 2. 15. but in all other Chriſtians the practiſe of love and godlineſſe is no leſſe fragrant and ſpicy, Phil. 4. 18. what a glorious name have the Saints of God obtained thus, which hath ſpred far and wide, and filled all the world with admiration as they did, Rom. 1. 8. A good name founded ſo, is like colours drawn and laid in oyl, which fades not quickly, but indureth for ever.

V. 11, Thy lips, O my ſpouſe, drop as the honey comb] Some leave out the comparative adverb and read it abſolute; but there is an excellent ſimilitude in the Text, wherein the delight and ſweetneſs of Chriſtian doctrine and inſtructions are by a frequent elegancy in holy Scripture, deciphered. It is ſaid of Plato and S. Ambroſe, that Bees ſwarmed in their cradles, as Omens of their future eloquence; ſo is the word of God compared to the honey comb, Pſam 19. 10 and the preaching of it like the droppings of honey ſhould be free, pure, ſweet, healthful, and comfortable: Nay; like the honey

the honey comb it ſelf; then which nothing boaſteth or ſymbolizeth more art, pleaſure, benefit, fruitfulneſſe or ſincerity: whilſt like the laborious Bee, to collect her redolent ſpoyles, ſo the unwearied Miniſter travels through all the gardens of learning, and ſucks ſomething from every flower there, that he may return with joy; and bring his Crura thymo plena, his veſſels and his treaſures full of comfort. By lips alſo we may underſtand the voice of joy and praiſe, which are not leſſe ſweet to the pious ſoul, nor to God himſelf, than the honey and the honey comb.

honey and milk are under thy tongue] Theſe two were the bleſſings of Canaan, Numb. 16. 14. and are the bleſſings of every ſanctified mouth and tongue, which breath nothing that is corrupt but all to the uſe of edifying, ſeaſoned with ſalt, Col. 4. 6. and filled both with nouriſhment and pleaſure: for theſe two ſhould go ever together, and then omne tulit punctum. The lewd woman hath honey in her lips, but no milk; pleaſure but no benefit; and that pleaſure ſhort and dangerous too, for the end of it is bitter as wormwood, Prov. 5. 3. but the Church of Chriſt hath both, and not onely uſeth a delightful but a ſound form of words, that ſhe may not deceive, but build up.

and the ſmell of thy garments is like the ſmell of Lebanon] For garments there be ſome that will have ſacrifices, and for Lebanon, the vulgar read Frankincenſe: Heſychius ſayes that Libanus ſignifies both τὸ δένδρον ϗ ὄρος, both a tree and an hill; but the rhetorician will eaſily make both the ſame thing, converting the place into the odoriferous herbs and trees of it: which though exceeding delightful, Hoſ. 14. 6, 7. yet are worthy onely to be the ſhadows and metaphors of that ornament and ſweetneſſe which a ſoul cloathed with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt hath acquired: This is that fine linnen and ſilk of the Saints, Revel. 19. 8 which are ſweeter than thoſe of Jacobs were, and ſmell like a field which the Lord hath bleſſed, Gen. 27. 27. our ſouls are naked as our bodies by nature, but Chriſt adorneth them, covers their nakedneſſe, and will cloath them with ſalvation. It is not to be ſlighted that ſome have noted concerning theſe garments, which being read ſacrifices alſo, may perhaps denote the body (which is the cloathing of the ſoul, 2 Cor. 5. 4.) and her ſufferings for Chriſts ſake in which fiery trials he takes more delight, and ſmells them more joyfully than the burnings and evaporations of incenſe.

V. 12. A garden incloſed is my ſiſter, my ſpouſe] Or a garden locked, and barred up; All the world is a wilderneſſe or a vaſt field in common; but the Church is a garden, a peculiar choice plot, which is full of flowers and fruits, and thoſe defended from the Boar and Foxes day and night, Eſay 27. 3. Many ſeek to enter, and either to pluck off, or to infect her grapes, but there is a wall of fire about her, Zach. 2. 5. ſo that they cannot hurt her: True, God many times layeth particular Churches waſte, and treads down their hedge, and expoſeth them to all invaſions of hereſie and all ungodlineſſe, Pſal. 18. 12. but his Catholick Church hath a promiſe which like a wall of braſſe ſecures her from utter ruine, ſo that her droughts and her dry bones ſhall be fat and ſatisfied, and ſhe ſhall be like a watred garden, and like a ſpring of water whoſe waters fail not, Eſa. 58. 11. which garden like Eden, may be unknown and unſeen to men, for who can ſay at this day where Paradiſe was? Samnium in Samnio; but yet God both ſeeth, and incloſeth her. Further, (as an excellent worthy of our Church expreſſeth it) Though the Church be a garden walled in, for their better defence and ſecurity that are in it; yet ſhe is not ſo walled in as to bar or keep any out, who either by being born within the Covenant inherit a right to it, or by accepting the grace which is offered them, acquire or profeſſe a deſire to enter thereinto: And herein ſpecially is our advantage, who by being inwrapped in this, as the ſeed of the faithful, and children of Chriſtian Parents, are born, if not within this walled Garden; yet with a key in one hand to open the door; that is with a right and title to the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

a ſpring ſhut up, a fountain ſealed] The vulgar Latine for ſpring reads garden again, and others a gate; it is no great matter which, whilſt all are but one and the ſame Type of her, who is not indeed the well of life, but hath the well of life ſpringing and flowing in her, and is full of living waters, Joh. 4. 14. which not onely make her fruitful, but alſo protect her from groſſe pollutions, as the grave of Chriſt was guarded and ſealed by the Jews, Mat. 27. 65. For Chriſt dying to this end to redeem and purifie, no queſtion but he will obſignate and ratifie his own work; to which he hath alſo ſealed her by his ſpirit, 2 Cor. 1. 22. that ſhe may be a chaſt wife, kept unſpotted and loyal unto him, and admitting no unclean thing to defile her with their feet: as they uſed to keep their ſprings and wells in the hot countries of the Eaſt, not onely for ſcarcity, but for wholſomeneſſe, that they might not be trodden and muddied, Gen. 29. 3. and as we read of a Perſian well, which was piacular, and capital, for any to drink of but their King onely or his eldeſt ſon; like which Cornel. à Lap in Loc. ſayes there is one of the ſame ſacredneſſe in Spain at this day. I might adde here, that ſome by this garden and ſpring, would underſtand the holy Scriptures, which are in ſome part both incloſed ſo that they ſhall not periſh but with heaven and earth, and ſo hidden, that until God pleaſe to reveal them by his Spirit, they cannot be ſeen in all their myſteries (as this book may witneſſe) which even when they ſhine moſt glorioully to ſome, yet are almoſt obſcured and hidden to them that are loſt, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. That which the Papiſts contend ſo much for here, concerning the perpetuall Virginity of Mary, I do humbly conceive all chriſtians may honourably believe; and deſire to be as farre from the irreverence of Helvidius in that point, as from the ſuperſtition of the Jeſuites.

V. 13. Thy plants (or the branches and ſurcles) are an orchard (or Paradiſe) of pomegranates] This verſe and the two following, are conceived to be the grateful return of the Church to Chriſt, wherein ſhe humbly layes all her glories at his feet, and confeſſeth all the fruits and flowers that he vouchſafed to ſay were in her, proceeded from himſelf and were nothing elſe but Emiſſiones ſuæ, ſpirations and breathings from him; plants ſet by himſelf, and the work of his own hands, Eſa. 60. 21. But they may as well be called the explication of the former, and ſo referred to Chriſt who ſheweth why ſhe was incloſed and ſhut up, which was to preſerve her rich and precious fruits, which are more pleaſant and delicate than any beſides, being fruits worthy the Kingdom of heaven.

with pleaſant fruits, camphire with ſpikenard] He that would underſtand fully here, muſt ask of God a great part of Solomons wiſdom, who knew all the plants and herbs of nature, from the hyſop to the Cedar. Some of them are plain and more eaſie to be underſtood, carrying in their original dreſſe a great affinity to our Engliſh, as Kaneh and Kinamon in the next verſe, to which our Sugarcane (or Calamus) and Cynnamon are very like, but for the reſt they have found ſeveral opinions, and methinks none more paſſable than theirs who after the Septuagints Ἀκρόδρυα, conceive all the rareſt and moſt excellent ſorts of fruits to be intended, as the adumbrations of that χάρις πολυποίκιλος, that full and ample grace which is given by Chriſt to his Church, unto the praiſe of the riches of his glory.

V. 14. Spikenard and ſaffron, &c.] All theſe we find to be ingredients in that precious confection, Exod. 30. 23. to which Saffron is added, which is not mentioned beſides in Scripture: No queſtion but all of them have as rare and excellent ſignifications as natures; which they that ſtudy to find out, and to compare with that which they repreſent, will find richly worth their diligence, and bewail their impudence that preſume to unfold this book until they have firſt ſearched and turned over the whole volume and Library of the world: As it is required to a perfect Phyſitian that he be firſt a good Naturaliſt; ubi deſinit philoſophus, incipit medicus; ſo is it as expedient for him who hath the charge of ſouls, to the healing whereof all theſe rich and precious fruits and plants, have a particular influence and operation; as Spikenard, Saffron, Camphire, &c. have unto bodily preſervation, according to their ſpecifical qualities and efficiency.

myrrhe and aloes, with all chief ſpices] Or with the heads of ſpices, which is an Hebraiſm for chief or beſt, as Amos 6. 6. All graces are precious and uſeful, but ſome exceed others; There be many gifts, and ſome are the beſt of all which we ſhould earneſtly covet, and be ambitious of as the more excellent way, 1 Cor. 12. 31. and 13. 13. Indeed, the gift of all gifts is Chriſt, he is the onely bleſſed fruit of all, ſed in illo fructu multiplex eſt fructus in uno ſalvatore omnium Jeſu omnes florent gemmæ ad ſalutem.

V. 15. A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters] It is thought that the firſt words are an Hypallage, for a garden with fountains which is uſual in Scripture, Jerem. 31. 12. Eſa. 58. 11. to ſet forth the beauty and propagation of the Church, as on the contrary it is the ſad commination which God breaths againſt adulterous Jeruſalem, that ſhe ſhould be as a garden without water, Eſa. 1. 30. without all manner of joy, and comfort. The words ſeem to be ſpoken by the Church (as was noted) who reſigneth all the praiſe of he beauty unto him that gave all to her: who is the fountain of life, and feedeth the tender plants with oyl and fatneſſe, Jer. 2. 13. which elſe would dry up and dye: So giving a fair rule and example to all her members that they ſhould alwayes deny and refuſe their own applauſes, and pay all to Chriſt, who worketh all in them, Eſa. 25. 12. and for them, and without whom they can do nothing, John 15. 5. Certum eſt nos facere quod facimus, ſed ille facit ut faciamus. We are ſaid to work, but he helpeth us; Grace is truly ours, but it is conveyed into us from him who is the eternal ſpring that can neither decay nor putrifie. Alas! I am but a poor little drop, a narrow brittle glaſſe, or ciſtern at the beſt; but thou art the great perennous Ocean, which haſt neither ſhore nor bottome.

and ſtreames from Lebanon] The vulgar Latine reads, that flow with force from Lebanon, ſo changing the Conjunction into a Relative againſt the Hebrew, as themſelves acknowledge: others have it, and as ſtreams which run from Jordan (whoſe head riſeth in Lebanon) and travel through all the land from thence, giving it as it paſſeth along all manner of fruitfulneſſe and pleaſure: So doth that river of grace, run in a vaſt, and endleſſe channel from Chriſt, which maketh glad with her ſtreams the whole city of God.

V. 16. Awake O North wind and come thou South] It is an hard matter what interpretation to follow here, where the phancies of Expoſitors are more uncertain and more vain too (ſome of them) than than any wind that blows. Some will have the North wind to be the Prince of the Air, becauſe that is unlucky and uſed for the moſt part in the worſt ſenſe, and becauſe Lucifer is ſaid to dwell in the ſides of the North, Eſay 14. 13. But this is a phantaſm which cannot be handled, nor ſeen neither, with pious eyes (though many of renowned piety have delighted in it, which I wonder at.) The proper meaning and ſcope of the Text may rather ſeem to be a petition, or vehement deſire of the Churches, wherein ſhe beggeth of Chriſt, that he will ſend forth his ſpirit, whoſe inſpirations are like both the North wind, and the South, and can both humble her by the terrours and blaſts of the one, and refreſh her again with the warm and diſſolving gales of the other. For this bleſſed ſpirit hath the effects of all the winds, and can both convince and comfort; nor ſhould the one of theſe be deſired or expected without the other; Firſt, the North wind to blow us down, to coole us, and then the ſoft and gentle whiſpers of the South to inlarge the ſoul, and make her glad and joyful; ſo that what wind ſoever blows, it is for her good and greater happineſſe.

blow upon my garden that the ſpices thereof may flow out] There be dangerous winds which we ought to pray againſt, Epheſ. 4. 14. but every breath that cometh from heaven is ſalubrious, and our ſouls are bound up as with froſt and barrenneſſe, till thoſe powerful incomes and breathings open them, and make them ſpread, and dilate themſelves: like chafed flowers, or oyntments, which if you rub them, afford ſtronger fragrancies and profuſions; Beſides by this flowing forth, we may alſo apprehend the great operation of the Spirit of God, in cauſing grace to ripen and abound in the ſoul; and that it is by his motion alone upon it, that grace is quickened, ſtrengthned, and increaſed, and the ſoul more diſpoſed and fitted for further communion with him; whileſt he is pleaſed to come in, and eat his pleaſant fruits (as follows) that is, to accept and delight himſelf in his own workmanſhip the precious graces, and fruits which he himſelf hath infuſed, and ſo to vouchſafe a more full and glorious communion with himſelf. Others there be, that will have the words underſtood as an invitation or compellation from Chriſt to his Miniſters, to be diligent and couragious in diſpenſing and conveying ſalvation by his Goſpel to all Nations.

let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleaſant fruit] None ſo fit to receive the fruits of grace as Chriſt, who giveth grace; The legal Sacrifices are called his bread, Numb. 28. 2. and ſo is the ſpiritual; we ſhould have nothing to lay on his Altar, did not the Lord provide a ſacrifice himſelf, Gen. 22. 8. wild grapes are our own, but all that is good and pleaſant fruit is from him. O let us not bring forth to our ſelves to our own gain or profit, for this is as bad as to be empty, Hoſ. 10. 1. but let us like thankful tenants invite our Landlord, and ſay as David does, τὰ σὰ ἐκ τῶν σῶν, 1 Chron. 29. 14. It is of thine own we give thee, but it is the better for that; it would not be worthy to be preſented to thee elſe, O bleſſed Saviour, of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things. To him be given the pleaſant fruits, of obedience, praiſe, and honour for ever. Amen.

CHAP. V.

CHriſt pleaſeth to grant the requeſt of his Church, which ſhe made to him in the former Chapter; and being invited, not onely cometh and accepteth her entertainment, but bringeth his friends with him, and feaſteth them. This kindneſſe (it ſeems) is not ſo well improved by her as it deſerved: for ſurprized by another fit of negligence, and tepidity, ſhe is brought into a freſh danger of loſing him, who after much patience uncivil reception, becomes exceeding angry, and being not received when he tendered himſelf, departs diſpleaſed, and is hardly reconciled; though ſhe teſtifie much care and importunity in ſeeking him, ſuffereth ſome loſſes and wounds for his ſake; and is very large in declaring her own love and faithfulneſſe to him, by a lively deſcription of his graces and excellencies.

Verſe 1. I Am come into thy garden my ſiſter my ſpouſe] No ſooner can we ask, but we are anſwered; Chriſt returns a ſweet and ready reply to the petition of his Church, and offers himſelf, as ſoon as intreated by her, who is the joy of his heart. Some will have this garden to be the Virgins womb; Others the garden at Gethſemane, where his ſharpe Agony aſſaulted him, but yet was welcome and joyful; Others Joſephs garden wherein his grave was; Others his Kingdom of glory, that Paradiſe in which he promiſed the convert of his Croſſe to meet him, and where he hath prepared manſions of eternal reſt for all that love him. But the firſt ſpiritual ſenſe is acute enough, by this garden underſtanding his Spouſe her ſelf, and by his coming ſo graciouſly, his own propenſe and forward inclination to grant their prayes that call upon him, and to fulfil their deſires, Pſal. 145. 19.

I have gathered my myrrhe with my ſpices] Or reaped them, as an harveſt, with ſo much joy and pleaſure: no man can take more delight in gathering the fruits of his labour in the field, or vineyard, than Chriſt doth in the graces and duties of his Church; which he calls his, becauſe they are of his infuſion, and gift; and myrrhe, becauſe part of them are bitter and harſh, as the ſowre Acts of repentance, mortification, perſecution, &c. but yet ſpices too, mixt with abundance of ſweetneſſe and comfort. All which he is ſaid to gather, when he ſtrengthens us to perform them, when he perfects them, and bleſſeth them.

I have eaten my honey-comb with my honey] The vulgar Latine cannot excuſe their leaving out the Affix of the firſt perſon, being ſo plain in the Text; but that is not all the diſagreement is found here: For inſtead of honey-combe, the LXX. read bread, others my words, others my meat, my ſweetneſſe; or rather both thoſe, a kind of fine flour mixt with honey and oyl, ſuch as we find, Ezek. 16. 13. and it may be was uſual then at marriages, as our Bride-cakes are now. It is a full expreſſion of that higheſt delight wherewith Chriſt receiveth the obedience and ſervices of his people; feeding on them with a kind of voracity or greedineſſe, as they ſhould do on his Ordinances; (as hungry or greedy men do) ſwallowing the very combe, that is, the more imperfect parts, and pardoning them, for the honeys ſake, for that which is more perfect. The honey-combe is bitter, and cannot be eaten, but men uſe to ſuck out the honey, and if it be empty to throw it away: Chriſt loveth not them who are all outſide, though compoſed by never ſo much Art; but where there is honey, he diſpenſeth with all imperfections, and will purifie them fully hereafter.

I have drunk my wine with my milk] The word ſignifies to drink freely or plentifully, ſtill denoting his gracious acceptation of their duty, which like wine for the cheerfulneſſe, and milk for the ſoundneſſe and ſincerity of it, is grateful to him. It cannot be concealed here, that all theſe ſeveral expreſſions are referred to the ſeveral eminent parts and Acts of our Saviours Hiſtory: The myrrhe and ſpices to his Paſſion, the honey-combe to his reſurrection, when he appeared and did eat one before his Apoſtles, Luke 24. 42. and the wine and milk to his Aſcenſion, when he did rejoyce and comfort himſelf, after the ſorrows he had vanquiſht. They are alſo all of them referred to the inſtitution and celebration of the holy Sacrament of his Supper; when he himſelf was (as the Ancients ſpeak) both conviva, and convivium, both the Intertainer, and the Feaſt; for then did he eat and drink perſonally, not for any augmentation of grace to his perſon, that he could receive who had a fulneſſe ever, but firſt out of new actual delectation which his Spirit took in that Ordination, and then to give an example and a law to his Church, with whom he doth ſtill receive myſtically as well as he is received by them. And as it is obſervable here, that the graces and gracious diſpoſitions of Believers here are expreſt by the choyceſt dainties, ſo tis as comfortable to note, how exceedingly the Lord doth pleaſe himſelf and rejoyce in the ſweetneſſe and odour of them; As Chriſt ſaid it was his meat and drink to do his Fathers will, ſo doth the Father feed upon, that is, delight himſelf in ſuch intertainments, and takes pleaſure in all that love and duty which his ſervants expreſſe to him in their communion with him.

Eat, O my friends, drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved] The Greek and Latine Verſions both, have not greater variety any where then here they have for friends, and beloved. Some of them read, O my loves, abſtractly implying how dearly and chiefly they are loved, whom he pleaſeth to call friends, Matth. 25. 40. and that he is not content or ſatisfied with his own joy unleſſe he either invite or command, or at leaſt give leave to them to be filled with the like: Theſe friends were alwayes of ſpecial quality and reſpect, at all marriages, nor will Chriſt exclude them here; that ſo they may rejoyce and ſing with Sion, who have mourned with her. The holy Angels and Saints are the ſpiritual νυμφαγώγοι, who deſire the happineſſe of the Lambs wife, and are greatly pleaſed at the peace that is now betwixt God and her. Their heaven is in a ſort increaſed and gaineth by ſeeing and promoting this Union, and they are called upon to rejoyce more and more, until they be even inebriated by their abundant drinking, that is their fellowſhip and communion with them, which ſhall be an everlaſting Feaſt, Eſay 25. 6. and an everlaſting inebriation; but yet without any riot or exceſſe; without any ſin, or treſpaſſe. This drinking is not like that of the Epicures, wicked and beſtial, but pure, and heavenly, and innocent. Calix Dominicus (ſayes Saint Cyprian of the Euchariſt, and it is as true here) ſic bibentes inebriat, ut ſobrios faciat, ut mentes ad ſpiritualem ſapientiam redigat, ut a ſapore iſto ſæculari ad intellectum Dei unuſquiſque reſipiſcat; & quemadmodum vino iſto communi mens ſolvitur, & anima relaxatur, & triſtitia omnis deponitur; ita epoto ſanguine domini & poculo ſalutari, deponatur memoria veteris hominis, & fiat oblivio converſationis priſtinæ ſecularis, & mœſtum pectus ac triſte, quod prius peccatis angentibus premebatur, divinæ lætitiæ indulgentiâ reſolvatur.

V. 2. I ſleep but my heart waketh] This verſe begins a new complaint and accuſation of the Church againſt her ſelf, wherein ſhe confeſſeth that remiſneſſe and ſecurity had oppreſt her in great meaſure, but yet the inward bent and motion of the heart was active and vigilant. Some expound this heart objectively, for Chriſt, who (as lovers uſe to call one another) is the Churches heart, ſo beloved by her, and diſcharging thoſe functions for her which ſhe could not for her ſelf. Others bend the word to meane fundamentals and eſſentials (which are the heart) of Religion, wherein the Church is and ſhall be preſerved Orthodox and pure, even when ſhe may dormitate and lapſe in leſſer things:

But we may well ſtick to the firſt explication, and learn from it, that though,through native frailty and corruption, the beſt may put back and lay aſide divine imployments and meditations, and devout exerciſes (that is, as to the conſtant Act and obſervation) yet the godly heart is ever inclining to them, and even when beſotted and ſtupified by carnal temptations and diverſions, doth yet contend and deſire to wait faithfully on Chriſt. The regenerate part, that is the heart, which is oppoſed to it ſo far as natural, ſtriveth with it, and even in that reſt and peace which is promiſed,can find no true peace : So that,as he ſayes highly,Laborioſius dormiunt, quàm vigilare potuerunt : It is more hard and troubleſome for them to be idle (as it is to all generous ſpirits) than to be doing their Lords work, nor can their ſouls yeild to ſuch dull ſlothfulneſſe, though their ſenſes may be overtaken : Voluptuous and ſecure ſinners ſleep all at once, but he that loveth Chriſt keeps his heart watchful. The buſineſſe of the wicked is vanity and dreams, but the very ſleeps of the godly are buſie and vigilant : according to that famous ſaying,which is fathered on Plato,and on Ariſtotle too (as if worthy both thoſe great wits) Somnia ſunt vigiliæ dorminentium, ſpes autem ſomnia vigilantium: So it may truly be ſaid, that the wicked ſleepeth and trifles when moſt ſerious to work his wickedneſſe, but when the righteous ſleepeth, his heart waketh ; that is, riſeth and worketh upwards towards God, whom ſhe loveth, and in whom onely ſhe ſhall then reſt moſt bleſſedly, when onely thus imployed. As they ſay of Adam in Paradiſe, and the bleſſed Saints now confirmed, that they never ceaſe from the actuall love of God, ſince the firſt inſtant of their creation. There is another ſenſe of the words, which by heart underſtandeth conſcience, whoſe property it is even in the midſt of the deepeſt luxury and lethargies wherein men can be buried, to laſh them up by ſharp, and ſtinging accuſations, and terrours ; eſpecially when ſeconded by that other dreadful voyce, which the Church ſpeaks of in the next words.

It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, ſaying, Open to me] This is another ſudden apprehenſion, and ſenſible acknowledgement of the Churches, to which ſhe is quickned and excited by the ſtrong and mighty calls and pulſations, by which Chriſt indeavours to awaken her ; whoſe voyce ſhe cannot but know and confeſſe, though ſhe be not ſo dutiful as ſhe ought to be in obeying it ; and therefore ſhe does here aggravate and bewayl her fault, which is ſo much the greater becauſe of his importunity, and tender vehemency for admiſſion : For when Chriſt calls, and knocks, and beggs at the door of our ſouls to enter, what vile ingratitude is it to ſhut him out ? when he ſollicits and intreats ſo many wayes ; by his Word and Miniſters ; by his rod and corrections (which have their voyce, Mich. 6. 9.) by his mercies and kindneſſe, but chiefly by the conſtant admonitions, and provocations, and motions of his Spirit ; what inexcûſable, obſtinate madneſſe is it to deny and drive him away ? Is any thing ſo worthy to be harboured there, as he is ? and is it not an incomparable honour, that he will vouchſafe to come under our roof ? whoſoever is ſhut out, ſure he deſerves an hoſpitable reception, who will come and ſup with ſuch as we are, and bring his Feaſt along with him. Aperi Chriſto ſed extraneis claude,ſeculo claude, &c. drive away & baniſh all things elſe,but give him the beſt lodging. It is demanded, Can we open ? is it in our power ? hath not he the keyes himſelf, and is not he the door himſelf ? doth not he ſhut and none can open ? Yes, but when he bids thee to open, he lends thee a key ; and when he infuſeth grace and faith, he inables thee to open. It is his gift, but thy grace ; his inſpiration, but thy improvement : And oh ! how bleſſed are they that are but his Turn-keys, his Door-keepers. Is there a greater honour, or happineſſe than to co-operate with God, in that which of all others is the moſt God-like work, the ſalvation of ſouls ?

my ſiſter, my love, my dove, my undefiled] All theſe indearing and honouring Attributes are the rhetorick of love, and not onely teſtifie what ſpecial eſtimation Chriſt hath of his Church (though not free from all infirmities) but ſhould be ſo many ſeveral titles and obligations for our love and obedience. Oh ! what manner of love is this, that God ſhould ſtand, and woo, and beg for that which is his own, and that by ſo many Intereſts. For the Church is, 1. His ſiſter, of the ſame nature and ſeed that now he himſelf hath. 2. His love, his eternal love, whom he loved by that early love which prevented all poſſibility of hers to love him. 3. His dove, eſpouſed to him, as to an onely husband, whoſe chaſte embraces ſhe ſhould never forſake. 4. His undefiled, or perfect (as ſome read) that is in him, who cleanſeth her from all filthineſſe, and will keep her as unſpotted as himſelf : And ſo by all theſe relations and ſacred ingagements, ſhe is bound to honour, and receive him.

for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night] Both theſe clauſes ſignifie the ſame thing, for the head concludes the hair, or locks, or curls ; and the dew is nothing elſe but a gentle vapour gathered by the cold of night, and diſſolved into drops, by which it covers and moiſtens the earth ; all which is intimated by its origination in the Hebrew (as the Criticks have obſerved) and is a moſt paſſionate expreſſion of the tender goodneſſe and patience of the Lord Jeſus, who indures more for his Churches ſake, than ever any faithful Jacob did for his Rachel, any careful lovers for them whom they moſt dearly affect : Many cold and bitter ſtormes and blaſts doth Chriſt undergo for his Elects ſake ; many injuries and diſcomodities, being expoſed to worſe uſage than Nebuchadnezzar was plagued with, Dan. 4. 25. It is unexcuſable ingratitude ſo to requite him, who ſuffers ſo much for us : who can think of it without hearty tears, that this ſhould be all the recompence for ſo much mercy ? Others underſtand by this dew and drops, the bleſſings and gaces of Chriſt, who never comes an empty Gueſt, but full of ſpiritual gifts and comforts, which diſtil from him our head, as the ointments of Aaron upon all his garments : and therefore it is the ſame unthankfulneſſe ſtill to repel him.

V. 3. I have put off my coat,how ſhall I put it on ?] See what vain frivolous anſwers are returned to his love and kindneſſe ! and how apt we are to caſt off thoſe garments of holineſſe, and ſpiritual duties, which ſhould ever adorn and inveſt the ſoul : We grow weary of them, and put off thoſe nuptial robes, wherewith our loynes ſhould be girded perpetually ; Or though not utterly naked, yet we are apt to pretend we are, making that our apology which ſhould be our greater ſhame, and forming poor excuſes, and inconveniencies, as they did in the Goſpel, or as the ſluggard, Prov. 24. 33. which are unworthy a chriſtian, and will not ſerve the turn before God who will not be mocked.

I have waſhed my feet, how ſhall I defile them] This is ſpoken after the cuſtom of thoſe hot countreys, where they uſed to waſh conſtantly before they compoſed themſelves for a ſetled and quiet reſt, or before they ſat down to eat ; and ſo it was a piece of their hoſpitality, to waſh the feet of their ſtrangers, the default whereof Chriſt objecteth to Peter as a great unkindneſſe, Joh. 7. 44. by this cuſtom, the Church would excuſe her ſomnolency and negligence, as if there were trouble or danger in riſing up to entertain him. But theſe are but ſad ſhifts, worſe than his were, Luke 11. 7. A chriſtian ſhould indure more for Chriſt, than a little cold, or unſeaſonable diligence : nor can any thing be thought either a pollution, or a diſhonour which he requireth from us.

V. 4. My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door] Hic eſt ſcopulus eorum (ſayes one) qui mente ſacrilegâ in hoc opere amatoria duntaxat carnis blandimenta meditantur ; which is very true; for to an impure fancy this verſe is more apt to foment lewd and baſe luſts, than to preſent holy and divine notions ; But ſancta ſanctis ; Pearls are not for ſwine, nor ſacred things for dogs, Math. 7. 6. He that reads here muſt do that really, which the Church made but her pretence in the former verſe ; muſt throw off his filthy garments, and waſh his feet,that is, his affections from all carnal pollutions, and ſo let him approach and read to his comfort ; For then he will diſcover that hidden Manna which is covered to all other eyes, and hath a more refined and heavenly pleaſure here, than groſſe and earthly palats can reliſh ; It is ſhameful to mention what foul ugly rotteneſſe ſome have belched here,and how they have neglected that pure and Chriſtian ſenſe that is clear in the words ; which, agreably to the former, preſent a further and higher degree of the patience and goodneſſe of Chriſt ; who when outward means, and arguments will not prevail,proceedeth more effectually,and worketh inwardly by the powerful viſitations and penetrations of his ſpirit ; which are called his finger, and his hand too ; Mat. 12. 28. compared with Luke 11. 20. Firſt, he bores the heart, and gives himſelf a paſſage into it, and then he comes in and poſſeſſeth it. Manus dilecti operatio, & donum gratiæ poteſt intelligi. There is a quite contrary reading of the words by ſome, who turn it, my beloved took away his hand from, &c. as if Chriſt, offended at the oſcitancy and deadneſſe of his Church, were ſo diſpleaſed, as to depart from her, and ſay as he did to his drouſie Apoſtles, Nay ſleep on now, I will not trouble you henceforth : The thing is true indeed, as appears at the 6. verſe, but whether it be ſo proper to theſe words as the former gloſſe is very doubtful to any that conſiders the next words.

and my bowels were moved for him] Or my belly was troubled ; or inflamed, or ſwoonded in me, at his touch : So here is the great effect of ſpiritual viſitations ; cloſe and full workings of Chriſt in the heart, ſhake her within, and move powerfully ; ſo that our bowels and deareſt affections are ſtirred and kindled by them, and we cannot but be mightily troubled for diſpleaſing him before. Nay where there is yet but a little impreſſion of God upon the ſoul, and a ſmall beginning of Divine power, it will command the ſoul to ariſe and follow Chriſt. A little motion of grace, if it be true, will command thoughts, and carry a man, like the influence of Elijahs mantle, (1 Reg. 19. 19.) from all other delights and friendſhips towards heaven. This putting in of his hands at the hole of the door, notes but a ſecret, and ſlender act in outward appearance ; but yet it leaves ſuch an impreſſion upon her heart, that ſhe ſtarts up and follows him, even when he had withdrawn himſelfe, and never gives over ſeeking, till ſhe finds him again. He that never felt the power of God exciting and drawing nigh to him, will never ſeek after God ; and he who hath felt but a little work of that, cannot reſt till he obtain more ; that which was but a ſudden motion, will turn into purpoſe, and that purpoſe ſhall be followed with endeavours, and thoſe indeavours ſhall be proved with practiſe,and that practiſe, by daily growth and perſeverance.

Thus their hearts burned, Luke 24. 32. and thus the more preſentially any ſoul feeles the Divine power in ſuch operations,the more doth it both ſee its own weakneſſe, and is confounded for it : And the more Chriſt is known and loved, the more we lament our own unworthineſſe, leſt any thing in us ſhould cauſe him to depart ; or may offend and grieve his ſpirit. For there is nothing can be matter of deeper ſorrow or humiliation to the heart ,than that ſhe hath neglected or ſlighted the addreſſes of the Spirit of God in his Ordinances, and not intertained them, as ſhe ought. 'Tis a great affliction as any can be imagined, that Chriſt ſhould come, and call, and offer communion to us, and more aids of grace, yet we ſhould be ſo drown'd with carnal ſecurity and deſires of miſtaken eaſe and peace, as either not to open to him, but to ſcorn theſe ſupplyes he ſends us, or elſe to form idle excuſes againſt his intertainment, and ſo cauſe him to withdraw and depart from us. And whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe the Lord to quicken and ſtir our hearts with an apprehenſion of this his abſence, and juſt interception of favour, and communion, and all thoſe inlightning, healing, reviving embraces we formerly had experience of ; it vvill cauſe our ſouls to ſit dovvn in ſorrovv, and to mourn after the Lord and his glory vvhich is hid from us ; and ſo it vvas here, as vve read in the next verſes ; and ſo it vvas vvith David, Pſal. 63. & Pſal. 77. vvhere his heart breaks vvithin him for very diſquietneſſe, that he had loſt, that ſpiritual ſvveetneſſe and ſecret joys vvhich he had once in his communion vvith God, before his ſin damped it, and cut off that dear correſpondence, and thoſe comfortable approaches, which were better than life. For this is certain, as want of Gods preſence, and fellowſhip with him, is the ſhadow of death, and wages of hell, it ſelf, whoſe greateſt torment conſiſts in baniſhment and eſtrangement,and elongation and loſſe, more than in ſenſe : So to enjoy the comforts of the Divine preſence, and to draw nigh to God like a favourite of his and ſtand in his eye continually, is the very Gate and Preface of Heaven ; it is to have eternal life, even here Joh. 3. 14, 15. and to incloſe Heaven within us any where, and every where, and to reſt in the boſom of God, the ſeat of his love and ſecrets. Nay, beyond all this, it will be found, that whenſoever the ſoul is returned to her reſt again,and hath found her beloved, and he is neareſt to her,and ſhe hath the moſt fellowſhip and communion with him,even then ſhe will be moſt deeply humbled both for former and preſent neglects and intermiſſions, and unvvorthineſſe. The neerer communion, the greater ſobriety and humility ; vvhileſt the ſoul trembles, as not able to bear her ovvn happineſſe, and cryes vvith Elizabeth, vvhence is it that my Lord is pleaſed to come to me? and is aſhamed too of the weakneſſe and enmity of her ovvn heart, vvhich ſtill retaines a diſpoſition to dravv back, and ſo hinders that glorious and conſtant and daily fellowſhip which we might have with God, did not thoſe rude interpoſers keep us off at too great a diſtance from him, and block up our way and acceſſe unto him, which elſe would be more open and free unto us now in the dayes of the Goſpel,than ever any of the Saints enjoyed, or could enjoy under the Law, in the higheſt degree of friendſhip and ſpiritual familiarity that we ever read of. Abraham, and Iſaac, and Moſes, (his old friends) did not walk more immediately with God, than we might, upon whom the ſpirit of communion is more abundantly poured now after the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, did we not darken our own light and ſtraiten our own priviledge by our own folly. The Lords hand is not ſhortned nor his bowels reſtrained, nor doth he delight leſſe in the fellowſhip of his ſervants than in times paſt , but is as much taken and raviſhed with it ; onely they content themſelves with leſſe degrees of it. and ſo they are not ambitious to preſſe hard, and get all the fulneſſe of it , which Chriſt hath purchaſed and promiſed, and which the children of God have attained before.

V. 5. I roſe up to open to my beloved] Inward ſorrow and repentance is beſt declared by outward reformation, and bringing forth fruits worthy of that which we profeſſe. The very Hypocrite feels inward and ſilent checks, and incitations to ſincerity ; but he quencheth and ſtrangleth them ; proceeding no further than to weak purpoſes and wiſhes onely ; but that heart which is broken truly, and troubled for ſin indeed,though they ſleep and lie as dead for a time: yet will not lie for ever ; nor indeed can reſt quietly till brought back to God and reſtored to his boſom whom by her ſecurity ſhe had diſpleaſed : Of this the penitent prodigal is an happy example, I will ariſe and go to my Father, Luke 15. 18.

and my hands dropped with myrrhe, and my fingers with ſweet ſmelling myrrhe] Both the prepoſitions are added here to repair the ſenſe, which would be no leſſe clear and intelligible, though they had been omitted : The vulgar Latin reads pleni, full of myrrhe in the latter clauſe, without any reaſon for it in the fountain where nothing is found to anſwer it ; as one of their own confeſſeth, Nihil ſimile in Heb. ſed tranſlatum à codice depravato, &c. So for ſweet ſmelling they have moſt tried, or approved myrrhe ; others paſſing myrrhe, that is, ſuch as either flows freely on its own accord which they call myrrha libertatis, and is alwayes the pureſt and beſt ; or elſe ſuch, as (like currant money, which is called pecunia tranſiens, Gen. 23. 16. and 2 King. 12. 4.) is moſt vendible and approved. All which are but elegant amplifications of the former expoſition, ſhewing that faithful and active indeavours ſhould ever accompany inward motions, and ſuggeſtions of grace : The feet ſhould make haſte, and the fruitful hands ſhould be diligent, and operative ; for this is to oyl the locks and make the ſoul more dexterous and prompt to all other duties of holineſſe : Good habits having no leſſe vertue than wicked, to facilitate and diſpoſe us to do good, more good ſtill.

upon the handles of the lock] Or the bolt of the door, as the vulgar Latin who divide theſe words from this verſe, and joyn them to the next that follows; but they may better keep that place,which our verſions have aſſigned them ; carrying a proper and clear affinity in them to that which preceded , if by theſe handles, and wards of the lock, we underſtand the faculties and operations of the ſoul, as is ſaid before : Or, as others contend, we may expound that myrrhe of thoſe ſweet teſtimonies and impreſſions of grace, which Chriſt leaves upon the ſoul, both to upbraid us with the indignity of our contempt, and the more to attract us to love him ; who never withdraws himſelf totally,but leaves ſome ſprinklings, ſome diſtillations of his mercy upon the ſoul, as dear and precious pledges,and oppignorations of his return. And thus taken, the words ſuggeſt but one and the ſame ſenſe, full of comfort and edification.

V. 6. I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had withdrawn himſelf, and was gone] Or, he was gone, which duplication is more paſſionate, and being without a conjunction, notes the expedition and certainty of his abſence, for which ſhe is much troubled, and like a ſad widow, wrings her hands and cryes out, He is gone, he is gone : This is the firſt evil, that follows and puniſheth ſecurity, and contempt of Chriſt ; who ſuſpends and denyes that light of his preſence, vvhich he had offered freely before : ſeaſonable acceptations of grace, vvhen it is tendred to us, are a Chriſtians wiſdom and ſafety, leſt they find ſuch favour no more : Good opportunities are like water ſpilt, which is not eaſily collected, or not ſo purely : It was Jeruſalems greateſt miſery that ſhe would not know her day : If we obſtinately refuſe terms of peace, and imbrace not the kindneſſe of God when he requires admiſſion, he will withdraw, and hide his face, Mic. 3. 4. and Hoſ. 5. 4, 5. 6. The Church here had attained a glorious friendſhip with Chriſt, and was entered into ſweet communion with him, and Chriſt offers further grace to her, coming down into his garden, but ſhe (grown idle and ſlothful , and ſecure) as after any ſpecial acts of ſervice ſhe is apt to do, neglects to receive and improve his viſits in their opportunity , and ſo falls from that happineſſe which formerly ſhe had , and her beloved withdraws himſelf, and is gone.

my ſoul failed when he ſpake] Or, was melted,or went out of me, for his words which he had uſed to me : I was even exanimated, and aſtoniſhed, even as nature and the creatures ſeem to be when the Sun is abſent. This is a ſecond effect of ſecurity ; it will deeply trouble the heart, when ſoftned and molified a little by grace, to have reſiſted and refuſed Chriſt before ; Judas that ſold him repented, much more will they whoſe hearts are opened and melted by his ſpirit : And truly, they whoſe hearts are not touched and moved then, may fear that they are but deluded and mocked with vain preſumptions, while they continue hard and relent not. God will work upon the heart and give theſe holy liquefactions to all, unto whom he will give Chriſt : Firſt, they ſhall be aſhamed and confounded that they have neglected his words, which like ſeed under the clods may lie dead awhile, but will ſpring up and convince them at laſt ; and then will Chriſt pity their ſorrows, and come again to bind them up. And therefore as it is a great mercy in God to bring his word to our remembrance that we may underſtand it better ; ſo when he ſpeaketh, we ſhould be careful to record, and lay up his words, that we may not believe in vain, 1 Cor 15. 2. which words will diſſolve (as fire does hard Iron) the moſt obdurate heart,and make it with indignation to cry out,O wretch, careleſſe wicked wretch to deſpiſe ſuch love, to neglect ſo great compaſſion ! and ſo fit and prepare it for a new and happier viſitation by Chriſt : So Aquinas both like a Schooleman, and a votary at once, liquefactio importat quandam mollificationem, quâ exhibet ſe cor habile, ut amatum in ipſum ſubintret.

I ſought him, but I could not find him, I called him but he gave me no anſwer] It is admirable counſel, Heb. 12. 25. not to neglect him that ſpeaketh, not to ſhift him off by any frivolous and idle excuſes, for ſo the Greek word there, μὴ παραιτήσησθε , imports. The Spirit of God is gracious and patient, but yet juſt and ſenſible of affronts and therefore not to be grieved. It is a great ſin not onely to renounce and perſecute, but alſo to neglect ſuch a friend : who if reſiſted wilfully, turnes enemy, and will meaſure to us according as we have dealt with him, Prov. 19. 24. If we be deaf to his voice, his ear will be heavy to our prayer ; either to puniſh our former diſobedience, or elſe to illuſtrate more his own grace, which like other Jewels becomes moſt eſteemed, when moſt difficult to obtain.

V. 7. The watchmen that went about the city found me, they ſmote me, &c.] Some interpret theſe words to a better ſenſe, and that this wounding and ſpoyling is nothing elſe, but thoſe happy compunctions and mortifications which are effected in the ſoul by the word of God, whereby ſhe is more excited to ſeek after God, being deprived of all other comforts and whom none can finde but they that are both of a contrite and pure heart.

But it muſt needs be more genuine to conſider them as another miſchief and woful fruit of ſecurity, which expoſeth to many enemies and many calamities: Theſe watchmen are conceived to be, the great tyrants and perſecutors of the Church, who many times are thoſe that ſhould be her watchmen, that ſhould preſerve and help her, but are apt to help on her day of ſorrow, and to multiply her griefs when ſmitten and forſaken of God: which is an effect, of divine juſtice, which appears no way more ſevere than in giving ſuch watchmen who are rather Wolves and Lions to his flock: that they may ſmite her with their wicked tongues, Jer. 18. 18. and wound her with their cruel perſecutions, and take away by ſchiſmes and hereſies the glory of her peace and union.

the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me] Or my ſcarf, cloak, any thing that is expanded and made to cover. The LXX. χαλύμμα; a veſture which the modeſt virgins of ancient times uſed ever to wear when they vvent abroad, as hath been obſerved already; and is an apt ſymbol, either of the pure and decent government of the Church which is both her ornament and her defence; or elſe of the purity and integrity of doctrine, which when it is torn and corrupted by errour, makes her like a vile woman, whoſe nakedneſſe is diſcovered, and whoſe fame and honour is vitiated, Ezek. 23. 25, 26. It is a mercy to have one veil taken away, 2 Cor. 5 14. but this we ſhould ever be careful to preſerve; for (as the Apoſtle ſayes in another ſenſe of all women, ſo may we of the Church) πρέπον ἐϛὶ γυναῖκα ἀκατακάλυπτον, &c. Is it comely for her to pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor. 11. 13.

V. 8. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jeruſalem, if ye find my beloved] The LXX. and ſome others adde all the reſt of this ſolemn adjuration or obſecration, as it is more largely before, Chap. 2. 7 and 3. 5. but this is needleſſe and ungrounded: The words are very quick and urging as they are, teaching that we ſhould not diſdain the prayers and holy contributions of others, who enjoy communion with Chriſt, whileſt our ſelves want ſuch comforts: for 'tis a great priviledge and bleſſing too, to have ſuch faithful friends with whom vve may take ſweet counſel, Pſal. 55. 14. and to vvhom to declare our griefs, is like blood-letting to eaſe the veins, and quiet the ſoul: and vvhoſe charitable mediations and Interceſſions for us, if fervent, vvill prevail much that ye tell him, that I am ſick of love] Or, vvhat ſhall ye tell him? more rhetorically and paſſionately (as Hoſ. 9 14) for ſo it is the manner of that language to affirm any thing more earneſtly by interrogations: So it is, be ſure ye tell him, be ſure ye preſent my languiſhing condition to him, and the cauſe of it, vvhich is, my exceſſive love to him, that ſo I may be reconciled to him. 'Tis true, I have been negligent, and careleſſe in my duty; I have not obſerved and honoured him as I ought, but yet Oh! tell him my heart is upright and faithful tovvards him. Non languet amor, ſed languet amans; though ſome defects and negligences have been found upon me, yet my love is intire; that cannot decay nor ſleep; I may languiſh and be ſick vvith it, but it can never be leſſened nor faile: and ſuch a ſickneſſe is the happieſt health; Fælix amor! mirus amor! qui infirmos & ægros facit, ſed ſimul ſanos & validos.

V. 9. What is thy beloved more than (another is added) beloved, O thou faireſt among women] Or vvho is thy beloved? or of vvhat form; for the vvord is not only applicable to the eſſence or ſubſtance, but likevviſe to the ſhape, condition, accidents, 1 Sam. 28. 14. The vulgar Latin read for more than another, ex dilecto, or prædilecto, as ſome have corrected it, vvhich is a comparative circumlocution proper to the holy language vvhich vvants degrees of compariſon: by vvhich the friends and daughters of the Church (vvho is to be accounted moſt fair and glorious even in her tribulations, and never to be reviled but ſpoken of honourably) either expreſſe her own deſire to know Chriſt more (for all eyes do not ſee his whole beauty at firſt, but he is revealed by degrees; in which manifeſtation none ſo fit to help thoſe that be ignorant, as the Church is;) or elſe they pretend an ignorance of him, that ſo they may provoke and inflame her the more both to deſire, and to deſcribe him. Than which nothing could be a wiſer or better remedy for her love-ſickneſſe; Qui amore languentes recreare putat, nil præſtare poteſt opportunius, quam cum illis de eo quem amant miſcere ſermonem.

what is thy beloved more than another beloved that thou doſt ſo charge us] This repetition of theirs argues no leſſe zeal in them, than her adjuration and ſolemn charge did in the Church. Something is in it, when we ſpeak abundantly and affectionately of Chriſt; for according to the paſſion and vehemency of our affection, which is the main wheel that turns all the reſt, ſo do our ſpeeches and deſires iſſue from us, and ſo doth the worth and the concernment of that we ſeek appear: weighty and ſerious matters are driven on with weighty and ſerious impulſions; and the hotter our fire burns within, the brighter and ſtronger will our flames ſhine without. Quò ardentius diligunt (as Gregory) eò dulcius verba repetunt, ut per repetitionem, delectionis maximus amor oſtendatur: And truly if any thing deſerve this importunity, Chriſt does: It becomes us to inquire earneſtly after him, and to know more of him, whom we can never know ſo fully, but ſtill he will paſſe our knowledge, Epheſ. 3. 19, and we ſhould like the holy Apoſtles delight to behold him, and to know him more. And to this end enquire and ask of others, that we may be confirmed in the truth, and able to give an account of him to all that require it: And oh! how happy were it for the Church, if her ſons and daughters would ask her only ſuch queſtions? not thoſe fooliſh and unlearned litigations, which we ſhould avoyd as ſnares, being full of windy ſtrife, and crude emptineſſe, which are the ſcab and diſeaſe of the Church, 1 Tim. 6. 4. but theſe ſound and edyfying problems, which tend to edification, and to nouriſhment; which it is a chief piece of Chriſtan wiſdom to learn; that ſo we may deſire and gather not diſtempers, but refreſhments and health from them.

V. 10. My beloved is white and ruddy] This is the deſcription and character of Chriſt which the Church returns, firſt in general, deſcending to the ſpecial lineaments and branches of his excellent beauty in the following verſes. For white, ſome read pure, bright, ſhining, elegant, &c. all which are but ſeveral variations of the ſame thing, and all included in theſe two words, which are the ſumme and eſſence of all Beauty and Majeſty. The words are expounded literally by ſome, of the humane body and effigies of Chriſt, which, they ſay, was ſo goodly and beautiful, that no painter could ever dravv it, becauſe of that (θείας ἄλγης, ἢ χάειτος) divine luſtre and grace that ſhone in it: And yet how do the moſt vulgar and rudeſt dawbers among them preſume to do it, and like the Prophets carpenter, to worſhip it when they have done? We ſtick not upon viſible and external colours, which no queſtion were in him moſt exact and beautiful: This white and red which is here praiſed is ſpiritual, and made him fairer than the ſons of men: For ſo Chriſt was white in his Divine nature, which was the brightneſſe of his Fathers ſubſtance, and red in his humanity, being of the ſame ſubſtance with the firſt Adam, who was made of red earth; white in his holineſſe, and red in his blood and ſufferings; white in his own immaculate purity and innocence, but red in the imputation of our ſins, which are like ſcarlet and crimſon, Eſay 1. 18. white in his goodneſſe and free grace to humble ſinners, but red and bloody to all his enemies that will not ſuffer him to rule over them. Thus ſhould we preſent and deſcribe him both to our own and others affections, which is called by the Apoſtle, the προγράφησις of Chriſt, and is better than any crucifix, or picture, Gal 3. 1. And ſeeing he is thus white and beautiful, we ſhould ſtrive to be ſo too, that we may be like him: λευκὰ πρέποντα Θεοῖς, is the old proverb; And therefore we find the Angels of God, Joh. 20. 12. Matth. 28. 3. Mark 16. 5. Acts 1. 10. &c. and the Martyrs, Rev. 3. 5. & 6. 2. nay Chriſt himſelf in his glorious transfiguration repreſented thus, Matth. 17. 2. whom we ſhould imitate in all things, that ſo we may be conformable to his glorious image who is white and ruddy. Niveo natat ignis in ore Purpureus: eſpecially in ſuffering for him, not as malefactors do, for that is odious and ſhameful; but as well-doers and as Chriſtians, for this is to glorifie God, 1 Pet. 4. 15, 16.

The chiefeſt among ten thouſand] Or a ſtandard-bearer among ten thouſand, or one choſen of thouſands, (as the vulgar Latin after the LXX) that is, above all others, or in compariſon of all others; higher than the Kings of the earth, Pſal. 89. 28. as it was ſaid; Saul was higher than all the people, 1 Sam. 9. and as David rather, who was better than thouſands of them, 2 Sam. 18. 3. But Chriſt is not onely the Standard-bearer, but the Standard it ſelf: The Enſigne of his Church, Eſay 11. 10. who ruleth and leadeth them as the Colours do Armies: Him we are to follow as our Captain, or καθηγητὴς, Matth. 28 10. he being that true pillar of fire which will bring us to Canaan. Vegetius and other Maſters, of the Military diſcipline tell us, that not to obſerve the Standard, and march after it, was a capital offence; Signum non videre cum attollitur capitale eſt: So it will prove with us, if we forſake his Colours, who if we had ten thouſand lives deſerves them all, for for he hath the words of eternal life, and whither can we go, and be happy, but to him?

V. 11. His head is as the moſt fine gold] Here begins the particular deſcription and praiſe of Chriſt, of all which, as one ſayes modeſtly, Ego quid de ſingulis ſtatuam, fateor me neſcire; I know not what to determine and reſolve concerning the meaning of them: So may I ſay eſpecially of this particular; For it is not yet agreed ſo much, as what the very words here ſignifie; of which neither is an Adjective in the Original, but both Subſtantives and Synonyma's, being conjoyned by appoſition, and ſo ſignifying ſome thing that is moſt excellent and perfect in its kind. For where many words are placed together thus, that are of the ſame ſignification, it argues that they are generical terms, and would expreſſe that which is exceeding precious and exquiſite: And ſo, both theſe are including under them all the chief and nobleſt properties, of that royal metal; whether fineneſſe, ſolidity, ſplendour, or native purity, which needs no help of Art to melt or purge it; but is born and digged like a ſtone out of the earth (and therefore by ſome is ſo rendred in this place, λίθος, τίμιος, or πολύτιμος,) and is not refined out of the Oar, as Tinne is by fire, but is in it ſelf moſt pure and perfect. In all which we find a clear and worthy Emblem, both of the Wiſdome and Majeſty of Chriſt: that his Kingdom exceedeth all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and that a crown of pure gold is ſet upon his head, Pſal. 21. 4. that is, a crovvn that ſhall never ruſt, nor fade avvay.

His locks are buſhy, and black as a raven] Or his hair is curled, thick, heaped together. The vulgar Latin read, Sicut elata palmarum, vvhich none of her beſt friends knovv hovv to expound; For ſome vvould have it to be a Greek vvord from ἐλάτη, vvhich ſignifies the firſt bud, or husk that the Palm-tree ſhoots forth; Others vvill have it of a Latin off-ſpring, and the contract of elevatæ, becauſe as the branches of Palmes, the more they are depreſt, vvill riſe the more; So the Decrees and Counſels of God (vvhich are his Βόςρυχοι, his thick infolded locks) cannot be prevented nor reſiſted: but the more men oppoſe them, the more do they infatuate and perplex themſelves; like thoſe that travell in thick darkneſſe, 2 Chron. 6. 1. vvho the more they vvander, the more do they loſe themſelves. For, as a Raven, Others by a little change of the points, read, As the Evening; Others, aurorantes. as the morning; both vvhich are neither perfectly dark nor light; but mixt of both: So the decrees of God publiſhed in Prophecies; and ſo many of the Sermons that Chriſt delivered in Parables, vvhich are neither vvholly evident, nor vvholly concealed, but (as the Philoſopher ſaid of his Morals) both vvritten, and unvvritten; publiſhed, and not publiſhed.

V. 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters] Or as doves upon the rivers of vvaters. Nothing is more knovvn, than that Doves take great delight in ſprings, and fountains, and pure rivers; and ſo are a moſt fit and proper Emblem of the purity and holineſſe of Chriſt; vvhoſe eyes, firſt cannot ſo much as behold any iniquity, Habak. 1. 13. ſecondly, are meek, humble pitiful, and full of compaſſion; for he looketh not after prey, and blood, as Vultures and Eagles; but as the innocent Dove, vvhich deſcended upon him at his Baptiſme, vvhen he ſanctified and purified the very vvaters themſelves; and made them cleaner, than they could make him for ever after to all that vvaſh in them, as he hath commanded.

waſhed with milk and fitly ſet] As if vvater vvere not enough to purifie them, they are ſaid to be as vvhite, as if delicately waſhed in milk; which alſo ſets out his gentle and lowly nature: Whoſe eyes were not red and bloody, as the eyes af drunkards, with vvine: nor filthy and noyſom, as the letchers, which are full of adultery; nor fiery and glaring, as the angry and furious, whoſe eyes flame revenge, like a dogs, or lions; nor yet diſtorted and looking aſquint, as the envious and malicious; but as the meek and gentle eyes of Doves, to make them more gentle, are waſhed in milk: The other Epithet is differently rendred; That vvhich vve tranſlate, fitly ſet, the vulgar Latin render, abiding near the fulleſt ſtreams: vvhich vvhen they knovv not hovv to vindicate, they leave out ſtreams; and turn the Adjective fulleſt, into fulneſſe; vvhich after the holy Idiom, ſignifies ſetting of ſtones in rings, or jevvels; as appears Exod. 28. 17. and ſo they comply at laſt vvith us and agree both in the tranſlation and ſenſe, reſembling the glorious eyes of Chriſt, to jewels, or diamonds, which are ſo artificially ſet, that there is no diſproportion nor inequality in them; for he is no reſpecter of perſons, but as his eyes radiate and ſparkle, like orient gems, ſo are they even, and juſt, and upright; and there is no partiality, no hypocriſie, no unrighteouſneſſe in him.

V. 13. His cheeks are as beds of ſpices, as ſweet flowers] For Beds, we may read banks, or borders; or (with ſome) boxes and pots of ſpices: and for ſweet flowers, ſome read, towers of ſweetneſſe; others ripe plants that breed ointments, or that are planted and ſtrengthened by the confectioners: which are rich ſymbols of that ſweetneſſe, life, comfort, that live in the amiable countenance of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; In whoſe preſence and favour is fulneſſe of joy and pleaſures for evermore. It is ſaid of Alexander the Great, that his skin and fleſh were perfumed naturally, and that there breathed from him (ſuch was the exact temper and concoction of his humours) a fragrancy as of flowers and ſpices. It is moſt true of Chriſt, whoſe garments ſmell of myrrhe, caſſia, and all ſpices, and in whoſe cheeks they grow and flouriſh; ſo that we may without flattery apply to him that of the Panegyrick; In ipſo vultu tuo videbam omnia ſigna virtutum, in fronte gravitatis, in oculis lenitatis, in rubore verecundiæ, in ſermone juſtitiæ, &c.

his lips are lilies, dropping ſweet ſmelling myrrhe] It is uſual with profane Authours to expreſſe elegance by lilies, and ſo the preaching of the word is frequently compared to dropping, Deut. 32. 1. Job 29 22. Firſt, becauſe this infuſion muſt he made by degrees, as into narrow veſſels, which cannot receive all at once; Animi rudes quantum excipere poſſint, videndum eſt. And ſcondly, becauſe it maketh fruitful, and rich, as the dew which ſinks gently into the earth, and makes it fertile; that he which ſowes in tears may reap in joy, But then it is compared to myrrhe for other cauſes; As 1. Becauſe as myrrhe is bitter and diſtaſtful, ſo the very word of grace is unwelcome and diſtaſtful; being contrary to carnal luſts, and ſenſual appetitions, teaching love of enemies, contempt of the world, ſelf-denial, &c. which are duri ſermones, hard and ſowre precepts to fleſh and blood. 2. Becauſe as myrrhe is a rare preſervative againſt putrefaction, and rottenneſſe; ſo the word of Chriſt is a word of life, able to ſave the ſoul. If he ſay the word we ſhall be healed and live; whoſe powerful authority not only the ſtubborn Jews admired, Matth. 7. 29. and the winds and ſeas obeyed, but even the very graves and carcaſſes of the dead, John 11. 43. The conſideration whereof ſhould make us hang at his lips, and open our hearts that his precious dew may drop in, and we may receive the words of eternal life, Joh. 6. 68. They that are imbalmed with mirrhe, are but ſecured for a time againſt preſent corruptions; but they that are anointed with theſe droppings, ſhall be made clean and kept alive for ever; To which it is thought by ſome that Chriſt alludes, when ſpeaking to the Church of Smyrna (which is interpreted, myrrhe) he tells her, that he that overcometh ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death, Revel. 2. 11. that is, his ſoul and body ſhall live immortally, which is more than all their myrrhe, and all the embalmings of the world can promiſe.

V. 14. His hands are as gold-rings, ſet with the Beryl] By theſe hands we may underſtand, his bounty, liberality, giving of ſpiritual talents and diſpenſations, which are more precious and glorious than gold-rings ſet with the richeſt ſtones: For that which we tranſlate Beryl, may ſignifie any other kind of ſtone, as Carbuncle, Onyx, Chryſolite, Jacynth, &c. and therefore the LXX. would not tranſlate it but retain the ſame word that is in the original, which ſignifies indeed the Sea too, and for that cauſe may either be taken for any Sea pearl in general, or elſe for any ſtone that reſembles the Sea in colour, as they ſay, the Beryl does. λίθος Βηρύλλιον γλαυκίζων μὲν ἐςι θαλασσοβαφὴς, &c. ſaith Epiphan. But neither this, nor that, nor all the wealthy treaſures of Nature are comparable to his unſearchable love and bounty to his Church, to whom he gave himſelf, and ſtill giveth all things; which bounty and love are called his hands, becauſe they conſiſt chiefly in action, and are ſaid to be like gold-rings ſet with Beryls, becauſe alwayes ſo perfectly and accurately performed by him, that he was reprehenſible in nothing, his very enemies could find no juſt matter of fault in him, but confeſſed that he had done all things well; nay better than that poor little Engliſh word can expreſſe the Greek, καλῶς πάντα πεποίηκε,, Mark 7. 37.

his belly is as bright Ivory overlayd with Saphyres] Or his bowels, or heart, are like the brighteneſſe of poliſht Ivory, or Alabaſter; that is overlaid, or branched, or diſtinguiſht with blue ſaphyres: To diſtinguiſh is to adorn, or ingrave, or inamel, in the Latine dialect, as their pocula gemmis diſtinguere, and other phraſes in their Orators and Poets witneſſe. The Engliſh word Saphyre is of an Hebrew deſcent, coming from their Saphar, which ſignifies to number, and ſo ſignifies a thing of great value or worth, as Res numeri alicujus, with the Latines. Both theſe rich pearls of Nature, we find uſual emblems of chaſtity and temperance; for the Elephant is obſerved to be a moſt continent creature, and the Saphyre (as the Secretaries of Nature tell us) is of a cooling and refrigerating quality: And thus they may be Allegorized here, for though Chriſt was accuſed as one gluttonous and given to wine; yet this was but the malice of blind adverſaries: He was the miraculous example of all true holy abſtinence and moderation: and gave us a copy in his own faſting and mortification, which we ought carefully to take out, and follow: But beſides theſe vertues, here is more intended, for by the bowels and belly of Chriſt may alſo be underſtood his tender mercies and compaſſions, and his kind affections and good thoughts towards his Church and people, which moved him from all eternity to viſit them like the day-ſpring from on high, as old Zachary prophecyed, Luke 1. 78.

V. 15. His legges are as pillars of marble] The word for legges includeth alſo the thighes, feet, armes, and every part that brancheth from the main body, being derived from a root that ſignifies to grow out, or to run forth: By theſe pillars ſome would have the Apoſtles and Miniſters of the Goſpel, who are called ſo, Epheſ. 2. 20. and ſo is every member of Chriſt promiſed to be, Revel. 3. 12. where Chriſt ſaith, that he will make all them that overcome pillars, that is, he will confirm them in grace, from which they ſhall never fall, and upon them others ſhall be built. But leaving theſe, according to our former Analogy, by theſe pillars we underſtand the other glorious attributes and perfections of Chriſt, namely, his immutable truth and faithfulneſſe in his word (whereof no iota ſhall periſh) and in all his actions, which are nothing elſe but judgement and righteouſneſſe: or elſe his almighty power and ſtrength to diſcharge his offices to which he was anointed of the Father, which he performed ſo, that he ſhook the pillars of hell, and triumphed over the power of the grave. For though it is moſt true, that he had no inward conflicts and impugnations ex parte fomitis (as the ſchools ſpeak) ſuch as his members ſuffer from the reliques of fleſh in them; yet he had many outward ſtormings and aſſaults both from wicked men and Devils, whereof he was more than conqueror, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of them, Act. 2. 24.

ſet upon ſockets of fine gold] Or leaning upon, as Tremelius, but latininſculè, as a late Jeſuite cenſures him: others underpropt with ſockets, or feet of gold. The feet of Daniels Image were but of clay, though the head was gold: and ſo are the feet of all deceitful men, and thoſe that truſt in them are like a foot out of joynt, Prov. 25. 19. But Chriſt is feet of gold to his ſervants, to uphold them that they may walk ſafely, and not ſtumble: So that every one that walketh in his integrity may ſay, my foot ſtandeth in an eaven place, Pſal. 26. 11, 12.

his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the Cedars] Or his whole ſhape and perſon, is moſt glorious and full of majeſty; for it was a proverbial expreſſion among them, by which they would ſignifie any thing moſt excellent, and beautiful: Lebanon being the glory of Syria, and was called the mountain of mountains, for its height, ſweetneſſe, fruitfulneſſe, &c. So is Chriſt the glory of his Church, and the elect of God in whom his ſoule delighteth, Eſay 42. 1. It is a miſerable conſequence that is forced from hence by a Jeſuite, that becauſe the Cedars of Lebanon were uſed by Solomon in the building of the Temple, therefore the pictures and images of Chriſt are to be worſhipped in Chriſtian Churches.

V. 16. His mouth is moſt ſweet] Or his palat, throat, breath are ſweetneſſe; now the Church drawing towards a period of her character cannot forbear but repeats the praiſes of his mouth, which ſhe had touched once before; for indeed, nothing makes Chriſt ſo precious and delightful as that word of grace and bleſſing, which he hath delivered to his Church; which exceedeth in pleaſure all other things that are moſt delightful; as the royal Prophet confeſſeth, Pſal. 119. 103. and indeed through that whole Pſalm.

yea he is altogether lovely] Or he is her whole deſire, the act being put for the object, as is uſual with other Authors: or all of him is deſires, or he is wholly deſirable, moſt to be deſired, &c. Here ſhe breaks off her praiſes in a general Elogy, which no words can expreſſe enough; As if ſhe had ſaid, Alas! what is this I have ſpoken? I am too barren and empty of language; I know not what to call him, but do you that hear me, imagine or name any thing, that is moſt deſirable, moſt worthy to be loved and admired, and that is He. He is the deſire of Nations, Gen. 49. 10. 26. Hag. 2. 8. and all that is perfect in earth or heaven, is but a dim ſhadow of his excellency. If you deſire any gift that is good and perfect, go to him, for he hath a fulneſſe in himſelf, and will give to all that ask: If you would bleſſe and comfort your eyes with an object that is altogether fair and happy: O! lift up your eyes and behold him, for thoſe eyes only are bleſſed. Behold him in heaven, on earth, in the womb, on the land, at ſea, in his cradle, on his croſſe, in his grave; See him, and look upon him in his meaneſt ſtate, which made him deſpiſed of men, Eſay 52. 14. & 53. 2, 3. and yet even then will the quick eye of faith find out all infinite worth and comfort, and beauty in him; and will deſire none beſides him.

this is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jeruſalem] Or ſuch is my beloved, &c. And oh! moſt worthy to be beloved, being ſuch, who can chuſe but admire him and honour him only? O ye ſons of men, come and look upon him, whom ye have crucified; read over and over again this character; and though it be far ſhort of what he deſerves (for loquimur de Deo non quantum debemus, ſed quantum poſſumus) yet it will inflame your hearts, & compel you in thankful exclamations to cry out, and confeſſe your own felicity in his ſight, and knowledge. O terque quaterque beati! Never is it poſſible for any to be ſo bleſſed as thoſe, who have found him, and choſen him to be their friend and their beloved.

CHAP. VI.

THe Church having preſented Chriſt in ſo high a character, raiſeth a zealous deſire in all that hear of him, to find and enjoy him; In which holy travel they are further directed, and inflamed both by the bleſſed pleaſures of that place where he abideth, and alſo by the dear union and fellowſhip that is betwixt him, and all his members; and laſtly by the preſent comforts and priviledges which he beſtoweth on them, which are largely remonſtrated in his ample praiſes of her graces, and in his tender love and care over her, viſiting her and watching over her, and often calling earneſtly upon her if ſhe at any time back-ſlide, that ſhe may return, and not loſe him.

Verſe 1. W*Hither is thy beloved gone? O thou faireſt among women, whither, &c.* Here is no material difference among tranſlations, only the vulgar Latin and ſome elſe, annexe this verſe to the former Chapter, but methinks not with ſo much reaſon, as they which begin this Chapter with it, and unite both the interrogation and the reply together: The interrogation is propoſed by the friends or companions of the bride, who inſtead of directing her to find him, as ſhe deſired, Chap. 5. 8. do here deſire to be directed; and that very earneſtly as it appears by the repetition, which argues both the truth and vehemency of their affection, and alſo by the expedition and diſpatch, obtending no idle excuſes or occaſions of delay, as they did in the Goſpel, Luke 9. 59. & 14. 18. but ſpeedily ſetting about the ſeeking of him.

that we may ſeek him with thee] The cauſal, that, is better than the copulative, and, of the vulgar Latin, as is coſeſſed by the Patrons of it; but yet both of them may ſerve to expreſſe the ſame thing which is not only the effect of preaching Chriſt, whoſe excellencies and power ſet forth will inchant and inflame the virgins to forſake all, Zach. 8. 21. that may find him, and partake of his bleſſings and benefits, Eſay 2. 2, 3. 1 Tim. 6. 2. but alſo that reverence and do honour, which belongeth to the whole Church, whoſe communion and authority ſhould be highly eſteemed by us; as a ſafe and ſingular help and guide in the gaining of ſaving truth, and knowledge: And ſo that is very true of venerable Bede upon theſe words, Qui Chriſtum ſine Eccleſiâ quærit, errare & fatigari poteſt, at invenire non poteſt. It is not good (ſaith the wiſe man) to be alone, nor to walk aſide in private and unfrequented phancies, where we may have this light, and pillar of truth (like that of fire in the wilderneſſe) to go before us.

V. 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of ſpices] For beds ſome read furrowes, lines, pots, &c. which all are of one notation and ſenſe: ſignifying in the letter Solomons rare gardens and orchards, whereof Eccleſ. 2. 5 we read, and Neh. 3. 15. but ſpiritually are to be expounded either of the many and ſeveral congregations and aſſemblies of the Church; which are compared to many beds in the ſame garden; or elſe of particular believers, and faithful ſouls, whoſe prayers and ſervices are like the ſweeteſt ſpices breathing an acceptable odour upon Chriſt, who redeemed them, and hedged them in as a garden unto his Father, Revel. 5. 8, 9. We may alſo obſerve here the readineſſe and willingneſſe of the Church to anſwer, and ſatiſfie them that aſk her of Chriſt; the manifeſtation of whoſe ſpirit was not given for her ſelf, but to profit withall, and for the uſe of edifying, 1 Cor. 12. 7.

to feed in the gardens, and to gather the lilies] It was but one garden before, but now plural, ſhewing that the particular Churches are parts of the Catholique, and therefore one with her. For feed, ſome verſions have, delight himſelf, and ſo the word is uſed both by the Greek and Latine Authors; paſcere oculos, and paſcere animum, are the ſame with oblectare; and ſo Chriſt feedeth that is, greatly delighteth himſelf to behold and conſider the beauty and order of his Church; as men take pleaſure in their moſt elaborate and well-kept gardens, which are places of greateſt delight in ſeveral reſpects: And therefore the Church is compared ſo oft to Eden, the chiefeſt of all gardens, Ezek. 36. 35. Eſay 51. 3. In which latter Scripture, the vulgar Latine, for Eden, reads quaſi delicias; as delights: becauſe Eden was the ſeat of trueſt delight, as ſome criticks have conjectured, the Greeks eſpecially intended in the word ἡδονὴ, which ſounds like Eden, and is thought to be derived from it. The collection or gathering of Lilies, may either be expounded of the graces and obedience of the Church which Chriſt both plants in them and gathers (that is accepts) from them; or elſe it may be underſtood perſonally, of holy believers themſelves, who are called Lilies, as Chriſt is called the Roſe or the Flower, chap. 2. 1, 2. and, from their ſeveral beds and ſtalks where they grow diſperſed, are collected and united by him into one myſtical aſſociation of Faith and Charity, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and Nation. Joh. 11. 52. & Rev. 5. 9.

V. 3. I and my beloved, &c.] Or, to my beloved, as the vulgar Latin, or of my beloved; which are all the ſame, as was noted before, Chap. 2. 16. where we had this whole verſe onely a little tranſverted; The repetition whereof cannot be blamed, nor ſhe for it, being ſo full of love, devotion, joy and wonder as both ſhe is, and every ſoul muſt needs be firſt, that can affirm ſo much reſolution, and conſtancy towards Chriſt: For the order is not to be neglected, that firſt ſhe is choſen to be his, and then this cheriſheth and ſtrengthens her faith and love towards him; ſo that being joyned to him ſhe becomes one ſpirit with him 1 Cor. 6. 17. and boaſteth her ſelf to be onely his, as David does, Pſal. 119. 94. which is a rare and ſingular priviledge of the Saints of God, and though it appear an eaſie and common thing to ſay, yet can truly be ſpoken by none, but thoſe that have the ſpirit of God. Facilis vox & communis videtur, ſed paucorum eſt: ſatis rarus eſt enim, qui poteſt dicere Deo, tuus ſum, &c.

V. 4. Thou art beautiful O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jeruſalem] Upon this profeſſion and agnition of the Church, Chriſt is pleaſed to renew his praiſes and conſolations; comparing her firſt, to Tirzah, as our tranſlations render it, far better than the vulgar Latine, who both leave out the particle of ſimilitude, As, which anſwers to the ſervile letter כ that is prefixt, and alſo inſtead of Tirzah read ſuavis, that is ſweet, or well-pleaſing; which verſion is confeſſed by themſelves to be both corrupt and obſcure, and therefore not ſo proper as the proper name Tirzah; which was a City not only famous for her antiquity, being the ſeat of Kings before Joſhuahs time, Joſh. 12. 24. but likewiſe for the pleaſant ſcituation and dignity of it, which made her the Ἀκρόπολις or royal chamber of Jeroboam, whoſe court was there, 1 King. 14. 17. and of Baaſha, chap. 15. 33. and of Elah, verſe 8. down even to the rebel Zimri who deſperately burnt the Kings houſe there, and periſhed, as a rebel deſerved, in the ſame conflagration with it, ver. 15. after whom, Omri having no houſe left at Tirzah, bought an hill of one Shemer, on which he built a city, and called it after the firſt owners name, Samaria, where he reigned and was buried; and his ſon Ahab and his poſterity after him, ver. 23. 24, &c. Secondly, ſhe is compared to Ieruſalem, which was the metropolis of the whole Kingdom of Iudea, and though not ſo ſweet and delicate for her ſcituation, as Tirzah was, yet it is ſaid to be comely or deſireable; and ſo not onely Pliny, Strabo, and other prophane writers teſtifie; but more fully and truly the holy Scripture in many places, Pſal.48. & 87. & 122. & 132. & Lam. 2. 15, 16. where the direful ruines and devaſtation of it are augmented from the ancient pomp, and glory; which made her once the ſtar and light of all the Eaſtern world, and more glorious than all the cities thereof; but yet not ſo glorious nor comely, as the new Jeruſalem, whereof ſhe was but a ſhadow, and figure.

terrible as an army with banners] Or admirable, or an admiration (the ſubſtantive by a little change of the points being put for the adjective) or a terrour as an Army with banners, or ſet in order; This alluſion is applyed to the Church either in regard of her troubleſome ſtate and condition, whereof war is an elegant emblem: or elſe in regard of her order, and decent diſpoſition as to her outward government; which is not expreſſible by any thing better than this of Armies, wherein nothing is more requiſite than diſcipline and order; And therefore it is the moſt unreaſonable and ſtrangeſt paradox that can be, for ſouldiers to be enemies to the Church and her adminiſtrations: or laſtly, in reſpect of her authority and power, whereby as ſhe is pulchra hominibus and decora Deo, ſo is ſhe alſo Dæmonibus terribilis, dreadful to the Devil, and all her enemies; as Iſrael was in the wilderneſſe to all the nations Exod. 15. 14. & Deut. 2. 25. And how can ſhe be otherwiſe whoſe weapons are ſo mighty, 2 Cor. 10. 4. whoſe officers and ſouldiers are Angels, Martyrs, Apoſtles &c. whoſe order and rule is ſo prudent and ſafe; and whoſe Van and Rere is the Lord of hoſts, who maketh her inexpugnable, Eſay 52. 12. ſo that the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt her.

V. 5. Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me] This expreſſion is of the ſame nature with that, Chap. 4 9. and ſpoken by the ſame perſon, that is Chriſt; not by the Church, as ſome who conſider not the original Idiom would have them Some explications would render them as a reproof of her boldneſſe and curioſity in gazing upon Chriſt and his incomprehenſible nature too much: Tremelius is of a judgement clean contrary to theſe, for he reads them as a command, Turn thine eyes to me, that they may lift me up; as if Chriſt were comforted or glorified in the glory and comforts of his Church: But the moſt facile and general opinion is, that they are a moſt elegant (and indeed poetical) expreſſion of abundant, ardent love, uttered by Chriſt as by one wounded and overcome in battel, by the darts of his enemy. We read of Ahab when ſhot in fight, he cryed to the driver of his Chariot, Turn thy hand, &c. 1 King 22. 34 So doth Chriſt ſeem here to complain of an over-much duty and obedience in his Church, whoſe eyes religiouſly fixed on him, did ſo much delight him, that he was almoſt raviſht and vanquiſht by them; and forced (as the vulgar Latine) even to flye away either from them, or from himſelf; as men uſe to do in violent trances and paſſions: and as he was thought to have done once for our ſakes Mark 3. 21 which yet were not violent, that is, neceſſary or coactive to him, but moſt free and voluntary, not ſinfull as in us often; but moſt innocent and blameleſſe: And therefore that charity and caution of theirs was too ſuperſtitious and needleſſe, who fearing to reproach the wiſdom or vertue of Chriſt, denyed any of thoſe humane commotions in him, as if like the Stoicks he had been ſenſeleſſe and impaſſible: For which cauſe ſome of them (and they very orthodox and catholick in other things) expunged and left out the word ἔκλαυσε, Luke 19. 41. and that relation of his agony, Luke 22. 43 as if diſhonourable to him, whileſt indeed they were both moſt congruous and ſuitable to his humiliation, and alſo full of comfort rather, than offence to us, for ſo the verity and truth of his humane nature was atteſted and confirmed; According to that excellent rule of Saint Jeroms in this point; Cogita aſſumpti hominis veritatem, & omni carebis ſcandalo, &c.

thy hair is as a flock of goats, that appear from Gilead] This ſimilitude we had, with very little difference before; which repetition and the reſt that follow, proceed not from any barrenneſſe or deficiency either in the matter, or Authour; but of meer deſign are uſed to ſet forth the great riches of his love and goodneſſe, who even after her foul lapſes and defections, is yet pleaſed to paſſe an ἀμνεστία an Act of Oblivion, and to praiſe and honour his poor militant Church, as much as if ſhe were wholly and abſolutely glorious.

V. 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of ſheep, &c] There is onely the word ſheep added expreſſely here, which was ſupplyed before, and that is all the diverſity that we find in our common tranſlations. Indeed, they ſay, that the Arabick makes up all the reſt of the compariſon, and inſerts it here, which is without any authority from the Original.

V. 7. As a piece of a pomegranate, &c.] Or as the crown, for the pomegranate hath a kind of broad crown on the top of its ſkin, which made it of old the Embleme of Majeſty, and dedicated to Juno, whoſe ſtatue at Mycenæ (as Pauſan in Corinth) held in one hand a Scepter, and in the other a Pomegranate. Such majeſty and authority hath the Church conferred on her, and they that will not hear her and obey her, and fear her cenſures, are no better than Heathens and Publicanes: But of this alſo with the reſt above.

V. 8, There are threeſcore Queens, and fourſcore concubines] Or as ſome read, by way of conceſſion or ſuppoſition, Be there, or let there be, never ſo many (a certain number being put for uncertain) Queens and concubines. It is the promiſe of the Lord, that his Church ſhall have Queens, to be her Nurſes, Eſay 49. 23. This promiſe is plain and evident, both in the Prophecy and the event; but what theſe Queens and concubines here ſhould mean, is not ſo quickly underſtood: The word for concubine in the Hebrew is etymologized wittily by ſome, from two other words of that Language, which put together, ſignifie that which the Greeks call ἡμιγαμος, ſome old Latine inſcriptions vice conjux, and we may preſume to Engliſh, an half-wife; becauſe they wanted many of thoſe priviledges and honours which did belong to them that were the true and lawful wives: as, 1. They had no dowries as the other commonly had, eſpecially among the Heathen. Secondly, they had no publick rites or ſolemnites uſed at their entertainment, but only were received by mutual conſent and uſe (and therefore called Uſuariæ) into the bed, which yet it was death for them to defile. 3. They had no inheritance, nor their children, but only gifts and portions (for that caſe of Jacobs ſons (by his concubines) was of an extraordinary nature and diſpenſation.) 4. They had no rule nor authority in the family, but rather were to honour and reverence the chief and true wife upon all occaſions, as we read of Hagar, Gen. 16. 9. and Pſal. 45. 14. which was the reaſon why thoſe high and great Queens of Perſia and other countries ſuffered them ſo patiently of old: Διὰ τὸ τὴν βασιλίδα ὑπὸ τῶν παλλακίδων θρησκεύεσθαι, προσκυνεῖσθαι γοῦν αὐτήν. So they were a kind of ſecondary wives, and are thought by ſome to ſignifie Chriſtians of a middle ſtation or degree; ſuch as they call proficientes, that are got a pretty way on their journey, but not ſo far as to be ſtiled perfect, yet, as the Queens named before are conceived to be.

and virgins without number] Or innumerable as ſome, as the the phraſe is uſed, Job 21. 33. and other places. or as others, of no number; that is inconſiderable, and not to be eſteemed. But this latter ſenſe is harſh, and irrational, for which leſſe probability than for the former, though that be ſo dark too, that we dare not aſpire at any thing more than meer conjectures; which are various, for ſome as I ſaid, would have the Babes, and Inceptors in Religion (which are many) to be meant by Virgins; by concubines the lower Graduates and proficients, (which are far leſſe) and by Queens (which are the feweſt of all) as perfect things uſe to be rareſt) thoſe that have gained maturity and perfection: Others by Queens underſtand thoſe Chriſtians that be received into open covenant with God, by concubines the Gentiles, who had no more than reaſon, or ſecret workings of inward grace, without any publick teſſeration or profeſſion; And by Virgins, the infants of both, that died before any outward expreſſion, or ſignature of faith, or Religion. Again, by Queens ſome will have true Beleevers to be ſignified, by concubines hypocrites, and by virgins (which is a ſtrange alluſion) prophane perſons. And once more, under theſe three, ſome conſider thoſe three diſtinctions and ſquadrons of outward profeſſors, Eccleſiaſtici, Laici, Catechumeni. But I am weary of theſe uncertainties, and leave the Reader to abound in his own ſenſe, wherein let me adde, nothing can be a ſurer guide and conduct to him, than to go on, and read this verſe with the next.

V. 9. My dove, my undefiled is but one] Some read, That my dove, my undefiled, or perfect is one: The learned Grotius would have the But, prefixt, or as he ſayes, added, thus; But my dove, &c. And ſo if you read them, and make the former verſe, the πρότασις of a compariſon, or conceſſion (as I called it) which is finiſhed in this verſe. then the ſenſe will run clear and ſmoothly thus. Let there be never ſo great a number, never ſo many Queens, and Concubines, and Virgins of other Aſſemblies. Let them boaſt of ſcores, and hundreds, and innumerable flocks, and multitudes of their religion, and perſwaſion; yet my Dove, my undefiled which is but one (equals ſaid I? nay) exceeds them all. Or, 2. Though you ſee, as I grant you may, many ſeveral ſorts and conditions of Churches which profeſſe my Name, whereof ſome are both more numerous, and more glorious than others, yet they all make but one Dove, one Undefiled, one Catholick Church to me: They are ſeveral congregations, and various forms and numbers, and outward profeſſions they may have, but yet they all make but one Undefiled, or perfect Dove; As Sarah was the onely wife of Abraham, and no other, ſo the Church is married to Chriſt her Lord, and is but one as he is, though united out of ſeveral pieces by his Spirit, which is one alſo, Epheſ. 4. verſe 5, 6. which oneneſſe or unity every true member of the Church will ſtrive to preſerve; elſe, if he forſake her and ſeparate from her communion, let him pretend what he will to the contrary, the Apoſtle concludes him to be ſenſual, and without the Spirit of God, Jude v. 19. Of which pride they are no leſſe guilty, that being but parts and members, will yet needs be called univerſal, and rule as Queens, and heads of all.

ſhe is the onely one of her mother, ſhe is the choice of one of her that bare her] Or ſhe is as the onely one, &c. and as the beloved, or as the pure one, or onely (that is tenderly) beloved; for ſo ἐκλεκτὸς, Eſay 42, 1 is explained by ἀγαπητὸς, Matth. 12. 18. What the love of mothers is nature teacheth as well as Scripture, 2 Sam. 1. 26. Prov. 4. 3. but who this mother here mentioned ſhould be, is not eaſily found out, ſome ſay Chriſt, others the Spirit of God, others, Jeruſalem, who is called ſo in the Spiritual notion, Galat 4. 26. Therefore, (as I ſaid) doe but ſupply the note of compariſon, which is often omitted in the Hebrew, for greater Elegancy, and then all will be manifeſt: Namely, that the Church is dear unto Chriſt, as the onely childe is unto a tender Mother that bare it. There is no people, nor nation ſo dear unto God, as his own people, Exodus, 19. 5. 2 Samuel 7. 23. and Pſalm 147. 20. Nay, mothers may ſooner forget their onely infant, than he will forget her, Eſay 49. 11. Tantum chara ſibi, quantum nec filia matri. One thing more is noted here from the term una, or unica, rather, that the Chuerh as ſhe is but one, ſo ſhe is the onely One in whoſe boſome her parts and members can hope to be found accepted and beloved; therefore not to be deſpiſed, devoured, hated by any, that wait for ſalvation. Quia extra hanc quam dicimus Eccleſiam nemo ad perfectionem, nemo ad vitam niſi per hanc ſolum gratiâ fovente nutritur.

the daughters ſaw her and bleſſed her, yea the Queens and the Concubines and they prayſed her] The word for daughters, notes ſometimes the ſex onely, Prov. 31. 29 ſometimes the relation, Gen. 24. 47. ſometimes the age, Pſalm 106. 37. but here all theſe notions (the condition eſpecially, or quality) may ſeem intended, whileſt under the names of Daughters, and Queens, and Concubines, the Converſion, Adoption, and Benediction of all the reduced Nations is comprized, who are foretold to confeſſe and admire the Glories of the Church, Deutero. 4. 6. to account her happy and renowned, Ezekiel 16. 14. and ſo indeed they did, Acts 5. 13. as Moſes did Iſrael, Deut. 33. 29. though at that time under great miſery and uncertainty, if we compare her ſtate with other Nations, that were about her. In outward and temporall reſpects ſhe was inferiour to them, but in this above them all, and to be eſteemed, and magnified for ſuch for ever, that ſhe hath the Lord for her God. Happy is ſhe, becauſe in ſuch a ſtate, though otherwiſe unhappy, Pſalm 144. 15. which ſhould encourage all to ſeek her communion, and condemns thoſe that doe not ſeek and praiſe her, but rather out of envie or faction reproach the Church of God.

V. 10. Who is ſhe that looketh forth as the morning] Or, that cometh forth, or that looketh from on high as the morning; The vulgar Latine addes conſurgens, as the riſing morning, but without any foundation in the Hebrew. The words are generally underſtood to be a Chorus of thoſe Queens and Virgins before, who not out of ignorance or doubt, but admiration and great reverence mention and extoll the Church, as they did Chriſt Mark 4. 41. which praiſe by ſome is applied to the calling and reſtitution of the Jewes that ſhall be in the time appointed, but is better conferred on the whole Church taken univerſally and intirely, who onely anſwereth all theſe expreſſions and ſimilitudes in her ſeveral ſtates and perfections; For firſt, ſhe opened like the morning, and diſplayed the Beames of life and ſalvation in a dimme, yet comfortable degree; and that even before the Law was given, when like the firſt light without the Sunne, ſhe had no other meanes of illumination, than what was darkely written in the heart by Nature and Reaſon.

fair as the Moon] This compariſon may ſeem to reſpect the Churches ſtate under the Law, which was brighter and fairer than before; yet, but as the Moon, which hath many ſpots and ſhadows and mutations.

clear as the Sun] The Evangelical Church is like the Sun riſen in glory, which ſhall never goe down. Eay. 6. 20. Her brightneſſe exceedeth all former manifeſtations, being viſited with the day-ſpring from on high and injoying the Sun of Righteouſneſſe that was promiſed. Eſay, 58. 8. and 60. 1, 2. Malach. 4. 7. with healing under his wings. This is to be underſtood of inward Glory, and Spirituall Light, not of outward proſperity and beauty; though even in this ſenſe allo ſhe may be ſaid to reſemble the Sun, which is not alwayes aſpectable, and radiant alike, but ſometimes overcaſt with clouds and obſcurity, and not ſo equally viſible and reſplendent to our ſight, though without any eſſentiall change in it ſelf.

terrible as an Army with Banners] Of this before, verſe 4. which yet here may very fitly receive another illuſtration: There it was interpreted of the preſent Order, Power and Beauty of the preſent Church; but in this place it may ſeem to goe higher, and to intend her future Glory and Majeſty, when ſhe ſhall not onely be like the Sun, Mat. 13. 43. and clothed with it; but even equal all the beauty and brightneſs as well of all the Stars of Heaven, which are called the Militia and Armies thereof, Deut. 17. 3. Judg. 5. 20. as likewiſe of the very Angels of God, who are his Hoſt, Luke 2. 13. and whoſe perfections ſhe ſhall then attain, and be like the Angels of God for evermore.

V. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts to ſee the fruits of the valley] Here Chriſt beginnes to ſpeak again, and declares his great care and diligence in viſiting and overſeeing his Church; Tremelius reads I went down into my dreſſed, or pruned garden; others, garden of nutmegs; Indeed the word is one of thoſe that are peculiar to this book, being found no where elſe in the Scriptures, and therefore doubtful and obſcure; But for certain we may conclude, that it ſignifies not any common or vulgar ſort of that fruit, but ſuch as was rare and precious; and ſo is worthy to figure the myſtical Paradiſe of Chriſt, which he is pleaſed to regard, and to take care of the growth and fruitfulneſſe of all her plants; a ſpecial word (but yet collective too, as almoſt all ſuch in the holy tongue) being put for a general. For fruits of the valleyes, ſome alſo read the Apples, or the greenneſſe of the ſtreams, which uſe to runne among the valleyes, and repreſent the fruitfulneſſe and propagation of the Church, wherein Chriſt delighteth, that he may eat of the labonr of his hands, who is the chief gardiner, and maſter of the orchyard, Mat. 21. 34.

to ſee whether the vine flouriſhed, and the pomegranates budded] For vines, the vulgar Latine read vineyard which is all one in ſubſtance, but differs from the letter which ſhould not willingly be deſerted. Nothing is more known, than that compariſon which is ſo frequent in holy Scripture of the Church and a vineyard; Pſal. 80. 8. Eſay 5. 1, 2, &c. which ſimilitude as it holdeth in many other proportions, ſo eſpecially in this, that as vines and vineyards are apt to grow wild and ruinous unleſſe continually dreſſed, and carefully kept; ſo is the Church apt to be infected and overgrown with all hurtfull errours and corruptions, unleſſe Chriſt watch over her, and ſend ſuch watchmen and labourers as will overſee and attend her. Now Chriſt is not ſaid to go down and viſit his garden, becauſe he is ignorant of her condition; no more then the Lord was ignorant of Sodomes wickedneſſe, when he ſaid he would go down and ſee whether it were ſo great, as the cry of it which was come up unto him, or no; Gen. 18. 21, But to remonſtrate firſt his own tender inſpections and ſolicitous vigilancy over them, and ſecondly, to ſhew how much it concerns us to look to our ſelves very circumſpectly, ſeeing the eye of Chriſt is upon us; and if any bring forth good fruit, he will help them to be more fruitful ſtill, John 15. 15. 2. but if they either bring forth none at all, or elſe that which is wild and degenerous, then he will cut down, nay extirpate them, and caſt them into the fire: which is dreadful, as the Ax is worſe than the knife, and to conſume more fearful than to purge. I ſhall not take notice here of that excreſcency which the LXX. and others adde to theſe vines and fruits, patching up this verſe with an aſſumentum of their own, (there will I give thee my breaſts) which hath no footing, nor colour in the original.

V. 12. Or ever I was aware] There is not greater darkneſſe and variation in all this divine Song, than we meet with in this verſe: Aynſworth, (who is none of the dulleſt) reads it brokenly; I knew not, after the vulgar Latine, and their Neſcivi: That of Tremelius, My ſoule ſet me as yet not perceiving theſe things, &c. I know not what to make of; nor methinks does he appear ſo clear and perſpicuous in it, as he doth in other things: we may complain of the like unſatisfaction and cloudineſſe in the reſt, and therefore ſhall not preſume to determine any thing in that, which ſo many learned and pious men have not agreed about: onely ſhall counſel the Reader to receive with due eſtimation the received reading of our Bibles, whoſe, or ever I was aware, anſwers all other conjectures, and excellently noteth the affectionate haſte and deſire wherewith Chriſt was carried on in a kind of inſenſible manner to reviſit his Church, and reſtore comforts to her: I know ſome put the words upon the Church, as a confeſſion of her former ignorance and negligence in obſerving his former appearances of Grace, and a proteſtation of her future zeal and care to ſeek him, in which ſhe will drive as ſwiftly as Aminadab, who is conceived by ſome to be one of Solomons chief maſters or grooms over his Chariots; by others miſtaken for Abinadab one of Davids brothers, 1 Sam. 17. 13. by others one of the Princes of the tribe of Judah, Ruth. 4. 19. who (as their tradition goes) when the reſt were afraid to enter the red Sea, boldly put forward himſelf, and encouraged the reſt to follow. But it is better to retain the ordinary and general application, whereby it is the oration, or at leaſt the hiſtory of Chriſt, and preſents either what he ſaid or did for his Church, or both.

my ſoul made me like the Chariots of Aminadab] Whether this Aminadab ſhould be read together as a proper name, or elſe cut in ſunder and tranſlated appellatively is not evident; Some would prefer this laſt, and reade, my ſoul put me into the Chariots of my willing, or munificent or principall or prepared people: or my ſoul troubled me for the Chariots, &c. or by reaſon of the Chariots, &c. which Chariots ſome would have onely the foure Evangeliſts, (quadriga Evangelii) others all the Miniſters and Prophets of the Lord, 2 Kings, 2. 12. who are chearfull and ready Chariots and Horſe-men: others, the Holy Angels, who are the willing and ſwift Embaſſadours of Heaven, Pſalm 103. 20, 21. There be another company (the LXX. Aquila and the Syr.) which preſent the firſt words in the third Perſon, he knew not; and then the following (almoſt like Tremelius his Impoſuit me) my ſoul hath placed me, &c. not without as much difference in the reſt. What ſhall we do? where fix and chuſe in this great variety? Whom ſhall we follow? It is uncertain and dangerous: But if I be worthy to direct, the better way is to follow the firſt and moſt generall Tranſlations, (for ſome of the later labour under a deſperate obſcurity) as we may obſerve to be done in that which we now uſe in our laſt Engliſh Editions; and then as I ſaid before, that pious and devout ſenſe will ſtraight wayes offer it ſelf, which was intimated in the laſt Annotation; Namely, that the whole phraſe preſents the ardent and longing zeal and deſire that Chriſt hath to behold the flouriſhings and propagations of his Church; which appears firſt, in that he is ſaid to come unawares; that is, not ignorantly, (for ſo Chriſt can doe nothing) but ſuddenly (for not to know is often expreſſed for a ſuddain, not an unknown act eſpecially, Eſay 47. 11.) and ſecondly, that his ſoul made him like the Chariots of Aminabab, that is, made him to haſten ſo, and ſo accelerate the returns of his favour, as if he had come on the ſwifteſt Chariots, For, as he is ſaid to come with his Chariots, like a whirle-winde to render vengeance on his enemies, Eſay, 66. 15. ſo will he be as expedite and as forward to ſave and preſerve his people, who in the ſame Chapter, verſe 20. he promiſeth to bring upon Horſes, and in Chariots, and Coaches (as the Margine there for litters) and upon ſwift beaſts to his Holy mountain Jeruſalem. Now that this vehemency and paſſion which Chriſt here expreſſeth, was not any irregular, nor inconſiderate blinde perturbation, but a free and prudent act, appears by that which he ſaith, His Soul made him; that is, he made himſelf; for, my ſoul, is uſed in the Hebrew Idiom for, I my ſelf, as Gen. 27. 25. and 31. which ſhewes that thoſe affections were not ſo in him as they are in other men, blinde and precipitate; but ſubject alwayes to Reaſon and Grace, ſo that he ordered the reins of them at his owne pleaſure, and was not troubled by them at any time, but rather troubled himſelfe, as the Margine of our newer new Teſtaments beſt rendereth that of John 11. 33. It would be happy for us, if we could doe ſo too, and ſet over the Charets of our ſouls, not that raſh inordinate Phaeton, our own luſt, but Reaſon and Faith: Si anima currus eſt vide ne equus caro ſit.

V. 13. Return, return O Shulamite, return, return, that we may looke upon thee] This earneſt Appellation hath as many ſeveral interpretations, as there be revocations in it: Some ſay they are the words of Chriſt recalling his Church from errour and diſorders, which is an happy returning indeed: Others will have the Churches of the Gentiles to invite and perſwade the Jewiſh Synagogue from her former worſhip and Adminiſtrations, to the Evangelical Covenant, that ſo both may be made one in that fulneſſe and union. A third ſort (and they moſt probably) will make it the earneſt Petition of their Friends and Virgins, that love the Church, wherein they beſeech her to take heed unto her ſelf, and if ſhe had been apt to be ſeduced and drawn aſide from her firſt love and purity, now to return ſpeedily, and conſtantly, that they may with joy look upon her; return to God, to her ſelf, to her own priſtine condition, and their hopes and prayers, that ſo they may have more reaſon to admire her, and rejoyce in her.

what will you ſee in the Shulamite?] For Shulamite, ſome reade Shunamite, but corruptly. The word ſignifies peaceable or perfect, and is the Fœminine of Solomon, the women being uſually called after their Husbands names, Eſay 4. 1. For, what will ye, the vulgar Latine read ſingularly, and againſt the Hebrew, What wilt thou ſee in the Shulamite, as if ſhe ſpake to Chriſt onely, or to ſome particular perſon. For the queſtion is not propoſed by another, but by her ſelf. In the Shulamite, that is, in me; this Tongue uſing the proper name often inſtead of the Pronoune; as Exodus 24. 1. and Job 1. 9. where Lord and God are in ſtead of Me, and Thee. The purpoſe and deſigne of the queſtion, is not onely by the Elegancy of it, to delight and winne the Reader; but alſo the more to occaſion, and advance the Beauties of the Church; which ſhe ſeemeth humbly to deny, and refuſe, as if nothing in her worthie to be conſidered, or ſeen, but ſo provoketh and deſerveth the more.

as it were the company of two Armies] So we Engliſh it as a diſtinct and entire Anſwer; but the Vulgar Latine hath, unleſſe the companies of Armies; joyning the queſtion, and the reply together, which is all one: For companies, ſome read dances, (but thoſe Martial, ſuch as the Pyrrhick) or Marches; and for Armies. Tremelius retains the proper name, Mahanaim, (which you may finde waiting on the Text in our Margins) which is applied either to the happy condition of Davids Army there, 2 Samuel, 17. 27. or to that more happy Hoſt of Angels, which were ſent to meet Jacob when he returned out of his long ſervitude, Geneſis 32. 1, 2. in which notion the words have a good and comfortable ſenſe, and ſignifie either the awfull Majeſty and grace of the Church, which is like that of a well diſciplined Army; or elſe the happy Union and Reconciliation of the two Churches (Jew and Gentile) which like two Armies joyned together, do with mutual conſent and thankfulneſſe ſing to God prayſes, and ſongs of victory, going forth in the dances of them that make merry, as is promiſed, Jeremiah, 31. 4. and more particularly, Revelation 5. 9. and 7. 10. and 19. 6. but there be others that conceive the Church would rather depreſſe, and humble her ſelf here, than any way to ſeem to boaſt; and theſe refer this ſimilitude either to the ſpiritual luſtings and conflicts of the fleſh and ſpirit, which are like Eſau and Jacob, or (as the Text) like two Armies fighting in the Church: Or elſe to thoſe many perſecutions and afflictions to which ſhe is expoſed, which make her unfit to be looked upon, or deſired: And this is the ſenſe of that Learned man, Grotius. Negat ſe velle inſpectari; Neque enim hoc ſpectaculum ſuavius fore, quàm cruenti exercitus. And another good Auther, Chorus caſtrorum; that is, cunctorum, adverſitatum hoſtilium pugnus & Phalanges.

CHAP. VII.

IN this part of the Song, Chriſt beginneth new prayſes of the Church, in a new Order; running over every grace and ornament in her, from the loweſt to the higheſt: To which ſhe returns thankfull and glad acclamations, and profeſſions; devoting her ſelf by new Covenants and vowes to her Beloved, whom ſhe inviteth to her Aſſemblies, and promiſeth to offer all her beſt Fruits wholly to him, for whom alone ſhe had brought them forth, and by whoſe bleſſing, ſhe flouriſhed with all manner of them, both new and old.

Verſe 1. H*Ow beautifull are thy feet with ſhooes, O Princes daughter!*] The firſt thing that deſerves to be obſerved here, is the Title, or Style, which we found not uſed in this Song before: Some read obſcurely, the daughter of Nadab; (as the LXX. Syr. Arab.) but the moſt either Kings, or Princes daughters; or fuller than that, Bounteous Princes daughter, (for that is one glorious Attribute of Princes, Luke 22. 25.) to which our Engliſh Bookes prefixe a vitall Interjection, which is not done by way of queſtion, or examination, but of admiration and wonder; befitting both her quality, who is the daughter and heir of the great King of Kings, Pſalm 45. 13. and 89. 27. and likewiſe her wonderfull Beauty, and perfection, the prayſe whereof he rayſeth from her loweſt part firſt; and from that gives a full delineation of all the reſt. Inſteed of feet, ſome read ſteps, or goings in ſhooes, which is no great difference, for the ſame thing is intended by all: And that is, to demonſtrate, either; 1. Her deliverance from captivity and perſecution, under which ſad yoak all that lay, uſed no ſhooes, but went bare-foot, (mero pede, in Juven.) as an expreſſion of their mourning; which appears by ſeveral Teſtimonies, both of Divine and Humane writings, Ezekiel. 24. 15. 2 Samuel, 15. 30. Eſaiah, 20. 4. Lamentations, 1. 9. Micah, 1. 8. &c. Or 2. Her reſtitution to her former Inheritance and Poſſeſſion, Deuteronomy, 25. 9. Ruth 4. 7, 8. Or, 3. (which is the beſt) Her walking obediently and comfortably in the wayes of Holyneſſe, and that peace which the Goſpel hath prepared: The which that ſhe may doe Chriſt promiſeth to give her ſhooes: Ezekiel, 16. 10. and commands her to get her feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel, Epheſ. 6. 15. which will make them not onely beautiful, but ſtedfaſt. Rom. 10. 15. Galat. 1. 1. For theſe ſhooes doe not onely adorne her, but likewiſe defend and guard her feet ſo, that ſhee is able to tread upon the rougheſt and ſharpeſt trials, that may bee caſt in her way with boldneſſe and ſecuritie.

The joynts of thy thighes are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman] For joynts the LXX. have ῥυθμὸς, the numbers; and others, the model, forme, ſtructure, turnings, compaſſe, rotations of thy hyps, or thighes, and (under them) of all the lower parts of thy body are like jewels, &c. The word for jewels is found onely here, and ſprings from a root that ſignifies to boar, or inſert, or faſten, or link one thing into another, as skilful workmen do in their curious chaines and other jewels, and chiefly, as he who is the great Artiſt κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the omnipotent wiſe Creatour of man hath faſhioned and united his joynts and bones wonderfully together, which like wheels and compaſſes move and turn in their order, as hee hath appointed: Than which nothing can be a fitter ſymbol of the Church, which is the work of God too, Eſay 80. 21. whoſe body is fitly joyned together, and compacted by that which every joynt ſupplyeth, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks elegantly, Eph. 4. 16. and in whoſe praiſe nothing can be ſaid greater, than that ſhe is careful to preſerve and keep this decent compagination; nor a greater bleſſing deſired for her, than that ſhe may alwayes have her joynts and parts thus beautified, and ſtrengthened with truth, and peace. Which is the work of the ſame skilful hand that formed her at firſt. To make peace is the prerogative of the God of peace.

V. 2. Thy name is like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor] It is read as a prayer by ſome, let thy navel be like a round, or a turned cup, that may never want mixture, or plenty, or never fail the drinker. The radical word for navel ſignifies firm, or ſound; becauſe the navel upholds and knits together the liver, midrif, bladder, and other inwards, as a bridge does the ſtrings in an inſtrument, or as the center does all the lines of the whole circumference; It is called by Phyloſophers, Venarum nodus & coitus, centrum corporis, &c. and the rupture of it is alwayes deadly. Now the navel is not more tender, or beneficial in reſpect of the natural body, than it is in the myſtical, whoſe navel is expounded to be the laver of regeneration, that is, the Sacrament of Baptiſme; by which as plants by their roots, or children by the navel, ſo are all the members of the Church fed, and nouriſhed, even when they are ſo weak and feeble, that they cannot eat and feed of themſelves, but their whole life and ſuſtenance is conveyed by others unto them. It was the cuſtome of the Eaſtern Nations to infuſe balmes and other precious mixtures upon their navels, both for delight, and health; The wiſe man ſayes that the fear of the Lord exceedeth all thoſe Unctions; It is health to the navel, and marrow to the bones, Prov. 3. 8. And ſo is the grace exhibited and given in Baptiſme, which whoſoever receiveth, and improves as he ought, will find it a full goblet crowned with plenty and comfort; which will refreſh and heale every temptation: If tempted to ſin, and defile our ſelves, to remember we are waſhed here, will be an happy meanes to keep us clean ſtill; or if tempted with fear, and doubtful jealouſies that ſin is not pardoned, to remember the vertue of this waſhing, will purge all thoſe ſuſpicions, and give us an happy peace and aſſurance of remiſſion: For why are we baptized but unto the remiſſion of ſins, in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 2. 38. who never fails on his part to performe that vvhich he hath promiſed.

Thy belly is like an heap of wheat ſet about with lilies] Or let it bee ſtrengthened and intrenched round with flowers, or lilies. Here we have ſuch another metaphor, as the former was of Baptiſme, of the other Sacrament of the Lords Supper. Which like the belly is the ſtorehouſe of the Church, and ſupplies to every part according to its proportion, full meaſures of ſtrength and nouriſhment; but of which none are fit to partake but thoſe that are pure, and clean, and fruitful as flowers and lilies, not ſcandalous and prophane perſons, who are like ſtinking weeds. The Saints of the Churches are τὰ ἄνθη τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, her ſtars and flowers, vvhich deck her vvith beauty, and are onely worthy to encompaſſe her Altars, Pſal. 24. 3, 4, 5. and Pſal. 26 5, 6. I might adde here vvhat St. Bern. prettily and piouſly alludes to this, uterus virgineus acervus fuit tritici ex fœcunditate, vallatus tamen liliis ex virginitate: neque unquam triticum in ſpicam erumpens lilii integritatem violavit. Nec virgæ virorem floris læſit emiſſio, nec virginis pudorem ſacri partus editio. in St. Bern. homil. 2. ſup. Mi.

V. 3. Thy two breſts are like two young Roes that are twins] This ſimilitude was uſed in part before, Chapter, 4. 5. onely this here wants ſomething of that, which though not in the Hebrew, ſome Tranſlations have preſumed to adde. The two Teſtaments are theſe breſts, which are compared to Roes, or any other ſuch like creatures (for it is a generall word, and ſignifies all thoſe which are called θηρία τετράποδα) that are twins, and ſo moſt like one to another; as the holy Scriptures are, in which no diſproportion nor contradictions, but as Ovum ovo, as face anſwereth face, ſo do they agree, and harmonize one with another.

V. 4. Thy necke is as a Tower of Ivory] He had compared this part before to Davids tower, chapter, 4. 4. that was for the ſtrength of it; now he prayſeth the beauty and comelyneſſe of it, by reſembling it to towers of Ivory; which were of two ſorts, as the Naturaliſts tell us; either that which they called Foſſile, or elſe Elephantinum, the teeth of Elephants, which in ſome of thoſe creatures are wonderfully large, attaining to the length of nine or ten foot, and proportionable in thickneſs: So that we read of Ivory Palaces, Pſalm 45. 9. and Ahabs houſe of Ivory, 1 Kings 22. 39. and beds and houſes of Ivory, Amos 3. 15. and 6. 4. This was a magnificence and bravery which our Age and Times, though prodigal enough, cannot imitate; but it is onely worthy to be the Allegory of the ſpiritual pomp and freedom of the Church; whoſe neck delivered from the bondage of Idolatry and ſin, Heb. 2. 14, 15. and having that grievous yoak broken, Levit. 26. 13. is now more glorious, and pure, and ſtrong than towers of Ivory.

thine eyes are like the fiſh-pools in Heſhbon by the gate of Bathrabbim] Of Heſhbon we read often, Numb. 21. 6. and 32. 34 37. but ſome, that will not have it to be a proper name in this place, take it appellatively for any piece of rare Art or workmanſhip; ſuch as many times fountains, and ponds and fiſhpools are; chiefly among thoſe Nations, which called their ſprings, as well as other heavenly gifts, bleſſings, Judg. 1. 15. Therefore Tremel, reads Artificioſiſſimus inſtead of Heſhbon, and for the other Bathrabbim, he turns it, Portam frequentiſſimam, a gate moſt frequented; which other Verſions render the gate of the daughter of the multitude, or of the nobles; for none of which, ſeeing there is more authority than for that which we read properly and primitively as we find in the Hebrew, I ſee no cauſe for alteration; conſidering eſpecially that the main thing is anſwered by the one as fully, as by the other, and agreed upon by all; that is, the Analogy betwixt the eyes and pools, or fountains of water, which is ſo naturall, and they expreſſe both by one word in the holy Language; and as the one are pure, gentle, tranſparent, untroubled, clear, &c. ſo are the other as hath been noted before, chap. 4. 1.

Thy noſe is as the tower of Lebanon, which looketh toward Damaſcus] The tower of Lebanon, is moſt probably that which was built by Solomon, 1 King. 9. 17. and 2 Chron. 8. 6. and was as a Frontier garriſon upon the North of the holy land againſt the incurſions of the Syrians from Damaſcus, which, was their chief city, Eſay 7. 6. To this tower Solomon compares the noſe, or fore-head (as ſome) or face of the Church; which may well ſeem a ſtrange uncomely Metaphor to ſuch as conſider not the nature of this Poem which is Rural and Paſtoral: or elſe underſtand the compariſon of greatneſſe, or quantity, which they ought not, but rather of the uſe and office for which this Tower was built; which (as I ſaid) was to be a Garriſon, and a Watch-tower, or Becon to the reſt of Judea, upon any ſudden attempt of the Syrians againſt them: In which office not the Miniſters onely of the Church, ſhould like that Tower in their ſeveral Lebanons and Charges (for which cauſe the Pulpits are ſaid to be tovvers, Neh. 8. 4.) but likevviſe every Chriſtian, vvhom it concernes to be vvatchful and careful, both over themſelves, and the vvhole Church; and to that end to get this ſpiritual noſe vvhich is ſpoken of, and vvhich repreſents that excellent gift of proſpection and diſcerning, vvhich proceedeth from the Spirit of God, vvhereby they may be able to diſtinguiſh the precious from the vile; and by a kinde of ſagacity both to preapprehend dangers and injuries plotted againſt the Church, and prevent them.

V. 5. Thy head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thy head like purple] Upon thee, is left out by the vulgar Latine, vvho differ much from our Tranſlation in the follovving vvords; and ſome of them no leſſe in the ſenſe; for by Carmel, they vvould have that Order of Hermits (are they;) or Friars to be underſtood, vvhich they call from this hill Carmelites; inſtituted by Pope Honorius the fourth, in the year 1217. in imitation of Eliah and the Prophets vvho lived there. But this is deluſory; and as vain as theirs, who by this head vvould have the Pope, and the perpetual ſucceſſion of his chair to be meant by mount Carmel, and his Conclave of red hats by the purple haire. The moſt ſpirituall ſenſe is that vvhich expounds all of the higher and lower officers and governours of the Church, which under Chriſt are as lofty ſtout heads, and as purple precious hair unto her, both for defence and ornament: For as Carmel ſignifies dignity and ſtability, ſo doth Purple alſo, being double died, and of great eſtimation. The civil Magiſtrate may be called the head of the Church, and ſo her Carmel, and purple; not that he hath power (as a Magiſtrate) to preach the Word, or to diſpenſe holy Myſteries; but as by his Authority he may give free paſſage to the Goſpel, making wholeſome Lawes for the honour of it, and by his example adorn and countenance both it, and the lawful Miniſters of it, and ſo we are to underſtand of thoſe noble perſons that were commiſſionated by good Iehoſhaphat, and ſent abroad with the Levites to ſtrengthen and honour them in that godly work, 2 Chron. 17. 7, 8, 9.

the king is held in the Galleries] The vulgar Latine joyn this clauſe without any partition to the former, and labours to make ſomething of it, but with unhappy ſucceſs. None come ſo fully, and ſatisfyingly to the Text, and the underſtanding of both, as Tremelius, who makes it an intire, though abrupt ſentence, as our Engliſh doth; and to my apprehenſion hath a more ſolid and pious note upon theſe words, than any other part of this Book. I ſhall tranſcribe it for his ſake, and theirs who have not alwayes his larger Edition at hand: Nullus Rex (ſaith he) tantâ gloriâ praditus qui aſpectu tua iſtius gloria expleri poſſit; ſed confixus & ſtupens ad aſpectum ejus perpetuo videndi tui deſiderio tanquam vinctus teneretur, tanti gloriam tuam pra ſuâ & totius mundi gloria faceret. That is, briefly, The King (that is, my ſelf, for as I noted before concerning the Shulamite, the third Perſon is often uſed in this Language for the firſt) is ſo taken and captivated by thy beauty, that he delighteth to be held there perpetually, and would be alwayes a glad Spectator and companion thereof.

V. 6. How fair and how pleaſant art thou, O love, for delights!] Or, how fair art thou made (paſſively in the Hebrew) O my deareſt in thy delights! This Admiration is aſcribed by ſome to the Virgins and friends of the Church, extolling her happyneſſe in the Love of Chriſt: but there is no reaſon to break the ſpeech off here, which continues ſo many Verſes down ſtill, and agreeth ſo elegantly both with the former and following expreſsions.

V. 7. This thy ſtature is like to a Palm-tree] The vulgar Latine leaves out the Article, which is moſt plain and demonſtrative in the Original, and very ſerviceable in this place, where after a particular and diſtinct Character and elogy of the Church, Chriſt ſeems to revive her again, & breath out into new and more prayſes of her; comparing her whole height or ſtature, to the Palm-tree, which is one of the nobleſt and moſt famous of all the forreſt for many excellent properties: And ſo is the uſual Embleme and Symbol of conſtancy, Fruitfulneſſe, Patience, and Victory. The Prophet compareth his bleſſed man to the Palm-tree, Pſalm, 92. 12, 13. which the more it is oppreſſed, the more it flouriſheth; (Plures efficimur, quoties metimur:) the higher it groweth, the ſtronger and broader it is in the top,) deorſum ſtringitur Chriſtianus ſurſum dilatur) and therefore was given even among Heathens, to their Conquerours and Triumphers: Palmaque nobilis terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos: and is worne by the Saints in Glory, as ſignals of their happineſſe and ſalvation; Revelation, 7. 9, 10.

and thy breſts to cluſters of Grapes] The breſts are prayſed, again, as being parts of extraordinary Beautie, and benefit: So are the two Holy Teſtaments of Gods VVord, which are the breſts of conſolation, and as full of joy and peace as bunches of Grapes, or any other Fruit which groweth in the moſt numerous and faireſt cluſters.

V. 8. I ſaid I would goe up to the Palm-tree, I will take hold, &c.] To ſay, in the holy Idiom, is either to reſolve, or to promiſe any thing; both which Notions may be admitted here: for Chriſt did both Decree and Covenant, that he would goe up to the Palm-tree; that is, not aſcend the Croſſe (as ſome expound it,) and die upon that, which yet is a true and pious ſenſe; but goe up to the Throne of his Reſt, and thence over-ſee and comfort and protect his Church, which is called a Palm-tree (and ſo every member of her is alſo) in the Verſe next before, for ſeveral reaſons; and for this, which I ſhall adde among the reſt, that it hath no branches nor boughes on the ſides, or on the body, but all grow together on the very top: wherein the Church of God ſhould be like that tree, having all the branches exalted from the world, and collected into one united company, who without any ſtraglings or dividings, ſhould aſpire towards Heaven, and begin their converſation there even upon earth; for then will Chriſt take hold of her boughes, or tops (for ſo the Hebrew word, which is peculiar to this place, and found no where elſe in Scripture, ſignifies) that is, will both dreſſe them, as the carefull Gardiner purgeth his Trees, and likewiſe preſerve and keep them, that all their Fruits may be gathered, and none deſtroyed.

Now alſo the breſts ſhall be as the cluſters of the Vine,] Or, now alſo let thy breſts, as if it were a wiſh or prayer, rather than a promiſe; but both import the ſame thing, and the benediction of Chriſt alwayes goeth along with his promiſe: The vulgar Latine omitteth the Adverb Now, becauſe (ſaith a Jeſuite) it is only expletive, and of no great moment No? is it not of that God hath ſpoken? I ſhould think every ſyllable and letter important that his hand hath written: And ſo, for all him, is this, which expreſſeth the ſucceſs and order of Divine bleſsings. Firſt, Chriſt vouchſafeth to goe up and viſite, and then the Church becometh more fruitfull and more pleaſant than ever: His eye and aſpect healeth her barrenneſſe, and maketh her withered and emptie breaſts, like the ſwollen cluſters of the Vine, full and bigge, and amiable; ſo that they ſhall abound with comforts, and make her that ſhe ſhall neither be barren nor deſolate any longer, 2 Pet. 1 8.

and the ſmell of the Noſe like Apples] Or of thy mouth, and countenance; which are the Engliſh of the ſame word that is uſed here, Geneſis 2. 7. and 3. 19. and ſignifie the redolency and fragrancy of their names, and memory that ſhall watch over and attend the Flock of Chriſt, whoſe fame ſhall ſpread abroad and be diſperſed, even as the ſweeteſt Apples, or other aromaticall Fruits (which the Greek Poets call ἡδύπνοα,) that have the moſt delightfull breath or ſmell.

V. 9. And the roof of thy mouth like the beſt Wine] Or, thy throat, or palate, is like the beſt VVine, or VVine of the beſt Odour, as Tremel. The wicked breathe poyſon from their mouthes, and their Grapes are Grapes of gall, not of goodneſſe, Deuteronomy, 32. 32. but the whole communication and ſpeech of Sion, is gracious and healthfull; like generous VVine which reviveth and glads the heart, both for the guſt and taſte of it, which is Heavenly and Gracious, fit for the uſe of edifying: and alſo for the ſmell and odour, which is not contagious and loathſome, but full of delight and pleaſure, as proceeding not from rotten and corrupt Lungs, but from a ſound, and ſanctified heart.

for my Beloved, which goeth down ſweetly] This is a rough and intricate place, wherein few Tranſlations agree: The vulgar Latine differs wholly from ours; and Tremelius no leſſe. The former reads, VVorthy my Beloved to drinke; the latter, moving its ſelf moſt rightly and lovingly. VVhereof a late Jeſuite paſſeth his cenſure thus, Mihi videtur ab illo ſine lege & ſine exemplo factum audaciſſime. But by his leave, not ſo audaciouſly and ſingularly as they, who though they confeſſe our Verſion and his (in part) to come neerer the firſt and proper notion of the words, yet diſdain to correct and alter theirs, but will retain their inveterate corruptions againſt the very light it ſelf: The beſt is, in the ſenſe and matter they diſagree not ſo much, for all agree with us, that the vertue and efficacy of the VVord of God preached and taught is here intended, which is like excellent Wine acceptable to Chriſt, and which moveth and worketh ſtrongly in the hearts of them that receive it; As VVine which is a creature full of life and ſpirits, ſparkleth and danceth in the glaſſe, Prov. 23. 31. eſpecially when men ponder it ſeriouſly, and meditate upon it, and digeſt it, as follows in the next words.

cauſing the lips of thoſe that are aſleep to ſpeak] This is an hyperbolicall expreſſion, which highly, but truely would deliver the power and vigour of the Goſpel; chiefly when it ſinks into the heart, and is there warmed and cheriſhed by holy and devout Meditation; then like good Wine it will declare its vertue and excite even thoſe that were aſleep before, to utter the great things of God. The Wiſe man tells us that they are talkative, and apt to babble, that are given to Wine, Proverbs, 23. 29, 30. And therefore they miſ-judge the Apoſtles to be full of Wine, when they ſpake as the Spirit gave them utterance, Acts 2. 4. 11, &c. Fœcundi calices quem non, &c. This is no praiſe, but a great crime and miſchief: but ſpiritually taken, it is a Vertue, and an happyneſſe: men ſhould not delight in the ſight or ſipping of much Wine; It argues a voluptuous, ous, ſenſual ſoul to ſmack, and try it in the mouth, or keep it upon the tongue and palate: but the VVord of God we ſhould roll, and ponder, and(like the cleaner beaſts) chew the cud after it, for this will make us grow and increaſe the better. Where the heart indites good matters, the tongue will be the pen of a ready VVriter; nor can that ſoul which hath taſted of the power of the good VVord of God and the World to come, forbear to declare and ſpeak of it to all the World. VVe cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard, ſaid they, Acts 4. 20. So it is impoſſible for any to be ſilent, that have felt this power moving and inſpiring them. Dum poſt auditam verba ad memoriam revocant, dum audita quaque exercitatione aſſidua cogitant quæ ſumpſerint; quanta ſit Virtus cibi quem comederunt, ſentiunt, nec tacere poſſunt, nec celare valent.

V. 10. I am my beloveds, and his deſire is towards me] No difference at all in Tranſlations about the former Clauſe, which we have had ſeverall times before; but the latter is read diverſely; Tremelius for And reads quandoquidem, ſeeing that his deſire; making this the evidence and proofe of that, as indeed it is: For Deſire, the vulgar Latine, reads Converſion, or return, which is all one in effect, for as we avert and fly from that we hate, ſo doe we return, and ſeek that which we deſire: The phraſe hath a double ſignification, as may appeare from Geneſis 3. 16. and 4. 7. in which places it ſignifies either dependence, and ſubjection, or elſe great love and affection; both which, the Church (whoſe words theſe are) had found very richly abounding in Chriſt: For the ſecond, no queſtion can be made of it, and though the other may be doubtfull, and indeed cannot he aſcribed to Chriſt, as he is the Head of the Church, for ſo he haah preheminence over all, and cannot be ſaid to be ſubject, or to depend; yet as he is her Beloved, and Husband, he may without any diſparagement be ſaid to have his deſire (that is to be ſubject) unto her; loving Husbands will be ruled by their dear VVives, and will deny them nothing that is fit: It is ſaid of Livia, that by her ſweetneſſe and dutifulneſſe to him, ſhe commanded Auguſtus Cæſar, the great Emperour of the World: So doe not we finde that Chriſt is ſaid to wait upon his people, Eſay 30. 18. and doeth not he give her leave to command him, Eſay 45. 11? When they are ſubject and obedient to his Scepter, they gain more Honour than they can give; parendo imperant; by kiſſing the ſonne, they doe even command him, and make him theirs; And therefore it is meet that they ſhould be his, and neither their owne nor any others, when he is ſo intirely and ſpecially kinde in all his deſires to them. The Church had reaſon to doubt of his goodneſſe before; but now that Chriſt had ſo graciouſly diſcovered himſelf, and his love towards her, ſhe had ſtronger reaſon both to believe and to honour him; now ſhe felt and found his affections to be greater than her deſerts; and above all her fears; ſhe had been negligent, inconſtant, forgetfull of him; but now that he hath awakened, reduced, pardoned, her, and done ſo great things for her, whoſe, can ſhe be but his? upon whom ſhould her heart be fixed? upon whom ſhould ſhe caſt her thoughts and her duty but onely on him, whom ſhe vowes not onely to love, and feare, and believe, but even to die for him, as he did for her.

V, 11. Come my Beloved, let us goe forth into the field] She inviteth her deareſt to walke abroad with her, and to accompany her in all her wayes: That his ſpirit and care may joyne together, and proſper hers for the good of all the Churches: The field at large is the VVorld, Matthew, 13. 38. into which field, Chriſt hath ſent his labourers to doe his worke, that ſo it may become his Church, ut fiat ager Virtutum qui prius fuerat veprium & ſpinarum; of this field, even great and populous Cities are a part, but yet Chriſt is not confined to them, but viſiteth all places; and many times none ſo willing to entertaine him, none ſo fit and likely to finde him, as the fields and deſerts: according to that of S. Jerome, Mihi oppidum carcer eſt, ſolitudo paradiſus.

let us lodge in the Villages] Or ſtay, or ſojourn, or reſt all night in the Villages, the Root whence the word for Villages, Springs, is כפר which ſignifieth to cover, and ſo tecta in the Latines from tegere, becauſe at firſt Villages were onely (like our Hovels) places covered over head to ſhelter the Cattel and their keepers from the injuries of weather; the uſual habitations being in fenced Towns and Cities. Yet even to theſe poor mean places did the Church extend, and converted thoſe Pagans (as they were called from πάγος, a Village) to become Citizens of the new Jeruſalem. Such is the condeſcention and goodneſſe of Chriſt, that he diſdaineth not the ſimpleſt, meaneſt Cottages; and ſuch is the high priviledge of thoſe that are dull, and poor and ignorant by Nature, to be made in him, rich and wiſe and bleſſed. The Beaſts of the field ſhall honour me, the Dragons and the Owles, becauſe I gave water in the wilderneſſe, and rivers in the Deſerts to give drinke to my people, my choſen, Eſay, 43. 19, 20, 21, 22.

V. 12. Let us get up early to the Vineyard, let us ſee if the Vine flouriſheth] The Church had ſlept before, and ſuffered for it; Chapter, 5. 6, 7. by which ſad experience ſhe is grown ſo carefull and circumſpect that now ſhe ſtrives to awaken and incite others, to a ſpeedy and timely watchfulneſſe, and diligence: Than which nothing can be, either more anſwerable to the never-ſlumbering goodneſs of the Lord, who viſiteth her early and late, 2 Chronicles, 36. 15. Ieremiah, 25. 34. or to the beſt examples of the Saints in Holy Scripture: How early did the Pious VVomen riſe to goe to the Sepulcher, whoſe reſtleſs love is recorded by all the Evangeliſts? and how carefull was Saint Paul, Saint Peter, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, in viſiting and feeding the Churches, whoſe care lay continually upon their ſhoulders, and they loſt no opportunitie of attendance and edification; Acts, 15. 36. and 20 28.

whether the tender Grape appear, and the Pomegranate bud forth] By theſe tender or firſt Grapes, and Pomegranates, we may underſtand all particular ſorts and kinds of Chriſtians, both weake and ſtrong, of whom the Church hath a ſpeciall care, that they may not be diſcouraged, but ſtrengthned in Grace: Many are feeble and weak at firſt, ſo that it can hardly be diſcovered whether they have Faith or no; theſe ſhould be cheriſhed and conſidered, that no cold blaſts nip their growth, but that they may ripen and increaſe from ſtrength to ſtrength, untill their Buddes become perfect Fruites, and their Bloſſomes, a compleate Harveſt.

there will I give thee my loves] The vulgar Latine hath ſtill the old errour (my breſts) as frequently before; but let us pardon that which is but verbal, ſeeing they conſent with us in the reality and ſignification; which the chiefeſt admirers of that Verſion reduce unto ours, reading theſe words, and thoſe following as the Churches free and thankfull proteſtation; that ſhe will detain nothing that is hers from the ſervice and love of Chriſt, but reſign all unto him, who is worthy alone to enjoy all. For There, ſome tranſlate Then; but that is no difference; for theſe two Adverbs are uſed promiſcuouſly in all Languages, where every one knows that Interea loci, and dictum in loco, and ſuch like, doe not ſo much expreſſe any place, or ubi; as they doe ſeaſons and times.

V. 13. The mandrakes give a ſmell] The word for mandrakes is hard and uncertain in the Hebrew, being not found in the Bible except in this place, and that of Geneſis 30. 14. To which the Chriſtian Reader will doe well, to look back and conſult with the Annotations and Comments on it for better ſatisfaction. If they were flowers, or ſome other pleaſant kind of herbs, or fruits, (as is probable) nothing could be a more proper and genuine Metaphor to expreſſe that which is generally intended in this Song, wherein the wiſe Compoſer rifles and plucks all the rarities of Nature, to deſcribe his ſacred, and ſupernatural myſteries, to which the whole creation is not enough to bee an Allegory. How many of the chiefeſt pieces of that rare treaſure hath he mentioned before? and leſt any that is ſtrange and wonderful ſhould be omitted, now this of Mandrakes is added; Such is the matchleſſe riches, and ſweetneſſe of the ſubject of this Poem, to which all the ſtorehouſe of the whole world from both her ſpheres contributes, and yet all is not ſufficient: But Mandrakes are no leſſe myſterious and unknown than the Parable it ſelf, and therefore it will bee beſt to ſpare long diſquiſition and diſputes about them, this being enough to reſt upon, that if their naturee and vertue be ſuch as it is reported by the learned, and theſe are that powerfull Mandragora of which the Greek herbaliſts and others write ſo much, whoſe great effects are love, and fruitfulneſſe, and ſleep; then it is evident, that they are moſt apt ſymbols and figures of grace, and all other divine and heavenly influences, which not onely conciliate love and charity, where there was none before, but likewiſe make the barren heart fruitfull in every good work, and quiet the troubled and perplexed heart with abundance of peace and joy.

and at our gates are all manner of pleaſant fruits new and old] old] Here we have obſerved two proverbiall formes and uſages of ſpeech, which expreſſe both the plenty and forwardneſſe of their graces, who deſire further communion with Chriſt; They have fruits at the very Gates waiting for him, for ſo to be at the Doore, or the Gate, ſignifies not onely among Secular, but holy Writers; Hannibal ad portas, is no more than peccatum pra foribus, ſinne lieth at the doore, Geneſis 4 7. or that ἐπὶ θύραις, of our Saviours, Matthew 24. 33. And theſe ready Fruits are of all ſorts and degrees, none being wanting, which is by a cuſtomary phraſe (of new and old) expreſſed and amplified, as it is evident, Leviticus, 26 10. Matthew 13. 52. By all which, the Church intimates her readineſſe to receive Chriſt at his coming, having, as the manner was at Nuptials, prepared all manner of flowers and pleaſant fruits, to ſtrew his way with, and declare her joyfull readineſſe to entertain him.

which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved] Or which I have kept as a treaſure for thee, and ſomething moſt choyce and precious; but yet not too good for my Beloved, to whoſe Glory all that is mine ſhould be prepared and directed. It is the Hypocrites qualitie to doe all for himſelf, and to his own intereſt: if he faſt, or pray, or give almes, or bring forth any other fruit, the centre and compaſſe of all, is onely himſelf, for which cauſe God hates both him and his Oblations Eſay, 58. 4, 5, &c. Zacharie, 7, 5. and it were all one for him to be empty, Hoſea 10. 1. But all the indeavours and productions of a Saint indeed, fall into Gods boſome, and pour themſelves into his lap, as their firſt and laſt, their beginning and end. Non nobis Domine, is their Motto: And as Chriſt hath made all that is his owne unto them, and done all that he did for their ſakes, ſo doe they lay up, and lay out all that is in them for their Beloved. He gives them all his merits, and all his graces, and all his Glory, as if they were their own; Dono tibi omnes dolores et labores quos pertuli, quaſi rem propriam, &c. And they give backe all their fruits, and all their loves onely unto him, that he may be All in All, whoſe goodneſſe is infinite, which he hath laid up for all them that fear him, Pſalm 31. 19.

CHAP. VIII.

